

Report Information from ProQuest

17 April 2026 07:13

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Search Strategy.....	vi
1. Business & Finance.....	1
2. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	3
3. World-Wide.....	6
4. U.S. News: Hawaii Leads Among Sleepy States.....	8
5. Pope, Trump Spar on Immigration --- Pontiff says building a wall is 'not Christian;' Trump says questioning faith is 'disgraceful'.....	10
6. U.S. News: Obama Eyes Court Pick With GOP Appeal.....	14
7. World News: U.S. Rebukes Beijing Over Missiles --- Kerry says China's president broke a pledge not to militarize disputed islands.....	17
8. U.S. News: Fed Seeing More Cause For Pause On Rates.....	20
9. Business News: ABC Entertainment Has New Chief.....	22
10. Business News: Boeing's Chief Defends Its Accounting, Strategy.....	25
11. Business News: Fandango to Buy Film Sites --- Comcast Unit agrees to acquire Flixster and Rotten Tomatoes from Warner Bros.....	27
12. World-Wide.....	30
13. Business & Finance.....	32
14. Business News: Yahoo Trims Back Media Businesses.....	34
15. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	37
16. U.S. News: Newer Phones Aren't Easy to Crack.....	40
17. U.S. News: Schumer Starts to Feel Heat Of Leading.....	43
18. U.S. News: Court Vacancy Could Leave Patchwork of Legal Standards.....	45
19. Trump Loses Ground in New Poll.....	48
20. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	52
21. Business News: Immelt Gets Partial Stock Award.....	55
22. Business News: Newmont Swings to a Loss.....	57
23. City News: Insanity Defense an Option in Fund Manager's Killing.....	59
24. World News: Pope Pleads for Migrants at Border.....	62
25. One More Time, Spitzer Applies Damage Control.....	64
26. Election 2016: Campaign Wire.....	68
27. Business News: Campbell Soup Brews Venture Capital Unit.....	70
28. City News: New Measure To Take Over Atlantic City.....	72
29. U.S. News: Industrial Output Jumps on Strong Car Sales.....	75
30. U.S. News: Plumbers' Pay Crimps Union --- Higher earnings can make labor too costly for many private-sector projects.....	78

TABLE OF CONTENTS

31. Election 2016: Americans Divided on Court Nominee Vote.....	81
32. Business News: Williams Posts Big Write-Down.....	84
33. World News: Pope Urges Mexico to Resist Crime's Lure --- Pontiff tells young people not to be hitmen, urges clergy to keep up the fight.....	86
34. World News: Gains by Syrian Kurds Complicate Fight --- Turkey fires across border at U.S.-backed militias pushing its favored rebels back.....	89
35. Obama To Name Court Pick In Weeks.....	91
36. Business News: United Mechanics Reject Pact.....	95
37. Business & Finance.....	97
38. World-Wide.....	99
39. City News: Christie Proposes Hospital Cuts.....	102
40. Christie Pivots to Trenton --- With campaign over, governor puts focus on state's fiscal woes; poll numbers hit a low.....	104
41. Finance Watch.....	107
42. U.S. News: Arguments To Lose A Bit of Their Bite.....	110
43. U.S. News: All-Cash Deals Pinch Home Buyers.....	112
44. U.S. News: Chicago Mayor Backs New Rule for Police Video.....	115
45. Business News: Pfizer Agrees To Settle On Wyeth's Claims.....	117
46. World News: World Watch.....	120
47. U.S. News: Apple Told to Help Open Shooter's Phone --- Judge orders firm to aid federal investigators probing device used by San Bernardino suspect.....	123
48. Careers: Bosses Dig Into Data To Flag Workers' Ills.....	125
49. U.S. Stocks Rally For Biggest 2-Day Rise Since August.....	129
50. U.S. News: Jail Break Inquiry Focuses on Headcount.....	132
51. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	134
52. City News: Kudlow Won't Run for Senate In Connecticut.....	138
53. U.S. News: Opening Seen on Nominee Hearings.....	140
54. Business News: Grants Aim to Lower Drug Costs --- Couple makes donation toward efforts to make prescription treatments more affordable in U.S.....	143
55. Volatility Wagers Start to Pay Off --- Hedge-fund bets that profit from market stress are cleaning up after years of losses.....	145
56. Business News: Community Health Stock Plunges on Weak Results.....	148
57. World News: Kidnapped Americans In Iraq Are Released.....	150
58. City News: Customer Grievances Hit Startup.....	152

TABLE OF CONTENTS

59. Business News: U.S. Rejects Boeing Protest on Northrop Job.....	155
60. Business News: Airbus Mulls Larger Plane.....	157
61. Business News: Meatpacking Ban Ends in Nebraska.....	160
62. Business News: Hong Kong's Port Falls Further --- Deep-water rivals in mainland China hit container business at former trade leader.....	162
63. Earnings: Sales at Jos. A. Bank Weigh on Tailored Brands.....	165
64. Earnings: Jet Makers Express Confidence Despite Economic Slowdown.....	167
65. World News: Russia Is Accused of Bombing Hospitals --- U.S. says Syria regime and its allies targeted civilians; Assad insists rebels give up weapons.....	169
66. Millennials Unsettle Race --- Primary results in Iowa and New Hampshire show young voters' impact on both parties.....	172
67. World-Wide.....	177
68. Business News: Freeport Sells Part of Arizona Mine.....	179
69. City News: Tenants in Maze Of Courts Get A Helping Hand.....	182
70. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	185
71. Business & Finance.....	188
72. Business News: 2014 VW Memo Warned of Probe.....	190
73. U.S. News: With the GOP Primed for a Fight, List of Possible Nominees Shrinks.....	193
74. U.S. News: Terror Convicts Pose Issue After Release.....	195
75. Business News: GE's Oil Chief Pays Call on Tehran.....	198
76. World News: Zika Claim Prompts Shift.....	201
77. U.S. News: Money To Latin America Soars.....	203
78. Election 2016: Trump Ramps Up Voter Outreach --- Some question quality of his ground game in South Carolina as GOP primary nears.....	205
79. World News: Pilots Urge Tight Curbs After Laser Imperils Jet.....	208
80. U.S. News: Maryland University President Declines to Quit.....	210
81. U.S. News: Lake Tahoe Bounces Back --- Snowfall fueled by El Nino boosts ski resorts throughout Sierra Nevada region.....	212
82. Business News: Mattel Reshapes Business; Barbie Gets New Chief.....	216
83. U.S. News: Tensions Rise Over Refugees --- In Idaho, some see a jihadist threat, others a much-needed supply of workers.....	218
84. Consumers Power Past Headwinds --- Stock, oil markets rally as strong retail sales offer hope U.S. can avoid global slowdown.....	221

TABLE OF CONTENTS

85. Business News: Visa Details Square Stake --- Mobile-payment startup's shares get boost from disclosure by credit-card firm.....	225
86. World-Wide.....	227
87. Business & Finance.....	229
88. City News: Atlantic City's Financial Problems Widen.....	232
89. Spirit's New Boss Vows to Repair Image.....	234
90. World News: U.S. Airlines To Compete On Cuba Routes.....	238
91. NYPD Terminates Liang's Ex-Partner --- Guilty verdict brings back-to-back firings; defense attorneys vow to keep fighting.....	240
92. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	243
93. U.S. News: Baby Boomers Pile On The Debt.....	246
94. City News: City Will Tighten Rules on Safety At Building Sites.....	249
95. World News: Beating The Odds To Reach The U.K.....	251
96. U.S. News: Global Slowdown Weighs On Import, Export Prices.....	254
97. Election 2016: GOP Hopefuls Court Evangelicals.....	256
98. City News: Station Embodies Resolve.....	259
99. REVIEW --- Play: News Quiz.....	261
100. Business News: L Brands' CEO Wexner To Run Victoria's Secret.....	265
Bibliography.....	268

SEARCH STRATEGY

Set No.	Searched for	Databases	Results
S4	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20160101-20161231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6415
S3	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20170101-20171231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6471
S2	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20180101-20181231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	7907
S1	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20190101-20191231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	8057

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Wal-Mart cut its sales forecast, citing store closures and the continued strengthening of the U.S. dollar. ---

FULL TEXT

The IPO market is foundering, with over 70% of the companies that made their stock market debuts in 2015 trading below their initial price.

Apple's standoff with the FBI over unlocking a phone has prompted state and local law-enforcement to follow the agency's lead.

Wal-Mart cut its sales forecast, citing store closures and the continued strengthening of the U.S. dollar.

North American energy firms have sold over $5 billion of new shares so far this year amid strong demand, despite low oil prices.

Japan's central-bank chief faced criticism from lawmakers over the move into negative interest rates.

IBM is buying data company Truven for $2.6 billion in a bid to expand its health-care presence.

U.S. regulators are poised to crack down on large bond-broker fees that can eat into investor returns.

Bankers' compensation faces a hit due to a plunge in the value of stock bonuses paid out early last year.

The Dow fell 40.40 points to 16413.43, as a three-day U.S. stock rally ended.

VimpelCom agreed to a settlement of more than $795 million with the U.S. over bribes to an Uzbek official.

DETAILS

Location:	Japan; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120; Name: Walmart Inc; NAICS: 454110, 455110, 455211
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 19, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1766256859
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1766256859/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 2 of 100

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The lawsuit, filed in Cook County Circuit Court, says the city's replacement of water mains has increased lead contamination, because the process typically only partially replaced lead service lines, which run between the mains and residences.

FULL TEXT

CALIFORNIA

Gas Leak Capped

After Four Months

California officials on Thursday said a massive natural-gas leak west of Los Angeles that displaced several thousand residents has been plugged after nearly four months.

The state's Division of Oil, Gas and Geothermal Resources said Southern California Gas Co., a unit of Sempra Energy of San Diego, had sealed the gas well at Aliso Canyon, ending a leak that began in October.

Stopping the release of gas took nearly four months because the utility had to drill a new well to intercept gas rising through the broken well.

Dennis Arriola, chief executive of SoCalGas, apologized for the disruption in the lives of nearby residents of Porter Ranch. Several thousand people relocated, most at the utility's expense, because they said gas fumes and related smells were sickening them.

-- Rebecca Smith

MARYLAND

Trial of Officer in

Gray Case Postponed

Maryland's high court on Thursday postponed the trial of one of the Baltimore police officers charged in the April 2015 death of Freddie Gray after agreeing to hear an appeal from prosecutors.

The Court of Appeals' action -- tied to prosecutors' arguments about who could be compelled to testify against whom -- will delay Officer Edward Nero's trial, which was scheduled to begin Monday in Baltimore. It could delay the expected criminal trials of some of the five other officers charged in the case.

Mr. Nero, charged with second-degree assault, reckless endangerment and misconduct in office, took part in the arrest of 25-year-old Mr. Gray, who died about a week after sustaining a broken neck in police custody.

Mr. Nero and the five other officers have pleaded not guilty.

The funeral of Mr. Gray, who was black, sparked the city's worst rioting in decades, and his death helped drive a national debate on policing in minority communities.

-- Scott Calvert

ILLINOIS

City of Chicago Sued

Over Lead Levels

Three residents filed a lawsuit Thursday against the city of Chicago, alleging that water-main replacement projects over the past several years have exposed people across the city to higher levels of lead in drinking water.

The lawsuit, filed in Cook County Circuit Court, says the city's replacement of water mains has increased lead contamination, because the process typically only partially replaced lead service lines, which run between the mains and residences.

Studies have shown that replacing part of a lead line can cause the metal to leach into water systems.

City officials said they haven't yet reviewed the lawsuit. Gary Litherland, spokesman for the Chicago Department of Water Management, said the city has aggressive programs to protect its water supply from lead.

"Chicago's water is safe and exceeds federal, state and industry standards," he said.

-- Kris Maher

DETAILS

Subject:	Drinking water; Trials; Water mains; Lead content; Natural gas utilities; Gas leaks; Lead poisoning
Business indexing term:	Subject: Natural gas utilities
Location:	Baltimore Maryland; Los Angeles California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Southern California Gas Co; NAICS: 221210; Name: Sempra Energy; NAICS: 221122
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1766256848
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1766256848/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 3 of 100

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The White House gave its clearest indication yet that Obama is looking to name a Supreme Court nominee who has past GOP support. ---

FULL TEXT

A dispute broke out between Pope Francis and Trump as the pontiff said the GOP candidate's immigration stands make him "not Christian," prompting a rebuke from Trump.

The pope said the use of contraception can be acceptable in regions afflicted by the Zika virus.

Sanders has cut into Clinton's lead in the Democratic presidential race by more than half over the past month, a new poll found.

The White House gave its clearest indication yet that Obama is looking to name a Supreme Court nominee who has past GOP support.

Turkey blamed the U.S.- backed Kurdish militia fighting Islamic State in Syria for the Ankara blast and urged Washington to cut ties.

EU leaders clashed over the bloc's faltering migration policies, with Austria digging in its heels on its quota.

Venezuela's inflation surged to 180.9% last year and the nation's economy contracted by 5.7%.

The Zika outbreak will have a $3.5 billion impact on Latin America in 2016, the World Bank said.

South Korean officials warned of a North Korean terrorism risk and called for new surveillance powers.

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Zika virus; Candidates
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Ankara Turkey; Austria; Turkey; Venezuela; United States--US; Syria; Latin America
People:	Francis (Pope)
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: International Bank for Reconstruction & Development--World Bank; NAICS: 928120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 19, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1766256738
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1766256738/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 4 of 100

U.S. News: Hawaii Leads Among Sleepy States

McKay, Betsy . McKay, Betsy.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Hawaii, the southeastern U.S. and states along the Appalachian Mountains have the lowest percentages of adults who get enough shut-eye, while South Dakota and other Great Plains states are the nation's most well-rested region, according to a report released on Thursday by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

FULL TEXT

It is no surprise that many Americans don't get enough sleep. Now, new government data reveal who the sleep-deprived are and where they live.

Hawaii, the southeastern U.S. and states along the Appalachian Mountains have the lowest percentages of adults who get enough shut-eye, while South Dakota and other Great Plains states are the nation's most well-rested region, according to a report released on Thursday by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The CDC said that less than seven hours of sleep a night and other poor sleep habits are linked to health risks. Overall, more than a third of U.S. adults -- 83.6 million people age 18 and over -- aren't getting enough sleep, the CDC said.

"As a nation we are not getting enough sleep," said Wayne Giles, director of CDC's division of population health.

Of all the respondents, 11.8% reported getting five hours or less sleep over a 24-hour period, and 23% get six hours.

At the other end of the spectrum, 4.4% sleep nine hours and 3.6% sleep 10 hours or more.

Whites and Hispanics sleep more than native Hawaiians, Pacific Islanders and blacks, according to the CDC analysis, which was based on 2014 self-reported data from 444,306 U.S. adults who answered questions by telephone in a routine national health survey.

People who are employed, have a college education or are married are more rested than those who don't have jobs, are less educated or are divorced, widowed or separated, according to the report. The results "suggest that employment and higher education might be determinants of healthy sleep," the report said.

Several of the results are consistent with previous studies using different data sets, the CDC said.

The report's findings suggest that health-care providers need to talk more with patients about sleep problems and that people need to turn off televisions, computers and mobile devices when it is time for bed, the CDC said. People also should try to go to bed and get up at about the same time each day, and avoid big meals, nicotine, alcohol and caffeine before bedtime, it said.

Less than seven hours of sleep a night is linked with an increased risk of obesity, diabetes, heart disease and mental distress, the agency said, noting that prevalence of several of those conditions is high in the Southeast and Appalachia.

The agency also urged employers to adjust work schedules and educate shift workers -- particularly those in medical, emergency response and transportation professions -- to make sure they get enough sleep.

Credit: By Betsy McKay

DETAILS

Subject:	Sleep deprivation; Sleep; Disease control
Location:	Hawaii; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Centers for Disease Control & Prevention--CDC; NAICS: 923120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1766256735
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hawaii-leads-among-sleepy-states/docview/1766256735/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 5 of 100

Pope, Trump Spar on Immigration --- Pontiff says building a wall is 'not Christian;' Trump says questioning faith is 'disgraceful'

Rocca, Francis X; Schwartz, Felicia . Rocca, Francis X; Schwartz, Felicia.

ABSTRACT

An extraordinary dispute between Pope Francis and Donald Trump broke out Thursday after the pontiff said the Republican presidential candidate's immigration stands make him "not Christian," prompting Mr. Trump to retort that questioning his personal faith was "disgraceful." In wide-ranging remarks during a news conference aboard his flight back to Rome after a visit to the U.S.-Mexico border, the pope also touched on the sensitive topics of birth control and gay marriage.

FULL TEXT

An extraordinary dispute between Pope Francis and Donald Trump broke out Thursday after the pontiff said the Republican presidential candidate's immigration stands make him "not Christian," prompting Mr. Trump to retort that questioning his personal faith was "disgraceful."

The exchange began when the pope, an outspoken supporter of immigrants' rights, weighed in on a debate that is at the heart of the Republican primary.

In wide-ranging remarks during a news conference aboard his flight back to Rome after a visit to the U.S.-Mexico border, the pope also touched on the sensitive topics of birth control and gay marriage. He said the use of contraception could be justified in regions hit by the Zika virus. And when asked if Catholic politicians must vote against same-sex unions, he said they should "vote according to their well-formed conscience."

In response to a question about Mr. Trump's proposal to build a wall to keep illegal immigrants from entering the U.S., the pope said: "A person who thinks only about building walls, wherever they may be, and not building bridges, is not Christian." He added, "We must see if he said things in that way, and in this I give the benefit of the doubt."

Campaigning in South Carolina before Saturday's primary, Mr. Trump said, "For a religious leader to question a person's faith is disgraceful." He also suggested the pope had been manipulated by the Mexican government -- a charge officials there denied.

Later, in a televised event Thursday night on CNN, Mr. Trump called Pope Francis a "wonderful guy" and said "I don't think this is a fight." Mr. Trump added he would meet with the Pope "anytime he wants."

Immigration has been the subject of some of the most heated rhetoric of the Republican campaign and debates, with Mr. Trump, Sen. Ted Cruz and Sen. Marco Rubio all calling for stronger security on the U.S.-Mexico border.

In the 2012 general election, about 25% of U.S. voters identified themselves as Catholic, exit polls found. President Barack Obama won 50% of Catholic voters, who included many Hispanics, and 48% backed Republican candidate Mitt Romney.

In South Carolina, the key GOP voting bloc is not Catholics but evangelicals, with about 65% of Republican voters identifying as born-again or evangelical in 2012 exit polls. This election cycle, Mr. Trump won the majority of evangelicals in New Hampshire and Mr. Cruz won them in Iowa.

Joanna Horres, a homemaker who led the crowd in pro-Trump chants at the event in Kiawah Island, S.C., said she has backed him since he declared he would run for president, and she still does. "It makes my opinion of him even stronger," she said. "He's not afraid to speak up to anybody, even the pope. He's obviously a Christian who is secure in his salvation; he doesn't need the approval of the pope either," she said.

Mr. Trump's opponents tried to steer clear of the controversy on the campaign trail on Thursday. "Listen, that's between Donald and the pope. I'm not going to get in the middle of that," Mr. Cruz said, declining to take questions about the matter.

Mr. Rubio said the U.S. has the right to control who comes into the U.S. and when and how people do that. "There's a balance here between being compassionate and also being responsible, especially in a world where, today, radical jihadists are seeking to use the immigration laws of countries to infiltrate killers and fighters into foreign countries," Mr. Rubio said on CNN.

Mr. Trump is no stranger to controversial comments, but his clash with the pope raises new stakes and moves both men into uncharted waters.

John C. Green, an expert on religion and politics at the University of Akron, said the moment is unprecedented. Religious leaders sometimes criticize politicians' policies and ideas, but he said he couldn't recall a time when a leader leveled a personal broadside.

"It's not that uncommon for religious leaders to argue with politicians over politics, where a Catholic leader might say so-and-so's position on abortion or climate change is not consistent with the church's teachings. But I've never seen anything like this," he said. Conversely, he said, when a politician comes in for criticism from a religious leader, he or she typically simply acknowledges a disagreement. "It's not a confrontational reaction," said Mr. Green.

In his comments Thursday, Mr. Trump told the crowd that he is a Christian "and proud of it." He suggested that the pope, whom he has previously called "political," was unduly influenced by the Mexican government and saw only "one side" of the story. "He said negative things about me because the Mexican government convinced him that Trump is not a good guy," Mr. Trump said.

A spokesman for Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto said Mr. Trump's proposal for a border wall was not a subject that came up in talks between the pontiff and Mr. Pena Nieto.

Mr. Trump, a Presbyterian, also re-aired a dire prediction he had made last year: that the Vatican is a top target for Islamic State terrorists, and he would be the best commander in chief to keep it safe.

"If and when the Vatican is attacked by ISIS, which, as everyone knows, is ISIS's ultimate trophy, I can promise you that the pope would've only wished and prayed that Donald Trump would've been president," he said Thursday.

Mr. Trump has drawn particular ire from critics over his call for deporting millions of immigrants in the U.S. illegally, and his labeling of Mexican immigrants as drug traffickers and rapists.

In interviews after the rally, about a dozen Trump supporters said the businessman's forceful rebuke bolstered their support for him.

Larry DiCenzo, a retired school principal who lives in Charleston, said he was shocked the pope would criticize Mr.

Trump's religion. Mr. DiCenzo, a Catholic, said the feud wouldn't change the way he voted on Saturday.

"I liked Trump's response, it was to the point, which is the reason why I like Trump, because he says it as it is, and he is truthful," Mr. DiCenzo said. "It astounds me that [the pope] would say that and I disagree with him."

Liberty University President Jerry Falwell Jr., a Trump supporter, told CNN on Thursday that the pope's comments went too far. "Jesus never intended to give instructions to political leaders on how to run a country," Mr. Falwell said.

Los Angeles Archbishop Jose Gomez, a Mexican immigrant who has publicly pushed for changes to U.S. immigration law, declined to comment on the pope's words or Mr. Trump's reaction, because he hadn't read the full transcript of the pope's remarks.

But the archbishop said: "If you follow the Bible, you have to be open to people migrating. The Bible says clearly you have to welcome the stranger."

Some Mexicans said they were grateful the pope spoke out. "Is there a more hated person in the world right now than Donald Trump?" asked Oscar Tello, 31, a tennis coach in Mexico City. "I'm glad the pope pointed out that Mr. Trump is not acting like a Christian."

Laura Meckler, Tamara Audi and David Luhnnow contributed to this article.

Credit: By Francis X. Rocca and Felicia Schwartz

DETAILS

Subject:	Immigration policy; Presidential elections; Popes; Christianity; Politics; Noncitizens; Political campaigns; Bible; Religion; Negative campaigning; Candidates; Papal visits; Evangelicalism; Immigrants
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; Francis (Pope)
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	9190: United States; 1210: Politics & political behavior; 92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Feb 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1766256680
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/pope-trump-spar-on-immigration-pontiff-says/docview/1766256680/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 6 of 100

U.S. News: Obama Eyes Court Pick With GOP Appeal

Lee, Carol E; Hughes, Siobhan . Lee, Carol E; Hughes, Siobhan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

White House press secretary Josh Earnest said it is "a relevant fact" that "there are a number of senior-level judges, judges who serve on the appellate courts, who have actually gotten strong bipartisan support in the U.S. Senate," while also pointing to Mr. Obama's aim of nominating someone who has qualifications that are "beyond question."

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The White House on Thursday gave its clearest indication yet that President Barack Obama is looking to name a Supreme Court nominee who has past Republican support and lacks a significantly liberal background, as he approaches a major battle with Capitol Hill over filling the vacancy created by Justice Antonin Scalia's death.

"The Senate gets to have a say, and so in order to get this done, the president is not going to be able to go out -- nor would it be his instinct anyway -- to pick the most liberal jurist in the nation and put them on the court," Vice President Joe Biden said in an interview with Minnesota Public Radio. "There are plenty of judges who are on high courts already who have had unanimous support of the Republicans."

White House press secretary Josh Earnest said it is "a relevant fact" that "there are a number of senior-level judges, judges who serve on the appellate courts, who have actually gotten strong bipartisan support in the U.S. Senate," while also pointing to Mr. Obama's aim of nominating someone who has qualifications that are "beyond question."

Mr. Biden, who as a senator served as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, played a key role in advising Mr. Obama as he considered his two prior Supreme Court nominees.

Sen. Orrin Hatch (R., Utah), a former Senate Judiciary Committee chairman and one of the committee's most senior members, said the type of nominee Mr. Obama puts forth won't throw off Republican plans to wait until after the election before acting on a nominee. "I don't think it detracts from the position that we should put this over to the next year," Mr. Hatch said in an interview.

"Then the next president can choose who he wants, including anybody really. There are a number of names that have surfaced, and some of them have surfaced because they were unanimous in the committee, but supporting for a lesser judgeship is one thing. Supporting for a seat on the most important court in the world is another," he said.

The White House, since Justice Scalia's death was announced Saturday, has spent most of its time defending Mr. Obama's right to send a nominee to the Senate, as opposed to outlining the type of candidate he is considering.

Mr. Obama was forced to do the same in both of his public statements since Saturday, appearing exasperated that the nature of the debate had shifted so quickly and so far from the usual party wrangling over a nominee's credentials that has defined previous Supreme Court nominations.

A move by the White House to select a nominee palatable to Republicans could disappoint liberal Democrats, some of whom have suggested Mr. Obama nominate someone who would rally the party base ahead of the November election.

Mr. Obama intends to name a nominee, regardless of Republican threats not to consider his choice in the Senate. But the president's typical approach to politically divisive debates -- going outside of Washington to mount public support -- appears fraught, which could force the White House to try a different strategy in what has been a polarizing election cycle.

Registered voters are deadlocked on whether the Senate should vote for Mr. Obama's nominee or wait for the next president and Congress to be sworn in after the November election, according to a Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll. They are also divided along party lines, the poll found, while independents are almost evenly split on the issue.

DETAILS

Subject:	Nominations; Judges & magistrates; Presidents; Congressional committees
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1766256611
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-eyes-court-pick-with-gop-appeal/docview/1766256611/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 7 of 100

World News: U.S. Rebukes Beijing Over Missiles --- Kerry says China's president broke a pledge not to militarize disputed islands

Chun Han Wong; Lubold, Gordon . Chun Han Wong; Lubold, Gordon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In May, China outlined plans to change the focus of its armed forces toward maritime warfare to tackle new security challenges, including the U.S. shift of military and other resources to Asia and "provocative actions" from neighboring countries.

FULL TEXT

The Obama administration sharply criticized Chinese President Xi Jinping on Wednesday after charging that China's military had deployed batteries of advanced missiles on a disputed South China Sea island.

Secretary of State John Kerry said the deployment was at odds with a pledge made by Mr. Xi while visiting the White House last year to refrain from militarizing clusters of disputed islands throughout the South China Sea.

Chinese officials, while not directly confirming or denying U.S. and Taiwanese claims about the missiles, said they plan to keep strengthening defensive capabilities in the South China Sea.

While both sides have no appetite for open conflict, their entrenched positions are narrowing their options for a diplomatic solution, while fueling the potential for dangerous flare-ups.

U.S. officials said Wednesday that they had confirmed commercial satellite imagery appearing to show the deployment of surface-to-air missiles on Woody Island in the disputed Paracel chain. The commercial images, from the firm ImageSat International NV, indicate the missiles were deployed sometime after Feb. 3.

The U.S., which challenged Beijing by sailing warships and flying bombers near Chinese-held islands, had warned against China's buildup in a region where both sides increasingly find themselves locked into opposing positions.

"When President Xi was here in Washington, he stood in the Rose Garden with President Obama and said China will not militarize in the South China Sea," Mr. Kerry said on Wednesday. "But there is every evidence, every day that there has been an increase of militarization of one kind or another. It's of serious concern."

The spat appeared to douse any lingering warmth from Mr. Xi's state visit to the U.S. For its part, just a month after the Obama-Xi summit, the U.S. started testing China's posture with what it labeled as freedom-of-navigation patrols near islands controlled by Beijing.

Neither side is likely to back down. China's Communist leaders have based their political legitimacy in large part on their ability to defend national sovereignty. And President Barack Obama promised Southeast Asian leaders gathered in California this week that the U.S. would help counter Beijing's assertiveness.

"The risk of a worsening tit-for-tat game of strategic signaling has to be watched closely, especially the possibility of miscalculation," said Rory Medcalf, a professor of Asia-Pacific security issues at Australian National University.

Beijing has been steadily bolstering its military capabilities in the South China Sea, which it claims almost in its entirety. In May, China outlined plans to change the focus of its armed forces toward maritime warfare to tackle new security challenges, including the U.S. shift of military and other resources to Asia and "provocative actions" from neighboring countries.

At his White House summit in September, Mr. Xi pledged that China "does not intend to pursue militarization" of the islands it was building in the Spratlys. The Spratlys chain, which is claimed in whole or in part by six governments, lie farther south than Woody.

Concern that China's military activity has been at odds with its public statements has been rising in Washington. The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Sen. John McCain (R., Ariz.), lamented during a recent hearing that Beijing's actions speak louder than its words.

"China has constructed these features with the intention of using them to sustain a permanent military presence in this maritime region and, if need be, project military power throughout the South China Sea," he wrote in a Jan. 29 letter, seen by The Wall Street Journal.

Chinese officials voiced exasperation with what they described as a media-concocted controversy, stressing China's benign intentions and its right to place "limited and necessary defensive facilities" on its sovereign territory.

The State Department said that U.S. officials are pursuing further confirmation of the activity on Woody Island, but that the missile deployment would prompt an urgent meeting with Chinese officials.

Woody Island, known as Yongxing in Chinese, is home to Beijing's only large operational airfield in the South China Sea. It is also claimed by Vietnam and Taiwan.

U.S. and Taiwanese officials didn't elaborate on the missile type and scale. Military experts say the weapons appear to be China's HQ-9, a medium-to-long-range, radar-guided missile system.

Peter Landers in Tokyo and Josh Chin in Beijing contributed to this article.

Credit: Chun Han Wong, Gordon Lubold

DETAILS

Subject:	Missiles; Rocket launches; Islands; Presidents; Military deployment
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	China; Woody Island
People:	Kerry, John F; Xi Jinping
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765860151
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-rebukes-beijing-over-missiles/docview/1765860151/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 8 of 100

U.S. News: Fed Seeing More Cause For Pause On Rates

Hilsenrath, Jon . Hilsenrath, Jon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Officials struggled with uncertainty about these developments at their January policy meeting, according to minutes of the gathering released by the central bank Wednesday. Since the meeting, some officials have started speaking out about their desire to wait to raise interest rates again until they're sure the U.S. economic outlook isn't deteriorating and inflation isn't stuck below their 2% target.

FULL TEXT

Federal Reserve officials appear increasingly reluctant to raise short-term interest rates at their March policy meeting, and possibly beyond, amid market turbulence, China's dimmed outlook and indications that inflation could stay at low levels longer than expected.

Officials struggled with uncertainty about these developments at their January policy meeting, according to minutes of the gathering released by the central bank Wednesday. Since the meeting, some officials have started speaking out about their desire to wait to raise interest rates again until they're sure the U.S. economic outlook isn't deteriorating and inflation isn't stuck below their 2% target.

At the January 26-27 gathering, officials "agreed that uncertainty had increased, and many saw these developments as increasing the downside risks to the outlook," said the minutes.

The Fed in January held its benchmark short-term interest rate steady at between 0.25% and 0.5%. The central bank increased that rate by a quarter percentage point in December and penciled in four more rate increases for 2016, driven by a view that inflation would start rising as hiring and the economy continued to expand.

The Fed's next policy meeting is March 15-16. Traders in futures markets see a 94% chance it won't raise rates then, an 83% chance it won't move before midyear and about a 50% chance the Fed won't move rates at all in 2016, according to the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

"Inflation is not likely to pick up substantially until the second half of the year," Patrick Harker, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia, said at the University of Delaware on Tuesday. "It might prove prudent to wait until the inflation data are stronger before we undertake a second rate hike."

Fed Chairwoman Janet Yellen expressed uncertainty about the outlook in testimony to Congress last week without taking a March move off the table. She did emphasize that Fed policy isn't on a set course and would be responsive to new developments.

"If inflation is slower to return to target, monetary policy normalization should be unhurried," Eric Rosengren, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, said Tuesday. "A more gradual approach is an appropriate response to headwinds from abroad that slow exports, and financial volatility that raises the cost of funds to many firms."

Of course nothing is yet set. Markets could quickly reverse and the Fed will have a chance to look at more data on inflation and jobs before making a call next month.

Stock markets already have shown some signs of stabilizing. Moreover, economic data haven't been all bad. The Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta estimates economic output is expanding at 2.6% annual rate in the first quarter, up notably from a 0.7% pace in the fourth quarter. Moreover wage growth shows signs of accelerating as the jobless rate falls.

Peter Hooper, chief economist at Deutsche Bank Securities, said he expected the Fed to lower its growth and inflation forecasts when officials next meet in March. That would be a precursor to moving interest-rate plans into neutral.

Mr. Hooper started the year projecting three Fed rate increases this year. He has now downshifted to one later in the year.

Credit: By Jon Hilsenrath

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal Reserve monetary policy; Central banks; Interest rates; Inflation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Federal Reserve monetary policy Central banks Interest rates Inflation; Industry: 92113 : Public Finance Activities 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Open Market Committee--FOMC; NAICS: 921130
Classification:	9550: Public sector; 9190: United States; 92113: Public Finance Activities; 52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765776069
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fed-seeing-more-cause-pause-on-rates/docview/1765776069/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited with out permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 9 of 100

Business News: ABC Entertainment Has New Chief

Flint, Joe . Flint, Joe.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

There was friction between Mr. Lee and Ben Sherwood, the president of the Disney/ABC TV Group and co-chairman of Disney Media Networks, people familiar with the matter said. Since assuming that position in 2015, Mr. Sherwood has been much more assertive on the creative side of ABC's operations than his predecessor Anne Sweeney was and that has chafed at Mr. Lee, who was used to a certain amount of autonomy.

FULL TEXT

ABC Entertainment Group President Paul Lee has resigned amid a corporate restructuring at the broadcast network.

Mr. Lee, who led a turnaround at Walt Disney Co.'s ABC last season only to see ratings fall back this season, is being succeeded by Channing Dungey, who most recently oversaw drama programming for the network.

Ms. Dungey becomes the first African-American to oversee prime-time programming for a broadcast network. As head of drama development, she played a key role in several successful ABC shows, including "Scandal" and "Quantico." She has a close relationship with Shonda Rhimes, a producer at ABC whose shows include "Scandal," "How to Get Away with Murder," "Grey's Anatomy" and the coming drama "The Catch."

This season ABC is in third place in viewers among broadcasters, behind CBS and NBC. It is averaging about 6.6 million viewers in prime time, a drop of 15% compared with last season when it averaged roughly 7.8 million, according to Nielsen. Its ratings among adults ages 18 to 49, the demographic advertisers prefer to target, has also declined from last year.

However, the departure of Mr. Lee after nearly six years in the post has more to do with internal tensions than the network's performance this season. There was friction between Mr. Lee and Ben Sherwood, the president of the Disney/ABC TV Group and co-chairman of Disney Media Networks, people familiar with the matter said.

Since assuming that position in 2015, Mr. Sherwood has been much more assertive on the creative side of ABC's operations than his predecessor Anne Sweeney was and that has chafed at Mr. Lee, who was used to a certain amount of autonomy. The bad blood between the two reached the boiling point in recent weeks with ABC in the midst of developing shows for next season, these people said.

Mr. Sherwood second-guessed Mr. Lee on programming strategy, and the lack of a working relationship between the two extended outside of ABC and into the Hollywood community. Talent agents and production executives complained about having to take separate meetings with Mr. Sherwood and Mr. Lee to discuss projects, a person with knowledge of the matter said.

In another sign of Mr. Sherwood's desire to have a strong say in ABC's creative operations, Patrick Moran, head of ABC Studios, will now report directly to him instead of Ms. Dungey. Previously, Mr. Moran had reported to Mr. Lee.

ABC declined to comment beyond its statements about the changes. Mr. Lee did not respond to a request seeking comment.

Credit: By Joe Flint

DETAILS

Subject:	Talent management; Successors; Drama; Talent agents & managers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Talent management Successors; Industry: 71141 : Agents and Managers for Artists, Athletes, Entertainers, and Other Public Figures
Location:	United States--US
People:	Lee, Paul (TV executive); Dungey, Channing
Company / organization:	Name: ABC Entertainment; NAICS: 516120
Classification:	8330: Broadcasting & telecommunications industry; 9190: United States; 71141: Agents and Managers for Artists, Athletes, Entertainers, and Other Public Figures
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765776025
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-abc-entertainment-has-new-chief/docview/1765776025/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

LINKS

Document 10 of 100

Business News: Boeing's Chief Defends Its Accounting, Strategy

Ostrower, Jon . Ostrower, Jon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Boeing Co. Chief Executive Dennis Muilenburg on Wednesday defended the aerospace company's accounting practices and corporate strategy in the wake of weeks of volatile stock movements.

FULL TEXT

Boeing Co. Chief Executive Dennis Muilenburg on Wednesday defended the aerospace company's accounting practices and corporate strategy in the wake of weeks of volatile stock movements.

The company's shares have slumped roughly 20% this year on concerns about Boeing's cash generation and competitive position, and took another hit last week following a media report that the Securities and Exchange Commission was probing the company's financial projections.

On Wednesday, Boeing's stock rose 3.3% in New York trading to finish at $116.34.

Mr. Muilenburg stood behind Boeing 's longtime use of a system called program accounting, and reaffirmed the company's expectation that its flagship 787 Dreamliner would deliver the profit and cash flow that the company has promised investors.

He neither confirmed nor denied the existence of any investigation -- the SEC also has declined to comment -- but sought to calm investor concerns.

"We are very confident in our financials," Mr. Muilenburg said at an investor event. "I personally signed off on [our filings] last week."

Boeing uses program accounting to spread its high early production costs over a large block of deliveries. The method, which complies with generally accepted accounting principles, lets the company book future profits and cost-cutting expectations in current earnings. That allows Boeing to consider the 787 Dreamliner program profitable, even though its cost to build each jet remains higher than the sale price. Boeing expects to break even on those unit costs later in 2016.

"It's a very disciplined, rigorous accounting process -- one we understand well. And the way we apply it on 787 is the same way we apply it on all of our commercial airplane lines," he said. He said he expects the advanced jet to be as profitable as its long-range 777 aircraft over the life of the program.

Mr. Muilenburg said there were no plans to change the company's program accounting system, which has so far tallied more than $28.5 billion in deferred costs building the Dreamliner. But he acknowledged that recovering those costs was a driver in Boeing's overall corporate strategy.

"It factors into our innovation model," said Mr. Muilenburg. Boeing has pivoted its strategy toward productivity improvements in its factories, and at its suppliers, to cut costs, while refocusing its product development on more modest incremental advances.

Mr. Muilenburg said Boeing expects to make a decision over the next 12 to 18 months about a new plane that would fit between its biggest single-aisle 737 and its Dreamliner for medium-range missions.

The CEO also defended Boeing's competitive position, saying that cost cutting amid continued pricing pressure from rival Airbus Group SE hadn't changed its anticipated margins. He called plans for further cuts by eliminating management jobs as an offensive, not defensive, move.

Despite low oil prices and slowing economic activity in key regions that Boeing is counting on for its growth, Mr. Muilenburg said that emerging markets like China, India and Indonesia are "vastly underserved," with air-traffic expansion outpacing local gross domestic product growth.

Mr. Muilenburg said the company will be delivering "well north of 900" aircraft annually within five years.

Credit: By Jon Ostrower

DETAILS

Subject:	Aircraft industry; Accounting procedures; Cost reduction; Accounting
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft industry Accounting procedures Cost reduction Accounting; Industry: 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414
Classification:	8680: Transportation equipment industry; 9190: United States; 33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765775838
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-boeings-chief-defends-accounting/docview/1765775838/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 11 of 100

Business News: Fandango to Buy Film Sites --- Comcast Unit agrees to acquire Flixster and Rotten Tomatoes from Warner Bros.

Fritz, Ben . Fritz, Ben.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The deal will make Warner Bros. a minority owner of Fandango, the dominant online ticket seller, which has recently moved into film-related online videos and movie downloads.

FULL TEXT

Comcast Corp.'s Fandango has agreed to acquire the movie websites Flixster and Rotten Tomatoes from Time Warner Inc.'s Warner Bros., bringing two Hollywood studios together online.

The deal will make Warner Bros. a minority owner of Fandango, the dominant online ticket seller, which has recently moved into film-related online videos and movie downloads. Fandango remains part of Comcast's Universal Filmed Entertainment Group.

The Wall Street Journal previously reported that the two companies were in talks about the deal.

"With Rotten Tomatoes, it's almost self-evident how complementary it is to our business," said Fandango President Paul Yanover, in an interview, adding that people who visit the site, which aggregates film reviews, would be natural ticket buyers.

Flixster, he said, provides "an incredibly similar proposition" to movie and showtimes information already offered by Fandango, though their audiences have little overlap. "Connect that and we quickly light up more ticketing," he said.

Fandango reached 40.3 million people in the U.S. in January, according to comScore data, while Flixster and Rotten Tomatoes together attracted 19.4 million visitors. Combined, the three sites would be a close No. 2 online to Amazon.com Inc.'s IMDb, which had 73.8 million unique visitors last month. Flixster and Fandango together have more than 100 million mobile-app downloads, according to the companies.

Warner acquired Flixster and its corporate sibling Rotten Tomatoes in 2011, largely to drive then-nascent digital movie sales.

Under the new deal, however, Flixster will soon stop selling films, and focus on movie news and information. Fandango recently acquired M-Go, which sells digital movies, to expand into that business. Mr. Yanover said it is part of a broader initiative to participate in the "movie life cycle," from early information gathering to theater attendance to home viewing.

Mr. Yanover said a "good majority" of Flixster and Rotten Tomatoes' 50 to 60 employees will keep their jobs under Fandango.

The Universal-Warner partnership comes soon after three studios -- Lions Gate Entertainment Corp, Walt Disney Co. and 21st Century Fox Inc.'s Twentieth Century Fox -- led a $50 million investment into Atom Tickets, a new competitor to Fandango focused on mobile movie ticketing.

The deals set up an unusual situation in which three studios are backing one movie-ticketing company and two are backing another -- but both companies have to work with every studio in Hollywood.

"We don't view this as having anything to do with studios coming together," said Warner Chief Digital Officer Thomas Gewecke. "It's about the products."

Atom, which is operating in three test markets and plans to expand nationwide by the summer, has focused on making it easier for friends and family to plan movie outings together. Mr. Yanover said Fandango is working on its own approach to social movie planning that will launch later this year.

Credit: By Ben Fritz

DETAILS

Subject:	Streaming media; Acquisitions & mergers; Motion pictures; Licensed products; Websites
Business indexing term:	Subject: Acquisitions & mergers; Corporation: Comcast Corp; Industry: 51621 : Media Streaming Distribution Services, Social Networks, and Other Media Networks and Content Providers
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Rotten Tomatoes; NAICS: 516210; Name: Warner Bros Entertainment Inc; NAICS: 512110; Name: Flixster Inc; NAICS: 516210; Name: Comcast Corp; NAICS: 517111, 517112, 517810; Name: Time Warner Inc; NAICS: 516120, 517111, 517112; Name: Fandango Media LLC; NAICS: 518210, 561599
Classification:	2330: Acquisitions & mergers; 8331: Internet services industry; 9190: United States; 51621: Media Streaming Distribution Services, Social Networks, and Other Media Networks and Content Providers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765775827
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-fandango-buy-film-sites-comcast/docview/1765775827/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-10-01
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 12 of 100

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A testosterone replacement trial found improved sexual function in older men.

FULL TEXT

Trump's support among Republicans has declined in the past month, leaving him slightly behind Cruz, according to a new poll.

South Carolina's governor endorsed Rubio ahead of that state's primary.

Americans are split over whether the Senate should consider an Obama Supreme Court nominee.

The Obama administration criticized Xi after charging that China had deployed missile batteries on a disputed South China Sea island.

Obama plans to travel to Cuba next month, the first such visit by a sitting U.S. president in 88 years.

The pope issued a plea for justice for migrants as he wrapped up a Mexico trip with a visit to the U.S. border.

U.N. aid reached some besieged areas of Syria, even as the regime continued an offensive and the opposition vowed to reverse losses.

A car bomb exploded in Turkey's capital, killing at least 28 people, in an attack that officials said targeted a military convoy.

Venezuela raised gas prices for the first time in nearly two decades and devalued the local currency.

A testosterone replacement trial found improved sexual function in older men.

DETAILS

Subject:	Androgens; Sexual disorders
Location:	Venezuela; China; Mexico; United States--US; Turkey; Syria; Cuba; South Carolina
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765775805
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1765775805/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 13 of 100

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The ECB is weighing more rate cuts despite concerns over the impact on already battered bank stocks. ---

FULL TEXT

Apple said it would fight an order to unlock a phone used by one of the San Bernardino terrorists, setting up what could be a precedent-setting legal battle.

Iran dented the efforts of other major oil exporting countries to limit production by refusing to curb its own output.

The Dow gained 257.42 points to 16453.83 as U.S. stocks completed their first three-day rally this year.

Fed officials struggled with uncertainty about the economic outlook at their January policy meeting.

The ECB is weighing more rate cuts despite concerns over the impact on already battered bank stocks.

Japan's corporate profits fell nearly 10% last quarter and firms expect more pain due to a stronger yen.

Tech distributor Ingram agreed to be acquired for about $6 billion by a unit of China's HNA Group.

ABC Entertainment's president, Paul Lee, resigned. He is being succeeded by Channing Dungey.

Comcast's Fandango agreed to acquire Flixster and Rotten Tomatoes from Time Warner's Warner Bros.

Boeing's CEO defended the firm's accounting and strategy after weeks of volatile stock movements.

DETAILS

Subject:	Statistical data
Location:	China; Japan; Iran; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Comcast Corp; NAICS: 517111, 517112, 517810; Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414; Name: ABC Entertainment; NAICS: 516120; Name: Warner Bros Entertainment Inc; NAICS: 512110

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765775751
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1765775751/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 14 of 100

Business News: Yahoo Trims Back Media Businesses

MacMillan, Douglas . MacMillan, Douglas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The cuts are part of Chief Executive Marissa Mayer's plan to lower costs by eliminating 15% of Yahoo's staff, closing offices and shuttering business units. Making Yahoo smaller and more profitable could help Ms. Mayer buy time with investors, some of whom have called for new management and a sale of the company.

FULL TEXT

The retrenching of Yahoo Inc. is under way.

The Internet company on Wednesday said it plans to close seven of its digital magazines, including sites dedicated to articles about food, travel, parenting and health, and lay off a portion of its workforce of journalists who worked on them.

Yahoo also told employees in Burbank, Calif., that it plans to close the office there and relocate them to its nearby facility in Playa Vista, a person familiar with the matter said.

The cuts are part of Chief Executive Marissa Mayer's plan to lower costs by eliminating 15% of Yahoo's staff, closing offices and shuttering business units. Making Yahoo smaller and more profitable could help Ms. Mayer buy time with investors, some of whom have called for new management and a sale of the company.

Yahoo earlier this month said for the first time under Ms. Mayer that it would entertain a possible sale of its Web properties.

Yahoo declined to say how many employees were affected by the latest cuts from its online media business. Further layoffs are expected in the coming weeks from other areas of the company, people familiar with the matter said.

The CEO announced on an earnings call last month her plans to close offices in Dubai, Mexico City, Buenos Aires, Madrid and Milan this year.

As of 2013, Yahoo said about 400 people worked in the Burbank office in various departments, according to its website. All workers not affected by the magazine cuts this week were asked to report to Playa Vista, more than an hour's drive from Burbank.

Last month, Yahoo let go at least five managers who were working on Brightroll, the video ad service it acquired in 2014, according to a person familiar with the matter.

Ms. Mayer launched several of the digital magazines in early 2014, part of a broader effort to get advertisers to pay higher prices for ads targeting Web users with specific interests, such as cars and tech gadgets. She hired star journalists such as David Pogue, a former New York Times technology columnist, and Katie Couric, who left her role as special correspondent for ABC News to become Yahoo's global anchor.

Mr. Pogue and Ms. Couric were unaffected by the cuts, Yahoo said.

Among the journalists cut this week was Dan Tynan, the editor in chief of Yahoo Tech, who addressed his colleagues in a memo on Wednesday. Yahoo is keeping the technology vertical.

"I am sure that bigger and better things await all of us," Mr. Tynan wrote in the memo, which was first published on Politico and confirmed by The Wall Street Journal. "As for Yahoo, I am sure it will continue to be Yahoo, for better or worse."

Credit: By Douglas MacMillan

DETAILS

Subject:	Search engines; Layoffs; Cost reduction; Electronic periodicals; Journalists; Service introduction
Business indexing term:	Subject: Layoffs Cost reduction
Location:	Playa Vista California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Yahoo Inc; NAICS: 516210, 519290
Classification:	8331: Internet services industry; 6100: Human resource planning; 9190: United States
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1765761640

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-yahoo-trims-back-media-businesses/docview/1765761640/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 15 of 100

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Associated Press --- NEW JERSEY Serial Killing Suspect Linked to 1965 Case A suspected serial killer has been linked to the death of a high-school student whose battered body was found alongside a highway 50 years ago.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK CITY

Officials: Don't Cut

Anti-Terror Funding

Several of New York City's top officials are joining U.S. Sen. Charles Schumer in criticizing a plan that would cut federal counterterrorism funding.

Mayor Bill de Blasio, Police Commissioner William Bratton, Fire Commissioner Daniel Nigro and others denounced the White House plan on Wednesday.

The proposal would cut funding to the Urban Area Security Initiative from $600 million to $330 million. It would trim the funding for New York City from $180 million to $90 million. The money helps offset local municipalities' security expenditures.

The White House had said the plan still contributes "robust funding" to combat terror.

-- Associated Press

NEW JERSEY

Serial Killing Suspect

Linked to 1965 Case

A suspected serial killer has been linked to the death of a high-school student whose battered body was found alongside a highway 50 years ago.

State police and Monmouth County prosecutors announced their findings Wednesday.

They said a new analysis of evidence links Robert Zarinsky to the 1965 death of 18-year-old Mary Agnes Klinsky. An autopsy found the Raritan High School senior had been sexually assaulted and died from skull fractures.

Mr. Zarinsky was serving life for another teenage girl's killing when he died in prison in 2008.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK CITY

Correction Officers

Face Trial in Beating

A trial has been scheduled for 10 New York correction officers who prosecutors say assaulted an inmate for staring down a correction department chief.

The group appeared Wednesday in Bronx Supreme Court after being charged in a 53-count indictment that includes attempted gang assault. A trial is expected to start next week.

Prosecutors say a group of guards beat inmate Jahmal Lightfoot, on June 11, 2012, after Mr. Lightfoot stared down the jail's assistant chief of security.

Authorities say the chief directed his officers to attack Mr. Lightfoot, who suffered two broken eye sockets and other injuries. They are also accused of falsifying reports saying Mr. Lightfoot had a weapon.

A judge issued a gag order Wednesday barring the lawyers in the case from commenting.

-- Associated Press

LONG ISLAND

'God Squad' Priest

Dies at Age 69

A Roman Catholic priest who gained fame as half of an interfaith "God Squad" duo on television and in a syndicated column has died. He was 69 years old.

Msgr. Thomas J. Hartman died late Tuesday at a nursing home in Uniondale. He had suffered from Parkinson's disease.

Msgr. Hartman and Rabbi Marc Gellman teamed up as "The God Squad" on TV and radio and in print for 25 years. They started the program in 1987 on Cablevision and a decade later moved it to Telecare, the diocesan television channel.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Assaults; Sex crimes; Funding; Correctional personnel; Counterterrorism
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92214 : Correctional Institutions
Location:	United States--US
People:	Nigro, Daniel; Bratton, William; Schumer, Charles E
Company / organization:	Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	92214: Correctional Institutions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761636
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1765761636/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 16 of 100

U.S. News: Newer Phones Aren't Easy to Crack

Nicas, Jack; McMillan, Robert . Nicas, Jack; McMillan, Robert.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Apple Inc. and Alphabet Inc.'s Google thrust the issue into the spotlight in 2014, when they issued new versions of their software that automatically encrypted data stored on phones, such as contacts, photos and some text messages. [...] Apple and Google, which together power more than 90% of the world's smartphones, said they wouldn't be able to break the encryption codes themselves.

FULL TEXT

The legal fight around the locked iPhone of one of the San Bernardino shooters highlights the growing role of encryption in digital life -- and the intensifying battle between tech companies and the government over the proper bounds of the technology.

Encryption scrambles data so that it is unreadable until unlocked with a unique key. Apple Inc. and Alphabet Inc.'s Google thrust the issue into the spotlight in 2014, when they issued new versions of their software that automatically encrypted data stored on phones, such as contacts, photos and some text messages. Moreover, Apple and Google, which together power more than 90% of the world's smartphones, said they wouldn't be able to break the encryption codes themselves.

Law-enforcement officials, led by Federal Bureau of Investigation Director James Comey, expressed alarm that encrypted phones could hamper criminal investigations. Such cases have been rare until now, because much of the data investigators seek can often be found elsewhere, such as call records maintained by telecom companies.

In the case of alleged shooter Syed Rizwan Farook, however, federal investigators say they have no other options. They persuaded a federal judge Tuesday to order Apple to circumvent the security measures on Mr. Farook's iPhone 5C, hoping to learn more about his contacts and communications in the final weeks of his life.

In essence, the government wants Apple to help it unlock the phone by trying every conceivable password. At the government's request, the judge ordered Apple to override the software that normally limits these attempts, such as a feature that erases all the data on the phone after 10 failed attempts.

Depending on the password that Mr. Farook used, there could be more than two billion combinations, which could take a computer 5 1/2 years to try, Apple estimates. In a court filing, the Justice Department said it can't tell whether the auto-erase feature is enabled, "therefore trying repeated passcodes risks permanently denying all access to the contents."

Such a solution would be much harder on more modern versions of the iPhone, which ship with a cryptographic processor that makes the machine even harder to crack, said Dan Guido, head of Trail of Bits Inc., a security consulting firm that has studied the iPhone's design.

Had Mr. Farook used a phone running Google's Android operating system, assessing the encryption would be more complicated. That is because, unlike Apple, Google doesn't make most of the phones that use Android. Instead, there are more than 4,000 different Android devices made by more than 400 manufacturers, who use different flavors of Android.

Google has allowed Android users to encrypt a phone's contents since 2011, but many haven't because it hurts the performance of older phones. In late 2014, Google began encrypting some phones by default with the release of Android version 5.0, dubbed Lollipop, including Google's flagship Nexus devices. But only about 35% of Android devices now run version 5.0 or higher, according to company data.

The Manhattan District Attorney's Office said in a November report that on some older Android phones, investigators know how to bypass passcodes. For some other Android devices, Google can reset the passcodes remotely, the report said.

Apple's and Google's smartphone encryption software apply to data stored directly on a device, and some communications, such as Apple's iMessage. Many messages sent and received on smartphones are stored elsewhere, such as Gmail correspondence retained on Google's servers.

The government hasn't specified the information it thinks may be on Mr. Farook's phone. In a court filing, an FBI agent said Apple, in response to a search warrant, had previously turned over data from the phone that had been backed up to Apple's iCloud service. That is another way in which investigators can often obtain information from encrypted phones.

But the agent said Mr. Farook had last backed up the phone on Oct. 19, about six weeks before the Dec. 2 shootings that killed 14 people.

Wireless carriers can access some standard text messages, and third-party apps, like WhatsApp, typically store users' correspondence.

Google says it provides users' Gmail messages when required under a court order. Google said that it received nearly 35,000 government requests for user data in 2014 -- up from 15,000 requests in 2010 -- and that it complies with the requests in about 65% of cases.

Credit: By Jack Nicas and Robert McMillan

DETAILS

Subject:	Software; Hackers; Smartphones; Criminal investigations; Search warrants
Business indexing term:	Subject: Smartphones
Location:	San Bernardino California; United States--US
People:	Farook, Syed Rizwan
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120; Name: Apple Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334220, 513210; Name: Google Inc; NAICS: 334310, 519290; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761629
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-newer-phones-arent-easy-crack/docview/1765761629/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 17 of 100

U.S. News: Schumer Starts to Feel Heat Of Leading

Hughes, Siobhan . Hughes, Siobhan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Following the death of Justice Antonin Scalia, Mr. Schumer, a senior member of the Judiciary Committee, has asserted himself in the coming Supreme Court fight.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Sen. Chuck Schumer is getting a taste of the trials that await him next year as the likely Senate Democratic leader.

Earlier this week, the New York lawmaker drew fire from Republicans after he said the chamber should hold hearings and vote in the battle over a Supreme Court vacancy.

Then on Wednesday, he was sharply criticized by the White House for his national-security record. Mr. Schumer, who infuriated the White House by voting against the Iran nuclear deal, complained that the president's budget shortchanged New York in homeland-security funding.

"Sen. Schumer is somebody that came out and opposed the international agreement to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon," White House spokesman Josh Earnest said. "And when people look at the facts here when it comes to funding for homeland security, they'll recognize that he's wrong this time, too."

A spokesman for Mr. Schumer declined to comment on Mr. Earnest's remarks.

After more than 35 years in Congress, Mr. Schumer is at the center of a number of battles as never before. It is giving him an early dose of the scrutiny -- especially from Republicans -- he can expect as the Senate's top Democrat.

Mr. Schumer, whose Washington career began in an era in which centrism was a prevailing Democratic philosophy, faces a particular challenge of figuring out how to manage a caucus in which liberals are a rising influence. And he will have to decide whether to be a fighter in the mold of Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada, who is retiring after his current term, or reach across the aisle.

Following the death of Justice Antonin Scalia, Mr. Schumer, a senior member of the Judiciary Committee, has asserted himself in the coming Supreme Court fight. He accuses Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) of going too far by saying the vacancy shouldn't be filled until there is a new president.

"We're asking for a hearing and a vote -- we're not asking for Congress to be a rubber stamp," Mr. Schumer said Wednesday on a call organized by the Progressive Change Campaign Committee, a network of almost a million activists that frequently pushes Democrats to take more left-of-center positions.

Republicans accuse him of selective outrage, pointing to a 2007 speech in which he said that Bush administration appointees Justices John Roberts and Samuel Alito left the court "dangerously out of balance" and Democrats "should reverse the presumption of confirmation" and block nominees who were "out of the mainstream."

"Perhaps Democrats should find a better messenger," said Don Stewart, a spokesman for Mr. McConnell, with whom Mr. Schumer would have to deal with regardless of who controls the Senate in 2017.

Carol E. Lee contributed to this article.

Credit: By Siobhan Hughes

DETAILS

Subject:	Political leadership
----------	----------------------

Business indexing term:	Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
-------------------------	---

Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Schumer, Charles E
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761602
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-schumer-starts-feel-heat-leading/docview/1765761602/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Court Vacancy Could Leave Patchwork of Legal Standards

Bravin, Jess; Kendall, Brent . Bravin, Jess; Kendall, Brent.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"Presumably, [the justices] are going to pull in their heads a bit on the high profile, politicized cases," said Daniel Ortiz, director of the University of Virginia's Supreme Court Litigation Clinic. Because the Supreme Court typically steps in when lower courts, each with jurisdiction over a state or group of states, reach different conclusions on legal issues, a deadlocked Supreme Court could extend a patchwork of legal standards, with the same federal laws meaning different things in different parts of the nation.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- A long period with an eight-member Supreme Court could stymie decisions on a host of issues that long have divided the remaining justices, 4-4, into conservative and liberal blocs.

The opening left by Justice Antonin Scalia's death affects cases pending before the court as well as matters still working their way through lower courts that could arrive at the Supreme Court later this year or in early 2017. A tie vote preserves the status quo in the law, so issues that split along ideological lines likely will remain unresolved nationally until a new justice is seated.

Immediately after Justice Scalia's death, Republicans said the Senate should wait until 2017, after the next president is elected, to consider a nominee. President Barack Obama has said he intends to nominate a candidate in the coming weeks and expects lawmakers to act on his pick.

In the short term, the absence of Justice Scalia dims conservative hopes for cases pending in the current 2015-16 term, including efforts to end mandatory union dues for public employees, rein in consumer class-actions, expand religious exemptions from Affordable Care Act regulations and protect Republican-drawn legislative districts from lawsuits alleging they harm minority voters.

Resolution of other issues could be put on hold the longer the position remains open, affecting disputes on environmental rules, gun rights, capital punishment, campaign finance and other matters.

"Presumably, [the justices] are going to pull in their heads a bit on the high profile, politicized cases," said Daniel Ortiz, director of the University of Virginia's Supreme Court Litigation Clinic.

Because the Supreme Court typically steps in when lower courts, each with jurisdiction over a state or group of states, reach different conclusions on legal issues, a deadlocked Supreme Court could extend a patchwork of legal standards, with the same federal laws meaning different things in different parts of the nation.

An abortion case set to be argued in March illustrates the situation: Last year, the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, in

New Orleans, upheld a 2013 Texas law requiring abortion clinics to meet the standards of outpatient surgical facilities and doctors who perform the procedure to hold admitting privileges at a nearby hospital. Texas says the law protects the health of women seeking abortions. Clinics argue the regulations actually aim to put them out of business.

If Justice Anthony Kennedy sides with fellow conservatives, the 4-4 split will leave the restrictions in force and maintain the precedent in the other Fifth Circuit states, Louisiana and Mississippi.

But the high-court decision would have no effect elsewhere -- such as in the Chicago-based Seventh Circuit, which last year struck down Wisconsin's similar 2013 admitting-privileges requirement.

Similar stalemates are likely on gun rights, which Justice Scalia expanded with a 2008 opinion that for the first time found that individuals have a constitutional right to possess handguns.

That 5-4 decision opened a wave of litigation over gun regulations, yielding different outcomes among lower courts that the Supreme Court eventually would have to resolve.

In December, Justice Scalia joined a dissent by Justice Clarence Thomas complaining the court was dragging its feet in striking down other gun regulations. Now, additional clarification of Second Amendment rights could be pushed even further off.

Justice Scalia's absence also portends a likely halt in the conservative push to roll back campaign-finance regulations, symbolized by the 2010 Citizens United case, in which a 5-4 vote invalidated limits on political spending by corporations and unions.

Jacob Gershman contributed to this article.

Credit: By Jess Bravin and Brent Kendall

DETAILS

Subject:	Supreme Court decisions; Judges & magistrates; Womens health; Capital punishment; Firearm laws & regulations; Abortion; Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act 2002-US; Federal court decisions; Litigation
People:	Scalia, Antonin
Company / organization:	Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761590
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-court-vacancy-could-leave-patchwork/docview/1765761590/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 19 of 100

Trump Loses Ground in New Poll

Hook, Janet . Hook, Janet.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Support for Donald Trump among Republicans has declined in the past month, leaving him slightly behind Sen. Ted Cruz in the GOP presidential race, according to a new Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll conducted after a combative debate performance that may have soured some voters on the New York businessman.

FULL TEXT

Support for Donald Trump among Republicans has declined in the past month, leaving him slightly behind Sen. Ted Cruz in the GOP presidential race, according to a new Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll conducted after a combative debate performance that may have soured some voters on the New York businessman.

Mr. Trump had enjoyed a double-digit lead over his rivals, but the new poll found support for him falling by seven percentage points since mid-January. Among registered voters who said they would participate in a GOP primary, he drew 26% support in the new poll, trailing Mr. Cruz, whose support rose by eight points to 28%. The survey, of 400 registered voters who said they would participate in a GOP primary, had a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percentage points.

A number of other GOP candidates have dropped out of the race, a winnowing of the field that has benefited Mr. Trump's rivals. The poll shows that if the primary came down to a head-to-head choice, both Mr. Cruz and Sen. Marco Rubio could beat Mr. Trump by double-digit margins.

For now, however, there are six candidates in the race. The poll found that Mr. Rubio had solidified his third-place position, rising four points in the past month to 17% support.

Ohio Gov. John Kasich jumped from the bottom tier of the field to fourth place, with 11%. He edged out retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson, who had 10% support in the new poll, and former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, who slid to a low mark of 4%.

The new survey marks the first time since the fall that the Journal/NBC News poll has found anyone other than Mr. Trump in the lead among Republicans nationally, and it differs from other recent national surveys that show him holding a steady lead. For example, a new Reuters/Ipsos poll, also released Wednesday, shows Mr. Trump with a lead of more than 20 points nationally. That means the Journal/NBC survey could reflect a shift in mood, a temporary blip or a finding outside the mainstream.

"When you see a number this different, it means you might be right on top of a shift in the campaign," said Bill McInturff, a GOP pollster who conducted the survey with Democratic pollster Fred Yang. "What you don't know yet is if the change is going to take place or if it is a momentary pause before the numbers snap back into place."

Mr. Yang said the poll suggests Mr. Trump, with fewer opponents, may be nearing the limit of his support. "As the field shrinks, as the spotlight becomes more glaring on him, he does have a ceiling," Mr. Yang said on MSNBC.

Mr. McInturff noted that the Republicans surveyed included more who identified themselves as very conservative, which plays to Mr. Cruz's strength. But even taking that into account, he said, it is clear Mr. Trump's lead has turned into a virtual tie in this poll.

Mr. Trump leads in polls in South Carolina, site of the next primary, to be held Saturday.

The Journal/NBC national poll was conducted Feb. 14-16, the three days after GOP candidates met in a televised debate in South Carolina. Mr. Trump turned in an especially aggressive, insult-laced performance, faulting Mr. Bush's brother, former President George W. Bush, for failing to stop the 9/11 terror attacks.

Daniel Cleveland, 25, who lives outside Spartanburg, S.C., said he had been considering Mr. Trump. But he was turned off by Mr. Trump's debate performance.

"He just lost his cool," said Mr. Cleveland.

Bonnie Kartes, 41, of Buckeye, Ariz., who participated in the poll, said she finds Mr. Kasich appealing and is dismayed by what she has seen from Mr. Trump in debates.

"I thought at first maybe he was serious, but the more I watched him, to me he is not serious," Mrs. Kartes said.

Some Republican candidates have argued that the death of conservative Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, and the coming fight to name his successor, should re-emphasize to voters that the eventual nominee should be the one best equipped to defeat the Democratic candidate. But the poll found that electability isn't the top concern of GOP primary voters. Asked which quality matters most in deciding to support a candidate, 35% said "shares your values," while only 16% picked "can win in November."

Scott Faulkner, a Republican from Concord, N.C., said he likes many things about Mr. Bush but is supporting Mr. Trump, because he believes Mr. Bush is unlikely to win in the fall. "He's got a tough row to hoe," said Mr. Faulkner. "Trump would have a better chance of beating [Democrat Hillary] Clinton."

A big shift came among so-called traditional-values conservatives, a pivotal group of abortion-rights and gay-marriage opponents who make up half of the GOP primary voters surveyed. Among that group, Mr. Trump drew support from 20%, down from 31% in a Journal/NBC poll a month ago.

In another warning sign for Mr. Trump, the poll found a significant drop in a broader measure of his acceptability as a candidate: The share of Republican primary voters who could see themselves supporting him as the nominee fell to 56% from 65% a month ago.

When Republican candidates were pitted against each other in test match-ups, the poll found that Messrs. Cruz and Rubio were about equally equipped to best Mr. Trump.

Mr. Trump would lose to Mr. Cruz by 56% to 40%, the poll found. Mr. Rubio would beat Mr. Trump by 57% to 41%.

The poll found Mr. Trump would beat Mr. Bush by 54% to 43%, and he would beat Mr. Kasich by 52% to 44%.

Josh Dawsey contributed to this article.

The Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll was based on nationwide telephone interviews of 800 registered voters, including 280 respondents who use only a cellphone. It was conducted from Feb. 14-16, 2016, by the polling organizations of Bill McInturff at Public Opinion Strategies and Fred Yang at Hart Research Associates.

Individuals were selected proportionate to the nation's population in accordance with a probability sample design that gives all landline telephone numbers, listed and unlisted, an equal chance to be included. Registered voters age 18 or older were selected by a systematic procedure to provide a balance of respondents by sex. The cellphone sample was drawn from a list of cellphone users nationally. Of the 800 interviews, 280 respondents were reached on a cellphone and screened to ensure their cellphone was the only phone they had. In addition, 21 respondents were reached on a cellphone but reported also having a landline.

Overall, the data's margin of error is plus or minus 3.46 percentage points. The margin of error for subgroups is larger. Additional interviews were conducted on a select series of questions from a random national sample of past primary voters. These interviews, when added to the interviews collected from the national adult data, achieved totals of 400 Republican and 400 Democratic primary voters. The margin of error is plus or minus 4.90 percentage points for these samples.

Credit: By Janet Hook

DETAILS

Subject:	Polls & surveys; Candidates; Presidential elections; Political campaigns; Nominations; Cellular telephones
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761579
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-loses-ground-new-poll/docview/1765761579/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 20 of 100

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Thomas Donilon, President Barack Obama's former national security adviser, and Sam Palmisano, the former chief executive of International Business Machines Corp., will serve as chair and co-chair of the 12-person group, which is supposed to provide recommendations by Dec. 1.

FULL TEXT

OHIO

EPA Fires Two in

Contamination Probe

Ohio's Environmental Protection Agency fired two employees and demoted a third Wednesday following an internal investigation of how it handled lead contamination in a village's drinking water.

The firings came after the agency looked into why it took months for the agency's top administrators to find out about high lead levels in the northeast Ohio village of Sebring.

The state EPA said it fired an employee at its central office who failed to make sure lab results were sent to a regional office reviewing the lead testing.

The agency said the missed step was critical to figuring out whether lead levels are above federal guidelines and if residents should be warned.

The employee's supervisor also was let go.

A manager in the state EPA's northeast Ohio office was demoted for not alerting his supervisors to the problem after telling the village about the high readings in December, the agency said.

State environmental officials have said the operator of Sebring's water plant waited months to notify people about high lead readings.

Residents in Sebring, near Youngstown, and two other communities, said they weren't told until mid-January about the lead, which is especially dangerous to young children and can cause learning disabilities and behavioral problems.

-- Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Cybersecurity Panel

Leaders Appointed

The White House on Wednesday appointed two leaders for a new panel directed with drafting policy recommendations to better protect the government, businesses and consumers from cyberattacks.

Thomas Donilon, President Barack Obama's former national security adviser, and Sam Palmisano, the former chief executive of International Business Machines Corp., will serve as chair and co-chair of the 12-person group, which is supposed to provide recommendations by Dec. 1. The other 10 members haven't been appointed.

The White House created the Commission on Enhancing National Security last week. It is supposed to look for medium-term and long-term policy changes to improve security protections. The panel will look at changing federal computer networks that have outdated security systems, the implications of cybersecurity on the commercial sector, and the recruitment and development of experts in this field, among other things.

-- Damian Paletta

TRANSPORTATION

Traffic Deaths

Jumped 8% in 2015

The number of traffic deaths in the U.S. rose 8% from 2014 to 2015, the largest year-to-year percentage increase in a half-century, according to preliminary estimates by the National Safety Council.

About 38,300 people were killed on U.S. roads, and 4.4 million people were seriously injured, the council said. That would make 2015 the deadliest driving year since 2008.

The council said a stronger economy and lower unemployment rates were probably among the key factors, along with lower gas prices. With driving more affordable, more people are on the road. Average gas prices were 28% lower last year than in 2014.

The Transportation Department estimates a 3.5% increase in the number of miles driven by motorists in the U.S. in 2015.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Lead content; Lead poisoning; Environmental regulations; National security; Councils; Gasoline prices; Cybersecurity
Business indexing term:	Subject: Gasoline prices
People:	Obama, Barack; Palmisano, Samuel J
Company / organization:	Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110; Name: National Safety Council; NAICS: 813319; Name: IBM Corp; NAICS: 334111, 334610, 513210, 541511; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761563
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1765761563/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-06-27
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 21 of 100

Business News: Immelt Gets Partial Stock Award

Mann, Ted . Mann, Ted.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the 59-year-old CEO received 125,000 GE shares last week, valued at more than $3.4 million.

FULL TEXT

General Electric Co. Chief Executive Jeff Immelt missed a performance target set five years ago and lost out on a stock award worth more than $3 million, the company said in a filing on Wednesday.

The 2011 incentive package granted Mr. Immelt 250,000 performance share units, which are shares of GE stock that would be granted to the CEO if the company could hit two performance targets over the ensuing five years.

Mr. Immelt hit one target, entitling him to half of those shares, that goal being GE's total shareholder return beating the return of the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index over five years through 2015. But the target for the other half of Mr. Immelt's incentive package, generating $71 billion in operating cash flow from GE's industrial businesses, proved to be too high, despite his efforts to bolster the company's jet-engine, power-turbine and health-care businesses.

As a result, the 59-year-old CEO received 125,000 GE shares last week, valued at more than $3.4 million. Mr. Immelt, however, will net just under $2 million of GE shares because the incentive program automatically sells a portion of the shares granted to the CEO to cover taxes.

This isn't the first time that Mr. Immelt has missed incentive targets while CEO over more than 14 years, a period in which GE has grappled with the near-collapse of its massive financial-services business and Mr. Immelt's ongoing effort to transform the conglomerate to more closely focus on its industrial roots.

In February 2011, all of Mr. Immelt's performance stock grants from an earlier incentive package were canceled after the company's shares lagged behind the S&P 500 performance and failed to meet a previous target for growing operating cash flow.

The latest target miss is a hangover of rougher times for GE, which outperformed its industrial peers last year when Mr. Immelt completed the company's largest acquisition ever and sold off the bulk of its GE Capital lending arm, which had long depressed the company's stock price.

Shares of the company are up 17% from a year ago, but have lost 6% of their value so far this year amid concerns about slowing economic growth. They closed up 43 cents at $29.29 on Wednesday.

In proxy filings, GE has said it has worked to more closely tie the compensation of all of its executives to the performance of the company. As of last year, the company began issuing performance share units to other senior executives.

The company has said in filings that Mr. Immelt is underpaid relative to other chief executives. His base pay rose 9% to $3.8 million in March 2014, the company said in a filing last year, "recognizing his continued strong leadership of a company with the global scale and diversity of GE and reflecting that this increase was only his second salary increase since 2005." That filing also said Mr. Immelt received a $5.4 million bonus, 200,000 in new performance share units, and 500,000 stock options.

Credit: By Ted Mann

DETAILS

Subject:	Stock options; Executive compensation; Wages & salaries; Cash flow
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock options Executive compensation Wages & salaries Cash flow; Corporation: General Electric Co
Location:	United States--US
People:	Immelt, Jeffrey R

Company / organization:	Name: General Electric Co; NAICS: 332510, 334290, 334512, 334519
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761558
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-immelt-gets-partial-stock-award/docview/1765761558/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 22 of 100

Business News: Newmont Swings to a Loss

ABSTRACT

Newmont Mining Corp. swung to a loss in its fourth quarter, hurt by lower metal prices and delayed exports from Indonesia, among other costs.

FULL TEXT

Newmont Mining Corp. swung to a loss in its fourth quarter, hurt by lower metal prices and delayed exports from Indonesia, among other costs.

Newmont said the average realized gold and copper price fell to $1,084 a troy ounce and $1.86 a pound, respectively, in the quarter, compared with $1,194 an ounce and $2.55 a pound a year earlier.

Gold production, meanwhile, was flat at 1.3 million ounces, while copper production reached 39,000 metric tons, compared with 29,000 metric tons a year earlier due to a higher grade ore at the Batu Hijau location.

Over all, Newmont reported a loss of $254 million, or 50 cents a share, compared with a profit of $15 million, or 3 cents a share, a year earlier. Excluding certain items, profit fell to 4 cents a share from 17 cents a share a year earlier. Revenue dropped 10% to $1.82 billion.

Analysts surveyed by Thomson Reuters had projected a profit of 12 cents a share on $1.82 billion in sales.

Credit: By Ezequiel Minaya

DETAILS

Subject:	Profits; Company reports; Financial performance; Losses; Gold mines & mining
Business indexing term:	Subject: Profits Company reports Financial performance Gold mines & mining; Industry: 21222 : Gold Ore and Silver Ore Mining
Location:	Colorado; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Newmont Corp-Denver; NAICS: 212220
Classification:	8500: Extractive industries; 9190: United States; 21222: Gold Ore and Silver Ore Mining
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761525
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-newmont-swings-loss/docview/1765761525/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 23 of 100

City News: Insanity Defense an Option in Fund Manager's Killing

MacMillan, Thomas . MacMillan, Thomas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

If the defense now wishes to argue that Mr. Gilbert is innocent by reasons of insanity, the judge said, Mr. Gilbert's lawyer must present such a theory in advance, along with information about what witnesses and evidence he would have to support it.

FULL TEXT

Thomas Gilbert Jr., who is accused of killing his hedge-fund manager father, may still have the option of presenting an insanity defense, but only if his lawyer turns over more information to the prosecutor.

Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Melissa Jackson announced that ruling from the bench Wednesday during a pretrial hearing in the case. Mr. Gilbert, 31 years old, is accused of shooting his father, Thomas Gilbert Sr., in the father's Manhattan apartment in January 2015. He has pleaded not guilty.

Just before his death, the elder Mr. Gilbert had reduced his son's weekly allowance from $600 to $400, according to law-enforcement officials.

In December, Justice Jackson ruled Mr. Gilbert fit to stand trial for the killing. She weighed three psychiatric evaluations, two of which found that Mr. Gilbert wasn't able to understand trial proceedings or assist in his own defense.

If the defense now wishes to argue that Mr. Gilbert is innocent by reasons of insanity, the judge said, Mr. Gilbert's lawyer must present such a theory in advance, along with information about what witnesses and evidence he would have to support it.

Mr. Gilbert's lawyer, Alex Spiro, who hasn't said whether he would pursue such a defense, told Justice Jackson that he already has turned over all the information required under law.

"I don't have anything further to turn over," Mr. Spiro said. His client remains mentally unfit to stand trial and won't meet with any psychologists, he said. "That's the cart that's driving this horse."

The judge disagreed, saying, "This disclosure is woefully insufficient."

Mr. Gilbert, who is being held at Manhattan Detention Complex, didn't appear in court Wednesday. Mr. Spiro said that he had refused to come into the courtroom and had asked to speak with someone from the Cablevision cable company, a request that Mr. Spiro said is representative of his client's mental state.

"If he won't cooperate, then he won't have a psychiatric defense," said prosecutor Craig Ortner. He said he didn't have enough information to guide any expert witness whose evaluation of Mr. Gilbert he might seek.

"You have my ruling," said Justice Jackson. She reiterated that Mr. Spiro would have to produce more information or risk losing the chance to pursue a psychiatric defense.

The judge set another hearing date for April 12, at which point, she said, she hopes to select a trial date.

Credit: By Thomas MacMillan

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Court hearings & proceedings; Murders & murder attempts; Insanity pleas; Investment advisors
Business indexing term:	Subject: Investment advisors; Industry: 52394 : Portfolio Management and Investment Advice
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Gilbert, Thomas Jr
Classification:	52394: Portfolio Management and Investment Advice
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761524
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-insanity-defense-option-fund-managers/docview/1765761524/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

LINKS

Document 24 of 100

World News: Pope Pleads for Migrants at Border

Althaus, Dudley; Rocca, Francis X . Althaus, Dudley; Rocca, Francis X.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Pope Francis spent the last day of his visit to Mexico in this border city, an economically dynamic but turbulent city that embodies all the travails the pontiff has deplored during his tour: the inequality, poverty and gang violence that sets thousands on the migrant trail.

FULL TEXT

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico -- Pope Francis stood on the U.S.-Mexico border and issued a powerful plea for justice for the many thousands of poor, undocumented migrants striving to cross the borders of the U.S. and other developed countries.

"The human tragedy that is forced migration is a global phenomenon today," the pontiff said at a Mass just a few hundred yards from the Rio Grande, which separates the country with the world's biggest economy and its impoverished neighbor. "No more death! No more exploitation! There is still time to change, there is still a way out and a chance, time to implore the mercy of God."

Before the Mass, Pope Francis ascended a specially built ramp a few feet from the Mexican levee to pray before a large cross commemorating the thousands of migrants who have died through the years attempting to cross the border. He then turned toward hundreds of faithful gathered on the U.S. river bank and blessed them with the sign of the cross.

Pope Francis spent the last day of his visit to Mexico in this border city, an economically dynamic but turbulent city that embodies all the travails the pontiff has deplored during his tour: the inequality, poverty and gang violence that sets thousands on the migrant trail.

"Here in Ciudad Juarez, as in other border areas, there are thousands of immigrants from Central America and other countries, not forgetting the many Mexicans who also seek to pass over 'to the other side,'" the pope said in his homily before more than 200,000 people gathered at a fairgrounds. "Each step, a journey laden with grave injustices: the enslaved, the imprisoned and extorted."

This city, the final stop for thousands of migrants before crossing the border with El Paso, Texas, has earned infamy for gang violence and the scores of poor young women killed here in recent decades.

Gazing a few hundred yards north -- across the concrete-entombed stream, three chain-link fences, a rail line and U.S. Border Patrol vehicles -- the pope greeted hundreds of faithful gathered on the U.S. levee.

Donald Trump and Texas Sen. Ted Cruz have each called for building a wall along the entire border, and few Republican candidates support an amnesty program for the millions of Hispanic migrants already living illegally in the U.S.

The Vatican rejected comments by Mr. Trump last week that the pope was acting politically by defending migrants. "The pope is not a politician," Vatican spokesman Father Federico Lombardi said. "But his moral authority has a political impact. He speaks to politicians about reconciliation and that has consequences."

Some 600 invited guests walked a half-mile along the levee bounded by fences and close enough to see and hear the crowds across the way in Ciudad Juarez.

"This is very special to me," said Hope Banuelas, a 22-year-old volunteer heading to the levee. She said her 11-year-old brother was murdered in Mexico, where she and her family lived part of the time. "I don't think you should think of someone as legal or illegal. The pope doesn't think that way. God doesn't think that way," she said.

Earlier in the day, Pope Francis also denounced the often poor working conditions in the border region's economy.

"God will hold accountable the slave-drivers of our day, and we must do everything we can to make sure that these situations do not happen again. The flow of capital cannot decide the flow and life of people," he said.

Daniel Melgar, a 24-year-old field hand and carpenter, said he left his gang-ruled slum in Honduras shortly after Christmas with only $10 in cash. He has heard of the border fences, the patrolling immigration agents and the danger of crossing the desert by foot. "No fence is going to stop me," Mr. Melgar said.

Tamara Audi in El Paso contributed to this article.

Credit: By Dudley Althaus and Francis X. Rocca

DETAILS

Subject:	Gangs; Popes; Violent crime; Border patrol; Noncitizens; Papal visits
Location:	United States--US; Mexico
People:	Francis (Pope)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761520
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-pope-pleads-migrants-at-border/docview/1765761520/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 25 of 100

One More Time, Spitzer Applies Damage Control

Vilensky, Mike; Shallwani, Pervaiz . Vilensky, Mike; Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The news that a former governor felled by a sex scandal is once more drawing the interest of law-enforcement officials all but puts a nail in the coffin of any political future, friends and former advisers said. The campaign was followed by more tabloid headlines as Mr. Spitzer's marriage ended in divorce and he dated a woman who had served as his campaign spokeswoman. Since losing that race, Mr. Spitzer has taken a bigger role in his family's real-estate business, Spitzer Enterprises.

FULL TEXT

For the dwindling list of friends and supporters of former New York Gov. Eliot Spitzer, last weekend brought a flurry of familiar phone calls and email messages.

Mr. Spitzer, once a star of the Democratic Party, was under investigation for an encounter with a 25-year-old woman in a hotel room, the headlines splashed across New York tabloids.

The news that a former governor felled by a sex scandal is once more drawing the interest of law-enforcement officials all but puts a nail in the coffin of any political future, friends and former advisers said.

The woman, who police believe is a former escort, initially said Mr. Spitzer, 56, assaulted her at the Plaza Hotel, but later recanted and flew to Russia, law-enforcement officials said. The New York Police Department's investigation is in limbo because the woman hasn't been cooperative, the officials said.

Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr. has asked to recuse himself from the investigation because of his ties to Mr. Spitzer, a spokeswoman for Mr. Vance said Wednesday.

An attorney for Mr. Spitzer said the former governor and the woman knew each other "for a period of time." The attorney said the two "had a brief and amicable conversation" last weekend, then the woman had a breakdown.

"Mr. Spitzer acted appropriately at all times during this incident," the attorney said.

A spokeswoman for Mr. Spitzer said Wednesday that he was once one of the country's most popular politicians, but that "he has no intention of ever re-entering public life, and looks forward to continuing to build his family's real-estate business."

As he once more enters damage-control mode -- reaching out on Monday to a crisis public-relations professional for help and seeking the advice of friends -- Mr. Spitzer is running out of sympathy from past supporters.

"The Scripture tells us if someone offends you seven times a day, you shall forgive them seven times," said the Rev. Daryl G. Bloodsaw, the leader of a Brooklyn church who campaigned for Mr. Spitzer when he ran for New York City comptroller in 2013. "But there comes a point when personal responsibility comes into it, and it's up to the individual to change."

Asked if he would endorse Mr. Spitzer again, Mr. Bloodsaw said perhaps if Mr. Spitzer "was up against someone who had committed murder."

Some compared Mr. Spitzer to Anthony Weiner, the former Democratic congressman who resigned amid a sexting scandal, then ran for New York City mayor, but lost amid a second sexting scandal.

"We both tried to come back and failed," Mr. Weiner said Wednesday. "I don't have any insight or advice for him."

Mr. Spitzer served two terms as New York state attorney general and was governor for 14 months until 2008, when he resigned after revelations that he had patronized prostitutes.

"I actually liked him and thought he had the potential to be a great governor," said Mel Miller, the former Democratic speaker of the New York state Assembly, who donated to Mr. Spitzer's campaigns. "Sometimes you're wrong."

After a stint as a television host, Mr. Spitzer attempted a political comeback in the race for New York City comptroller. The campaign was followed by more tabloid headlines as Mr. Spitzer's marriage ended in divorce and he dated a woman who had served as his campaign spokeswoman.

Since losing that race, Mr. Spitzer has taken a bigger role in his family's real-estate business, Spitzer Enterprises. He has been hands-on, friends said, overseeing a $700 million development in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn. He seemed happy, they said, but still harbored political ambitions.

After his 2013 loss, associates said he showed flashes of anger and disappointment. When he recently ran into strategist George Arzt, who once worked for Mr. Spitzer but later supported an opponent, he told Mr. Arzt: "I ought to kick your ass." The spokeswoman for Mr. Spitzer said the comment was in jest.

Hank Sheinkopf, a consultant who worked on Mr. Spitzer's campaign for attorney general, said that in politics, headlines are enough to inflict damage: "The sense that something might have occurred is sufficient to exclude anyone from public service."

Mr. Spitzer has maintained some influence in Manhattan's business community. Through a family trust, he donates to charitable organizations. He is sometimes spotted lunching at Michael's, the New York City power-broker hangout. In business, he is likely to survive the latest incident, analysts said.

"Prime real estate is prime real estate," said Nicole Gelinas, a fellow at the Manhattan Institute, a think tank. "People have to live and work somewhere."

Mr. Spitzer isn't as closely associated with his real-estate projects as a brand-driven developer like Donald Trump is, analysts said. But he has promoted his Williamsburg project in the news media, giving interviews and being photographed. A marketer for the development declined to comment.

Credit: By Mike Vilensky and Pervaiz Shallwani

DETAILS

Subject:	Scandals; Comptrollers; Attorneys general; Governors; Criminal investigations; Political parties
Business indexing term:	Subject: Comptrollers; Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations 92111 : Executive Offices 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution

Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Spitzer, Eliot
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations; 92111: Executive Offices; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761510
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/one-more-time-spitzer-applies-damage-control/docview/1765761510/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Election 2016: Campaign Wire

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The economists -- who have all served as directors of the White House Council of Economic Advisers -- took aim at Gerald Friedman, an economics professor at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, who has said the Sanders program could boost U.S. growth to 5.3% annually, up from 2.4% in each of the past two years.

FULL TEXT

DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY

Economists Criticize

Sanders Growth Plan

Four Democratic economists sharply criticized Sen. Bernie Sanders for citing "extreme claims" about the economic effects of his campaign proposals, the latest in a stream of critiques from Democrats over details of his platform.

The dispute reflects a broader debate in the Democratic Party, as many liberals line up behind Mr. Sanders's proposals for new government spending to fill unmet needs, while others back Hillary Clinton, who describes her plans as far more realistic.

The economists -- who have all served as directors of the White House Council of Economic Advisers -- took aim at Gerald Friedman, an economics professor at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, who has said the Sanders program could boost U.S. growth to 5.3% annually, up from 2.4% in each of the past two years. "No credible economic research supports economic impacts of these magnitudes," said an open letter from Austan Goolsbee, Alan Krueger, Christina Romer and Laura D'Andrea Tyson. Mr. Friedman responded that there was "nothing unusual" in his projections.

-- Nick Timiraos and Laura Meckler

REPUBLICAN PRIMARY

Cruz Takes Aim

At Trump's Record

Republican candidate Ted Cruz questioned rival Donald Trump's donations to Democrats, support of Planned

Parenthood and past support for abortion rights, in an effort to dent the billionaire businessman's support among South Carolina's evangelical conservatives.

At a news conference three days before the South Carolina GOP primary, Mr. Cruz said Mr. Trump bore responsibility for the Affordable Care Act and charged that he would eliminate the gun-rights guaranteed by the Second Amendment. "A vote for Donald Trump is a vote to erase the Second Amendment from the Bill of Rights," Mr. Cruz said.

In a news release, Mr. Trump defended his opposition to abortion and the Affordable Care Act and his support for gun rights, and threatened to sue Mr. Cruz.

-- Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Economists; Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US; Political campaigns; Abortion
Business indexing term:	Subject: Economists Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1765761499
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-campaign-wire/docview/1765761499/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 27 of 100

Business News: Campbell Soup Brews Venture Capital Unit

Gasparro, Annie . Gasparro, Annie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Campbell Soup Co. is investing $125 million in its own venture-capital project to fund food startups, a move to keep up with the small, entrepreneurial companies that are driving food trends in the U.S. Venture-capital investments are disrupting the food industry, said Campbell Chief Executive Denise Morrison. Since 2010, about 400 food startups have received more than $6 billion in funding, she said at an industry conference on Wednesday.

FULL TEXT

Campbell Soup Co. is investing $125 million in its own venture-capital project to fund food startups, a move to keep up with the small, entrepreneurial companies that are driving food trends in the U.S.

Venture-capital investments are disrupting the food industry, said Campbell Chief Executive Denise Morrison. Since 2010, about 400 food startups have received more than $6 billion in funding, she said at an industry conference on Wednesday.

Campbell is joining a handful of big food-and-beverage companies that are trying to jump into the startup world. Coca-Cola Co. and General Mills Inc. have venture-capital programs.

Campbell's project, called Acre Venture Partners LP, will be run by an outside partner. A Campbell subsidiary will be the sole limited partner, and Jeff Dunn, head of Campbell's fresh-food division, which includes Bolthouse Farms juices and Garden Fresh salsa, will be Campbell's representative on the investment committee.

In an interview, Ms. Morrison said Acre is a new model for innovation to help the 145-year-old soup-and-snacks company keep pace with what she calls a seismic shift taking place in the food industry. U.S. food makers are under pressure to come out with new products faster in light of the quickly changing eating habits of consumers.

Ms. Morrison said e-commerce and the increased availability of food manufacturing lines have lowered the barrier of entry for startups. Such companies have largely responded faster to consumers' demand for transparency as to what is in the food, and other trends like simpler and fresher ingredients.

"There's an easier infrastructure that enables smaller brands to get started," she said.

Acre could give Campbell insight into startups that would lead to an acquisition, but Ms. Morrison said that "we're not going to buy every company we invest in." In recent years, Campbell has acquired Bolthouse Farms and Garden Fresh Gourmet to give it a foothold in the fresh-food and deli section of the grocery store.

General Mills announced in October that its internal business unit, 301 INC would become an investor in emerging food brands, teaming up with them to create innovation. That program introduced General Mills to a small meat snacks company called Epic Provisions that it bought last month.

Credit: By Annie Gasparro

DETAILS

Subject:	Venture capital companies; Food processing industry; Startups; Food; Trends
Business indexing term:	Subject: Venture capital companies Food processing industry Startups; Corporation: General Mills Inc Campbell Soup Co; Industry: 52391 : Miscellaneous Intermediation
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Campbell Soup Co; NAICS: 311422
Classification:	8610: Food processing industry; 9190: United States; 52391: Miscellaneous Intermediation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761485
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-campbell-soup-brewn-venture-capital/docview/1765761485/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 28 of 100

City News: New Measure To Take Over Atlantic City

King, Kate . King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Assembly Speaker Vincent Prieto, a Democrat, whose cooperation is necessary to send a bill to the governor's desk, said through a spokeswoman that he remains concerned about "any efforts that would unilaterally alter collective bargaining."

FULL TEXT

New Jersey lawmakers introduced legislation Wednesday that would pull Atlantic City from the brink of bankruptcy but strip local officials of their authority, setting the stage for a fierce debate over the city's future.

The legislation introduced in the state Senate would give the state control for five years over all government functions, including the ability to sell Atlantic City's assets, alter or terminate union contracts and sell bonds.

The legislation also prevents city officials from seeking bankruptcy protection, a move they have publicly threatened in recent months, entrusting instead that power to a six-member legislative committee.

State officials had previously described the measure as a takeover, while Atlantic City Mayor Don Guardian called it a partnership. On Wednesday, Senate President Steve Sweeney, a Democrat from southern New Jersey, described it as an "intervention."

"The intervention plan will enable the state and the city to work together to accomplish what Atlantic City can't do on its own," said Mr. Sweeney, a lead sponsor of the bill, in a statement. "The city's fiscal crisis is severe and immediate."

Atlantic City officials reacted with anger to the legislation. "It's not a partnership, it's a dictatorship," City Council President Marty Small, a Democrat, said at a council meeting Wednesday night.

A spokesman for Atlantic City's mayor didn't respond to a request for comment Wednesday. The mayor has acknowledged the city's need for state assistance but said he would oppose a complete state takeover because it would disenfranchise residents who elected him and the City Council.

Preventing bankruptcy is critical to protecting the credit ratings for New Jersey and its other cities, said Sen. Paul Sarlo, a Democrat from northern New Jersey who co-sponsored the bill. Atlantic City officials have floated bankruptcy as a potential solution to the city's crushing debt, which is projected to total nearly $400 million over the next five years.

Mr. Sarlo said lawmakers are tired of subsidizing Atlantic City and wanted to ensure the city couldn't file for bankruptcy.

"There's so much Atlantic City fatigue in the Legislature that we felt we had to give the Legislature a say here in such a critical decision that may be made by Atlantic City," he said, referring to bankruptcy.

Last month, Gov. Chris Christie announced he would support a five-year takeover of Atlantic City's finances, but a spokesman for the governor declined to comment Wednesday on the new legislation.

Assembly Speaker Vincent Prieto, a Democrat, whose cooperation is necessary to send a bill to the governor's desk, said through a spokeswoman that he remains concerned about "any efforts that would unilaterally alter collective bargaining."

Assemblyman Chris Brown, a Republican, said he wants to hear how the state plans to "right-size" the city's budget, which has been subject to approval by a state monitor since 2010. Atlantic City's tax base has contracted 64% since 2010, but its budget stands at nearly $250 million for a city of about 40,000 people.

"They have this legislation that says they're going to take over the city. OK, what are you going to do differently?" Mr.

Brown said. "I'm still waiting to see the plan."

Mr. Sarlo said the state would use its new powers to shrink the city's government.

"The goal here is to sell off some of their assets, pay down some of their debt and to streamline government down there," he said.

Mr. Sarlo said the proposed legislation is "less rigid" than what state lawmakers had originally envisioned. The proposed bill, for example, gives the city one year to increase revenue from its water utility before the state can sell it.

A companion piece of legislation, also introduced Wednesday, outlined a nine-year payment plan in lieu of property taxes for the city's casinos. The arrangement would stabilize revenue for a city that has been slammed by property-tax appeals and is on track to run out of cash by April 1 or earlier.

The bill doesn't address the city's ongoing dispute with Borgata Hotel Casino & Spa, which successfully appealed its property-tax assessments dating back to 2009 and is now owed $150 million, plus interest. With Atlantic City unable to pay, a judge ruled earlier this month that Borgata could withhold its $7.2 million February tax payment as a way of recouping some of the debt.

Credit: By Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	Legislation -- New Jersey; Bankruptcy; Collective bargaining; Municipal finance; Tax assessments; Councils; Legislators; Legislation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bankruptcy Collective bargaining Municipal finance Tax assessments; Industry: 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	New Jersey; Atlantic City New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Guardian, Don
Classification:	92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765761457
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-new-measure-take-over-atlantic/docview/1765761457/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 29 of 100

U.S. News: Industrial Output Jumps on Strong Car Sales

Mitchell, Josh . Mitchell, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Economists closely follow industrial production, along with measures of employment, retail sales and income, to gauge the economy's strength and whether a recession is near.

FULL TEXT

U.S. industries ramped up production in January as strong car sales helped buffer factories against a global economic slowdown, but the outlook remains muddled.

Industrial production -- a broad measure of everything made by manufacturers, mines and utilities -- jumped 0.9% in January from a month earlier, the Federal Reserve said Wednesday. Production hadn't expanded by more than that in a single month since May 2010.

The boost reflected a surge in electricity generation due to last month's cold weather, as well as higher manufacturing output to meet demand for new cars. But overall output has been declining over the past year, and it isn't clear whether the surge was a blip or the start of a broader rebound.

"January was just a good month in a long string of weak or mediocre months, with no assurances that the January performance has any staying power or will not be offset by a weak February," IHS Global Insight economist Michael Montgomery said.

Despite the bounce, industries continued to operate far below their potential, keeping the economy in a sluggish state. Capacity use -- a measure of economic slack -- climbed seven-tenths of a point to 77.1%; in healthier expansions, it has run 80% and higher.

Still, last month's rebound could boost hopes that the manufacturing sector will weather the sharp drop in oil prices, the strong dollar, weak global demand and turbulence in the financial markets.

Output by manufacturers -- which accounts for two-thirds of all industrial output and is a harbinger of the economy's health -- grew 0.5% last month after falling 0.2% in each of the prior two months. The latest increase was due largely to the surge in auto production, though food output also rose.

Utility production grew by 5.4% last month from December, as last month's cold and snow prompted increased electricity production. Mining production was flat from December and down nearly 10% from a year earlier as energy firms scale back in response to depressed oil prices.

Economists closely follow industrial production, along with measures of employment, retail sales and income, to gauge the economy's strength and whether a recession is near.

The U.S. economy grew at a yearly rate of 0.7% in the final three months of 2015, slower than the 2% pace in the third quarter and 3.9% in the second quarter. Economists expect growth to rebound in the current quarter, to a rate between 2% and 3%.

In other economic news:

-- The producer-price index, which measures the prices companies receive for goods and services, advanced 0.1% in January from the prior month, the Labor Department said Wednesday. Excluding volatile food and energy categories, core prices climbed 0.4%.

The index has been firming since November as the cost of services rise, but it still remains historically weak. Overall producer prices were down 0.2% in January from a year earlier, the 12th straight year-over-year decline. Core prices rose 0.6% from a year earlier.

-- U.S. housing starts fell 3.8% from a month earlier to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.099 million in January, the Commerce Department said Wednesday, the lowest rate since October.

And new applications for building permits fell 0.2% to 1.202 million.

Jeffrey Sparshott and Anna Louie Sussman contributed to this article.

Credit: By Josh Mitchell

DETAILS

Subject:	Economic conditions -- United States--US; Manufacturers; Industrial production; Economic conditions; Housing starts; Prices; Manufacturing; Automobile sales
Business indexing term:	Subject: Manufacturers Industrial production Economic conditions Housing starts Manufacturing Automobile sales; Industry: 32721 : Glass and Glass Product Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	1110: Economic conditions & forecasts; 9190: United States; 32721: Glass and Glass Product Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1765753763
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-industrial-output-jumps-on-strong-car/docview/1765753763/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 30 of 100

U.S. News: Plumbers' Pay Crimps Union --- Higher earnings can make labor too costly for many private-sector projects

Sparshott, Jeffrey . Sparshott, Jeffrey.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Sean McGarvey, president of North America's Building Trades Unions, said there are waiting lists for apprenticeship programs in high-wage states in the Northeast, Midwest and West. The separate bracket is focused on private multifamily housing projects, strip malls and other light commercial jobs where there is often no prevailing wage -- a federal or state floor -- as is typical on projects awarded by a branch of the government.

FULL TEXT

Corrections & Amplifications

Plumbers and Gasfitters Local 5 of Washington, D.C., was incorrectly called Plumbers and Steamfitters Local 5 in a U.S. News article Thursday about the construction industry.

(WSJ Feb. 20, 2016)

LANHAM, Md. -- At Plumbers and Steamfitters Local 5 training facility here, there is no shortage of interest in the trades.

The union shop gets about 10 applicants for every opening in its apprenticeship program. The big draw? A five-year training program that leads to a salary of around $80,000 a year, plus health and retirement benefits. Participants don't rack up any college debt.

But the generous pay packages have a drawback: They can make union labor too expensive for many private-sector construction projects, limiting the amount of work available for the shop and forcing it to turn away would-be trainees -- even as many contractors say they can't find enough qualified workers.

Last year, U.S. construction spending approached prerecession levels for the first time during the economic expansion. But the number of workers hasn't, leaving contractors across the country looking for plumbers, carpenters, masons and other tradesmen. As of January, industrywide employment was more than 14% below its April 2006 peak.

Some 71% of construction firms plan to add to their payrolls in 2016, according to a survey by the Associated General Contractors of America, an industry group, but 70% are having a hard time finding qualified workers.

"The challenge we face and everyone is facing is a skilled labor shortage," said Doug Macpherson, general manager at the Baltimore office of Construction Labor Contractors, a staffing agency. "It's probably getting worse every year."

At Plumbers Local 5, however, which covers Washington, D.C., and parts of Maryland and Virginia, there seems to be no shortage of people looking for a job in the industry. "There's a huge interest in the trades," said Timothy Haley, training director for the local. "Unfortunately, we can't bring them all in."

That is because the union doesn't have enough work to justify expanding ranks from its roughly 1,200 active members, including 250 apprentices who have signed up for a five-year training program. For plumbing and steamfitting, Plumbers Local 5 has less than 15% of the regional market; for heating and cooling just over one third, said Jim Killeen, the group's business manager.

One obstacle to landing more contracts is the relatively high pay. Nationwide, average hourly earnings among plumbing and heating contractors averaged $27.62 last year. A journeyman -- a plumber who has completed the five-year training program -- at Local 5 makes about $10 an hour more than that. Add in health insurance, retirement and other costs, and pay and benefits total more than $55 an hour.

While union locals in different parts of the country have varying market shares, the experience can be similar. Sean McGarvey, president of North America's Building Trades Unions, said there are waiting lists for apprenticeship programs in high-wage states in the Northeast, Midwest and West. "But like any business, we don't recruit people for jobs that don't exist," he said.

If demand for labor continues to rise, compensation packages like the union's could become more competitive in more places. Right now, it doesn't appear to be at that level.

Plumbers Local 5 is trying to offer flexibility to its contractors. Trainees don't start at the highest level of pay -- a first-year apprentice earns 40% of the salary of a journeyman; a fifth-year apprentice earns 80%. By mixing experience levels on a job, contractors can control wage costs.

And to drum up more business, the plumbers in their latest contract opened up more work to a lower-wage category.

It allows union contractors -- the firms that bid on and complete the work -- to tap experienced plumbers but pay a rate much closer to $35 for wages and benefits than the $55 at the normal scale. Active members can sign up if no other work is available, but the jobs often end up going to plumbers who haven't gone through the union's apprenticeship program, Mr. Killeen said.

The separate bracket is focused on private multifamily housing projects, strip malls and other light commercial jobs where there is often no prevailing wage -- a federal or state floor -- as is typical on projects awarded by a branch of the government. "It's going to help my contractors competing with open-shop contractors," Mr. Killeen said.

Meanwhile, the plumbers' pay has been growing fairly slowly. In its latest settlement, wages rose only 1.9%. By comparison, average hourly earnings for all private-sector employees was up 2.5% in January from a year earlier.

Still, the relatively high salary and generous benefits remain a big draw for workers.

"This place gives you the opportunity to have a family," said Michael Canales, a fourth-year apprentice.

Mr. Canales, 33 years old, worked a series of construction jobs with nonunion contractors and was going to college when he was accepted in the apprenticeship program.

"You have what you need, you have a decent, living wage, great benefits. You put in your 30 years, you can retire. Isn't that a goal anymore?" Mr. Canales said.

Credit: By Jeffrey Sparshott

DETAILS

Subject:	Apprenticeship; Skills; Construction spending; Training; Labor unions; Employment; Wages & salaries; Contractors; Plumbing; Retirement
Business indexing term:	Subject: Construction spending Training Labor unions Employment Wages & salaries Contractors Retirement; Industry: 61151 : Technical and Trade Schools 81393 : Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations 23822 : Plumbing, Heating, and Air-Conditioning Contractors
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	9190: United States; 6300: Labor relations; 61151: Technical and Trade Schools; 81393: Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations; 23822: Plumbing, Heating, and Air-Conditioning Contractors
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765753634
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-plumbers-pay-crimps-union-higher/docview/1765753634/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 31 of 100

Election 2016: Americans Divided on Court Nominee Vote

Kendall, Brent . Kendall, Brent.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Obama could affect the direction of the law for years to come if he successfully places a lifetime appointee to succeed Justice Scalia, a leading conservative. Because Justice Scalia's death came in the middle of a heated election campaign, how voters react to each side's maneuvers over the court vacancy could have a significant impact on who wins the White House, not to mention control of the Senate.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Americans are just as divided as politicians over whether the Senate should consider President Barack Obama's forthcoming nominee for the Supreme Court vacancy created by the death of Justice Antonin Scalia.

A new Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll of registered voters found that 43% preferred the Senate to vote this year on Mr. Obama's choice to fill the unexpected opening, while 42% said the position should remain vacant until 2017, when a new president could nominate a replacement. The remaining 15% had no opinion.

The survey found voters were split deeply along party lines, with 71% of the Democrats favoring Senate consideration of an Obama nominee and 73% of Republicans supporting no action until the next president assumes office.

Voters who identified as independent were almost evenly divided, 43% to 42%, on whether senators should take up a court pick this year.

The president is expected to announce his selection in the coming weeks, but the nominee could face long odds in a Republican-controlled Senate, which approves judicial candidates.

The stakes are high for each party, in terms of both politics and law.

The Supreme Court has held a slim conservative majority for decades. Mr. Obama could affect the direction of the law for years to come if he successfully places a lifetime appointee to succeed Justice Scalia, a leading conservative.

Because Justice Scalia's death came in the middle of a heated election campaign, how voters react to each side's maneuvers over the court vacancy could have a significant impact on who wins the White House, not to mention control of the Senate.

Within hours of the news that Justice Scalia had died, Republican presidential candidate Ted Cruz and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said the vacancy shouldn't be filled by Mr. Obama in his final year in office. Mr. Obama the same day said he would nominate a successor and that the Senate had a responsibility to give that person a hearing and a vote.

Senate Republicans haven't reached a firm conclusion on whether to hold hearings to evaluate the president's eventual nominee.

It is rare in modern times for a justice to die in office, moreover for it to happen during an election year. Most have left the court through retirements, often timed to increase the likelihood that a like-minded president could appoint a successor.

Credit: By Brent Kendall

DETAILS

Subject:	Nominations; Judges & magistrates; Political campaigns; Judicial appointments; Elections
Location:	United States--US
People:	Scalia, Antonin; Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765753349
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-americans-divided-on-court-nominee/docview/1765753349/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Williams Posts Big Write-Down

Stynes, Tess . Stynes, Tess.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Williams Cos. swung to an unexpected fourth-quarter loss as the pipeline giant posted a big write-down, mostly related to low commodities prices and weaker market values for affiliate Williams Partners LP and its peers.

FULL TEXT

Williams Cos. swung to an unexpected fourth-quarter loss as the pipeline giant posted a big write-down, mostly related to low commodities prices and weaker market values for affiliate Williams Partners LP and its peers.

The Tulsa, Okla., company also said the write-downs reflected Williams' 2014 acquisition of Access Midstream Partners.

Shares of the Tulsa, Okla., company, which have skidded 68% in the past 12 months, fell 2% in after-hours trading as per-share earnings, excluding certain one-time items, missed expectations.

Williams is being acquired by Energy Transfer Equity LP in a $32.6 billion deal reached in September. The September deal price was below Energy Transfer's $48 billion offer that Williams had rejected in June.

Many pipeline companies had said they were mostly insulated from low energy prices because most of their revenue is based on fixed fees. However, in recent quarters, signs that the pipeline industry isn't immune to the commodities rout has slammed the sector's stocks and added to concerns about whether the Williams-Energy Transfer deal would close. Williams said its board is unanimously committed to the completion of the merger.

Over all, Williams reported a loss of $701 million, or 94 cents a share, compared with a profit of $193 million, or 26 cents a share, a year earlier. The latest period included pretax write-downs totaling $2.1 billion. Excluding such one-time items, adjusted earnings from continuing operations were flat at a penny a share.

Revenue decreased 6.3% to $2.01 billion.

Credit: By Tess Stynes

DETAILS

Subject: Writedowns; Company reports; Financial performance; Losses; Pipelines

Business indexing term:	Subject: Writedowns Company reports Financial performance
Location:	Oklahoma; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Energy Transfer Equity LP; NAICS: 486210; Name: Williams Partners LP; NAICS: 486210; Name: Williams Cos Inc; NAICS: 211120, 325312, 486910, 517111, 523160
Classification:	3100: Capital & debt management; 8500: Extractive industries; 9190: United States
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 18, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765753293
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-williams-posts-big-write-down/docview/1765753293/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: Pope Urges Mexico to Resist Crime's Lure --- Pontiff tells young people not to be hitmen, urges clergy to keep up the fight

Cordoba, Jose; Rocca, Francis X . Cordoba, Jose; Rocca, Francis X.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Earlier, the pope told priests, nuns and seminarians to stand up against violence, corruption, drug trafficking and indifference to human suffering, calling resignation the devil's tool.

FULL TEXT

MORELIA, Mexico -- Pope Francis, visiting a state traumatized by drug-linked violence, urged young Mexicans to resist the lure of easy money through crime, and told church leaders to resist the temptation to give up the fight.

"Jesus would never ask us to be hitmen, he calls us to be his disciples -- and friends," the pope told tens of thousands of young people from Michoacan gathered in a sports stadium.

Michoacan, which a few years ago a local bishop called a "failed state," has long been one of the hotspots in Mexico's drug war, which has killed more than 130,000 people over the past decade and has seen nearly 28,000 disappearances.

In recent years, the church has become more outspoken about the violence and suffered a backlash from cartels.

Across Mexico, more than a dozen priests have been killed or have disappeared over the past three years. Some have been random victims. But in other cases, they appear to have been targeted for undermining the control of criminal organizations in vulnerable communities, church officials say.

Earlier, the pope told priests, nuns and seminarians to stand up against violence, corruption, drug trafficking and indifference to human suffering, calling resignation the devil's tool.

The message is a consistent theme for a pope who worked the impoverished barrios of his native Buenos Aires as archbishop: Rather than accept earthly life as evil and await the next, Christians should work to redeem it now.

Pope Francis praised the example of Vasco de Quiroga, the state's first bishop, who in the 16th century defended the rights of the indigenous Purepecha from the onslaught of the Spanish conquistadors. Bishop de Quiroga, who hoped to create a society on the utopian principles of St. Thomas More, founded hospitals and a school, and taught crafts to villagers.

"What temptation can come to us from places often dominated by violence, corruption, drug trafficking, disregard for human dignity, and indifference in the face of suffering and vulnerability?" the pope asked. "Faced with this reality, the devil can overcome us with one of his favorite weapons: resignation."

Bishop de Quiroga had found the Purepechas a people "sold, humiliated, and homeless in marketplaces, picking up scraps of bread from the ground," he said. But rather than resign himself to that cruel reality, he acted to better their world.

More than 450 years later, the reality of much of Michoacan is more dystopia than utopia. The state's dominant criminal organization evolved into a sect-like group known as the Knights Templar, which was partly driven out in 2014 by vigilante groups formed by farmers, businessmen and others.

Many Catholics here hoped the pope would help convince some to turn away from crime.

"I hope this changes Mexico," said Fernando Ledezma, a 58-year-old car-parts salesman. Mr. Ledezma's hometown of Zamora, Michoacan, has recently suffered a big spike in violence between warring cartels.

In southwestern Guerrero state, where heroin is produced, three priests have been killed by suspected cartel hit men in the past two years. Not one of the cases has been solved.

"I feel the church is being persecuted," said Bishop Ramon Castro of Cuernavaca, one of Mexico's most violent cities. "In the Guerrero cases, it's because they said the truth about drug dealers and delinquents."

Last month, Bishop Castro spoke at the funeral of Gisela Mota, who was slain a day after taking office as mayor of a suburb of Cuernavaca. Officials blamed organized crime.

Afterward, Bishop Castro said intelligence agents told him his life could be in danger. The bishop turned down bodyguards, but didn't sleep in the same bed for a week.

"The pope knows what is happening," said Bishop Castro, who heads the Mexican Bishops Conference commission on justice and peace. "It is our mission that brings this danger."

A spokesman for the Mexican government denied that the church was suffering persecution due to its pastoral work.

Some human-rights activists criticize church leaders as doing too little. "The hierarchy is unengaged," said Javier Sicilia, who created a victims' movement after his son was killed in 2011. "The church should be out in the streets."

Since 2006, when former President Felipe Calderon unleashed a war against the drug cartels, 40 priests have been killed, according to Omar Sotelo, who has been tracking violence against the church in Mexico. About 80% of all cases are linked to organized crime, Father Sotelo estimates.

Juan Montes and Santiago Perez contributed to this article.

Credit: Jose Cordoba, Francis X. Rocca

DETAILS

Subject:	Violent crime; Drug trafficking; Resignations; Cartels; Organized crime; Violence
Business indexing term:	Subject: Resignations Cartels
Location:	Mexico
People:	Francis (Pope)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765840550
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-pope-urges-mexico-resist-crimes-lure/docview/1765840550/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

World News: Gains by Syrian Kurds Complicate Fight --- Turkey fires across border at U.S.-backed militias pushing its favored rebels back

Nissenbaum, Dion; Dagher, Sam . Nissenbaum, Dion; Dagher, Sam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.S.-backed Kurdish militants seized new ground in northern Syria on Tuesday as Turkey fired artillery from across the border to try to halt their advances, deepening the divide between allies in the fight against Islamic State.

FULL TEXT

U.S.-backed Kurdish militants seized new ground in northern Syria on Tuesday as Turkey fired artillery from across the border to try to halt their advances, deepening the divide between allies in the fight against Islamic State.

As diplomatic efforts struggled to gain traction, Kurdish fighters stepped up an offensive that is heading for Islamic State strongholds, setting the stage for a long-anticipated showdown between America's most reliable militant allies in Syria and the Sunni extremists.

The convoluted fight for northern Syria has cast doubt on prospects for a meaningful cease-fire taking hold in the coming days.

As Russian airstrikes on behalf of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad help push rebel forces back, Syrian Kurdish fighters and their Arab allies have made surprising advances north of Aleppo, once the country's largest city.

Their gains and those of the Assad regime, backed by Iran and Russia, are coming at the expense of rebels backed by U.S. allies such as Saudi Arabia and Turkey.

On Tuesday, Kurdish fighters known as YPG and their Arab allies took full control of Tal Rifaat, a rebel stronghold near the border, according to spokesmen on both sides of the battle.

The advances put the Kurdish fighters on the precipice of Islamic State territory, including the town of Dabiq, which some extremists believe is prophesied to be the site of an apocalyptic showdown.

The fighting is also allowing the YPG to narrow the divide between two Kurdish-controlled areas in northern Syria, a move that triggered Turkish military intervention this past weekend.

Turkey is embroiled in a new conflict with Kurdish fighters seeking autonomy in its southeast. It has been alarmed by the rise of Kurdish militancy across the region and accused the Syrian Kurds of funneling arms and ammunition to their allies in Turkey.

Turkey's shelling is also drawing it deeper into conflict with Moscow, which has demanded an apology after Turkey in the fall shot down a Russian bomber along the Turkey-Syria border.

On Tuesday, Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan accused Russia of working with the Kurdish forces to create an unbroken belt on the Syrian side of that border.

But Turkey's military options are limited. It risks having its forces bombed by Russian warplanes if they cross into Syria, and has struggled to empower Syrian rebels.

U.S. officials said they have seen no proof that the Kurds and Russia are collaborating on the battlefield. They may be communicating to ensure that Russian bombers don't hit YPG forces, one U.S. military official said, "but the Kurds aren't calling in targets."

Ahmed Hesso, a spokesman for the Kurdish forces, denied coordinating with Iran, Russia and the Syrian regime.

"We are doing this in full coordination with the U.S.-led coalition," he said. "We are actually in a race with the regime to advance in the northern Aleppo countryside."

Turkey has long sought to transform the area north of Aleppo into a safe zone where Syrian civilians could be protected by the U.S.-led military coalition, rather than pouring into Turkey. But the idea has stalled because of American opposition and the difficulty in creating an internationally approved no-fly zone.

The prospect dimmed more when Russia started carrying out airstrikes in Syria in the fall that targeted Turkey-backed rebels who were expected to help protect the safe zone. Now Kurdish forces are challenging Turkish designs.

Kurdish-led forces this month have captured nearly a dozen towns and villages and a small, military air base in the countryside north of Aleppo.

In an effort to deter the YPG, Turkey has fired artillery at the Kurdish fighters in Syria for four straight days. The U.S. and its allies have called on Turkey to stop shelling Syria, but Ankara has refused.

Credit: Dion Nissenbaum, Sam Dagher

DETAILS

Subject:	Extremism; Military air strikes; Armed forces; Kurdish people
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	United States--US; Turkey; Syria; Russia
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940

Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765840313
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-gains-syrian-kurds-complicate-fight/docview/1765840313/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 35 of 100

Obama To Name Court Pick In Weeks

ABSTRACT

White House spokesman Eric Schultz pointed to Supreme Court rulings over the past year, when justices legalized gay marriage and upheld the backbone of the president's health-care law, as examples of cases that would fall under that category.

FULL TEXT

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. -- President Barack Obama on Tuesday said he seeks a Supreme Court candidate who "indisputably is qualified" for the job, while administration officials indicated he wants a nominee who can attract some Republican support and complicate GOP plans to push off any confirmation process until after the election.

Mr. Obama said he would settle on a nominee within the next several weeks and would "nominate in due time a very well-qualified candidate" to succeed Justice Antonin Scalia, a conservative fixture on the high court who was found dead on Saturday.

The White House has ruled out choosing a liberal simply to fire up the Democratic Party base in a pivotal election year, suggesting Mr. Obama is looking for someone more moderate. The challenge for Mr. Obama is finding a nominee who Republicans, particularly Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, find politically difficult to refuse.

Within hours after Justice Scalia's death was announced, Mr. McConnell said Mr. Obama's successor, whom voters will elect in November, should fill the court vacancy.

House Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.) added his voice Tuesday to the Republican opposition to any nominee from Mr. Obama. While Mr. Ryan wouldn't have a vote on the matter, he carries significant weight with the GOP.

At Tuesday's news conference, Mr. Obama called on lawmakers to rise above "day-to-day politics," saying the Constitution is clear that the president should put forward a nominee to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court, and the Senate should consider that nomination. "Historically, this has not been viewed as a question," he said.

In response to a question, Mr. Obama said he wouldn't necessarily pick a moderate.

David Axelrod, a former senior adviser to Mr. Obama, said he expects the White House to move swiftly to present a candidate, "likely someone who has been confirmed before by the Senate, likely by a large margin." Putting forward a nominee who already has been approved by Republicans in the past would give the White House its best chance at confirmation, Mr. Axelrod said.

Sitting judges who were approved by wide margins in the Senate include U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judges Sri Srinivasan, Jacqueline Nguyen and Jane Kelly.

As politicians jockeyed over how to approach the court vacancy, the Supreme Court said Tuesday it has begun memorializing Justice Scalia. His body will lie in repose at the court Friday, with public viewing hours, and the court draped his courtroom bench chair and the bench directly in front of it in black wool crepe and placed black drapes over the courtroom doors.

Justice Scalia's funeral will be held Saturday at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington.

Despite Republican calls to wait on a successor until the next president, some GOP senators suggested they were open to hearings in the Judiciary Committee, which vets judicial nominees. Most prominently, Republican Sen. Charles Grassley of Iowa, the chairman of the panel, said he wouldn't rule them out.

Mr. Axelrod said Mr. Grassley's comments Tuesday about potentially holding confirmation hearings presented a possible opening to move forward with a hearing on the president's nominee.

"It is one thing to say, 'Well, we aren't going to confirm a nominee,' Mr. Axelrod said. "It's another to say, 'We're not even going to take it up.' A lot of people would find that very troubling."

Key elements of the president's legacy, including provisions in his health-care law, immigration policy and environmental rules, are set to be determined by the Supreme Court, and Mr. Obama has the rare opportunity to shape the balance of the bench in a way that could make it more favorable to his views.

But if he is going to succeed in getting his third Supreme Court justice confirmed before leaving office, his nominee needs to be palatable to Republicans, said Evan Bayh, a former Democratic senator from Indiana, who predicted Mr. Obama's choice "almost surely won't be confirmed."

White House officials have outlined several criteria Mr. Obama wants in a nominee, including a track record of impartiality and adhering to precedent. Yet the president is also seeking candidates who would use their "own ethics and moral bearings" to render a decision.

That condition is likely to be the flashpoint between the White House and Senate Republicans.

White House spokesman Eric Schultz pointed to Supreme Court rulings over the past year, when justices legalized gay marriage and upheld the backbone of the president's health-care law, as examples of cases that would fall under that category. "These aren't cases that are just about legal theory, but they're about the way that people go about their daily lives," Mr. Schultz said.

While some Democrats have suggested public opinion and election-year dynamics could put pressure on Republicans to eventually confirm the president's nominee, others believe there is no chance 14 Republicans will join with the Senate's 46 Democrats to clear the procedural hurdles for Mr. Obama's selection.

Mr. Obama hasn't named a White House official to lead the nomination process, a senior administration official said. That process, according to former White House officials who worked on Mr. Obama's previous nominations, takes on different phases: reviewing potential candidates, vetting, developing a confirmation strategy, coordinating with Congress and gathering input from outside experts and groups.

The White House always has a list of potential Supreme Court nominees prepared, according to a person familiar with past nomination processes. But White House officials couldn't have anticipated this specific scenario playing out during an election year, so Mr. Obama now must consider whether to alter any previous plans, the person said.

The White House now needs to set up a selection process for the unusual circumstances surrounding this nomination, the person said. While many have predicted the president would put forward a moderate nominee in hopes of winning over Republicans, this person said it was too early to say that definitively.

While a short, speculative list of possible picks quickly emerged in the days after Justice Scalia's death, Michele Jawando, vice president of the legal progress team at the Center for American Progress, said the president might have someone else in mind.

"This White House has shown they typically have a surprise up their sleeve," Ms. Jawando said.

Nevada GOP Gov. Brian Sandoval, a Hispanic former federal judge, could be the sort of outside-the-box pick who would scramble the debate.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee and Colleen McCain Nelson

DETAILS

Subject:	Nominations; Hearings & confirmations; Judges & magistrates; Presidents; Elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1765510570

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/obama-name-court-pick-weeks/docview/1765510570/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 36 of 100

Business News: United Mechanics Reject Pact

Carey, Susan . Carey, Susan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A wide majority of the 9,000 mechanics at United Continental Holdings Inc. voted to reject a new six-and-a-half year labor contract, their first tentative joint agreement since United and Continental merged in 2010, said their union, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

FULL TEXT

A wide majority of the 9,000 mechanics at United Continental Holdings Inc. voted to reject a new six-and-a-half year labor contract, their first tentative joint agreement since United and Continental merged in 2010, said their union, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

The union called the agreement "substandard" and said it particularly objected to the idea of implementing a new wage scale for new mechanics.

"At a time when United Airlines is incredibly profitable, it is clear that mechanics deserve a better offer from the company," Jim Hoffa, Teamsters general president, said in a statement.

The Teamsters said they would petition the National Mediation Board to declare the talks at impasse so the mechanics can go out on strike. The board, which oversees labor relations in the airline and railroad industries, normally wouldn't reach that determination until more bargaining is achieved.

Oscar Munoz, United's chief executive, said in a statement that he is disappointed by the outcome. But he said, "we are eager to get right back to the table. I will personally meet with our labor leaders to make sure we reach an agreement that will work for our technicians." Mr. Munoz, who suffered a heart attack in October and later had a heart transplant, isn't expected to be back full time at the company until later in the first quarter.

United mechanics aren't the first airline employee group to spurn a tentative contract. With the major airlines reporting record profits, other labor groups also have shown their dissatisfaction with contract offers they felt were too low.

Credit: By Susan Carey

DETAILS

Subject:	Mechanics; Labor negotiations; Strikes; Airline industry; Airlines
Business indexing term:	Subject: Labor negotiations Strikes Airline industry; Industry: 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: International Brotherhood of Teamsters; NAICS: 813910, 813930; Name: United Continental Holdings Inc; NAICS: 551112
Classification:	6300: Labor relations; 8350: Transportation & travel industry; 48111: Scheduled Air Transportation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510544
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-united-mechanics-reject-pact/docview/1765510544/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 37 of 100

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Anglo American said it plans to exit the coal business and sharply pare its iron-ore operations after posting a $5.6 billion annual loss. ---

FULL TEXT

Saudi Arabia and Russia, joined by Qatar, Kuwait and Venezuela, said they would cap oil output at January levels if other major producers followed suit. Oil prices fell nonetheless.

The Fed's Kashkari called for policy makers to consider breaking up big banks to prevent future bailouts.

A judge ordered Apple to provide software to help unlock a phone used by one of the San Bernardino shooters.

Anglo American said it plans to exit the coal business and sharply pare its iron-ore operations after posting a $5.6 billion annual loss.

Apollo agreed to buy ADT for about $7 billion, marking one of the biggest leveraged buyouts in years.

The Dow climbed 222.57 points to 16196.41, while the S&P 500 had its biggest two-day gain since August.

Prominent investors can't stay away from new energy bets despite the prolonged commodity-price slump.

The U.S. and Cuba signed a pact to reopen scheduled air service, likely setting off a scramble for route rights.

Pfizer agreed to pay $784.6 million to settle allegations that its Wyeth unit overcharged Medicaid.

United mechanics voted to reject a new labor pact, the Teamsters union said.

DETAILS

Subject:	Airlines
Business indexing term:	Industry: 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation
Location:	Qatar; Russia; Kuwait; Cuba; Venezuela; United States--US; Saudi Arabia
Company / organization:	Name: Pfizer Inc; NAICS: 325412, 339113
Classification:	48111: Scheduled Air Transportation

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510507
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1765510507/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 38 of 100

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

China has placed surface-to-air missiles on a disputed island in the South China Sea, a U.S. official said. ---

FULL TEXT

Obama said he is seeking a Supreme Court candidate who "indisputably is qualified," while officials indicated he wants one who can attract some GOP support.

Divisions have appeared among Republicans over whether the Senate should at least hold hearings this year on Obama's pick.

An Iran-backed force is leading the ground assault in the Syrian city of Aleppo, pressing ahead before a truce is supposed to take hold.

Kurdish fighters backed by the U.S. seized new ground in northern Syria as Turkey fired artillery to try to halt their advances.

China has placed surface-to-air missiles on a disputed island in the South China Sea, a U.S. official said.

Clinton said she would work to end the so-called school-to-prison pipeline, as she courted black voters.

Cruz's tax plan would cut projected federal revenue by about a fifth over 10 years, an analysis found.

The pope urged Mexicans to resist crime in a visit to Michoacan, a state ravaged by drug violence.

Three Americans kidnapped in Baghdad in January have been freed.

Died: Boutros Boutros-Ghali, 93, ex-U.N. chief.

DETAILS

Subject:	Missiles
Location:	Turkey; China; United States--US; Iran; Baghdad Iraq; South China Sea; Iraq
People:	Boutros-Ghali, Boutros
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N. Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510498
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1765510498/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 39 of 100

City News: Christie Proposes Hospital Cuts

Haddon, Heather . Haddon, Heather.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie's seventh budget proposal, released on Tuesday, sticks to his pledge against raising taxes, but it assumes that public-sector unions agree to benefit cuts.

FULL TEXT

TRENTON -- New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie's seventh budget proposal, released on Tuesday, sticks to his pledge against raising taxes, but it assumes that public-sector unions agree to benefit cuts.

The $34.8 billion plan also includes steep cuts to state hospitals to fund so-called charity-care cases, which involve treating uninsured or underinsured patients.

The cuts reflect a drop in these types of patients since Mr. Christie decided to accept more federal Medicaid funding offered to states under the Affordable Care Act, officials said. Critics say the number of cases hasn't dropped as much as the proposed funding cuts. Many other Republican governors declined the funds.

Acting New Jersey State Treasurer Ford M. Scudder hesitated to give the health-care law credit for reducing costs, but when pressed by reporters agreed that the federal health-insurance exchanges have benefited the state. "Certainly the amount of documented charity-care claims are decreasing because more people are insured," Mr. Scudder said.

Suzanne Ianni, president of the Hospital Alliance of New Jersey, a trade group, said the reductions will put hospitals serving the poor at risk.

"While the number of uninsured has decreased in New Jersey, it does not mean the need for charity-care funding goes away," she said.

The budget is modest in comparison to previous administration plans that anticipated high levels of economic growth. Mr. Christie's 2013 budget projected 7.5% growth in tax revenues, one of the highest growth targets in the nation at the time, though one the administration later had to scale back.

Asked about the budget's proposed 3.1% growth, Mr. Scudder said officials anticipate continued volatility in the stock market, which would suppress income-tax collections among high earners.

The budget assumes $250 million in savings from groups that negotiate changes to health plans for public-sector workers. The groups made $197 million in cuts last year. Mr. Christie said he wants to see the plans require the use of available generic drugs and increase copays for emergency-room visits.

In a statement, the New Jersey Education Association, the largest teachers union in the state, accused Mr. Christie of not coming up "with any new ideas for the problems he left behind," and said workers had already made concessions on their health-care benefits.

Credit: By Heather Haddon

DETAILS

Subject:	Health care; Employee benefits; Public sector; State budgets; Funding; Charities
Business indexing term:	Subject: Employee benefits Public sector State budgets
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Christie, Christopher J
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.16
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510466
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-christie-proposes-hospital-cuts/docview/1765510466/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 40 of 100

Christie Pivots to Trenton --- With campaign over, governor puts focus on state's fiscal woes; poll numbers hit a low

Haddon, Heather; King, Kate . Haddon, Heather; King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Christie had staked nearly all his presidential efforts on the centrist state. Since returning to New Jersey last week, Mr. Christie has told his supporters that he knows the state's many budgetary challenges need addressing and that he's committed to the work.

FULL TEXT

TRENTON -- New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie made his first public appearance at the Capitol on Tuesday since ending his White House bid, focusing on the state's fiscal problems as he delivered his annual budget address.

Mr. Christie was quick to address his failed campaign for the Republican presidential nomination, thanking New Jersey residents for allowing him to run and arguing that it was his experience in the state that prepared him to seek higher office.

"While the result was not what I had hoped for, maybe for some of you too, the experience has made me a better governor, a better American and a better person," Mr. Christie said while outlining his budget proposal before a joint session of the Legislature in the Assembly chambers.

Mr. Christie received polite applause during his address, and some Democrats gave him credit for plunging back into the state's affairs after his Oval Office dreams were dashed. While Democrats pledged to work with Mr. Christie, many accused him of neglecting the state during his presidential bid, and some weren't very optimistic about the road ahead.

"In the first term he was here all the time, you could go sit face to face and argue and fight and try to find solutions," said state Senate President Stephen Sweeney, a Democrat.

"Today was more cheap shots, in my mind," he said, referring to the tone of the governor's speech.

Mr. Christie said the gubernatorial ambitions of several state Democrats could be a hurdle to getting things done during the remainder of his second term, and he suggested that the race had begun too early.

"Let me remind you, the election of our next governor is 630 days away, not that I'm counting," said Mr. Christie, drawing some laughter. "Are we going to waste those days on partisanship and politics?"

Mr. Christie returned to the Statehouse with diminished standing, not only among lawmakers but voters as well.

A Rutgers-Eagleton Poll released Tuesday showed 29% of registered voters have a favorable opinion of Mr. Christie, down from 33% in December, the lowest level since the governor took office in 2010. The poll found that 62% of Republicans supported Mr. Christie, compared with 29% of independents and 19% of Democrats.

"He's coming back here with zip in terms of political capital," said Patrick Murray, director of the Monmouth University Polling Center.

Mr. Christie's $34.8 billion budget proposal included no tax increases and a $1.9 billion payment into the pension and health-benefit system for state workers.

But the budget included no immediate solution to shore up a fund to fix roads and bridges statewide. Replenishing the transportation fund, which could run out of money by the summer, is a priority for Democrats, but Mr. Christie blamed them for failing to address the problem last year.

The governor also dismissed the notion that the fund was in crisis, saying it was "a politically driven mischaracterization."

Assembly Speaker Vincent Prieto pushed back at Mr. Christie's attack that Democrats didn't want to solve the transportation-fund issue last year because they were up election. "I was probably hotter than a baked potato back there, to be honest with you," said Mr. Prieto, a Democrat.

Mr. Christie officially ended his presidential campaign last Wednesday after his sixth-place showing in the Republican primary in New Hampshire. Mr. Christie had staked nearly all his presidential efforts on the centrist state.

Since returning to New Jersey last week, Mr. Christie has told his supporters that he knows the state's many budgetary challenges need addressing and that he's committed to the work.

"I am standing here to tell you I am willing to continue to fix the remaining problems," Mr. Christie said in his 37-minute budget address. "All the problems created by people can be solved by people, and we're the ones who have to make it happen."

The governor didn't mention Atlantic City, which is facing a nearly $80 million budget deficit this year and could run out of cash by the end of the month. State lawmakers are planning to introduce a bill that would give the state complete power over the city's finances.

Mr. Christie signed a pledge as a presidential candidate not to raise taxes, and he will face challenges shoring up the transportation fund without raising the tax on gasoline sales or finding other additional revenue. On Tuesday, Mr. Christie repeated his call for a repeal of the state's taxes on estates greater than $675,000, a levy that raises about $350 million a year.

The governor repeatedly accused "special interests" of holding back the state's progress, most notably public-sector unions. He treaded lightly on social issues, seeking to increase mental-health and drug-treatment funding by $100 million and committing to fund "vital preventative and reproductive services" for women.

The mood in Trenton on Tuesday was different from buzz of the campaign trail. The halls of Trenton were quiet in the morning, with only one local news truck parked outside. The number of television cameras covering Mr. Christie's speech was far fewer than those that attended his State of the State address last month when he was still running for president.

Senate Majority Leader Loretta Weinberg, a Democrat who has frequently tangled with Mr. Christie, reached out to the governor as he made his way up the aisle after his speech, saying it took courage to put himself out on the national stage. She also promised to try to work with his administration, and he said he hoped to in return, Ms. Weinberg said.

"We'll see how long it lasts," she said.

Credit: By Heather Haddon and Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	Governors; Polls & surveys; Federal budget; State budgets; Speeches; Presidential elections; State elections
Business indexing term:	Subject: Federal budget State budgets; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Christie, Christopher J
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510465
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/christie-pivots-trenton-with-campaign-over/docview/1765510465/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 41 of 100

Finance Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In the U.S., Maple Bank's assets consist of an unspecified amount of cash held in banks in New York, according to court papers filed by Charlotte Schildt, lawyer for Mr. Frege. --

FULL TEXT

ASIA DEAL MAKING

Sime Darby May Sell

Real-Estate Assets

Malaysian conglomerate Sime Darby Bhd. is considering selling $500 million of real-estate assets in Australia and Singapore to cut debt, people familiar with the situation said.

The world's largest listed palm-oil producer, which also sells cars and runs hospitals, is exploring various deleveraging options, a Sime Darby spokesman said in a response to questions about its plans. "They include a prudent approach toward capital expenditure spending, refinancing of debts, working-capital management and various monetization options of the group's assets, including a real-estate investment trust," he said.

Citigroup Inc. is advising the company on the property-sale plans, according to people familiar with the situation. Sime Darby owns and manages overseas properties ranging from Regent Centre in Singapore to the Karri Valley Resort in Australia.

A slump in palm-oil prices last year put pressure on the company's earnings and cash flow. Palm-oil prices have been hurt by slowing demand from China and Europe.

-- Yantoultra Ngui, P.R. Venkat

MAPLE BANK

Move to Protect

U.S. Assets Is Afoot

A German insolvency administrator has asked a bankruptcy court in New York to shield the U.S. assets of Maple Bank GmbH while its affairs are sorted out.

Michael C. Frege, Maple Bank's insolvency administrator in Germany, filed a chapter 15 bankruptcy case in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New York. That followed a move by Canadian banking regulators to take control of Maple Bank's assets in Canada to preserve them after an investigation in Germany found what the regulators believed to be tax-law violations, according to a statement from Canada's Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

Earlier this month, Germany's Federal Financial Supervisory Authority, known as BaFin, closed Maple Bank's German operations following an investigation into trading activities involving the tax years 2006 to 2010. German authorities are seeking to hold Maple Bank liable for alleged tax liabilities of up to 392 million euros ($437.3 million), according to court papers.

In a Feb. 7 news release, Maple Bank spokesman Barbara Fuchs reported the BaFin move and said the bank wasn't able to make statements about the future course of action.

In the U.S., Maple Bank's assets consist of an unspecified amount of cash held in banks in New York, according to court papers filed by Charlotte Schildt, lawyer for Mr. Frege.

-- Peg Brickley

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal courts; Bankruptcy; Capital expenditures; Insolvency
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bankruptcy Capital expenditures Insolvency; Industry: 92211 : Courts
Location:	United States--US; Germany; Australia; Singapore; Canada; New York
Company / organization:	Name: Bundesanstalt fur Finanzdienstleistungsaufsicht; NAICS: 926150; Name: Bankruptcy Court-US; NAICS: 922110; Name: Citigroup Inc; NAICS: 551111
Classification:	92211: Courts
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1765510422

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/finance-watch/docview/1765510422/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 42 of 100

U.S. News: Arguments To Lose A Bit of Their Bite

Kendall, Brent; Bravin, Jess . Kendall, Brent; Bravin, Jess.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Often Justice Scalia's questions were tinged with humor, such as in a 2010 free-speech case when he probed the difference between "normal" violent videogames and "deviant" violent games whose sale had been restricted in California. Violence long had been part of children's entertainment, he suggested, citing Grimms' fairy tales.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Aside from Justice Antonin Scalia's impact on the law, his death will fundamentally change one of the Supreme Court's marquee events: oral argument.

For 30 years, Justice Scalia was consistently one of the most pugnacious questioners of lawyers who argued cases before the court. He often reserved his most stinging questions for lawyers whose positions he found lacking, but he would just as readily mix it up with advocates with whom he agreed.

"Justice Scalia took no prisoners," said Harvard University law professor Richard Lazarus. "When you prepared for oral argument, you tended to focus tremendously on him because he could transform an argument."

Often Justice Scalia's questions were tinged with humor, such as in a 2010 free-speech case when he probed the difference between "normal" violent videogames and "deviant" violent games whose sale had been restricted in California. Violence long had been part of children's entertainment, he suggested, citing Grimms' fairy tales.

He could also be controversial, as he was in a December affirmative-action case when he suggested it wasn't necessarily "a good thing for the University of Texas to admit as many blacks as possible."

Some lawyers dreaded having to face Justice Scalia's questions, including those who challenged the legality of military commission trials at Guantanamo Bay in 2006.

"Scalia was this viper in the room," one of the lawyers, Charlie Swift, said years later. They had no expectation of winning his vote, but Neal Katyal, the Georgetown University professor arguing the case, worried that his withering questions could throw him off balance.

The lawyers hired a litigation coach to help develop strategies for dulling their fear, such as imagining the justice in a bunny suit. Those didn't help, but the coach finally offered a scenario that did work. "Imagine you're holding the justice's hand," leading him to wisdom, the coach suggested. Mr. Katyal won the case, his first before the Supreme Court, over Justice Scalia's dissent.

Though Justice Scalia could make life difficult for advocates who made arguments he disagreed with, the biggest change could be for attorneys whose arguments aligned with the justice's legal views, said Stanford University law professor Jeffrey Fisher.

"Justice Scalia was probably the most active on the court in helping his side.If he had a distinct view, he would really pitch in and help the advocate along," said Mr. Fisher, who has argued 28 high-court cases and won decisions written by Justice Scalia that strengthened the rights of criminal defendants to confront their accusers.

Justice Scalia's active questions from the conservative side have been balanced out in recent years by the court's liberal members, including Justices Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan.

The question now is who on the conservative wing will fill the gap. Chief Justice John Roberts can be an incisive questioner but at times has deferred to his colleagues, playing traffic cop when the pace gets frenetic.

No matter how things change, it will be a significant adjustment in a courtroom that fed off Justice Scalia's energy. "It's really hard to imagine standing at the podium without him there," Mr. Fisher said.

Credit: By Brent Kendall and Jess Bravin

DETAILS

Subject:	Legal arguments; Attorneys; Capital punishment
Business indexing term:	Industry: 54111 : Offices of Lawyers
Location:	United States--US
People:	Scalia, Antonin
Company / organization:	Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110

Classification:	54111: Offices of Lawyers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510420
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-arguments-lose-bit-their-bite/docview/1765510420/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 43 of 100

U.S. News: All-Cash Deals Pinch Home Buyers

ABSTRACT

According to the NAR, between December 2014 and 2015 the number of homes for sale priced below $100,000 fell 11.1%, in part because of a decline in foreclosure sales.

FULL TEXT

During the housing bust, investors pounced on foreclosures and short sales -- houses that sell for less than the amount owed on the mortgage -- to use for cheap homes they could rent out or flip for a quick profit.

Now, those easy pickings are gone, but the investors are still swarming over local housing markets, offering all-cash deals and creating headaches for the first-time home buyers who compete with them.

Regan Austin, 25 years old, and her husband lost out on an Orlando, Fla., area home earlier this year to an all-cash buyer.

"It was very disappointing. We had our heart set on that home," said Ms. Austin. She and her husband, who are first-time home buyers, are still looking.

During the housing bubble, investors, lured by easy mortgages, helped send home prices to record levels. In the crash that followed, investors appeared again, this time offering all-cash deals on thousands of bank-owned properties to resell or rent out.

Some economists and real-estate agents say the market is going through an uneasy transition. While the foreclosure starts rate is back down to where it was before the crisis, cash and investor buying in some cities remains far above historical levels. That creates difficulty for buyers of low-price homes, as more buyers compete for fewer properties.

In October, 25% of home sales nationwide were to investors, down from a 32% peak in 2012, according to real estate data firm CoreLogic, but still 8 percentage points greater than in 2000, before the housing boom and bust.

Meanwhile, the supply of homes for sale fell to 1.79 million in December, according to the National Association of Realtors, enough to last 3.9 months at today's sales pace and well below the six months considered a normal market.

The problem has become acute for buyers focused on low-price properties. According to the NAR, between December 2014 and 2015 the number of homes for sale priced below $100,000 fell 11.1%, in part because of a decline in foreclosure sales.

"Home supply is diminishing but investor demand is not going away," said NAR chief economist Lawrence Yun.

Some investors say they are making a long-term bet on demand for rentals, which has boomed. The U.S. Census Bureau last month said 7% of rental units were vacant in the fourth quarter, near the low for the last decade and down from the peak of 11.1% in 2009. The median asking rent was $850, up 11% in the past year.

Some housing advocates say they have mixed feelings about the strong investor demand.

"Low inventory is a problem and making sure first-time home buyers have a shot should be a priority. But on the other hand, we have a rental affordability crisis," said Sarah Edelman, director of housing policy for the left-leaning Center for American Progress.

Investor Ken Weiner, a former financial-services executive who lives in Wantagh, N.Y., didn't buy his first single-family rental property until November, but has since closed with a partner on six homes and on another three on his own, including in South Carolina, Illinois and Georgia.

Mr. Weiner, who is buying homes sight unseen via investor startup Home Union, said he thinks demand for rentals from millennials and others delaying homeownership will make investing in single-family homes a market fixture. "I'm not counting on appreciation," he said. "If that comes, that's great. I'm looking for income."

Some real-estate agents in cities that have seen their foreclosure crisis ease said investors have moved up from bank-owned properties and are competing for traditional, low-price homes that normally are fodder for first-time buyers.

Lisa C. Ford, secretary for the Orlando Regional Realtor Association, said buyers there can expect to compete against at least one cash offer for any home priced below $300,000.

Daniel Brown, an investor living outside Los Angeles, met with real-estate agents in Kansas City, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and Pittsburgh looking for investment opportunities. He bought his first U.S. home in January 2015 and now owns about 60 homes with 75 units.

"An average normal city goes through its ups and downs, but most people there need somewhere to live, and next year, they'll still need somewhere to live," he said.

Credit: By Joe Light

DETAILS

Subject:	Rentals; Real estate sales; Sales; Housing prices; Foreclosure; Housing
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sales Housing prices Foreclosure
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	8360: Real estate; 9190: United States
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	201 6

Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510415
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-all-cash-deals-pinch-home-buyers/docview/1765510415/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 44 of 100

U.S. News: Chicago Mayor Backs New Rule for Police Video

Peters, Mark . Peters, Mark.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Emanuel administration had blocked public disclosure of the video that shows Mr. McDonald being shot by Chicago police officer Jason Van Dyke, saying it was following a policy of not releasing footage tied to a continuing criminal investigation.

FULL TEXT

CHICAGO -- Mayor Rahm Emanuel backed a new policy Tuesday requiring the release within 60 days of video and audio from police shootings and other incidents, as his administration continues responding to public outcry over how it handled footage of a black teenager being fatally shot by police.

The new policy, which also will apply to written materials, is the first to come out of a task force on police accountability formed by Mr. Emanuel following the November release of a video of a police officer shooting and killing 17-year-old Laquan McDonald in 2014. The graphic footage sparked protests, calls for Mr. Emanuel to resign and a Justice Department probe into the practices of the police department.

The Emanuel administration had blocked public disclosure of the video that shows Mr. McDonald being shot by Chicago police officer Jason Van Dyke, saying it was following a policy of not releasing footage tied to a continuing criminal investigation. However, a judge ordered the city to make the video public, and prosecutors charged Mr. Van Dyke with murder hours before its release. Mr. Van Dyke has pleaded not guilty.

"The long-standing policy the city followed for decades is out of date, and this new policy strikes a better balance of ensuring transparency for the public," the mayor said.

The move is the latest in an effort by Mr. Emanuel to overhaul the police department, including increasing the number of tasers in use to changing the department's use-of-force policy. More changes are expected, with the task force required to deliver a full set of recommendations to the mayor by the end of March.

The new policy isn't just for shootings, but deaths in police custody and other police-involved incidents.

Credit: By Mark Peters

DETAILS

Subject:	Shootings; Audio recordings; Deadly force; Video recordings; Police -- Chicago Illinois; Task forces; Mayors; Police shootings
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Chicago Illinois; United States--US
People:	McDonald, Laquan; Emanuel, Rahm
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-Chicago IL; NAICS: 922120; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510409
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-chicago-mayor-backs-new-rule-police/docview/1765510409/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 45 of 100

Business News: Pfizer Agrees To Settle On Wyeth's Claims

Loftus, Peter . Loftus, Peter.

ABSTRACT

[...]of the settlement, Pfizer revised its fourth-quarter results to a loss of $172 million, or 3 cents a share.

FULL TEXT

Drugmaker Pfizer Inc. on Tuesday said it reached an agreement in principle to pay $784.6 million to settle a long-running U.S. government investigation of allegations that its Wyeth unit overcharged government Medicaid health programs for the heartburn drug Protonix.

Pfizer said the agreement doesn't include any admission of liability by Wyeth.

The deal is subject to negotiation of a final agreement and court approval. A trial in the case had been scheduled to begin March 7 in federal court in Boston.

The Justice Department filed a lawsuit against Wyeth in April 2009, accusing it of failing to provide to state Medicaid programs, as required by law, the same price discounts for Protonix that the company was providing to certain nongovernment customers between 2001 and 2006.

The Justice Department lawsuit said Wyeth avoided paying hundreds of millions of dollars in rebates it should have paid to the Medicaid programs, which provide health care for low-income people. New York-based Pfizer acquired Wyeth in 2009.

The Justice Department has previously stated in court documents that it believed Wyeth's liability in the case should exceed $2 billion.

The Justice Department's allegations against Wyeth are based partly on allegations contained in two earlier whistleblower lawsuits filed against the company.

Under the U.S. False Claims Act, people can file lawsuits accusing companies or individuals of defrauding the government, and receive up to 30% of any recoveries from settlements or court judgments that result from their allegations.

One of the whistleblower lawsuits against Wyeth was filed by William LaCorte, a physician in Metairie, La., who has received millions of dollars from filing false-claims lawsuits against multiple health-care companies.

Dr. LaCorte previously brought a similar case against Merck & Co, which agreed in 2008 to pay $250 million to settle allegations it overcharged Medicaid for the heartburn drug Pepcid.

The other lawsuit against Wyeth was filed by Lauren Kieff, a former sales representative for AstraZeneca PLC.

On Tuesday, a federal judge in Boston ordered that the cases be dismissed because of the proposed settlement.

The proposed Wyeth settlement is the latest in a series of settlements of U.S. government investigations of drug companies' marketing tactics, pricing practices and other activities in the past decade.

GlaxoSmithKline PLC agreed in 2012 to pay $3 billion to resolve probes of the company's marketing of certain drugs for uses that weren't approved by U.S. regulators, among other activities.

Pfizer, Johnson & Johnson and Abbott Laboratories also have reached large settlements of government investigations.

Shares of Pfizer rose 1.5% to $29.81 Tuesday.

As a result of the settlement, Pfizer revised its fourth-quarter results to a loss of $172 million, or 3 cents a share. Earlier in February, Pfizer reported a fourth-quarter profit of $613 million, or 10 cents a share.

"The resolution of these cases reflects a desire by the company to put these cases behind us and to focus on the needs of patients," said Doug Lankler, Pfizer's general counsel. A Justice Department spokeswoman declined to comment.

Credit: By Peter Loftus

DETAILS

Subject:	Litigation; Whistleblowing; Settlements & damages; Pharmaceutical industry; Medicaid fraud; Gastroesophageal reflux; Government investigations
Business indexing term:	Subject: Pharmaceutical industry Medicaid fraud; Corporation: Pfizer Inc; Industry: 32541 : Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing 92313 : Administration of Human Resource Programs (except Education, Public Health, and Veterans' Affairs Programs)
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Pfizer Inc; NAICS: 325412, 339113; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	8641: Pharmaceuticals industry; 4330: Litigation; 9190: United States; 32541: Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing; 92313: Administration of Human Resource Programs (except Education, Public Health, and Veterans' Affairs Programs)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510389
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-pfizer-agrees-settle-on-wyeths/docview/1765510389/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 46 of 100

World News: World Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Without the support of the coalition, the government will struggle to pass measures required by the International Monetary Fund to disburse further funds from its $17 billion bailout.

FULL TEXT

UKRAINE

Government Faces

Deadlock After Vote

Ukraine's government survived a no-confidence vote in parliament, despite demands from President Petro Poroshenko and some of its own allies in the pro-Western coalition that it should resign.

The vote leaves the country facing political deadlock -- as well as a deep recession and a Russia-backed insurgency in its east. Without the support of the coalition, the government will struggle to pass measures required by the International Monetary Fund to disburse further funds from its $17 billion bailout.

The government has wobbled amid accusations of corruption and mismanagement. Mr. Poroshenko said he could dissolve parliament but would do this only "in extreme circumstances."

The splits in the coalition are putting at risk Western support for Ukraine. The head of the IMF has warned the bailout could be in jeopardy unless leaders push through economic and governance overhauls and combat corruption.

-- James Marson

EGYPT

Boutros-Ghali, 93,

Dies in Cairo Hospital

Boutros Boutros-Ghali, a veteran Egyptian diplomat who helped negotiate his country's landmark peace deal with Israel but then clashed with the U.S. when he served a single term as United Nations secretary-general, died. He was 93 years old.

Mr. Boutros-Ghali was the first U.N. chief from African continent. He became U.N. chief in 1992 at the end of the Cold War and the start of a unipolar era dominated by the U.S. But after four years of frictions with the Clinton administration, the U.S. blocked his renewal in 1996, making him the only U.N. leader to serve a single term.

Mr. Boutros-Ghali died Tuesday at a Cairo hospital, Egypt's state news agency said. He had been admitted to the hospital after suffering a broken pelvis, the Al-Ahram newspaper reported Thursday. He was survived by his wife, Lea.

His five years as secretary-general remain controversial. Some see him as seeking to establish the U.N.'s independence from the U.S. Others blame him for misjudgments in the failures to prevent genocides in Africa and the Balkans.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Bailouts; No confidence motions & votes
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bailouts
Location:	Ukraine; United States--US; Russia
Company / organization:	Name: Al-Ahram; NAICS: 513110, 551112; Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510348
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1765510348/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Apple Told to Help Open Shooter's Phone --- Judge orders firm to aid federal investigators probing device used by San Bernardino suspect

Devlin, Barrett; Emshwiller, John R. Devlin, Barrett; Emshwiller, John R.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A federal judge has ordered Apple Inc. to provide software to the Justice Department to help it unlock a phone used by one of the suspects in the San Bernardino, Calif., terror attack because investigators suspect the device may hold critical details of the plotting behind the mass murder.

FULL TEXT

A federal judge has ordered Apple Inc. to provide software to the Justice Department to help it unlock a phone used by one of the suspects in the San Bernardino, Calif., terror attack because investigators suspect the device may hold critical details of the plotting behind the mass murder.

The order, reflected in legal filings unsealed Tuesday, involves a phone once used by Syed Rizwan Farook and marks a pivotal moment in the highest-profile confrontation in the long-running argument between Washington and Silicon Valley over privacy and security.

Law-enforcement agencies say companies like Apple make it harder to solve crimes including terrorist attacks, child abuse and murder by putting security measures on phones that make it difficult or impossible for investigators to open them and examine data inside.

The industry argues that strong security is needed to protect customers from hackers and government spying.

This fight between the government and the industry has been going on for more than a year, largely over the issue of encryption, which is being used more widely in smartphones and other devices.

The San Bernardino case centers on the work phone of Mr. Farook, who with his wife Tashfeen Malik is suspected of having opened fire at a holiday party of county workers on Dec. 2, killing 14 people and injuring 22. Both Mr. Farook and Ms. Malik were killed in a shootout with authorities later that day.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Sheri Pym granted the Justice Department's request for help unlocking the phone.

Apple didn't immediately respond to a request for comment or say if it plans to appeal the decision.

Tuesday's court action is a potentially important step "in the process of learning everything we possibly can about the attack," Eileen M. Decker, the U.S. Attorney in Los Angeles, said in a statement.

The legal fight over the phone revolves around its passcode but is also part of the broader fight over encryption. At issue, according to the filing, is the numeric passcode protection system Apple uses to prevent people from simply guessing the right password.

A number of security measures -- including a permanent disabling of the phone after 10 unsuccessful tries at the password -- have kept agents from reviewing the contents of the phone, according to the filing. When the phone is locked, the data is encrypted.

The phone is actually owned by Mr. Farook's former employer, San Bernardino County. The county has given investigators permission to search the phone, but county officials don't know Mr. Farook's passcode, according to federal prosecutors.

"Despite both a warrant authorizing the search and the phone owner's consent, the government has been unable to complete the search because it cannot access the iPhone's encrypted content," the government filing says. "Apple has the exclusive technical means which would assist the government in completing its search, but has declined to provide that assistance voluntarily."

Such passwords became much more important in 2014, when Apple and Google Inc. said they were adding encryption schemes to their operating systems that the companies say they can't unlock. When an iPhone user sets a password for a device, the data is encrypted when the phone is locked. Apple has said it doesn't keep the passwords and can't open a phone once it is locked.

The Justice Department believes Apple has the technical means to bypass the security features, which should allow investigators to keep guessing the password until they guess correctly, but so far the company has refused to do so, the filing says.

Credit: By Devlin Barrett and John R. Emshwiller

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Terrorism; Mass murders; Smartphones; Criminal investigations; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Smartphones; Corporation: Apple Inc
Location:	United States--US
People:	Malik, Tashfeen; Farook, Syed Rizwan
Company / organization:	Name: Apple Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334220, 513210; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510291
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-apple-told-help-open-shooters-phone/docview/1765510291/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 48 of 100

Careers: Bosses Dig Into Data To Flag Workers' Ills

Silverman, Rachel Emma . Silverman, Rachel Emma.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Trying to stem rising health-care costs, some companies, including retailer Wal-Mart Stores Inc., are paying firms like Castlight Healthcare Inc. to collect and crunch employee data to identify, for example, which workers are at risk for diabetes, and target them with personalized messages nudging them toward a doctor or services such as weight-loss programs.

FULL TEXT

Employee wellness firms and insurers are working with companies to mine data about the prescription drugs workers use, how they shop and even whether they vote, to predict their individual health needs and recommend treatments.

Trying to stem rising health-care costs, some companies, including retailer Wal-Mart Stores Inc., are paying firms like Castlight Healthcare Inc. to collect and crunch employee data to identify, for example, which workers are at risk for diabetes, and target them with personalized messages nudging them toward a doctor or services such as weight-loss programs.

Companies say the goal is to get employees to improve their own health as a way to cut corporate health-care bills.

Privacy advocates have raised concerns about such practices. Employees generally have a choice in whether to participate in the programs. The services are new enough that relatively few workers are aware of them.

"I bet I could better predict your risk of a heart attack by where you shop and where you eat than by your genome," says Harry Greenspun, director of Deloitte LLP's Center for Health Solutions, a research arm of the consulting firm's health-care practice.

An employee who spends money at a bike shop is more likely to be in good health than someone who spends on videogames, Dr. Greenspun says.

Credit scores can also suggest whether an individual will be readmitted to the hospital following an illness, he says. Those with lower credit scores may be less likely to fill prescriptions and show up for follow-up appointments, adds Dr. Greenspun.

Welltok Inc., whose clients include Colorado's state employees, has found that people who vote in midterm elections tend to be healthier than those who skip them, says Chris Coloian, the firm's chief solutions officer.

In general, midterm voters are more mobile and more active in the community, strong indicators of overall health, he says.

As employers more actively involve themselves in employee wellness, privacy experts worry that management could obtain workers' health information, even if by accident, and use it to make workplace decisions.

Federal health-privacy laws generally bar employers from viewing workers' personal health information, though self-insured employers have more leeway, says Careen Martin, a health-care and cybersecurity lawyer at Nilan Johnson Lewis PA. Instead, employers contract with wellness firms who have access to workers' health data.

"There are enormous potential risks" in these efforts, such as the exposure of personal health data to employers or others," says Frank Pasquale, a law professor at the University of Maryland, who studies health privacy.

Typically, when a company hires a firm like Castlight, Jiff Inc. or ActiveHealth Management Inc., it authorizes the firm to collect information from insurers and other health companies that work with the client company. Employees are prompted to grant the firm permission to send them health and wellness information via an app, email or other channels, but can opt out.

Based on data such as an individual's claims history, the firms can identify an individual who might be considering costly procedures like spinal surgery, and can send that person recommendations for a second opinion or physical therapy.

Spinal surgery, which can cost $20,000 or more, is another area where data experts are digging in. After finding that 30% of employees who got second opinions from top-rated medical centers ended up forgoing spinal surgery, Wal-Mart tapped Castlight to identify and communicate with workers suffering from back pain.

To find them, Castlight scans insurance claims related to back pain, back imaging or physical therapy, plus pharmaceutical claims for pain medications or spinal injections. Once identified, the workers get information about measures that could delay or head off surgery, such as physical therapy or second-opinion providers.

Some firms, such as Welltok and GNS Healthcare Inc., also buy information from data brokers that lets them draw connections between consumer behavior and health needs.

Employers generally aren't allowed to know which individuals are flagged by data mining, but the wellness firms -- usually paid several dollars a month per employee -- provide aggregated data on the number of employees found to be at risk for a given condition.

To determine which employees might soon get pregnant, Castlight recently launched a new product that scans insurance claims to find women who have stopped filling birth-control prescriptions, as well as women who have made fertility-related searches on Castlight's health app.

That data is matched with the woman's age, and if applicable, the ages of her children to compute the likelihood of an impending pregnancy, says Jonathan Rende, Castlight's chief research and development officer. She would then start receiving emails or in-app messages with tips for choosing an obstetrician or other prenatal care. If the algorithm guessed wrong, she could opt out of receiving similar messages.

To steer more J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. employees to doctors in its network, insurer Cigna Corp. analyzed claims data to identify employees who lacked primary-care physicians. Those employees got personalized messages on Cigna's mobile app with recommendations for in-network doctors, says Michael Sturmer, a regional Cigna executive in the Northeast. Employees who had downloaded the Cigna app used in-network providers about 2% more than they did before the system was implemented in 2015.

Some people may feel uncomfortable with the idea that their personal data is being used to predict their future. Castlight carefully test-markets its messages to try to avoid appearing too intrusive, says Mr. Rende. "Every word matters," he says.

Maribeth Quinn says she was surprised to learn that her glucose levels put her at risk for diabetes, news she got in a message three years ago from HealthMine Inc., which says it analyzes health and claims data, but not other personal data. Ms. Quinn, a financial-aid executive at JFK Medical Center in Edison, N.J., has since lost 35 pounds, and is no longer deemed prediabetic. "It was in my face," she says. "That made me do something about it."

DETAILS

Subject:	Privacy; Personal health; Employers; Insurance claims; Credit scoring; Data mining; Wellness programs; Diabetes; Back pain; Health care; Physical therapy; Research & development--R & D; Back surgery; Personal information
Business indexing term:	Subject: Employers Insurance claims Credit scoring Data mining Wellness programs; Corporation: Walmart Inc; Industry: 62134 : Offices of Physical, Occupational and Speech Therapists, and Audiologists
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Welltok Inc; NAICS: 513210; Name: Castlight Health Inc; NAICS: 513210
Classification:	62134: Offices of Physical, Occupational and Speech Therapists, and Audiologists
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510164
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/careers-bosses-dig-into-data-flag-workers-ills/docview/1765510164/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-08-26

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 49 of 100

U.S. Stocks Rally For Biggest 2-Day Rise Since August

Josephs, Leslie . Josephs, Leslie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The production freeze will only apply if others follow, leaving many analysts skeptical that the news will do much to ease the supply glut that has sent crude oil down more than 70% from its June 2014 peak. "Because the January levels are pretty much record highs for both [Saudi Arabia and Russia], the pledge fell far short of hopes for agreement to reduce output," said Marc Chandler, head of currency strategy at Brown Brothers Harriman.

FULL TEXT

The S&P 500 rallied to seal its biggest two-session gain since late August, as investors bought shares broadly and favored some of the year's most battered sectors, such as finance and technology.

Investors also sold assets perceived as safe, which they had used as protection during market swoons earlier this month.

Tuesday's gains propelled the S&P 500 to a 3.6% rise over two trading sessions, its biggest two-day rally since Aug. 27. The U.S. stock market was closed Monday for the Presidents Day holiday.

Concerns about an economic slowdown has rattled investors this year, but some analysts said the panic has been overdone.

"There's been a rapid shift into less risky parts of the market" this year at the expense of stocks, said David Lefkowitz, a senior equity strategist at UBS Wealth Management. "It has probably gone too far compared with the economic fundamentals."

Some investors remain hesitant.

"I'm not throwing caution to the wind," said Tommy Lackey, a portfolio manager at Barber Lackey Financial Group LLC in Greensboro, Ga. Mr. Lackey said he has been buying financial and biotechnology shares this month after share prices slid.

The tech-heavy Nasdaq Composite, which has posted the worst decline of the three major U.S. indexes this year at 11%, rose 98.44 points, or 2.3%, to 4435.96 Tuesday. The Dow Jones Industrial Average added 222.57 points, or 1.4%, to 16196.41. The S&P 500 gained 30.80 points, or 1.7%, to 1895.58.

Eight of Tuesday's 10 biggest gainers in the S&P 500 are down at least 25% over the past 12 months.

The KBW Nasdaq bank index added 2.8%, but is still down more than 16% so far this year.

Haven assets fell, with the yield on the 10-year U.S. Treasury note rising for a second session to 1.779% from 1.746% on Friday. Yields rise as prices fall.

Gold futures lost 2.6% to settle at $1,207.50 an ounce.

While concerns of an economic slowdown have abated in the past couple of days, the fear is still strong enough to crimp gains, some analysts say.

"I think the rally's going to fizzle," said Kenny Polcari, director at O'Neil Securities.

Strong earnings reports helped lift individual stocks Tuesday. Burger King owner Restaurant Brands International rose 5.9% in Toronto after posting better-than-expected profits. Shares of Hormel Foods gained $2.94, or 7.1%, to $44.44 after the food company reported an increase in profits and lifted guidance for the year.

Shares of ADT led the S&P 500 higher, soaring 12.77, or 48%, to 39.64 after the home-security company agreed to be acquired by private-equity firm Apollo Global Management LLC.

Oil futures fell after Saudi Arabia, Russia, Qatar and Venezuela said they wouldn't increase crude-oil output above January's levels.

The production freeze will only apply if others follow, leaving many analysts skeptical that the news will do much to ease the supply glut that has sent crude oil down more than 70% from its June 2014 peak.

"Because the January levels are pretty much record highs for both [Saudi Arabia and Russia], the pledge fell far short of hopes for agreement to reduce output," said Marc Chandler, head of currency strategy at Brown Brothers Harriman.

U.S. oil prices fell 1.4% to $29.04 a barrel. The index of energy companies in the S&P 500 added 0.8%, trailing the broader market. Early Wednesday in Asia, oil was trading higher at $29.38 a barrel.

The Stoxx Europe 600 reversed early gains to end 0.4% lower.

Asian markets were mixed early Wednesday, with investors cautious about the agreement among major oil-producing nations. The Shanghai Composite and Hong Kong's Hang Seng Index were up 0.6%, while South Korea's Kospi was up 0.4%. Japan's Nikkei Stock Average was down 0.3% and Australia's S&P ASX 200 was flat.

In currencies Tuesday, the dollar slid 0.5% against the yen to 114.077 yen and gained 0.1% against the euro to 0.8973 euros. The Chinese yuan, which Monday hit its strongest level this year against the greenback, weakened 0.3% against the dollar.

Riva Gold and Chao Deng contributed to this article.

Credit: By Leslie Josephs

DETAILS

Subject:	Dow Jones averages; Daily markets (wsj); Stock exchanges; Stock prices; American dollar; Economic conditions; Economic slowdowns; Investments
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices American dollar Economic conditions Economic slowdowns; Industry: 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	3400: Investment analysis & personal finance; 9190: United States; 52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
column:	Tuesday's Markets
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510148
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-stocks-rally-biggest-2-day-rise-since-august/docview/1765510148/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 50 of 100

U.S. News: Jail Break Inquiry Focuses on Headcount

Elinson, Zusha . Elinson, Zusha.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Sheriff's officials declined to comment on the policy, obtained by The Wall Street Journal through a public-records request, saying the circumstances of the escape at the Orange County Central Men's Jail were the subject of a probe.

FULL TEXT

Jailers at a California facility where three inmates executed a daring breakout last month are supposed to count inmates at least five times a day, according to its policy.

But Orange County Sheriff's Department officials have said the three escapees, who included an accused killer, weren't discovered missing until the evening on Jan. 22, 16 hours after a morning bed check.

Sheriff's officials declined to comment on the policy, obtained by The Wall Street Journal through a public-records request, saying the circumstances of the escape at the Orange County Central Men's Jail were the subject of a probe.

All three fugitives -- Jonathan Tieu, Bac Duong and Hossein Nayeri -- were captured eight days later in a manhunt that stretched from Orange County, south of Los Angeles, hundreds of miles north to the San Francisco Bay Area.

Experts said if jailers had been keeping tabs on the inmates as outlined by the county's policy, they would have been noticed missing sooner.

Two times every day, jailers at Central Men's Jail are supposed to count inmates by comparing photos with actual inmates, according to the policy. Three times a day, there is supposed to be a "statistical body count" according to the policy, which requires deputies to count all the inmates. The timing of these counts was redacted in the copy of the policy released to the Journal.

On the day of the escape, the photo counts were conducted at around 5 a.m. just before the escape and after 8 p.m. when the missing inmates were discovered, sheriff's officials have said.

The union representing Orange County's deputies filed a lawsuit last week, alleging that jail bosses directed guards to ignore the department's policies on inmate counts back in 2015. Tom Dominguez, president of the Association of Orange County Deputy Sheriffs, said he fears his members will be scapegoated in the probe. A sheriff's spokesman declined to comment on the lawsuit.

Credit: By Zusha Elinson

DETAILS

Subject:	Prison escapes; Prisons; Sheriffs
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	Orange County California; United States--US
Classification:	92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510135
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-jail-break-inquiry-focuses-on-headcount/docview/1765510135/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 51 of 100

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A WSJ Roundup --- NEW YORK CITY Monitor Compliments Stop-and-Frisk Policy The federal monitor overseeing changes to the New York City Police Department's stop-and-frisk program said in a progress report on Tuesday that the department has done good work setting new policy, but putting it into practice will be a challenge.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK CITY

A Musical About 9/11

Comes to Broadway

As the West continues to grapple with waves of migrants and refugees, a more uplifting story of unexpected visitors is headed to Broadway in the spring of 2017.

The musical "Come From Away," directed by Christopher Ashley, tells the story of how the tiny, isolated community of Gander, Newfoundland, handled the sudden arrival of 38 planes and some 6,000 passengers diverted there on Sept. 11, 2001.

During its La Jolla, Calif., and Seattle runs, the production earned critical acclaim, prompting extensions in both cities. It remains to be seen how a feel-good toe-tapper about 9/11 will be received in New York.

Husband-and-wife team Irene Sankoff and David Hein, who together wrote the music, lyrics and book, were in New York City on Sept. 11. Those who were very directly connected to the events of Sept. 11 have come to the show, they said.

"They're so glad that they came," said Ms. Sankoff. "It helped them process what had happened."

-- Corinne Ramey

NEW YORK CITY

Cuomo Says Rikers

Should Be Updated

Gov. Andrew Cuomo said Rikers Island is dangerous and dated and should be replaced with a modern and safer jail for New York City.

The governor said in an interview on Tuesday that the jail, built in the 1930s, has been a "festering" problem, dangerous for guards and inmates.

City Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito has announced a commission to study the fate of the 400-acre island in the East River. It houses most of the city's 10,000 inmates.

Mr. Cuomo told local news station NY1 that the first step is to admit the problem, and the second to determine the alternative: one jail or many smaller facilities.

Mayor Bill de Blasio cited logistical and financial challenges in replacing Rikers, saying it is a "noble concept but one that will cost many billions of dollars, and we do not have a viable pathway to that at this point."

-- A WSJ Roundup

NEW YORK CITY

Monitor Compliments

Stop-and-Frisk Policy

The federal monitor overseeing changes to the New York City Police Department's stop-and-frisk program said in a progress report on Tuesday that the department has done good work setting new policy, but putting it into practice will be a challenge.

A federal judge ruled in 2013 that the practice violated the civil rights of minorities. Monitor Peter Zimroth said in a report to the judge that the police department has distributed a new patrol guide that prohibits biased-based policing, and put into use new training for recruits and current officers. A new stop-report form is being tested.

"All the parties worked diligently, collaboratively and in good faith," he wrote.

Street stops fell to about 24,000 in 2015 from a high of 685,724 in 2011. Most of those stopped were black and Hispanic men, and fewer than 10% were arrested.

-- Associated Press

QUEENS

Subway Rider Dies

After Being Dragged

Police say a 51-year-old man died after he was dragged by a subway train in Queens.

It happened shortly before 7 p.m. Monday as an F train left the Union Turnpike-Kew Gardens station. Police say Edward Leonard, of Queens, was dragged and struck his head on the platform.

Emergency crews rushed him to a nearby hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

-- Associated Press

CONNECTICUT

Police Shoot Man

At Fairfield Home

A Fairfield man whose wife and her three children were violently attacked at home was shot to death on Tuesday by police officers he confronted in his driveway, authorities said.

Police arrived around 6 a.m. An officer was forced to shoot him, authorities said, and he later died of his injuries.

Inside, police found the man's wife and her three children with numerous blunt-force trauma injuries and stab wounds. Their conditions weren't immediately available.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Stop & frisk
Location:	La Jolla California; United States--US
People:	Cuomo, Andrew M
Company / organization:	Name: Rikers Island (prison complex); NAICS: 922140; Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510131
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1765510131/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 52 of 100

City News: Kudlow Won't Run for Senate In Connecticut

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Entrepreneur August Wolf is the only declared Republican candidate currently in the race.

FULL TEXT

CNBC host Larry Kudlow said Tuesday he wouldn't run for U.S. Senate in Connecticut this year.

Mr. Kudlow was weighing whether to compete in the Republican primary to eventually take on U.S. Sen. Richard Blumenthal, a Democrat. Mr. Kudlow said in an interview he decided to pass on running for office because he wanted to continue working for CNBC and hosting his WABC radio show.

"We really looked at it hard," said Mr. Kudlow, who lives in Redding, Conn. "At the end of the day, I love what I do."

Mr. Kudlow, an economist who served in the Reagan administration in the Office of Management and Budget, has never run for elected office. He said he was considering running because he disagreed with Mr. Blumenthal on taxes and the Iran nuclear agreement. Mr. Kudlow said he also supports temporarily halting refugees from Syria from coming to the U.S., which Mr. Blumenthal opposes.

A spokeswoman for Mr. Blumenthal declined to comment.

Mr. Kudlow's decision leaves Connecticut's Republican Party without a well-known challenger to take on Mr. Blumenthal. Entrepreneur August Wolf is the only declared Republican candidate currently in the race. He has never held elective office, and isn't known to many Connecticut voters.

Joe Visconti, a former gubernatorial candidate, is considering entering the race.

J.R. Romano, chairman of the Connecticut Republican Party, said he understands why Mr. Kudlow made his decision and expects the eventual Republican nominee to put up a strong challenge.

"We are going to keep on trucking," Mr. Romano said. "I think [Mr. Wolf] is a great guy, and he is working really, really hard."

Mr. Ludlow said Mr. Blumenthal was "vulnerable" and that Republicans in Connecticut still had a chance to beat him.

"There is a lot of talented people in Connecticut," Mr. Kudlow said. "Someone will pop up and give Sen. Blumenthal a run for his money."

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

Subject:	Political parties; Congressional elections -- Connecticut
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	Connecticut; United States--US
People:	Ludlow, Larry
Company / organization:	Name: CNBC Inc; NAICS: 516210; Name: Senate-US; NAICS: 921120
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510069
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-kudlow-wont-run-senate-connecticut/docview/1765510069/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 53 of 100

U.S. News: Opening Seen on Nominee Hearings

Hughes, Siobhan . Hughes, Siobhan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The back and forth showed the potential for the fight over the Supreme Court vacancy to further divide the Republican party, where hard-line conservatives have clashed in Congress with a more pragmatic GOP leadership that has been focused on upholding the traditions of the institution.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- A new fault line is emerging in the battle over filling an unexpected Supreme Court vacancy: whether the Republican-controlled Senate should at least hold hearings this year on the president's forthcoming choice.

Immediately after news of the death of Justice Antonin Scalia over the weekend, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said the vacancy "should not be filled until we have a new president." That would preclude the need for Judiciary Committee confirmation hearings or a floor vote this year on the president's nominee.

Conservatives cheered and generally rallied around the Kentucky Republican's strategy. But by Tuesday, some Republicans were suggesting they were open to hearings in the Judiciary Committee, which vets judicial nominees.

Most prominently, Republican Sen. Charles Grassley of Iowa, the panel's chairman, said he wouldn't rule them out.

"I would wait until the nominee is made before I would make any decisions," Sen. Grassley said in an interview with reporters that was posted on Radio Iowa's website. "In other words, take it a step at a time."

Some Republicans could face pressure back home from voters who might feel that avoiding hearings and a vote -- regardless of the nominee -- is a dereliction of duty. On Tuesday, Iowa's biggest newspaper accused the six-term senator of obstructionism. "Grassley's Supreme Court stance is all about politics," read a Des Moines Register editorial after Mr. Grassley agreed with Mr. McConnell that the next president should pick a nominee.

In North Carolina, Sen. Thom Tillis, a GOP member of the Judiciary panel, captured the tension, telling a local radio station that Republicans would "fall into the trap of being obstructionists" if they rejected a candidate out of hand before the president had even selected a nominee.

In Wisconsin, Republican Sen. Ron Johnson, who is in a tough re-election battle and was the first lawmaker to embrace Mr. McConnell's strategy, told a local radio show that he never meant to rule out a floor vote or confirmation hearings. "I never said that we shouldn't vote," Mr. Johnson said. "I'm just saying it makes a lot of sense for the American public to decide."

The back and forth showed the potential for the fight over the Supreme Court vacancy to further divide the Republican party, where hard-line conservatives have clashed in Congress with a more pragmatic GOP leadership that has been focused on upholding the traditions of the institution.

Hard-line conservatives say that postponing confirmation hearings and votes would show fidelity to a greater imperative: standing up for the Senate's prerogatives. Many conservatives feel that Mr. Obama has been dismissive of Congress and that Republican leaders haven't used all the available tools to push back. That criticism could be muted if Senate Republicans decide to hold firm against Mr. Obama's Supreme Court nominee.

"If we're truly going to keep this up to the next president -- and it's the right thing to do -- then there's no need to go through the pretense of having a hearing or a floor vote," said Dan Holler, a spokesman for Heritage Action, a conservative lobbying group. "The only reason you would do that is because you would consider letting this president appoint the next justice."

The tension leaves vulnerable Republican senators who are up for re-election in the middle. They could be accused of obstructionism, but also know that opposing Mr. Obama's Supreme Court nominee will help rally conservative voters they need to turn up at the polls.

Republican senators who are up for re-election in some states that supported Mr. Obama in the 2012 elections quickly embraced Mr. McConnell's position that the next president should choose the nominee to give the public a voice through the coming elections.

But in Illinois, vulnerable Republican Sen. Mark Kirk, a centrist who needs the support of independent and moderate voters to win in November, said Congress should refrain from taking any actions now for or against hearings. Lawmakers should "take the time to honor [Justice Scalia's] life before the inevitable debate erupts," Mr. Kirk said.

Democrats said the Republicans are overplaying their hand and alienating independent voters. "When the hard right doesn't get its way, their immediate reaction is 'shut it down' -- and the Republican leadership marches in lockstep," Sen. Chuck Schumer of New York said in a statement.

DETAILS

Subject:	Political appointments; Hearings & confirmations; Nominations; Judges & magistrates; Judicial appointments; Political leadership; Presidents; Elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	United States--US
People:	Scalia, Antonin
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110; Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765510000
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-opening-seen-on-nominee-hearings/docview/1765510000/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 54 of 100

Business News: Grants Aim to Lower Drug Costs --- Couple makes donation toward efforts to make prescription treatments more affordable in U.S.

Loftus, Peter . Loftus, Peter.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The money will fund efforts to expand payment arrangements in which health insurers and government health programs pay drug companies based on how well a treatment works in patients -- sometimes called "pay for performance" -- rather than payments based solely on volume of medicine sold.

FULL TEXT

A Houston-based philanthropist couple is adding their financial firepower to efforts to make prescription drugs more affordable in the U.S.

The Laura and John Arnold Foundation will provide a total of $7.2 million to four organizations to fund research and pilot projects aimed at reining in drug costs and lowering financial barriers for patients, according to the foundation.

The money will fund efforts to expand payment arrangements in which health insurers and government health programs pay drug companies based on how well a treatment works in patients -- sometimes called "pay for performance" -- rather than payments based solely on volume of medicine sold. Recipients of the grants include a project led by a vocal critic of drug pricing -- Peter Bach, a physician at Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

The new funding follows the Arnold Foundation's initial foray into the drug-pricing debate: a $5.2 million grant last summer to a Boston nonprofit, the Institute for Clinical and Economic Review, that assesses whether new drugs are worth their price tags.

The foundation's founders, John and Laura Arnold, a former energy trader and lawyer, respectively, have joined a growing movement challenging drug prices in the U.S.

As prices have soared, insurers, doctors and hospitals have pushed back, arguing that prices should be lower for drugs that offer modest benefits or don't work as well in some patients.

U.S. prescription-drug spending rose 12.2% in 2014, accelerating from a 2.4% rise in 2013, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services said in December.

The Arnolds established their foundation in 2008, and have largely focused their grants on areas outside health care such as education and the criminal-justice system in the U.S. The grants related to drug prices are part of a more recent focus on improving the cost-effectiveness of the U.S. health-care system.

"It's our belief these grants will help balance the market so that people can have access to drugs at a sensible price," Kelli Rhee, the foundation's vice president of venture development. The biggest portion of the latest funding round, roughly $4.7 million, will go to a project led by Dr. Bach, head of Memorial Sloan's Center for Health Policy and Outcomes.

Memorial Sloan will use the new funding for a three-year project to try to enlist payers and manufacturers to test pricing that is linked more closely to a drug's value.

Another grant, for $1.6 million, will go to the Center for Evidence-based Policy at Oregon Health and Science University, which advises several states' Medicaid programs. The center will examine how state-run Medicaid programs try to control drug costs, and explore pilot programs that tie Medicaid reimbursement for drugs to improved patient health.

A grant for $748,445 will go to Brigham & Women's Hospital in Boston to support a one-year project to evaluate the effectiveness of federal incentives for drug development. A $200,000 grant to the National Academies of Sciences' Institute of Medicine will fund the development of policy recommendations making it easier for patients to get access to affordable drugs.

Credit: By Peter Loftus

DETAILS

Subject:	Prescription drugs; Philanthropy; Pharmaceutical industry; Medicaid; Costs; Drug prices; Grants; Funding
Business indexing term:	Subject: Pharmaceutical industry Medicaid Costs Drug prices; Industry: 32541 : Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US

Company / organization:	Name: Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center; NAICS: 622310; Name: Laura & John Arnold Foundation; NAICS: 813211
Classification:	8641: Pharmaceuticals industry; 9190: United States; 32541: Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765509927
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-grants-aim-lower-drug-costs-couple/docview/1765509927/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 55 of 100

Volatility Wagers Start to Pay Off --- Hedge-fund bets that profit from market stress are cleaning up after years of losses

Fletcher, Laurence . Fletcher, Laurence.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A spike in the market's "fear gauge" -- the CBOE Volatility index, or VIX -- as stock markets have tumbled this year has proved a boon for funds that buy options on stocks and other securities in the hope they will soar in value during times of market stress.

FULL TEXT

Hedge funds have been losing money for years betting that financial markets will become more volatile. Now the trade is showing signs that it might pay off.

A spike in the market's "fear gauge" -- the CBOE Volatility index, or VIX -- as stock markets have tumbled this year has proved a boon for funds that buy options on stocks and other securities in the hope they will soar in value during times of market stress.

Among winners this year is the computer-driven Tail Protect fund run by hedge-fund firm Man Group PLC, which manages $76.8 billion. The fund, which had lost on average nearly 11% a year over the three years to September, is up 9.3% this year to Friday, said a person who had seen the numbers. Another gainer has been U.S.-based Forum Asset Management's Global Opportunities fund, run by Ray Bakhranov, who served in the Soviet army in Mongolia before his career in finance. The fund, which "seeks to exploit asset price volatility," rose 29.8% in January, according to a letter to investors reviewed by The Wall Street Journal. It made big gains last year but had lost money for the previous three years.

But market volatility this year hasn't been a friend for everyone. On average, hedge funds are down 4.8% this year to Feb. 11, according to Hedge Fund Research, with particularly big losses among equity funds as banks and other stocks have tumbled.

"The environment has changed," said Douglas Greenig, chief executive of hedge fund Florin Court Capital and former chief risk officer at Man Group's $17.9 billion AHL unit.

"It's no longer clear that central bankers have the tools and political backing to smoothly manage the imbalances in the global economy. Volatility has gone up and, unlike recent years, it hasn't come straight back down, which is good for funds that are long vol[atility]," he said.

Bets on higher volatility -- which can range from buying options or products linked to market volatility levels to betting against securities -- have proved largely fruitless for years.

Despite bad news ranging from China's economic slowdown to Greece's debt crisis and tensions in the Middle East, market volatility has remained stubbornly low. If it did spike, it often quickly fell again as central-bank money-printing acted as a backstop to financial markets.

Funds that chase volatility lost a total of 1% over the past four years, according to CBOE EurekaHedge's index of long volatility funds. And funds that take an even more aggressive position, hoping to profit from extreme market stress, fared worse, losing 34% on average over that time.

In contrast, the opposite position -- betting volatility will stay low -- has been a far better trade for managers, producing a gain of 23% over four years, according to the CBOE EurekaHedge data.

Recently, however, this has reversed.

Funds betting on higher volatility gained 2.2% on average in January, while those taking more aggressive positions gained 3.5%, according to the CBOE EurekaHedge data. Funds betting on lower volatility lost 0.8%, their second consecutive month of losses.

Credit: By Laurence Fletcher

DETAILS

Subject:	Stock exchanges; Hedge funds; Securities markets; Equity funds; Volatility; Gambling
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Hedge funds Securities markets Equity funds Volatility; Industry: 52394 : Portfolio Management and Investment Advice 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Man Group PLC; NAICS: 523920
Classification:	3400: Investment analysis & personal finance; 9190: United States; 52394: Portfolio Management and Investment Advice; 52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765509874
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/volatility-wagers-start-pay-off-hedge-fund-bets/docview/1765509874/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 56 of 100

Business News: Community Health Stock Plunges on Weak Results

Weaver, Christopher . Weaver, Christopher.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Community Health Systems Inc.'s share price plummeted Tuesday after a weak earnings report, the latest threat to U.S. hospital investors who have seen big gains of recent years from an improving economy and the 2010 federal health law largely erased in recent months.

FULL TEXT

Community Health Systems Inc.'s share price plummeted Tuesday after a weak earnings report, the latest threat to U.S. hospital investors who have seen big gains of recent years from an improving economy and the 2010 federal health law largely erased in recent months.

Community announced on Monday that revenues in the last quarter of 2015 fell 2.4% compared with the final three months of 2014. For the period ended Dec. 31, Community Health Systems reported a loss of $83 million, or 73 cents a share, compared with a profit of $100 million during the same period a year ago, or 88 cents a share. The company added it was setting aside $169 million to cover unanticipated losses on unpaid bills.

Community Health's share price fell 22% on Tuesday to $14.56 and is down more than 75% since a June 2015 high. No hospital operator has seen a bigger rout in recent months, a sign, analysts say, of investors' fears that Community's heavily leveraged balance sheet and troubled 2014 acquisition of rival Health Management Associates, Inc. have rattled the market.

In a call with investors on Tuesday, Community Chief Executive Wayne Smith said "2015 was a difficult year for us, not the year we expected," adding that he believed the company's strategic direction would ultimately pay off.

Tenet Healthcare Corp., which bought rival Vanguard Health Systems in late 2013, has also seen its share price plummet in recent months to its lowest levels since 2012.

The company's shares fell 1.75% on Tuesday.

Some health-care focused investors, such as Glenview Capital -- Community's biggest shareholder, according to FactSet Inc. -- reaped large rewards as hospital and other health care stocks soared in the summer of 2014, particularly following a Supreme Court ruling upholding a key part of the health law. A Glenview spokesman declined to comment.

"Did we really get the benefit of the economy and the ACA? The answer is yes," said Oliver Marti, a portfolio manager at Columbus Circle Investors, a hedge fund that has both long and short positions on hospital stocks, pointing to recent rises in hospital admissions.

However, he said, a wave of new challenges has led some investors to hit the brakes: "There's a lot of debt out there and people don't like debt right now. If your operations aren't running pristine, you're going to get hit," Mr. Marti said.

Credit: By Christopher Weaver

DETAILS

Subject:	Stock prices; Health care industry; Company reports; Investments; Community health care
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock prices Health care industry Company reports
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Community Health Systems Inc; NAICS: 622110
Classification:	3100: Capital & debt management; 9190: United States

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765509689
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-community-health-stock-plunges-on/docview/1765509689/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 57 of 100

World News: Kidnapped Americans In Iraq Are Released

El-Ghobashy, Tamer; Solomon, Jay . El-Ghobashy, Tamer; Solomon, Jay.

ABSTRACT

Yahay Rasool, spokesman for the joint U.S. and Iraqi operations command in Baghdad, said the three were freed by intelligence-services officers in coordination with Iraq's ministry of defense.

FULL TEXT

BAGHDAD -- Three Americans kidnapped in Baghdad in January were freed, the U.S. State Department and Iraqi officials said Tuesday.

The three had been the first Americans abducted in Iraq in several years, exposing the weakening of security following Islamic State's seizure of parts of the country in 2014.

The State Department thanked the Iraqi government for securing their release, but didn't comment about the circumstances.

Yahay Rasool, spokesman for the joint U.S. and Iraqi operations command in Baghdad, said the three were freed by intelligence-services officers in coordination with Iraq's ministry of defense.

A senior Iraqi official said the two men and a woman were freed after an influential, Iranian-backed Shiite Muslim militia negotiated their release.

Officials didn't provide a clear picture of the circumstances that led to the kidnappings, or who had held the group. U.S. officials have said they believed the abductions were related to criminal activity, not politics.

Credit: By Tamer El-Ghobashy and Jay Solomon

DETAILS

Subject:	Kidnapping; Americans abroad; Hostages
Location:	United States--US; Iraq
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765509502
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-kidnapped-americans-iraq-are-released/docview/1765509502/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 58 of 100

City News: Customer Grievances Hit Startup

Chernova, Yuliya . Chernova, Yuliya.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The company's management had to prioritize maximizing the availability of appointments on its platform over customer service, Handy co-founder and Chief Executive Officer Oisin Hanrahan said in an interview.

FULL TEXT

A darling of the New York startup scene is facing growing pains in the form of customer-service complaints.

Handy has enjoyed meteoric customer growth for its home-cleaning services at the touch of an app, but many are accusing it of unwanted robo-billing subscriptions.

More than 300 Handy customers have filed grievances with the Better Business Bureau in New York in the past year. The BBB said it identified a pattern in Handy customer complaints of those who felt caught in a subscription service difficult to cancel, stop charges or to reach customer service. It also raised questions about Handy's money-back guarantee claims.

New York-based Handy, incorporated as Handy Technologies Inc., has responded to all complaints with the BBB, according to a BBB spokeswoman. Handy said it has recently introduced changes that allow customers to cancel subscriptions through its apps and added to its customer-service ranks.

The company's management had to prioritize maximizing the availability of appointments on its platform over customer service, Handy co-founder and Chief Executive Officer Oisin Hanrahan said in an interview.

"When you can get to a world of marketplace match, then you can go and figure out how to make your customer service amazing," Mr. Hanrahan said of an investment focus on scaling its service first.

To be sure, Handy's customer acquisition efforts have paid off. Founded just three years ago under the name of Handybook by Harvard Business School students Mr. Hanrahan and Umang Dua, the company said it has facilitated more than two million bookings in dozens of cities.

Courtney Mullins, of Orlando, Fla, said she disputed a Handy charge and received assurances from Handy of a subscription cancellation. Six days later, Ms. Mullins said she received an email for a new appointment. Ms. Mullins said she quickly replied, "NO!!! I have canceled all bookings."

A Handy spokesman declined to comment on the specifics of cases, citing customer privacy.

Handy uses contractors rather than employees and takes about a 20% cut of the fee customers pay.

Handy removed the option to sign up for one-time service from its website as of March, leaving only subscriptions in place.

For most of last year, the only way to remove subscriptions was to contact Handy customer service, which some customers said was difficult. The company removed its phone number from its website in May in favor of an email queue, a standard practice, Handy's spokesman said.

Handy instructed representatives to avoid issuing refunds, according to a former employee who worked in the customer-service department in 2014.

"It has always been Handy's policy to give a refund every time a customer requests one," Handy's representative said.

Credit: By Yuliya Chernova

DETAILS

Subject:	Subscriptions; Corporate profiles; Complaints; Housework; Customer services; Startups
Business indexing term:	Subject: Customer services Startups
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company:	Handy
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765509479
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-customer-grievances-hit-startup/docview/1765509479/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government ins titutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

Business News: U.S. Rejects Boeing Protest on Northrop Job

Cameron, Doug . Cameron, Doug.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Northrop had to stop work on the classified program after Boeing and partner Lockheed Martin Corp. alleged that the Air Force selection was "irreparably flawed" because of its treatment of cost and performance estimates submitted by the opposing bidders.

FULL TEXT

Northrop Grumman Corp. can resume work on developing a new Air Force bomber after a federal overseer on Tuesday rejected a protest led by Boeing Co. on Northrop's contract for a program that could ultimately cost more than $80 billion.

The ruling by the Government Accountability Office follows Boeing's protest in November of an award that wound up one of the fiercest bidding contests in more than a decade. Northrop had to stop work on the classified program after Boeing and partner Lockheed Martin Corp. alleged that the Air Force selection was "irreparably flawed" because of its treatment of cost and performance estimates submitted by the opposing bidders.

The GAO could have opted to reopen the bidding or amend the existing contract, but soundly rejected the protest on Tuesday.

The Air Force and Northrop had previously stood behind the award process.

"GAO reviewed the challenges to the selection decision raised by Boeing and has found no basis to sustain or uphold the protest," the agency said.

"In denying Boeing's protest, GAO concluded that the technical evaluation, and the evaluation of costs, was reasonable, consistent with the terms of the solicitation, and in accordance with procurement laws and regulations."

Boeing said that it would review the GAO's classified ruling and then decide on its next steps. Options include taking the Pentagon to court in an effort to reopen the bidding, analysts said.

The lack of big long-term military equipment deals in recent years has made protests increasingly commonplace, though less than a fifth are upheld by the GAO, a nonpartisan congressional watchdog.

Northrop said last month that it had included some revenue from work on the long-range strike bomber in its 2016 outlook, and planned to increase hiring on the program, which has been under development for several years.

The company was awarded a $21.4 billion deal in October to complete the bomber's development alongside a contract to build an initial 21 jets.

The Pentagon didn't reveal the size of the production deal, but wants eventually to field 100 of the jets to replace aging aircraft such as the B-52, with the first aircraft put into service in 2025. Analysts estimate the total cost of the program at $80 billion.

The Pentagon's fiscal 2017 budget request last week included $12.1 billion for research and development in the bomber program over the next five years. Such requests typically take one to two years to turn into revenue for contractors, and the Air Force hasn't detailed Northrop Grumman's partners on the program.

The GAO's decision moves attention for now to the two next big Air Force contracts expected to be awarded over the next two years, including a fleet of new training jets and the JSTARS reconnaissance plane.

The rejection of Boeing's protest also increases the importance of securing more overseas orders for the company's existing combat aircraft, including a potential deal to sell F/A18s to Kuwait and F-15s to Qatar.

The latest Pentagon budget did allocate funds for more F/A-18s for the Navy.

Generally, most company protests of federal contract awards involve concerns about the government's fairness in setting requirements or implementing evaluation criteria.

The GAO received more than 2,500 protests in 2014. The annual rate has climbed 45% since 2008, according to the Congressional Research Service.

Credit: By Doug Cameron

DETAILS

Subject:	Research & development--R & D; Government contracts; Aircraft industry; Defense industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft industry Defense industry; Corporation: Northrop Grumman Corp Boeing Co; Industry: 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Northrop Grumman Corp; NAICS: 334511, 336411, 336611; Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414
Classification:	8680: Transportation equipment industry; 9190: United States; 33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765509382
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-rejects-boeing-protest-on/docview/1765509382/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 60 of 100

Business News: Airbus Mulls Larger Plane

Raghuvanshi, Gaurav . Raghuvanshi, Gaurav.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The A380, which can seat a maximum of 853 passengers, is best used to fly between large hub airports, while passengers prefer nonstop flights between cities on relatively smaller, long-haul planes to save time.

FULL TEXT

SINGAPORE -- Airbus Group SE expects to soon decide on whether to build a bigger variant of its A350 jet to take on the latest model announced by rival Boeing Co., the sales chief of the European plane maker said Tuesday.

"We will have a decision this year. Ask us at the Farnborough Airshow," John Leahy, chief operating officer, customers, said in Singapore.

The Farnborough International Airshow, in the U.K. one of the biggest industry events, will be held in July this year.

Mr. Leahy said if Airbus decides to build the new variant, it will be more efficient than the Boeing 777-9X, which can seat 406 people in a three-class layout that most airlines want on such widebody jets.

The comparable Airbus A350-1000 jet can seat 366 passengers in a similar layout.

Boeing launched the 777X in November 2013 at the Dubai Airshow. Deliveries are due starting in 2020.

"We've already got the A350-1000 sitting in that market, so we don't need to pretend that the market has moved 40 seats bigger," Mr. Leahy said.

However, if Airbus realizes that there may be a market for the bigger jet, it would like to launch it "sooner than later" before Boeing gets more orders for its planes, he said.

Airbus, based in Toulouse, France, expects to announce more orders for the four-engine A380 passenger jets this year, Mr. Leahy said, declining to give any more details. The world's biggest passenger jet, which can typically seat 544 passengers, has seen sluggish sales in recent years.

The A380, which can seat a maximum of 853 passengers, is best used to fly between large hub airports, while passengers prefer nonstop flights between cities on relatively smaller, long-haul planes to save time. Mr. Leahy said demand for the A380 will rise as passenger growth is expected to outpace airport growth in coming years.

"How do you double traffic over the next 15 years without bigger airplanes. It's impossible," he said.

Airbus produced 27 A380 jets last year, which Mr. Leahy described as "comfortable" for the company.

Airbus predicts that over the next 20 years, the Asia-Pacific region will take delivery of 12,800 new aircraft, valued at $2 trillion.

Credit: By Gaurav Raghuvanshi

DETAILS

Subject:	Aircraft industry; Passengers; Airports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft industry Airports; Corporation: Airbus SAS; Industry: 48811 : Airport Operations 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Location:	France
Company / organization:	Name: Airbus Group NV; NAICS: 336411, 336412, 336413
Classification:	8680: Transportation equipment industry; 9175: Western Europe; 48811: Airport Operations; 33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765509230
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-airbus-mulls-larger-plane/docview/1765509230/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

LINKS

Document 61 of 100

Business News: Meatpacking Ban Ends in Nebraska

Gee, Kelsey . Gee, Kelsey.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Other Farm Belt states such as South Dakota and Minnesota have corporate farming laws to limit the power of companies to engage in agriculture, but Nebraska was the last state with an explicit ban on swine ownership by packers, said Brian Depew, executive director of the Center for Rural Affairs, a Nebraska-based group that advocates for smaller farmers.

FULL TEXT

A new Nebraska law ends one of the last state bans in the U.S. on meatpacking companies owning hogs, a move that some critics say will extend the power processing companies hold over farmers and livestock markets.

The law was signed by Gov. Pete Ricketts last week after being passed 34-14 by state legislators Feb. 5. It reverses a measure that went into effect in 1999 to bolster a more general rule passed in 1982 that restricted corporate ownership of land and farms to protect small, family farms.

Big companies already own most of the broiler chickens raised in the U.S., which they then contract with farmers to raise on their behalf for a fee. By contrast, most cattle are raised by independent ranchers and feed lot owners who sell them to meatpackers for slaughter and processing. The pork sector has been more of a mixture of the two systems, but company ownership has been increasing in recent years.

Nebraska, the sixth-largest hog producer, has had a sharp decline in recent years in the number of farms that sell hogs.

Supporters of the new law, which include the Nebraska Farm Bureau and big meat companies like Smithfield Foods Inc., the largest hog producer and pork processor in the U.S., say Nebraska lagged behind the rest of the country. They say that contracts between packers and hog producers used in Iowa and other states reduce farmers' exposure to volatile swings in the price of feed and livestock.

"My hope is that this is going to be a tool that folks will be able to utilize to grow more hogs in the state, and bring back some of the producers that have disappeared over the years," said state Sen. Ken Schilz, who introduced the bill last year.

Critics argue that the law will make it harder for independent farmers to sell hogs without a contract, thereby weakening the negotiated cash markets that they say encourage greater competition and prop up prices.

Other Farm Belt states such as South Dakota and Minnesota have corporate farming laws to limit the power of companies to engage in agriculture, but Nebraska was the last state with an explicit ban on swine ownership by packers, said Brian Depew, executive director of the Center for Rural Affairs, a Nebraska-based group that advocates for smaller farmers.

Mr. Depew called the new law, which his group opposed, "destructive to the functioning of a competitive marketplace" for livestock. "We believe that farmers and ranchers should own livestock, not multinational corporations, and this marks the end of that era and a turning point in Nebraska," he said.

A spokeswoman for Smithfield, a unit of WH Group Ltd. in China, said the repeal will give "new options and opportunities for Nebraska family farmers to, if they choose, grow their operations by contracting with vertically integrated packers in the state." She said owning livestock allows Smithfield "to be responsive to customer requests in areas such as group housing for pregnant sows, antibiotics use" and other production issues.

State lobbying records show that the company, which owns several pork processing facilities in Nebraska and is a major political donor, filed petitions in favor of the new legislation.

Credit: By Kelsey Gee

DETAILS

Subject:	Agriculture; Hogs; State laws; Meat processing; Farmers; Livestock; Farms
Business indexing term:	Industry: 11221 : Hog and Pig Farming 31161 : Animal Slaughtering and Processing
Location:	Nebraska; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Smithfield Foods Inc; NAICS: 311611, 311612
Classification:	8400: Agriculture industry; 8610: Food processing industry; 9190: United States; 11221: Hog and Pig Farming; 31161: Animal Slaughtering and Processing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765508642
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-meatpacking-ban-ends-nebraska/docview/1765508642/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 62 of 100

Business News: Hong Kong's Port Falls Further --- Deep-water rivals in mainland China hit container business at former trade leader

Chiu, Joanne . Chiu, Joanne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]cargo-handling costs are 5% to 20% less than those in Hong Kong, said Robin Xu, an analyst at UBS Securities.

FULL TEXT

The Port of Hong Kong is losing its prominent place on global trade maps.

The port, which was the world's busiest as recently as a decade ago, slid to No. 5 after a steep drop in container business last year. Volume has fallen for 18 straight months, as more ships skip the city's crowded cargo terminals in favor of newer facilities in mainland China. The port ranked fourth in 2014.

The slide is partly a symptom of China's economic slowdown. But the reasons for Hong Kong's tumbling trade volume run deeper: Ports outside cities such as Shenzhen, Shanghai and Ningbo can unload cargo faster and cheaper, and are closer to China's manufacturing zones. The new class of megaships also are too big to fit into Hong Kong's shallow channels fully loaded, but can enter deep-water ports along the Chinese coastline with ease.

Hong Kong government officials acknowledge that the city's port faces stiff competition. They add that Hong Kong is working on a project to dredge its harbor and approach channel to a depth of 17.5 meters, or nearly 60 feet, from 15 meters currently, to accommodate the draft requirement of new ultralarge container vessels at all tides.

The downward spiral is a troubling prospect for Hong Kong's economy, which grew last year at its slowest rate since 2008. The port employs nearly 100,000 people, and fuels the logistics and trade sectors, which make up nearly a quarter of the city's economic activity. Hundreds of companies, from big international freight operators to small import-export specialists, depend on heavy shipping volumes.

"As a leading hub port, the fact that the Hong Kong government couldn't have pre-empted the impact of larger ships is quite surprising," said Timothy Ross, an analyst at Credit Suisse.

The steady descent down the list of Asia's trading gateways would have seemed unimaginable a few years ago. From the opium wars of the 19th century to the globalization of trade more recently, the Port of Hong Kong has held an unassailable place. Hundreds of trading companies, from the giant Jardine Matheson Holdings business created in the 19th century to small import-export shops, built thriving trade over the decades, much of it tied to goods moving through China.

Today, those goods are more likely to move through Hong Kong's main competition at Shenzhen, just 20 miles to the north.

Shenzhen's port faces on deeper water and has more space to accommodate bigger ships. As a result, cargo-handling costs are 5% to 20% less than those in Hong Kong, said Robin Xu, an analyst at UBS Securities. Container volume rose 1.4% at Shenzhen's terminals through November, compared with the previous year. Hong Kong's port traffic fell 9.5% through all of 2015.

Hong Kong government officials say finding more space is the only way to bring in more cargo over the long term. Ideas floated in recent years include expanding the existing port or building a terminal on nearby Lantau Island. Both projects would be expensive. A new terminal on Lantau would cost US$7.8 billion, by government estimates.

"There's not much Hong Kong can do to compete with other booming Chinese ports," said UBS's Mr. Xu, beyond making its existing facilities more efficient.

Hongkong International Terminals Ltd., the port's key operator and a unit of billionaire Li Ka-shing's Hutchison Port Holdings Trust, is investing US$232 million in equipment over the next few years to improve operating efficiency, for instance.

The port would need bigger improvements to lure back ship operators, however, and that leaves Hong Kong facing the same tough questions as smaller ports.

"Ports must ask, do you want to be a major player in the future and what is the entry ticket to play in that game? They need to keep costs under control, but they also must make the investment to be able to handle large vessels and to handle them fast," said Lars Jensen, chief executive of SeaIntelligence Consulting, a Denmark-based shipping research group. "That is a tough equation to solve."

Credit: By Joanne Chiu

DETAILS

Subject:	International trade; Economic conditions; Shipping industry; 19th century; Public officials; Competition; Ports
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade Economic conditions Shipping industry Ports; Corporation: UBS AG; Industry: 48831 : Port and Harbor Operations
Location:	Hong Kong
Company / organization:	Name: Port of Hong Kong; NAICS: 488310
Classification:	8350: Transportation & travel industry; 9179: Asia & the Pacific; 48831: Port and Harbor Operations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1765508423

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hong-kongs-port-falls-further-deep/docview/1765508423/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 63 of 100

Earnings: Sales at Jos. A. Bank Weigh on Tailored Brands

Hufford, Austen . Hufford, Austen.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Men's suits retailer Tailored Brands Inc., formerly known as Men's Wearhouse Inc., said its adjusted per-share earnings for fiscal 2015 would be at the low end of its previous guidance as same-store sales at its Jos.

FULL TEXT

Men's suits retailer Tailored Brands Inc., formerly known as Men's Wearhouse Inc., said its adjusted per-share earnings for fiscal 2015 would be at the low end of its previous guidance as same-store sales at its Jos. A. Bank stores dropped 32% in its latest quarter.

Earlier this month, the company adopted a holding-company structure and changed its name from Men's Wearhouse to Tailored Brands.

The company has been struggling with tepid sales and debt since buying rival Jos. A. Bank in 2014 for $1.8 billion. In December, the company said it would review long-term plans and consider paying down its debt earlier as it warned holiday-season profit could miss expectations.

"Management has been, and continues to be, focused on creating long term sustainable and profitable results at Jos.

A. Bank," Chief Executive Doug Ewert said in a news release Tuesday. "Although we have seen improvement since the holiday selling season, we are still not satisfied."

The company said adjusted earnings per share for fiscal 2015 would fall on the low-end of its previously released guidance range of $1.75 to $2.00. Analysts polled by Thomson Reuters had expected earnings per share of $1.71.

Despite the double-digit decreases at Jos. A. Bank, same-store sales at Men's Wearhouse increased 4.3%.

In September, the suit seller said it was trying to return Jos. A. Bank stores to its roots by launching a new "1905" clothing line and rejigger its marketing strategy by removing its buy-one-get-three-free suits offers. The goal was to drive margins even if Jos. A. Bank sales take a hit from promotional adjustments.

Credit: By Austen Hufford

DETAILS

Subject:	Clothing industry; Earnings per share; Company reports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Clothing industry Earnings per share Company reports; Industry: 31525 : Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Jos A Bank Clothiers Inc; NAICS: 458110; Name: Tailored Brands Inc; NAICS: 458110
Classification:	8620: Textile & apparel industries; 8390: Retailing industry; 9190: United States; 31525: Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1765508272

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/earnings-sales-at-jos-bank-weigh-on-tailored/docview/1765508272/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 64 of 100

Earnings: Jet Makers Express Confidence Despite Economic Slowdown

Raghuvanshi, Gaurav . Raghuvanshi, Gaurav.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Aircraft makers such as Boeing Co., Airbus Group SE and Embraer SA say they aren't worried that the economic slowdown in Asia, especially China, will hurt sales in the world's fastest-growing aviation market.

FULL TEXT

Aircraft makers such as Boeing Co., Airbus Group SE and Embraer SA say they aren't worried that the economic slowdown in Asia, especially China, will hurt sales in the world's fastest-growing aviation market.

Rather, some are still trying to keep up with demand.

"My biggest worry is not being able to build all the aircraft that we've already sold," John Leahy, Airbus's chief operating officer, said during a news conference at the Singapore Airshow on Tuesday.

Financial markets have been spooked by China's slowing growth. Last year, Beijing reported that the world's second-largest economy grew at its slowest pace in 25 years, 6.9% -- many economists say they believe the true figure is closer to 6%. But China is still expanding faster than any other major economy.

Airbus predicts that over the next 20 years, the Asia-Pacific region will take delivery of 12,800 new aircraft, valued at US$2 trillion. That would constitute about 40% of its projected total global demand of 32,600.

Boeing predicts Asia will take delivery of 14,330 planes over the next 20 years, 38% of its projected global total.

Embraer, which builds smaller planes, predicts that over the next 20 years the Asia-Pacific region will take delivery of 1,570 new jets with seating for between 70 and 130 passengers.

Credit: By Gaurav Raghuvanshi

DETAILS

Subject:	Aircraft industry; Factory orders; Economic conditions; Economic slowdowns; Aircraft; Purchase orders
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft industry Factory orders Economic conditions Economic slowdowns; Corporation: Airbus SAS; Industry: 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Company / organization:	Name: Embraer Empresa Brasileira de Aeronautica SA; NAICS: 336411; Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414
Classification:	8680: Transportation equipment industry; 9180: International; 33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B,4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1765508174

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/earnings-jet-makers-express-confidence-despite/docview/1765508174/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 65 of 100

World News: Russia Is Accused of Bombing Hospitals --- U.S. says Syria regime and its allies targeted civilians; Assad insists rebels give up weapons

Dagher, Sam; Ballout, Dana; Grove, Thomas . Dagher, Sam; Ballout, Dana; Grove, Thomas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Under the agreement reached this past Friday by world powers, humanitarian aid deliveries to some besieged areas of Syria were to begin quickly, while an international task force co-chaired by the U.S. and Russia works out the terms of a nationwide cease-fire by Friday.

FULL TEXT

Violence in northern Syria escalated Monday, casting deep doubt on a planned cease-fire as the U.S. accused the Assad regime and its ally Russia of bombing civilian hospitals.

The intensified fighting also is complicating the challenge of getting humanitarian aid to tens of thousands of civilians trapped in besieged areas -- another component of the deal on Syria reached last week in Munich.

President Bashar al-Assad remained defiant, insisting he would never accept a cease-fire with rebels until they surrendered their weapons, and wouldn't negotiate a political transition with those he called traitors.

"For us everyone bearing arms against the state and the Syrian people is a terrorist, this matter is nonnegotiable," he said during a long, televised speech.

The U.S. said the airstrikes Monday in and around Aleppo, Syria's biggest city, targeted innocent civilians, including at two hospitals. At least 50 people were killed at medical facilities and schools in rebel-held areas in Aleppo and Idlib provinces, the United Nations said.

State Department spokesman John Kirby said the bombing of civilian targets "casts doubt on Russia's willingness and/or ability to help bring to a stop the continued brutality of the Assad regime against its own people."

Susan Rice, President Barack Obama's national security adviser, also condemned the continued bombing. "We think it runs counter, frankly, to the commitment made in Munich on Friday," she said.

Hadi al-Bahra, a Syrian opposition leader in the Saudi city of Jeddah, called it "a huge escalation and a clear message that the Russian, Iranian and Syrian regime strategy is that they will use Munich to concentrate on their military campaign."

Under the agreement reached this past Friday by world powers, humanitarian aid deliveries to some besieged areas of Syria were to begin quickly, while an international task force co-chaired by the U.S. and Russia works out the terms of a nationwide cease-fire by Friday.

In his speech, Mr. Assad played down the chances for a deal. "They say they want a cease-fire in one week," he said. "Fine, but who is capable of lining up all the conditions and prerequisites? Nobody."

In an interview out Monday, Russia's deputy foreign minister Gennady Gatilov said warplanes would keep bombing terrorist targets in the Aleppo region regardless of any cease-fire.

The Munich deal allows fighting to continue against groups designated terrorist by the United Nations: Islamic State and al Qaeda-linked Nusra Front. Mr. Assad and his allies regularly conflate more-moderate rebel groups with the extremists, targeting them all in bombing raids.

"Strikes on terrorist groups will continue in any case, even if a cease-fire is agreed upon in Syria," Mr. Gatilov told the German magazine Der Spiegel. "After all, the main point is that the cease-fire would cover those who are truly interested in a beginning to the negotiation process, and not terrorists."

In Brussels, Iran's Foreign Minister Javad Zarif also signaled that the pressure on regime opponents would continue. "What we agreed in Munich is cessation of hostilities, not a pause to allow the allies of certain regional players to regroup," he said.

There was no immediate comment from Moscow on the latest airstrikes; it has fervently denied hitting civilian targets in the past. Syrian state media said the regime's air force struck "terrorist hide-outs" in the north.

U.N. special envoy Staffan de Mistura had said that aid convoys should begin to head out by Tuesday or Wednesday, but that it would be difficult with fighting going on.

The assistance was slated to go to rebel-controlled areas around Damascus and to besieged, pro-regime areas in neighboring Idlib. Monday's airstrikes could make rebels less likely to agree to allow aid through.

The aid group Doctors Without Borders said the airstrikes hit several hospitals including one in Azaz, near the Turkish border, where thousands of newly displaced people have relocated from Aleppo.

Antiregime activists and Aleppo residents said a children's and maternity hospital in Azaz was bombed, killing at least 10 people including a baby.

Doctors Without Borders also said that a hospital it supports in Idlib province was destroyed by an airstrike and at least seven people were killed. Eight others were missing and presumed dead, it added.

"This appears to be a deliberate attack on a health structure," said Massimiliano Rebaudengo, the group's head of mission in Syria.

Credit: Sam Dagher, Dana Ballout, Thomas Grove

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Humanitarian aid; Civil war; Military air strikes; Displaced persons; Humanitarianism; Civilians
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Syria
People:	Obama, Barack; Rice, Susan E; Assad, Bashar Al
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1765335576

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russia-is-accused-bombing-hospitals -u/docview/1765335576/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 66 of 100

Millennials Unsettle Race --- Primary results in Iowa and New Hampshire show young voters' impact on both parties

Hook, Janet . Hook, Janet.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In the Iowa caucuses, the two youngest candidates in the GOP field drew the most support from young voters. According to the latest Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll, the only age group that views Mrs. Clinton more positively than negatively is 18- to 34-year old bracket.

FULL TEXT

This year's election cycle marks a generational turning point. For the first time, millennials will match baby boomers as a share of the electorate.

There are messages for both parties in polling data about the generation born after 1980. For Republicans who think millennials will outgrow their liberal tilt in the last two presidential contests: Don't count on it. For establishment Democrats who hope Hillary Clinton can inherit Barack Obama's young followers: Don't take it for granted.

Those cautionary notes were clear in the results from Iowa and New Hampshire, and in interviews with voters like

Alison Sanderlin, who was raised in a conservative town in rural Virginia. She says as a college student she was put off by GOP stands on social issues and cast her first vote for president for Mr. Obama. Now 26 years old, with a job in a photo lab and student debt to pay, she still thinks the GOP message falls flat.

But she isn't enamored with Democratic front-runner Mrs. Clinton either, because of her shifting positions on important issues. So she is backing Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders. "He doesn't seem to have ulterior motives," she says.

Many like-minded millennials participated in the Iowa caucuses, where 17- to 29-year-olds favored Mr. Sanders over Mrs. Clinton by an overwhelming 84% to 14%. In New Hampshire, young voters favored Mr. Sanders by a nearly identical 83% to 16%.

About half of millennials -- who like boomers account for 31% of eligible voters -- don't identify with either party, though polling data about them suggest they are more liberal than their parents are now, and more liberal than younger generations were just a few decades ago.

Yet any millennial advantage for Democrats will matter only if young people are motivated and turn out to vote, which may be easier said than done. A poll by Harvard's Institute of Politics late last year found that young voters, who are always less inclined to vote than their elders, are more disengaged in politics than they were just four years ago.

For many, the ardor for Mr. Obama has cooled over his two terms, and it isn't clear that Mrs. Clinton, if she is the nominee, can engender the enthusiasm among young people that Mr. Sanders has or Mr. Obama once did. Sensing an opening, Republican candidates are trying to move in.

In the Iowa caucuses, the two youngest candidates in the GOP field drew the most support from young voters. Entrance polls indicated that Sen. Ted Cruz, 45, pulled 27% of the under-30 vote, and Sen. Marco Rubio, 44, drew 24%, while businessman Donald Trump got 19%. In the New Hampshire GOP primary, the antiestablishment candidates did best with young voters, with Mr. Trump winning 37%, and Mr. Cruz, 16%.

The Democratic Party is facing the historically difficult task of holding the White House for a third term, something that has happened only once in the last seven decades.

Democrats are counting on young people as a key to help Mrs. Clinton overcome negative feelings many other voters -- particularly older white males -- have about her. According to the latest Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll, the only age group that views Mrs. Clinton more positively than negatively is 18- to 34-year old bracket.

In any case, millennials are distinctive on a variety of fronts, as seen in a 2014 Pew Research Center study. It found them:

- The most ethnically diverse generation in U.S. history. Some 43% are nonwhite, compared with 28% of baby boomers.

- Less religious than their elders. Some 35% aren't religiously affiliated, compared with 17% of boomers.

- Slower to marry. Twenty-six percent were married between ages 18 to 33, down from 48% of that age bracket in 1980.

The Republican Party has traditionally drawn its greatest support from white, religious, married people with traditional values.

"The groups Republicans do well with, these are all demographic traits that are shrinking among millennials," says Kristen Soltis Anderson, a Republican pollster who has been studying millennials for years and discusses them in her book, "The Selfie Vote." "It spells bad news for Republicans."

Not so long ago, young people voted differently.

In 1980, 18- to 29-year-olds divided almost equally between Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan. Four years later, they picked Mr. Reagan over Walter Mondale, and then George H.W. Bush over Michael Dukakis. When millennials first began voting, in 2000, 18- to 29-year-olds split almost evenly between Al Gore and George W. Bush.

But beginning in 2004, when they chose John Kerry over Mr. Bush, young people have tilted Democratic. In 2008, Mr. Obama won that age group by 34 percentage points, and in 2012, by 23 points.

For the coming election, 60% of 18- to 34-year-olds indicated that they preferred a Democrat to win the White House, and 27% indicated Republican, according to latest Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll.

In the 2014 midterm elections, the turnout among millennials didn't match that of other age groups -- a typical pattern with young voters. Moreover, Democrats didn't win as large a percentage of them as two years earlier.

That points to the nagging question for Democrats: whether their recent advantage has been mostly a result of President Obama's millennial appeal.

Democrats profess confidence that their edge among young voters will outlast Mr. Obama. Republicans see opportunity to make gains because millennials are far less attached to traditional political parties than their elders.

"Obama had this ability to mobilize young people. They bought into him as a person," says Raffi Williams, a Republican National Committee official who is working on a program to expand the party's outreach to millennials. "Without Obama there, we are coming onto equal ground trying to win over young voters."

Both parties are watching millennials carefully because young people are seen as shaping debate on social issues such as gay marriage and racial diversity.

"I kind of hate to say it," says GOP pollster Bill McInturff, "but the millennial generation is now important. Their views are becoming the dominant public views. Their attitudes about gay marriage and social tolerance are radically different than the previous generations, and they are restructuring our views."

The shift among young voters on social issues cuts across race and party. On gay rights, 64% of millennial Republicans believe homosexuality should be accepted in society, compared with 45% of baby boomer Republicans, according to the 2014 Pew Research Center survey. On immigration, 57% of millennial Republicans say immigrants strengthen the country, compared with 39% of baby boomer Republicans.

Economic issues don't cut clearly in either party's favor. Young voters have experienced an economy shadowed by debt -- the government's and their own.

Many millennials entered the workforce in the throes of the 2008 financial crisis and the slow-growth period that followed.

For Chase Hagaman, 27, of Portsmouth, N.H., the $250,000 debt he carries from college and law school is one factor in his and his wife's decision to postpone having children. Mr. Hagaman works for the Concord Coalition, a group that advocates for federal-deficit reduction. He brought his concerns to a New Hampshire town hall meeting of Ohio Gov. John Kasich.

"We should be electing individuals willing to confront fiscal issues," he said in an interview.

Pete Lashier, a 19-year-old marketing student at Iowa State University, says fiscal issues are a priority.

"We're in a huge hole that could end up as something my generation has to be responsible for," says Mr. Lasher, who says he is inclined to vote Republican. "I'm not super pumped up about that."

College debt is a concern for many young voters.

"I have almost $20,000 in loans, and I'm only a sophomore," says Zach Rodgers, 20, an Iowa State student who is working with the Clinton campaign and sees college affordability as a major issue among his peers. "Whether you are a Republican or a Democrat, students are trying to get candidates to talk about it."

Some GOP presidential candidates have been looking for an opening in the economic pressures that millennials feel.

"The consequences of Obama's agenda have really come home to roost" for young people, Mr. Cruz of Texas told a college audience in New Hampshire in January.

Mr. Rubio is the youngest major GOP candidate and the one most explicitly pitching his message to younger voters. He talks frequently about his own student loan debt. In January he launched a video ad targeted at millennial voters.

For the Republican front-runner, Mr. Trump, the growing millennial vote cuts two ways.

Some younger voters like his unscripted style. "He's the most honest candidate we've ever had," says Robbie Maass, 34, a Republican farmer from Ellsworth, Iowa. "His antics have garnered a younger audience to take a look at the Republican Party more than they normally would."

But his anti-immigration stands pose a risk of alienating young voters and making it difficult in a general election to win the large cohort of Hispanic millennials. The latest Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll found that 69% of Hispanic voters overall viewed Mr. Trump negatively, and 22% positively. Among all ethnicities, the poll found that 18- to 34-year-olds are the least likely age group to view Mr. Trump favorably, with only 17% rating him positively.

The generation's racial diversity has thus far helped the Democrats. Hispanics and blacks overwhelmingly favored Democrats and Mr. Obama in recent elections, while whites tilted Republican. In 2012, Hispanic millennials favored Mr. Obama by 74% to 23%, while white millennials broke for Mitt Romney 51% to 44%.

For Mrs. Clinton, the results in Iowa and New Hampshire reveal that she has much work to do to win over millennials. She has succeeded with Mikayla Bodey, 20, a student at Ohio State University. Ms. Bodey says she had been interested in Mr. Kasich, whose record as Ohio's Republican governor she admired. Then she heard Mrs. Clinton speak at a Columbus rally about the importance of women's rights. When she met the candidate on the rope line, Ms. Bodey says, she wept with emotion.

She is now committed to Mrs. Clinton, she says, because of the tone and rightward tack of the GOP candidates. "I feel like they are not speaking to me anymore," she says.

But as Iowa and New Hampshire revealed, Mr. Sanders is something of a campus phenom, even though, at 74, he is the oldest candidate on the campaign trail. Much of early Mr. Sanders's fundraising success was the handiwork of a 24-year old who built a popular fan forum for him on Reddit.

Ms. Sanderlin, the 26-year-old from Richmond, Va., says she is supporting Mr. Sanders because he has been consistent on his positions through a long career in politics, while Mrs. Clinton shifted on issues such as gay marriage and the Iraq war. "I feel like she has changed her mind on things because that is what is popular for Democrats right now," says Ms. Sanderlin.

John Della Volpe, who as director of polling at the Harvard Institute of Politics has been surveying millennials since 2000, says young voters generally seem less interested in politicians' resumes than in their candor.

"Young people are really less interested in past accomplishments and more interested in today and the future," he says. "They look for candidates who are focusing emotion, talking about the moment, being authentic."

Credit: By Janet Hook

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; Candidates; Primaries & caucuses; Polls & surveys; Baby boomers; Generations; Election results; Presidential elections; Millennials; Same sex marriage; Political parties; Noncitizens; Age groups; Negative campaigning; Immigration; Voter behavior
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	Iowa; United States--US; New Hampshire
People:	Trump, Donald J; Rubio, Marco
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765316148
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/millennials-unsettle-race-primary-results-iowa/docview/1765316148/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 67 of 100

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Obama plans to pick a nominee, rejecting GOP calls to leave the Supreme Court seat vacancy for his successor to fill. -

--

FULL TEXT

Scalia's death is likely to set off a protracted election-year battle. Obama plans to pick a nominee, rejecting GOP calls to leave the Supreme Court seat vacancy for his successor to fill.

Violence escalated in northern Syria with the U.S. accusing the regime, backed by Russia and Iran, of bombing hospitals.

The EU reached a pact with the Assad regime to set up an office in Damascus to help with aid deliveries.

Ugandan officials arrested the president's chief challenger, as the longtime leader uses heavy-handed tactics to remain in power.

Pope Francis blasted the treatment of indigenous peoples as he celebrated Mass in Mexico in both Spanish and three Maya languages.

A Brazilian state banned a mosquito larvicide after it was linked to microcephaly, a claim challenged by other health authorities.

Several small countries in Europe are joining to set barriers along the migrant path across the Continent.

Airline-safety data show that not a single passenger world-wide died from a jetliner accident last year.

A winter storm hampered travel on much of the Eastern Seaboard.

DETAILS

Location:	Russia; Iran; United States--US; Mexico; Europe
-----------	---

People:	Francis (Pope)
---------	----------------

Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
-------------------------	---------------------------------------

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765316146
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1765316146/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-14
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 68 of 100

Business News: Freeport Sells Part of Arizona Mine

Miller, John W . Miller, John W.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since Mr. Icahn disclosed his initial investment last August, Freeport has suspended its dividend, cut capital spending, and announced the resignation of longtime chairman James R. Moffett, a colorful oil wildcatter largely responsible for building its global copper empire.

FULL TEXT

Freeport-McMoRan Inc. on Monday said it reached a deal to sell part of its stake in an Arizona copper mine to one of the mine's other owners, in an effort to pay down debt.

Phoenix-based Freeport, one of the world's biggest copper miners, said it would sell a 13% ownership interest in its Morenci mine, located in the desert on the Arizona-New Mexico border, to Sumitomo Metal Mining Co. for $1 billion. The company said it would record a gain of $550 million on the deal, the difference between the sale price and the stake's book value of $450 million.

Freeport Chief Executive Richard Adkerson said the transaction was part of the company's plan to reduce what it owes to creditors "while retaining a portfolio of high-quality assets and resources." Mr. Adkerson pledged last month to cut the company's $20 billion debt by as much as $10 billion.

Freeport, the U.S.'s biggest mining company by market capitalization, has been under pressure from falling commodity prices and activist investor Carl Icahn, who has a stake of roughly 8.7%, according to recent disclosures. He has been lobbying for cutting costs and reducing debt.

Since Mr. Icahn disclosed his initial investment last August, Freeport has suspended its dividend, cut capital spending, and announced the resignation of longtime chairman James R. Moffett, a colorful oil wildcatter largely responsible for building its global copper empire.

With or without Mr. Icahn, major mining companies have acknowledged the need to prepare for a long siege of low commodity prices by paring costs, laying off workers and reducing debt, even if it means selling pieces of their crown jewels. Freeport would like to unload oil-and-gas assets it bought in 2013, and which have declined in value as crude oil prices have dropped. But its most attractive assets are in its portfolio of top-flight copper mines in Arizona, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Chile, Peru and Indonesia.

In the deal announced Monday, Freeport will retain control of Morenci, one of three mines, along with complexes in Peru and the DRC, that it has spent billions expanding this decade. These so-called super-mines operate at extremely low costs, around $1.5 per pound of copper produced, making them profitable even with copper at its current lows of around $2 per pound.

Once the sale is completed in mid-2016, Freeport will own 72% of Morenci, down from 85%, with the rest belonging to Sumitomo, a Japanese industrial conglomerate, or its affiliates. With the deal, Sumitomo is buying a heavier flow of raw copper, which it hopes to capitalize on when prices improve. Copper prices will "eventually come back," Yoshiaki Nakazato, president of Sumitomo Metal Mining, told reporters.

Freeport said it reaped $2.2 billion in revenue last year from the mine, which produced around a billion pounds of copper.

Last month, Freeport-McMoRan reported a loss of $4.09 billion, or $3.47 a share, widening from a year-earlier loss of $2.86 billion, or $2.75 a share.

Credit: By John W. Miller

DETAILS

Subject:	Mines; Mining; Losses; Debt management; Copper industry; Copper; Crude oil prices
Business indexing term:	Subject: Debt management Copper industry Crude oil prices; Corporation: Freeport-McMoRan Inc; Industry: 33142 : Copper Rolling, Drawing, Extruding, and Alloying
Location:	Arizona; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Sumitomo Metal Mining Co Ltd; NAICS: 213114; Name: Freeport-McMoRan Inc; NAICS: 212220, 212230
Classification:	9190: United States; 2330: Acquisitions & mergers; 8500: Extractive industries; 33142: Copper Rolling, Drawing, Extruding, and Alloying
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765316142
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-freeport-sells-part-arizona-mine/docview/1765316142/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 69 of 100

City News: Tenants in Maze Of Courts Get A Helping Hand

Kanno-Youngs, Zolan . Kanno-Youngs, Zolan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Fern Fisher, the program's supervisor and deputy chief administrative judge for New York City Courts, said the navigators' most valuable service is to stand in court with a tenant who can't obtain a free lawyer from another legal service. Mayor Bill de Blasio recently announced the creation of the Office of Civil Justice, which would manage $70 million for legal-assistance programs.

FULL TEXT

When 74-year-old Marie Emmanuel received a summons to appear in housing court for the first time in her life, she said she felt alone, afraid and overwhelmed.

Ms. Emmanuel, a soft-spoken widow, has lived in her two-bedroom, rent-stabilized apartment in Brooklyn for more than 30 years. She said didn't have money for a lawyer, and that she dreaded the prospect of standing in front of both a judge and her landlord, who she presumed would have an attorney.

"I worried a lot about the whole process," she said. "It's my first time, so I don't know how much to say."

But when a judge addressed her on a recent morning in a Brooklyn courtroom during the latest phase of her housing dispute, a calm Ms. Emmanuel didn't need to say much. She left the talking to her court navigator, Ernest Martinez.

The Court Navigator Program, which the court system launched in February 2014, guides people who don't have an attorney through the complexities of their legal case. Unlike criminal court, civil court doesn't provide a lawyer to those who can't afford one.

The navigators, most of them college students, typically start by helping eligible litigants with their initial paperwork in the clerk's office. They help explain how the court system works and help access interpreters and social services. They also can accompany litigants in the courtroom in every borough except Staten Island.

Navigators are trained and supervised, but they aren't licensed lawyers and aren't permitted to give a legal opinion. In court, however, they can remind oft-overwhelmed tenants of facts and respond to a judge if asked a question.

Fern Fisher, the program's supervisor and deputy chief administrative judge for New York City Courts, said the navigators' most valuable service is to stand in court with a tenant who can't obtain a free lawyer from another legal service. "People before the court often become very nervous and they forget to provide valuable information," Judge Fisher said.

Last month, when a judge asked Ms. Emmanuel about her attempts to get her landlord to finish repairs in her Crown Heights apartment, and she had no response, the judge turned to her navigator.

Mr. Martinez, 27, then asked the judge if the court could send an inspector to the apartment to ensure the repairs get completed.

Mr. Martinez said he believes having a lawyer in civil court is just as important as in criminal court. "When it comes to the right of having a lawyer in a civil court case, a housing court case, their livelihood is totally at stake too," he said. "Things would've gone so much more faster for her if she would've had a lawyer."

Many organizations in New York City provide legal services for civil cases, including one aimed at senior citizens in need. That program denied Ms. Emmanuel's request for a lawyer, even though she fit the qualifications, Mr. Martinez said. The problem was too few lawyers, he said.

Mayor Bill de Blasio recently announced the creation of the Office of Civil Justice, which would manage $70 million for legal-assistance programs. But even with that new effort, the available services are insufficient to meet the enormous need, Judge Fisher said.

Records show between 85% and 90% of all tenants who enter housing court don't have legal representation, Judge Fisher said.

"Even with as much funding as we can come up with, there still will be people without lawyers," she said. "[When] lawyers can't be there, the navigators fill in."

Traci Krasne, 24, who is applying to law school, spends her Monday and Wednesday mornings weaving through a line of frustrated tenants cramped inside the bland second-floor of housing court in Brooklyn.

Navigators look for people who are starting the process with their nonpayment case and live in rent-stabilized apartments. Out of the scores of people who waited in line, Ms. Krasne said she would likely consult with four by the end of the day.

"People are pretty frustrated and overwhelmed," she said.

"A lot of people don't really know what the process is. They're coming in with difficult circumstances because a lot of people are here because they can't pay their rent or haven't paid their rent," she said. "They can't get a hold of their landlord to talk about it."

When Nadia Membreno, 34, of Bensonhurst came to court to answer a petition from her landlord and saw the line on the second floor, she said she thought her whole day was wasted.

But after speaking to Ms. Krasne, she was able to cut into the line and received individual help filling out the paperwork. She was out of the courtroom with a referral to a legal service within 20 minutes.

"I would've never thought I was going to get out this easy," she said.

Credit: By Zolan Kanno-Youngs

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys; Litigation; Tenants; Courts; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Industry: 54111 : Offices of Lawyers
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Classification:	54111: Offices of Lawyers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765316126
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-tenants-maze-courts-get-helping-hand/docview/1765316126/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 70 of 100

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

WEATHER Winter Storm Snarls Traffic on East Coast Snow and ice hampered much of the Eastern Seaboard on Presidents Day, causing traffic accidents, highway closings and flight cancellations.

FULL TEXT

WEATHER

Winter Storm Snarls

Traffic on East Coast

Snow and ice hampered much of the Eastern Seaboard on Presidents Day, causing traffic accidents, highway closings and flight cancellations.

Meantime, tornadoes touched down in Florida's Panhandle and in Mississippi, destroying up to 10 homes, the Associated Press reported.

The storm moved into the Northeast early Monday, fueled by moisture from a low pressure system in the South colliding with Arctic air that had sent temperatures plunging in many cities in the Northeast to record lows over the weekend.

FlightAware.com said more than 300 flights into or out of Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport were canceled, as were 250 traveling to or from New York's La Guardia Airport.

The forecast calls for higher temperatures later this week, said Mike Musher, a National Weather Service meteorologist.

-- Jim Carlton

PENNSYLVANIA

Norovirus Confirmed

In College Outbreak

Norovirus has been confirmed by health authorities as the cause of a stomach illness that sickened more than 200 students last week at Ursinus College in Collegeville, Pa., school officials said Monday.

Classes resumed Monday after being canceled Thursday afternoon and Friday. The school dining hall was closed for a time, but it reopened after an inspection.

-- Associated Press

COLORADO

Planned Parenthood

Clinic Reopens

A Planned Parenthood clinic in Colorado Springs has partially reopened nearly three months after a gunman killed three people there and injured nine. The main entrance -- damaged by a police vehicle during the response to the Nov. 27 shooting -- is sheathed in plywood.

Robert Lewis Dear has been charged with murder, attempted murder and other counts. He has acknowledged carrying out the shooting, citing abortions done at the clinic. A judge has ordered him to undergo a mental exam.

DETAILS

Subject:	Weather; Murders & murder attempts; Shootings; Airports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Airports; Industry: 48811 : Airport Operations
Location:	Arctic region; Florida; Mississippi; New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: National Weather Service-US; NAICS: 924120; Name: LaGuardia Airport; NAICS: 488119; Name: Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport; NAICS: 488119; Name: Ursinus College; NAICS: 611310; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	48811: Airport Operations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765316124
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1765316124/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2025-01-29
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 71 of 100

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A VW executive warned management in 2014 about a U.S. probe into whether the car maker used "test recognition" on diesel engines. ---

FULL TEXT

Global markets soared while U.S. exchanges were closed. European shares climbed 3%, led by auto and bank stocks; Japanese shares rose 7.2%.

The ECB is ready to boost stimulus in March if it thinks market turmoil or lower oil prices could weigh on low inflation, Draghi said.

The yuan had its biggest jump in over a decade against the dollar as China guided the currency higher.

Fantasy sports operators have launched a lobbying blitz to exempt the industry from gambling laws.

IBM plans initiatives to promote blockchain, a technology that underpins the Bitcoin digital currency.

Apollo is nearing a deal to acquire home-security company ADT.

Fox's "Deadpool" opened to an estimated $150 million to set a Presidents Day weekend box-office record.

A VW executive warned management in 2014 about a U.S. probe into whether the car maker used "test recognition" on diesel engines.

Anglo American's credit rating was slashed to junk by Moody's, a day ahead of the miner's earnings report.

Freeport agreed to sell a 13% stake in an Arizona copper mine for $1 billion in a bid to pay down debt.

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	China; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Moodys Investors Service Inc; NAICS: 522110, 523940, 561450
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765316110
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1765316110/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 72 of 100

Business News: 2014 VW Memo Warned of Probe

Boston, William . Boston, William.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A senior Volkswagen AG executive commissioned with troubleshooting and known internally as "the fireman" warned the company's top management in May 2014 about an impending investigation by U.S. environmental authorities into whether the German car maker was using "test recognition" on some of its diesel engines.

FULL TEXT

BERLIN -- A senior Volkswagen AG executive commissioned with troubleshooting and known internally as "the fireman" warned the company's top management in May 2014 about an impending investigation by U.S. environmental authorities into whether the German car maker was using "test recognition" on some of its diesel engines.

The warning, communicated in a note to then-Chief Executive Martin Winterkorn, came from Bernd Gottweis, a quality-control executive who ran a team of product sleuths that Volkswagen management dispatched around the world to put out quality flare-ups before they grew into a full-fledged blaze.

The memo makes the first known reference to a defeat device in the investigation into Volkswagen's emissions-cheating scandal and might suggest that the company's top executives knew more than they are saying now. It isn't known whether Mr. Winterkorn saw the memo.

"There was a short memo from Mr. Gottweis about this issue, but it would be a mistake to assume that it was clear back then that we knew it was cheating software. That was not clear," a person familiar with the situation said. "We don't know if Winterkorn read the memo or not."

Mr. Winterkorn couldn't be reached through his attorney for comment. The existence of Mr. Gottweis's memo was reported by the weekly Bild am Sonntag newspaper on Sunday. The newspaper says it has internal Volkswagen documents that turned up during the investigation led by U.S. law firm Jones Day, which it says Mr. Winterkorn received on May 23, 2014. Bild said the memo was part of a package of documents that Mr. Winterkorn took home over that weekend.

Volkswagen became aware in April 2014 that a study conducted by emissions experts at West Virginia University discovered that Volkswagen diesel-powered Passat and Jetta models spewed more than 30 times the allowable levels of nitrogen oxide, or NOx, emissions during normal driving, even though the vehicles passed laboratory tests.

The academics shared their data with the California Air Resources Board, which began trying to figure out why the NOx emissions were so high.

In the memo, Mr. Gottweis discussed the emissions tests from U.S. environmental authorities and said Volkswagen engineers in the U.S. were at a loss to explain the problem.

"No plausible explanation for the dramatically increased NOx emissions can be given to the authorities," Mr. Gottweis wrote, according to Bild, which claims to have copies of the documents. "It is to be assumed that the authorities will subsequently examine VW systems to determine if Volkswagen has installed test recognition into the engine control software (a so-called defeat device)."

The German car maker admitted in August that the NOx emissions were masked by software that shut down emissions control when the cars were on the road.

In September, after the Environmental Protection Agency disclosed the emissions fraud, Volkswagen admitted installing the software on nearly 11 million vehicles world-wide.

The company faces regulatory and criminal investigations and civil litigation in the U.S. and Europe, and up to $46 billion in potential fines.

When Volkswagen got wind of the increased NOx emissions, the company sent Mr. Gottweis in to investigate. In May, he sent the note to VW headquarters in Wolfsburg. Volkswagen declined to make Mr. Gottweis available for comment.

Credit: By William Boston

DETAILS

Subject:	Emissions control; Criminal investigations; Automobile industry; Executives; Automobiles
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Executives; Corporation: Volkswagen AG; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
People:	Winterkorn, Martin
Company / organization:	Name: Jones Day; NAICS: 541110; Name: West Virginia University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Air Resources Board-California; NAICS: 924110; Name: Volkswagen AG; NAICS: 336110, 336390
Classification:	9190: United States; 8680: Transportation equipment industry; 4310: Regulation; 33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1765316109
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-2014-vw-memo-warned-probe/docview/1765316109/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 73 of 100

U.S. News: With the GOP Primed for a Fight, List of Possible Nominees Shrinks

Kendall, Brent . Kendall, Brent.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Jane Kelly, 51, received unanimous Senate confirmation in 2013 for a seat on the St. Louis-based Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

FULL TEXT

Republican opposition to filling the Supreme Court vacancy means President Barack Obama may have to eliminate candidates he might favor in a different political climate. Against this backdrop, here are some candidates who could be in the mix:

Sri Srinivasan, 48, was confirmed unanimously in 2013 as Mr. Obama's first judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, considered the nation's second most powerful court. Born in India and raised in Kansas, Judge Srinivasan worked in the U.S. Solicitor General's office during Democratic and Republican administrations and was a law clerk to two Republican-nominated jurists: Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson. Nominating him now potentially could damage his prospects for a future court post when the chances of confirmation are more likely.

Merrick Garland, the 63-year-old chief judge of the D.C. Circuit, is respected in both parties and considered a careful, experienced judge not driven by ideology. His age would mean the president may not leave as lasting an imprint as with a younger nominee, though that could make him more appealing to Republicans. A Clinton pick for the federal bench, he has served on the appeals court since 1997.

Jane Kelly, 51, received unanimous Senate confirmation in 2013 for a seat on the St. Louis-based Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. She spent nearly 20 years as a federal public defender, giving her criminal-defense expertise, and previously enjoyed support from Iowa GOP Sen. Charles Grassley, the head of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The president also could seek to name his first African-American high-court nominee. His options would include Judge Paul Watford, 48, who was confirmed in 2012 to the Ninth Circuit in San Francisco, and Attorney General Loretta Lynch, though her confirmation last year was delayed and she garnered only 56 votes.

There also is the chance the president could consider a politician or a state-court judge, or perhaps even someone previously nominated by a Republican president.

Credit: By Brent Kendall

DETAILS

Subject:	Nominations; Litigation; Presidents; Federal court decisions; State court decisions; Judges & magistrates
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Srinivasan, Sri; Garland, Merrick; Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Senate-Judiciary, Committee on the; NAIC S: 921120; Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230674
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-with-gop-primed-fight-list-possible/docview/1765230674/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-09-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 74 of 100

U.S. News: Terror Convicts Pose Issue After Release

Hong, Nicole . Hong, Nicole.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since 2014, more than 75 people have been arrested in the U.S. on charges related to Islamic State, a terrorist group also known as ISIS or ISIL.

FULL TEXT

As convicted Islamic State supporters in the U.S. serve their sentences, authorities are tackling a new challenge: what to do with them when they get out of prison.

Since 2014, more than 75 people have been arrested in the U.S. on charges related to Islamic State, a terrorist group also known as ISIS or ISIL. Of the 25 individuals who have pleaded guilty, eight have been given prison sentences, while the rest will be sentenced in the coming months, according to Fordham Law School's Center on National Security. The cases of those who haven't pleaded guilty are pending.

Some of those convicted could be exiting prison as early as 2017, raising the question of how to reintegrate them back into their communities across the U.S.

"What happens when these folks start getting out?" asked John Carlin, who heads the Justice Department's national security division. "There are programs for drug addicts and gang members. There is not one with a proven track record of success for terrorism."

The Bureau of Prisons said in a statement that inmates convicted on terror charges have the same opportunity to receive re-entry programming as other inmates, including drug treatment and faith-based programs.

But as part of the government's broader initiative to "counter violent extremism," the Justice Department and other agencies are exploring the possibility of creating special programs to help reintegrate inmates with terrorism-related charges, according to people involved in the discussions. A spokesman for the Justice Department declined to comment.

These types of programs haven't been applied in the U.S., largely due to the relatively small number of convicted terrorists. More than 300 inmates with a connection to terrorism may have been released in the U.S. since 2001, according to an analysis by Human Rights First, a New York nonprofit group.

Over the next five years, the issue is likely to become more pressing, say government officials and counterterrorism experts.

Rep. Peter King (R., N.Y.), during a hearing of the U.S. counterterrorism and intelligence subcommittee in October, said more than 100 inmates in federal prison with links to terrorism would be released over the next five years. "We have never been faced with such large numbers of terror inmates before," said Mr. King, the chairman of the committee.

The first trials of alleged Islamic State supporters in the U.S. are set to start this month. In federal court in Brooklyn, N.Y., jury selection began Feb. 9 in the trial of Tairod Pugh, a 48-year-old U.S. Air Force veteran accused of attempting to join the terrorist group overseas. Mr. Pugh is pleading not guilty. In Arizona federal court, jury selection will begin Feb. 16 in the trial of Abdul Malik Abdul Kareem, who is accused of hosting and providing weapons to the two gunmen who died trying to attack people last May in Texas at an exhibit of cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad. Mr. Kareem is pleading not guilty.

Most of the current Islamic State-related defendants are charged with "providing material support" to the terrorist group, which often means sending money to Islamic State or attempting to travel overseas to Syria, not committing violent crimes.

The federal material-support statute carries a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison. But the eight people sentenced after pleading guilty in Islamic State-related cases received an average sentence so far of more than nine years in prison, less than the average sentence of more than 15 years for the 297 convictions on "jihadist terror crimes" overall from 2001 to 2013, according to the Center on National Security.

Experts say rehabilitating sympathizers of Islamic State is especially important because they are younger than typical terrorism defendants. The average age of those arrested is 26 years old, meaning many of them could be released in their 30s and 40s.

Almost 90% of the Islamic State-related defendants are U.S. citizens or legal residents, so few will get deported after serving their sentences.

Some countries, including Indonesia and Saudi Arabia, have so-called deradicalization programs that seek to change the ideologies of terrorist inmates before releasing them back into society, sometimes with the help of former jihadists who have disengaged from violence. In Germany, deradicalization programs were started in 2000 to rehabilitate neo-Nazis and have since inspired similar programs for Islamic militants.

Some U.S. experts are voicing concerns that government programs to change inmates' belief systems will collide with civil liberties and freedom of religion. Singapore, which has a well-known deradicalization program, relies "a great deal on religious leaders to take this interventionist approach," says Faiza Patel, co-director of the liberty and national security program at the Brennan Center for Justice in New York. "I don't know how much the U.S. government could do that without running afoul of the First Amendment."

The issue of re-entry into society has come up in a handful of cases. Last October in Chicago, 20-year-old Mohammed Hamzah Khan pleaded guilty to a material-support charge after attempting to travel to Syria to join Islamic State with his two younger siblings in 2014.

As part of his plea agreement, prosecutors recommended "violent extremism counseling" for him upon release. A program would be chosen by the probation office, the Chicago U.S. attorney's office said. Mr. Khan is scheduled to be sentenced in June.

Credit: By Nicole Hong

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Criminal sentences; Arrests; Prisoners; Counterterrorism; Terrorism; National security; Extremism; Nazi groups
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92214 : Correctional Institutions
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Human Rights First; NAICS: 813311; Name: Air Force-US; NAICS: 928110; Name: Bureau of Prisons; NAICS: 922140; Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	92214: Correctional Institutions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230661
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-terror-convicts-pose-issue-after-release/docview/1765230661/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users , but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 75 of 100

Business News: GE's Oil Chief Pays Call on Tehran

Faucon, Benoit; Mann, Ted . Faucon, Benoit; Mann, Ted.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]this week, oil-tanker operators were having trouble getting any shipment from Iran insured because pooled insurance included an American group.

FULL TEXT

LONDON -- The chief executive of General Electric Co.'s oil-and-gas business has visited Tehran to explore business opportunities there, the company said, the first known visit by an energy executive of an American company since before Western sanctions were imposed on Iran over its nuclear program.

Lorenzo Simonelli, CEO of GE Oil & Gas, visited Iran in recent days and departed on Monday as the company takes another look at the country now that nuclear-related sanctions have ended, a GE spokeswoman said.

"In line with the easing of sanctions, we have begun looking at potential business opportunities in Iran, while fully complying with the rules laid out by the U.S. government," the spokeswoman said. "Mr. Simonelli's visit . . . was part of our efforts to that end."

American businesses have trod cautiously since world powers last month ended international restrictions on trading with Iran's oil sector and other industries.

Several layers of U.S. sanctions against Iran remain in place over terrorism, human rights and weapons, and there continues to be a ban on American dollar transactions with the country. Washington now allows U.S. companies to trade with Iran as long as the business is carried out by a foreign subsidiary. U.S. citizens and U.S. technology can't be a part of the transaction.

GE Oil & Gas, based in London, is a subsidiary of its American parent company.

GE and other American energy companies are drawn to the promise of Iran's oil-and-gas sector, which is trying to ramp production back up after more than three years of decline under sanctions. Iran produced almost 3 million barrels of oil a day in January, up from 2.7 million barrels a day at times last year, but far less than its capacity of 3.6 million barrels a day, according to the International Energy Agency.

GE manufactures oil-drilling and processing equipment, including subsea pumps and pipeline-service units. Mr. Simonelli's visit included a meeting with a top Iranian oil official, according to a person familiar with the matter.

The company wants to sell spare parts, compressors and turbines from its unit Nuovo Pignone, based in Florence, Italy, according to a person familiar with the matter.

European companies have moved more quickly than American firms in Iran, exploiting decades-old business relationships with Tehran. Total SA, the French energy company, and other oil traders shipped the first Iranian crude to the European Union in more than three years on Monday.

Those shipments were a sign that the remaining U.S. sanctions on doing business with Iran are surmountable. Until this week, oil-tanker operators were having trouble getting any shipment from Iran insured because pooled insurance included an American group. The U.S. Treasury Department issued an exemption allowing the insurance.

GE Oil & Gas has had a team of 50 in Dubai and Florence preparing to work in Iran for months, examining every detail to ensure compliance with U.S. sanctions, a person familiar with the matter said. That includes insulating any potential Iran business from its U.S. parent and avoiding any use of U.S. technology.

GE isn't a stranger to Iran. The company received U.S. government approval under humanitarian exemptions to sell health-care equipment in Iran during sanctions.

Credit: By Benoit Faucon and Ted Mann

DETAILS

Subject:	Foreign subsidiaries; Petroleum industry; Chief executive officers; Energy industry; American dollar; Sanctions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Foreign subsidiaries Petroleum industry Chief executive officers Energy industry American dollar Sanctions
Location:	United States--US; Iran
People:	Simonelli, Lorenzo
Company / organization:	Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120; Name: International Energy Agency; NAICS: 541720, 926130, 928120; Name: GE Oil & Gas; NAICS: 332322, 333248, 333914, 334513
Classification:	9180: International; 8510: Petroleum industry; 1300: International trade & foreign investment
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230634

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ges-oil-chief-pays-call-on-tehran/docview/1765230634/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 76 of 100

World News: Zika Claim Prompts Shift

Johnson, Reed; Jelmayer, Rogerio . Johnson, Reed; Jelmayer, Rogerio.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Sumitomo Chemical Co. Ltd., which manufactures Pyriproxyfen, said Pyriproxyfen has been approved by the WHO to combat mosquitoes and that extensive testing has shown that it doesn't cause nervous system damage or affect reproductive ability.

FULL TEXT

SAO PAULO -- Brazil's southernmost state halted the use of a mosquito larvicide that an Argentine doctors' group warns could be behind the recent surge of babies born with microcephaly.

The ban was imposed despite assertions by the federal government and U.S. health authorities that there is no scientific basis linking use of the chemical to the birth defect.

Health officials in Rio Grande do Sul over the weekend suspended the use of the larvicide Pyriproxyfen to destroy mosquito eggs and larvae in the state's drinking water supplies, in what they called a "preventive measure."

The decision came just days after the Argentine group Red Universitaria de Ambiente y Salud (University Network of Environment and Health), released a report that links the pesticide to the huge increase in Brazil in recent months of suspected cases of microcephaly, in which infants are born with shrunk heads and underdeveloped brains.

Medardo Avila Vazquez, a pediatrician and neonatal development specialist at the Universidad de Cordoba who belongs to the group, acknowledged that the group hasn't done any lab studies or epidemiological research to support its assertions, but it argues that using larvicides may cause human deformities.

The group's assertions were quickly rejected by Brazilian and U.S. health authorities, and run contrary to the beliefs of many health authorities in Brazil and internationally that the more likely cause of the rise in suspected microcephaly cases is the mosquito-borne Zika virus that is rapidly spreading across the Americas.

Mr. Avila Vazquez said the group is calling on Brazil and other governments in the region to be cautious about drawing fast conclusions about the relationship between Zika and microcephaly. The group comprises about two dozen people in Argentina, mostly doctors, who are concerned about the use of insecticides and other agrochemicals.

"We think it is likely that Pyriproxyfen is the problem," Mr. Avila Vazquez said.

The Argentine doctors' report is the latest twist in the battle to decipher the Zika virus and its potential health effects. The World Health Organization this month declared the Zika virus a global public-health emergency. The agency called for more research to determine whether there is a causal link between microcephaly and Zika.

That uncertainty has allowed room for new theories on the cause of the outbreak, put forward with wildly varying degrees of evidence, to proliferate on social media.

Brazil's Health Ministry issued a statement that there is no evidence linking larvicide to microcephaly. "The association between the use of Pyriproxyfen and microcephaly has no scientific basis."

Sumitomo Chemical Co. Ltd., which manufactures Pyriproxyfen, said Pyriproxyfen has been approved by the WHO to combat mosquitoes and that extensive testing has shown that it doesn't cause nervous system damage or affect reproductive ability.

Nationwide, Brazil has 41 confirmed cases of Zika-related microcephaly, plus 421 confirmed cases of microcephaly whose cause hasn't yet been determined, according to the health ministry.

Rio Grande do Sul, along the Argentine border, is among the Brazilian states least affected by the microcephaly outbreak. "Although we have no indication that the larvicide has a link with microcephaly cases, it is also true that we do not have any strong evidence that it has no links," said Joao Gabbardo Dos Reis, the state's health secretary.

Tom Burton and Taos Turner contributed to this article.

Credit: By Reed Johnson and Rogerio Jelmayer

DETAILS

Subject:	Viruses; Mosquitoes; Zika virus; Chemical industry; Microcephaly
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Subject: Chemical industry
--------------------------------	----------------------------

Location:	United States--US; Brazil; Rio Grande
Company / organization:	Name: World Health Organization; NAICS: 923120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230622
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-zika-claim-prompts-shift/docview/1765230622/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 77 of 100

U.S. News: Money To Latin America Soars

Jordan, Miriam . Jordan, Miriam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The analysis by the Inter-American Dialogue, a Washington, D.C., think tank, attributed the increase to a spike in Central American immigrants, devaluation of regional currencies, and growing economic opportunity in the U.S. Most of the money came from immigrants in the U.S. who help support family in their countries of origin.

FULL TEXT

The amount of money migrant workers world-wide sent to Latin America and the Caribbean reached $68.3 billion in 2015, surpassing a prerecession peak of $64.5 billion in 2008, according to a report set to be released on Tuesday.

The analysis by the Inter-American Dialogue, a Washington, D.C., think tank, attributed the increase to a spike in Central American immigrants, devaluation of regional currencies, and growing economic opportunity in the U.S. Most of the money came from immigrants in the U.S. who help support family in their countries of origin.

"Remittance levels not only are back at prerecession levels, but we expect them to keep rising," said Manuel Orozco, the report's lead author.

Guatemala had the biggest jump in the total value of transfers, increasing more than 15% to $6.3 billion. Honduras and El Salvador had 10.9% and 3% growth to $3.72 billion and $4.28 billion, respectively.

Colombia had the second-largest increase in the region last year, with a 13.3% jump to $4.64 billion.

Despite a drop in Mexican immigration to the U.S., remittances to that country rose 4.8% to $24.77 billion, which the report attributed to a continued flow of workers entering on temporary agricultural visas, others coming illegally not accounted for in official data and better job prospects.

Credit: By Miriam Jordan

DETAILS

Subject:	Remittances; Noncitizens
Business indexing term:	Subject: Remittances
Location:	Honduras; Guatemala; Colombia; United States--US; El Salvador; Washington DC; Latin America; Caribbean area
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230549
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-money-latin-america-soars/docview/1765230549/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 78 of 100

Election 2016: Trump Ramps Up Voter Outreach --- Some question quality of his ground game in South Carolina as GOP primary nears Dawsey, Josh; Bauerlein, Valerie . Dawsey, Josh; Bauerlein, Valerie.

ABSTRACT

Fuller Parker, a 20 year-old college student, recently drove an RV decorated with Mr. Trump's likeness across South Carolina, parking at Wal-Mart stores to attract voters.

FULL TEXT

GREENVILLE, S.C. -- About three dozen Donald Trump volunteers packed a downtown office here Sunday afternoon, using iPads, computers and landlines to contact voters and read detailed scripts praising the candidate.

Other supporters fanned out across the region's neighborhoods, rich and poor, holding iPhones with addresses pinned on a map that is linked to a campaign database.

Mr. Trump has been criticized in other states for a flawed ground game, and he said his voter-turnout effort fell short in Iowa. In South Carolina, his aides set up shop months ago, trying to buttress a campaign built on star power with more traditional methods.

As in prior early-voting states, Mr. Trump leads in public surveys. In one recent poll, conducted Feb. 10-12 by CBS News/YouGov, Mr. Trump's support stood at 42%, Texas Sen. Ted Cruz was at 20% and Florida Sen. Marco Rubio had 15%. The challenge is to get those backers to vote in Saturday's primary.

"We made 70,000 calls yesterday across the state," James Epley, the campaign's director for upstate South Carolina, said Sunday. "We chuckle when people say we don't have a ground game. Underestimate us at your peril."

Still, many question some aspects of the campaign. The Trump voter lists are still less precise than other campaigns.

His biggest support is from working whites without college degrees. Yet on Sunday, a group of volunteers fanned out in a wealthy neighborhood in downtown Spartanburg, about 30 miles from Greenville.

Most residents they reached said they were supporting other candidates. "I'm not going to vote for Donald Trump," said Mark VanGeison, who answered the door and said he wasn't interested. More than two dozen voters said they had heard much more from other major candidates by mail, email and phone. Few reported being contacted by the Trump campaign.

GOP legislators said they have had lunch, coffee or at least a phone call with many candidates, but few have spoken to Mr. Trump. Evangelical ministers said the same.

"For a while I thought the most buzz was for Trump, but I'm not so sure anymore," said GOP state Rep. Ralph Kennedy, who said he is undecided.

The billionaire businessman's aides dismiss criticism of their approach, saying most traditional campaign spending in Iowa and New Hampshire was a waste, with some candidates shelling out thousands of dollars per vote only to place deep in the pack.

Mr. Trump's South Carolina co-chairman, Ed McMullen, a veteran of a GOP think tank, said the centerpiece of Mr. Trump's strategy is his rallies, which average 7,000 to 10,000 people. The campaign asks supporters to sign up online for tickets and uses their contact information to follow up with calls and emails. It also uses demographic modeling to identify likely supporters, he said. Mr. McMullen said no other campaign is "doing the kind of depth we're doing," and other GOP models reliant on publicly available voter files have proven ineffective.

"Obama taught us a lot," said Mr. McMullen, citing President Barack Obama's data-driven 2008 campaign. "Republicans in the 2012 cycle with [Mitt] Romney saw a system blow up on Election Day. You wouldn't believe the ineptitude. A lot of people made a lot of money, for nothing."

On Sunday, most volunteers at the Greenville call center said they had never worked for a campaign. Many came from out of state and stayed at a local Econo Lodge.

Fuller Parker, a 20 year-old college student, recently drove an RV decorated with Mr. Trump's likeness across South Carolina, parking at Wal-Mart stores to attract voters.

"Driving the RV is far better than door knocking, Mr. Parker said. "They just flock to you when you're driving it."

Yet the execution of the turnout operation can be spotty. Outside a livestock arena in Clemson last Tuesday, Mr. Parker and other volunteers left a sign-up table for supporters unattended as thousands streamed by, many without pausing to jot their names down.

South Carolina Lt. Gov. Henry McMaster, Mr. Trump's most prominent backer in the state, says stumping at the local Lizard's Thicket Southern-cooking restaurant would be a waste of time. "The difference is, most candidates have to go to the people," Mr. McMaster said. "With Donald Trump, the people come to him."

Credit: By Josh Dawsey and Valerie Bauerlein

DETAILS

Subject:	Candidates; Voter behavior; Presidential elections; Political campaigns; Primaries & caucuses
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Iowa; South Carolina; United States--US
People:	Rubio, Marco; Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230474
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-ramps-up-voter-outreach-some/docview/1765230474/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 79 of 100

World News: Pilots Urge Tight Curbs After Laser Imperils Jet

Wall, Robert . Wall, Robert.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

LONDON -- Lasers should be categorized as offensive weapons, a pilot group argued after a New York-bound Virgin Atlantic plane from London turned around after takeoff because a laser beam caused a crew member to feel sick.

Lasers are among the biggest threats to commercial planes, along with drones, according to pilot groups. Aiming one at an aircraft is a federal crime in the U.S.

The U.S. Federal Aviation Administration recorded more than 3,800 laser incidents involving aircraft in 2014.

Credit: By Robert Wall

DETAILS

Subject:	Lasers; Aircraft accidents & safety
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft accidents & safety
Location:	United Kingdom--UK; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230443
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-pilots-urge-tight-curbs-after-laser/docview/1765230443/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 80 of 100

U.S. News: Maryland University President Declines to Quit

Korn, Melissa . Korn, Melissa.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Board Chairman John Coyne said on Monday trustees chose Mr. Newman because they sought a "change agent" who could help the school achieve financial sustainability.

FULL TEXT

A clash over the leadership and direction of a historic Catholic university in the hills of northern Maryland showed no signs of easing after the school's embattled president declined to resign by Monday morning, as called for by the faculty.

In a 87-to-3 vote on Friday, the faculty of Mount St. Mary's University demanded President Simon Newman step down following weeks of tension over his leadership style and vision. They voted shortly after two professors were fired and Mr. Newman then offered to reinstate them earlier in the week.

The firings came after a student newspaper reported on remarks by Mr. Newman that likened students to bunnies that needed to be drowned. He had made the comments in reference to a proposed program that would weed out weaker students earlier in the school year, potentially bolstering the retention rate the school reports to the federal government.

Students of the Emmitsburg, Md., school held a vote of their own over the weekend, with the results of an online poll showing nearly 76% of respondents voting in favor of Mr. Newman's leadership Sunday night. Of the 1,573 undergraduate students who were surveyed, 61% submitted responses.

"We need to listen to what the students are saying," Mr. Newman said on Monday. "They're our client. They're our consumer."

Many small, liberal arts colleges are struggling to stay afloat as enrollments fall, costs rise and families question the value of an education that isn't explicitly vocational.

Mount St. Mary's, which has about 2,200 undergraduate and seminary students and a $46 million endowment, is largely dependent on student tuition for revenue. Under Mr. Newman, the school is seeking to add new programs and diversify its revenue to become more financially sustainable, according to William E. Davies, vice president for business and finance.

Mr. Newman, a Stanford M.B.A. with a background in consulting and private equity, challenged the student paper's account of his remarks about struggling students. And the Mount St. Mary's board issued a statement in January that alleged some faculty members were colluding to undermine the president.

He sought to reboot the liberal-arts school, but his businesslike approach -- including trimming retirement and health-care benefits and talking about the need to focus on more marketable majors -- rankled many on campus.

During their deliberations, some faculty members said they wanted to proceed with certain of Mr. Newman's initiatives, no matter the result of the vote on whether he was asked to resign.

Board Chairman John Coyne said on Monday trustees chose Mr. Newman because they sought a "change agent" who could help the school achieve financial sustainability. He said Mr. Newman could "eradicate the fuzzy feelings and get down to data," and lead the school through a difficult but necessary transformation.

The president fired two faculty members last week. Thane Naberhaus, a tenured associate professor of philosophy, was accused of not showing sufficient loyalty to the school and was dismissed by the president without a standard faculty review, drawing outrage from academics nationwide. Mr. Naberhaus has been critical of Mr. Newman's leadership. Edward Egan, a law professor and adviser to the student newspaper, also was fired.

The proposed reinstatements of Messrs. Naberhaus and Egan were effective immediately, though neither had accepted the offer on Friday. Messrs. Naberhaus and Egan didn't respond to requests for comment on Monday. Inside Higher Ed, an online publication, reported Monday that the two were planning to go back to teach classes this week.

Credit: By Melissa Korn

DETAILS

Subject:	Court decisions; College students; Student retention; College presidents; Presidents
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
People:	Newman, Simon P
Company / organization:	Name: St Marys University College; NAICS: 611310

Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230395
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-maryland-university-president-declines/docview/1765230395/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 81 of 100

U.S. News: Lake Tahoe Bounces Back --- Snowfall fueled by El Nino boosts ski resorts throughout Sierra

Nevada region

Carlton, Jim . Carlton, Jim.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

At this time last year, so little snow had fallen around Lake Tahoe that a nearby golf course opened months earlier than usual, and ski resorts had to make their own powder on runs flanked by bare ground.

FULL TEXT

TAHOECITY, Calif. -- At this time last year, so little snow had fallen around Lake Tahoe that a nearby golf course opened months earlier than usual, and ski resorts had to make their own powder on runs flanked by bare ground.

But this year, Lake Tahoe is once again a winter wonderland: resorts are enjoying the most snowfall since California's drought began more than four years ago.

That is creating a positive ripple effect throughout the picturesque region in the Sierra Nevada, which has suffered economically due to the dry weather.

Squaw Valley/Alpine Meadows says it is on track to record more than a million visitors this season for the first time ever.

Vail Resorts Inc. credits strong performance at its Heavenly, Northstar and Kirkwood destinations at Tahoe for helping lift the company's overall U.S. ski visits 11.1% in the season through Jan. 11 compared with a year earlier.

"In the context of the past four years, it's as good as it gets," said Andy Wirth, president and chief executive officer of Squaw Valley Ski Holdings Inc., whose namesake resort has been buried this season in nearly 25 feet of snow -- more than in all of the 2014-15 season.

Ski resorts across much of the Western U.S. are enjoying bountiful snow conditions, in contrast to the weaker performance of many Eastern ski areas.

Meteorologists say that is in large part due to storms fueled by the El Nino weather condition, which has also helped keep the East warmer and drier than normal much of the winter.

Western ski resorts typically experience great swings in snowfall, given the region's propensity to drought.

Ski officials say unpredictable snowfall is prompting them to make changes so that the destinations can become more dependable attractions, such as by adding alpine coasters and mountain bicycle trails that don't depend on cold weather.

Few winter resorts have been hit harder by Western drought than Lake Tahoe, which hosts one of the largest collection of ski areas in North America.

The number of skier days fell there by 37% to 2.9 million in the 2013-14 season from 4.6 million in the last big snow season of 2010-11, according to the California Ski Industry Association.

Industry officials say a pullback in flights at the nearby Reno-Tahoe International Airport -- which has since been reversed -- also hurt ski visits.

And then at the beginning of November, the snow started falling and didn't really stop until a dry spell that began in early February.

Squaw Valley's Alpine Meadows resort opened in mid-November, a month ahead of schedule -- and like other resorts, found there was unusually strong interest in skiing after the recent dry years.

"The pent-up demand of the last four years has made more people come up here," said John "J.T." Thompson, tourism director of the North Lake Tahoe Resort Association, which reported a 17.7% surge in rental occupancies in January.

The resorts were caught somewhat off guard by all the demand, much of which came from the San Francisco Bay Area about 200 miles west.

"When Mother Nature did return, they came out in numbers beyond our expectations," said John Monson, director of sales and marketing at Sugar Bowl, whose season-pass sales have soared 68% this season from last. "We've had days bigger than in 10 years."

Andrew Ward said the drought had kept him away from the slopes since moving from Massachusetts to a San Francisco suburb three years ago.

"I wanted to come last year, but there wasn't any snow," said Mr. Ward, a 34-year-old software engineer, as he took a break skiing last week at Squaw Valley. "But now, almost all the runs are open."

The onslaught has unleashed a spending boom. At Tahoe Mountain Sports in Truckee, Calif., owner Dave Polivy said his sales of ski gear and other items have roughly doubled in the October-January period from a year earlier.

"When people are happy, they spend more," he said.

Outside the ski areas, snow lovers have packed into restaurants, bars and spas. A 30% jump in bookings for massages at Well Being in Kings Beach, Calif., prompted the business to double its staff of contract therapists to 10 from about five last year, said co-owner Sarah Hughes.

"It's feast or famine," Ms. Hughes said. "And as of now we are feasting."

Credit: By Jim Carlton

DETAILS

Subject: Skiing; Winter; Snow; Ski resorts; El Nino; Ocean currents; Resorts & spas

Business indexing term:	Subject: Resorts & spas; Industry: 71392 : Skiing Facilities 72111 : Hotels (except Casino Hotels) and Motels
Location:	California; Sierra Nevada Mountain Range; Lake Tahoe; Squaw Valley; United States--US
Classification:	71392: Skiing Facilities; 72111: Hotels (except Casino Hotels) and Motels
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1765230377
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-lake-tahoe-bounces-back-snowfall-fueled/docview/1765230377/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Mattel Reshapes Business; Barbie Gets New Chief

Ziobro, Paul . Ziobro, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mattel's problems have been a dark spot in a toy industry that has experienced a renaissance lately, shrugging off concerns that playing with traditional toys had ceded ground to children tapping away at smartphones and tablets.

FULL TEXT

The world's largest toy company has some of its swagger back, though it still faces another tough year.

Mattel Inc. executives on Friday said the company has been implementing steps to bolster its operations from improving ties to retailers and patching up relationships with important partners such as Disney Co., to developing a better lineup of new toys and marketing materials.

Taken with an sweeping organizational reboot, the executives said the measures should help reverse some of the self-imposed problems that hurt the company the past several years, though growth is still a year away.

"We have one more year of challenge," Mattel Chief Executive Chris Sinclair said during a meeting with analysts. But he stressed the company was now on solid footing. "If you sense a bit of confidence, then you're reading it right."

The tone was strikingly more positive than a year ago. Then, Mr. Sinclair addressed Wall Street following the abrupt firing of his predecessor, Bryan Stockton, amid yet another disappointing holiday season. The results forced a broad shake-up at the El Segundo, Calif., company to address brands losing sales, teams bungling basic execution with retailers and creative teams stifled by a bureaucratic, meeting-dominated culture.

Mattel has since replaced or reassigned more than half of its top managers. Last week, it named Lisa McKnight, a veteran Mattel marketer who was leading its Monster High line, as the head of its global Barbie business.

Mattel's problems have been a dark spot in a toy industry that has experienced a renaissance lately, shrugging off concerns that playing with traditional toys had ceded ground to children tapping away at smartphones and tablets. Toy sales rose 6.7% in the U.S. last year, according to research firm NPD Group Inc., the fastest rate in more than a decade.

"We see so much upside at Mattel and we are doing everything that we can to get there as quickly as possible," Mattel President and Operating Chief Richard Dickson said.

Hasbro Inc. recently won Mattel's long-held license to make Disney's princess characters like Cinderella and Snow White, as well as characters from the movie "Frozen." The loss leaves Mattel with an expected sales shortfall of more than $400 million for the year.

Mattel doesn't have one answer to that gap. Instead, the company is relying on its top brands -- like Barbie -- to continue to improve sales. The fashion doll has gone through a remake over the past two years to add skin tones and hair styles. In January, Mattel said it would start selling three new body types -- petite, tall and curvy.

Mattel shares closed 4% higher on Friday at $30.76.

Credit: By Paul Ziobro

DETAILS

Subject:	Dolls; Toys; Corporate reorganization
Business indexing term:	Subject: Corporate reorganization; Corporation: Mattel Inc
Location:	United States--US
People:	Sinclair, Christopher A
Company / organization:	Name: Mattel Inc; NAICS: 336991, 339930
Classification:	8600: Manufacturing industries not elsewhere classified; 9190: United States
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1764828672
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mattel-reshapes-barbie-gets-new/docview/1764828672/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 83 of 100

U.S. News: Tensions Rise Over Refugees --- In Idaho, some see a jihadist threat, others a much-needed supply of workers

Jordan, Miriam . Jordan, Miriam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Home to 1.6 million people, Idaho is among the states with the largest number of refugees relative to overall population, having absorbed nearly 30,000 from 53 countries since Vietnamese evacuees first arrived in the 1970s. Since 2008, the state has received about 1,000 refugees annually -- mostly from Africa, Asia and the Middle East -- out of 70,000 that have been resettled in the country each year.

FULL TEXT

BOISE, Idaho -- For decades, refugees have augmented the workforce of this sparsely populated state.

Refugees operate machines at the research-and-development facility for memory chips at Boise-based Micron Technology Inc. About a third of workers at Chobani Inc.'s yogurt plant in Twin Falls, the nation's largest, are refugees.

But since terror attacks in Paris and San Bernardino by people at least inspired by Islamic extremists, there has been a backlash against settling refugees here and elsewhere, particularly from Iraq and Syria. That has created tension between politicians sensitive to their constituents' concerns and business leaders who say that the state needs the newcomers to keep thriving.

"I hope that will go away," said Tim Komberec, chief executive of Idaho-based Empire Airlines, of anti-refugee rhetoric, at an event convened to tackle the state's labor shortage. "We need workers in this state." He said his company values a diverse workforce.

Home to 1.6 million people, Idaho is among the states with the largest number of refugees relative to overall population, having absorbed nearly 30,000 from 53 countries since Vietnamese evacuees first arrived in the 1970s. Since 2008, the state has received about 1,000 refugees annually -- mostly from Africa, Asia and the Middle East -- out of 70,000 that have been resettled in the country each year. About 70% have been sent to Boise, the capital, with the rest going to Twin Falls, its commercial hub. Idaho recently has received refugees from Iraq, Somalia and Bhutan, among others.

"Refugees have become a valuable workforce," said Bob Naerebout, executive director of the Idaho Dairyman's Association, a lobbying group.

Still, Idaho Gov. Butch Otter is among about two dozen governors, primarily Republicans, who have called for at least a temporary halt to the refugee program over fears that it could allow terrorists to sneak into America.

"I have never seen this much attention in Idaho to refugee resettlement from elected officials or the general public," said Patrice Haller, assistant director of the Idaho Office of Refugees, which coordinates resettlement in the state.

President Barack Obama has agreed to take 85,000 people fleeing their homelands, including 10,000 Syrians, in the fiscal year that ends Sept. 30. Alabama and Texas have sued the federal government to stop refugee settlement in the wake of the terror attacks.

Proponents say refugees are the most thoroughly vetted of any travelers, undergoing background checks, multiple interviews, iris scans and other screening. Critics say Washington lacks control over the process, which involves the United Nations and U.S. subcontractors, as well as U.S. intelligence agencies.

Idaho's unemployment rate of 3.9% is well below the national rate, and its year-on-year job growth of 4.4% in December was the fastest of any state. But Idaho says over the next decade it will see a widening gap between job growth and the growth of its working-age population. It has a shortage of workers in high-tech, manufacturing and other sectors, and among transplants to the state are many retirees.

Many refugees have university degrees and often fill higher-tech jobs. While working at a Wal-Mart for six months, Mudhafar Poules, an Iraqi computer programmer, prepared a resume and brushed up on his English. Last July, he landed an IT position at Boise State University.

In Twin Falls, they have been a diverse and committed part of Chobani's workforce, a spokesman said. Snack maker Clif Bar & Co. has begun hiring workers, including immigrants, for a baking facility set to start operating this spring, according to a spokeswoman.

Republican state Rep. Stephen Hartgen praised refugees' work ethic, saying they have started businesses, toiled in dairies, and joined the school board and police force in his district. But now, he said, "The security concern is real; people are conflicted."

The state remains divided. In January, about 150 people lined a hall at the Idaho Capitol to show support for refugees, while about as many gathered in a Capitol auditorium to hear two guest speakers who criticized the U.S. refugee program and highlighted the jihadist threat.

College student Elia Sherman, standing at the Capitol event, said refugees bring diversity. "We want an inclusive community," she said.

Inside the auditorium, Frank Marcos, a retired baseball-league scout, said, "I'm concerned about individuals wanting to do us harm."

Meanwhile, refugees continue filling jobs in Idaho, including Rasha Al-Zaidi, a 33-year-old Iraqi mother of two girls whose family arrived in Boise 18 months ago.

Ms. Al-Zaidi, who was a hospital pharmacist in Baghdad, got counseling from a program that helps refugees transfer skills to the U.S. workplace. After interning at Ladd Family Pharmacy last year, Ms. Al-Zaidi was hired full-time as a pharmacy technician, earning $14 an hour.

Said pharmacy owner Elaine Ladd: "There is a shortage of people with the skills I need; Rasha deserved an opportunity."

Credit: By Miriam Jordan

DETAILS

Subject:	Refugees; Workforce; Terrorism; Pharmacy
Business indexing term:	Subject: Workforce
Location:	Idaho; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828668
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-tensions-rise-over-refugees-idaho-some/docview/1764828668/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 84 of 100

Consumers Power Past Headwinds --- Stock, oil markets rally as strong retail sales offer hope U.S. can avoid global slowdown

Torry, Harriet; Cherney, Mike; Zeng, Min . Torry, Harriet; Cherney, Mike; Zeng, Min.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Bank stocks, hit hard this year by declining global-growth expectations and fears that the negative-interest-rate policy adopted Jan. 29 in Japan points to a future of constrained profits, surged Friday.

FULL TEXT

U.S. consumers showed signs of strength in January, taking advantage of low oil prices to increase their spending and offering a welcome counterpoint to the gloom that has gripped investors and roiled markets since the start of the year.

Sales at retail stores and restaurants rose 0.2% in January from the prior month, the Commerce Department said

Friday. And December's retail sales were revised to a 0.2% gain instead of a drop, showing a better end to the year than initially estimated.

The increase offers hope that the U.S. economy, which rests heavily on consumer outlays, can buck a slowdown in the global economy and power through a downturn in manufacturing. Investors cheered, sending the Dow Jones Industrial Average up 313.66 points, or 2%, to 15973.84 in the largest gain this month; it remains down 8.3% for the year.

The retail-sales gains bolster a case that many analysts and economists have been making in recent weeks: While many financial-market gauges are raising concern about the health of the economy, direct measures of economic health such as home sales, employment and wages have been sending largely upbeat signals, suggesting that a U.S. expansion wrapping up its seventh year may not be as vulnerable as some fear.

Markets are forecasting a U.S. recession, "but I don't see that," said David Coard, head of fixed-income trading in New York at Williams Capital Group, a brokerage for institutional investors. "U.S. labor markets are still in good shape and we just started to see some wage pressure."

The retail news helped fuel a broad rally in financial markets Friday. U.S. crude oil rose 12.3% to $29.44 a barrel, its biggest one-day percentage gain since 2009. Prices are still down more than 20% this year.

Bank stocks, hit hard this year by declining global-growth expectations and fears that the negative-interest-rate policy adopted Jan. 29 in Japan points to a future of constrained profits, surged Friday. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. rose 8.3%, Bank of America Corp. rallied 7.1% and Morgan Stanley added 6.5%. The KBW Nasdaq Bank Index of large U.S. commercial lenders rose 5.4% Friday but is down 19% for 2016.

For now, investors have been struggling to divine the relationship between falling oil prices and the broader market. Once thought an unalloyed good for the U.S. economy, the roughly 70% plunge in crude prices since 2014 has instead roiled markets by upending a major source of U.S. investment spending and employment.

As well, consumers and businesses appear to be displaying considerable caution with energy savings, moving carefully on outlays and saving wherever possible.

Indeed, the improvement in retail sales, while solid, remains far from spectacular after a plunge in gasoline prices that many economists expected would result in a surge in consumer spending.

Investors since have been scrounging for signs that low pump prices are spurring U.S. consumers to spend more at restaurants, retailers and elsewhere. Vasant Prabhu, the chief financial officer at payments firm Visa Inc., said Tuesday that evidence of increased spending has been "spotty," but he still gave some cause for optimism.

"Consumers are now beginning to believe that these gas prices could stay low for longer, which would suggest that they may feel better about spending some of those savings," he said at the Goldman Sachs Technology and Internet Conference.

Spending by consumers drives two-thirds of U.S. economic output, and household outlays have helped the economy grow in recent quarters despite a strong dollar and weak overseas growth, which have burdened U.S. exporters.

Consumers continued to spend less at gas stations thanks to lower fuel prices. But a core measure of retail sales excluding autos and gasoline posted a 0.4% increase. Americans stepped up spending across several major categories, including vehicles, groceries and building materials. Compared with a year earlier, sales grew 3.4%.

With December's revision to retail sales, January marked the fourth consecutive month of gains and showed how American households remain relatively strong. "Despite the ongoing turmoil in global financial markets, consumer spending still managed to get off to a firm start" to the first quarter, said Richard Moody, chief economist at Regions Financial Corp.

The impact of a major snowstorm in the Northeast in January was less than feared, economists said. Wages rose and unemployment fell in the first month of the year, the Labor Department said last week, providing a strong foundation for spending growth.

While consumers appeared undeterred by the volatility in January, a sentiment reading out Friday indicated shoppers may be growing more nervous this month. The University of Michigan's preliminary February sentiment index dropped to 90.7 from 92.0 in January, which the surveyors attributed to a less favorable outlook for the economy this year.

That could point to caution in the months ahead, economists warned. Given financial-market uncertainty, growth in consumer outlays will remain contingent on the job market remaining strong and wages growing further.

Companies have also warned about the impact of market jitters on shoppers recently. A number of companies that reported quarterly earnings this past week referred to the turbulent macroeconomic backdrop, but they said it has yet to have a pronounced impact on their bottom line.

At Interpublic Group of Cos., Chief Executive Michael Roth said advertisers haven't yet made significant changes to their ad spending despite the precarious environment.

"The uncertainty we're all experiencing leads us to approach the new year with a degree of caution," Mr. Roth said on the company's earnings call Friday.

Expedia Inc. Chief Executive Dara Khosrowshahi said during an earnings call this past week that some corporate clients are trying to save money by downgrading "from premium class to economy class or taking a train instead of taking a plane."

Nonetheless, Friday's reading on retail sales suggests consumers headed into 2016 on a relatively strong footing, welcome news for a Federal Reserve looking for evidence the U.S. economy is holding steady amid global uncertainty.

In a speech Friday, Federal Reserve Bank of New York President William Dudley described households as "in good shape." He said households look "much better positioned today than in 2008 to absorb shocks and continue to contribute to the economic expansion."

Credit: By Harriet Torry, Mike Cherney and Min Zeng

DETAILS

Subject:	Retail sales; Economic conditions -- United States--US; Gasoline prices; Commercial credit; Consumers; Institutional investments; American dollar; Securities markets; Consumer spending; Central banks; International finance; Economists; Households; Crude oil prices
Business indexing term:	Subject: Gasoline prices Commercial credit Consumers Institutional investments American dollar Securities markets Consumer spending Central banks International finance Economists Crude oil prices; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	1110: Economic conditions & forecasts; 9190: United States; 52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828656
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/consumers-power-past-headwinds-stock-oil-markets/docview/1764828656/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

LINKS

Document 85 of 100

Business News: Visa Details Square Stake --- Mobile-payment startup's shares get boost from disclosure by credit-card firm

Demos, Telis; Dulaney, Chelsey . Demos, Telis; Dulaney, Chelsey.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Should Visa convert its Class B shares of Square into Class A stock, the company would become Square's second-largest holder of Class A shares behind mutual-fund giant Capital Research and Management Co., which has a 12% stake in Square, according to FactSet data.

FULL TEXT

Square Inc. shares rallied Friday after Visa Inc. revealed the size of its investment in the mobile-payments startup subsequent to Square's initial public offering.

Square, founded and run by Twitter Inc. Chief Executive Jack Dorsey, had announced Visa's investment without disclosing its size in April 2011, when the company was still private.

In a regulatory filing Thursday, Visa said it owns about 4.19 million of Square's Class B shares, which don't trade publicly. But the credit-card company has the option to convert those shares to as much as 3.52 million Class A shares, currently equal to a 9.99% stake in the publicly traded share class.

Visa hasn't bought or sold Square shares since its original investment, a Visa spokeswoman said in an email.

The disclosure of Visa's stake, coming ahead of a regulatory filing deadline, was a balm for a struggling stock.

Shares of San Francisco-based Square have been volatile since an early surge after its IPO in November, as the market tries to figure out how to value a business that blends elements of a financial-services firm and a technology firm. Other so-called fintech companies, such as LendingClub Corp., have been whipsawed in trading since their IPOs.

Visa, which is based in Foster City, Calif., hasn't historically acquired companies like Square, which can act as agents to bring merchants onto the networks of Visa, MasterCard Inc., and other card networks. Still, in a note on Friday, BTIG stock analysts said the Visa disclosure this week "served as a vote of confidence" in Square's business and "a reminder of [Square's] attractiveness as an acquisition target" as big technology firms build out their electronic-payments capabilities.

Square got its start with a small piece of plastic that plugs into smartphones and lets anyone accept payment via credit or debit cards. Visa first invested in Square in 2011 because it saw the company as a way to help covert small businesses that only accepted cash to accepting credit cards through Square's devices, the companies said at the time.

Visa, meanwhile, has focused more on digital efforts lately as consumers increasingly migrate to electronic payments. The company has launched Visa Digital Solutions, an initiative geared toward secure payments using mobile devices. It also has supported Apple Inc.'s Apple Pay service.

Investors typically convert Class B shares only when they are selling. Should Visa convert its Class B shares of Square into Class A stock, the company would become Square's second-largest holder of Class A shares behind mutual-fund giant Capital Research and Management Co., which has a 12% stake in Square, according to FactSet data.

Visa's filing was a statement of an existing position, known as a 13G; such quarterly filings must be made by next week. Other early Square investors including venture firm Sequoia Capital and J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. also have recently filed 13Gs.

Despite potentially owning nearly 10% of Square's publicly traded shares, Visa's stake only represents about 1% of Square's overall share base. The exact figures of Visa's stake weren't disclosed at the time of Square's IPO.

Square shares rose 7.9% to $9.30 in Friday trading in New York, representing a return on the company's IPO price of $9 per share. Visa shares climbed 2.9% to $70.42.

Square's IPO pricing was well below where the business was valued privately. In first-day trading the stock jumped 45% to over $13. This year, it has fallen 30% and has traded below its IPO price due in part to concerns about the sustainability of the company's growth and global market turmoil.

Greg Bensinger contributed to this article.

Credit: By Telis Demos and Chelsey Dulaney

DETAILS

Subject:	Investments; Initial public offerings; Startups; Equity stake; Mobile commerce
Business indexing term:	Subject: Initial public offerings Startups Equity stake Mobile commerce; Corporation: Visa Inc Apple Inc
Location:	United States--US
People:	Dorsey, Jack

Company / organization:	Name: Visa Inc; NAICS: 522210; Name: Square Inc; NAICS: 513210, 522320
Classification:	3100: Capital & debt management; 2330: Acquisitions & mergers; 9190: United States
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828647
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-visa-details-square-stake-mobile/docview/1764828647/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 86 of 100

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.S. baby boomers are burdened with unprecedented debt loads as they enter their retirement years. ---

FULL TEXT

The deal announced by global powers to work toward a cease-fire in Syria sparked skepticism and defiance among the warring sides and uncertainty over a range of details.

Military observers and analysts say that Russia's Putin is playing a familiar hand in the Syria conflict.

The eurozone economy continued its slow growth in the final quarter of 2015, but the outlook is dimming amid global turbulence.

Rubio is scrambling to recover in South Carolina the momentum his campaign lost in New Hampshire.

U.S. baby boomers are burdened with unprecedented debt loads as they enter their retirement years.

South Sudan's president appointed a rebel leader as vice president, returning his rival to a top role.

U.S. airlines on Tuesday will begin competing for routes for travel to Cuba.

DETAILS

Subject:	Baby boomers
Location:	Russia; United States--US; Syria; Cuba; South Sudan; New Hampshire; South Carolina; Sudan

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828640
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1764828640/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 87 of 100

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Deutsche Bank plans to buy back $5.4 billion of its debt in a move to bolster investor confidence. ---

FULL TEXT

U.S. consumers showed signs of strength in January, a counterpoint to the gloom that has gripped investors and roiled markets.

Stocks rallied, with the Dow rising 313.66 to 15973.84 to snap a five-session losing streak, but major indexes posted losses for the week.

Oil prices surged to their biggest one-day gain since the financial crisis on speculation about output cuts.

The U.S. and U.K. are preparing a last round of civil charges against several banks for alleged Libor rigging.

Deutsche Bank plans to buy back $5.4 billion of its debt in a move to bolster investor confidence.

Square shares rallied after Visa disclosed the size of its investment in the mobile-payments startup.

Mattel has regained some of its swagger, though it still faces another tough year.

Apple is developing its first television series.

DETAILS

Subject:	International finance; Mobile commerce
Business indexing term:	Subject: International finance Mobile commerce
Location:	United States--US; United Kingdom--UK
Company / organization:	Name: Mattel Inc; NAICS: 336991, 339930; Name: Deutsche Bank AG; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828633
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1764828633/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 88 of 100

City News: Atlantic City's Financial Problems Widen

King, Kate . King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Joe Corbo, vice president and general counsel for the casino, said Borgata has been "tremendously patient" but has a fiduciary duty to its parent companies' shareholders to collect the outstanding tax refunds.

FULL TEXT

Atlantic City slid closer to insolvency this week when its largest casino declined to pay its February property-tax bill, raising the stakes for New Jersey lawmakers who are crafting a bill that would allow a state takeover of the resort city.

The city was previously on track to run out of cash by April 1, but that timeline sped up when a state judge ruled on Feb. 5 that Borgata Hotel Casino & Spa could withhold its $7.2 million tax payment as a way of recouping some of the $150 million owed to it by the city.

Citing the financial turmoil in Atlantic City, which is facing a nearly $80 million budget deficit this year, the judge on Thursday ordered Borgata and state of New Jersey to hold a Feb. 23 settlement discussion to negotiate the outstanding debt.

An attorney representing Atlantic City in its court dispute with Borgata told the judge that the loss of Borgata's tax revenue would cause the city to run out of money by mid- to late February.

Atlantic City's finance director, however, said the city still has some money on hand after receiving checks from its other taxpayers this month.

"I don't want to, at this point, give any dates as to when I might run out of cash," said Michael P. Stinson, the city's finance director.

The loss of Borgata's payment is a major blow to Atlantic City's coffers, reducing its February tax revenue by 17% to $35 million. The city collects taxes quarterly and shares the revenue with its school district and the Atlantic County government, Mr. Stinson said.

Atlantic City owes Borgata an estimated $150 million, plus interest, after the casino successfully appealed its property assessments dating back to 2009. The city's poor credit rating prevents it from raising money in the bond market to pay off the debt.

Joe Corbo, vice president and general counsel for the casino, said Borgata has been "tremendously patient" but has a fiduciary duty to its parent companies' shareholders to collect the outstanding tax refunds.

Meanwhile, lawmakers in Trenton have been scrambling to introduce legislation to gain control of Atlantic City's finances and send the city a much-needed cash infusion.

"I'm optimistic we can get a deal done, but we have to move really fast right now," said Assemblyman Vincent Mazzeo, a Democrat whose district includes Atlantic City.

Mr. Mazzeo said the litigation with Borgata could have been resolved a month ago, when state lawmakers approved several bills that would have sent money to the city and stabilized property taxes for the city's casinos.

"This was supposed to stop the bleeding for Atlantic City," he said. "Now we're back at square one."

Gov. Chris Christie declined to sign the rescue package, instead announcing late last month that the Legislature would pass a new bill to give the state more authority over Atlantic City's finances.

Lawmakers promised to include a cash infusion in the legislation, which they pledged to craft in partnership with Atlantic City officials. Some city officials and residents strongly oppose a takeover and have discussed seeking bankruptcy protection.

State representatives met with Atlantic City officials twice over the past 2 1/2 weeks but have yet to show them a draft of the bill, said City Council President Marty Small.

"It was a good meeting, ideas were exchanged and we're just waiting on the bill," Mr. Small said.

A spokesman for Mr. Christie declined to comment on Friday.

A spokesman for state Senate President Steve Sweeney, a Democrat, said the legislation would be introduced "very soon."

Credit: By Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	Budgeting -- Atlantic City New Jersey; Casinos; Tax revenues; Tax refunds; Municipal finance; Property taxes; Legislation; Legislators
Business indexing term:	Subject: Casinos Tax revenues Tax refunds Municipal finance Property taxes; Industry: 71321 : Casinos (except Casino Hotels) 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	Atlantic City New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Borgata Hotel Casino & Spa-Atlantic City NJ; NAICS: 721120

Classification:	71321: Casinos (except Casino Hotels); 92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828601
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-atlantic-citys-financial-problems-widen/docview/1764828601/se-2?accountid=1468 1
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 89 of 100

Spirit's New Boss Vows to Repair Image

ABSTRACT

Spirit Airlines Inc.'s new chief executive is planning a midcourse correction at the nation's leading ultralow-cost carrier to address rising customer complaints about its punctuality and ward off new competitive threats. Spirit, which offers extremely low base fares and piles on extra charges for everything from seat assignments to drinking water, has grown rapidly and helped reshape the U.S. airline industry.

FULL TEXT

Spirit Airlines Inc.'s new chief executive is planning a midcourse correction at the nation's leading ultralow-cost carrier to address rising customer complaints about its punctuality and ward off new competitive threats.

In his first interview as CEO, Bob Fornaro, a 35-year airline veteran, said he plans to slow the Miramar, Fla.-based airline's supercharged growth to make its operations more reliable -- and in the process, he hopes, mend its customer relationships.

Spirit, which offers extremely low base fares and piles on extra charges for everything from seat assignments to drinking water, has grown rapidly and helped reshape the U.S. airline industry. But it also has received pointed criticism from customers about its fees and poor on-time record. "Maybe we created a persona that dismissed the customer," he said.

The 63-year-old in many ways is a departure from his predecessor, Ben Baldanza, who was Spirit's CEO from 2006 until stepping down on Jan. 5 with little public explanation. Mr. Baldanza, age 54, was the zany public face of Spirit, known for humorous videos and mocking customers who complained about fees. He once climbed into an overhead bin for a website video to explain to customers its policy for charging for overhead-bin space.

The new CEO doesn't expect to get caught up in such hijinks. "I thought it was great that Ben went into the bin," he said. "I don't need to climb in the bin. It doesn't necessarily matter what the CEO does. We want to sell tickets."

As for those complaints about fees, Mr. Fornaro said the company would be more transparent about its pricing in the future. "We can save passengers money and there are a lot of positive attributes that go along with that," he said. "We have new planes. Our airplanes sparkle."

Both men said this week that Mr. Baldanza's departure occurred because the board decided it was time for a leadership change. Mr. Baldanza said he had moved his family to the Washington, D.C., area last year so his fourth-grade son could attend school there, and had been commuting to Spirit's headquarters.

"The commute wasn't working and I couldn't do what I needed to do," he said in an interview. "There was frustration on the board that the company wasn't moving faster" on improving its reputation and operational metrics, he said, calling the parting "amicable."

Mr. Fornaro, a Spirit director since 2014, said the board felt Spirit needed "a different level of commitment, a different personality and attention to detail that perhaps we weren't getting. We had a mission in mind, to prepare the company for the next decade."

Spirit's earnings have more than quadrupled since its 2011 initial public offering, to $317 million last year, while revenue has doubled to $2.14 billion. It has spawned at least one U.S. imitator, Indigo Partners LLC's Frontier Airlines, and pressured big legacy carriers to cut their fares on some routes and to adopt more fees.

But Spirit has hit a rough patch. Aggressive price-matching by big rivals last year dented its unit revenue -- a much-watched measure of how much it takes in for each passenger flown a mile.

The 30% annual growth rate of Spirit's capacity strained its ability to get its planes to their destinations on time, or at all, leading to abysmal punctuality. Spirit ranked third in flier complaints to the Transportation Department in November, despite being only the seventh-largest U.S. carrier by traffic.

Robert Boyer, a retired executive for a Caterpillar Inc. dealer, said his wife is now afraid to fly Spirit after their experience this month. He took her to the airport in Fort Myers, Fla., for a Spirit flight back to Latrobe, Pa., near their home, that was repeatedly delayed but which Spirit staffers at the airport assured him wouldn't be canceled, he said. They checked his wife's bag, for a fee, and he left the airport at 11 p.m., thinking she would board within the hour. Around 1 a.m., Spirit said the flight was canceled, forcing him to make the 140-mile round-trip back to the airport to fetch his wife.

"I understand that flights can be canceled," Mr. Boyer said in an interview. "But these people just jerked us and the other passengers around the corner."

"Our goal is to hear fewer of those stories," Mr. Fornaro said of Mr. Boyer's experience. "Those [complaints] are the ones that really matter. The customer is relying on us."

Spirit's stock, trading at $82 a share about a year ago, sagged to $33 a share last November. It jumped to $41.50 on news of the management change and traded up 4.2% on Friday to $44.43.

Spirit "is a company that has exceptional profit margins, with a couple of things that need to improve," said Mr. Fornaro, who ran discount carrier AirTran Airways for more than a decade until it was acquired by Southwest Airlines Co. in 2011.

To improve operations, he intends to reduce the number of daily hours Spirit's planes fly in peak periods, make more spare aircraft available, increase staffing levels and ensure that its operational planning is in sync with the fleet plan instead of coming afterward. From 79 planes now, Spirit's fleet is on track to increase to 145 in five years.

He also wants to dial down Spirit's growth. "We don't want to be growing 30%" a year, he said. "It's too high." He said between 15% and 20% annual growth -- where he expects they'll be at the end of the year -- is more appropriate.

Other discounters have had to hit the brakes. JetBlue Airways Corp. slowed its expansion in 2007 after it sank into losses.

Virgin America Inc. did the same in 2013 and turned its first annual profit that year after six years of red ink.

Mr. Fornaro also wants to expand to smaller routes that aren't as competitive. While Spirit has in recent years added many flights between big cities that have performed well, "there is a broader number of routes to be considered," Mr. Fornaro said. "Many are already on the consideration list." But he isn't saying where or when. "I want to be less predictable and more nimble."

Credit: By Susan Carey

DETAILS

Subject:	Stock prices; Airline industry; Air travel; Competition; Air fares; Airports; Airlines
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock prices Airline industry Air fares Airports Airlines; Industry: 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation 48811 : Airport Operations
Location:	United States--US
People:	Fornaro, Robert L
Company / organization:	Name: Spirit Airlines LLC; NAICS: 481111
Classification:	8350: Transportation & travel industry; 9190: United States; 48111: Scheduled Air Transportation; 48811: Airport Operations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828579

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/spirits-new-boss-vows-repair-image/docview/1764828579/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-07-28

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 90 of 100

World News: U.S. Airlines To Compete On Cuba Routes

Schwartz, Felicia . Schwartz, Felicia.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Senior U.S. officials said they expect to make a decision about which carriers get which routes this summer, and U.S. airline carriers will be able to sell tickets for them this fall.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- U.S. air carriers will begin competing for routes and airport slots for travel to Cuba on Tuesday when an agreement takes effect to restore normal commercial air service.

The U.S. and Cuba are expected to formally sign an agreement in Havana to resume air service. Air carriers will have 15 days to submit applications to the Transportation Department for routes they want.

Senior U.S. officials said they expect to make a decision about which carriers get which routes this summer, and U.S. airline carriers will be able to sell tickets for them this fall.

The deal reached in December allows for up to 110 flights a day to Cuba, including 20 to Havana and 10 to each of Cuba's nine other international airports.

U.S. officials expect there will be more demand than supply for the Havana flights, so that will generate intense competition for those routes.

"We don't expect the market to necessarily demand 10 per day to each of the other non-Havana destinations," said Thomas Engle, deputy assistant secretary of state for transportation affairs.

Currently, there are about 10 to 15 daily charter flights to Cuba from the U.S., primarily from Miami to Havana and other airports.

Credit: By Felicia Schwartz

DETAILS

Subject:	Air rights; Airline industry; Alliances; Airports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Airline industry Airports; Industry: 48811 : Airport Operations 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation
Location:	Cuba
Classification:	48811: Airport Operations; 48111: Scheduled Air Transportation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	176482857 4
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-airlines-compete-on-cuba-routes/docview/1764828574/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 91 of 100

NYPD Terminates Liang's Ex-Partner --- Guilty verdict brings back-to-back firings; defense attorneys vow to keep fighting

Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Shallwani, Pervaiz . Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to NYPD policy, the department doesn't have to articulate a reason for firing an officer on probation.

FULL TEXT

The ex-partner of former New York Police Department Officer Peter Liang, who was convicted of manslaughter in the shooting death of an unarmed man, was fired Friday, police said.

Officer Shaun Landau learned of his dismissal by Commissioner William Bratton at 3 p.m. Friday, less than 24 hours after a jury in state Supreme Court in Brooklyn found Mr. Liang guilty of manslaughter and official misconduct in the November 2014 fatal shooting of 28-year-old Akai Gurley inside a public-housing complex.

Mr. Liang, who testified at his trial that the shooting was an accident, was immediately fired upon his conviction Thursday night. His attorneys vowed Friday to fight the verdict.

Michael Cibella, a lawyer representing Mr. Landau, said his client was disappointed to lose his job. Mr. Landau respects the verdict, Mr. Cibella said, but also was disappointed that his former partner was convicted of a crime for what he deemed to be "a tragic accident."

Like his former partner, Mr. Landau was a rookie at the time of the shooting and was on probation, which meant he had fewer protections against being fired, a law-enforcement official said. According to NYPD policy, the department doesn't have to articulate a reason for firing an officer on probation.

The back-to-back firings came as New Yorkers across the boroughs -- from Chinatown in Manhattan, where Mr. Liang grew up, to the Louis H. Pink Houses in Brooklyn, where a bullet from Mr. Liang's gun pierced Mr. Gurley's heart -- voiced an array of opinions about Thursday's guilty verdict.

The rare conviction of a police officer for an on-duty shooting also stunned many in the law-enforcement community, with some saying the verdict would lead to police being less assertive while on patrol in high-crime areas.

Mr. Landau, who was conducting a so-called vertical patrol with Mr. Liang at the time of the shooting, was given immunity to testify as a prosecution witness at Mr. Liang's trial. Mr. Landau told the jury he didn't call in the shot or administer first aid to Mr. Gurley.

Mr. Bratton had no plans to address the verdict, one official said. The NYPD also declined to respond to police union officials who said the verdict would have a chilling effect on police officers across the city, the official said.

One such forecast came from Ed Mullins, president of the Sergeants Benevolent Association, who wrote in a letter to members that Brooklyn prosecutors had "compounded the tragic death of Akai Gurley" by bringing the case against Mr. Liang, who had risked his safety by "patrolling one of the most violent housing projects" in the city.

"The unequivocal message sent to the rank and file of the NYPD is to now 'Stand down and let those unfortunate residents who have to live in that awful violent place fend for themselves,'" Mr. Mullins wrote. "'Do as little as possible,' because this crumbling city does not have your back."

Mr. Mullins called for Mr. Bratton to suspend so-called vertical patrols of public-housing projects.

Mayor Bill de Blasio, a Democrat, said Friday he didn't think the verdict would have a chilling effect on officers.

"Vertical patrols are necessary as part of keeping our public-housing residents safe, but we have to work constantly to do them the right way," Mr. de Blasio said.

Robert E. Brown, a lawyer for Mr. Liang, echoed Mr. Mullins's concerns at a news conference at the Lin Sing Association, a civic group in Chinatown.

"In essence what this jury found was that it was criminally reckless for a police officer to take his gun out during a vertical patrol," Mr. Brown said, calling the verdict "legally and factually wrong."

Mr. Brown said he would ask Supreme Court Justice Danny Chun to set aside the verdict. If that fails, he said, he plans to appeal.

The defense also plans to seek a probationary sentence for Mr. Liang, who faces up to 15 years in prison.

Mr. Brown provided form letters to several dozen people gathered at the association. The letters, addressed to Justice Chun, ask him to "set aside the illogical verdict" or to sentence Mr. Liang to probation.

Several people asked Mr. Brown if he felt the charges against Mr. Liang, an Asian-American officer, were racially motivated. Mr. Brown said he didn't know why Brooklyn District Attorney Kenneth Thompson brought the case.

"Rarely does a police officer get charged in a shooting like this, and I've never heard of a police officer being charged with a ricochet shot," he said, referring to how the bullet bounced off a wall and hit Mr. Gurley.

Eugene O'Donnell, a professor at John Jay College of Criminal Justice and a former NYPD officer, said Mr. Liang's case was unlike most other police-involved shootings. "This is a case whether or not he was super careless," Mr. O'Donnell said.

Mr. O'Donnell said it was a "big mistake" to let Mr. Liang testify, saying: "He looked for sympathy but also denied his responsibility, and that's not going to wash." On Friday, Mr. Brown defended the decision to have Mr. Liang testify.

Some residents at the Pink Houses in East New York, where Mr. Gurley was killed, expressed sympathy for Mr. Liang and hoped that the shooting and the trial would lead to better policing.

Kenneth Waluyn, 60, said he wants to see improved relations between the officers and the community.

"The young people really need to get together and have a camaraderie where they can talk to the police and let them know what's going on," Mr. Waluyn said. "This way they can eliminate a lot of the nonsense."

Zolan Kanno-Youngs and Mara Gay contributed to this article.

Credit: By Rebecca Davis O'Brien and Pervaiz Shallwani

DETAILS

Subject:	Manslaughter; Police -- New York City New York; Terminations; Fatalities; Trials; Housing; Official misconduct; Convictions; Shootings; Police; Parole & probation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Terminations; Industry: 92215 : Parole Offices and Probation Offices 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Gurley, Akai; Liang, Peter; Landau, Shaun
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92215: Parole Offices and Probation Offices; 92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.13
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828573
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/nypd-terminates-liangs-ex-partner-guilty-verdict/docview/1764828573/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 92 of 100

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous. Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Joe Palazzolo --- CALIFORNIA Obama Gives Desert Monument Status President Barack Obama granted national-monument status to nearly 1.8 million acres of Southern California desert, a move the White House says will maintain the region's fragile ecosystem and natural resource and provide recreational opportunities for hikers, campers, hunters and others.

FULL TEXT

TEXAS

Panel Advises Halting

Bite-Mark Evidence

A Texas commission recommended on Friday that the state suspend the use of bite-mark evidence in criminal cases pending additional research, becoming the first agency in the nation to discredit a forensic technique that has come under scrutiny in recent years.

The Texas Forensic Science Commission, made up of scientists, practitioners and law-enforcement authorities, voted in favor of a ban that would remain in effect until further research could be conducted. The commission will undertake a review of all cases in Texas involving bite-mark evidence.

The commission can only make recommendations, but its findings are likely to influence judges considering the admissibility of bite-mark evidence throughout the country, legal experts said. Research over the past decade has questioned basic assumptions at the center of bite-mark analysis: that teeth, like fingerprints, are unique to a person, and that bite marks can be reliably recorded on skin.

-- Joe Palazzolo

CALIFORNIA

Obama Gives Desert

Monument Status

President Barack Obama granted national-monument status to nearly 1.8 million acres of Southern California desert, a move the White House says will maintain the region's fragile ecosystem and natural resource and provide recreational opportunities for hikers, campers, hunters and others.

The president signed proclamations establishing three regions as national monuments: Mojave Trails, Castle Mountains (both in the Mojave Desert) and Sand to Snow in the Sonoran Desert. The White House says the designations will nearly double the amount of public land that Mr. Obama has designated as national-monument status since taking office.

The designations will also connect those regions to other protected government land, including Joshua Tree National Park, the Mojave National Preserve and 15 other federal wilderness areas. Mojave Trails National Monument, at 1.6 million acres, is by far the largest of the three new ones.

-- Associated Press

WEST VIRGINIA

Lawmakers Override

Right-to-Work Veto

West Virginia is set to become the 26th state with a so-called right-to-work law.

In House and Senate votes Friday, lawmakers rebuked a veto Thursday by Democratic Gov. Earl Ray Tomblin. The move will solidify a law that proponents say will draw in business and give workers more freedom over their ties to unions, but which opponents say is solely meant to undercut unions. The law becomes effective July 1.

Right-to-work laws prohibit companies from requiring workers to pay union dues as a condition of employment. Unions are still required to represent every worker. Employees can currently be forced to pay fees but can't be forced to join the union under federal law.

Democrats said right-to-work would let people enjoy union benefits without paying for them, and they expressed concerns that unions would be crippled without any economic benefit.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	National parks; Bills; Wilderness areas
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71219 : Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions
Location:	Texas; Southern California; United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	71219: Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828570
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1764828570/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 93 of 100

U.S. News: Baby Boomers Pile On The Debt

Zumbrun, Josh . Zumbrun, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Older Americans are burdened with unprecedented debt loads as more and more baby boomers enter what are meant to be their retirement years owing far more on their houses, cars and even college loans than previous generations.

FULL TEXT

Older Americans are burdened with unprecedented debt loads as more and more baby boomers enter what are meant to be their retirement years owing far more on their houses, cars and even college loans than previous generations.

The average 65-year-old borrower has 47% more mortgage debt and 29% more auto debt than 65-year-olds had in 2003, after adjusting for inflation, according to data from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York released Friday.

Just over a decade ago, student debt was unheard-of among 65-year-olds. Today it is a growing debt category, though it remains smaller for them than autos, credit cards and mortgages. On top of that, there are far more people in this age group than a decade ago.

The result: The composition of U.S. household debt is vastly different than it was before the financial crisis, when many younger households took on large debts they could no longer afford when the bottom fell out of the economy.

The shift represents a "reallocation of debt from young [people], with historically weak repayment, to retirement-aged consumers, with historically strong repayment," according to New York Fed economist Meta Brown in a presentation of the findings.

Older borrowers historically have been less likely to default on loans and typically have been successful at shrinking their debt balances. But greater borrowing among this age group could become alarming if evidence mounted that large numbers of people were entering retirement with debts they couldn't manage. So far, that doesn't appear to be the case. Most of the households with debt also have higher credit scores and more assets than in the past.

Still, the trend could become more worrisome in the future as an increasing number of people will be retiring without pension plans and with limited assets in their 401(k)s, said Alicia Munnell, the director of the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College.

"I find the increase alarming," Ms. Munnell said, "if your only monthly income is from Social Security, you really want to get monthly expenditures down and have as little debt as possible."

The data were released in conjunction with the New York Fed's quarterly report on household debt, which aggregates millions of credit reports from the credit-rating firm Equifax. The report was launched in 2010 to track the changing debt behaviors of U.S. households after the financial crisis.

For the past two years, household debts have been slowly rising, although they remain well below their 2008 level. That trend continued in the final quarter of 2015, with overall household indebtedness rising by $51 billion to $12.1 trillion. Auto loans, student loans and credit card balances all increased while mortgage balances were little changed.

An important barometer of household financial health is the percentage of this debt that is in some stage of delinquency, and that percentage has been steadily dropping. Only 2.2% of mortgage debt was in delinquency, the lowest since early 2007. Credit-card delinquencies also declined, while auto loan and student loan delinquencies were unchanged.

Part of the yearslong improvement in credit delinquencies owes to the fact that older borrowers hold a growing share of the debt. Not only were borrowers with the best financial situation able to maintain their debt during the financial crisis, but they have also had an easier time taking on new debts in recent years as credit standards have tightened.

By contrast, the overall debt balances of most young borrowers haven't grown or have declined. The average 30-year-old borrower has nearly three times as much student debt as in 2003. But these borrowers have so much less home, credit-card and auto debt that their overall debt balances are lower.

This shift for young borrowers could have "consequences in terms of both foregone economic growth and young consumers' welfare," said Ms. Brown.

Credit: By Josh Zumbrun

DETAILS

Subject:	Households; Baby boomers; Mortgages; Consumer credit; Rating services; Economic crisis; Loans; Delinquency; Student debt; Age groups
Business indexing term:	Subject: Mortgages Consumer credit Rating services Economic crisis Loans Delinquency Student debt; Industry: 56145 : Credit Bureaus
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	1110: Economic conditions & forecasts; 9190: United States; 56145: Credit Bureaus
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828507

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-baby-boomers-pile-on-debt/docview/1764828507/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 94 of 100

City News: City Will Tighten Rules on Safety At Building Sites

Gay, Mara . Gay, Mara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mayor Bill de Blasio said the city will boost penalties for serious safety violations to $10,000 from $2,400, and impose a requirement that building supervisors be present at certain high-risk job sites.

FULL TEXT

New York City plans to quadruple penalties for construction-safety violations, part of a citywide crackdown as accidents increase amid a building boom.

Mayor Bill de Blasio said the city will boost penalties for serious safety violations to $10,000 from $2,400, and impose a requirement that building supervisors be present at certain high-risk job sites.

"We will not tolerate unsafe construction conditions," Mr. de Blasio said. "We don't tolerate anyone putting profit ahead of the lives of their workers and of the people who live in our communities."

The stepped-up enforcement measures come a week after a crane collapsed in lower Manhattan, killing one man and injuring three others. The investigation into that incident is continuing.

The mayor announced the new measures, to be enforced by the city's Department of Buildings, outside a building in the East Village where a construction worker died on Christmas Eve last year.

That investigation is continuing, but city officials said they believe the worker died when a wall collapsed, striking him and causing him to fall four stories in a low-rise building. Workers were adding a fifth floor.

The mayor said the city will conduct an enforcement blitz over the next three months, with Department of Buildings officials conducting inspections at 1,500 high-risk projects across the city. Officials said the inspectors would be looking to make sure workers are using appropriate personal-safety equipment and taking necessary precautions for residents who live in the building and any passersby.

As of last year, total construction in the city had more than quadrupled since 2009, to 88 million square feet from 21 million. The surge is driving the city's economy but is also stretching its enforcement capacity. Accidents have nearly doubled since 2009, to 433 last year from 218.

Safety was also a concern in the city's last building boom. Mayor Michael Bloomberg increased enforcement in 2008 after a crane collapse killed two workers. He directed the Department of Buildings to place inspectors at troubled job sites and imposed stricter rules for contractors.

The latest initiative will focus largely on buildings under 10 stories, which the mayor said accounted for 70% of accidents last year. Construction superintendents will now be required to oversee those sites, not only for new construction or demolition but also for partial demolition and other alterations, the city said.

City officials said contractors who repeatedly fail to comply will face penalties ranging from $5,000 to $25,000, and work-stop orders. The city also plans to hire 100 new enforcement inspectors by the summer.

The new rules take effect in July.

Credit: By Mara Gay

DETAILS

Subject:	Fines & penalties; Building construction; Workers; Mayors; Enforcement; Construction accidents & safety
Business indexing term:	Subject: Workers Construction accidents & safety; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828503
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-will-tighten-rules-on-safety-at/docview/1764828503/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 95 of 100

World News: Beating The Odds To Reach The U.K.

Gross, Jenny . Gross, Jenny.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.K. officials say the government has provided humanitarian aid to help people displaced from places like Syria in their own region, and that it works closely with French authorities to bolster security at ports in northern France.

FULL TEXT

LONDON -- Early one morning in March 2015, 28-year-old Ahmad from Syria broke into the back of a truck parked outside the French entrance to the Channel Tunnel to the U.K. as the driver slept in the front, hiding in the back between refrigerated boxes of fruit and vegetables.

He said he had made more than a dozen attempts to reach Britain, once ending up on the French border with Spain, and once in Belgium. This time, within hours the truck had made its way through the tunnel to Dover, on England's southeast coast, where he and other stowaways alerted the unsuspecting driver.

"We were banging, banging, banging. We were banging for a long time, until he heard us," said Ahmad. He said he was afraid his family back in Syria would face repercussions from the Assad regime if his surname were published.

It marked the culmination of a five-month journey by boat, foot, train and motor vehicle from his home near the southern Syrian city of Daraa, which has been torn apart by war. His story is emblematic of thousands of migrants who have smuggled themselves to the U.K. via the port town of Calais in search of opportunities.

His account couldn't be independently corroborated but Migrant Voice, a charity that supports asylum seekers including Ahmad, and other groups say his story echoes ones they hear regularly.

On Friday, French police said they planned to begin clearing out the sprawling migrant camp in Calais, where about 3,000 people hoping to make it to the U.K. are living in makeshift tents.

Europe is increasingly confronted with refugees fleeing fighting in Syria and Iraq and other migrants, fueling a debate about how to manage its borders. Ahmad's experiences show how difficult that is even for Britain, which unlike most of the European Union has maintained border controls for everyone who enters.

The U.K. government said there were more than 30,000 thwarted attempts from France and Belgium from April to July 2015. Charities estimate that roughly a dozen people a day succeeded, or roughly 1,000 people over that period.

U.K. officials say the government has provided humanitarian aid to help people displaced from places like Syria in their own region, and that it works closely with French authorities to bolster security at ports in northern France.

The Home Office declined to comment on Ahmad's case.

Ahmad, a muscular, former construction worker, said his journey to the U.K. cost him 5,000 euros ($5,600). He said he was beaten by authorities along the way, leaving him traumatized.

When he reached Calais a year ago, "I was broken because of the whole journey, the whole tortuous journey," he said.

On his unsuccessful attempts to cross the channel, he and other stowaways would throw tires out the back to get the attention of the driver when they realized they were going the wrong way. When he ended up on the Spanish border, more than 600 miles away from Calais, he borrowed money from another Syrian for the train fare back.

The government notified Ahmad last month that he could apply for asylum, according to a letter to his solicitor that was seen by The Wall Street Journal.

"Without residency, I can't enroll in a school, or get a job or bring my wife who is still braving raids and bombs," said

Ahmad, who doesn't speak English. "If it weren't for my brother, I would have been on the streets."

Credit: By Jenny Gross

DETAILS

Subject:	Political asylum; Displaced persons; Refugees; Tunnels; Boundaries
Location:	Syria; United Kingdom--UK
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828461
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-beating-odds-reach-u-k/docview/1764828461/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Global Slowdown Weighs On Import, Export Prices

Mitchell, Josh; Torry, Harriet . Mitchell, Josh; Torry, Harriet.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Prices for imported goods fell sharply in January, the latest sign that a slumping global economy and plunging oil prices are weighing on inflation in the U.S. Import prices fell 1.1% in January from December, matching the prior month's decline, the Labor Department said Friday.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Prices for imported goods fell sharply in January, the latest sign that a slumping global economy and plunging oil prices are weighing on inflation in the U.S.

Import prices fell 1.1% in January from December, matching the prior month's decline, the Labor Department said Friday. Prices have fallen for seven consecutive months and were down 6.2% in January from a year earlier.

The index declined in January largely due to a sharp drop in oil prices, which have suffered under weak demand globally and a buildup in supplies. The price of imported petroleum fell 13.4% from December, the biggest drop since August, and 35.3% from a year earlier.

Outside of petroleum, prices for all other imports fell 0.2% over the month and 3.1% over the year.

Prices for imported autos, food and consumer goods all picked up in January from December, while prices for so-called capital goods such as machinery continued to fall.

Friday's report also showed U.S. exports continue to suffer amid the global economic slowdown. Export prices fell 0.8% in January after dropping 1.1% in December. They're down 5.7% over the past year.

Unlike many other price gauges measured by the government, import and export prices aren't seasonally adjusted.

Credit: By Josh Mitchell and Harriet Torry

DETAILS

Subject:	US exports; US imports; Prices; Global economy
Business indexing term:	Subject: US exports US imports Global economy
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	1110: Economic conditions & forecasts; 9190: United States
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828400
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-global-slowdown-weighs-on-import-export/docview/1764828400/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Election 2016: GOP Hopefuls Court Evangelicals

Hook, Janet; Dawsey, Josh . Hook, Janet; Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

GREENVILLE, S.C. -- Republican presidential candidates, carrying their campaigns into the Bible Belt, are moving to cut into the strength that the primary's front-runner, Donald Trump, has shown in polls among South Carolina's large group of evangelical Christians.

FULL TEXT

GREENVILLE, S.C. -- Republican presidential candidates, carrying their campaigns into the Bible Belt, are moving to cut into the strength that the primary's front-runner, Donald Trump, has shown in polls among South Carolina's large group of evangelical Christians.

Four leading candidates came Friday to make their pitches at an iconic location for evangelicals, Bob Jones University, ahead of the state's Feb. 20 Republican primary.

Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush found a receptive audience when he criticized Mr. Trump's propensity for insulting his adversaries and his use of vulgar language. "Anyone worried about a front-running candidate shouting obscenities in front of children?" he asked, to applause, at a "Faith and Family Forum" at the university.

Sen. Marco Rubio of Florida, Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas and retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson also spoke at the event. Mr. Trump didn't attend, his spokeswoman said, because he had previous plans to hold a rally in Florida. He has been doing well among evangelical voters despite his record of changing positions on social issues, such as abortion, that are important to conservatives.

At an appearance Thursday night in Rock Hill, Mr. Cruz poked fun, as he often does, at Mr. Trump's claims to be a man of faith, alluding to a gaffe in which Mr. Trump once attributed a Bible passage to "Two Corinthians" instead of "Second Corinthians."

"Two Corinthians walked into a bar. . . ." Mr. Cruz began. "I'm sorry. That was mean."

Evangelicals are expected to make up more than 65% of the GOP-primary electorate in South Carolina, far more than the 25% in Tuesday's New Hampshire primary, which Mr. Trump won. Mr. Trump led the Republican field among likely voters in South Carolina's GOP primary, a late-January Wall Street Journal/NBC News/Marist poll showed. Among those who are evangelical Christians, Mr. Trump had 33% of the vote, compared with 25% for his closest rival, Mr. Cruz.

In South Carolina, evangelicals are particularly influential in the region around Greenville known as the upstate. Scott Huffmon, a pollster at Winthrop University, said candidates could have a hard time getting these voters to unite behind just one of them, in part because they tend to choose based on issues other than faith.

"Unlike Iowa, they tend not to coalesce," said Mr. Huffmon. "They behave more like voters than churchgoers. They supported the thrice-divorced Newt Gingrich," he said, referring to the former House speaker who won the 2012 South Carolina primary. Mr. Cruz won Iowa's caucuses this month, boosted in large part by the state's evangelical Christians.

State Rep. Dan Hamilton, a Bob Jones graduate, said he believed the evangelical movement would be less monolithic in 2016 because of the rise of nondenominational churches, which tend to be less politically involved than denominations such as the Southern Baptist Convention. "Evangelicals are up for grabs, and they're not voting as a bloc this year," said Mr. Hamilton, who is supporting Mr. Rubio.

Some evangelicals have been resistant to Mr. Trump because of his use of vulgar language, his multiple divorces and his history of liberal positions on abortion and other issues in the past.

"Trump is so arrogant, and he's really not the kind of guy you want as president," said Fred Beiers, an evangelical who lives outside Greenville and prefers Mr. Bush.

Mark Burns, a South Carolina pastor supporting Mr. Trump, spoke at the forum to testify to his conservative credentials. He also acknowledged some of Mr. Trump's critics. "Donald Trump is profane," he said. "But, guess what: I don't trust a man that doesn't have mistakes. We have all said things we shouldn't have said."

Rev. Oran Smith, one of the forum's organizers, said Mr. Trump seemed to be drawing his support in South Carolina from people who are in economic distress. "You see the more blue-collar evangelicals going to Trump, the ones who maybe work shift jobs and aren't as plugged into the evangelical movement," Mr. Smith said.

He said the Cruz campaign had been the most effective in organizing pastors upstate. Mr. Cruz has been benefiting from the declining fortunes of Mr. Carson, who briefly led in Iowa largely on the strength of a big evangelical following.

"I was very impressed with Carson. But when I heard Cruz speak here, I was Cruz all the way," said Julie Black, a Greenville resident.

Hub Blankenship, a prominent pastor in South Carolina who leads a megachurch called Milestones, said Mr. Rubio also has developed a following among evangelicals. "I'm expecting Rubio to do very well in South Carolina," he said. "He and Cruz are the ones who could beat Trump here."

Valerie Bauerlein contributed to this article.

Credit: By Janet Hook and Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Bible; Christians; Presidential elections; Polls & surveys; Political campaigns; Abortion; Candidates; Evangelicalism; Elections
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	South Carolina; United States--US
People:	Cruz, Ted; Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828396
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-gop-hopefuls-court-evangelicals/docview/1764828396/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

City News: Station Embodies Resolve

Tangel, Andrew; Morris, Keiko . Tangel, Andrew; Morris, Keiko.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The World Trade Center station will become lower Manhattan's answer to Grand Central Terminal, in a city where many still mourn the 1963 demolition of the original New York Penn Station.

FULL TEXT

Commuters dashing through a new World Trade Center train station will soon be treated to a grand view if they look skyward.

Long delayed and about $2 billion over budget, the centerpiece of a transit hub linking the PATH and New York City subways is set to open early next month, nearly 15 years after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

The "Oculus" of arched steel ribs and glass was designed by the Spanish architect Santiago Calatrava to resemble a bird flying out of child's hand, a symbol of hope for a scarred city.

"We tried to do something that inspires optimism," Mr. Calatrava said Friday on a tour of the station, describing it as a civic monument that captures New Yorkers' tenacity to rebuild.

The World Trade Center station will become lower Manhattan's answer to Grand Central Terminal, in a city where many still mourn the 1963 demolition of the original New York Penn Station.

The price: $3.9 billion, double its original estimate, also making the new station a poster child of runaway construction costs.

In recent years, friction between Mr. Calatrava and officials at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which owns the site, has spilled out into open. During a discussion last year over who might design a new bus terminal in midtown Manhattan, John Degnan, the agency's chairman, quipped: "Maybe not a Spanish architect."

On Friday, Steven Plate, the Port Authority's chief of major capital projects, brushed aside questions over previous disagreements.

Mr. Plate hugged Mr. Calatrava and heralded the hub as symbol of resilience.

"We haven't just built a project," Mr. Plate said. "We've fixed a wound that was deep in the heart of New York."

On Friday, workers were removing plywood and foam covers of the hub's floors of white marble from northern Italy. In coming months, stores and restaurants are expected to open.

A connection to nearby Fulton Center, where riders can hop on several subway lines, is expected to open this summer.

The public will experience what nearly $4 billion can buy at a yet-to-be announced date the first week of March.

Civic leaders predict any sticker shock will soon fade.

"You are building with bricks and marble, but ultimately you are building something far greater and the investment in the human spirit and potential is priceless," Gina Pollara, president of the Municipal Art Society of New York. "We have to take the long view."

Added Thomas Wright, president of the Regional Plan Association: "Was the George Washington Bridge delivered on budget or over budget? The answer is nobody cares."

Credit: By Andrew Tangel and Keiko Morris

DETAILS

Subject:	Transportation terminals; Public art
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: World Trade Center-New York City NY; NAICS: 813910
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1764828353

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-station-embodies-resolve/docview/1764828353/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 99 of 100

REVIEW --- Play: News Quiz

Akst, Daniel . Akst, Daniel.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Where did Sen. Marco Rubio finish in the New Hampshire GOP primary? A. Third B. Fourth C. Fifth D. Vermont --- 3. Since 2014, who has accounted for the majority of global oil consumption? A. Cadillac Escalade drivers B. Emerging-market nations C. North America D. China --- 4.

FULL TEXT

1. Former Thai prime minister Yingluck Shinawatra is speaking out -- against charges that she did what?

A. Illegally subsidized rice farmers

B. Undermined the dignity of the king

C. Siphoned government funds into California real estate

D. Plotted to overthrow military rule

2. Where did Sen. Marco Rubio finish in the New Hampshire GOP primary?

- A. Third
- B. Fourth
- C. Fifth
- D. Vermont

3. Since 2014, who has accounted for the majority of global oil consumption?

- A. Cadillac Escalade drivers
- B. Emerging-market nations
- C. North America
- D. China

4. Coca-Cola wants to trademark the word "zero," as in Coke Zero. Who's battling the application?

- A. Zero Motel
- B. Sub-Zero
- C. Mitsubishi (which made Zero fighter planes)
- D. Dr Pepper Snapple Group

5. Which famous store is returning to its original Manhattan location?

- A. Wal-Mart
- B. Barneys
- C. Arnold Constable

D. Crazy Eddie

6. Stanford researchers have come up with a new way to prevent jet lag. What is it?

A. Staying home

B. Gluten supplements

C. Brief flashes of light during the night

D. Midday naps for three straight days before flying

7. Burger King plans a new menu item. Name it.

A. Hot dogs

B. Fried fish sandwiches

C. Empanadas

D. Proton-pump inhibitors

8. Billionaire Stan Kroenke is buying an 800-square-mile ranch. Which one?

A. Wyoming

B. Hidden Valley

C. The Waggoner property

D. Lonesome Dove

9. What radical step are Gulf countries taking to cope with low oil prices?

A. Promoting camel transport

B. Levying taxes

C. Radically reducing oil output

D. Trading with Israel

ANSWERS

1. A

2. C

3. B

4. D

5. B

6. C

7. A

8. C

9. B

Credit: By Daniel Akst

DETAILS

Subject:	Oil consumption; Petroleum industry
----------	-------------------------------------

Business indexing term:	Subject: Petroleum industry
-------------------------	-----------------------------

Location:	California; United States--US
-----------	-------------------------------

People:	Rubio, Marco; Yingluck Shinawatra
---------	-----------------------------------

Product name:	Cadillac Escalade
---------------	-------------------

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
--------------------	--

Pages:	C.13
--------	------

Publication year:	2016
-------------------	------

Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
-------------------	--------------

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764828059
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-play-news-quiz/docview/1764828059/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 100 of 100

Business News: L Brands' CEO Wexner To Run Victoria's Secret

Kapner, Suzanne; Hufford, Austen . Kapner, Suzanne; Hufford, Austen.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Known for elaborate marketing, including its annual fashion show featuring scantily clad models, Victoria's Secret has avoided many of the pitfalls faced by other mall retailers, which have seen an erosion in traffic and sales.

FULL TEXT

Victoria's Secret Chief Executive Sharen Turney is resigning after 10 years at the helm of a brand that has grown to be a top lingerie maker for the masses over 10 years.

L Brands Inc. which owns Victoria's Secret, said on Friday its CEO Leslie Wexner would take over the role. The company didn't say whether it would search for a permanent replacement.

Shares of Columbus, Ohio-based L Brands, which also owns Bath & Body Works, fell 2.5%, or $2.13 a share, to $81.87 at 4 p.m. in New York trading on Friday.

Ms. Turney said she was stepping down to focus on her family and personal life, as well as to consider what is next professionally. She will continue to serve as an adviser to the business.

In her 16 years with the company, Ms. Turney cemented its reputation as the leading lingerie retailer for the mass market. Known for elaborate marketing, including its annual fashion show featuring scantily clad models, Victoria's Secret has avoided many of the pitfalls faced by other mall retailers, which have seen an erosion in traffic and sales.

Monthly same-store sales had been growing since November 2013 until a rare miss in January, when sales excluding newly opened or closed locations fell 4%.

Victoria's Secret has annual sales of $7.67 billion across about 1,000 retail locations. The store generates the bulk of the revenue at L Brands.

The second oldest of five siblings, Ms. Turney grew up on a farm in Ardmore, Okla. She joined Neiman Marcus in 1989 and held various roles before being named CEO of Neiman Marcus Direct, which includes the retailer's catalog and e-commerce business.

Mr. Wexner, 78 years old, opened the first Limited store in Columbus, Ohio, in 1963. The company bought Victoria's Secret, which then had six stores and a mail-order catalog, for $1 million in 1982.

"We are very grateful to Sharen for her leadership and all that she has accomplished," Mr. Wexner said. "I look forward to taking on a more active role and working with the talented leadership team at Victoria's Secret."

Credit: By Suzanne Kapner and Austen Hufford

DETAILS

Subject:	Retail stores; Chief executive officers; Lingerie
Business indexing term:	Subject: Retail stores Chief executive officers; Corporation: L Brands Inc Neiman-Marcus Group Inc; Industry: 45811 : Clothing and Clothing Accessories Retailers
Location:	United States--US

People:	Wexner, Leslie
Company / organization:	Name: Victorias Secret; NAICS: 448190; Name: L Brands Inc; NAICS: 424210, 458110
Classification:	8390: Retailing industry; 9190: United States; 45811: Clothing and Clothing Accessories Retailers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Feb 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1764827993
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-l-brands-ceo-wexner-run-victorias/docview/1764827993/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Bibliography

Citation style: APA 6th - American Psychological Association, 6th Edition

Kapner, S., & Hufford, A. (2016, Feb 13). Business news: L brands' CEO wexner to run victoria's secret. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-l-brands-ceo-wexner-run-victorias/docview/1764827993/se-2?accountid=14681>

Akst, D. (2016, Feb 13). REVIEW --- play: News quiz. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-play-news-quiz/docview/1764828059/se-2?accountid=14681>

Tangel, A., & Morris, K. (2016, Feb 13). City news: Station embodies resolve. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-station-embodies-resolve/docview/1764828353/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hook, J., & Dawsey, J. (2016, Feb 13). Election 2016: GOP hopefuls court evangelicals. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-gop-hopefuls-court-evangelicals/docview/1764828396/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mitchell, J., & Torry, H. (2016, Feb 13). U.S. news: Global slowdown weighs on import, export prices. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-global-slowdown-weighs-on-import-export/docview/1764828400/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gross, J. (2016, Feb 13). World news: Beating the odds to reach the U.K. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-beating-odds-reach-u-k/docview/1764828461/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gay, M. (2016, Feb 13). City news: City will tighten rules on safety at building sites. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-will-tighten-rules-on-safety-at/docview/1764828503/se-2?accountid=14681>

Zumbrun, J. (2016, Feb 13). U.S. news: Baby boomers pile on the debt. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-baby-boomers-pile-on-debt/docview/1764828507/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Feb 13). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1764828570/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rebecca Davis O'Brien, & Shallwani, P. (2016, Feb 13). NYPD terminates liang's ex-partner --- guilty verdict brings back-to-back firings; defense attorneys vow to keep fighting. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/nypd-terminates-liangs-ex-partner-guilty-verdict/docview/1764828573/se-2?accountid=14681>

Schwartz, F. (2016, Feb 13). World news: U.S. airlines to compete on cuba routes. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-airlines-compete-on-cuba-routes/docview/1764828574/se-2?accountid=14681>

Carey, S. (2016, Feb 13). Spirit's new boss vows to repair image. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/spirits-new-boss-vows-repair-image/docview/1764828579/se-2?accountid=14681>

King, K. (2016, Feb 13). City news: Atlantic city's financial problems widen. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-atlantic-citys-financial-problems-widen/docview/1764828601/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Feb 13). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1764828633/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Feb 13). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1764828640/se-2?accountid=14681>

Demos, T., & Dulaney, C. (2016, Feb 13). Business news: Visa details square stake --- mobile-payment startup's shares get boost from disclosure by credit-card firm. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-visa-details-square-stake-mobile/docview/1764828647/se-2?accountid=14681>

Torry, H., Cherney, M., & Zeng, M. (2016, Feb 13). Consumers power past headwinds --- stock, oil markets rally as strong retail sales offer hope U.S. can avoid global slowdown. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/consumers-power-past-headwinds-stock-oil-markets/docview/1764828656/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jordan, M. (2016, Feb 13). U.S. news: Tensions rise over refugees --- in idaho, some see a jihadist threat, others a much-needed supply of workers. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-tensions-rise-over-refugees-idaho-some/docview/1764828668/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ziobro, P. (2016, Feb 13). Business news: Mattel reshapes business; barbie gets new chief. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mattel-reshapes-barbie-gets-new/docview/1764828672/se-2?accountid=14681>

Carlton, J. (2016, Feb 16). U.S. news: Lake tahoe bounces back --- snowfall fueled by el nino boosts ski resorts throughout sierra nevada region. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-lake-tahoe-bounces-back-snowfall-fueled/docview/1765230377/se-2?accountid=14681>

Korn, M. (2016, Feb 16). U.S. news: Maryland university president declines to quit. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-maryland-university-president-declines/docview/1765230395/se-2?accountid=14681>

Wall, R. (2016, Feb 16). World news: Pilots urge tight curbs after laser imperils jet. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-pilots-urge-tight-curbs-after-laser/docview/1765230443/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawsey, J., & Bauerlein, V. (2016, Feb 16). Election 2016: Trump ramps up voter outreach --- some question quality of his ground game in south carolina as GOP primary nears. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-ramps-up-voter-outreach-some/docview/1765230474/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jordan, M. (2016, Feb 16). U.S. news: Money to latin america soars. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-money-latin-america-soars/docview/1765230549/se-2?accountid=14681>

Johnson, R., & Jelmayer, R. (2016, Feb 16). World news: Zika claim prompts shift. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-zika-claim-prompts-shift/docview/1765230622/se-2?accountid=14681>

Faucon, B., & Mann, T. (2016, Feb 16). Business news: GE's oil chief pays call on tehran. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ge-oil-chief-pays-call-on-tehran/docview/1765230634/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hong, N. (2016, Feb 16). U.S. news: Terror convicts pose issue after release. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-terror-convicts-pose-issue-after-release/docview/1765230661/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

Kendall, B. (2016, Feb 16). U.S. news: With the GOP primed for a fight, list of possible nominees shrinks. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-with-gop-primed-fight-list-possible/docview/1765230674/se-2?accountid=14681>

Boston, W. (2016, Feb 16). Business news: 2014 VW memo warned of probe. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-2014-vw-memo-warned-probe/docview/1765316109/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Feb 16). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1765316110/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Feb 16). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1765316124/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kanno-Youngs, Z. (2016, Feb 16). City news: Tenants in maze of courts get A helping hand. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-tenants-maze-courts-get-helping-hand/docview/1765316126/se-2?accountid=14681>

Miller, J. W. (2016, Feb 16). Business news: Freeport sells part of arizona mine. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-freeport-sells-part-arizona-mine/docview/1765316142/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Feb 16). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1765316146/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hook, J. (2016, Feb 16). Millennials unsettle race --- primary results in iowa and new hampshire show young voters' impact on both parties. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/millennials-unsettle-race-primary-results-iowa/docview/1765316148/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dagher, S., Ballout, D., & Grove, T. (2016, Feb 16). World news: Russia is accused of bombing hospitals --- U.S. says syria regime and its allies targeted civilians; assad insists rebels give up weapons. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russia-is-accused-bombing-hospitals-u/docview/1765335576/se-2?accountid=14681>

Raghuvanshi, G. (2016, Feb 17). Earnings: Jet makers express confidence despite economic slowdown. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/earnings-jet-makers-express-confidence-despite/docview/1765508174/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hufford, A. (2016, Feb 17). Earnings: Sales at jos. A. bank weigh on tailored brands. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/earnings-sales-at-jos-bank-weigh-on-tailored/docview/1765508272/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chiu, J. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: Hong kong's port falls further --- deep-water rivals in mainland china hit container business at former trade leader. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hong-kongs-port-falls-further-deep/docview/1765508423/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gee, K. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: Meatpacking ban ends in nebraska. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-meatpacking-ban-ends-nebraska/docview/1765508642/se-2?accountid=14681>

Raghuvanshi, G. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: Airbus mulls larger plane. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-airbus-mulls-larger-plane/docview/1765509230/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

Cameron, D. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: U.S. rejects boeing protest on northrop job. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-rejects-boeing-protest-on/docview/1765509382/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chernova, Y. (2016, Feb 17). City news: Customer grievances hit startup. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-customer-grievances-hit-startup/docview/1765509479/se-2?accountid=14681>

El-Ghobashy, T., & Solomon, J. (2016, Feb 17). World news: Kidnapped americans in iraq are released. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-kidnapped-americans-iraq-are-released/docview/1765509502/se-2?accountid=14681>

Weaver, C. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: Community health stock plunges on weak results. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-community-health-stock-plunges-on/docview/1765509689/se-2?accountid=14681>

Fletcher, L. (2016, Feb 17). Volatility wagers start to pay off --- hedge-fund bets that profit from market stress are cleaning up after years of losses. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/volatility-wagers-start-pay-off-hedge-fund-bets/docview/1765509874/se-2?accountid=14681>

Loftus, P. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: Grants aim to lower drug costs --- couple makes donation toward efforts to make prescription treatments more affordable in U.S. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-grants-aim-lower-drug-costs-couple/docview/1765509927/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hughes, S. (2016, Feb 17). U.S. news: Opening seen on nominee hearings. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-opening-seen-on-nominee-hearings/docview/1765510000/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Feb 17). City news: Kudlow won't run for senate in connecticut. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-kudlow-wont-run-senate-connecticut/docview/1765510069/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Feb 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1765510131/se-2?accountid=14681>

Elinson, Z. (2016, Feb 17). U.S. news: Jail break inquiry focuses on headcount. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-jail-break-inquiry-focuses-on-headcount/docview/1765510135/se-2?accountid=14681>

Josephs, L. (2016, Feb 17). U.S. stocks rally for biggest 2-day rise since august. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-stocks-rally-biggest-2-day-rise-since-august/docview/1765510148/se-2?accountid=14681>

Silverman, R. E. (2016, Feb 17). Careers: Bosses dig into data to flag workers' ills. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/careers-bosses-dig-into-data-flag-workers-ills/docview/1765510164/se-2?accountid=14681>

Devlin, B., & Emshwiller, J. R. (2016, Feb 17). U.S. news: Apple told to help open shooter's phone --- judge orders firm to aid federal investigators probing device used by san bernardino suspect. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-apple-told-help-open-shooters-phone/docview/1765510291/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

World news: World watch. (2016, Feb 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1765510348/se-2?accountid=14681>

Loftus, P. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: Pfizer agrees to settle on wyeth's claims. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-pfizer-agrees-settle-on-wyeths/docview/1765510389/se-2?accountid=14681>

Peters, M. (2016, Feb 17). U.S. news: Chicago mayor backs new rule for police video. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-chicago-mayor-backs-new-rule-police/docview/1765510409/se-2?accountid=14681>

Light, J. (2016, Feb 17). U.S. news: All-cash deals pinch home buyers. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-all-cash-deals-pinch-home-buyers/docview/1765510415/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kendall, B., & Bravin, J. (2016, Feb 17). U.S. news: Arguments to lose A bit of their bite. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-arguments-lose-bit-their-bite/docview/1765510420/se-2?accountid=14681>

Finance watch. (2016, Feb 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/finance-watch/docview/1765510422/se-2?accountid=14681>

Haddon, H., & King, K. (2016, Feb 17). Christie pivots to trenton --- with campaign over, governor puts focus on state's fiscal woes; poll numbers hit a low. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/christie-pivots-trenton-with-campaign-over/docview/1765510465/se-2?accountid=14681>

Haddon, H. (2016, Feb 17). City news: Christie proposes hospital cuts. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-christie-proposes-hospital-cuts/docview/1765510466/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Feb 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1765510498/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Feb 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1765510507/se-2?accountid=14681>

Carey, S. (2016, Feb 17). Business news: United mechanics reject pact. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-united-mechanics-reject-pact/docview/1765510544/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E., & Colleen, M. N. (2016, Feb 17). Obama to name court pick in weeks. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/obama-name-court-pick-weeks/docview/1765510570/se-2?accountid=14681>

Stynes, T. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: Williams posts big write-down. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-williams-posts-big-write-down/docview/1765753293/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kendall, B. (2016, Feb 18). Election 2016: Americans divided on court nominee vote. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-americans-divided-on-court-nominee/docview/1765753349/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sparshott, J. (2016, Feb 18). U.S. news: Plumbers' pay crimps union --- higher earnings can make labor too costly for many private- sector projects. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-plumbers-pay-crimps-union-higher/docview/1765753634/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mitchell, J. (2016, Feb 18). U.S. news: Industrial output jumps on strong car sales. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-industrial-output-jumps-on-strong-car/docview/1765753763/se-2?accountid=14681>

King, K. (2016, Feb 18). City news: New measure to take over atlantic city. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-new-measure-take-over-atlantic/docview/1765761457/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gasparro, A. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: Campbell soup brews venture capital unit. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-campbell-soup-brews-venture-capital/docview/1765761485/se-2?accountid=14681>

Election 2016: Campaign wire. (2016, Feb 18). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-campaign-wire/docview/1765761499/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M., & Shallwani, P. (2016, Feb 18). One more time, spitzer applies damage control. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/one-more-time-spitzer-applies-damage-control/docview/1765761510/se-2?accountid=14681>

Althaus, D., & Rocca, F. X. (2016, Feb 18). World news: Pope pleads for migrants at border. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-pope-pleads-migrants-at-border/docview/1765761520/se-2?accountid=14681>

MacMillan, T. (2016, Feb 18). City news: Insanity defense an option in fund manager's killing. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-insanity-defense-option-fund-managers/docview/1765761524/se-2?accountid=14681>

Minaya, E. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: Newmont swings to a loss. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-newmont-swings-loss/docview/1765761525/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mann, T. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: Immelt gets partial stock award. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-immelt-gets-partial-stock-award/docview/1765761558/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Feb 18). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1765761563/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hook, J. (2016, Feb 18). Trump loses ground in new poll. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-loses-ground-new-poll/docview/1765761579/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bravin, J., & Kendall, B. (2016, Feb 18). U.S. news: Court vacancy could leave patchwork of legal standards. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-court-vacancy-could-leave-patchwork/docview/1765761590/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hughes, S. (2016, Feb 18). U.S. news: Schumer starts to feel heat of leading. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-schumer-starts-feel-heat-leading/docview/1765761602/se-2?accountid=14681>

Nicas, J., & McMillan, R. (2016, Feb 18). U.S. news: Newer phones aren't easy to crack. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-newer-phones-arent-easy-crack/docview/1765761629/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Feb 18). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1765761636/se-2?accountid=14681>

MacMillan, D. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: Yahoo trims back media businesses. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-yahoo-trims-back-media-businesses/docview/1765761640/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Feb 18). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1765775751/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Feb 18). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1765775805/se-2?accountid=14681>

Fritz, B. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: Fandango to buy film sites --- comcast unit agrees to acquire flixster and rotten tomatoes from warner bros. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-fandango-buy-film-sites-comcast/docview/1765775827/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ostrower, J. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: Boeing's chief defends its accounting, strategy. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-boeings-chief-defends-accounting/docview/1765775838/se-2?accountid=14681>

Flint, J. (2016, Feb 18). Business news: ABC entertainment has new chief. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-abc-entertainment-has-new-chief/docview/1765776025/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hilsenrath, J. (2016, Feb 18). U.S. news: Fed seeing more cause for pause on rates. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fed-seeing-more-cause-pause-on-rates/docview/1765776069/se-2?accountid=14681>

Nissenbaum, D., & Dagher, S. (2016, Feb 17). World news: Gains by syrian kurds complicate fight --- turkey fires across border at U.S.-backed militias pushing its favored rebels back. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-gains-syrian-kurds-complicate-fight/docview/1765840313/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cordoba, J., & Rocca, F. X. (2016, Feb 17). World news: Pope urges mexico to resist crime's lure --- pontiff tells young people not to be hitmen, urges clergy to keep up the fight. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-pope-urges-mexico-resist-crimes-lure/docview/1765840550/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chun, H. W., & Lubold, G. (2016, Feb 18). World news: U.S. rebukes beijing over missiles --- kerry says china's president broke a pledge not to militarize disputed islands. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-rebukes-beijing-over-missiles/docview/1765860151/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E., & Hughes, S. (2016, Feb 19). U.S. news: Obama eyes court pick with GOP appeal. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-eyes-court-pick-with-gop-appeal/docview/1766256611/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rocca, F. X., & Schwartz, F. (2016, Feb 19). Pope, trump spar on immigration --- pontiff says building a wall is 'not christian;' trump says questioning faith is 'disgraceful'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/pope-trump-spar-on-immigration-pontiff-says/docview/1766256680/se-2?accountid=14681>

McKay, B. (2016, Feb 19). U.S. news: Hawaii leads among sleepy states. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hawaii-leads-among-sleepy-states/docview/1766256735/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Feb 19). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1766256738/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Feb 19). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1766256848/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Feb 19). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1766256859/se-2?accountid=14681>

Database copyright © 2026 ProQuest LLC. All rights reserved.

Terms and Conditions Contact ProQuest