

LINKS

Document 250 of 500

World News: Syria Sieges Drive Out Sunni Population --- U.N., opposition accuse Assad regime of forced evacuations to divide country

Abdulrahim, Raja; Raydan, Noam . Abdulrahim, Raja; Raydan, Noam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Syrian government is pressing a systematic effort to alter the country's demographics and tighten President Bashar al-Assad's grip on power, United Nations officials and opposition figures said.

FULL TEXT

The Syrian government is pressing a systematic effort to alter the country's demographics and tighten President Bashar al-Assad's grip on power, United Nations officials and opposition figures said.

The government is pushing to seal deals for the surrender or evacuation of rebel strongholds despite the U.S.- and Russia-sponsored cease-fire, which began Monday and appeared to take firmer hold on its first full day Tuesday, residents and activists said.

The Assad government has long used sieges -- sometimes to the point of starvation -- to force local populations to agree to cease-fires, surrender and evacuations, leading to the displacement of thousands of people. Now thousands more are at risk of being forced from their homes in deals the government seeks to push through in an opposition-held neighborhood of the city of Homs and at least one Damascus suburb.

The resulting transfers of population threaten to further partition the country between the opposition -- dominated by Syria's Sunni majority -- and the government led by Alawites, adherents of an offshoot of Shiite Islam. Syria's ethnic Kurdish minority has already carved out a sizable autonomous region in the north along the Turkish border.

"The Syrian regime, along with its Russian and Iranian allies, is relentlessly pursuing a malicious plan to orchestrate extensive demographic shifts across Syria," said Riyadh Hijab, a leader of the opposition's main political body, the High Negotiations Committee.

"These changes will undermine the unity and integrity of Syrian territories and Syria's demographic structure," he added, saying they are "paving the way for ethnic and political cleansing on an unprecedented scale."

Syrian government officials reject accusations that it is seeking demographic change by force of arms, sieges or truce deals. "There is no meaning to these false claims," said Gov. Talal al-Barazi of Homs province.

U.N. Emergency Relief Coordinator Stephen O'Brien said recently that mass evacuations and prolonged sieges are violations of international humanitarian law. "All sieges, a medieval tactic, must be lifted," he said. "This should not [occur] through any type of agreement which results in the forced displacement of the civilian population."

Hours before Monday's truce took effect, Mr. Assad vowed to take back all rebel-controlled territory as he walked through the Damascus suburb of Daraya, which surrendered to the government late last month after a nearly four-year siege. Under the deal ending the siege, nearly 10,000 residents were forced to move immediately to other parts of the country -- the largest-scale evacuation of the entire war.

Images of a confident Mr. Assad strolling through the ghost town ahead of the cease-fire left Syrian opposition groups fuming, saying the deal lacked enforcement measures to guarantee the government drops its "starve or submit" tactics.

Many of those displaced, from the war's first expulsion in early 2012 and in evacuations since then, have relocated or been forced to resettle in the north of the country, where rebels have their main strongholds largely outside the government's control.

Three days after the last resident left Daraya in late August, Syrian military commanders summoned opposition leaders in the neighboring Damascus suburb of Moadhamiya to a meeting, residents and local leaders said, adding they had expected the call.

"They said if we reject their conditions, they are going to burn Moadhamiya over the heads of the residents," one member of opposition-controlled town council said.

Rebels and local leaders in Waer, the last neighborhood under opposition control in the central city of Homs, said they faced similar demands from the regime recently.

"There is clearly a strategy at the moment to move from Daraya to al-Waer to Moadhamiya in a similar pattern," U.N. envoy Staffan de Mistura said recently.

Asked to comment on the accusations of deliberate partitioning, Syrian presidential adviser Bouthaina Shaaban referred to an interview with state media in which she called the deals reached in Daraya and Moadhamiya "local reconciliations."

Ms. Shaaban rejected claims that the deals were part of a broader demographic or geographic division of Syria.

Olga Razumovskaya contributed to this article.

Credit: By Raja Abdulrahim and Noam Raydan

DETAILS

Subject:	Demographics; Evacuations & rescues; Truces & cease fires; Sieges; International law
Location:	Russia; United States--US; Syria
People:	Assad, Bashar Al
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819082697
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syria-sieges-drive-out-sunni/docview/1819082697/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: Russians Stole Olympians' Data

Mills, Laura; Futterman, Matthew . Mills, Laura; Futterman, Matthew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Documents from WADA and posted on the website of Fancy Bear show U.S. gymnast Simone Biles, tennis players Serena and Venus Williams, and basketball player Elena Delle Donne had permission to take prescription drugs in recent years and in some cases used performance-enhancing drugs during the Games.

FULL TEXT

The World Anti-Doping Agency said that Russian hackers suspected of breaching the Democratic National Committee's computers had stolen confidential medical records of athletes who participated in last month's Olympic Games in Rio de Janeiro.

WADA said Tuesday that a Russian hacker group operator known as Fancy Bear gained entry into a database created for the Rio Games.

"The group accessed athlete data, including confidential medical data . . . related to the Rio Games; and, subsequently released some of the data in the public domain, accompanied by the threat that they will release more," WADA said.

The organization said the hackers used a "spearfishing" technique to get passwords through email accounts. WADA didn't say how it became aware of the hacking or why it believed Fancy Bear was the perpetrator.

The disclosure came shortly after hackers released a trove of documents on a website Tuesday that showed the use of performance-enhancing drugs by top U.S. athletes, though they acknowledged the athletes didn't break any rules.

Documents from WADA and posted on the website of Fancy Bear show U.S. gymnast Simone Biles, tennis players Serena and Venus Williams, and basketball player Elena Delle Donne had permission to take prescription drugs in recent years and in some cases used performance-enhancing drugs during the Games.

The drugs, some of which contain banned substances, are permitted so long as athletes receive what are known as "therapeutic-use exemptions."

The group said that most of the drugs U.S. athletes were found to be taking were legal when used for medical purposes, but it suggested this was proof of preferential treatment toward U.S. athletes by international sporting bodies.

Olivier Niggli, director general of WADA, said the "criminal acts are greatly compromising the effort by the global antidoping community to re-establish trust in Russia."

The leak comes in the wake of a doping scandal that ensnared dozens of Russian athletes. Russia's track and field team was banned from competing at the Olympic Games this year, though the IOC stopped short of banning all of Russia's Olympic athletes.

Last year, an independent investigation conducted on behalf of WADA revealed a five-year doping program that stretched to the highest levels of the Russian government. Russian officials, including President Vladimir Putin, have denied those accusations.

Travis Tygart, chief executive of the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency, said the athletes had done nothing wrong. "In each of the situations, the athlete has done everything right in adhering to the global rules for obtaining permission to use a needed medication."

The documents show that Ms. Biles has received permission since 2012 to take several drugs associated with the treatment of attention deficit and hyperactivity disorder. Ms. Biles wrote on her Twitter account that she has had ADHD since she was a child and takes medicine for it.

Venus Williams said she was disappointed that her private medical data had become public. She said she had "followed the rules established under the Tennis Anti-Doping Program."

Serena Williams wasn't available to comment. Ms. Della Donne's agent said she was undergoing an operation and would release a statement after the procedure.

Fancy Bear was one of two groups accused of breaching the DNC's networks in May. The cybersecurity firm Crowdstrike, hired by the DNC to investigate the attack, said it is linked to Russian intelligence.

Credit: Laura Mills, Matthew Futterman

DETAILS

Subject:	Athletes; Olympic games; Hackers; Medical records; Tennis; Drugs & sports; Prescription drugs
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71121 : Spectator Sports
Location:	Russia
Company / organization:	Name: US Anti-Doping Agency; NAICS: 621511, 813990
Classification:	71121: Spectator Sports
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819081605
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russians-stole-olympians-data/docview/1819081605/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 252 of 500

U.S. News: Groups Push for Debt Relief --- Farmers, real-estate agents and others say student-loan levels threaten industries

Mitchell, Josh . Mitchell, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Real-estate agents, farmers, architects, startup lenders, lawyers, tech companies, benefits administrators -- even podiatrists -- have sent lobbyists to Capitol Hill over the past two years to push for legislation to forgive or at least reduce what workers and consumers owe on their student loans.

FULL TEXT

The industry warnings are urgent and often dire: The housing market could stall. Marriages are being postponed. Workers won't have the savings to retire. The nation's food supply will be disrupted.

They point to one threat: soaring student debt.

A tripling of student debt over the past decade to more than $1.3 trillion has unleashed a torrent of Washington lobbying from outside the education sector, with various industries depicting a "crisis" they say requires federal intervention.

Real-estate agents, farmers, architects, startup lenders, lawyers, tech companies, benefits administrators -- even podiatrists -- have sent lobbyists to Capitol Hill over the past two years to push for legislation to forgive or at least reduce what workers and consumers owe on their student loans.

The efforts reflect the federal government's unique position as the nation's primary lender to college and graduate students. Its student-loan portfolio -- topping $1 trillion -- is big enough to rival the holdings of some banks, but it is controlled by elected leaders who are subject to the kind of political pressure that private lenders aren't. And while colleges and universities have long been a big lobbying presence on Capitol Hill, increasingly the pressure is coming from the private sector.

"If you like to eat, this is pretty darn important, especially looking 10, 20, 30 years out," Zachary Clark, a lobbyist for the National Farmers Union, says of his pitch to lawmakers on student debt.

The typical farmer makes a healthy $64,000 a year, government data show. But Mr. Clark's group argues that many farmers are retiring and their younger replacements might not qualify for business loans due to their high student-debt burdens. It has asked Congress to classify farmers as public-sector workers, making them eligible for a program that forgives big portions of student debt alongside public defenders and teachers.

Congress has responded to the frenzy with bills that would likely add up to billions in taxpayer costs. The proposals, which have gained bipartisan support, would forgive large sums of student debt for some workers, slash interest rates and provide tax breaks to encourage employers to pay down their workers' balances. The bills have largely stalled.

Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton has backed lowering interest rates on many school loans and allowing students to attend public colleges without having to borrow. Republican nominee Donald Trump has said he wants to help borrowers but hasn't provided details.

Economists disagree about how student debt is affecting the economy. Recent reports suggest concerns of a national crisis are exaggerated since many college grads are finding decent-paying jobs. Experts say the biggest problem lies with a minority of borrowers who are in default.

The proposals in Congress are drawing critics from the left and the right.

Alexander Holt, a policy analyst for the left-leaning New America think tank, said the proposals would generally benefit workers with the biggest student-debt balances -- white-collar workers who attended pricey colleges and graduate schools.

"This is just a growing group of highly active voters and people who donate, who are younger and engaged politically," Mr. Holt said.

Federal figures show most people in default on student debt owe relatively little -- under $10,000 -- because they dropped out of school. They tend to work in low-paying jobs or are unemployed.

But many industries argue that freeing up student debt, even for well-paid workers, would help the economy.

The proposal with the most traction would allow employers to contribute up to $5,250 a year toward an employee's student debt without it being taxed. Currently, such contributions are treated as ordinary income and subject to income and payroll taxes.

The bill would increase the amount of net compensation an employer could give to a worker while saving him or her hundreds of dollars in taxes.

Credit: By Josh Mitchell

DETAILS

Subject:	Student loans; Workers; Economic impact; Interest rates; Debt cancellation; Proposals; Student debt; Nominations; Colleges & universities
Business indexing term:	Subject: Workers Economic impact Interest rates Debt cancellation Proposals Student debt; Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079737
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-groups-push-debt-relief-farmers-real/docview/1819079737/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 253 of 500

World News: U.S. Ally to Buy Weapons From Adversaries --- Philippine leader says he wants to work with Russia and China; 'I do not like the Americans'

Moss, Trefor . Moss, Trefor.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Rather than worry over a possible battle in the South China Sea, Mr. Duterte said, the military should focus on domestic priorities such as drug traffickers and insurgencies. [...]the Philippines has bought the gear needed to fight such battles from suppliers in the U.S. and its Asian allies such as South Korea.

FULL TEXT

MANILA -- Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte signaled an abrupt departure from his nation's longstanding military reliance on the U.S., ordering his defense secretary to seek gear from suppliers in China and Russia to fight drug traffickers and insurgents.

In another shift, he said Tuesday that the Philippines would stop patrolling the South China Sea alongside the U.S. Navy, to avoid upsetting Beijing. Instead, he said the military would focus on combating drugs and terrorism.

The Philippines has had close ties with the U.S. for decades, most recently bolstering military cooperation through a 2014 pact. Both Washington and Manila have leveraged their alliance to counter China, whose increasingly assertive actions in support of its maritime claims have stoked unease in the region.

But since coming to power on June 30, Mr. Duterte has indicated he wants to distance the Philippines from the U.S., a stance that threatens to alter the Asia-Pacific region's strategic balance. He said Monday he wanted the U.S. military to leave Mindanao, the site of a strategic base set to host American forces.

Mr. Duterte's statements this week were the latest in a string of developments that have pleased, surprised and horrified his audiences since he took office. His so-called war on drugs and crime has claimed 2,956 lives, according to police, and his sometimes crude statements have insulted targets as varied as the pope, the United Nations head and U.S. President Barack Obama.

But no shift is arguably as important -- or unexpected -- as Mr. Duterte's political turn from the U.S., the Philippines' colonial ruler until 1946. During his campaign, foreign policy was a minor issue for an electorate worried about income inequality, corruption, and law and order. Mr. Duterte made clear his intention of trying to improve relations with China but gave little hint that he had serious misgivings about his country's longstanding alliance with the U.S.

"We are not cutting our alliances, but we will follow an independent foreign policy," Mr. Duterte told members of the Philippine Air Force on Tuesday.

Rather than worry over a possible battle in the South China Sea, Mr. Duterte said, the military should focus on domestic priorities such as drug traffickers and insurgencies.

Until now, the Philippines has bought the gear needed to fight such battles from suppliers in the U.S. and its Asian allies such as South Korea. But on Tuesday Mr. Duterte ordered his defense secretary to seek suppliers in Russia and China, saying they offered soft loans payable in 20 to 25 years.

"I want weaponry and armaments. . . . We don't need F-16 jets, that is of no use to us," he said, referring to the U.S.-made aircraft. "We don't intend to fight any country. Let's content ourselves even with propeller-driven planes that we could use extensively in anti-insurgency."

The U.S. Embassy in Manila said the U.S. hasn't been contacted by Philippine authorities regarding Mr. Duterte's comments.

Although Mr. Duterte is unlikely to abrogate the U.S. defense treaty, he risks damaging ties with its closest ally since "friendly and constructive relations at the political level oil the wheels of the alliance," said Angelica Mangahas, deputy executive director of the Albert del Rosario Institute for Strategic and International Studies in Manila.

The U.S. provided $441 million in security funding to the Philippines from 2002 to 2013, according to Rand Corp., a U.S. think tank. The Obama administration has earmarked a record $120 million in military aid to the poor country this year alone. The U.S. provided substantial aid to the Philippines after Typhoon Haiyan devastated the country in 2013.

Mr. Duterte's apparent tilt toward Washington's strategic rivals in Beijing and Moscow and open hostility toward the U.S. imperil that relationship.

"I do not like the Americans. It's simply a matter of principle for me," Mr. Duterte said Monday.

Last week, Mr. Duterte sparked controversy by appearing to call Mr. Obama a "son of a whore" during a media briefing, leading Mr. Obama to cancel planned talks with the Philippine leader.

On Monday, Mr. Duterte said U.S. forces in Zamboanga on the island of Mindanao, which advise local troops on counterterrorism operations, should leave, saying they were targets for insurgents.

The 2014 security pact was one of the main foreign-policy initiatives of former President Benigno Aquino III, who aimed to secure U.S. backing in the Philippines' struggle against China over disputed territory in the South China Sea. The pact was also an important plank of Mr. Obama's strategy of rebalancing to the Asia-Pacific region.

Mr. Duterte's spokesman said Tuesday that the leader still planned to honor the pact.

Cris Larano contributed to this article.

Credit: By Trefor Moss

DETAILS

Subject:	Drug trafficking; Military sales; Military aid; Insurgency; Armed forces; Foreign policy
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	United States--US; China; Russia; Philippines
People:	Duterte, Rodrigo R
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079732
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-ally-buy-weapons-adversaries/docview/1819079732/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 254 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

General Motors said its Bolt electric car will travel 238 miles on a single charge.

FULL TEXT

U.S. household income surged last year amid sustained job growth, following a long stretch of stagnant and declining earnings.

Wells Fargo's CEO defended the bank and the efforts it had taken to stop allegedly illegal sales practices across the company.

EpiPen maker Mylan had the second-highest executive pay among all U.S. drug and biotech firms over the past five years.

Stocks and bonds slid, raising concerns that volatility could force sales by some hedge funds. The Dow fell 258.32 to 18066.75.

Three ships in the charter fleet of troubled Hanjin are being sold in what appears to be the start of a fire sale.

Samsung is facing growing consumer confusion and anger as it grapples with a recall of new smartphones.

The Atlanta Fed's Lockhart, considered by many a bellwether central-bank voice, will step down in February.

Time Inc. named Battista CEO, continuing a shuffle of the top ranks at the firm.

General Motors said its Bolt electric car will travel 238 miles on a single charge.

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390; Name: Time Inc; NAICS: 513120; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111

Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079726
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1819079726/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Threats Detailed At Oregon Trial

Carlton, Jim . Carlton, Jim.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Assistant U.S. Attorney Geoff Barrow said in his opening statement that Mr. Bundy threatened Harney County Sheriff David Ward on Nov. 5, 2015, telling him that rancher Dwight Hammond Jr. and his son Steven, who were convicted of arson on federal lands in the county, had been wrongfully charged.

FULL TEXT

PORTLAND, Ore. -- Ammon Bundy and others conspired to orchestrate the armed takeover of an Oregon wildlife refuge and made threats to the local sheriff weeks before the occupation began in early January, federal prosecutors told jurors here on Tuesday.

But a defense lawyer said their actions were meant to hold the federal government accountable, and that Mr. Bundy threatened no one.

The claims came during opening statements Tuesday in a case that has brought national attention to tensions over federal land-use policies in the West. Mr. Bundy, 41 years old, his brother Ryan and five others face charges of conspiracy to impede federal officers through intimidation, threats or force.

The Bundys and their supporters staged a 41-day occupation of the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge over complaints that the federal government exerts too much control over public lands, blocking ranchers and other industries from using land for economic development.

The occupiers said they were particularly provoked by a long-running case of two Oregon ranchers who were prosecuted for setting fire to federal lands.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Geoff Barrow said in his opening statement that Mr. Bundy threatened Harney County Sheriff David Ward on Nov. 5, 2015, telling him that rancher Dwight Hammond Jr. and his son Steven, who were convicted of arson on federal lands in the county, had been wrongfully charged.

He and other supporters also asserted that federal ownership of vast public lands in the county amounted to an illegal occupation, requiring the sheriff to return the property to local control, the prosecutor said. If the sheriff "did not do as they demanded" they said they "would bring thousands to Harney County and do his job for him," Mr. Barrow told the jury.

The occupation fizzled soon after Ammon Bundy and others were arrested. One occupier, Robert LaVoy Finicum, was shot and killed by a law enforcement officer during a standoff.

Credit: By Jim Carlton

DETAILS

Subject:	Sheriffs; Public lands; Wildlife sanctuaries; Legal arguments
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71213 : Zoos and Botanical Gardens 71219 : Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	Portland Oregon; United States--US
People:	Bundy, Ammon
Classification:	71213: Zoos and Botanical Gardens; 71219: Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions; 92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079724
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-threats-detailed-at-oregon-trial/docview/1819079724/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 256 of 500

U.S. News: Obama Makes Late Push for Trade Vote

Mauldin, William . Mauldin, William.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

House Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.) and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.), hoping to keep GOP control of both chambers, have played down the prospect of a vote after the election, and people following the issue say the political environment for trade would have to improve quickly.

FULL TEXT

The Obama administration is enlisting business leaders in a last-ditch effort to win Republican support for its signature Pacific trade agreement after the election.

A business-led advisory committee known as the President's Export Council is expected Wednesday to call on Congress to pass the Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement in the "lame duck" session at the end of the year.

"We're calling for the passage of the TPP by the end of this year," said Ursula Burns, chief executive of Xerox Corp. and chair of the export council. "If we continue to try to search for this 'perfect deal,' we'll get nothing done."

Getting a majority of the House and Senate to back the 12-nation deal remains a high hurdle. House Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.) and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.), hoping to keep GOP control of both chambers, have played down the prospect of a vote after the election, and people following the issue say the political environment for trade would have to improve quickly. "We're simply not there yet," said Sen. Orrin Hatch (R., Utah), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, which oversees trade.

Credit: By William Mauldin

DETAILS

Subject: Congressional committees; Bills; Trans-Pacific Partnership Agreement

Business indexing term: Subject: Trans-Pacific Partnership Agreement; Industry: 92112 : Legislative Bodies

People:	Hatch, Orrin G; McConnell, Mitch; Ryan, Paul; Burns, Ursula M
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120; Name: Senate-Finance, Committee on; NAICS: 921120; Name: Xerox Corp; NAICS: 333310, 513130
Classification:	92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079716
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-makes-late-push-trade-vote/docview/1819079716/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: World Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

China's Commerce Ministry expressed regret over the filing and said it would work through the WTO "to safeguard China's industry and trading interests." Since taking office, President Barack Obama has overseen 14 new trade-enforcement actions against China.

FULL TEXT

CHINA

U.S. Starts WTO Case

On Chinese Subsidies

The Obama administration challenged China over its support for domestic wheat, rice and corn growers, alleging that Beijing is subsidizing these industries in excess of internationally agreed levels.

Beijing spent nearly $100 billion more than allowed under the World Trade Organization on "market price support" for those agricultural products in 2015, U.S. officials said in announcing a new case against China at the WTO. Officials said the Chinese support has hurt American growers.

China's Commerce Ministry expressed regret over the filing and said it would work through the WTO "to safeguard China's industry and trading interests."

Since taking office, President Barack Obama has overseen 14 new trade-enforcement actions against China. Mr. Obama and his advisers have backed strict adherence to a rules-based trading system as a way of encouraging China to cooperate in international commerce.

-- William Mauldin

UKRAINE

Three Soldiers Killed

As Cease-Fire Wavers

Ukrainian authorities said three soldiers were killed in the east of the country, as international observers warned of a serious uptick fighting following a truce this month.

A military spokesman said three soldiers were killed and 15 wounded in fighting against Russia-backed rebel forces. He said government forces had clashed with rebels attempting to advance toward Ukrainian lines.

Government and separatist forces agreed on Sept. 1 to a truce that Kiev credited with reducing violence in the region. But observers for the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe said violence over the weekend was its worst since the truce.

In a statement carried by Interfax news agency, rebel leader Alexander Zakharchenko said the rebels would respond to any fire from the Ukrainian side.

President Petro Poroshenko said he would discuss the peace process with the foreign ministers of Germany and France on Wednesday in Kiev.

-- Laura Mills

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Peacekeeping forces; Military personnel; Cooperation
Location:	Beijing China; China; United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack; Zakharchenko, Alexander
Company / organization:	Name: World Trade Organization; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1819079706

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1819079706/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 258 of 500

U.S. News: Obama To Increase Refugees Admitted

Jordan, Miriam . Jordan, Miriam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Secretary of State John Kerry presented the new target, outlined in the report to Congress, in a closed session to members of the House and Senate judiciary committees on Tuesday.

FULL TEXT

The Obama administration plans to raise the number of refugees admitted to the U.S. to 110,000 in the 2017 fiscal year starting Oct. 1 from 85,000 this fiscal year, according to an annual refugee report to Congress obtained by The Wall Street Journal on Tuesday.

President Barack Obama was widely expected to announce an increase in the U.S. commitment ahead of a summit on refugees that he is convening next week during the United Nations General Assembly meeting.

The 110,000 target for 2017 for individuals fleeing persecution and conflict around the world represents a nearly 30% increase from this fiscal year and an almost 60% increase over the 70,000 admitted in 2015.

Secretary of State John Kerry presented the new target, outlined in the report to Congress, in a closed session to members of the House and Senate judiciary committees on Tuesday.

As he left the meeting, Mr. Kerry refused to provide details, saying he was "going to wait until the president releases it."

Siobhan Hughes contributed to this article.

Credit: By Miriam Jordan

DETAILS

Subject:	Refugees
Location:	United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079703
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-increase-refugees-admitted/docview/1819079703/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 259 of 500

World News: Iran Threatened to Shoot Down American Spy Planes

Lubold, Gordon . Lubold, Gordon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Using ground-to-air communications, officials at the Iranian air defense station told the crews they were flying near Iranian airspace and that if they didn't change their course quickly they risked being fired upon, according to a spokesman for U.S. Naval Forces Central Command in Bahrain, Cmdr. Bill Urban.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Two American surveillance aircraft flying in what U.S. officials said was international airspace near Iran were threatened by that country's air defense stations over the weekend, and were told by the Iranians to alter their course or face fire.

The two U.S. Navy surveillance aircraft were challenged by Iranian military officials on Sept. 10 as they flew over the Strait of Hormuz on routine patrols, U.S. officials said.

Using ground-to-air communications, officials at the Iranian air defense station told the crews they were flying near Iranian airspace and that if they didn't change their course quickly they risked being fired upon, according to a spokesman for U.S. Naval Forces Central Command in Bahrain, Cmdr. Bill Urban.

"We will fire Iranian missile," was one of the transmissions from the ground, he said.

Both the American planes were threatened in three separate radio calls, Cmdr. Urban said in a statement.

U.S. aircraft replied that they were coalition aircraft conducting routine operations in international airspace and they continued their mission.

Iranian government spokesman Mohammad-Bagher Nobakht said Tuesday that he wasn't aware of the incident, but that it was Iran's policy to protect its borders and warn against any potential intrusion.

"As soon as any flying object wants to come close, warnings are given," he said.

Officials at Iran's United Nations mission didn't respond to a request to comment.

The military said the interaction with the Iranians was considered unprofessional because of the threat the officials made, but it wasn't considered unsafe because the surface-to-air weapons that would have been used by the Iranians couldn't have reached either plane, Cmdr. Urban said.

State Department officials decried the incident, saying it showed Iran had yet to show signs of shifting from its aggressive stance in the region even after the nuclear agreement reached last year.

"Frankly, there've been previous incidents much like this, and they're concerning, obviously. They escalate tensions," said Mark Toner, a State Department spokesman. "We have conveyed our concerns to Iran."

The U.S. Navy last month said four vessels from Iran's Revolutionary Guards approached an American destroyer at high speed, ignoring radio communications and other warnings.

Brig. Gen. Ali Fadavi, commander of the Revolutionary Guards' naval forces, Tuesday dismissed suggestions that Iranian vessels had come too close to American ones as "sheer lies," according to the official Islamic Republic News Agency.

Asa Fitch contributed to this article.

Credit: By Gordon Lubold

DETAILS

Subject:	Surveillance; Military aircraft; International relations-US; Radio communications; Aircraft; Military strategy; Armed forces
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	United States--US; Iran
Company / organization:	Name: Navy-US; NAICS: 928110
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079698
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-iran-threatened-shoot-down-american/docview/1819079698/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 260 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Trump proposed new subsidies for child care, as well as paid maternity leave for workers who don't have it. ---

FULL TEXT

Syria's regime is pressing a systematic effort to alter the country's demographics and tighten Assad's grip on power, U.N. officials and opposition figures said.

Israel hit artillery positions in Syria in what it said was a response to a shell that struck the Golan Heights.

Obama accused Trump of adopting Putin as a role model, in the president's first solo appearance on the campaign trail. Trump proposed new subsidies for child care, as well as paid maternity leave for workers who don't have it.

Russian hackers stole Olympic athletes' medical records, the World Anti-Doping Agency said.

Iran threatened two American surveillance planes as they flew over the Strait of Hormuz, the U.S. said.

Philippine leader Duterte is seeking arms from Russia and China, signaling a shift from reliance on the U.S.

The administration plans to raise the number of refugees admitted to the U.S. to 110,000 in fiscal 2017.

Turkey asked the U.S. to detain a Muslim cleric whom Erdogan accuses of masterminding a coup.

DETAILS

Subject:	Maternity & paternity leaves
Business indexing term:	Subject: Maternity & paternity leaves
Location:	Turkey; Iran; Israel; Strait of Hormuz; United States--US; Syria; Russia; China; Golan Heights
Company / organization:	Name: World Anti-Doping Agency; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079690
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1819079690/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 261 of 500

Business News: VW Uncertain on a U.S. Future for Its Diesel Cars

ABSTRACT

The head of Volkswagen AG's North American operations indicated the German auto maker is uncertain when or if it will bring diesel engines back to the U.S. car and light-truck market.

FULL TEXT

The head of Volkswagen AG's North American operations indicated the German auto maker is uncertain when or if it will bring diesel engines back to the U.S. car and light-truck market.

Hinrich Woebcken said on Monday U.S. emissions regulations are tightening, making it more difficult for light-vehicle diesel engines to legally meet requirements. For now, the Wolfsburg, Germany-based company will focus on gasoline-powered vehicles and a gradual roll out of hybrid-electric and all electric cars.

The company isn't selling diesel-powered vehicles in the U.S. in the wake of its high-profile emissions scandal, which became public nearly a year ago. Mr. Woebcken said sales of non-diesels have exceeded Volkswagen's expectations, even though it has lost U.S. market share due to the company's reliance on diesels that are no longer sold here.

He said the company will evaluate the potential for a return of its diesel vehicles to the U.S. on a "product by product and package by package" basis. Diesel technology, which requires extensive and costly treatment to meet emissions standards, remains popular in Europe, he said.

Volkswagen's 1.8% market share this year through August compares to the 2.1% it achieved through the same eight-month period in 2015, according to market researcher Autodata Corp. Autodata estimates Volkswagen's incentive spending increased 31% on its passenger cars through August compared with the same period last year, while light-truck incentive spending crept up 10%.

The wider U.S. auto industry has become more dependent on sales incentives as retail growth has cooled in 2016. Diesel-powered cars as a percentage of light vehicles sold in the U.S. has plummeted amid Volkswagen's pullback, according to WardsAuto.com.

Volkswagen remains in talks with U.S. regulators about fixes for certain diesel models it sold in the U.S. for several years that were equipped with software allowing it to cheat on emissions tests. It last year admitted to misleading regulators and consumers by installing illegal emissions-cheating software on nearly 600,000 diesel-powered vehicles in the U.S. It has said the same software is installed on some 11 million vehicles world-wide. The company has agreed to pay up to roughly $15 billion to remedy the situation in the U.S.

Credit: By John D. Stoll

DETAILS

Subject:	Diesel engines; Automobile industry; Market shares; Automobiles; Emission standards
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Market shares; Corporation: Volkswagen AG; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Volkswagen AG; NAICS: 336110, 336390
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079680
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-vw-uncertain-on-u-s-future-diesel/docview/1819079680/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 262 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Associated Press --- NEW YORK Pilot Error Is Cited In '15 La Guardia Skid A Delta Air Lines jet skidded off a snowy runway at La Guardia Airport last year because the pilot used too much reverse thrust and lost control of the plane's direction, federal investigators said.

FULL TEXT

NEW JERSEY

Insurer to Drop Out

Of Health Exchange

Health Republic of New Jersey is leaving the state's health-care insurance marketplace created under the Affordable Care Act.

Officials with Health Republic of New Jersey said the co-op has been under "considerable financial strain" due to requirements under the ACA's risk adjustment mandate.

The program requires insurers with healthier and less expensive enrollees to contribute to a fund that supports plans serving sicker and more expensive customers. Health Republic owes more than $46 million under the program this year.

The state Department of Banking and Insurance said Health Republic will serve customers through the end of 2016.

The move follows similar announcements earlier from Oscar Health Insurance and UnitedHealthcare.

-- Associated Press

MIDTOWN

Muslim Woman Says

Man Set Fire to Blouse

A Muslim woman wearing traditional clothing has told police that a man set her blouse on fire in New York City.

The New York Police Department hate crimes task force is investigating it as a possible bias crime. No arrests have been made.

Police said the incident happened on Saturday night and the victim, a 35-year-old tourist, patted out the fire. She said she saw a man standing nearby holding a lighter, who walked away.

-- Associated Press

MANHATTAN

Tenement Museum

Widens Its Focus

The Tenement Museum is expanding its story of immigration on Manhattan's Lower East Side for the first time to include those who settled there in the decades after World War II.

Next July, the museum is adding an exhibition on Holocaust survivors, Puerto Rican migrants and Chinese immigrants who arrived in the neighborhood after 1945.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK

Pilot Error Is Cited

In '15 La Guardia Skid

A Delta Air Lines jet skidded off a snowy runway at La Guardia Airport last year because the pilot used too much reverse thrust and lost control of the plane's direction, federal investigators said.

There were no serious injuries aboard the airliner arriving from Atlanta on March 5, 2015, but the National Transportation Safety Board chairman said it was "a very close call."

The Boeing MC-88 veered left, hit a fence with its left wing and came to rest with its nose on an embankment.

The NTSB faulted the pilot for mishandling the landing and faulted the flight crew for failing to evacuate the plane promptly.

Atlanta-based Delta said Tuesday in a statement that it "will use this NTSB guidance to further enhance the safety of our global operation."

-- Associated Press

BRONX

Habitat for Humanity

Sets 57-Unit Project

Affordable-housing advocates say New York City is getting the largest multifamily development ever built by a Habitat for Humanity affiliate.

Habitat for Humanity New York City and a for-profit developer called the Almat Group have announced the closing on a property in the Bronx's Williamsbridge neighborhood.

They say the 57-unit development, called Sydney House, will include green roofs, an interior landscaped court with trees, and parking for bikes as well as for vehicles.

Construction on the $30 million project is expected to begin next year.

The Habitat model combines the "sweat equity" of home buyers with the work of volunteers and contractors. The goal is to build high-quality homes at lowered costs.

-- Associated Press

CONNECTICUT

Auditor Says UConn

Misuses State Funds

State auditors say the University of Connecticut has been misusing state money that was earmarked for maintenance, diverting it instead to renovation and construction projects on campus.

The state auditors' report released Tuesday covers the fiscal years that ended in July 2014 and July 2015.

In it, auditors say, they found more than $49 million in deferred maintenance money that was spent on projects such as increasing seating at a dining hall, renovating laboratories and improving the safety of pedestrian walkways.

In its written response, the school says it believes the money was used appropriately to repair or renovate under-maintained facilities or bring projects up to current standards.

The school says it reported the use of the funding to the Legislature and other state agencies without objection.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Museums; Criminal investigations; Auditors; Noncitizens; Aircraft accidents & safety
Business indexing term:	Subject: Auditors Aircraft accidents & safety; Industry: 71211 : Museums
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: LaGuardia Airport; NAICS: 488119; Name: Habitat for Humanity; NAICS: 624229, 813319; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	71211: Museums
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079664
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1819079664/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 263 of 500

Judge Grills Potential Bridge Jurors --- Pool whittled down as questions center on travel over span, knowledge of case

Ramey, Corinne . Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

While the questionnaire wasn't made public, aspects of it were discussed in court: where potential jurors lived, if they had relatives who worked in law enforcement, their social-media use and whether they could be impartial when evaluating someone who had taken a plea agreement.

FULL TEXT

As U.S. District Judge Susan Wigenton questioned potential jurors Tuesday, she asked several times about something that seemed relevant to a case about a traffic jam: "Do you travel at all over the George Washington Bridge?"

Judge Wigenton is presiding over the trial of Bill Baroni, a former top executive at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, and Bridget Kelly, a former deputy chief of staff to New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie.

Federal prosecutors allege Mr. Baroni and Ms. Kelly were part of a scheme to close local-access lanes and toll booths on the George Washington Bridge in 2013. The scheme, they allege, was intended to punish the Democratic mayor of Fort Lee, N.J., for declining to endorse Mr. Christie, a Republican. Both have pleaded not guilty.

Opening statements are expected to begin Monday in federal court in Newark. Jurors must vote unanimously to convict Mr. Baroni and Ms. Kelly.

Jury selection began Thursday when 250 potential jurors filled out questionnaires; on Monday, the judge and attorneys trimmed the number to about 120. While the questionnaire wasn't made public, aspects of it were discussed in court: where potential jurors lived, if they had relatives who worked in law enforcement, their social-media use and whether they could be impartial when evaluating someone who had taken a plea agreement.

Finding jurors willing to evaluate the case strictly on what they hear in court, and not past impressions, came up repeatedly. The lane closures happened more than three years ago, and the fallout -- from legislative hearings to investigations to preparations for the trial -- has received extensive news coverage in the state.

On Tuesday, potential jurors were questioned about a range of topics including marriages, jobs, children and hobbies.

One man said he regularly writes comments on online news stories, although none have been about the case. A woman spoke of her hobby of decorating towels with lace. Another woman said she has strong feelings about Mr. Christie because she is a teacher.

Judge Wigenton asked many if they had read news about the case or discussed it. She repeatedly said having read about the case, or formed opinions, was normal.

"It's kind of a dinner-talk kind of thing," said one man.

A woman who works as a librarian said, "You know, people come to the reference desk and want to talk about something." Still, she added, she could be unbiased. The judge noted the librarian, in her questionnaire, had written: "It should be Chris Christie on trial."

Judge Wigenton eliminated several potential jurors, including a self-described Christie supporter who said he had attended a fundraiser for the governor, and an engineer who had done work related to the Port Authority.

One potential juror called the case "terribly political" and said he would try to be impartial, but "I can't erase what I feel or what I thought." He was excused.

Court filings and discussions Tuesday suggested "terribly political" is a label few would dispute.

On Sunday, attorneys for Mr. Baroni filed a motion to exclude evidence that could indicate Mr. Baroni was involved in the scheme to curry favor with Mr. Christie. In August, the defense attorneys wrote, prosecutors said Mr. Baroni's motivation in part was that "he believed that Governor Christie would appreciate him for wanting to send a message" to the Fort Lee mayor.

Mr. Baroni's attorneys called this a "fundamental and significant shift in the government's theory of the case" and said it should be excluded because it wasn't included in the indictment.

Jury selection is scheduled to continue Wednesday. Leaving court Tuesday, Michael Critchley, who represents Ms. Kelly, said the process had been trying for his client. "Once we get 12 jurors in the box, having an opportunity to for the first time hear my client testify about what occurred, it will be clear that she's innocent of the charges filed against her."

As he left court, Mr. Baroni, who had appeared to be constantly conferring with his attorneys during the jury questioning, was asked what he has been doing lately.

"Making sure I don't make any mistakes in court," said his lawyer, Michael Baldassare.

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Court hearings & proceedings; Juries; Bridges; Voir dire; Attorneys; Public prosecutors; Questionnaires; Indictments; Librarians; Legal arguments
Business indexing term:	Industry: 54111 : Offices of Lawyers 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Baroni, Bill
Classification:	54111: Offices of Lawyers; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819079656
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/judge-grills-potential-bridge-jurors-pool/docview/1819079656/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 264 of 500

More Builders Say No to Parking Lots

Fung, Esther . Fung, Esther.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Developer D4 Urban LLC successfully leased mostly studio and one-bedroom apartments adjacent to a rail stop in Denver with a 1:1 ratio of parking space to unit, but noted that postoccupancy surveys show that residents still want ample parking spaces.\n

FULL TEXT

Bad news for car owners: Developers in more U.S. cities are reducing the amount of parking spaces included in new projects as local authorities seek to encourage the use of mass transit and free up space for parks, housing or other uses.

In San Diego's Little Italy neighborhood, architecture-and-development company Jonathan Segal FAIA ruffled feathers of nearby residents after it disclosed plans to build an eight-story, 35-unit apartment complex with no parking spaces. Without the added costs of a garage, the studio units of around 400 square feet apiece would be more affordable, the firm said.

"It's the future. There's a strong demand for people who want to rent units that are efficient," said developer Jonathan Segal, noting that digging underground parking lots for the building would drive up costs and take away space that could be used for more housing. Each car takes up about 350 square feet of parking space, including access lanes, he said. Without these costs, he estimates rents will be $1,300 to $1,500 a month, barely half that of comparable apartments nearby.

At the condominium across the street, residents raised concerns about the lack of parking lots during a meeting with the developer last week. Susan Keating, a resident who was present at that meeting, said most of the concerns centered on the possibility "these micro units might be rented out to people who still drive and they might drive round and round the block looking out for parking more than for pedestrians."

Property developers must adhere to zoning codes that typically include providing a minimum number of parking spaces for a certain amount of space used by tenants. But big cities such as New York and San Francisco have been leaders in removing or reducing parking requirements in recent years as part of efforts to curb traffic congestion and encourage more people to use mass transit. Now smaller cities and even some states are following suit.

Nashville, Tenn., is considering proposals to convert parking facilities to housing or other uses. In Oregon, the Transportation Planning Rule requires state, regional and local jurisdictions to reduce parking spaces per capita and improve opportunities for alternatives to the automobile.

Advocates for the removal of parking requirements say they drive up housing costs unnecessarily. In downtown and inner-city projects where buildings cover entire lots, developers have to build costly underground or multistory parking garages.

Researchers in Miami and Los Angeles have found the reduction of parking requirements lowered construction costs significantly and spurred development of homes in areas previously deemed unprofitable. Earlier parking requirements had compelled developers to build fewer units than the total permitted because it was too expensive to build the required parking spaces.

And in some cities, the deep-rooted habits of residents are still a big influence on parking. Developer D4 Urban LLC successfully leased mostly studio and one-bedroom apartments adjacent to a rail stop in Denver with a 1:1 ratio of parking space to unit, but noted that postoccupancy surveys show that residents still want ample parking spaces.

Credit: By Esther Fung

DETAILS

Subject:	Parking facilities; Mass transit; Site planning; Construction costs
Business indexing term:	Subject: Construction costs; Industry: 81293 : Parking Lots and Garages
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	81293: Parking Lots and Garages
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Section:	The Property Report
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819036575
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/more-builders-say-no-parking-lots/docview/1819036575/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 265 of 500

World News: Turkey Asks U.S. To Arrest Cleric

Coker, Margaret . Coker, Margaret.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Turkey requested that U.S. authorities detain the Turkish Muslim cleric living in self-imposed exile in Pennsylvania whom President Recep Tayyip Erdogan accuses of masterminding a failed coup that killed at least 271 people in July, according to the state Anadolu news agency.

The request comes amid a complex and lengthy extradition process that Turkey is pursuing to have Fethullah Gulen, a onetime ally of the Turkish leader, stand trial in his homeland on charges including leading a terrorist organization, organizing a coup attempt and a variety of financial misdeeds.

Mr. Gulen vigorously denies any wrongdoing and says the charges against him are part of a political vendetta that started after his supporters in Turkey's civil service and media in 2013 began investigating and publishing corruption allegations against politicians close to the president.

U.S. Vice President Joe Biden visited Turkey last month to help smooth relations that have been troubled since the failed summer coup. While the two nations share many strategic priorities, including the war against Islamic State, there is a deep-seated belief in Ankara among Turkish leaders that the U.S. is harboring a man who is a security menace on par with al Qaeda.

Washington, meanwhile, is concerned that Mr. Erdogan has undermined the rule of law in Turkey by arresting and purging from their jobs tens of thousands of people as part of a crackdown against political opponents, including Mr. Gulen and his followers.

Mr. Biden told Turkish officials during his August visit that Washington was treating Turkish extradition demands seriously, but that the White House couldn't influence or override the procedures of the U.S. justice system, which requires credible evidence to act against a suspect.

The request to U.S. authorities, made public Tuesday, includes an arrest warrant issued by the chief prosecutor in Ankara, the Turkish capital, on the charge of masterminding the coup, according to the state news agency, citing an unnamed Turkish official. It isn't clear whether the prosecutor has formally charged Mr. Gulen with that crime.

The Anadolu report offered no further detail about the evidence used to support that accusation. Turkish officials weren't immediately available to comment because of a national holiday.

Credit: By Margaret Coker

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Arrest warrants; Coups d'etat; Extradition
Location:	Turkey
People:	Erdogan, Recep Tayyip; Gulen, Fethullah
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819036545
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-turkey-asks-u-s-arrest-cleric/docview/1819036545/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 266 of 500

Dollar-Bond Issues Soaring

Chan, Carol . Chan, Carol.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A further US$7.2 billion will mature in 2018 and US$12.6 billion more in 2018. [...]many Chinese developers have used up their onshore bond quotas -- issuers can't sell more onshore debt if outstanding bonds exceed 40% of the issuers' net-asset value.

FULL TEXT

After a near two-year dry spell, Chinese property firms are venturing back to the offshore bond market.

Development companies issued four U.S. dollar-denominated bonds with a total value of US$1.55 billion in August, according to Dealogic. That marked a 173% increase from July and a 287% jump from the previous August. It was also the highest monthly issuance by Chinese developers in 18 months.

Chinese property firms used to generate about half of Asia's high-yield issuance. Then in January 2015, mainland regulators let real-estate developers not listed on the domestic stock market issue debt via public offerings. This coincided with interest-rate cuts that made domestic debt much cheaper for issuers. The upshot has been that, for nearly two years, China's offshore market has largely vanished.

Any indication that the offshore market is coming back is good news for the international banks that arrange such deals, and the international fund houses that need such deals to meet return targets.

For the first 12 days in September, three Chinese developers issued US$459 million in dollar bonds. This suggests that August wasn't a blip and better terms are wooing China issuers back to the offshore market.

"The significant drop in U.S. Treasury yields [after the U.K. voted to leave the European Union] and the large inflow of funds into emerging markets have driven the absolute funding cost of issuing U.S. dollar bonds to attractive levels, especially for high-yield issuers," said Derek Armstrong, head of Asia Pacific debt capital markets at Credit Suisse.

The average yield on Asian firms' non-investment-grade dollar bonds has dropped to 6.41%, about 1.6 percentage points lower than at the start of the year, based on data from the J.P. Morgan Asia Credit Index. Bond yields fall as their prices rise.

"Given the attractive pricing levels, it is an opportunistic time for Chinese property developers to look at tapping the international bond markets, especially for those that may want to refinance existing offshore bonds that are callable or are maturing in the next one to two years," Mr. Armstrong said.

According to Dealogic, US$990 million of dollar bonds issued by Chinese developers are due to mature by the end of the year. A further US$7.2 billion will mature in 2018 and US$12.6 billion more in 2018.

Moreover, many Chinese developers have used up their onshore bond quotas -- issuers can't sell more onshore debt if outstanding bonds exceed 40% of the issuers' net-asset value. Beijing is also tightening the approval process for onshore bonds to rein in the market, so some firms are looking for opportunities to raise funds in the offshore market, said Matthew Kong at S&P Global Ratings. According to S&P, developers issuing offshore bonds this year can shave 0.5 to 6.25 percentage points off their annual bond coupon rates, compared with bonds they issued in the past few years.

The convergence of bond yields on onshore and offshore markets also increased the appeal of offshore issuance.

Road King Infrastructure Ltd. is a prime example. The Hong Kong-listed company, which has property-development projects mainly in Yangtze River Delta and Bohai Rim regions, recently issued bonds both offshore and onshore. It raised US$500 million through the issue of five-year dollar bonds with a coupon of 4.70% in late August and 1.5 billion yuan ($224.5 million) from a five-year yuan bond in China's onshore market with a coupon of 4.50% this week.

Issuing U.S. dollar bonds still exposes Chinese developers to foreign-exchange risk, particularly given the yuan's tendency to weaken over the past year. Developers such as Road King issue onshore bonds in China to avoid a currency mismatch between their liabilities and revenue.

"In the long term, we hope to raise funds in where our businesses are located," said Road King's executive director, Derek Zen.

Credit: By Carol Chan

DETAILS

Subject:	International finance; Bond issues; American dollar; Offshore
Business indexing term:	Subject: International finance Bond issues American dollar
Location:	United States--US; China
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Section:	The Property Report
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819036284
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/dollar-bond-issues-soaring/docview/1819036284/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 267 of 500

U.S. News: NCAA to Relocate Events Over Law

Bauerlein, Valerie . Bauerlein, Valerie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The NCAA joined the National Basketball Association, Bruce Springsteen, PayPal Holdings Inc. and others in boycotting North Carolina because of a state law known as House Bill 2, which they say is discriminatory toward lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

FULL TEXT

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has pulled seven tournament games from North Carolina in protest of a law stating that transgender people must use the public bathroom associated with the gender of their birth.

The NCAA joined the National Basketball Association, Bruce Springsteen, PayPal Holdings Inc. and others in boycotting North Carolina because of a state law known as House Bill 2, which they say is discriminatory toward lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

The decision was a blow to a state that takes pride in its NCAA tournament prowess, particularly in men's basketball.

North Carolina's Republican-led legislature and Republican Gov. Pat McCrory passed the bathroom law in an emergency session in March to head off a Charlotte ordinance that would have allowed transgender people to choose the restroom matching their gender identity. Supporters hailed the state law as an important measure to protect both safety and privacy.

Mr. McCrory and leaders of the state House and Senate didn't respond to requests for comment.

North Carolina GOP director Dallas Woodhouse said the NCAA's decision was the "height of absurdity." Mr.

Woodhouse said the NCAA was a politically correct bully, joining the NBA, which in July pulled next year's All-Star Game from Charlotte.

Credit: By Valerie Bauerlein

DETAILS

Subject:	Transgender persons; College sports; Gender identity
Location:	North Carolina; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: National Collegiate Athletic Association--NCAA; NAICS: 813990
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818654655
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-ncaa-relocate-events-over-law/docview/1818654655/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 268 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

North Korea's nuclear test raises the impetus for closer military cooperation between Japan and the U.S. --- China boosted its effort to cool a domestic bond market that has thrived on an influx of cheap short-term money. ---

FULL TEXT

Clinton said she was feeling much better after a pneumonia diagnosis and promised to release additional medical records this week.

Trump demanded that Clinton retract comments in which she called some of his supporters "deplorable."

A Syria cease-fire took formal effect amid continued fighting, as the U.S. and Russia sought seven straight days of relative calm to trigger a broader peace initiative.

Philippine leader Duterte said U.S. advisers should leave, warning they are a target for extremists.

North Korea's nuclear test raises the impetus for closer military cooperation between Japan and the U.S.

China boosted its effort to cool a domestic bond market that has thrived on an influx of cheap short-term money.

Incarceration rates are rebounding in some states, amid an opiate epidemic and some high-profile crimes.

The NCAA has pulled seven tournament games from North Carolina over a transgender bathroom law.

Cameron is leaving Britain's Parliament, ending the ex-prime minister's 15-year career as a lawmaker.

The bodies of three Americans who died fighting against Islamic State began a return home.

DETAILS

Subject:	Bond issues; Bond markets; Truces & cease fires
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bond issues Bond markets
Location:	Syria; China; United States--US; United Kingdom--UK; Japan; Russia; North Carolina; North Korea
Company / organization:	Name: National Collegiate Athletic Association--NCAA; NAICS: 813990
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Bankin g And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818654554
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1818654554/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 269 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Wells Fargo has told some employees to stop cross-selling products to customers, while a Senate panel said it plans a hearing into the bank's sales practices. ---

FULL TEXT

Fed officials, lacking a strong consensus for action ahead of their next policy meeting, are leaning toward waiting until late in the year before raising rates.

U.S. stocks rebounded as concerns about interest rates eased. The Dow rose 239.62 points to 18325.07.

A rise in government-bond yields has investors assessing prospects for another bond-market "tantrum."

Wells Fargo has told some employees to stop cross-selling products to customers, while a Senate panel said it plans a hearing into the bank's sales practices.

Canadian fertilizer firms Agrium and Potash agreed to merge, forming a company valued at about $27 billion.

Samsung nominated its chairman's son to the board as shares slid in the wake of a global phone recall.

Weight Watchers said its CEO is stepping down and that it is starting a search for his successor.

Amazon's Bezos disclosed plans for a giant reusable rocket for sending people and satellites into orbit.

A Hanjin vessel was set to finish unloading in California, clearing the way for more of the firm's ships to dock.

Germany's Linde ended deal talks with U.S. rival Praxair, derailing a combination of industrial-gas giants.

DETAILS

Subject:	Bond markets
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bond markets
Location:	United States--US; California
Company / organization:	Name: Weight Watchers International Inc; NAICS: 533110, 812191; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
column:	Business & Finance

Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818654392
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1818654392/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 270 of 500

U.S. News: CEOs See Sluggish Growth

Morath, Eric . Morath, Eric.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]of whether Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton or Republican rival Donald Trump wins, Mr. Oberhelman said, the business advocacy group's agenda for 2017 won't change: expanding free-trade agreements, lowering business taxes and reducing regulation.

FULL TEXT

Chief executives see the U.S. economy stuck in slow-growth mode and appear to have little optimism that November's election will spark stronger gains.

The Business Roundtable's quarterly survey of CEOs, released Monday, shows the economic outlook among leaders of America's largest businesses is little changed from a year ago. The election is one reason businesses are reluctant to increase capital investment or hire at a stronger pace, said Doug Oberhelman, CEO of Caterpillar Inc. and the group's chairman.

"At this time of every election cycle, especially after a two-term president, there is a degree of uncertainty," he said.

Regardless of whether Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton or Republican rival Donald Trump wins, Mr. Oberhelman said, the business advocacy group's agenda for 2017 won't change: expanding free-trade agreements, lowering business taxes and reducing regulation.

But neither candidate support the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal, a top priority for the group. Roundtable president John Engler said the group is pushing for Congress to vote on it before President Barack Obama leaves office.

"Public support for TPP has come up," Mr. Engler said. That's "remarkable given the unprecedented opposition from the two major presidential candidates."

CEOs see the economy gathering little momentum in the second half, according to the group's third-quarter survey.

The business leaders expect a slight deceleration in hiring, with 27% saying their firms plan to add to U.S. payrolls in the next six months, compared with 29% in the second-quarter survey. The share planning to reduce employment rose by a percentage point, to 36%.

CEOs' outlook on business investment was virtually unchanged from the second quarter, with 38% expecting to boost business spending in the next six months. The sales outlook was slightly weaker, but still a majority expect higher sales in the next two quarters.

"This reflects the unfortunate new normal," Mr. Oberhelman said. "The U.S. economy is pretty much stuck in neutral."

The executives expect the economy to grow 2.2% for all of 2016, up from a 2.1% annual gain forecast in the prior survey. Given that the economy has grown at near a 1% annual rate through the first half of the year, that would amount to a modest acceleration in the second half. But 2.2% growth is just in line with the average gain during the seven-year-old expansion.

The third-quarter survey was conducted between Aug. 3 and Aug. 24. Responses were received from 144 CEOs.

Credit: By Eric Morath

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Chief executive officers; Economic conditions; Candidates; Elections
Business indexing term:	Subject: Chief executive officers Economic conditions; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818654128
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-ceos-see-sluggish-growth/docview/1818654128/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 271 of 500

Business News: Industrial Gas Giants End Talks On Merger

Eyk Henning . Eyk Henning.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Industrial-gas giant Linde AG ended merger talks with U.S. rival Praxair Inc. because the German company feared its Munich headquarters would lose significance, according to people familiar with the talks, derailing a combination that would have created the industry's largest player, valued at roughly $60 billion.

FULL TEXT

FRANKFURT -- Industrial-gas giant Linde AG ended merger talks with U.S. rival Praxair Inc. because the German company feared its Munich headquarters would lose significance, according to people familiar with the talks, derailing a combination that would have created the industry's largest player, valued at roughly $60 billion.

Both companies -- each worth around $30 billion -- said on Monday in separate statements that they terminated talks that were disclosed almost four weeks ago.

Linde said its chief executive and shareholder representatives on the company's supervisory board decided to end talks because discussions over "governance aspects did not result in a mutual understanding." Linde said the strategic rationale of a tie-up in principle remained.

Merger talks between Linde and Praxair had propelled the shares of both companies because the move would have resulted in considerable synergies and a more balanced business profile. Linde shares fell nearly 7% in German trading Monday. In 4 p.m. New York trading, Praxair shares were up nearly 1%.

Two people familiar with the matter said Linde's leadership felt uncomfortable with a merger because the company and its Munich headquarters would have lost too many key functions.

In a letter to Linde employees reviewed by The Wall Street Journal, Chief Executive Wolfgang Buchele said concerns about the balance of power between the two companies overrode the desire for a merger.

Nina Trentmann contributed to this article.

Credit: By Eyk Henning

DETAILS

Subject:	Industrial gases; Negotiations; Acquisitions & mergers; Alliances
Business indexing term:	Subject: Acquisitions & mergers; Industry: 32512 : Industrial Gas Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Linde AG; NAICS: 541330; Name: Praxair Inc; NAICS: 325120, 423830
Classification:	32512: Industrial Gas Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818654025
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-industrial-gas-giants-end-talks-on/docview/1818654025/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those case s records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 272 of 500

Business Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Tapan Panchal --- KIRKLAND & ELLIS Law Firm Picks Up Top Lawyers Law firm Kirkland & Ellis LLP picked up two of country's top conservative lawyers and their elite 17-lawyer Washington, D.C., legal boutique.

FULL TEXT

GLOBAL LOGISTIC PROPERTIES

Hillwood to Sell

Assets for $1.1 Billion

Global Logistic Properties Ltd. has agreed to buy distribution centers from Hillwood Development Co. for $1.1 billion, according to people familiar with the matter.

GLP, a large industrial property company part-owned by Singapore's sovereign wealth fund, has been aggressively expanding in the U.S. over the last two years, as the rise of online shopping drives up the values of distribution centers.

Hillwood is controlled by Ross Perot Jr., a Dallas-based property investor and son of the former U.S. presidential candidate.

-- Robbie Whelan

SASOL

Slump in Oil Prices

Weights on Results

South African petrochemical and energy producer Sasol Ltd. reported a steep drop in net profit and vowed to cut costs further in the face of a sustained slump in oil prices.

Sasol said on Monday that net profit fell 55% to 13.22 billion South African rand ($914.4 million) in the year to end-September from 29.72 billion rand in the previous fiscal year despite cost reductions and an increase in oil output. Revenue fell 6.6% to 172.9 billion rand. Headline earnings per share fell 17% to 41.40 rand, in line with expectations.

Sasol said it now expects sustainable cash cost savings of 2.5 billion rand through 2019, a billion rand more than it had previously targeted.

-- Matina Stevis

ASSOCIATED BRITISH FOODS

Pound's Tumble

Makes Impact

The British pound's post-Brexit tumble benefited the Primark discount fashion chain's recent results, but disadvantages resulting from the currency's fall also have grown.

Associated British Foods PLC, the food and ingredients company that owns Primark, said on Monday that the weaker pound after the U.K.'s June 23 vote to leave the European Union would bolster its results for fiscal 2016, ending Saturday. But it warned that the currency move would hurt profit margins in fiscal 2017, because it has many expenses in dollars and earns much of its revenue in pounds and euros.

-- Tapan Panchal

KIRKLAND & ELLIS

Law Firm Picks

Up Top Lawyers

Law firm Kirkland & Ellis LLP picked up two of country's top conservative lawyers and their elite 17-lawyer Washington, D.C., legal boutique.

Kirkland announced Monday that it will absorb Paul Clement, Viet Dinh and their team at Bancroft PLLC.

Mr. Clement, 50 years old, is the former solicitor general under President George W. Bush and among the most experienced U.S. Supreme Court advocates.

Mr. Dinh, 48, an assistant attorney general under President George W. Bush, helped develop national security laws passed in the wake of Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, known as the Patriot Act. He founded Bancroft after leaving government in 2003. Mr. Dinh sits on the boards of directors of 21st Century Fox Inc., Revlon Inc. and LPL Financial Holdings Inc. News Corp., owner of The Wall Street Journal, and 21st Century Fox, were part of the same company until mid-2013.

-- Joe Palazzolo

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys; Currency; Profit margins; Law firms; Earnings per share; Cost control; Rands
Business indexing term:	Subject: Currency Profit margins Law firms Earnings per share Cost control Rands; Industry: 54111 : Offices of Lawyers
Location:	Singapore; United States--US
People:	Perot, H Ross; Bush, George W
Company / organization:	Name: 21st Century Fox; NAICS: 516120; Name: Kirkland & Ellis; NAICS: 541110; Name: Bancroft PLLC; NAICS: 541110; Name: Associated British Foods PLC; NAICS: 311812, 311920, 551112; Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110; Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120
Classification:	54111: Offices of Lawyers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818653915
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1818653915/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 273 of 500

Business News: Hanjin Restarts Freight Deliveries --- Ships stranded by financial woes begin to unload goods with help from Korean Air

Kwanwoo Jun . Kwanwoo Jun.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Court papers show a total of 13 ships either owned or leased by Hanjin are set to make their next port of call in the U.S. The cargo operator got some respite over the weekend after Korean Air Lines Co., its largest shareholder and Hanjin Group's flagship company, agreed to lend it 60 billion won ($54 million), using Hanjin Shipping's Long Beach port-terminal assets as collateral.

FULL TEXT

SEOUL -- A Hanjin Shipping Co. vessel was set to finish unloading freight in California on Monday, clearing the way for more of its ships to dock, as the ailing South Korean company works with ports in the U.S. and around the world to get its frozen supply chain moving again.

The Hanjin Greece docked at Long Beach, Calif., on Saturday and began unloading cargo Sunday after days of being stranded off the coast. A Hanjin Shipping spokeswoman in Seoul said at least three more cargo ships -- the Hanjin Gdynia, the Hanjin Jungil and the Hanjin Montevideo -- were expected to follow suit at the U.S. port.

The financial woes of one of the world's largest shipping lines have left as much as $14 billion of cargo stranded at sea, and pressure is mounting on South Korea and the U.S. to break the logjam. Several Hanjin ships have been seized by creditors or turned away from ports, with terminals refusing to unload cargo for fear they won't get paid.

Court papers show a total of 13 ships either owned or leased by Hanjin are set to make their next port of call in the U.S.

The cargo operator got some respite over the weekend after Korean Air Lines Co., its largest shareholder and Hanjin Group's flagship company, agreed to lend it 60 billion won ($54 million), using Hanjin Shipping's Long Beach port-terminal assets as collateral. The airline's agreement Saturday is part of Hanjin Group's earlier pledge to provide 100 billion won in aid to help resolve the cargo crisis. Hanjin Group Chairman Cho Yang-ho has promised to make the remaining 40 billion won available by Tuesday, according to Korean Air.

One of Hanjin's lawyers on Friday said in a U.S. federal court that the company has both the funding and the legal permission necessary to unload four ships bound for U.S. ports.

Hanjin also has asked a South Korean court for authorization to use a further $3.5 million to have goods that already have been unloaded and are sitting at U.S. ports delivered to their owners, a process that its lawyer said could be jump-started as soon as Wednesday.

South Korean Minister of Trade, Industry and Energy Joo Hyung-hwan met with local exporters and smaller shippers Sunday and promised to use government funds to help deliver cargo to its final destination on time.

Mr. Joo also said the government was working with Hanjin's smaller South Korean rival, Hyundai Merchant Marine Co., and other companies to deploy extra vessels to deal with stranded cargo.

Hanjin filed for the equivalent of chapter 11 in South Korea last month and days later sought chapter 15 bankruptcy protection in the U.S.

Chapter 15 gives a foreign company the benefits of U.S. bankruptcy law, including protections that prevent creditors from seizing assets. But the U.S. court's power is limited and much of the aftermath of the bankruptcy will have to be worked out in South Korea.

The Seoul central district court has given Hanjin until Nov. 25 to submit a rehabilitation plan that will determine whether it can continue operating. However, this is seen by analysts as granting the company more time for an orderly liquidation, given that the government has signaled that it sees no future for Hanjin by calling on smaller rival Hyundai Merchant to buy its healthy assets.

The company and Hyundai Merchant handle the bulk of Korea's exports and have been unprofitable for several years, amassing debts in a global shipping market awash in excess capacity and plummeting prices.

Credit: By Kwanwoo Jun

DETAILS

Subject:	Container ships; Bankruptcy reorganization; Ships; Ports; Bankruptcy laws
Business indexing term:	Subject: Container ships Bankruptcy reorganization Ports Bankruptcy laws; Industry: 48831 : Port and Harbor Operations
Location:	United States--US; California; South Korea
Company / organization:	Name: Hanjin Shipping Co; NAICS: 483111
Classification:	48831: Port and Harbor Operations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818653663
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hanjin-restarts-freight-deliveries/docview/1818653663/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be vis ible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 274 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, which established a national minimum wage, overtime and the 40-hour work week, exempted farm workers.

FULL TEXT

CALIFORNIA

Farmworkers to Get

Same Overtime Pay

California agricultural workers will become the first in the U.S. to receive overtime pay if they work more than eight hours a day, under a law signed Monday by Gov. Jerry Brown.

The law means that farm workers in the state will be treated like employees in other industries, where overtime generally is paid after a standard eight-hour day.

The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, which established a national minimum wage, overtime and the 40-hour work week, exempted farm workers.

Before the new law was signed, California farmworkers made overtime pay if they worked more than 10 hours a day or 60 hours a week. The new law will phase in a standard workweek with overtime pay from 2019 to 2022.

Republicans in the Legislature opposed the bill, saying it will hurt workers and farmers.

-- Alejandro Lazo

ILLINOIS

Grand Jury to Probe

Chicago Shooting

A grand jury will decide whether to charge Chicago police officers being investigated for allegedly lying about the fatal shooting of black teenager Laquan McDonald, a Cook County judge decided Monday.

Patricia Brown Holmes -- a special prosecutor appointed to look into allegations that officers lied about the circumstances surrounding Mr. McDonald's 2014 death -- requested that a grand jury be convened to hear evidence in the case. Ms. Holmes said in a telephone interview that she believed it would ensure the fairness of the case.

The judge presiding over the case approved her request in court proceedings Monday.

An undisclosed number of officers are being investigated for allegedly covering up for their colleague, Jason Van Dyke, who fatally shot Mr. McDonald 16 times.

Mr. Van Dyke, who is on administrative leave, is being prosecuted on first-degree murder charges. He has pleaded not guilty.

The police department is seeking to fire Mr. Van Dyke along with four other officers over the shooting of Mr. McDonald.

-- Shibani Mahtani

DETAILS

Subject:	Farmworkers; Overtime; Overtime pay; Shootings; State court decisions; Grand juries
Business indexing term:	Subject: Overtime Overtime pay
Location:	United States--US
People:	Holmes, Patricia Brown
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818653641
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1818653641/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 275 of 500

U.S. News: EPA Proposes New Water Rules for Nuclear Emergencies

Emshwiller, John R . Emshwiller, John R.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Opponents of the EPA proposal, including environmental groups and some state and federal officials, say the initiative represents a drastic departure from normal protection limits and could endanger people's health.

FULL TEXT

In the wake of a nuclear emergency, the Environmental Protection Agency thinks it would be acceptable for the public to temporarily drink water containing radioactive contamination at up to thousands of times normal federal safety limits.

The agency is proposing this in new drinking-water guidelines for use in the weeks or months after a radiological event, such as a nuclear-power-plant accident or terrorist "dirty" bomb.

The EPA has been looking for years at issuing drinking-water guidelines as part of broader recommendations about what to do if radioactive material is released into the environment. Agency officials have said the 2011 accident at the Fukushima nuclear complex in Japan, where radiation was released, influenced their thinking on the matter.

Public comments on the proposed guidelines are being evaluated and the EPA expects to release a final document this year, a spokeswoman said.

In written filings, the EPA said its normal radiation-safety limits, which are based on presumed exposures over decades, can be relaxed for a relatively brief period in emergencies without unduly increasing people's risk of harm.

Opponents of the EPA proposal, including environmental groups and some state and federal officials, say the initiative represents a drastic departure from normal protection limits and could endanger people's health. Internal EPA documents written by agency officials and obtained by environmentalists under the Freedom of Information Act, also raised concerns.

The proposed guidelines have gotten supportive comments, including from the American Water Works Association, a nonprofit group with over 4,000 water utilities as members. Kevin Morley, the security and preparedness program manager, called the EPA proposal a "reasonable approach" during times when "it is not an everyday, business-as-usual situation."

EPA officials declined to be interviewed but in written responses to questions, the agency said it took a "conservative approach."

The EPA proposal made public in June allows a person during emergency situations to drink water contaminated with enough picocuries of radioactive material to give up to 500 millirems of exposure in a year. There is a 100-millirem target for children and pregnant and nursing women. The average American gets about 300 millirems annually from natural background radiation, such as the sun.

In its written response, the EPA said its thinking on the drinking-water guidelines was influenced by the 2011 Fukushima accident. In the U.S., public water systems would be expected to return to meeting normal standards "as soon as practicable."

Credit: By John R. Emshwiller

DETAILS

Subject:	Guidelines; Environmental protection; Drinking water; Radioactive materials; Radiation
Company / organization:	Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818592074
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-epa-proposes-new-water-rules-nuclear/docview/1818592074/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 276 of 500

City News: Nonprofit Loses Records Ruling

Dawsey, Josh . Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Federal and state Investigators are examining whether the nonprofit, which raised more than $4.5 million before it was shut down, are looking at whether the organization's donors received special treatment from Mr. de Blasio's administration in exchange for contributions, people familiar with the matter have said.

FULL TEXT

A political nonprofit tied to New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio must hand over documents to a state ethics panel investigating the group's conduct, a state justice ruled.

The Campaign for One New York, which was closed this year and is now under scrutiny by state and federal investigators, had declined to comply with a subpoena from the New York State Joint Commission on Public Ethics that sought documents about its lobbying activities.

The ethics panel "has demonstrated that it had the authority to issue the subpoena, the requests therein are reasonably related to its investigation and an adequate factual basis supports the request," Denise Hartman, an acting Supreme Court justice, wrote in a ruling issued last week.

On Monday afternoon, Mr. de Blasio, a Democrat, said: "We disagree with the judge's final judgment, so we're exploring appellate options."

Laurence D. Laufer, a lawyer for the nonprofit, said the ethics panel "has not conducted this investigation in good faith. The panel, he said, "should conclude this politicized investigation because it is a waste of time and taxpayer resources."

Daniel J. Horwitz, chairman of the ethics panel, praised the justice's decision for reaffirming the panel's authority to enforce the state's lobbying laws.

"The commission and staff will continue to robustly enforce the law," he said.

While the Campaign for One New York said this spring it wouldn't cooperate with the ethics panel, the organization said it would continue to cooperate with the offices of U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara and Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance Jr.

In her ruling, Justice Hartman wrote that the nonprofit's contention that it didn't lobby the state in 2015 wasn't a sufficient reason to block the subpoena.

The nonprofit's top officials include a number of Mr. de Blasio's allies, such as Bill Hyers and Jonathan Rosen, who have been designated as "agents of the city" in the administration's effort to block a separate release of emails. Last week, two media organizations sued the administration to gain access to those documents.

Federal and state Investigators are examining whether the nonprofit, which raised more than $4.5 million before it was shut down, are looking at whether the organization's donors received special treatment from Mr. de Blasio's administration in exchange for contributions, people familiar with the matter have said.

No one has been charged with wrongdoing, and Mr. de Blasio has said he and his aides followed all laws.

Credit: By Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Investigations; Corruption in government; Political ethics; Nonprofit organizations; Disclosure; Ethics; Subpoenas; Lobbying
Business indexing term:	Subject: Disclosure
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	de Blasio, Bill
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818592073
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-nonprofit-loses-records-ruling/docview/1818592073/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 277 of 500

World News: Bodies of U.S. Fighters Head Home

Kesling, Ben . Kesling, Ben.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On Monday, the bodies of two of the men left the Sulaymaniyah international airport here in Iraqi Kurdistan bound for Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, said a spokeswoman for Rep. Ed Perlmutter (D., Colo.), who has helped in the repatriation process.

FULL TEXT

SULAYMANIYAH, Iraq -- The bodies of three Americans who died fighting Islamic State as volunteers for a Syrian Kurdish militia began a return home after a weekslong struggle by their families and the U.S. government to repatriate their remains.

The long and logistically complex journey from the Syrian battlefield to the U.S. revealed a simple truth: It is far easier for Americans to get to Syrian Kurdistan to fight Islamic State than it is for the remains of the fallen to come home.

"I didn't think he was going to get out," Reginald Savage of Raleigh, N.C., said of the remains of his son William, who died in early August. "I was planning on him being buried in Syria."

The remains of Mr. Savage, Levi Jonathan Shirley, and Jordan MacTaggart were held for weeks in Syrian Kurdistan after they died fighting against Islamic State forces. Later, they were driven across the region -- in ambulances displaying their so-called martyr photos -- before crossing into Iraqi Kurdistan, where the paperwork needed for the flights to the U.S. was secured, according to representatives of the semiautonomous Kurdish Syrian region of Rojava.

On Monday, the bodies of two of the men left the Sulaymaniyah international airport here in Iraqi Kurdistan bound for Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, said a spokeswoman for Rep. Ed Perlmutter (D., Colo.), who has helped in the repatriation process. The other body had been flown out on Sunday. Both flights were expected to have extended layovers in Amman, Jordan.

About a year and a half ago, the younger Mr. Savage joined dozens of other Americans to fight Islamic State as unpaid volunteers with the Kurdish forces in northern Syria.

The three men were part of an operation that began in May, when the Kurdish militia known as the YPG, along with their U.S. special-forces advisers, pushed westward across the Euphrates River into what is referred to as the Manbij pocket.

Like Mr. Savage, Mr. MacTaggart of Castle Rock, Colo., was killed in early August. Both likely died by gunfire, according to Gharib Hassou, a representative of YPG-affiliated Democratic Union Party. The third volunteer, Mr. Shirley of Arvada, Colo., was killed in July, likely from a land mine, his mother said.

The U.S. officially attempts to steer its citizens clear of such forays into Syria. "Private U.S. citizens are strongly discouraged from traveling to Syria to take part in the conflict," State Department spokesman John Kirby said. In practice, however, it does little to stop volunteers, family members say.

Mr. Shirley had wanted to be a U.S. Marine. Less than a week after he was told his eyesight disqualified him, he started researching how to get to Kurdistan, his mother said. He got his first combat experience in his first trip to Syria, his mother said, and when he got back to the U.S. he wanted only to return. "This time he would have had no illusions about war as romance," Ms. Shirley said. "He made it very clear that he was there for the atrocities that had been done there and to the United States."

Mr. Savage lied to his recruiters, telling them he had combat experience to ensure he was accepted, his father said. "When he got there, one of the guys that trained him said William was the greenest recruit they'd ever had," he said.

Mr. MacTaggart was eager to join the cause too, after a dangerous brush with drugs, his parents said.

"When he recovered from that he had an epiphany," his mother said. "He was high-minded," she added, going off to Syria with the conviction that he had to do something to put his ideals into practice.

Before his second trip, his parents said, an FBI agent dropped off a business card. "He asked Jordan to come and talk, that was it," said his mother, Melissa MacTaggart. "We never met him." The FBI declined to comment.

Americans don't need a visa to enter Iraqi Kurdistan, but their passports are stamped there before they are driven into Syria through YPG-controlled border checkpoints.

When fighters die in Syria, getting them home is a far more complex affair, and expensive.

Representatives of the Rojava region paid $43,600 for the cost to return the remains of all three men this time, according to Lucy Usoyan, a Washington-based representative of a Kurdish group that helped organize the return.

Credit: By Ben Kesling

DETAILS

Subject:	Militia groups; Human remains; Airports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Airports; Industry: 48811 : Airport Operations
Location:	Iraq; Syria; United States--US
Classification:	48811: Airport Operations

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818592059
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bodies-u-s-fighters-head-home/docview/1818592059/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 278 of 500

Syrian Cease-Fire Gets Fitful Start

Abi-Habib, Maria; Schwartz, Felicia; Raydan, Noam . Abi-Habib, Maria; Schwartz, Felicia; Raydan, Noam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A cease-fire took formal effect across Syria after sundown on Monday amid continued fighting, as the U.S. and Russia sought seven straight days of relative calm to trigger a broader peace initiative and military cooperation.

FULL TEXT

BEIRUT -- A cease-fire took formal effect across Syria after sundown on Monday amid continued fighting, as the U.S. and Russia sought seven straight days of relative calm to trigger a broader peace initiative and military cooperation.

Under the new cease-fire deal, once violence has been reduced to levels acceptable to both the U.S. and Russia for one week, the two countries will implement the next phase, establishing military cooperation and moving toward political negotiations.

U.S. officials made clear that a pullback in fighting may not start in the first days of the cease-fire, and acknowledged the risk of failure in the latest effort to stem five years of violence.

"This is the best thing we could think of," Secretary of State John Kerry said at a press conference in Washington. "There will be challenges in the days to come. We expect that. I expect that. And I think everybody does. But despite that, this plan has a chance to work."

Underscoring the doubts, Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, in the hours before the start of the cease-fire, vowed to take back all opposition-controlled territory.

Syria's mainstream political opposition and several rebel factions, meanwhile, continued to call for "guarantees" to ensure government implementation of the deal before they endorsed it.

And the White House, in its first comment on the cease-fire, said its success hinged on whether Russia followed through.

"We'd have some reasons to be skeptical that the Russians are able or are willing to implement the arrangement consistent with the way it's been described. But we'll see," said White House press secretary Josh Earnest.

Cease-fire violations were reported in opposition-held parts of Aleppo city, where activists reported strikes by government warplanes, and in southern Syria, where rebels pushed on with a fresh offensive in government-controlled areas.

Mr. Kerry and Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov reached agreement on the pact in Geneva early Saturday. Mr. Kerry also discussed the outlines of the deal with his counterpart in Iran, which is backing the Assad government with troops and support from its allied militia, Hezbollah, U.S. officials said.

Mr. Kerry and Obama administration officials described details of the deal, which hinges on a cessation of hostilities such as the one that was implemented but crumbled earlier this year.

A first phase requires not only a reduction in violence to levels acceptable to both the U.S. and Russia for seven days, but also an increase in humanitarian aid, a process Mr. Kerry said would take "a day or two or so."

After seven days of reduced violence, the U.S. and Russia would set up a so-called Joint Implementation Center, a common military venture in which they would coordinate action against the Islamic State extremist group and members of the Syria Conquest Front, a group formerly known as the Nusra Front -- which cut its links to al Qaeda in July in an effort to get the U.S. to stop targeting it.

The U.S. has continued to target the group, accusing it of plotting terror attacks against the West and maintaining its al Qaeda links.

Those two measures, Mr. Kerry said, could allow the parties to the conflict to finally turn a corner.

"They are designed to provide a period of calm that restores some sense of seriousness of purpose to the Russian effort, and the willingness of Assad to go to the table and negotiate," Mr. Kerry said at the State Department. "This is designed to bring people to the table in Geneva, in order to get under the auspices of the U.N. and begin to negotiate a political transition and the restoration of a peaceful and united Syria."

Importantly, once the Joint Implementation Center is created, the Assad regime's air force will be restricted in operations.

However, not all details were clear Monday. Mr. Kerry appeared to say at one point that the joint U.S.-Russian military task force would give the go-ahead to Syrian air force strikes. State Department spokesman John Kirby later issued a clarification, saying: "The purpose of the JIC [Joint Implementation Center], if and when it is established, would be to coordinate military action between the U.S. and Russia, not for any other party."

Mr. Kerry said U.S. and Russian officials have developed maps showing where various groups are operating, and that civilian areas and pockets controlled by opposition forces backed by the U.S. couldn't be struck by Syrian forces.

The maps were designed to head off the Syrian regime practice of saying it is going after Islamic State or al Qaeda-affiliated militants, while actually striking U.S.-backed rebels.

If Mr. Assad uses the days of calm to strike opposition groups under the guise of striking the Syria Conquest Front, "then we don't have seven days of calm, folks," Mr. Kerry said.

"Russia here plays the critical role," he added.

Mr. Kerry said there is a "clear clause" in the agreement to terminate the accord if either Russia or the U.S. isn't acting in good faith.

Russia has for months sought to cooperate militarily with the U.S. in Syria, and the establishment of the joint center is considered a key incentive for Russian cooperation on the cease-fire and humanitarian-aid provisions.

The U.S. insisted on seven full days of relative calm before the next phase to elicit Moscow's assent, officials said.

A key unknown is how Mr. Assad and his forces will react to the U.S.-Russian-brokered deal and whether Moscow can persuade its ally to go along.

The Syrian president on Monday walked through the streets of Daraya, a Damascus suburb that surrendered last month and returned to government control after a nearly four-year siege. Its 10,000 residents -- many malnourished -- were all forced to evacuate as part of the truce.

"The Syrian state is determined to retake every area from the terrorists, and restore security and safety," Mr. Assad said, according to the state run Syrian Arab News Agency. The regime refers to all its opponents as terrorists.

By the time the cease-fire went into effect Monday evening, the majority of Syria's rebel groups had not said whether they will abide by the deal.

Syria's armed and political opposition have criticized previous truces, claiming they favor the government by allowing it to continue laying siege to opposition-controlled communities across Syria to force their surrender.

Iran and the Lebanese Shiite movement Hezbollah, two close allies of Mr. Assad, declared support for the accord over the weekend.

Aid organizations said Monday they were eager to see the implementation by all sides so they can deliver much-needed humanitarian supplies, particularly in opposition-held districts of Aleppo city, where 300,000 civilians live and a government siege was reimposed last week.

In a potential stumbling block for the cease-fire, a Russian general said Monday that the U.S. had failed to share intelligence on rebel positions in Syria to enable cooperation between Moscow and Washington.

"The U.S. has not yet provided information allowing the clear identification of places and locations of Nusra Front . . . which is hampering fruitful joint work on the cessation of hostilities," Lt. Gen. Sergei Rudskoi, chief of the main operations department of the Russian General Staff, said in comments reported by Interfax news.

Credit: By Maria Abi-Habib, Felicia Schwartz and Noam Raydan

DETAILS

Subject:	Political activism; Truces & cease fires; Violence; Cooperation; Humanitarianism
Location:	United States--US; Syria; Russia
People:	Assad, Bashar Al; Kerry, John F
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818591929
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/syrian-cease-fire-gets-fitful-start/docview/1818591929/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 279 of 500

World News: Duterte Says U.S. Advisers Should Leave --- Philippine president suggests presence of American military invites extremism

Larano, Cris . Larano, Cris.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Officials weren't taken by surprise at the comment, "primarily because of the tendency of this individual to make some rather colorful comments," White House press secretary Josh Earnest said.

FULL TEXT

MANILA -- Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte called for the U.S. to withdraw its remaining military advisers, warning that their presence on a southern island makes them a valuable target for the extremist Abu Sayyaf militant group.

The remarks on Monday by Mr. Duterte, known for his blunt speech, are likely to further complicate his already prickly relationship with the U.S. The Obama administration last week canceled a meeting with Mr. Duterte at a regional summit after he referred to President Barack Obama as a "son of a whore" and railed against the colonial history of the Philippines. The slur against Mr. Obama was lobbed in the broader context of Mr. Duterte's approach to human rights in his high-profile war on drugs.

"For as long as we stay with America, we will never have peace," Mr. Duterte said during a swearing-in ceremony for public officials here. "We might as well give it up."

He warned that the continued presence of U.S. personnel in the Philippines risks inflaming an already volatile campaign to track down members of Abu Sayyaf, who security experts estimate number around 300 fighters.

Abu Sayyaf will kill Americans, Mr. Duterte said. "They will try to kidnap them for ransom," he said.

U.S. officials in Washington said they hadn't received any official contact from the Duterte government. Officials weren't taken by surprise at the comment, "primarily because of the tendency of this individual to make some rather colorful comments," White House press secretary Josh Earnest said.

Navy Cmdr. Gary Ross, the Pentagon spokesman, called the U.S.-Philippines relationship "one of our most enduring and important relationships in the Asia-Pacific region."

For the past two months, the U.S. has been consulting with Filipino counterparts on ways to assist the new administration's counterterrorism efforts. "We will continue to consult closely with our Filipino partners to appropriately tailor our assistance to whatever approach the new administration adopts," Cmdr. Ross said.

The comments sparked criticism from other Philippine politicians. Sen. Antonio Trillanes IV, a former navy officer, said Mr. Duterte was letting emotion cloud his judgment.

"The anti-U.S. bias of President Duterte should not be the basis of the recrafting of our security policies," Mr. Trillanes said in a statement. "The U.S. special operations forces have been instrumental in the development and increased effectiveness of our [Armed Forces of the Philippines]."

U.S. forces have been stationed in the southern Philippines since 2002, training and advising Filipino troops in their campaign against Abu Sayyaf, an affiliate of al Qaeda that has earned a grisly reputation for kidnapping and beheading Westerners. More recently the group has declared allegiance to Islamic State.

At its peak, the U.S.-Philippine operation involved more than 1,000 Americans before officially ending in 2015.

Mr. Duterte's raised questions about the relations between the U.S. and the Philippines, one of America's strongest allies in the Asia-Pacific region. He has said close ties with the U.S. are important, but he is also adamant in holding America to account for what he sees as its past excesses.

On Monday, he displayed pictures from the early 20th century showing American soldiers standing over a mass grave of Muslims in the southern Philippines.

Mr. Duterte's spokesman, Ernesto Abella, subsequently said the president's remarks were aimed at emphasizing how the country is attempting to craft an independent foreign policy.

Gordon Lubold in Washington contributed to this article.

Credit: By Cris Larano

DETAILS

Subject:	Advisors; Military aid; International relations-US; Presidents; Kidnapping; Armed forces
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92811 : National Security
Location:	Philippines
People:	Duterte, Rodrigo R
Company / organization:	Name: Armed Forces of the Philippines; NAICS: 928110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1818591781

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-duterte-says-u-s-advisers-should-leave/docview/1818591781/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 280 of 500

U.S. News: Inmate Numbers Climb Back Up --- After drops following new criminal justice laws, incarceration rates are rebounding

Palazzolo, Joe; Elinson, Zusha . Palazzolo, Joe; Elinson, Zusha.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In response, state officials tightened parole policies, and authorities put parolees back behind bars for violating the terms of their release as fast as they could, said Dina Tyler, a state prison official at the time who is now a deputy director at the agency overseeing parole in Arkansas.

FULL TEXT

An epidemic of opiate addiction and a handful of high-profile crimes have set back efforts by some states to restrain their prison populations, revealing cracks in bipartisan movement to reduce reliance on incarceration.

In Arkansas, lawmakers in 2011 passed a law to reduce harsh drug sentences, as a way to curb costs from overcrowded prisons. The prison population dropped 10% in two years. Then, in 2013, a man who had been released from prison and arrested several times while on parole carjacked and fatally shot an 18-year-old man in Little Rock.

In response, state officials tightened parole policies, and authorities put parolees back behind bars for violating the terms of their release as fast as they could, said Dina Tyler, a state prison official at the time who is now a deputy director at the agency overseeing parole in Arkansas.

"It was a natural reaction because something bad happened, and we don't want it to happen again, so we'll scoop them all up," said Ms. Tyler.

The result: Arkansas's prisons are more crowded than they were before the 2011 legislation. Similar reversals have occurred in a handful of other states in recent years.

"It just takes one incident to get things tracking in a different direction," said James Austin, president of the JFA Institute, a criminal-justice research group that works for Arkansas and other states to forecast prison-population trends, referring to the 2013 Little Rock murder.

A review of prison data from 2007 to 2014, the most recent year analyzed by the U.S. Justice Department's research arm, shows that at least five states -- Arkansas, Hawaii, Kentucky, New Hampshire and Ohio -- saw their incarcerated populations fall or stabilize after passing criminal-justice legislation only to see them rise again. Incarceration rates also rebounded in most of those states, and in others that passed laws targeting prison growth, including Arizona and Wisconsin, after dropping initially.

Overall, the percentage of American adults under correctional supervision declined 13% from 2007 to 2014, according to a Pew Charitable Trusts analysis of federal Bureau of Justice statistics. Prison rates dropped in most of the roughly 30 states that passed laws to curtail prison growth in that time, BJS data show.

Even in states where rates increased, state officials and criminal-justice experts say such laws have helped slow prison growth, averting millions of dollars in prison costs.

Still, efforts to curtail prison growth have been hampered by uneven implementation of new laws, state officials say. Elected judges in Kentucky and Ohio, for instance, have shown a reluctance to cut sentences and divert offenders into treatment rather than sending them to prison, state officials said. Parole officials haven't granted early release as often as lawmakers had hoped they would, they said.

The increase in opiate use also has played a role. In Kentucky, the number of jail and prison inmates climbed back to a near record this summer, the state corrections department said, after a drop following a 2011 law. John Tilley, Kentucky's justice and public-safety secretary, attributed the increase to offenders returning to prison in higher numbers and drug arrests fueled by the "heroin scourge."

The prison population in Ohio dipped after lawmakers overhauled state sentencing laws in 2011, but it has rebounded this year to nearly 51,000, just shy of the record, according to state figures.

"We've done all these things, but because of the spike in heroin, we have this uptick," said Sen. Bill Seitz, a Republican who has led an effort to halt prison growth.

Civil-liberties advocates said scores of new penalties in Ohio have contributed to the rise in the prison population. This year, the Legislature made it easier to prosecute people for heroin-trafficking, for example.

Credit: By Joe Palazzolo and Zusha Elinson

DETAILS

Subject:	Prison overcrowding; Criminal sentences; Population; Heroin; Prisons; Imprisonment; Legislators; Narcotics
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92214 : Correctional Institutions 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	Kentucky; Ohio; Arkansas; United States--US
Classification:	92214: Correctional Institutions; 92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818591719
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-inmate-numbers-climb-back-up-after-drops/docview/1818591719/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19

LINKS

Document 281 of 500

City News: Attorney Presses Yeshiva Changes

Brody, Leslie . Brody, Leslie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Last year, the group sent the city Department of Education a letter from former students and others saying that in 39 Hasidic yeshivas, secular subjects are taught for an average of only 90 minutes a day, with high-school boys learning only Judaic studies.

FULL TEXT

Randy Mastro, an attorney and former deputy mayor of New York City, said Monday he has joined advocates fighting for better secular education in Hasidic yeshivas.

Mr. Mastro said he would provide pro-bono counsel to Young Advocates for Fair Education, which has complained that the city hasn't enforced state mandates for the private religious schools.

Last year, the group sent the city Department of Education a letter from former students and others saying that in 39 Hasidic yeshivas, secular subjects are taught for an average of only 90 minutes a day, with high-school boys learning only Judaic studies.

"We need to hold government accountable to see to it that these children get their fundamental rights to a core education," Mr. Mastro said.

Parents for Educational and Religious Liberty in Schools, a new coalition in the Hasidic community that is known as PEARLS, pledged this summer to improve secular instruction. Rabbi David Niederman, a spokesman for the group, said its work had already led to an enhanced math and English curriculum and training for hundreds of teachers.

A spokeswoman for the Department of Education said that "while we're encouraged by the progress we've seen, there is more work to do."

Mr. Mastro, a partner at Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, said he would work with civil-rights attorney Norman Siegel, who was already pursuing the issue.

Credit: By Leslie Brody

DETAILS

Subject:	Secondary school students; Secularism; Jewish schools; Education
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Mastro, Randy M
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818591699
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-attorney-presses-yeshiva-changes/docview/1818591699/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Southwest Incident Linked to Cracked Blade

Ostrower, Jon . Ostrower, Jon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. aviation-safety watchdog on Monday linked a cracked jet-engine fan blade to the emergency landing of a Southwest Airlines Co. plane last month, as part of its preliminary investigation to identify the cause of the unusual incident.

FULL TEXT

The U.S. aviation-safety watchdog on Monday linked a cracked jet-engine fan blade to the emergency landing of a Southwest Airlines Co. plane last month, as part of its preliminary investigation to identify the cause of the unusual incident.

The National Transportation Safety Board has yet to conclude the root cause of what happened but said it found cracking consistent with metal fatigue on a remaining piece of one of the engine's broken fan blades.

None of the 99 passengers or five crew aboard were injured during the flight from New Orleans to Orlando, Fla., which was forced to land in Pensacola, Fla., on Aug. 27 after the engine failure, which caused major engine damage and led to depressurization of the cabin.

The failure of a fan blade is rare, and engines are designed to contain them inside the engine casing or to eject any debris safely out of the back.

The failure aboard the Southwest jet was characterized as uncontained by the NTSB, meaning debris was ejected out of the sides of the engine, an extremely unusual event.

The failure of one of the engine's 38 front fan blades appeared to precede the significant damage sustained by the CFM International engine nacelle, according to an industry official, followed by the complete separation of the forward inlet.

The NTSB said debris from the inlet damaged the Boeing Co. 737-700 jet's fuselage, wing and tail stabilizers.

The CFM56-7 series engine involved in the accident was one of the oldest in service, according to the official. However, the age of an engine and its internal components aren't necessarily related as parts are refurbished or replaced during the life of an engine.

An NTSB spokesman said the agency's investigation is ongoing and a sequence of events wasn't included in its preliminary findings.

A Southwest Airlines spokesman said repairs to the jet have begun and the company continues "to work closely with the NTSB on the investigation."

Aircraft and their engines are subjected to repeated stresses during their life in service and cracks are a normal part of their aging, but if left unchecked, they can cause major damage to an aircraft.

Regulators, airlines and manufacturers have developed inspection regimes to identify and remedy cracks before they become safety issues. The source of the cracking on the titanium alloy blade was still under investigation, and the NTSB said it was continuing to review the engine's maintenance records and test the remaining blades.

CFM is the biggest engine manufacturer in the world for single-aisle aircraft, such as the workhorse Boeing 737, and is a joint venture of General Electric Co. and France's Safran SA.

Credit: By Jon Ostrower

DETAILS

Subject:	Airlines; Titanium alloys; Aircraft accidents & safety
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft accidents & safety; Corporation: Southwest Airlines Co; Industry: 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: CFM International; NAICS: 333611, 333618; Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414; Name: Southwest Airlines Co; NAICS: 481111
Classification:	48111: Scheduled Air Transportation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 13, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818590427
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-southwest-incident-linked-cracked/docview/1818590427/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 283 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to local media reports, two officers were investigating reports of shots fired in the area when their SUV cruiser was hit by a bullet.

FULL TEXT

WESTERN REGION

Weather Aids Battle

Against Wildfires

Cooler weather across much of the West this weekend helped firefighters get a better handle on a number of large wildland infernos burning across the region, but hotter conditions were forecast to return to certain areas later in the week.

As of Sunday afternoon, 17 large fires were reported in eight Western states with little property damage so far.

But the cool-down may be a short reprieve. In California, a return to warmer weather is forecast by midweek, which officials say will raise the fire danger.

Of particular concern are still-active fires such as the Soberanes fire, which has been burning since July 22 in the coastal mountains near Carmel, Calif.

-- Jim Carlton

ALABAMA

Unfinished Nuclear

Plant Up for Sale

After spending more than 40 years and $5 billion on an unfinished nuclear power plant in northeastern Alabama, the nation's largest federal utility is preparing to sell the property at a fraction of its cost.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has set a minimum bid of $36.4 million for its Bellefonte Nuclear Plant and the 1,600 surrounding acres of waterfront property on the Tennessee River. The buyer gets two unfinished nuclear reactors, transmission lines, office and warehouse buildings, 8 miles of roads, a 1,000-space parking lot, and more.

Initial bids are due Monday, and at least one company has publicly expressed interest in the site with plans to use it for alternative energy production. TVA says it isn't particular about what the purchaser does -- using the site for power production, industrial manufacturing, recreation or even residences would all be fine with the agency, said spokesman Scott Fiedler.

Sales of U.S. nuclear plants aren't all that unusual; the Nuclear Energy Institute, an industry group, says at least 30 units have been sold in part or whole since 1999.

-- Associated Press

CALIFORNIA

Bullet Strikes Police

SUV in Los Angeles

Los Angeles police were looking for one or more suspects in connection with the shooting of a patrol car during the predawn hours Sunday.

No injuries were reported in the 4 a.m. incident in the city's Eagle Rock neighborhood north of downtown Los Angeles.

According to local media reports, two officers were investigating reports of shots fired in the area when their SUV cruiser was hit by a bullet. On its Twitter account, Los Angeles police posted a photo of a bullet hole that hit the rear passenger door of the vehicle.

Police closed a nearby freeway for several hours during a search for suspects, but later reopened it when none turned up. It wasn't immediately clear whether the shot was intentionally fired, or from a stray bullet.

-- Jim Carlton

DETAILS

Subject:	Nuclear power plants; Nuclear energy
Location:	California; Western states; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Twitter Inc; NAICS: 516210; Name: Nuclear Energy Institute; NAICS: 813910; Name: Tennessee Valley Authority--TVA; NAICS: 221111, 221121, 221122; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edit ion; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818304161

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1818304161/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 284 of 500

U.S. News: NFL Protest Aren't Widespread

Rebecca Davis O'Brien . Rebecca Davis O'Brien.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On the 15th anniversary of the Sept. 11 terror attacks, NFL players shifted their language in public statements from solidarity with Mr. Kaepernick's protest to words of unity and freedom.

FULL TEXT

A handful of National Football League players demonstrated during the national anthem Sunday, but without the widespread protests that some league officials had anticipated on the day of the first full slate of games.

Still, there were signs that a protest over racial injustice -- set off last month when quarterback Colin Kaepernick declined to stand for the anthem at a preseason game -- had merely been put on hold.

On the 15th anniversary of the Sept. 11 terror attacks, NFL players shifted their language in public statements from solidarity with Mr. Kaepernick's protest to words of unity and freedom.

"It was our goal to be unified as a team and to be respectful of everyone's opinions, and the remembrance of 9/11," players for the Kansas City Chiefs said in a statement Sunday.

Chiefs players locked arms during the anthem, but cornerback Marcus Peters raised his right fist in the air.

The players' statement also referred to concerns about police-community relations, an apparent nod to issues that have animated Mr. Kaepernick's protest.

"Together we are going to continue to have conversations, educate ourselves and others on social issues and work with local law-enforcement officials and leaders to make an impact on the Kansas City community," the statement said.

Four Miami Dolphins players knelt during the national anthem before the game with the Seattle Seahawks, while the Seahawks stood with arms linked.

Seattle cornerback Jeremy Lane knelt during the anthem at a preseason game, and other players had indicated they might follow suit. But Mr. Lane stood for the anthem Sunday, while Dolphins players Arian Foster, Jelani Jenkins, Michael Thomas, and Kenny Stills knelt.

Credit: By Rebecca Davis O'Brien

DETAILS

Subject:	Sports officiating; Demonstrations & protests; Professional football; Community relations; National anthems
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71121 : Spectator Sports
Company / organization:	Name: National Football League--NFL; NAICS: 711211, 813990
Classification:	71121: Spectator Sports
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1818284706
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-nfl-protest-arent-widespread/docview/1818284706/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 285 of 500

World News: Rebel Threat Poses Challenge to Cease-Fire in Syria --- Former al Qaeda affiliate aims to rally other factions as U.S.- Russia plan proceeds

Abi-Habib, Maria; Raydan, Noam . Abi-Habib, Maria; Raydan, Noam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A dominant Syrian rebel group is seeking to rally other factions to continue a drive to overthrow President Bashar al-Assad, potentially complicating a cease-fire deal brokered by the U.S. and Russia that is slated to start Monday. Following the U.S. and Russian announcement of the cease-fire agreement, rebel groups held marathon negotiations in Turkey and Syria to decide whether to accept it and distance themselves from Syria Conquest Front.

FULL TEXT

BEIRUT -- A dominant Syrian rebel group is seeking to rally other factions to continue a drive to overthrow President Bashar al-Assad, potentially complicating a cease-fire deal brokered by the U.S. and Russia that is slated to start Monday.

The U.S.-Russia agreement, reached over the weekend, envisions a seven-day cease-fire starting Monday evening, during which time rebels must separate themselves from Syria Conquest Front or risk being targeted by Moscow and Washington in airstrikes. The Front, formerly al Qaeda's local branch and previously known as Nusra Front, is viewed by the U.S. and Russia as a terrorist group.

The ultimatum highlights one of the most challenging aspects of the five-year Syrian conflict and the fresh U.S.-Russia efforts to end it: How to hive off those viewed as extremist from more mainstream groups.

Rebels of all stripes are deeply intertwined with Syria Conquest Front, and view the group as an integral part of the revolution whose isolation would weaken the armed opposition and bolster the Assad regime.

In addition, many Syrian families have sons fighting with both Syria Conquest Front and more moderate rebel forces backed by the U.S. and its allies, making any split logistically difficult.

These rebel outfits are now grouped around Aleppo and trying to fend off regime forces for control of a city that is considered pivotal for the balance of the Syrian war. Neither side has been able to fully control Aleppo, once the country's largest city and its economic juggernaut.

Fighting showed no sign of abating over the weekend. Airstrikes on rebel-held Idlib city and opposition-held parts of Aleppo killed at least 90 people and injured scores more on Saturday and Sunday. Rebels, meanwhile, announced new offensives in the south, in Daraa and Quneitra.

Some activists who oppose the regime credit Syria Conquest Front with protecting civilians against what they say are the crimes of Mr. Assad's regime and his allies. By comparison, the credibility of the U.S. is questioned by some in Syria who say Washington hasn't done enough to alleviate the suffering of people caught up in the war.

Syria's war has killed some 400,000 people, according to the United Nations.

Mostafa Mahamed, the director of foreign media relations for Syria Conquest Front, declared that his group had the support of "numerous groups on the ground" despite the ultimatum to other rebels to split from his bloc.

"We expect a united stance of all major players in Syria against this deal. The sincere groups in Syria will never be tools used by external governments that fight their proxy wars," Mr. Mahamed said in written responses to questions. "Make no mistake about it. The U.S. and Russia have agreed to end this revolution."

He slammed members of the political opposition who accepted the U.S.-Russian agreement to halt fighting as disingenuous representatives of the revolution who occupy "five star hotels and conference halls abroad."

Members of the political opposition, largely based in neighboring Turkey, said they were cautiously optimistic about the cease-fire but also skeptical that Damascus would honor it.

Leaders of the political opposition also said that they hadn't received details of the cease-fire's implementation, the geographical areas it covers and how Moscow and Damascus would be held accountable for any violations. Both sides have violated past agreements.

"We have not received the agreement and don't know its details," said Suhair Atassi, a member of the political opposition. "The agreement does not address issues like local truces which the regime uses to force people to leave their areas, in addition to the issue of besieged areas, prisoners, and political transition."

Following the U.S. and Russian announcement of the cease-fire agreement, rebel groups held marathon negotiations in Turkey and Syria to decide whether to accept it and distance themselves from Syria Conquest Front. By Sunday evening, many groups hadn't announced a decision.

Ahrar al-Sham, which is closely allied to Syria Conquest Front, said late Sunday that it rejected the cease-fire and any effort to isolate one rebel group from another.

When they reconvene early next week, Moscow and Washington are expected to discuss ways to cooperate against Islamic State, a mostly foreign fighting force reviled by most local rebel groups.

Islamic State has largely concentrated in northern parts of Syria in an effort to establish its self-declared caliphate, but it has come under increasing pressure from U.S.-led coalition airstrikes and Kurdish fighters on the ground.

Syria Conquest Front, because of its links to other Syrian rebels, is seen as much more difficult to uproot.

Mosaab Khalaf, an activist in Aleppo, said the situation could pit rebels against each other.

"If the rebel groups don't unite and some of them decide to break ties with Syria Conquest Front and submit to the international community, this will lead to internal fighting amongst the rebel factions," Mr. Khalaf said. "This will weaken the fighting fronts and the Syrian regime will take advantage of this. It will be a disaster."

Credit: By Maria Abi-Habib and Noam Raydan

DETAILS

Subject:	Agreements; Rebellions; Truces & cease fires; Political activism; Military air strikes; International relations-US
Location:	Syria; Russia
People:	Assad, Bashar Al
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284685
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-rebel-threat-poses-challenge-cease/docview/1818284685/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 286 of 500

Secondary Falters as Jets Drop Opener --- New York got some pleasant surprises in Sunday's season-opening loss, but the secondary wasn't up to stopping Cincinnati's passing game

Raskin, Alex . Raskin, Alex.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

CIN 23 NYJ 22 EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. -- For a team facing a litany of questions entering the season, the Jets got a string of pleasant surprises in Sunday's opener against the visiting Cincinnati Bengals: Veteran running back Matt Forte was brilliant in his first game as a Jet, finishing with 155 all-purpose yards; wideout Quincy Enunwa had a breakout performance, catching his first NFL touchdown pass while adding another six catches to boot; and the defensive line combined to sack Bengals quarterback Andy Dalton seven times.

FULL TEXT

CIN 23

NYJ 22

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. -- For a team facing a litany of questions entering the season, the Jets got a string of pleasant surprises in Sunday's opener against the visiting Cincinnati Bengals: Veteran running back Matt Forte was brilliant in his first game as a Jet, finishing with 155 all-purpose yards; wideout Quincy Enunwa had a breakout performance, catching his first NFL touchdown pass while adding another six catches to boot; and the defensive line combined to sack Bengals quarterback Andy Dalton seven times.

"They got to Andy as much as possible," said cornerback Darrelle Revis.

But "as much as possible" wasn't enough on Sunday, which ended with the Jets on the wrong end of a 23-22 score -- their first Week 1 loss since 2010. In spite of all the good news, the Jets' secondary was torched by Bengals wideout A.J. Green, who finished with 180 yards and a touchdown on 12 receptions, including three big catches on the Bengals' go-ahead drive in the fourth quarter.

"We had a great game plan coming in," Revis said. "You got to put that on the secondary. We can't give up these plays."

As has been the case throughout his career, Revis, a five-time All Pro, was assigned the opponent's top target all day on Sunday. Only now, at age 31, Revis wasn't asked to defend Green by himself. Defensive coordinator Kacy Rodgers said Revis would have help against the 6-foot-4 Green.

But that help wasn't always in the right place at the right time, as was clear on Green's 54-yard touchdown reception in the second quarter. Revis, playing over Green's right shoulder, clearly expected to have a safety behind him on the play. Instead, Green easily hauled in Dalton's underthrown pass and hopped into the end zone for a 10-7 Bengals lead.

"It was just busted coverage," Revis said. "We communicate a lot back there. . . We make calls, actually, while the play is going on. It was just a busted coverage on our end and it resulted in a touchdown."

Green, who has a 5-inch height advantage over Revis, would go on to record three catches for 26 yards on the Bengals' final drive. Those receptions, along with a 15-yard face-mask penalty that Green drew against Jets safety Michael Gilchrist, helped set up Cincinnati kicker Mike Nugent's 47-yard game-winning field goal with under a minute to play.

Despite the constant pressure from the Jets' defensive line, Dalton managed to complete 23 of 30 attempts for 366 yards, with a touchdown and an interception. On the Jets' side, Ryan Fitzpatrick appeared rusty at times, going 19-of-35 for 189 yards, with two scores and a pick. The Jets' final drive of the day stalled out when Fitzpatrick was intercepted by Bengals defensive back Josh Shaw.

Fitzpatrick and the Jets also struggled in the red zone at times, failing to score a touchdown in three of five trips inside the 20-yard line.

"That's what hurt us most," Fitzpatrick said.

But the loss can't be placed squarely at his feet, nor at those of the Jets' secondary. The Jets left points on the field when veteran kicker Nick Folk had a 22-yard field-goal attempt blocked in the first quarter; in the second quarter, Folk missed an extra point after Fitzpatrick's 15-yard scoring strike to Eric Decker.

"At the end, the wind was pretty tricky," Folk said. "You had to hit really clean balls all day. I didn't hit a really clean ball."

The rest of the Jets played well for the most part. Despite being forced to rotate right tackles Ben Ijalana and Brent Qvale because starter Breno Giacomini (back) is out, the Jets' offensive line allowed only one sack of Fitzpatrick. Cornerback Marcus Williams had a first-quarter interception, but struggled in coverage for much of the game. And even though Dalton completed seven passes of at least 20 yards, he spent much of the game on his back, courtesy of the Jets' fearsome defensive line.

The unit has been one of the league's best in recent years, but there were questions entering the opener. Nose tackle Damon Harrison left for the Giants in free agency; Sheldon Richardson was suspended for Sunday's game; and Muhammad Wilkerson spent much of the off-season recovering from a broken leg.

Wilkerson looked more than healthy on Sunday, registering 1 1/2 sacks and a team-high five tackles. But it was free-agent acquisition Steve McLendon -- Harrison's replacement -- who really shined, making two crucial sacks. Leonard Williams added 2 1/2 sacks of his own.

Now the Jets face a short turnaround for Thursday night's matchup with former coach Rex Ryan in Buffalo. "We got to correct it in a hurry," said Jets coach Todd Bowles.

Credit: By Alex Raskin

DETAILS

Subject:	Professional football
Company / organization:	Name: Cincinnati Bengals; NAICS: 711211; Name: New York Jets; NAICS: 711211
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.24
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Section:	Sports
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284680
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/secondary-falters-as-jets-drop-opener-new-york/docview/1818284680/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2017-11-23
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 287 of 500

U.S. News: Stretch of Chicago River To Get $1.5 Billion Revamp

Strum, Beckie . Strum, Beckie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Riverline adds to a frenzy of construction and revitalization that has taken hold on the Chicago River, despite a continued struggle against odor and pollution problems after decades of channeling the city's sewage and industrial waste from factories and the city's once-notorious meatpacking plants into the waterway.

FULL TEXT

CHICAGO -- A once-pritty spot along the Chicago River across from an industrial sprawl of concrete and train tracks is headed for transformation as a $1.5 billion development of high-rises, townhomes and a public river walk breaks ground Monday.

The project, known as Riverline, is part of a monumental face-lift as developers drawn to the Chicago River build along empty banks on the waterway's southern stretch. It will eventually bring more than 3,600 new residences to a rare undeveloped plot just south of the downtown Loop.

"The open space was the major initial driver of the development," said Tom Weeks, general manager of development at Lendlease in Chicago, a co-developer of the project. "We wanted a place where people would play or just sit and contemplate or walk."

Eight high-rises, a complex of townhouses and several acres of public green, including kayak rental and a continuous river walk longer than five football fields, will replace overgrown brush when the plan is complete in about a decade, the developers say.

Despite rising violence on the city's south and west sides, Chicago is among a number of U.S. cities drawing an influx of young, educated workers to their downtown cores.

Riverline adds to a frenzy of construction and revitalization that has taken hold on the Chicago River, despite a continued struggle against odor and pollution problems after decades of channeling the city's sewage and industrial waste from factories and the city's once-notorious meatpacking plants into the waterway.

"In a lot of ways, Chicago turned its back on the river," said Colin Kihnke, president of CMK Companies Ltd., a co-developer of Riverline.

The city has pushed for 15 years to enliven the neglected waterway -- including new stretches of walkway at the water level. Developers have transformed riverside factories and old cold-storage facilities into posh loft apartments, and built glittering skyscrapers.

Riverline isn't the only project changing the face of the river in the South Loop. Related Midwest plans to invest billions to build on an even bigger overgrown plot directly to the south, the company said.

That 62-acre site would unite Riverline with the city's Chinatown and is expected to be complete in about 15 years, though Related Midwest hasn't released specifics.

Josh Ellis, a nearby resident and board member of the Greater South Loop Association, said the neighborhood is eager to have the stretch of river developed.

Residents hope the projects will spur infrastructure improvements, including an additional high school and a reconfiguration of roads to prevent bottlenecks, he added.

"People want energy and enthusiasm and a place to interact with the water," said Mr. Ellis, who is also a director at the Metropolitan Planning Council. "They want the rivers to be part of the urban fabric."

Credit: By Beckie Strum

DETAILS

Subject:	Rivers; Waterfront development; Site planning
Location:	Chicago River
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284657
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-stretch-chicago-river-get-1-5-billion/docview/1818284657/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]seed Wawrinka beat defending champion Djokovic in four sets to win tennis's U.S. Open.

FULL TEXT

Clinton's campaign said she had been diagnosed with pneumonia, after the candidate earlier in the day left a 9/11 memorial ceremony.

Clinton's labeling of many Trump backers as "deplorables" set off a war of words between the campaigns.

Thousands gathered in Manhattan, at the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania to mark the 15th anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

A Syrian rebel group is seeking to rally other factions to continue a drive to overthrow Assad, in a challenge to a cease-fire deal.

Libyan forces opposed to a unity government attacked ports and claimed control over oil facilities.

Iran denied U.S. claims that its vessels had veered dangerously close to American warships.

The U.S., South Korea and Japan vowed to weigh new action against North Korea over its nuclear test.

French authorities opened a terrorism probe of a woman linked to a car found with gas canisters.

A factory fire in Bangladesh killed around 30 people and spurred calls for safety improvements.

Third seed Wawrinka beat defending champion Djokovic in four sets to win tennis's U.S. Open.

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidents
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Iran; United States--US; Bangladesh; Japan; Pennsylvania; North Korea; South Korea
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Defense; NAICS: 928110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284655

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1818284655/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 289 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Associated Press --- NEW YORK Crazy Eddie Chain Owner Dies at 68 The man who turned the Crazy Eddie electronics stores into a retail giant before it collapsed amid federal fraud charges has died.

FULL TEXT

TRENTON

Two Found Dead,

One Hurt in Shooting

A shooting in New Jersey's capital city left two men dead and another seriously injured.

The shooting on Greenwood Avenue in Trenton was reported around 3:15 a.m. Sunday. Police responding to the scene found two men with gunshot wounds. Both were pronounced dead a short time later.

Authorities soon learned that another man who had been shot in the incident had gone to a hospital for treatment, He later underwent surgery and was listed in critical condition.

A motive for the shooting remains under investigation.

-- Associated Press

NEW JERSEY

Woman Is Hit, Killed

By Train Near Station

A woman was struck and killed by a NJ Transit train in Essex County over the weekend.

Authorities said 45-year-old Kara Beloreshka was hit around 10 p.m. Saturday near the Maplewood station.

It wasn't immediately clear if the Springfield woman was on the tracks when she was hit by the Morris and Essex line train, which was headed to Penn Station in New York.

None of the 175 passengers and crew members aboard the train were injured in the accident.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK

Crazy Eddie Chain

Owner Dies at 68

The man who turned the Crazy Eddie electronics stores into a retail giant before it collapsed amid federal fraud charges has died. Eddie Antar was 68 years old.

The Bloomfield-Cooper funeral home in Ocean Township, N.J., confirmed Sunday that Mr. Antar died on Saturday. A cause of death wasn't disclosed.

The Crazy Eddie chain was known for its ads featuring a maniacal pitchman who touted that "Our prices are insane!"

Mr. Antar started with a store in Brooklyn, and the chain eventually grew into 43 stores in four states. He fled to Israel after being indicted on securities fraud and insider trading charges.

Mr. Antar was extradited back to the U.S. in 1993 and was convicted on racketeering and stock-fraud charges. The conviction was overturned on appeal in 1995. He eventually pleaded guilty to federal fraud charges and served a prison term.

-- Associated Press

QUEENS

Bodies Found in Cars

In Separate Incidents

The New York Police Department is investigating two separate incidents of bodies found in cars.

Both were adult males, one shot and the other burned in a car that had been set on fire.

Police responding to a 911 call around 10:30 p.m. Saturday found a car with its engine running on 153rd Street. Inside it was a man with a gunshot wound to his head. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

Just over an hour later, police responded to a call of a car on fire at 224th Street and 149th Avenue. Firefighters put out the blaze, and an adult man with significant burns was found in the trunk. He was pronounced dead at the location.

No arrests have been made.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Court decisions; Convictions; Securities fraud; Shootings; Indictments
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: NJ Transit; NAICS: 485111; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.21
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	18182 84606
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1818284606/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 290 of 500

World News: Iran Denies Harassment of U.S. Ships

Aresu Eqbali; Asa Fitch; Aresu Eqbali; Fitch, Asa . Aresu Eqbali; Asa Fitch; Aresu Eqbali; Fitch, Asa.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Gen. Masoud Jazayeri said, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported. [...]the [American] claims are not only untrue, but stem from their fear of the power of the Islamic Republic's soldiers."

FULL TEXT

U.S. claims about Iranian vessels veering dangerously close to American warships were exaggerated, Iran's armed forces said on Sunday.

"The Islamic Republic's vessels always act in full awareness of international rules and regulations and based on defined norms," Brig. Gen. Masoud Jazayeri said, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported. "Therefore the [American] claims are not only untrue, but stem from their fear of the power of the Islamic Republic's soldiers."

Gen. Jazayeri was responding to concerns voiced by U.S. officials about near-confrontations between U.S. ships and Iranian vessels around the Persian Gulf.

In one incident last month, a U.S. Navy spokesman said four vessels from Iran's Revolutionary Guard Corps approached an American destroyer at high speed, ignoring radio communications and other warnings. Iranian boats also made a close approach to a U.S. ship in the Strait of Hormuz in July.

American officials have raised growing alarm recently about the risk of an escalation at sea between the two rivals.

Credit: By Aresu Eqbali and Asa Fitch

DETAILS

Subject:	Radio communications; Territorial issues; International relations-US; Warships; Military strategy
Location:	United States--US; Persian Gulf; Iran
Company / organization:	Name: Navy-US; NAICS: 928110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284577
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-iran-denies-harassment-u-s-ships/docview/1818284577/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 291 of 500

Students Injured In Deck Collapse

Morales, Mark . Morales, Mark.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

First responders arrived within minutes and found as many as 30 students in need of medical attention, police said, and all were taken to area hospitals for treatment.

FULL TEXT

An early-semester party turned to mayhem Saturday night after a three-tier outdoor deck collapsed at an off-campus home, injuring dozens of Trinity College students.

Revelers from the private Connecticut school were on every level of the deck at the back of a home on Broad Street in Hartford when the structure pancaked at about 11 p.m., officials said.

"The decks seem pretty old, and somewhat deteriorated," Hartford Police Department Deputy Chief Brian Foley said at a news conference.

"We are very lucky . . . there were no fatalities and no known critical injuries from what could have been a truly tragic incident," said Hartford Mayor Luke Bronin in a statement.

Julianna Leone, a senior psychology major from Chicago, said she was standing on the middle deck at the Kappa Sigma fraternity party on Saturday night when she heard the sound of wood cracking.

Ms. Leone, 21 years old, said she looked up to see the third-floor deck coming down on top of her.

"I looked at my friend and basically we both screamed as it started to hit us," she said.

They were crushed under the rubble.

"I was just in the dark until people were able to pull me out," she said.

Doctors told her she was lucky to not suffer any damage to her brain, she said. She did sustain a contusion and a head laceration.

After the collapse, area residents and students called the local fire and police departments for help, officials said. First responders arrived within minutes and found as many as 30 students in need of medical attention, police said, and all were taken to area hospitals for treatment.

Ms. Leone described the aftermath as "a lot of blood . . . a lot of chaos and screaming and people being wheeled away."

The most serious injuries included a broken arm and minor head wounds, police said.

Mollie Hantman-Weill, 20, also a Trinity senior, didn't attend the party but went to the scene soon after.

"There was rubble everywhere," Ms. Hantman-Weill said. "There was a really striking image of one of the railings just hanging on top of the house on the roof -- and everything else was on the ground."

College staff went to area hospitals to be with the students and help them contact their families, Trinity officials said.

The majority of injured students were treated and released from the hospitals by Sunday afternoon, they said.

Five people live inside the home, which is owned by Trinity College but managed by a private company, school officials said, adding that the incident is under investigation.

Zolan Kanno-Youngs contributed to this article.

Credit: By Mark Morales

DETAILS

Subject:	Decks & patios; Injuries; College students; Students
Location:	Hartford Connecticut; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284569
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/students-injured-deck-collapse/docview/1818284569/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 292 of 500

World News: Summer of Unrest Grips Kashmir

Zhong, Raymond . Zhong, Raymond.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

BIJBEHARA, India -- A mounting death toll in Kashmir, where street protests erupted after security forces killed a well-known separatist, is stoking long-smoldering public anger with Indian rule in the Himalayan region.

FULL TEXT

BIJBEHARA, India -- A mounting death toll in Kashmir, where street protests erupted after security forces killed a well-known separatist, is stoking long-smoldering public anger with Indian rule in the Himalayan region.

Efforts by New Delhi to calm tensions across the mostly Muslim section of Kashmir it controls -- neighboring Pakistan administers another -- have foundered as the violence stretches into a third month, fueling resentment and raising the prospect of a return to armed struggle.

"They don't control us here by giving us flowers," said Aala Fazili, a scholar and activist at the University of Kashmir, referring to Indian authorities. "So our response cannot be just giving them flowers."

More than 70 people have been killed and thousands injured in near-daily clashes between law enforcement and stone-throwing demonstrators demanding more autonomy and fewer Indian troops.

Shafat Ahmad Mir, a 24-year-old from the same town as the slain militant, has been studying for years to become a software engineer. Now he says he isn't sure what his future holds. "I'm absolutely ready to die for this cause," he said.

India's home minister, Rajnath Singh, has said the government is examining less-harmful means of crowd control. But Javaid Gillani, Kashmir's inspector-general of police, said shotguns remain essential to the arsenal. "If you don't have something like a pellet gun, all you have is live ammunition," he said in a recent interview.

The United Nations' top human-rights official demanded in August that India and Pakistan grant independent observers access to Kashmir "given grave concerns about recent allegations of serious human-rights violations." Pakistan says it would welcome a visit. India has rebuffed the request.

The unrest has derailed reconciliation efforts between the nuclear-armed rivals, which have fought three wars over Kashmir since independence from Britain in 1947.

Separatist leaders say the government isn't taking their demands seriously. They refused to negotiate with Indian politicians who traveled last week to Srinagar, the state's summer capital, saying the delegation wasn't ready to discuss the core issue of Kashmiri self-determination. Mr. Singh criticized the snub, saying, "We are ready to speak with everyone who wants peace and normalcy in Kashmir."

Kashmiris have long chafed under Delhi's rule. But the July killing of Burhan Wani, a 22-year-old militant, touched a nerve, particularly in rural areas, where he used social media and personal outreach to become a sort of folk hero.

The latest extended spell of mass revolt, in 2010, resulted in more than 100 deaths but no movement toward self-rule or a military drawdown.

Although young Kashmiris are growing restless, there is little evidence they are running away from home en masse to take up arms against India, as many did during an full-blown insurgency in the 1990s that left thousands dead.

India's military footprint in Kashmir -- 700,000-strong, according to an estimate by the Jammu-Kashmir Coalition of Civil Society -- is felt most acutely in the countryside, where relations are at a perpetual, angry simmer. What happened in Bijbehara, 30 miles from Srinagar, shows how unrest can spiral into frenzy.

Aamir Nazir Latoo, a 22-year-old business student, was home for the summer break. He and an uncle, Syeed Hussain Latoo, 37, were watching the news a few days after Mr. Wani's death when they heard protests and went outside.

Around a dozen people were taunting police. The younger Mr. Latoo was near the group when shots rang out -- fired, his uncle said, from a police rifle. As the young man was rushed to the local hospital, a crowd of men arrived to show support. State forces weren't far behind.

Medical staff put Mr. Latoo in an ambulance, saying he needed to get to a better-equipped hospital in Srinagar. But as the driver started the engine, security officers approached, according to family members and neighbors who were seated inside.

A dozen or so men battered the windows with batons, they said. The local police chief beat the driver through the window, the relatives said, then wrenched open the back door and pummeled those inside, ripping out the injured man's IV line in the process.

The police chief, Station House Officer Arshad Khan, denied pulling out the IV and says he backed off once he learned a patient was inside.

Mr. Latoo's father, Nazir Ahmad Latoo, said the ambulance driver fled after Mr. Khan struck him. They escaped, he said, after a neighbor took the wheel. But hours of emergency surgery in Srinagar couldn't save his son. His funeral drew thousands.

Credit: By Raymond Zhong

DETAILS

Subject:	Militancy; Demonstrations & protests
Location:	Pakistan; India; Kashmir
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284519
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-summer-unrest-grips-kashmir/docview/1818284519/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 293 of 500

U.S. News: Economic Calendar

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

This week, look for Federal Reserve officials to offer final hints before their next policy meeting on an interest-rate increase in the U.S., while the Bank of England could clarify its post-Brexit strategy at its gathering. Industrial production figures will come from China, and U.S. retail sales will be released later in the week.

MONDAY: Fed governor Lael Brainard and Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta President Dennis Lockhart provide a last chance to hear from policy makers before the central bank's self-imposed gag order ahead of its Sept. 20-21 meeting.

TUESDAY: China will report August data on industrial production (released Monday night in the U.S.). After a slowdown in July, investors will be looking for signs of stability in the world's second-largest economy.

THURSDAY: The Bank of England is expected to hold its benchmark interest rate steady at its meeting. Minutes of officials' deliberations may offer clues to their thinking on Britain's post-Brexit economy, particularly on whether another rate cut is still in the cards this year.

In the U.S., the government will release data on retail sales. Economists project sales decreased 0.1% in August. Consumer spending has been a bright spot for the U.S. this year, but a flat July reading raised concerns about the outlook for the second half of 2016.

DETAILS

Subject:	Central banks; Industrial production; Retail sales
Business indexing term:	Subject: Central banks Industrial production; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284502
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1818284502/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2025-01-29
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 294 of 500

World News: Allies Lack Avenues to Penalize Pyongyang

Gale, Alastair . Gale, Alastair.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S., Japan and South Korea pledged to consider new unilateral steps to pressure North Korea after its fifth nuclear test, but their options are limited by a lack of economic and diplomatic ties to Pyongyang.

FULL TEXT

SEOUL -- The U.S., Japan and South Korea pledged to consider new unilateral steps to pressure North Korea after its fifth nuclear test, but their options are limited by a lack of economic and diplomatic ties to Pyongyang.

On Sunday, the top U.S. envoy on North Korea, Sung Kim, said the three nations would work together at the United Nations on action against Pyongyang, as well as study their own individual penalties.

South Korea's president said she would seek the toughest possible action against the North, which carried out its latest test on Friday.

For the U.S., further unilateral sanctions could include adding more North Korean officials and entities to its blacklist, which freezes assets held in dollars and restricts Americans from doing business with these individuals and firms.

It could also bar Americans from traveling to North Korea. Although two Americans are currently serving long prison terms in North Korea, a few U.S. nationals travel to North Korea as tourists each year.

Such measures are unlikely to cause North Korea pain. North Korean officials have little contact with Americans, and Pyongyang has become adept at disguising its trade and financial entities through steps such as switching the firms' names and moving them into neighboring China.

Like the U.S., South Korea and Japan have almost no trade or other ties to North Korea after imposing wide-ranging bilateral sanctions in response to previous weapons tests. Seoul this year shut an industrial park it co-managed with Pyongyang, severing the two Koreas' last economic link.

Credit: By Alastair Gale

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Nuclear tests
Location:	United States--US; Japan; South Korea; North Korea
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284488
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-allies-lack-avenues-penalize-pyongyang/docview/1818284488/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19

LINKS

Document 295 of 500

Business News: Airlines Offer More Coach Choices --- U.S. carriers expand categories to compete with discounters and increase revenue

Carey, Susan . Carey, Susan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]airlines are putting some thought into retailing," said Peter Belobaba, principal research scientist at the International Center for Air Transportation at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Scott Wilson, United's vice president of e-commerce and merchandising, said the airline is eager to expand into full multitiered fare offerings. [...]recently, he said "there hasn't been the opportunity to market good, better and best."

FULL TEXT

Major U.S. airlines are carving up cattle class, hoping to nab every customer from the tightwad to the spendthrift amid intensifying competition from discount carriers and declining ticket revenues.

Delta Air Lines Inc. is ahead among U.S. carriers in adopting this "segmentation" strategy. The carrier started experimenting about three years ago and has since rolled it out in a big way, which for the Atlanta-based airline means splitting its coach fares into three categories: Basic Economy, Main Cabin and Delta Comfort+.

The No. 2 U.S. airline by traffic is trying to compete with budget rivals and wring more out of recent product upgrades by selling them to fliers willing to pay more rather than giving them away free to elite frequent fliers.

American Airlines Group Inc. and United Continental Holdings Inc. said they would introduce tiered offerings later this year. Some European carriers already have embraced the strategy; Air Canada was a pioneer.

"Finally, airlines are putting some thought into retailing," said Peter Belobaba, principal research scientist at the International Center for Air Transportation at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "You can be upfront with consumers and show them different options with different prices and characteristics."

Divvying up coach is a big strategic shift, driven in part by a need to counter discount carriers that make up a third of the U.S. market. Airlines also are eager to raise ticket revenue that has been falling for years as budget airlines have grown. For the past two years, fares have tanked and most airlines have posted declining unit revenues -- the important metric that measures how much they earn for each seat flown a mile.

American has said it hopes segmentation would bring in $1 billion in additional revenue annually.

United already sells bundled amenities after tickets are purchased including checked bags and roomier seats. Scott Wilson, United's vice president of e-commerce and merchandising, said the airline is eager to expand into full multitiered fare offerings. Until recently, he said "there hasn't been the opportunity to market good, better and best."

While large airlines spend a lot of money and energy luring lucrative business customers, they are a minority of travelers. American, the largest U.S. airline by traffic, estimates that 87% of its customers are bargain-sensitive travelers who fly once a year or less, yet generate half of its revenue.

For decades, airlines concocted elaborate fare rules to separate leisure travelers scrounging for low fares from business travelers willing to pay much more on short notice. The former group was required to book well in advance and spend a Saturday night at their destination, while business-class customers enjoyed ticket refundability and didn't have the weekend-stay rule.

In many instances, however, a customer who paid $200 ended up sitting next to a flier who paid $800 without any distinction in boarding process, seat or in-flight service. "It created a tremendous amount of abrasion between the passenger and the airline," said Jay Sorensen, president of airline-loyalty consultant IdeaWorks Co.

Discount airlines don't follow those old pricing rules. They sell one-way tickets and offer lower fares than the major carriers even at the last minute. Matching them outright can dilute a major carrier's revenue.

Delta says the new pricing model is more competitive with discount carriers, while giving customers more choice. The cheapest fares in Basic Economy often are priced close to those from ultra-discounters Spirit Airlines Inc. and Frontier Airlines Inc. without including fees for advance printed boarding passes, overhead bin space and any type of beverage.

Delta's basic fare comes with its own restrictions: passengers can't make flight changes or stand by for a different flight. And the fare only allows fliers to get a seat assignment after check-in, and precludes upgrades or priority boarding.

Comfort+, Delta's premier coach class, offers the opposite experience: advanced-seat assignment, early boarding, larger seats and free alcoholic beverages. Ticket changes are allowed at the standard $200 fee.

Delta said earlier this month that the "branded fares" initiative is in line to generate $1.5 billion in incremental revenue by 2018.

A recent search on Delta's website for a round-trip flight from Atlanta to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., late this month generated a Basic Economy fare of $149. Main Cabin was $179 and Comfort+ went for $214. First class was $406.

About half of the travelers who view Basic Economy fares end up upgrading, bolstering the carrier's revenue, Delta said.

Some fliers are concerned that the plethora of new categories would make pricing too opaque. But Greg Bradley, a behavioral economist at the University of Southern Mississippi thinks the rules are clear. Delta "has opened up air travel to a segment that wouldn't have traveled as much," he said.

In his own travels, though, Mr. Bradley said he eschews the lowest fare category but has upgraded to Comfort+ even on short flights.

Credit: By Susan Carey

DETAILS

Subject:	Customers; Airline industry; Airlines; Willingness to pay; Air travel; Competition; Airline security; Alliances; Airports; Air fares
Business indexing term:	Subject: Customers Airline industry Willingness to pay Airports Air fares; Industry: 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation 48811 : Airport Operations
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: American Airlines Group Inc; NAICS: 551114; Name: United Continental Holdings Inc; NAICS: 551112; Name: Delta Air Lines Inc; NAICS: 481111
Classification:	48111: Scheduled Air Transportation; 48811: Airport Operations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284465
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-airlines-offer-more-coach-choices-u/docview/1818284465/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 296 of 500

City News: 9/11 Families Find Comfort in Sharing Their Grief

Ramey, Corinne; Sharp, Sonja; Kanno-Youngs, Zolan . Ramey, Corinne; Sharp, Sonja; Kanno-Youngs, Zolan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the memorial service is important to the sisters: "A lot of them don't see [the 9/11 anniversary] as significant as I see it," Alexis said of her peers in high school.

FULL TEXT

Fifteen years have passed since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center, but the anniversary date is still a raw time for many families of the victims.

Those who lost loved ones in the tragedy came together Sunday morning for a ceremony at the National September 11 Memorial & Museum in lower Manhattan, reading the names of those who died in the 2001 terrorist attacks and the 1993 bombing.

For some, being in the presence of shared grief was comforting; others said the commemoration brought back painful memories -- even 15 years later.

Before the ceremony, hundreds circled the plaza, many holding posters or wearing shirts honoring the victims. As the Brooklyn Youth Chorus sang the national anthem, some gripped framed pictures of their loved ones.

Nancy Shakouri of Rockland County, who came to honor her brother, firefighter Dennis Scauso, said the memorial service is an important annual event for her.

"To be around people in the same situation is comforting," Ms. Shakouri said. "I don't think we can imagine being anywhere else on this day."

Amanda Feliciano, 21 years old, and her 17-year-old sister, Alexis Feliciano, barely remember their mother, Rosa Feliciano. An accountant for Marsh & McLennan Cos. Inc., the 30-year-old Ms. Feliciano died trying to flee the collapsing towers.

"I remember leaving school and coming home and seeing my dad crying, 'Maybe she wasn't there,' " Amanda said. "That's all I can remember. I was small and I kind of blocked it out."

Still, the memorial service is important to the sisters: "A lot of them don't see [the 9/11 anniversary] as significant as I see it," Alexis said of her peers in high school. "They'll make comments about it, not knowing it still affects some of our generation."

Scores of family members took part in the ceremony. Some shared their loved ones' favorite memories or hobbies. Others simply said, "I love you."

One man, before breaking into tears, recalled the fashion choices of his relative, who had a penchant for ugly Hawaiian shirts. "I didn't know whether to laugh or cry," said the man, who, in tribute, was wearing a Hawaiian shirt.

While for many families the area surrounding the former World Trade Center site remains a place of solemnity, it has taken on new life in the past 15 years. Young, affluent families have moved into lower Manhattan, and office buildings, shops and restaurants have sprung up.

This past year, a transit hub and mall opened to the public for the first time. Future additions include a performing-arts center, just north of the memorial.

Retired detective Kenneth Massaria, 63, a lifelong New Yorker who came to remember his sister's husband, said he was impressed with the rebuilding of downtown. "It's great that after 9/11 all this came back the way it did," he said.

Others said the increasingly bustling area felt at odds with the grounds of a tragedy.

Dianne Hagerty, another sister of firefighter Dennis Scauso, said she would prefer something more sacred, since officials never found the remains of her brother.

"For us this is like a gravesite, particularly because so many remains were never found," said Ms. Hagerty, of Maryland. "I wish it had been something simpler."

As the ceremony ended, some family members remained around the memorial's twin reflecting pools, placing roses and miniature American flags next to the engraved names of their loved ones. Others trickled out, wiping away tears or making plans for lunch with their families.

"It feels the same as it did the day after 9/11. It's no different," said Irene Smith of Brooklyn, whose son, 48-year-old Leon Smith Jr., died in the line of duty as a firefighter.

Flanked by her family and the loved ones of firefighter Shawn Powell, 32, two families united by the attacks, she added: "The pain never goes away."

Credit: By Corinne Ramey, Sonja Sharp and Zolan Kanno-Youngs

DETAILS

Subject:	Rites & ceremonies; Anniversaries; Memorial services; Firefighters; Terrorism; September 11 terrorist attacks-2001
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92216 : Fire Protection
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: World Trade Center-New York City NY; NAICS: 813910
Classification:	92216: Fire Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.21
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818284445
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-9-11-families-find-comfort-sharing/docview/1818284445/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 297 of 500

U.S. Is Already a Signatory to Test Ban Treaty

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to Secretary of State John Kerry, the U.S. is seeking a nonbinding resolution that reinforces the international norm against nuclear testing and the value of the monitoring system established to detect and confirm nuclear explosions anywhere on the planet.

FULL TEXT

We were disappointed to read Senate Republicans' letter to President Obama regarding his intention to pursue a U.N. Security Council resolution on the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty ("Republican Senators Decry Obama's Nuclear Ban Effort," U.S. News, Sept. 9). While the U.S. isn't yet a party to the CTBT, we are a signatory and, since 1992 our own national policy prevents the testing of nuclear weapons in line with the treaty's main goal.

Setting aside the important but broader debate about constitutional prerogatives of the executive and legislative branches raised by our colleagues, this letter can be read only as a partisan attack on the president based on speculation completely at odds with the administration's stated goal. According to Secretary of State John Kerry, the U.S. is seeking a nonbinding resolution that reinforces the international norm against nuclear testing and the value of the monitoring system established to detect and confirm nuclear explosions anywhere on the planet. The vital importance of this system was once again underscored last week after it verified North Korea's fifth nuclear test.

American leadership on nuclear security is needed now more than ever, so it's hard to believe our colleagues would want to follow through on their political, shortsighted threat to defund this system. And if they agree with our own policy on testing, then isn't our national security enhanced by reaffirming and promoting a similar practice in more corners of the world?

Sen. Benjamin L. Cardin (D., Md.)

Sen. Edward J. Markey (D., Mass.)

Washington

DETAILS

Subject:	Nuclear tests; Nuclear weapons; Bans
Location:	United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack; Kerry, John F; Cardin, Benjamin L; Markey, Edward J
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations Security Council; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.16
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Section:	Letters to the Editor
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818283732
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-is-already-signatory-test-ban-treaty/docview/1818283732/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reprodu ced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 298 of 500

Business News: GM's Eye-Tracking Tech Aims to Keep Drivers Alert

Gautham Nagesh . Gautham Nagesh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In a recent interview, Mark Reuss, GM executive vice president for global product development, said the current way some auto makers monitor alertness -- by requiring periodic touching of the steering wheel -- isn't sufficient because "you can defeat the hands-on-the-wheel devices pretty readily."

FULL TEXT

Future buyers of General Motors Co.'s semiautonomous driving system will have to be comfortable with Big Brother sitting in the passenger seat.

The nation's largest auto maker aims to release its Super Cruise on a Cadillac next year, and will feature eye tracking in the cabin, a first for a U.S. car maker.

GM will duel with Volvo Car Corp.'s Pilot Assist and Tesla Motors Inc.'s Autopilot, both driver-assistance systems that can control a moving vehicle. While Tesla's Autopilot requires periodic handling by the driver, GM's system is expected to go a step further in monitoring the alertness of human drivers.

Super Cruise's 2017 launch will come amid heightened scrutiny of systems that use cameras, sensors or radar to let the car do much of the driving at higher speeds. A fatal accident in May involving Tesla's Autopilot raised questions over how well these technologies work and whether consumers understand their limitations.

GM's Super Cruise software can detect whether a driver is dozing off or not watching the road, and uses audible and visual alerts to grab the person's attention. If the alerts don't work, a representative with the auto maker's OnStar information service will activate the vehicle's intercom and communicate with the car's operator. If the driver still doesn't respond, the car will pull over on the side of the freeway and stop.

The Detroit car maker, which has been testing the eye-tracking feature for a couple of years, hopes to be ahead of its domestic competitors and cater to consumers who increasingly are looking for automated driving-assistance features. GM hasn't said what the option will cost.

In a recent interview, Mark Reuss, GM executive vice president for global product development, said the current way some auto makers monitor alertness -- by requiring periodic touching of the steering wheel -- isn't sufficient because "you can defeat the hands-on-the-wheel devices pretty readily." That is why GM "will use something that's pretty hard to get around," he said.

OnStar, launched in the 1990s as a concierge service, has taken on more communication functions as GM's cars have become more connected via embedded Wi-Fi connections and integration with smartphones. Super Cruise will be an option that requires OnStar services, the auto maker said.

German auto makers including Audi, the luxury-car unit of Volkswagen AG, are also expected to launch eye-tracking systems in the near future. Suppliers of the technology expect regulators to eventually require them in all car models.

U.S. Department of Transportation officials have said that despite concerns about driver behavior, systems such as Tesla's Autopilot can reduce highway fatalities. Certain semiautonomous features will soon be required, and regulators have encouraged auto makers to proceed aggressively.

But such systems also raise privacy concerns, particularly if auto makers retain driver data that could be passed along to insurance companies or public-safety authorities without permission.

A GM spokesman said the auto maker collects personal data through OnStar from customers who purchase the service, but only shares that information with the car owner's consent.

Credit: By Gautham Nagesh

DETAILS

Subject:	Autonomous vehicles; Product development
Business indexing term:	Subject: Product development; Corporation: Tesla Inc
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: OnStar; NAICS: 334290, 561621; Name: Tesla Motors Inc; NAICS: 336999; Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818283726
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gms-eye-tracking-tech-aims-keep/docview/1818283726/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 299 of 500

U.S. News: First Trial In Oregon Occupation Set to Start

Carlton, Jim . Carlton, Jim.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The protesters complained that the federal government restricted cattle-ranching, logging and other economic development on land set aside for preservation -- a point of tension for decades between locals and federal officials, especially in the West.

FULL TEXT

Nearly nine months after the armed occupation of a federal wildlife refuge in Oregon captivated the nation for weeks, arguments in the first trial against some of the participants open in Portland, Ore., on Tuesday.

Eight of the 26 protesters facing charges -- including their leader, Ammon Bundy -- are due to appear before a jury in Portland's federal courthouse. Mr. Bundy, 41 years old, his brother Ryan, 43, and the six others all face charges of conspiracy to impede federal officers through intimidation, threats or force.

All eight have pleaded not guilty. A lawyer for Ammon Bundy didn't respond to request for comment. Ryan Bundy is representing himself.

In court documents, Ammon Bundy's attorney, J. Morgan Philpot, said his client and several supporters participated in a "lawful, nonviolent occupation at the Refuge where citizens were meaningfully petitioning their government for redress."

The conspiracy charge carries a sentence of up to six years in prison; five of the defendants, including the Bundy brothers, also face another year in prison if convicted on charges of possession of a firearm in a federal facility.

Of the 18 other defendants who faced the same charges, 11 have pleaded guilty while seven are set to stand trial in February.

The drama played out for 41 days, starting in early January, on the frozen high desert of eastern Oregon, where a small group of antigovernment activists occupied the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge in a standoff with law enforcement authorities.

The protesters complained that the federal government restricted cattle-ranching, logging and other economic development on land set aside for preservation -- a point of tension for decades between locals and federal officials, especially in the West.

The occupation ended soon after Ammon Bundy and seven others were arrested in a highway showdown with state and federal officers during which one occupier, Robert LaVoy Finicum, was shot and killed by an officer.

The Bundy brothers and five others from the Oregon occupation, along with their father, Cliven Bundy, have also been separately charged in a 2014 armed confrontation with federal officials near the family's ranch in southern Nevada.

That federal trial is set for next year.

Credit: By Jim Carlton

DETAILS

Subject:	Wildlife sanctuaries; Conspiracy
----------	----------------------------------

Business indexing term:	Industry: 71213 : Zoos and Botanical Gardens 71219 : Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions
Location:	Portland Oregon; United States--US
People:	Bundy, Cliven; Bundy, Ammon
Classification:	71213: Zoos and Botanical Gardens; 71219: Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818283667
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-first-trial-oregon-occupation-set-start/docview/1818283667/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: At Memorials, Past Is Present for Families - -- Ceremonies mark 15th anniversary of 9/11; 'It's another way to get a little bit closer'

Ramey, Corinne; Sharp, Sonja; Kanno-Youngs, Zolan . Ramey, Corinne; Sharp, Sonja; Kanno-Youngs, Zolan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In New York, families of those killed at the World Trade Center, elected officials, first responders and others were at the National September 11 Memorial & Museum, where six moments of silence were timed to commemorate significant moments from the attack.

FULL TEXT

Thousands gathered Sunday in lower Manhattan, at the Pentagon near Washington and in a field in Pennsylvania to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, and to connect with the thousands of people who lost their lives.

In New York, families of those killed at the World Trade Center, elected officials, first responders and others were at the National September 11 Memorial & Museum, where six moments of silence were timed to commemorate significant moments from the attack.

President Barack Obama spoke at the Pentagon, where one of the hijacked planes crashed, killing 184 people. He called for Americans to embrace "our patchwork heritage."

At the Flight 93 National Memorial near Shanksville, Pa., where a plane hijacked by terrorists slammed into a field 15 years ago, the names of the 40 passengers and crew members were read and bells rang in their memory.

In New York, 15-year-old Emily Ortiz said her relatives had always told her stories about her father, Emilio Pete Ortiz, who died in the north tower, where he worked. She said she attends the ceremony every year at the memorial site, where relatives take turns reading victims' names. "It's another way to get a little bit closer," said Emily, who is from Queens, N.Y.

The ceremony in New York came on the heels of recent changes for the area surrounding the former World Trade Center site. In March, the World Trade Center transit hub, with its soaring Oculus centerpiece, opened to the public. Last month, Westfield World Trade Center, a $1.4 billion shopping complex inside the transit hub, officially opened, although some stores haven't yet been completed.

Some families attending the event said they were comforted by being around others who had experienced the tragedy firsthand. Kamila Milewska-Podejma, 37, came to honor her brother, Lukasz Tomasz Milewski, who had worked for a food-service company.

Sometimes when she comes to the site, people are laughing and taking selfies, said Ms. Milewska-Podejma, who was wearing a memorial T-shirt. "That's why when it's only family members and first responders it's different, because they get it," added Ms. Milewska-Podejma, who had come with her father and daughter.

Debbie Mazzoni, 57, who lost the father of her two eldest children, firefighter Peter Carroll, 42, said her middle child is now a firefighter himself -- and prefers to keep the pain private.

"He really is silent about it, doesn't show any emotions. I try to get him up there to say his father's name, but he doesn't want any part of it," she said. "To this day, 15 years later, I know to give him his space."

Ryan Tracy contributed to this article.

Credit: By Corinne Ramey, Sonja Sharp and Zolan Kanno-Youngs

DETAILS

Subject:	Families & family life; Terrorism; Memorials & monuments
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71212 : Historical Sites
Location:	Flight 93 National Memorial
Classification:	71212: Historical Sites
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818283572
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-at-memorials-past-is-present-families/docview/1818283572/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-09-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 301 of 500

Wealth Management (A Special Report) --- Money and Happiness: A Surprising Twist: It may not be about how much wealth you have, but how much cash

Blackman, Andrew . Blackman, Andrew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Experiences tend to provide more lasting happiness than material goods; giving money away makes people happier than spending it on themselves; and wealthier people do tend to be happier, but only up to a certain point. The Wall Street Journal spoke recently with Joe Gladstone, research associate at the University of Cambridge in the U.K. and co-author of both studies.

FULL TEXT

Conventional wisdom says you should be investing as much of your excess money as you possibly can. That may be the best path to greater wealth. But it may not be the best path to happiness.

In a previous article, we looked at a broad range of research about money and happiness. Some of the main conclusions: Experiences tend to provide more lasting happiness than material goods; giving money away makes people happier than spending it on themselves; and wealthier people do tend to be happier, but only up to a certain point.

More recent research has yielded surprising new insights. One study, for example, shows that when it comes to happiness, a bank balance may be more important than overall wealth. Meanwhile, a separate study suggests that buying material things can make you happier -- but only if the things you buy fit your personality.

The Wall Street Journal spoke recently with Joe Gladstone, research associate at the University of Cambridge in the U.K. and co-author of both studies. Here are edited excerpts from that interview.

WSJ: Why did you decide to look at the link between bank balances and happiness?

MR. GLADSTONE: I've been working with banks to answer some interesting questions about how and why people make certain financial decisions. A U.K. bank allowed us to survey thousands of its customers about their happiness and then match those responses to transaction data from their accounts.

We wanted to look at the fundamental question: To what extent can money lead to happiness? And does money tied up in a nonliquid form provide the same happiness as money that is available to spend?

WSJ: And what did you find?

MR. GLADSTONE: We find a very interesting effect: that the amount of money you have in your bank account right now is a better predictor of happiness than your aggregate wealth. Having more money in their bank account makes people feel more financially secure, which leads to an increase in happiness.

That makes sense for the poorest 50% in the study, but it's surprising that it's still the case for the richest 50%. Even for a very wealthy person who has lots of savings and investments, having more money in their checking account seems to increase their happiness.

It is just a correlational study, so we don't study the reasons for this. But we can hypothesize that when money is tied up in a pension or investments, it feels more abstract and inaccessible. Going to the ATM and seeing a large balance available feels more important to people.

WSJ: Why is this research important?

MR. GLADSTONE: It goes against the traditional advice a financial adviser might give someone. Advisers might say all money that isn't invested in something like equities is wasted -- it's sitting in your account losing value -- so the right choice from a purely rational economic point of view is to invest it.

But that is not taking into account human psychology. It isn't just about maximizing your monetary benefit, but about maximizing your well-being.

WSJ: Should people keep all their money in their checking account?

MR. GLADSTONE: No, there are diminishing returns. Going from GBP 1 to GBP 1,000 (about $1.30 to $1,300) leads to more happiness than going from GBP 1,000 to GBP 10,000, and so on. But people might want to think about building up more current assets.

Maybe they own a house or have access to some other asset. If they shifted their approach and built up more of a buffer to make themselves feel more secure, it might be a powerful way to make them feel happier with their lives.

WSJ: Your other research looks at buying decisions and happiness. What do you find in that study?

MR. GLADSTONE: Lots of research out there assumes that a single rule will tell all of us what will make us happy. But people are different, so we wanted to take the research to the next level and look at how different kinds of people can maximize their happiness.

So again we partnered with a major bank in the U.K. We looked at people's debit-card transactions and matched them against the results of personality and happiness surveys. We found that when people spent money on things that matched their personality, it was strongly predictive of happiness.

WSJ: Doesn't everyone spend on things that fit their personality?

MR. GLADSTONE: No. If you ask people what would make them happier, they often give a normative response; in other words, what should make them happy. But what we show is that what fits with socially desirable behavior may not be what makes you happy.

The next stage of this research will be to look at why some people are better at this than others.

WSJ: How do you measure the link between personality and spending?

MR. GLADSTONE: We use something called the "big five," which is the five characteristics that make most people different from each other. The simple acronym for this is OCEAN: openness, conscientiousness, extroversion, agreeableness and neuroticism.

We assessed people's personalities based on that model. But then we had to assign personality scores to the products and things they spent their money on. We did that with a large-scale online survey in which we asked people to rate how well each type of spending matched the different personality types.

But this analysis, like the previous study, only showed a correlation. We also wanted to show a causal link, so we did a separate experiment in which we took people who were highly introverted or highly extroverted and gave them money to spend either in a bar or in a bookshop. Then we asked them for their levels of happiness at multiple points in the process.

We show that when the extroverted people spent money in the bookshop, it had no effect on their happiness, whereas the introverts became happier. And in the bar, the introverts actually became less happy. It is a small-scale study, but it's quite compelling evidence for a causal link between how well our spending behavior matches our personality and how happy we are.

Mr. Blackman is a writer living on Crete. He can be reached at reports@wsj.com.

Credit: By Andrew Blackman

DETAILS

Subject:	Series & special reports; Checking accounts; Retirement planning; Wealth; Happiness; Personality; Bookstores
Business indexing term:	Subject: Checking accounts Retirement planning Wealth Bookstores; Industry: 45921 : Book Retailers and News Dealers
Classification:	45921: Book Re tailers and News Dealers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	R.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 12, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818283524
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/wealth-management-special-report-money-happiness/docview/1818283524/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

At Wells, A Solid Image Is At Risk

Glazer, Emily . Glazer, Emily.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The National Association of Federal Credit Unions, whose members, like community banks, compete with Wells Fargo, issued a similarly harsh denunciation.

FULL TEXT

A $185 million fine is small change for Wells Fargo & Co., which had profit last year of almost $23 billion. But the reputational blow from claims of "widespread illegal" sales practices could prove costly.

The San Francisco bank, with its folksy stagecoach logo, has positioned itself as a solid, Main Street lender that avoided the excesses of the financial crisis and other missteps on Wall Street. That image is in danger now of being challenged by disclosures of improper account and product openings by employees unveiled in an enforcement action the bank entered into Thursday.

In that action, the bank was fined and had to submit to a consent order to settle civil claims brought by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and the Los Angeles City Attorney's office.

In other high-profile enforcement cases such as multibillion-dollar settlements related to mortgage underwriting and the sales of mortgage bonds, banks often have been able to use an agreement to put bad behavior behind them and move on. But in the case of Wells Fargo, banking specialists, analysts and investors say the damage may be just starting.

"This scandal, easy to understand and not nearly as complex as mortgage-backed securities, seriously undermines Wells Fargo's Main Street image," wrote Ian Katz, director at research firm Capital Alpha Partners LLC.

In a release, the bank said the settlement with regulators was reached "consistent with our commitment to customers and in the interest of putting this matter behind us."

Even so, rivals already are moving to capitalize on the disclosures. In a statement Friday, Camden R. Fine, president of the Independent Community Bankers of America, said the association and its nearly 6,000 community banks are "outraged" and called Wells Fargo's conduct "appalling and harmful to American consumers and communities." The National Association of Federal Credit Unions, whose members, like community banks, compete with Wells Fargo, issued a similarly harsh denunciation.

Such sentiments along with public opprobrium on the internet and social media had the bank in damage control mode. Executives were calling investors and analysts to try and tamp down fears over the impact, according to people familiar with the matter.

Jim Smith, head of virtual channels for Wells Fargo, wrote in a message to employees Thursday the bank had a "robust" communications plan to support staff. "The next few days will likely be very busy days . . . during this time, we take it one interaction at a time -- one customer at a time," Mr. Smith wrote, according to the message reviewed by The Wall Street Journal.

Wells Fargo's shares fell 2.4% Friday, a worse drubbing than other bank stocks in a down day for markets overall.

An immediate worry for investors is how customers react to news of how employees behaved. Regulators, for instance, said that Wells Fargo employees, often chasing sales goals and bonuses, created fake accounts for customers, invented personal identification numbers and moved funds between accounts without authorization.

Those allegations could hurt the bank's ability to attract new customers, could prompt current customers to look for another bank and affect the amount of products and services Wells Fargo is able to sell to new or existing customers, said Allen Tischler, a senior vice president at Moody's who focuses on U.S. banks.

A curtailment of Wells Fargo's ability to cross-sell products to customers could crimp profits. The bank has long touted its cross-selling abilities as a reason for its success. It has noted in recent investor presentations and securities filings that its customers have more than six of its products per household.

The community banking segment at Wells Fargo, which handles most retail-banking products and services, generated $12.2 billion in revenue in the second quarter and net income of $3.2 billion. That was equal to 55% and 57%, respectively, of revenue and net income for the bank as a whole.

Any erosion of that business could affect returns on equity at the bank. Although this measure of profitability has been falling in recent quarters due to the squeeze of superlow interest rates, Wells Fargo has consistently posted the highest returns of big, U.S. banks in recent years.

In the aftermath, investors want to see how the settlement affects the bank's approach to business and to understand how widespread the roots of the alleged behavior run.

"Give me some assurances this isn't an endemic thing in the organization," said David Ellison, who manages a Hennessy Funds portfolio that owns $4 million worth of Wells Fargo stock.

(See related article: "Attention, Wells Fargo Customers" -- WSJ Sept. 10, 2016)

Credit: By Emily Glazer

DETAILS

Subject:	Banks; Banking industry; Customers; Community banks; Employees; Corporate image; Investments; Competition
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Banks Banking industry Customers Community banks Employees Corporate image; Corporation: Wells Fargo & Co; Industry: 52218 : Savings Institutions and Other Depository Credit Intermediation
Company / organization:	Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Classification:	52218: Savings Institutions and Other Depository Credit Intermediation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818660967
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/at-wells-solid-image-is-risk/docview/1818660967/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A VW engineer pleaded guilty to helping the auto maker's admitted efforts to cheat on emissions tests, the first criminal conviction in the U.S. related to the scandal. ---

FULL TEXT

Major markets had one of their worst days in months, as doubts over central banks' willingness or ability to stimulate economic growth sent stocks and bonds tumbling. The Dow fell 394.46 points.

A VW engineer pleaded guilty to helping the auto maker's admitted efforts to cheat on emissions tests, the first criminal conviction in the U.S. related to the scandal.

Owners of Samsung's Galaxy Note 7 smartphones were advised by the company and the CPSC to stop using the devices.

The reputational blow to Wells Fargo from claims of "widespread illegal" sales tactics could prove costly for the bank.

Hanjin has the funding and the legal permission necessary to unload four ships bound for U.S. ports, one of its lawyers said.

Facebook reversed a decision to delete posts containing a famous Vietnam War photo after protests from Norway.

Apple has shut down some elements of the tech giant's effort to build an electric self-driving car.

DETAILS

Location:	United States--US; Norway
Company / organization:	Name: Consumer Product Safety Commission--CPSC; NAICS: 926150; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818657380
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1818657380/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-14
Database:	ProQuest Central

World News: U.S.-China Tensions Center on Korea -- - Washington's plan to provide Seoul with missile defense raises hackles in Beijing

Page, Jeremy; Gale, Alastair . Page, Jeremy; Gale, Alastair.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In recent weeks, Chinese officials and experts have suggested that North Korea was being driven to future nuclear tests in large part by the U.S. and South Korea decision in July to put Thaad in place.

FULL TEXT

Distrust between Beijing and Washington is spiraling upward as North Korea appears to be raising both its capabilities and the pace of its provocations.

Central to Beijing's growing concerns is a U.S.-built missile-defense system planned for deployment in South Korea, known as Terminal High-Altitude Area Defense, or Thaad. The U.S. says the system is designed to protect its ally from North Korean missiles, but Beijing says Thaad could also be used to track Chinese ones, undermining its nuclear deterrent.

For Beijing, Washington's efforts against North Korea raise fears about U.S. encirclement. China, which fought alongside Pyongyang in the 1950-53 Korean War to push back the U.S., still sees North Korea as an important buffer. Beijing remains concerned that a North Korean collapse, politically or economically, would drive huge numbers of refugees across China's borders and bring U.S. troops to its doorstep.

While Beijing is concerned about Pyongyang's provocative behavior and wants it to abandon its nuclear program, Chinese officials don't see the possibility of a fully functioning nuclear arsenal in North Korea as a direct threat to China. Even if it prompted South Korea and Japan to develop their own nuclear weapons, as many fear, that wouldn't affect the strategic balance with China as its arsenal is so much larger. What China cares about is the strategic balance with the U.S.

Chinese leaders believe the best way to get Pyongyang to halt its nuclear program would be for the U.S. to give Pyongyang a guarantee it won't unseat the government.

At a summit of the Group of 20 major nations in China last weekend, Chinese President Xi Jinping raised Thaad with his South Korean counterpart, Park Geun-hye, and Mr. Obama. Mr. Xi told Ms. Park its deployment could "intensify disputes." Ms. Park shot back that Thaad was a response to North Korea's missile threats, "not a third country."

A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman on Friday said Beijing "firmly opposed" North Korea's test but urged all parties to "act with caution" and "avoid provoking each other." China, she said, would "take part in relevant negotiations in the U.N. Security Council with a responsible attitude."

Over recent weeks, North Korea has tested various types of missiles, including the first successful test of one fired from a submarine and another successful test of one from a road-mobile carrier. Both represent new threats because it is harder to track and destroy the missiles before launch.

North Korea fired three ballistic missiles this week, prompting Mr. Obama to say Beijing must work "more effectively" with the U.S. to deter Pyongyang.

After a North Korean nuclear test in January, China agreed to sanctions only after weeks of wrangling, partly over differences between Washington and Beijing on Thaad, according to diplomats.

In recent weeks, Chinese officials and experts have suggested that North Korea was being driven to future nuclear tests in large part by the U.S. and South Korea decision in July to put Thaad in place.

"North Korea's nuclear test is the direct product of the U.S. deployment of Thaad," said Shi Yuanhua, a professor with the Institute of International Studies at Fudan University in Shanghai, after Friday's test. "The U.S. and South Korea have to take responsibility for this test."

Chinese officials and experts also say sanctions will never stop North Korea's nuclear program because the leadership there sees it as its only defense against the U.S., and so will always give it priority in allocating resources.

"North Korea will continue to ignore relevant sanctions and pressure, and will continue to improve their nuclear weapons' miniaturization," said Liu Jiangyong, a professor with Tsinghua University's Institute of International Studies in Beijing. "I think it is inevitable that North Korea will conduct the sixth or even the 10th nuclear test -- it's only a matter of time," he added.

Te-Ping Chen contributed to this article.

Credit: Jeremy Page, Alastair Gale

DETAILS

Subject:	Nuclear tests; International relations-US; Sanctions; Missiles; Nuclear weapons
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sanctions
Location:	North Korea; China
People:	Xi Jinping
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818657163
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-china-tensions-center-on-koreas/docview/1818657163/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 305 of 500

Nuclear Test Puts Pressure On U.S.

Gale, Alastair; Lee, Carol E; Lubold, Gordon . Gale, Alastair; Lee, Carol E; Lubold, Gordon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A law passed earlier this year gave the administration authority to impose what are known as "secondary sanctions" against firms that do business with North Korea. Because Chinese firms are virtually alone in dealing with North Korea, they would bear the brunt of any sanctions.

FULL TEXT

Calls for punitive action echoed around the world after North Korea's nuclear test on Friday, but the narrow scope for international cooperation against Pyongyang is putting pressure on Washington to act on its own.

South Korea's president said she would seek stronger sanctions through the United Nations Security Council, and the top U.S. and Russian diplomats called for discussions about a course of action.

But whether the Security Council can act depends heavily on China -- North Korea's ally and main trading partner -- which has increasingly sparred with Washington over regional security issues, including tensions in the South China Sea and on the Korean Peninsula.

In the face of growing reluctance from China to intervene, two options emerged for a U.S. response: Pressure Beijing by activating U.S. sanctions authority to penalize Chinese firms that do business with North Korea; and accelerating the installation of a sophisticated missile-defense system in South Korea, a deployment that represents a major irritant in the Washington-Beijing relationship.

The latest nuclear test was seen by many analysts and experts as a marked advance by North Korea. The blast was a larger detonation than the previous four, experts said, coming as Pyongyang this year has continued refining its ballistic-missile program, its mobile-launching capabilities and its technology for miniaturizing warheads.

While not considered capable of launching a warhead that could reach the U.S., North Korea is seen as steadily moving toward that goal.

In Washington, officials didn't corroborate reports from South Korean agencies indicating that Friday's nuclear test marked North Korea's most powerful detonation to date. The U.S. Air Force is sending a WC-135 tanker -- a so-called sniffer -- to the area near the explosion to collect atmospheric samples and determine more about the nature of the explosion. The plane should arrive in the next few days, defense officials said. "It will determine what type of nuclear explosion it is," said one defense official.

The U.N. Security Council met in emergency session to consider the North Korean nuclear test, which Secretary General Ban Ki-moon denounced as another "brazen breach" of Security Council resolutions that ban the country from conducting nuclear tests.

However, in an indication of sagging U.S.-Chinese relations, the American defense secretary, Ash Carter, heaped responsibility for North Korea's misbehavior on Beijing.

"I'd single out China. It's China's responsibility," Mr. Carter said at a news conference during an official visit to Norway. "China shares important responsibility for this development and has an important responsibility to reverse it. It's important that it use its location, its history and its influence to further the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula and not the direction things have been going."

Earlier this year, following a fourth North Korean nuclear test in January, the U.S. and China jointly advanced a U.N. Security Council resolution imposing an unusually tough regimen of sanctions against Pyongyang, including cutoffs of aviation fuel and mandatory cargo inspections.

The U.S.-China partnership on North Korea then appeared to sour after Washington struck a deal with South Korea in July to install an advanced missile-defense system, known as a Terminal High-Altitude Area Defense system, or Thaad, by the end of next year.

U.S. and Chinese officials have clashed over the planned deployment, last discussing their differences during President Barack Obama's trip to China last week for the summit of the Group of 20 leaders.

The missile-defense deal with South Korea reached in July calls for the installation of the Thaad system by the end of next year. However, U.S. officials said Friday the delivery and activation of the system could be moved forward.

China on Friday condemned North Korea's nuclear test, with its Foreign Ministry urging Pyongyang to "honor its commitment to denuclearization, comply with relevant [U.N.] Security Council resolutions and stop taking any action to worsen the situation."

Despite the U.S.-China strains, State Department officials on Friday said Beijing's reaction to North Korea's latest nuclear test represented a "very strong condemnation."

Many U.S. political officials and experts believe a better use of existing U.S. sanctions authority would pressure Beijing to rein in North Korea. A law passed earlier this year gave the administration authority to impose what are known as "secondary sanctions" against firms that do business with North Korea.

Because Chinese firms are virtually alone in dealing with North Korea, they would bear the brunt of any sanctions.

"It is clear the Obama administration's enforcement efforts are falling short," said Rep. Ed Royce (R., Calif.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. "Most notably, the administration has yet to impose sanctions on any of the many Chinese companies and banks that . . . continue to support the North Korean regime. This must change."

Bruce Klingner, a former Central Intelligence Agency official now a senior research fellow at the conservative Heritage Foundation think tank, said the effect of sanctions against Chinese firms could quickly change Beijing's calculations.

"Even if you were to sanction one of them, it sends a strong signal," he said.

But there is little doubt that the North Korea issue will fall to Mr. Obama's successor. With just four months left in office, the president is unlikely to undertake the sort of policy review that would precede a major shift.

Paul Sonne, Farnaz Fassihi, Jay Solomon, and Jeremy Page contributed to this article.

Credit: Alastair Gale, Carol E. Lee, Gordon Lubold

DETAILS

Subject:	Nuclear tests; International relations-US; Sanctions; Councils; Defense; Explosions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sanctions
Location:	South Korea; China; North Korea
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818308193
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/nuclear-test-puts-pressure-on-u-s/docview/1818308193/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: U.S. Agencies Order Pipeline Work Halted

Maher, Kris; Sider, Alison . Maher, Kris; Sider, Alison.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.S. District Judge James Boasberg said in an opinion issued Friday that he wouldn't grant an injunction because he didn't agree that the federal government failed to consult with the tribe as required by law and that the pipeline would cause irreparable harm to the tribe's heritage.

FULL TEXT

The federal government ordered a halt to work on a $3.8 billion four-state oil pipeline in the Upper Midwest on Friday, handing a temporary victory to the Standing Rock Sioux tribe and other opponents of the project.

The unusual move by three federal agencies immediately followed a federal judge's ruling denying an injunction sought by the tribe. The judge said the Dakota Access Pipeline would be able to proceed.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said it wouldn't authorize construction near Lake Oahe, a culturally important location to the tribe, until the agency determines if it needs to reconsider its previous approvals under the National Environmental Policy Act.

"This case has highlighted the need for a serious discussion on whether there should be nationwide reform with respect to considering tribes' views on these types of infrastructure projects," the Corps and the departments of Justice and Interior said in a joint statement.

The agencies also asked the pipeline's builder to voluntarily halt work on either side of the lake.

A spokeswoman for Energy Transfer Partners LP, which is building the pipeline with an affiliate company, declined to comment. Phillips 66, the refiner, owns 25%.

David Archambault II, chairman of the Standing Rock Sioux tribe, praised the agencies' intervention. "Native peoples have suffered generations of broken promises and today the federal government said that national reform is needed to better ensure that tribes have a voice on infrastructure projects like this pipeline," he said.

U.S. District Judge James Boasberg said in an opinion issued Friday that he wouldn't grant an injunction because he didn't agree that the federal government failed to consult with the tribe as required by law and that the pipeline would cause irreparable harm to the tribe's heritage.

The tribe, which has led months of increasingly tense protests against the pipeline, sued the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in July in federal court in Washington, D.C., to block the pipeline. The tribe argued that the agency improperly authorized the project, which it said threatened the tribe's drinking water and culturally important sites.

The pipeline has drawn national attention and become another flashpoint in the fight over drilling for and transporting crude oil. Clashes between protesters and police at a site in North Dakota have escalated in recent weeks, with protesters chaining themselves to equipment and both sides alleging that the other was provoking violence.

As with the Keystone XL Pipeline, which would have carried crude oil from Canada to the Gulf Coast but was blocked by President Barack Obama last fall, opponents have linked the Dakota Access Pipeline to climate change and risks to drinking water.

Credit: By Kris Maher and Alison Sider

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Drinking water; Crude oil; Pipelines; Native North Americans
Business indexing term:	Industry: 48611 : Pipeline Transportation of Crude Oil
Location:	Lake Oahe
Classification:	48611: Pipeline Transportation of Crude Oil
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818000034

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-agencies-order-pipeline-work-halted/docview/1818000034/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to us ers, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 307 of 500

U.S. News: Zika Funding Impasse Nears Breakthrough

Peterson, Kristina; McKay, Betsy . Peterson, Kristina; McKay, Betsy.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The provision says funding could only go to health services provided by public-health departments and hospitals or those reimbursed through public-health plans. Because ProFamilias isn't a Medicaid provider, it wouldn't fall under any of those categories. ---

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Lawmakers are edging closer to breaking a monthslong impasse over funds to combat the Zika virus, as Republican lawmakers and aides said they expected to drop a contentious provision that would effectively block funding to clinics in Puerto Rico that work with Planned Parenthood.

Lawmakers from both parties said Friday they anticipated that this month Congress would pass a package combining Zika funding with a spending bill that would keep the government running until early December. The government's current funding is scheduled to expire at midnight on Sept. 30.

Democrats have balked at a provision in the $1.1 billion legislation that would effectively prevent funding from going to clinics run by ProFamilias, a partner of Planned Parenthood in Puerto Rico, where the number of Zika cases has risen sharply this summer. Republicans said that language would likely be dropped to get bipartisan support for the government funding and Zika package.

"The most thoughtful path forward on Zika is to take probably the $1.1 billion number, strip it clean and put it in whatever [short-term spending bill] we move," said Rep. David Jolly (R., Fla.). "It's clear there's not votes for any other path forward."

Other GOP lawmakers and aides in both chambers said they agreed that the Planned Parenthood restriction would likely need to be removed to break the logjam that has left Zika funding stymied on Capitol Hill since the White House first requested $1.9 billion to combat the virus in February.

Aides to Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) declined to comment on the Zika agreement while negotiations are ongoing. Mr. McConnell, House Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.), Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid (D., Nev.) and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D., Calif.) are expected to meet with President Barack Obama on Monday afternoon to discuss Zika, government spending and other issues that could come up this month, according to congressional aides and a White House official.

Public-health leaders say the stalemate in Congress has slowed their efforts to combat the epidemic, and that they are reaching a breaking point. "Our funding essentially runs out at the end of this month," Tom Frieden, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said on Friday.

The agency has been using funds originally appropriated for general emergency response needs as well as for preventing a resurgence of the Ebola epidemic in West Africa, flare-ups of which have occurred within the past several months.

Nearly 19,000 cases of Zika have been reported in the U.S. and its territories, including 1,751 pregnant women. Those cases include people infected by mosquito bites in two areas of Miami-Dade county.

Dr. Frieden said the consequences of Zika would soon begin to become more visible in the U.S., as more babies of women who were infected with the virus during their pregnancies come due and are born with birth defects.

"The decisions that are made in the coming weeks are going to have implications for decades to come, for individuals, for families, for communities," he said.

Democrats have made clear they won't sign off on Zika funding that includes Planned Parenthood restrictions.

The provision says funding could only go to health services provided by public-health departments and hospitals or those reimbursed through public-health plans. Because ProFamiliias isn't a Medicaid provider, it wouldn't fall under any of those categories.

Byron Tau contributed to this article.

Credit: By Kristina Peterson and Betsy McKay

DETAILS

Subject:	Legislators; Zika virus; Federal funding; Funding
Business indexing term:	Subject: Federal funding; Industry: 92113 : Public Finance Activities 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	Puerto Rico; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Planned Parenthood; NAICS: 621410, 813319
Classification:	92113: Public Finance Activities; 92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818000029
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-zika-funding-impasse-nears-breakthrough/docview/1818000029/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

City News: For 9/11, Sorrow Over Loss, Triumph Over Return --- Police march to honor officers who perished; mayor hails agencies' move to WTC tower

MacMillan, Thomas . MacMillan, Thomas.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio began a weekend of 9/11 tributes with two commemorative ceremonies Friday, one to celebrate a return and the other to mourn a loss.

Mr. de Blasio in the morning hailed the opening of offices of several federal agencies in One World Trade Center, moves that mark the return of federal workers to the site 15 years after terrorist attacks brought down the twin towers on Sept. 11, 2001.

In the afternoon, the mayor marched in a parade organized by the New York Police Department's Emerald Society to remember the police officers who lost their lives in the attacks.

"It is a day to recognize how far we've come," Mr. de Blasio said at the first event, held on the 63rd floor of the 1,776-foot-tall building. Instead of going into a "defensive crouch," he said, New York City rebuilt and showed that "the terrorists achieved none of their aims. In fact, they strengthened our resolve."

Jeh Johnson, the U.S. secretary of Homeland Security, said that customs and border protection, the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the General Services Administration moved into offices on the 50th to 55th floors of the building several months ago.

"Terrorism cannot prevail if we refuse to be terrorized," he said. "Literally out of the ashes we have rebuilt stronger and taller."

Friday's parade featured pipe-and-drum bands from police departments in cities around the country -- including Chicago, Seattle, and Austin, Texas -- as well from Toronto. Organizers said it was the largest such parade in 103 years.

Police Commissioner William Bratton said watching all the bands from the various police departments reminded him that police officers came from all over the U.S. and Canada to help after the Sept. 11 attacks. "On behalf of the New York Police Department, we thank you," he said.

"September 11, 2001, touched us all, every single one of us, deeply," said Mr. de Blasio at a wreath-laying ceremony following the parade. "We should never forget that it was not only a tragedy for our city and our nation, it was an especially painful day for law enforcement. It was the deadliest day in the history of United States law enforcement."

The NYPD lost 23 officers on Sept. 11, and 99 others have died since from injuries and illness sustained from working on rescue and recovery, Mr. de Blasio said.

"On behalf of 8 1/2 million New Yorkers, I want to offer my deepest thanks and sincerest condolences to the fallen, to their families and the to greatest police department on this earth," he said.

Credit: By Thomas MacMillan

DETAILS

Subject:	Law enforcement; Parades; Memorials & monuments; September 11 terrorist attacks-2001; Police departments; Mayors
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71212 : Historical Sites 92212 : Police Protection 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Bratton, Wi lliam; de Blasio, Bill
Company / organization:	Name: One World Trade Center; NAICS: 531120; Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	71212: Historical Sites; 92212: Police Protection; 92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	18 18000021
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-9-11-sorrow-over-loss-triumph-return/docview/1818000021/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-09-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 309 of 500

U.S. News: Municipal Park Privatizations Fuel Conflicts

Carlton, Jim . Carlton, Jim.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Colorado Springs issue started in 2014 when city officials approached The Broadmoor over gaining easements to use portions of the resort's 5,000-acre property to help connect a popular hiking trail that the resort bisects.

FULL TEXT

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. -- A new conservation battleground is emerging in crowded cities, where proposals to convert municipal parkland to other uses have provoked public furor.

Here at the base of the Rocky Mountains, a citizens group in August filed a suit to overturn a deal approved by the city in May to trade 190 acres of historic North Cheyenne Canon Park to a private resort controlled by Denver billionaire Philip Anschutz. As part of the deal, the city gets access to land in more remote terrain.

"This should not become a theme park for the rich," Sue Spengler, a nearby resident, said as she surveyed a pine-fringed meadow in the park known as Strawberry Hill.

Officials of the The Broadmoor resort said the park is used by few people, and said the opposition was motivated by neighbors who largely want to keep Strawberry Hill for their own use such as for walking dogs."The group that is opposed to this is small in number but loud in voice," said Jack Damioli, president and chief executive officer.

Municipal parks have long faced threats from new roads and other infrastructure development, but conservationists say cities are under added pressure to sell or trade them because of population growth on limited land.

Of 54 cities responding to a survey earlier this year by the Trust for Public Land, a conservation advocacy group, 14, including Dallas, Phoenix and Detroit, reported they were facing the loss of parkland; 18 said they had lost a total of 688 acres over the past five years.

In Memphis, Tenn., a grass-roots movement sprang up in 2014 to oppose a decades-old practice of the city allowing the Memphis Zoo to use a stretch of grass in Overton Park as a parking lot.

The group organized protests over Facebook, including a standoff last March when some lovers of the 110-year-old park held their arms out to police to be arrested. In July, the city council voted to restrict parking there, prompting cheers from residents packed into the meeting.

In Tulsa, Okla., residents are trying to overturn a sale by a city public trust of nine acres of 67-acre Helmerich Park to a real-estate developer. That part of the park, on a bank of the Arkansas River, is slated for a shopping center and was sold by the Tulsa Public Facilities Authority trust for $1.5 million in August last year.

Officials of the authority said that part of the park, which was first acquired in 1991, was never developed for recreation. But former Mayor Terry Young and a group of other residents who filed suit in state district court in July 2015 to invalidate the deal said the park is held in trust for the public and can't be sold. The trust countersued in November, asking that a judge affirm its sale.

With the cases pending, opponents of the deal have held protest rallies and peppered local elected officials with emails and calls asking them to reconsider.

"Once you lose open space, you don't get it back," said Mr. Young, now 68.

The Colorado Springs issue started in 2014 when city officials approached The Broadmoor over gaining easements to use portions of the resort's 5,000-acre property to help connect a popular hiking trail that the resort bisects. The resort turned its attention to adjoining Strawberry Hill, after discovering the city might one day open it to downhill bicycle racing and disrupt the solitude for guests, said Mr. Damioli, the resort president.

The two sides agreed to a swap: Strawberry Hill for the resort, in exchange for access to about 500 acres of forest land for the city. The resort agreed to continue allowing public access on all but a nine-acre meadow of Strawberry Hill, where it plans to host barbecues and horseback riding for guests.

"It's an absolute no-brainer for the city of Colorado Springs," Mayor John Suthers said in an interview.

Some conservationists support the exchange. "At the end of the day, we end up with more acres of park, open space and more miles of trail," said Susan Davies, executive director of Trails and Open Space Coalition, a local conservation group.

But some residents reacted with outrage when the city council approved the exchange, saying Strawberry Hill is part of a city park residents in 1885 voted to preserve.

"You're going to have the wealthy elite having lavish parties in the center, with the plebes looking in from the perimeter," said Dana Duggan, a media consultant who helped organize opposition to the deal.

Among other concerns by the residents is that much of the property being traded by the resort is far less accessible than Strawberry Hill.

"The bottom line is we get a bunch of junk and we trade a valuable piece of property," said Michael Chaussee, a local resident and real-estate investor.

City officials declined to comment on the litigation.

Credit: By Jim Carlton

DETAILS

Subject:	Conservation; Public lands; Parks & recreation areas; Privatization; Site planning; Demonstrations & protests; Cities
Business indexing term:	Subject: Privatization
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1818000001

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-municipal-park-privatizations-fuel/docview/1818000001/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 310 of 500

Returning to the Lost Towers --- Harley Di Nardo couldn't grieve for his sister -- until he decided to reconstruct her last moments

Zuckerman, Gregory . Zuckerman, Gregory.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The night before everything changed, Harley Di Nardo and his sister, Marisa, treated their mother to a birthday dinner at Windows on the World, the restaurant on the World Trade Center's 107th floor. For close to 15 years, Harley buried his grief and avoided thinking about his sister in the doomed tower. Since opening in 2011, the 9/11 Memorial in downtown Manhattan has drawn more than 28 million visitors; nearly seven million have visited the city's 9/11 Memorial Museum since it opened in 2014.

FULL TEXT

The night before everything changed, Harley Di Nardo and his sister, Marisa, treated their mother to a birthday dinner at Windows on the World, the restaurant on the World Trade Center's 107th floor.

They joked about the waiters, who hovered nearby, and the building's lousy cellphone reception. Marisa talked about the challenges of working as a commodities broker at Cantor Fitzgerald, a few floors below. She nearly took another job in New Jersey, she confided, but her boss persuaded her to stay.

A violent rainstorm passed through New York City that night, Sept. 10, 2001, and after it cleared, Harley and his sister pressed up to a restaurant window to look at the lights of Manhattan stretched out below.

Marisa splurged on two $200 bottles of wine and picked up the tab for her brother, a musician, and her mother, a real-estate agent. "It was a Last Supper-type of feeling," Harley recalled.

After midnight, as they waited for a car service to take Marisa home, Harley said his 37-year-old sister, usually gregarious, looked tired and sad. She had split from her husband and was traveling a lot for work.

"Why don't you take the day off tomorrow," Marisa's mother asked.

"I can't," Marisa said. "I have an 8:30 a.m. meeting."

Harley left Marisa on the couch of a nearby hotel to wait for her ride. He happened to look back at her sitting alone, resting her chin on her hands, and then headed home worried about his sister and her life.

The next morning, around 9 a.m., Harley turned on his TV to images of the World Trade Center with a smoky, gaping hole and the sounds of sirens and screams. He phoned Marisa but got no answer.

Harley and his girlfriend rode the subway as far as 14th Street before the train halted. They ran down Washington Street, and Harley stopped dazed pedestrians streaming the other way.

"What building are you coming from?" he asked. Some said they had come from the World Trade Center's North Tower, where Marisa worked on the 104th floor, giving Harley a moment's hope.

Minutes later, they saw the South Tower collapse. As the street filled with debris, the couple could go no farther and began to cry.

Six months later, police knocked on the door of the Di Nardo family home in Westchester, New York. They carried Marisa's charred, black purse. Inside was a receipt from the Sept. 10 dinner. She was one of 2,606 people killed by the terrorists who struck the Twin Towers. The purse was all the tangible evidence Marisa's family had of her passing.

For close to 15 years, Harley buried his grief and avoided thinking about his sister in the doomed tower. It was too painful, he said.

Since opening in 2011, the 9/11 Memorial in downtown Manhattan has drawn more than 28 million visitors; nearly seven million have visited the city's 9/11 Memorial Museum since it opened in 2014.

But many people who lost friends and family members have had difficulty confronting the tragic toll of 9/11. For years, some shunned the details of what happened that day. Whether because of guilt or depth of loss, they tried to turn away, only to find their grief surface unexpectedly as time passed.

For Harley Di Nardo, a wave of sorrow found him early this year. Rather than run away, he dove into action.

Harley and Marisa Di Nardo had been close siblings. She encouraged her brother's music and filmmaking career, and was a loyal older sister who attended his live shows and urged the rest of the family to support him.

Two weeks before the 9/11 attack, Marisa had invited her brother to her apartment for dinner and shared a disturbing dream. "I'm going to die soon," she said, crying. Harley had tried to reassure her.

For years afterward, he was haunted by her premonition and the mass assault that took her life and so many others.

"All I could picture was her in there with the walls collapsing, trapped . . . it was too gruesome to think about," Harley said. "If someone started talking about it I walked away."

Marisa's 2002 memorial service was the last time Harley reflected on his sister's death, he said, until he, his wife and two young children moved to California last year.

His son and daughter asked about their aunt, and Harley found himself wishing he knew more about her last day. Maybe it was the move to the West Coast, the sunny weather or time passing, but something inside him changed.

For too long, Harley said, "I had thought, 'Life has to go on, she's not here, it doesn't matter.' Then all of a sudden it did."

In February, he said, he decided "I needed to know what happened up there. I just really, really miss this person and wanted to know."

Harley wasn't sure where to begin. He first scrutinized photos of people who jumped from his sister's building and listened to tapes of 911 emergency calls from people in the World Trade Center that day, all with no luck.

He remembered that at his sister's memorial service, one of Marisa's former clients said he was in touch with her just after the first plane hit. He asked around but no one in the family recalled a name.

"My first goal was to find who this guy was," Harley said.

He retrieved a Twitter message he received late last year from Marisa's goddaughter, Maggie Johnston. Ms. Johnston's father had worked with Marisa at a commodity brokerage firm in Houston years ago and they became close friends.

Ms. Johnston's tweet included a photo of Marisa holding her as a baby. "I intend on giving my firstborn daughter her name," Ms. Johnston wrote.

Harley reached Ms. Johnston and asked her to put him in touch with her parents, hoping they might help identify the mystery man.

Steven Johnston, Marisa's former colleague, was overcome with emotion when he got the call and couldn't speak on the phone. His wife got on the line and, with her husband's help, she began reciting the names of Marisa's clients they could recall.

". . . . Herb Petry . . ."

"I remember that name," Harley called out. He said Mr. Petry had joined him and his sister at a New York City cafe the week before Sept. 11, one of many people Marisa had befriended through her work.

Harley was encouraged. He sent a Facebook friend request to Mr. Petry and a message: "I'd love to talk about what went down that day."

When they spoke, Mr. Petry said he had been in Goldman Sachs's trading room in lower Manhattan when the first hijacked plane slammed into the World Trade Center's North Tower. After hearing the 8:46 a.m. explosion, he and his colleagues turned on a TV and saw smoke billowing from the building. He said his first reaction was to reach Marisa.

"Are you OK? What's going on?" he asked over a squawk box that ran between Goldman and Cantor to facilitate trading.

Marisa couldn't communicate over their telephone line, Mr. Petry said, so she replied on AOL Instant Messenger.

"Something just hit our building," she said. "It's getting smoky. I am having trouble breathing."

"Can you get to the kitchen to get something over your face?" Mr. Petry asked.

"I'm going to try to call my mom and run," Marisa wrote.

Harley discovered that parts of their exchange were included in a Sept. 13, 2001, article in The Wall Street Journal.

After the second plane hit the South Tower, Mr. Petry and his colleagues fled Goldman's office.

"That was my first piece of information," Harley said. The conversation with Mr. Petry yielded new details, and the progress lifted his spirits.

Piecing together the end of his sister's life was more comforting than Harley had expected, he said. Talking with Marisa's friends helped him feel closer to his sister.

Mr. Petry's recollections raised new questions. Marisa's mother never received a call from her daughter, for one thing.

Harley learned his sister may have placed a call to her husband, Jeffrey Schorpp, possibly to discuss an escape route. Mr. Schorpp had worked as an electrician and knew about New York office buildings, Harley said.

The Di Nardo family had become estranged from Mr. Schorpp after Sept. 11, and Harley didn't want to call him. In an interview, Mr. Schorpp said only that Marisa had called him after the first plane hit.

Harley said his sister always sat by fire exits at movie theaters when they were growing up: "It was like a phobia for her, she always thought about exits. It came into my head, if there was a way to get out, she'd look for it."

He spoke with people who speculated she may have headed to the building's roof. Weeks before the terror attack, his sister had talked about the 1993 World Trade Center bombing with Herb Petry's wife, Brenda, who recalled Marisa saying, "If anything ever happened again, I'd go to the roof."

Seeking confirmation, Harley combed through news accounts for any mention of his sister's colleagues at Cantor Fitzgerald, especially her best friend at the firm, Stacey Peak. One article quoted Ms. Peak's mother, Bobbie, saying her daughter called her as smoke filled the office.

"Mom, there's a fire in my building," Ms. Peak said, her mother told an Indianapolis radio station in 2006. "We're trying to get out and maybe go to the roof."

There were other clues. The Journal reported in 2001 that the home answering machine of a Cantor Fitzgerald executive had recorded a snippet of workers screaming: "Try the roof! Try the roof!"

Harley was convinced his sister would have tried to lead her colleagues to safety.

More than 200 people in the building climbed toward the tower's roof, according to news accounts. Two New York police-rescue helicopters hovered nearby with a three-man crew trained for rooftop rescues. Two sets of metal doors leading to the roof exit were locked for security, blocking escape.

Reports that some Cantor Fitzgerald employees held hands before they likely suffered smoke inhalation gave Harley hope his sister spent her last moments embracing colleagues.

"My theory is they spent the last moment holding hands and praying," he said. "I'd like to believe they passed out before the floor gave way."

Harley now lives in Los Angeles, works as a stylist at a hair salon in Malibu, writes music and makes films. He keeps in touch with Ms. Johnston and Mr. Petry. He tells his son and daughter stories about their Aunt Marisa and how she would have spoiled them.

To honor his sister, Harley reissued a song this summer that had been her favorite and produced a music video starring his children.

"Marisa was a huge kids' person, but she never had a chance to have children," he said. "My kids talk about her all the time."

Harley learned a little more about what happened to Marisa on Sept. 11, and the work has helped him air grief long kept sealed. Yet he discovered only a balm, not a cure. For now, he said, that is enough.

Credit: By Gregory Zuckerman

DETAILS

Subject:	Memorials & monuments; Grief; Siblings; Families & family life; September 11 terrorist attacks-2001; Memorial services; Buildings
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71212 : Historical Sites
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: World Trade Center-New York City NY; NAICS: 813910
Classification:	71212: Historical Sites
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999998
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/returning-lost-towers-harley-di-nardo-couldnt/docview/1817999998/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 311 of 500

City News: Too Many No-Shows Force Council Panel to Call It a Day

Dawsey, Josh . Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A New York City Council committee meeting about domestic violence was canceled Friday when a majority of the panel's members failed to show up, causing tension and embarrassment for some councilors.

FULL TEXT

A New York City Council committee meeting about domestic violence was canceled Friday when a majority of the panel's members failed to show up, causing tension and embarrassment for some councilors.

The 10 a.m. hearing of the public safety committee was scrubbed about an hour later because only five of the 11 members were present to consider legislation requiring the city to provide more data on domestic-violence cases. A majority is needed for a vote.

"To schedule a hearing on the 11th hour on a Friday and expect members to radically adjust their schedules is unreasonable," said Ritchie Torres, a Bronx Democrat who missed the hearing. "It creates this dishonest narrative of a lackadaisical City Council."

The meeting must be rescheduled if the bill is to get a committee vote and advance to the full body for consideration.

The six members who didn't attend were Mr. Torres; Julissa Ferreras and Rory Lancman of Queens; and Vincent Gentile, Rafael Espinal and Jumaane Williams of Brooklyn. Ms. Ferreras and Messrs. Gentile and Espinal didn't return requests for comment.

Messrs. Lancman, Torres and Williams said they learned of the hearing Thursday and already had plans. Mr. Torres said he had meetings with police and federal officials, while Mr. Lancman said he had to be at a ceremony in his district marking the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks. Mr. Williams was attending a street naming in honor of a resident killed by gun violence.

"The council should do a better job of scheduling and noticing its meetings," Mr. Lancman said. "But the dramatic interpretation of the council not doing its job isn't fair or reasonable."

Asked about the scheduling criticisms from members, Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito said, "I'm not going to get into that."

"In my leadership, we have done a lot of work to really make this council run administratively much more smoothly."

The canceled hearing became a joke Friday morning around City Hall after a Crain's New York Business reporter took to Twitter to summarize the hearing -- or lack thereof.

Steven Matteo, a Republican from Staten Island, and Jimmy Vacca, a Democrat from the Bronx, were the only members present around the time the hearing was scheduled to begin. Panel member Chaim Deutsch, a Brooklyn Democrat, arrived around 10:30 a.m. He noted members had received a $36,000 raise earlier this year.

Peter Spencer, an aide to Mr. Matteo, said Mr. Matteo was unavailable for comment Friday because he left City Hall for a local hospital, where his wife was expected to give birth.

Credit: By Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Councils; Domestic violence
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: City Council-New York City NY; NAICS: 921120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999989
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-too-many-no-shows-force-council-panel/docview/1817999989/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In th ose cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Court Overturns Bias Case Conviction

King, Kate . King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Ravi's roommate, Tyler Clementi, 18 years old, learned of the surveillance and committed suicide several days later by jumping off the George Washington Bridge, on the Hudson River about 50 miles away from the Rutgers campus in Piscataway, N.J. The appellate division of the Superior Court of New Jersey ruled that the jury's decision to convict Mr. Ravi was predicated on a law that is now "constitutionally defunct."

FULL TEXT

A New Jersey court Friday reversed the 2012 conviction and ordered a new trial for a former college student accused of invasion of privacy and bias intimidation against his roommate, who later committed suicide.

Prosecutors charged Dharun Ravi with using a webcam to spy on his Rutgers University roommate's sexual encounters with another man in 2010 and encouraging others to remotely access the webcam.

Mr. Ravi's roommate, Tyler Clementi, 18 years old, learned of the surveillance and committed suicide several days later by jumping off the George Washington Bridge, on the Hudson River about 50 miles away from the Rutgers campus in Piscataway, N.J.

The appellate division of the Superior Court of New Jersey ruled that the jury's decision to convict Mr. Ravi was predicated on a law that is now "constitutionally defunct." The widely watched case propelled New Jersey's legislature to pass legislation requiring antibullying training and education in public schools.

Mr. Clementi's parents, Joe and Jane Clementi, said in a statement that they were "not legal experts" and didn't comment directly on the decision. "All we can do is try to understand and deal with are the facts as we know them now," the statement said. "We know that Tyler's private moments were stolen from him and used to humiliate him."

Prosecutors have 20 days to ask the state Supreme Court to review the decision. The Middlesex County Prosecutor's Office didn't respond to requests for comment Friday.

Mr. Ravi served 30 days at the Middlesex County Adult Correctional Center, three years' probation, community service and paid a $10,000 fine.

His attorney, Steve Altman, said he was pleased with the court's decision. "Dharun Ravi, whatever he did or didn't do, had no homophobic motive involved," Mr. Altman said.

The court's decision hinged on a 2002 antibias statute that criminalized intimidation based on race, color, religion, gender, disability, sexual orientation or ethnicity. The law has been challenged on the basis that it is often impossible to prove a defendant was motivated by bias, said state Sen. Joseph Vitale, a Democrat from Woodbridge who sponsored the 2002 legislation.

Parts of the law were declared "unconstitutionally vague" by the state Supreme Court in another case decided last year. The state had argued in its prosecution that Mr. Ravi was antigay and spied on Mr. Clementi because he was gay.

Mr. Ravi wasn't charged in Mr. Clementi's suicide.

In its decision, the appellate court ruled that evidence for bias intimidation was used so extensively in Mr. Ravi's trial that it likely tainted the jury's deliberations on the privacy-invasion charges. The privacy invasion convictions, as well as charges of evidence tampering and hindering prosecution, were remanded for a new trial.

Credit: By Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	Suicides & suicide attempts; State court decisions; Trials; Privacy; Convictions; Homophobia; Bias; Webcams
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Ravi, Dharun
Company / organization:	Name: Rutgers University; NAICS: 611310
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999974
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-court-overturns-bias-case-conviction/docview/1817999974/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 313 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Five former and current officers from the Oakland Police Department, as well as former officers from the Contra Costa County Sheriff's Department and the Livermore Police Department, will face charges that include a sexual act with a minor and exchanging compensation for sex, Ms. O'Malley said.

FULL TEXT

CALIFORNIA

Bay Area Officers

Will Be Charged

Seven Bay Area police officers will be charged with crimes in connection with allegations of sexual misconduct involving an underage teenager, Alameda County District Attorney Nancy O'Malley said Friday.

Five former and current officers from the Oakland Police Department, as well as former officers from the Contra Costa County Sheriff's Department and the Livermore Police Department, will face charges that include a sexual act with a minor and exchanging compensation for sex, Ms. O'Malley said.

The charges weren't filed Friday but were expected to be filed soon, Ms. O'Malley said.

Six of the officers allegedly had sexual relations with the now-19-year-old woman, some when she was under 18, the age of consent in California, she said.

The officers will face felony and misdemeanor charges. Attorneys for some of the officers didn't respond to requests for comment. It was unclear if others had attorneys.

-- Zusha Elinson

Wisconsin

Second Girl Claims

A Mental Defect

The second of two Wisconsin girls accused of stabbing their friend and leaving her for dead as a sacrifice to a fictional horror character called Slender Man pleaded not guilty by reason of mental defect Friday.

At a hearing in Waukesha County Circuit Court, Maura McMahon, a lawyer for Anissa Weier, entered the plea of not guilty "by reason of mental disease or defect."

Judge Michael Bohren appointed two doctors to examine the girl and report on her mental status by Oct. 6.

-- Shibani Mahtani

DETAILS

Subject:	Defects; Sheriffs
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	California; Contra Costa County California; Alameda County California; United States--US
People:	Weier, Anissa
Classification:	92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2

Publication year:	20 16
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999973
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1817999973/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 314 of 500

World News: Syria Cease-Fire Accord Reached

Schwartz, Felicia; Sonne, Paul . Schwartz, Felicia; Sonne, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Secretary of State John Kerry and Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said that they agreed on a cease-fire deal in Syria that will include increased military cooperation against terrorist groups if implemented.

FULL TEXT

GENEVA -- Secretary of State John Kerry and Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said that they agreed on a cease-fire deal in Syria that will include increased military cooperation against terrorist groups if implemented.

Mr. Kerry, speaking to reporters after on-and-off talks with his Russian counterpart that began Friday morning and stretched past midnight, said the deal reached by the U.S. and Russia aims to reduce violence and eventually move toward a political transition.

First, beginning on sundown Monday in Syria, Russia and the U.S. will use their influence on the parties they support, the regime and the opposition respectively, to try to bring about seven consecutive days of calm that would be along the lower levels of violence that took place in February under the ceasefire deal backed by the United Nations Security Council that has since unraveled.

Once there are seven consecutive days of reduced violence and aid groups receive humanitarian access in the Aleppo area, the U.S. and Russia will consecutively set up a "joint implementation center," where the two will discuss how they will go after the Syria Conquest Front, formerly known as al Qaeda-affiliated Nusra Front. Through that process they will develop targets, and once the U.S. and Russia begin to take strikes based on those targets the Syrian regime will halt its air operations in parts of Syria where the opposition or Nusra is present.

Mr. Kerry said the U.S. and Russia believe the plan, if implemented, could be "a turning point" in the more than five-year-long civil war in which an estimated 400,000 people have been killed. "Our teams have devised what we think is a more prescriptive and far-reaching approach than we have been able to put together to date," he said.

It wasn't immediately clear that the agreement Mr. Kerry brokered had won the whole-hearted backing of the Obama administration.

A U.S. official said Defense Secretary Ashton Carter was among those who questioned the agreement and Russia's willingness to see through the terms of the deal. Two days ago, Mr. Carter rebuked Russia for what he said was its undermining of the international order out of "misguided ambition and misplaced fear."

Pentagon Press Secretary Peter Cook said the U.S. is mindful of the prerequisites to any tie-up. "Those commitments must be fully met before any potential military cooperation can occur," he said. "We will be watching closely the implementation of this understanding in the days ahead."

Mr. Kerry said the plan announced Saturday included deterrents that would prevent both the regime and the opposition from violating the ceasefire arrangement, but it was unclear what mechanisms, if any, were in place to hold any parties accountable if they did go against it.

He said the joint implementation center would allow for more targeted strikes on the Syria Conquest Front and Islamic State and that the U.S. would press rebel forces not to commingle with Nusra.

"There is a deterrence in that," he said. "This new equation offers an opportunity."

DETAILS

Subject:	Violence; Truces & cease fires; Cooperation
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Syria
People:	Kerry, John F
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	0099966 0
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999963
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syria-cease-fire-accord-reached/docview/1817999963/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: NFL Prepares for Pregame Protests During Anthem

Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Jim Chairusmi; Matthew Futterman; Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Chairusmi, Jim; Futterman, Matthew . Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Jim Chairusmi; Matthew Futterman; Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Chairusmi, Jim; Futterman, Matthew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

NFL Executive Vice President of communications Joe Lockhart said the league has a "somewhat broader" view than the union of what players can do but explained the league would work together with the Players Association to deal with the behavior on a case-by-case basis.

FULL TEXT

The National Football League is bracing for possible widespread player demonstrations during the national anthem at Sunday's games, in what would mark an escalation of a protest movement over concerns of racial injustice.

The games fall on the 15th anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, which the NFL plans to commemorate with appearances by military personnel, first responders and two U.S. presidents. That backdrop could further animate a national debate set off last month by quarterback Colin Kaepernick's refusal to stand for the anthem.

The NFL plans to mark the attacks with video messages from President Barack Obama and former President George W. Bush aired before the games. Players' helmets will be adorned with 9/11 decals, and coaches will be given 9/11 lapel pins, the NFL said.

Some of the Seattle Seahawks are planning a team demonstration before their game Sunday, according to social-media posts from players this week. Officials with the NFL players union, who have been providing members guidance on which protests are prohibited, expect that players on several other teams may pursue some form of protest.

An official with one team said his organization had prepared a "response plan" for possible protests and expected that most other teams had done the same.

NFL Players' Association spokesman George Atallah said players can't violate the dress code -- for example, by writing on their helmets -- and they can't interrupt the game. Apart from that, Mr. Atallah said, players can express themselves as they choose.

The league hasn't disciplined Kaepernick. NFL Executive Vice President of communications Joe Lockhart said the league has a "somewhat broader" view than the union of what players can do but explained the league would work together with the Players Association to deal with the behavior on a case-by-case basis.

Kaepernick, the backup quarterback for the San Francisco 49ers, first sat out "The Star-Spangled Banner" at an August preseason game, saying afterward: "I am not going to stand up to show pride in a flag for a country that oppresses black people and people of color." Since then, several players have joined Kaepernick in taking one knee for the anthem.

Response to Kaepernick's protest has not only highlighted national anxieties about policing in African-American communities, it has also put coaches and owners in the precarious position of trying to balance respect for players' political expression against broader public sentiment about the military and police.

Credit: By Rebecca Davis O'Brien, Jim Chairusmi and Matthew Futterman

DETAILS

Subject:	Demonstrations & protests; Professional football; September 11 terrorist attacks-2001
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71121 : Spectator Sports
People:	Kaepernick, Colin
Company / organization:	Name: National Football League--NFL; NAICS: 711211, 813990
Classification:	71121: Spectator Sports
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999960
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-nfl-prepares-pregame-protests-during/docview/1817999960/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 316 of 500

Business News: France's Total Expands in Texas

Horobin, William . Horobin, William.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

At the start of September, there were just three rigs drilling in the Barnett, compared with 202 rigs drilling in the Permian Basin of West Texas, according to data from oil-field services provider Baker Hughes Inc. Total's move, which could increase its relatively small output in the U.S., is part of a wider pivot the company is making to pump more natural gas than oil.

FULL TEXT

PARIS -- French oil major Total SA is taking full control of the Barnett Shale oil-and-gas leases in Texas that it shared with joint-venture partner Chesapeake Energy Corp., after the U.S. shale producer decided to exit the once-prolific gas field to shore up its finances.

Total said on Friday it is exercising rights to acquire a 75% share in the Barnett Shale assets to become the sole owner and operator of 215,000 partially developed acres of the field near Fort Worth in North Texas.

The move follows Chesapeake's agreement last month to pay $334 million to Williams Partners LP to get out of its pipeline contract with the pipeline operator in the Barnett Shale formation. At the time, Chesapeake said it was transferring its interests in the fields to Saddle Barnett Resources LLC, a private equity-backed firm based in Dallas.

Total, which is pre-empting Saddle's deal, said its U.S. exploration and production unit will add $420 million to what Williams is receiving to achieve "a fully restructured, competitive gas-gathering agreement," in addition to paying $138 million to be released from three other contracts.

"With the new conditions created by the exit of Chesapeake and the associated restructuring of the midstream contracts, we believe that we can extract significant value from the substantial, well-located resource base of the play," Total E&P USA President Jose Ignacio Sanz said in a statement.

The Barnett Shale was once a big-producing gas field, but in recent years drilling for new wells has waned amid low natural gas prices. At the start of September, there were just three rigs drilling in the Barnett, compared with 202 rigs drilling in the Permian Basin of West Texas, according to data from oil-field services provider Baker Hughes Inc.

Total's move, which could increase its relatively small output in the U.S., is part of a wider pivot the company is making to pump more natural gas than oil. The company said the production from the Barnett fields that it will take over from Chesapeake stands at 65,000 barrels of oil equivalent a day. Total's U.S. production last year amounted to 89,000 barrels a day.

Credit: By William Horobin

DETAILS

Subject:	Pipelines; Oil shale; Natural gas prices
Business indexing term:	Subject: Natural gas prices
Location:	Fort Worth Texas; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Total SA; NAICS: 211120, 324110, 457120; Name: Chesapeake Energy Corp; NAICS: 211120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999945
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-frances-total-expands-texas/docview/1817999945/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 317 of 500

Business News: GM Referral Program Spurs Recall

Spector, Mike . Spector, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In May, GM was alerted to the crash of a 2014 Chevrolet Silverado pickup truck in which air bags and seat-belt pretensioners allegedly failed as part of a program the company launched urging employees to speak up when spotting safety issues, according to documents filed with U.S. auto-safety regulators.

FULL TEXT

General Motors Co. recalled nearly 4.3 million vehicles globally with defective software that can cause air bags and seat belts to fail, a problem linked to one death and three injuries. The auto maker spotted through an internal program launched in the wake of its mishandling of a faulty ignition switch blamed for 124 fatalities.

A sensing diagnostic module in the affected vehicles can improperly activate a test under certain circumstances that prevents the safety devices from deploying, GM said in U.S. National Highway Traffic Safety Administration filings disclosed on Friday. The affected vehicles include pickup trucks, sport-utility vehicles and cars with model years ranging from 2014 to 2017, the company said.

GM said dealers would repair or replace the module's software on vehicles without any charge to owners. The company said the cost of the recall isn't expected to be material and would be reflected in third-quarter earnings.

In May, GM was alerted to the crash of a 2014 Chevrolet Silverado pickup truck in which air bags and seat-belt pretensioners allegedly failed as part of a program the company launched urging employees to speak up when spotting safety issues, according to documents filed with U.S. auto-safety regulators. GM started the program, "Speak up for Safety," in 2014 after the auto maker failed for more than a decade to recall millions of older cars with defective ignition switches.

A GM spokesman said the car maker didn't have further details on the May crash.

After probing the incident and collecting data from the black boxes in the truck and other vehicles with similar alleged problems, GM decided at the end of August to conduct a safety recall, according to the regulatory documents. GM collaborated with Delphi Automotive PLC, the supplier of the module, on the probe, according to the documents.

"Delphi's [sensing diagnostic module] is used on select GM models and fully meets the performance specifications GM provided," a Delphi spokesman said in a statement. "Any additional performance enhancements to the specifications are at GM's discretion and we are fully supporting it in this process."

The recall comes some two-and-half years after GM recalled roughly 2.6 million older cars with a defective ignition switch that can slip from the run position, cutting engine power and disabling safety features including air bags.

Chief Executive Mary Barra urged employees to sound alarms when spotting possible safety problems and launched a program to recognize them for doing so.

The current recall affects certain 2014-2016 Buick LaCrosse and Chevrolet SS and Spark EV vehicles; 2014-2017 Chevrolet Corvette, Trax, Caprice PPV and Silverado 1500 vehicles.

Other affected vehicles include 2014-2017 Buick Encore and GMC Sierra 1500 vehicles.

Credit: By Mike Spector

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile safety; Automobile industry; Product recalls; Automobile shows; Sport utility vehicles; Air bags
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Product recalls; Corporation: General Motors Corp; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390

Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999845
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-referral-program-spurs-recall/docview/1817999845/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 318 of 500

Business News: Wal-Mart Pulls 'Egyptian Cotton' Sheets

ABSTRACT

Two-thirds of Welspun's sales come from U.S. retailers. Since the Egyptian cotton issue flared up last month, shares of Welspun have lost 45% of their value.

FULL TEXT

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. said it would stop selling Egyptian cotton sheets made by Welspun India Ltd., after its investigation found the Indian textile giant couldn't guarantee the products were legitimate.

"Welspun has not been able to assure us the products are 100% Egyptian cotton, which is unacceptable," Wal-Mart spokeswoman Marilee McInnis said.

The world's biggest retailer is removing the Welspun products from U.S. store shelves and Walmart.com. Wal-Mart said it would offer customers who purchased the products a full refund. It will donate the sheets currently on shelves.

The move is the latest blow to the Indian textile company after Target Corp. last month said it was pulling thousands of Welspun's Egyptian cotton sheets from its shelves and cutting ties with the company after it found Welspun hadn't used Egyptian cotton in the products for about two years.

Target's move spurred other Welspun customers, including Wal-Mart, J.C. Penney Co. and Bed Bath & Beyond Inc. also to investigate the products. Penney and Bed Bath & Beyond on Friday didn't immediately respond to requests for comment.

A spokesman for Welspun acknowledged the Wal-Mart action and said the company is working with retailers to resolve the issue.

"We take the current traceability concerns around some of our product lines very seriously," he said.

Welspun has hired an accounting firm to investigate the cause of the problems and said it is installing technology to better monitor its supply chain. Welspun said around 6% of its total sales comes from the Egyptian cotton products.

The Wal-Mart spokeswoman said the retailer isn't cutting ties with Welspun. Instead, it is working with the Indian company to "implement strong controls and better label the products they supply to us," Ms. McInnis said. But it was unclear when the Welspun Egyptian cotton sheets might reappear on Wal-Mart shelves.

Two-thirds of Welspun's sales come from U.S. retailers. Since the Egyptian cotton issue flared up last month, shares of Welspun have lost 45% of their value.

The investigations that the retailers have disclosed also have shined light on a longstanding issue in the cotton industry: There isn't enough Egyptian cotton produced to make all the products that claim to contain it.

Egypt produced less than 1% of the global cotton supply last year, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Cotton Egypt Association, which licenses the trademark and certifies suppliers, estimates 90% of products labeled Egyptian cotton are inauthentic.

Credit: By Sarah Nassauer and Preetika Rana

DETAILS

Subject:	Linens; Retail stores; Product lines; Beds; Cotton; Investigations
Business indexing term:	Subject: Retail stores Product lines; Corporation: Bed Bath & Beyond Inc Walmart Inc; Industry: 44912 : Home Furnishings Retailers 44911 : Furniture Retailers
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Welspun India Ltd; NAICS: 314120; Name: Walmart Inc; NAICS: 454110, 455110, 455211
Classification:	44912: Home Furnishings Retailers; 44911: Furniture Retailers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 10, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817999733
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-wal-mart-pulls-egyptian-cotton/docview/1817999733/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 319 of 500

Mexican Metal Cache Linked to China Mogul --- U.S. executives contend aluminum magnate gamed global trade system

Scott Patterson; John W. Miller; Chuin-Wei Yap; Patterson, Scott; Miller, John W; Chuin-Wei Yap . Scott Patterson; John W. Miller; Chuin-Wei Yap; Patterson, Scott; Miller, John W; Chuin-Wei Yap.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. Commerce Department says it is investigating the Mexican aluminum's origin as part of a slew of trade complaints by the U.S. metals industry against China, many of which include allegations of transshipping.

FULL TEXT

Two years ago, a California aluminum executive commissioned a pilot to fly over the Mexican town of San Jose Iturbide, at the foot of the Sierra Gorda mountains, and snap aerial photos of a remote desert factory.

He made a startling discovery. Nearly one million metric tons of aluminum sat neatly stacked behind a fortress of barbed-wire fences. The stockpile, worth some $2 billion and representing roughly 6% of the world's total inventory -- enough to churn out 2.2 million Ford F-150s or 77 billion beer cans -- quickly became an obsession for the U.S. aluminum industry.

Now it is a new source of tension in U.S.-Chinese trade relations. U.S. executives contend that the mysterious cache was part of a brazen scheme by one of China's richest men to game the global trade system.

Aluminum-industry representative Jeff Henderson says he is convinced that China Zhongwang Holdings Ltd., a Chinese aluminum giant controlled by billionaire Liu Zhongtian, tried to evade U.S. tariffs by routing aluminum through Mexico to disguise its origins, a tactic known as transshipping.

"My Moby-Dick has been Zhongwang," says Mr. Henderson, president of the Aluminum Extruders Council, a U.S. trade group.

Mr. Liu, a member of China's ruling Communist Party, denies any connection to the Mexican aluminum or transshipping. "These things have nothing to do with me," he said in a June interview at his company's Liaoning, China, plant, where he lives in an apartment inside the factory. He said he wouldn't know how to establish a business in Mexico, joking that "in that sort of place, there are a lot of killers with guns."

Company records, trade documents and legal filings reviewed by The Wall Street Journal, along with interviews of people who have done business with Mr. Liu, raise doubts about his account. They show that hundreds of thousands of tons of aluminum were shipped to Mexico from China through a series of companies, including one owned by Mr. Liu's son and one by someone who describes himself as a longtime business associate of the Chinese billionaire.

The U.S. Commerce Department says it is investigating the Mexican aluminum's origin as part of a slew of trade complaints by the U.S. metals industry against China, many of which include allegations of transshipping.

China's booming industrial production has reordered global markets, few more dramatically than aluminum. Fueled by access to inexpensive electricity and tax breaks, Chinese aluminum output doubled between 2010 and 2015. With local demand slowing, more of it was sent to the U.S., which was importing 40% of its aluminum by 2015 -- up from only 14% in 2010.

By the end of 2016, five aluminum smelters will be operating in the U.S., down from 23 in 2000.

Alcoa Inc., the largest American aluminum maker, is splitting in two, isolating its profitable parts-making units from its troubled raw-aluminum operations. Alcoa Chief Executive Klaus Kleinfeld last year said illegitimate Chinese exports were "the major driver" of lower aluminum prices.

Mr. Liu's ascent as an aluminum mogul began in 1993, when he started building his company from a small domestic player in northeast China into one of the world's top producers. China Zhongwang's main business is making aluminum "extrusions" -- pipes, rods and panels used in finished products such as window frames, refrigerators and automobiles. Extrusions are formed by forcing heat-treated aluminum through a die, like dough through a cookie cutter.

He took China Zhongwang public in Hong Kong in May 2009, retaining a 74% stake while he raised $1.26 billion in one of the world's biggest initial public offerings of the year. While a nearly 50% decline in China Zhongwang's stock since the IPO has cut into Mr. Liu's fortune, he remains among China's wealthiest businessmen, with a net worth estimated by Forbes magazine at around $3 billion.

The same year, Chinese aluminum-extrusion exports to the U.S. more than doubled from 2008 to 192,000 tons. U.S. prices for imported extrusions plunged 30% from the previous year, according to Global Trade Information Services, or GTIS, which tracks world-wide trade.

The burst of exports led to a finding by the Commerce Department that several companies, including affiliates of China Zhongwang, were selling cut-rate aluminum while receiving subsidies back home. In 2010, it slapped punishing tariffs on certain aluminum imports, including those from what it dubbed the "Zhongwang Group Companies."

China Zhongwang's U.S. shipments ground to a halt, and its 2010 profits fell 26% from the previous year. The company never responded to the U.S. government's questions about its trade practices, the Commerce Department said. It also didn't respond to several requests for comment about the matter for this article.

Around this time, an ambitious young businessman, Po-Chi "Eric" Shen, a native of Singapore who had attended the University of California at Berkeley, began shopping for real estate in Mexico. He settled on a plot near San Jose Iturbide, about 160 miles northwest of Mexico City and about 500 miles from the U.S. border at Brownsville, Texas. There, a company Mr. Shen helped establish, Aluminicaste Fundicion de Mexico, developed plans to construct a $200 million factory to melt aluminum into raw metal.

Mr. Shen had a history with the Liu clan. He was friends with Mr. Liu's son, Liu Zuopeng, known as ZP, who lived in Southern California, where the Liu family owns several houses. Mr. Liu's wife became a board member of one of his companies, Scuderia Development, corporate records show. Another of Mr. Shen's companies, Scuderia Capital, in 2008 had lent China Zhongwang $200 million, according to China Zhongwang's prospectus.

In Mexico, Mr. Shen was implementing an audacious plan, according to people familiar with the matter: A network of trading companies could route hundreds of thousands of tons of aluminum from China to Mexico, where a plant would melt it for shipment to the U.S., evading trade restrictions and claiming North American Free Trade Agreement benefits.

In an interview, Mr. Liu said he wasn't involved in Aluminicaste and didn't help Mr. Shen finance the plant. "I don't even know him very well, why would I give him money?" he said.

Mr. Shen, in several interviews with the Journal, described extensive and longstanding business ties with Mr. Liu and his family. "Mr. Liu and I had a very complicated business relationship that was neither employer or employee, nor investor or investee," he said.

On paper, China Zhongwang's days of relying on overseas sales were over. Its 2011 annual report said 96% of its revenue derived from sales inside China, up from 56% in 2010.

In fact, Chinese trading firms that bought aluminum from China Zhongwang resold much of the product to a commodity trader in Singapore called GT88 Capital, according to shipping records and people familiar with the matter. The owner of GT88: Aluminicaste's Mr. Shen.

In 2011 and 2012, Mexico's aluminum-extrusion imports surged. Most of the metal was delivered by Mr. Shen's Singapore trading firm to Aluminicaste's logistics company, according to shipping records tracked by Panjiva Inc., a New York trade-data company.

Rumors of the facility, and the giant stockpile, began circulating among U.S. producers. "No one really knew what was going on," said the executive who commissioned the aerial photos of the plant, Mike Rapport, who runs an aluminum-extrusion company in southern California.

In 2013, Aluminicaste ownership transferred to Mr. Liu's son, who became CEO of the facility, Mexican corporate records show.

Mr. Liu says he wasn't a party to any of this. He says he "scolded" his son when he found out he had taken over Aluminicaste. "In this matter, I have not helped him," he said in an interview. "I was very dissatisfied. I told him, if you want to do this line of work, you come back home." The younger Mr. Liu didn't respond to multiple requests for comment.

Mr. Shen set up shop in an upscale Dallas office employees dubbed the "Sugar Building," after a film studio that formerly owned it. It sported a pair of executive suites, one of which had a $100,000 bed, according to a former employee.

He also snapped up expensive houses, rare cars and a Gulfstream private jet worth $10 million, records in a Dallas county court case show. He purchased a 1963 Ferrari valued at $32 million -- one of the highest prices ever paid for a car at the time -- and more than $70 million of rare red diamonds, according to the court records. Many of the purchases were for business use or investments, according to Mr. Shen.

But there was still a missing piece. People familiar with the matter say Aluminicaste needed a buyer in the U.S. to remelt its product and prepare it for sale there. To solve the problem, Mr. Shen began laying the groundwork for a $1.5 billion plant in Barstow, Calif., a struggling city in the Mojave Desert about 100 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

Mr. Shen told city officials he was backed by the billionaire founder of China Zhongwang, Mr. Liu, and that he had just built a large aluminum factory in Mexico, says Oliver Chi, then-assistant Barstow city manager.

In late 2013, Mr. Shen convened a meeting between local officials and Mr. Liu in Irvine, Calif., according to Mr. Chi. Over dim sum, Mr. Liu said he harbored reservations about the project, explaining that Chinese companies receive substantial financial assistance from the government, which he doubted he would get in the U.S., said Mr. Chi, who attended the meeting.

In an interview, Mr. Liu said he attended the meeting to discuss "environmental issues, not to discuss investing in it."

Meanwhile, setbacks were piling up. Trucks and metal were stolen from the Mexico facility, slowing deliveries, former Aluminicaste employees say. The company failed to obtain Nafta benefits after U.S. authorities concluded that the metal came from China.

Amid mounting financial troubles at Aluminicaste, associates of Mr. Liu accused Mr. Shen of mismanaging company funds, according to people familiar with the allegations and court documents.

They moved to seize Mr. Shen's assets, including his private jet, expensive cars and a luxurious home in Newport Beach, Calif. Management of the company that owned the Sugar Building in Dallas, DFW Maple Leaf Partners, transferred to Mr. Liu's wife, corporate records show.

Mr. Shen denies wrongdoing. His attorney, Dean Kajioka of Kajioka & Associates, a Las Vegas law firm, said Mr. Shen agreed to hand over his assets after he was "threatened physically" by Mr. Liu's associates. A China Zhongwang spokeswoman said Mr. Liu declined to comment on the allegation.

The drama has sometimes veered into slapstick. In 2014, Mr. Shen wrecked a rare McLaren F1 sports car while on a driving tour in the Italian countryside. The crash made the news after fellow McLaren enthusiast Rowan Atkinson, the British comedic actor who plays "Mr. Bean," came to his aid.

Mr. Liu has claimed the car belongs to him. In February, the law firm Latham & Watkins LLP wrote a letter to McLaren, reviewed by the Journal, stating that it is acting on behalf of Mr. Liu and that the vehicle was transferred to him in partial repayment of $400 million of his own funds he claims Mr. Shen misappropriated. Mr. Shen disagrees, saying it is still his car.

Latham & Watkins declined to comment. Mr. Liu didn't respond to a request for comment.

The clash over Mr. Shen's finances helped dash the Barstow project, as the Mexican aluminum continued to accumulate.

For Mr. Henderson, proving China Zhongwang and Mr. Liu stood behind the Mexican aluminum stockpile became an obsession. Last October, his trade group, which counts Alcoa Inc. and Rio Tinto PLC as board members, filed a 600-page petition with the Commerce Department alleging that Mr. Liu and his family are using a network of affiliated companies to evade U.S. antidumping prohibitions.

The petition cites a report by a little-known short seller calling itself Dupre Analytics, which drew connections between China Zhongwang, Mr. Liu's family and Aluminicaste. Dupre, which hoped to profit from a decline in the Chinese company's share price, was aided by the results of a separate U.S. aluminum industry-funded investigation into China Zhongwang's activities in Mexico and China, according to people familiar with the probe.

Trading in China Zhongwang's shares was suspended in Hong Kong for several days after the report's release. At the time the company said the allegations were "factually incorrect."

Despite his setbacks, Mr. Liu is still thinking big. Last month, a company controlled by him and affiliated with China Zhongwang agreed to acquire Cleveland aluminum producer Aleris Corp. for $1.1 billion, which would mark the highest price ever paid by a Chinese company for a U.S. metals outfit.

These days, Aluminicaste is under new management and Mr. Liu's son is no longer listed as an owner. California attorney Charles Pok, who says he now helps run the company, denies any connection between the Mexican plant, the elder Mr. Liu and China Zhongwang. "I do not have a business relationship with Mr. Liu," he said.

But Mr. Liu said in an interview that Mr. Pok has worked for him in the U.S. and Mexico since at least 2004. "Mr. Pok charges me several hundred dollars an hour," he said. "Even when he just sits on the plane, he takes the money."

Mr. Pok later conceded that Mr. Liu is his client but that he was unable to discuss the matter due to attorney-client privilege.

Mr. Pok has also taken over a number of jobs handled by Mr. Shen. In January 2015, he was named president of Eighty Eight Investments AG, the Swiss holding company for GT88, the Singapore trading company that shipped aluminum to Mexico.

As for the giant pile of aluminum, it isn't so big anymore. Last year it was moved to a field beside the factory, covered with a tarp and bales of hay, according to city officials, neighbors and former Aluminicaste employees. Now, plans are afoot to ship the metal stash to a Vietnam site owned by Global Vietnam Aluminum Co., according to people familiar with the matter. A Global Vietnam director, Jacky Cheung, is the new CEO of Aluminicaste. Thousands of tons of aluminum have gotten trucked out of Aluminicaste's facility destined for Vietnam, according to observers and people familiar with the matter. As of June, more than $400 million worth of aluminum had been shipped from Mexico to Vietnam, according to the Mexican Secretariat of Economy. Mr. Cheung declined to comment.

Vietnam has already seen a surge of aluminum imports from China. Shipments of Chinese aluminum extrusions to Vietnam jumped more than 1,000% in 2015 to $1.9 billion, according to GTIS. Another $1 billion worth was shipped to Vietnam from China through July this year. Mr. Henderson says he expects much of the Vietnamese aluminum to land in U.S. markets.

Some already has. Since late 2014, Global Vietnam has shipped some 2,000 tons of aluminum to the U.S., according to Panjiva. One of its buyers: Perfectus Aluminum Inc., a California company started by Mr. Liu's son.

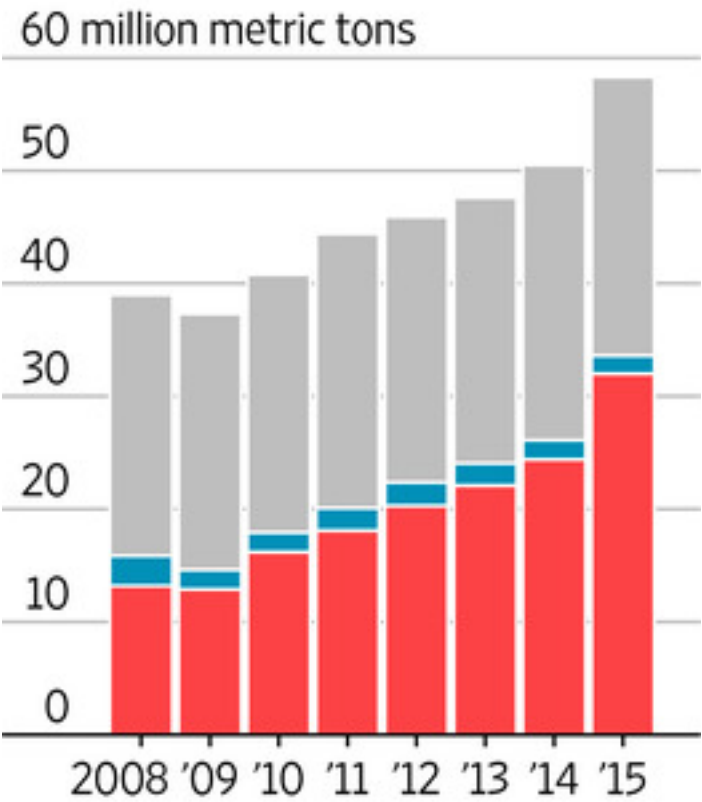

Justin Scheck in London and Brian Spegele in Beijing contributed to this article.

Big Player

China accounts for an increasing portion of the world's aluminum.

Annual aluminum production

China U.S. Other

Source: U.S. Geological Survey

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

DETAILS

Subject:	International trade; Exports; Trade relations; Trade restrictions; Aluminum industry; Tariffs; Extrusion; Interviews
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade Exports Trade relations Trade restrictions Aluminum industry Tariffs; Industry: 33131 : Alumina and Aluminum Production and Processing
Location:	United States--US; China
People:	Liu Zhongtian; Shen, Po-Chi (Eric)
Company / organization:	Name: China Zhongwang Holdings Ltd; NAICS: 331314
Classification:	33131: Alumina and Aluminum Production and Processing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817792480
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/mexican-metal-cache-linked-china-mogul-u-s/docview/1817792480/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 320 of 500

World News: U.S. Gets Ready for New Iraq Offensive -- - Additional troops sent to bolster campaign to reclaim Mosul; October battle anticipated

Kesling, Ben; Lubold, Gordon . Kesling, Ben; Lubold, Gordon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Key developments in a slightly accelerated timetable include stepped-up training, avoidance of political breakdowns and a series of victories by Iraqi forces over Islamic State in places including Ramadi, Fallujah and Hit, bolstering U.S. and Iraqi confidence that the country's forces were ready for the bigger fight in Mosul.

FULL TEXT

The U.S. is gearing up to assist in an offensive to reclaim the Iraqi city of Mosul from Islamic State, and has sent 400 additional troops to the country in anticipation Iraqi forces will begin the long-delayed battle in October, officials said.

The troops have been sent into Iraq to assist Iraqi forces consolidating south of Mosul in what is known as the launchpad for the allied operation in the city of Qayyarah, defense officials said on Thursday. There now are more than 5,000 U.S. military personnel in the country.

Despite rising optimism over chances for success in Mosul, the new commander of the U.S.-led coalition fighting Islamic State, Lt. Gen. Stephen Townsend, said he thinks the battle to retake the jihadist group's last major Iraqi stronghold will be a difficult and dangerous operation.

"We're preparing for a hard fight, a long, difficult fight" in Mosul, Gen. Townsend told The Wall Street Journal late Wednesday here at his office at the coalition's base in Baghdad. "Really, it's a siege I'm talking about here."

The general said, however, that the push to reclaim Raqqa, the Sunni extremist group's self-declared capital in neighboring Syria, was on hold. The Raqqa operation, he said, has been hampered by Turkish tensions with the U.S.-backed rebel force led by Syrian Kurds that is expected to participate in the assault, which follows the incursion by Turkey's military into Syria in August.

Some 3,000-4,500 fighters from Islamic State, also known as Daesh, remain in Mosul, Gen. Townsend estimated. A third of them are "the hardest-core fighters who will essentially die in place," while many of them might be conscripts or opportunists who have a "Daesh flag in one pocket and an Iraqi flag in the other pocket," he said, and will wave whichever keeps them alive.

Islamic State militants overran Sunni-dominated Mosul in the summer of 2014. They scattered the Iraqi army and looted huge stores of military weapons and cash reserves. Since then, the country's second-largest city has been the Iraqi capital of the self-declared caliphate.

The timing of military plans to take the fight to Mosul has shifted considerably ever since U.S. Central Command indicated in February 2015 that the fight would commence that spring.

That plan was quickly withdrawn amid assessments that Iraqi forces and the country's political situation wouldn't allow for a major military assault. Over the ensuing months, U.S. military and diplomatic officials pressed for better-trained and organized Iraqi forces and militias, and for greater political cooperation across the country's ethnic divides.

Nonetheless, U.S. officials were pessimistic this year that an offensive in Mosul could succeed before President Barack Obama leaves office in January. Key developments in a slightly accelerated timetable include stepped-up training, avoidance of political breakdowns and a series of victories by Iraqi forces over Islamic State in places including Ramadi, Fallujah and Hit, bolstering U.S. and Iraqi confidence that the country's forces were ready for the bigger fight in Mosul.

In Baghdad, a government official declined to confirm a timetable for the start of a Mosul offensive. "The date will not be announced before the start of the operation for security reasons," said Saad al-Hadithi, spokesman for Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi. "There is no determined date for launching the Mosul operation."

At a press conference in late August, Mr. Abadi said he still hewed to the timeline of expelling Islamic State from Mosul by the end of the year. "We look forward and will work on liberating Mosul this year, 2016. God willing, I will keep this promise."

Gen. Townsend said Iraqi ground forces have slowed their advance toward the city to make preparations for the assault.

That has given coalition aircraft an opportunity in recent weeks to increase attacks on Islamic State command centers and other crucial targets in Mosul, rather than supporting troops maneuvering on the ground, he said. "We've been able to work more on Mosul and in a more focused way."

Mosul is one of the last areas in Iraq held by militants, and members of Islamic State itself have documented their brutality against the inhabitants and the destruction of cultural artifacts in the area. Now it looms as a place where fortifications, tunnels, improvised bombs and even human shields likely await advancing forces.

Islamic State fighters are digging moats and filling them with oil and tires and burning them to obscure the view of U.S. pilots conducting airstrikes or aerial surveillance, a defense official said.

The Iraqi army is trained and ready to push into Mosul immediately, Gen. Townsend said, but more training is needed among support forces, including police and allied militias, to ensure they are capable of holding and controlling land it seizes.

"Security forces are almost done with preparations for the fight and forces are being organized now, so it is very possible we start the operation in early October," said Gen. Maan Al Saedi, a commander in Iraq's counterterrorism forces, when asked if the Mosul assault could kick off in a month. But he stressed that he had no idea what the final timeline looks like.

"This is the last battle for Daesh, so everything is possible by the enemy," he said. "It's a matter of existence for the enemy."

Credit: Ben Kesling, Gordon Lubold

DETAILS

Subject:	Military deployment; Militancy; Militia groups; Military strategy; Armed forces
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	United States--US; Iraq
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817792090
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-gets-ready-new-iraq-offensive/docview/1817792090/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 321 of 500

Business News: Pulte Chooses a New CEO

Hufford, Austen . Hufford, Austen.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In a June letter to board members regarding the CEO search process, the elder Mr. Pulte had expressed concerns about what he called a "preconceived succession plan" for Mr. Marshall to become chief executive.

FULL TEXT

PulteGroup Inc. appointed a new chief executive and named the grandson of its founder to its board, resolving a public dispute between company management and the founder about the future of the home builder.

The company said Thursday that Ryan Marshall, its president, immediately would become CEO. William J. "Bill" Pulte, the grandson of the founder with whom he shares a name, is being added to the board of directors.

Mr. Marshall replaces former CEO Richard J. Dugas Jr., who had been embroiled in a public battle with PulteGroup's founder over the company's future. In April, PulteGroup said Mr. Dugas would retire early next year amid disagreement about the company's direction. But founder William J. "Bill" Pulte -- who also is the company's largest shareholder -- demanded Mr. Dugas resign quickly amid what he said was poor performance compared with rival home builders.

"Over the past couple of months, we've had very positive and constructive conversations with Bill, allowing us to reach an agreement whereby the Pulte family will support us, our management team and our new CEO," Mr. Dugas said in a letter to company employees. "As it should be, the board, the senior leadership team and our founder can now work together."

Mr. Dugas will continue as chairman through the company's annual meeting, expected to be held in May 2017.

In a statement, Mr. Pulte, the grandson, said he and his grandfather fully support the company's strategy.

PulteGroup also said it had reached an agreement with the founder, who owns about 9% of the company. He agreed to vote for any board-chosen nominee as long as his grandson remains on the board.

In a June letter to board members regarding the CEO search process, the elder Mr. Pulte had expressed concerns about what he called a "preconceived succession plan" for Mr. Marshall to become chief executive. In the letter, Mr. Pulte said Mr. Dugas had mentioned such a plan for Mr. Marshall when the two met earlier in the year, before the public spat. Mr. Marshall was named president in February.

In July, the company posted higher second-quarter revenue and profit than analysts had expected. Revenue grew 41% to $1.8 billion, driven by a 27% increase in new homes delivered and an 11% increase in average selling prices.

Shares fell 1% to close at $20.88 on Thursday.

Jack Micenko, associate director of research at Susquehanna Financial Group, said both the timing and the choice of an internal candidate were somewhat surprising and that his reading of public filings was that Pulte was looking for someone outside the company.

Mark Weintraub, director of equity research for Buckingham Research Group, said the company had signaled that Mr. Marshall was a leading candidate from management's perspective and that the move represents a sort of compromise between the company and its founder. "Each party got something here," he said.

Chris Kirkham contributed to this article.

Credit: By Austen Hufford

DETAILS

Subject:	Appointments & personnel changes; Chief executive officers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Appointments & personnel changes Chief executive officers; Corporation: PulteGroup Inc
People:	Marshall, Ryan
Company / organization:	Name: PulteGroup Inc; NAICS: 236115

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817745517
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-pulte-chooses-new-ceo/docview/1817745517/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 322 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

North Korea appeared to conduct a fifth nuclear test, highlighting the U.S.'s struggle to rein in the rising threat from Kim Jong Un. ---

FULL TEXT

North Korea appeared to conduct a fifth nuclear test, highlighting the U.S.'s struggle to rein in the rising threat from Kim Jong Un.

The U.S. is gearing up to assist Iraqi forces in an offensive to retake Mosul from Islamic State and has sent 400 more troops to Iraq.

U.S. military forces tried but failed to rescue two civilian hostages in Afghanistan in a raid last month.

Obama outlined his final foreign policy goals, including shutting the Guantanamo prison and ratification of a trade pact with Asia.

The presidential campaigns wrestled with the aftermath of the candidates' first joint forum, as both faced fallout over their comments.

Powell stood by his decision to use a private email account to conduct government business while serving as secretary of state.

Investigations into a Muslim recruit's death are recommending criminal charges or administrative action against up to 20 Marines.

The growth in the population of U.S. Latinos has slowed substantially, according to a new study.

Three men were arrested on charges that they were part of a group that hacked the accounts of the CIA director and other officials.

DETAILS

Location:	Asia; United States--US; Iraq; Afghanistan; North Korea
People:	Kim Jong Un
Company / organization:	Name: Central Intelligence Agency--CIA; NAICS: 928110, 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817745466
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1817745466/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2021-09-13

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 323 of 500

World News: Obama Lays Out Tough To-Do List For Final Stretch

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Obama's goals include closing the U.S. detention facility at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, a new trade pact with Asia and persuading China to do more to help the U.S. deter the threat from North Korea -- a narrow list of priorities that would essentially ensure that much of U.S. foreign policy will be handed to his successor in its current form.

FULL TEXT

VIENTIANE, Laos -- As he prepared to return to Washington from his last official trip to Asia, President Barack Obama outlined a list of hard-to-reach policy goals he hopes to attain before leaving the White House in four months.

Mr. Obama's goals include closing the U.S. detention facility at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, a new trade pact with Asia and persuading China to do more to help the U.S. deter the threat from North Korea -- a narrow list of priorities that would essentially ensure that much of U.S. foreign policy will be handed to his successor in its current form.

Mr. Obama said after a summit of Southeast Asian leaders on Thursday that he was "not ready to concede" that the Guantanamo Bay detention facility will still be open by the time his term ends in January.

He said he hoped opposition to closing the facility would soften once the population there is reduced to 40 or 50 detainees and the cost of maintaining it becomes difficult to defend. Mr. Obama said he still believed the prison was a "recruitment tool that clouds and sours" U.S. relations with other countries and is a misuse of taxpayer funds.

Closing the Guantanamo Bay prison was one of the president's earliest campaign promises. He vowed to shut the facility by the end of his first year in office, but Congress has declined to support the effort.

Mr. Obama faces a similar challenge with the new trade deal with Asia, the Trans-Pacific Partnership, which faces opposition in Congress and from the major-party candidates running to succeed him.

White House officials have said passage of TPP in Congress is vital to the success of Mr. Obama's Asia policy, and without it, U.S. influence in the region will significantly diminish. The president said that he would do all he could to press Congress to ratify the agreement, which would link the U.S. with 11 Asian-Pacific nations.

Mr. Obama has tried for years to prod Beijing into doing more to cut off the economic pipeline to North Korea but hasn't succeeded. Meanwhile, the regime in Pyongyang has become only more aggressive, as it appeared to have conducted its fifth nuclear test on Friday.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Policy making; Candidates
Location:	United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817743809
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-lays-out-tough-do-list-final/docview/1817743809/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 324 of 500

Business News: Ford Cuts Guidance On Recall Charges

Rogers, Christina; Steele, Anne . Rogers, Christina; Steele, Anne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Ford Motor Co.'s outlook hit another speed bump Thursday, with the company saying hefty charges for an expanded safety recall would reduce this year's operating profit guidance by 6%.

FULL TEXT

Ford Motor Co.'s outlook hit another speed bump Thursday, with the company saying hefty charges for an expanded safety recall would reduce this year's operating profit guidance by 6%.

The Dearborn, Mich., auto maker in July flagged Brexit headwinds and an expected slowdown in its core U.S. market as reasons for concern about 2016's second half. Although benefiting from strong U.S. sales for pickups and sport utilities, recovery in Europe and momentum in Asia, Ford has been less bullish than rival General Motors Co. on near-term prospects for the industry.

Ford cut its profit outlook after saying it would take a $640 million charge in the third quarter to double its recall of vehicles with faulty door latches. The No. 2 U.S. auto maker said it now expects adjusted pretax profit of about $10.2 billion, according to a regulatory filing, down from its previous guidance of at least $10.8 billion.

The company said Thursday it would recall an additional 1.5 million vehicles at the request of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, bringing the total to 2.4 million vehicles. Ford said there had been one reported accident and three reported injuries that may be related.

The recall would fix a spring in the side-door latch that could fracture and prevent the door from closing properly, causing it to open while driving.

Credit: By Christina Rogers and Anne Steele

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile industry; Product recalls
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Product recalls; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Ford Motor Co; NAICS: 333924, 336110, 336390
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United S tates
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817743805
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ford-cuts-guidance-on-recall/docview/1817743805/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 325 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Wells Fargo agreed to pay $185 million to settle allegations by federal and local authorities of "widespread illegal" sales practices at the bank. ---

FULL TEXT

Wells Fargo agreed to pay $185 million to settle allegations by federal and local authorities of "widespread illegal" sales practices at the bank.

Competition among retailers and delivery companies to recruit holiday-season logistics workers is already heating up.

Two financial regulators pressed for new limits on banks' involvement in commodities and other areas outside traditional lending.

Japan's central bank could run out of bonds to buy as it snaps up government debt to spur inflation and growth.

The ECB left its stimulus unchanged, brushing off concerns about fallout from the U.K.'s Brexit vote.

Tech shares pressured U.S. stocks, as markets largely shook off ECB inaction. The Dow fell 46.23 to 18479.91.

Airbnb is taking steps to promote more inclusive lodgings after facing accusations of discrimination by hosts.

SpaceX is leading the probe into what caused the blast that destroyed a rocket and its payload last week.

Pulte appointed a new CEO and named the grandson of its founder to its board, resolving a public dispute.

Ford cut its profit outlook, citing charges for an expanded safety recall.

DETAILS

Subject:	Banking industry; Central banks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Banking industry Central banks; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	Japan; United States--US; United Kingdom--UK
Company / organization:	Name: Airbnb; NAICS: 561599; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN: 00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1817743717

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1817743717/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 326 of 500

Stocks Steady as ECB Holds Fire --- Technology shares lead modest declines in U.S., while market in Europe edges down

Whittall, Christopher; Huang, Daniel . Whittall, Christopher; Huang, Daniel.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"The intraday price action in bond markets suggests some people may have expected more" Thursday, said Andrew Bosomworth, a portfolio manager at Pacific Investment Management Co. The ECB is the first of four major central banks set to meet this month; the others are the Federal Reserve, the Bank of Japan and the Bank of England.

FULL TEXT

Technology shares pressured U.S. stocks, while global markets largely shook off inaction by the European Central Bank.

The stock market has been calm this summer -- the S&P 500 hasn't had a daily move of more than 1% in two months. With corporate-earnings season wrapping up, investors are focusing on economic data and comments from central bankers.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 46.23 points, or 0.2%, to 18479.91. The S&P 500 declined 4.86, or 0.2%, to 2181.30 and the Nasdaq Composite lost 24.44, or 0.5%, to 5259.48.

Energy companies jumped as U.S. crude oil had its biggest one-day gain since April, but it wasn't enough to offset losses elsewhere.

Apple shaved more than 19 points off the blue-chip index, falling $2.84, or 2.6%, to $105.52 a day after it unveiled its latest iPhones. The company on Thursday said it doesn't plan to disclose first-weekend sales of the iPhone 7.

Hewlett Packard Enterprise lost 71 cents, or 3.2%, to 21.38 after saying Wednesday it planned to spin off and merge most of its software operations with Micro Focus International. The shares of Britain's Micro Focus rose 15% in London trading.

European stocks and government bonds declined after the ECB declined to further ease monetary policy, but the reaction of the overall market was muted.

Many economists had expected the ECB to stand pat on policy but were looking for hints of an extension to the bank's quantitative-easing bond-buying program.

The Stoxx Europe 600 slipped more than 1% while ECB President Mario Draghi spoke Thursday, but later rebounded to close down 0.3%. The euro pared gains and was up 0.2% against the dollar at $1.1262 late in New York.

The euro tends to weaken on expectations of aggressive monetary easing, while bond yields tend to fall and stock markets gain when traders think the central bank will be buying more assets over time.

The yield on 10-year German government bond edged up to minus-0.064%, compared with minus-0.1185% Wednesday. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note rose to 1.614%, from 1.539% Wednesday. Yields rise as prices fall.

"The intraday price action in bond markets suggests some people may have expected more" Thursday, said Andrew Bosomworth, a portfolio manager at Pacific Investment Management Co.

The ECB is the first of four major central banks set to meet this month; the others are the Federal Reserve, the Bank of Japan and the Bank of England.

Early Friday, South Korea's Kospi was off 1.2% and the won was lower after news services reported that North Korea may have conducted a nuclear test. Australia's S&P/ASX 200 was down 0.6%, and Japan's Nikkei Stock Average was down 0.1%. But Hong Kong's Hang Seng index was up 0.4%.

U-Turn

The euro rose then fell after the ECB left policy unchanged.

How many dollars one euro buys

$1.14

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Christopher Whittall and Daniel Huang

DETAILS

Subject:	Dow Jones averages; Daily markets (wsj); Stock exchanges; Stock prices; Central banks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices Central banks; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: European Central Bank; NAICS: 521110

Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank; 52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
column:	Thursday's Markets
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817742123
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-steady-as-ecb-holds-fire-technology-shares/docview/1817742123/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-02-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: FBI Arrests Two Men in Breaches at CIA, Justice

Devlin, Barrett . Devlin, Barrett.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Two North Carolina men were arrested Thursday on charges that they were part of the hacking group calling itself "Crackas With Attitude," which allegedly executed a series of embarrassing data breaches against the head of the Central Intelligence Agency, a senior Federal Bureau of Investigation official, and the Justice Department's case management system.

FULL TEXT

Two North Carolina men were arrested Thursday on charges that they were part of the hacking group calling itself "Crackas With Attitude," which allegedly executed a series of embarrassing data breaches against the head of the Central Intelligence Agency, a senior Federal Bureau of Investigation official, and the Justice Department's case management system.

Andrew Otto Boggs, 22 years old, and Justin Gray Liverman, 24, were charged with being part of a conspiracy to access the personal accounts of senior government officials in late 2015 and early 2016.

Although court documents didn't name the victims, they include CIA Director John Brennan and then-Deputy FBI Director Mark Giuliano, according to officials close to the case. The hackers also repeatedly accessed the Justice Department's computer system over a week this year, according to authorities.

The hacking group also targeted officials from the White House, Department of Homeland Security, and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, as well as their families, according to authorities.

The two men were charged in a criminal complaint filed in federal court in Virginia with conspiring to commit offenses against the U.S. If found guilty they could face up to five years in prison. The two men couldn't immediately be reached for comment, and court records didn't identify lawyers for them.

Three teenagers in the U.K. are also under investigation in the hacking probe, officials said. One of those teens was arrested in February.

Authorities said the suspects often gained access to the accounts by calling help lines at Internet-service companies and impersonating employees at those companies or the victims they were targeting. They were then able to reset the account passwords.

Credit: By Devlin Barrett

DETAILS

Subject:	Arrests; Conspiracy; Hackers; Criminal investigations; Case management
Company / organization:	Name: Central Intelligence Agency--CIA; NAICS: 928110, 928120; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817730059
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fbi-arrests-two-men-breaches-at-cia/docview/1817730059/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Election 2016: Clinton Aims at Positive Message --- Democrat, on attack of late, is advised to pivot and give people reasons to back her

Laura Meckler; Colleen McCain Nelson; Meckler, Laura; Colleen McCain Nelson . Laura Meckler; Colleen McCain Nelson; Meckler, Laura; Colleen McCain Nelson.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Because she has the heart," he told CNN.

FULL TEXT

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -- Hillary Clinton's campaign, heavy on attacks against Donald Trump, has concluded it hasn't done enough to telegraph a positive message and plans a series of speeches aimed at defining her vision for the presidency.

On Friday, the Democratic presidential candidate will convene a "working session" on national security with a bipartisan group. Later this month, the campaign plans speeches on building an "inclusive economy," and on children and families. A third speech on national service will "ask Americans to be part of something bigger than themselves," an aide said.

On Thursday, the Democratic nominee spoke about faith to the National Baptist Convention here. "Today, for a few minutes, I want to leave aside the politics and do something that doesn't always come naturally to a Midwestern Methodist," she said. "That is to talk about my own faith, how it led me to a life of service, and how it will guide me as president."

Meanwhile, the popular blog Humans of New York posted two personal ruminations from Mrs. Clinton. In one, she talks about the challenges of running for office as a woman; in another, about being heckled by men while she was taking the law-school entrance exam. She says the need to stay focused can sometimes make her come off as "cold and unemotional."

Her shift in strategy was in line with a recent recommendation of Vice President Joe Biden to show more of herself. "My advice to Hillary always is, just open up, let them see your heart a little more. Because she has the heart," he told CNN.

With the November election fast approaching, the campaign also is seeking to demonstrate that she would lead in a bipartisan manner.

Campaign aides and supporters mostly blame the news media for not paying more attention when Mrs. Clinton makes the case for herself, but say she needs to do more to show voters that she understands problems in their lives, has solutions and is offering an uplifting vision for America's future.

"We know it's upstream in trying to be heard on policy and what she's going to do for people," said Communications Director Jennifer Palmieri.

Peter D. Hart, a Democratic pollster who has conducted a series of focus groups with swing voters, said he thinks the Clinton story is a compelling one, including her values, her record of working with Republicans and her personal commitment to key issues. But he said she has to tell it.

It also is important to sketch a vision not just to win the election but to establish a mandate for her presidency, Mr. Hart said. "If she wins a negative campaign or a negative referendum, then essentially she has nothing to unify the nation around," he said.

The big speeches and the news out of the Clinton campaign have mostly focused on bashing Mr. Trump.

There was more of the same on Thursday, the third day this week she spoke to her traveling press corps. She denounced Mr. Trump's remarks about U.S. generals, who he said have been reduced to "rubble" during President Barack Obama's administration, and his admiration of Russian President Vladimir Putin. "What would Ronald Reagan say about a Republican nominee who attacks America's generals and heaps praise on Russia's president?" Mrs. Clinton asked reporters.

Those hits may make headlines, but it is unclear how helpful they are in winning over voters who already have reservations about Mr. Trump.

One challenge for Mrs. Clinton is that her policy agenda is so robust, it isn't always apparent what her priorities are.

This week, she published a 288-page policy book laying out her ideas. On Tuesday in Tampa, Fla., she ran through at least 25 proposals, depending on how you count them. Each idea got a sentence or maybe a paragraph, and as a result, nothing in particular stood out.

Among them: infrastructure spending, free community college, raising the minimum wage, job training for veterans, universal pre-K, battling addiction problems and a new public-health rapid-response fund.

"We have this old-fashioned idea that if we're asking you to support us for president, we ought to tell you what we're going to do," Mrs. Clinton told supporters in Charlotte, N.C., on Thursday. "Real plans that will improve your lives."

Credit: By Laura Meckler and Colleen McCain Nelson

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; Presidential elections; Speeches; Nominations; Bipartisanship; Candidates
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices

People:	Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729860
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-clinton-aims-at-positive-message/docview/1817729860/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profit s, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Charges Sought in Muslim Recruit's Death --- Investigators call for action against up to 20 Marines in incident on Parris Island in March Lubold, Gordon; Sonne, Paul . Lubold, Gordon; Sonne, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The inquiries already have triggered the removal of the commanding officer of the Marine training regiment, Col. Paul D. Cucinotta, and its senior enlisted adviser, Sgt. Maj. Nicholas A. Deabreu, and at least four officers and a number of drill instructors.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The U.S. Marine Corps has completed three internal investigations into the death of a Muslim recruit that recommend criminal charges or administrative action against as many as 20 Marines, officials said.

Investigators found that a drill instructor allegedly physically abused Raheel Siddiqui and referred to him as a terrorist, said the Marine officials, who described details of the completed probes to The Wall Street Journal.

No charges have been filed following Mr. Siddiqui's death in March at the Marines' famed Parris Island recruit-training center in South Carolina. Under military law, the investigation's results now must go to a hearing, which will decide whether administrative or criminal proceedings go forward, officials said. The hearing could take place in the coming weeks.

Mr. Siddiqui fell three stories to his death in what the military classified as a suicide. New details emerging from the investigations indicate Mr. Siddiqui leapt from the balcony of a barracks building after he was slapped in the face by the drill instructor, according to Marine officials.

The fatal incident has drawn high-level attention at the Pentagon and on Capitol Hill, and the allegations have shaken the Marine Corps.

Corps officials have begun moving to address some aspects of training and oversight, but maintain the broader training system remains sound, the officials with knowledge of the probe said. The inquiries already have triggered the removal of the commanding officer of the Marine training regiment, Col. Paul D. Cucinotta, and its senior enlisted adviser, Sgt. Maj. Nicholas A. Deabreu, and at least four officers and a number of drill instructors. They are among the 20 who face potential disciplinary actions against them by the Marine Corps.

The Marine Corps hasn't identified the drill instructor. Previous attempts to reach Col. Cucinotta and Sgt. Deabreu have been unsuccessful. The Marines didn't make any of the personnel in question available for comment.

Marine Commandant Gen. Bob Neller said Thursday that he "fully supported and endorsed" initial actions in the case. "When America's men and women commit to becoming Marines, we make a promise to them," Gen. Neller said. "We pledge to train them with firmness, fairness, dignity and compassion."

He added: "We mourn the loss of recruit Siddiqui, and we will take every step necessary to prevent tragic events like this from happening again."

Marine Corps representatives met with Mr. Siddiqui's family and provided the results of the training command's internal investigation, according to Shiraz Khan, a lawyer for the family. He said the family was reviewing the report.

The service's internal reviews allege that officials at Parris Island carried out a range of violations while overseeing recruits such as Mr. Siddiqui, including hazing and verbal and physical abuse.

Mr. Siddiqui, a high-school valedictorian from a Detroit suburb, joined the Marines with the hope of one day working for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

His death has shone a spotlight on alleged broader misbehavior at the 3rd Recruit Training Battalion, known unofficially as "The Thumping Third" for its rough treatment of recruits and drill instructors alike. Officials found Marines operating with impunity in an environment lacking in supervision and proper leadership, according to the Marine officials who described details of the completed investigations.

On March 18, according to Marine officials, Mr. Siddiqui asked the drill instructor to grant him medical attention for a sore throat, but was denied care and forced to run from one end of the barracks to the other several times.

Those officials said Mr. Siddiqui began to cry, fell to the floor and appeared unresponsive. The instructor ordered him to get to his feet before slapping his face as many as three times, an incident the internal probe has classified as an assault that is considered strictly improper during Marine boot-camp training.

The drill instructor's slap awoke Mr. Siddiqui, who then got up and ran out the barracks door and jumped over the railing of the outdoor stairwell, the officials said.

Credit: By Gordon Lubold and Paul Sonne

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Fatalities; Military training; Training
Business indexing term:	Subject: Training; Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	Parris Island
People:	Siddiqui, Raheel
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Defense; NAICS: 928110
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729855
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-charges-sought-muslim-recruits-death/docview/1817729855/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 330 of 500

Business News: Deloitte Says It Will Offer Leave For Range of Caregiving Needs

Silverman, Rachel Emma . Silverman, Rachel Emma.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Thursday professional-services firm Deloitte LLP announced it would offer up to 16 weeks of fully paid leave for a wide range of caregiving, including maternity and paternity leave, eldercare and aid for other sick family members or partners.

FULL TEXT

The latest step in family-friendly benefits: paid leave for all caregiving, including eldercare.

In recent years, a parade of blue-chip employers, mainly in the technology, financial-services and professional-services industries, have been competing to offer more generous parental-leave benefits.

Thursday professional-services firm Deloitte LLP announced it would offer up to 16 weeks of fully paid leave for a wide range of caregiving, including maternity and paternity leave, eldercare and aid for other sick family members or partners.

The policy is a recognition that caregiving isn't limited to newparents, but affects a broader class of employees, according to a Deloitte spokesman.

A recent Deloitte survey of a thousand employees at other companies found that 88% of respondents wanted a broader leave policy beyond parental leave. Nearly 17% of Americans over age 18 -- about 40 million people -- provide unpaid care to an adult, according to a report by the AARP Public Policy Institute and National Alliance for Caregiving.

The federal Family and Medical Leave Act, or FMLA, provides up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave to care for family members, but it doesn't apply to all employers or workers. For instance, businesses with fewer than 50 employees and many part-time workers generally aren't eligible.

Paid caregiving leave isn't widely offered in the U.S. The U.S. is the only industrialized country that doesn't mandate some form of paid parental leave.

Only a handful of states and municipalities require some form of paid family leave, and just a small but growing number of employers are beginning to offer broader paid caregiving leave.

At Deloitte, the policy, which is effective this month, applies to family members including spouses, domestic partners, parents, stepparents, children or siblings. The company is following guidelines similar to those of the FMLA, requiring the leave to be used for serious conditions that incapacitate loved ones for at least three consecutive days, according to a spokesman.

Also under Deloitte's new policy, mothers who give birth are eligible for up to six months of paid time off when factoring in short-term disability for childbirth, the company says.

Credit: By Rachel Emma Silverman

DETAILS

Subject:	Family leave; Family & Medical Leave Act 1993-US; Employers; Employee benefits; Maternity & paternity leaves; Employees
Business indexing term:	Subject: Family leave Family & Medical Leave Act 1993-US Employers Employee benefits Maternity & paternity leaves Employees
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Deloitte & Touche LLP; NAICS: 541211
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729815
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-deloitte-says-will-offer-leave/docview/1817729815/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 331 of 500

Business News: Founder of Trucking Firm Swift To Retire

Baskin, Brian; Chao, Loretta . Baskin, Brian; Chao, Loretta.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In the past year, the 72-year-old executive had come under criticism from corporate-governance watchdogs and investors for pledging Swift shares worth hundreds of millions of dollars as collateral for personal loans.

FULL TEXT

Swift Transportation Co. Chief Executive Jerry Moyes, who over 50 years built one of the largest U.S. trucking companies, will retire at the end of the year, the company said Thursday.

Mr. Moyes, son of a truck driver, was among the last active members of a class of trucking magnates who came to dominate the industry after it was deregulated in the early 1980s. He started his business in 1966 with a single truck, building Swift into a public company with a fleet of almost 20,000 trucks and $4 billion in annual revenue.

In the past year, the 72-year-old executive had come under criticism from corporate-governance watchdogs and investors for pledging Swift shares worth hundreds of millions of dollars as collateral for personal loans. As of May, Mr. Moyes and his family had pledged 75% of their controlling stake in Swift, worth over $700 million.

Mr. Moyes will serve as co-CEO with Richard Stocking, Swift's chief operating officer since 2010, until the end of the year. After that, Mr. Stocking will become sole CEO; Mr. Moyes will remain a director.

Mr. Moyes's retirement comes at a challenging time. Many fleets, including Swift, expanded rapidly in recent years, only for demand to slip over the past year. The company reported net income of $42.9 million in the second quarter on just over $1 billion in revenue.

Mr. Moyes started side businesses over the years, including in real estate, stakes in professional sports teams and a charter airline. Some of these ventures failed during the recession; a legal dispute with the National Hockey League stemming from the 2009 bankruptcy of the Phoenix Coyotes, which Mr. Moyes co-owned at the time, was only settled this year.

Robbie Whelan contributed to this article.

Credit: By Brian Baskin and Loretta Chao

DETAILS

Subject:	Chief executive officers; Trucking industry; Trucking; Service introduction; Professional hockey; Retirement
Business indexing term:	Subject: Chief executive officers Trucking industry Trucking Retirement; Industry: 48411 : General Freight Trucking, Local 71121 : Spectator Sports
Location:	United States--US
People:	Moyes, Jerry C
Company / organization:	Name: Swift Transportation Co; NAICS: 484121
Classification:	48411: General Freight Trucking, Local; 71121: Spectator Sports
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729811
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-founder-trucking-firm-swift-retire/docview/1817729811/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-08-22
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 332 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Maintaining that pace of advancement looks increasingly doubtful. Since 2010, the unemployment rate dropped from 10% to less than 5%.

FULL TEXT

VIRGINIA

Corruption Case Is

Set to be Dropped

The Justice Department on Thursday said it would drop its long-running corruption case against former Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell, a move that comes months after the Supreme Court tossed out his earlier conviction.

The department said in a brief court filing that it would move to dismiss the case, as well as similar charges against Maureen McDonnell, the governor's wife.

Prosecutors in 2014 alleged the McDonnells secretly accepted more than $175,000 in gifts and loans from a wealthy businessman who authorities said sought favorable consideration from the government for his dietary supplement company. Both the governor and his wife were convicted.

But the Supreme Court ruled for Mr. McDonnell in June, in a sweeping decision that made it harder for prosecutors to bring cases against public officials for alleged corruption.

The high court said the Justice Department's theory of the case had been so broad that it could criminalize conduct in which politicians regularly engage. The court decision had left open the possibility the Justice Department could try Mr. McDonnell again under a more rigorous legal standard.

Since then, prosecutors have been considering whether to continue the case.

"After carefully considering the Supreme Court's recent decision and the principles of federal prosecution, we have made the decision not to pursue the case further," the Justice Department said.

The former governor had argued that he did not take any formal government actions on behalf of the businessman nor did he pressure others to do so.

-- Brent Kendall

ECONOMY

Pace of Jobs Market

Expected to Slow

The story of the labor market in recent years has been gradual but continued improvement. Maintaining that pace of advancement looks increasingly doubtful.

Since 2010, the unemployment rate dropped from 10% to less than 5%. Over the next 2 1/2 years, the average estimate in The Wall Street Journal's monthly survey of economists sees the jobless rate making little further progress, ending 2018 at 4.5%.

If the forecasts prove correct, the labor market could be in for a prolonged period of very slow change.

Those pleased with the economy's progress since the 2007-09 recession may well remain pleased: The survey placed the odds of recession in the next year at about 20%, higher than a year ago but lower than recent months. Those hoping for significantly more improvement, however, may be disappointed.

The Journal surveyed 61 business, academic and financial economists from Sept. 2 to Sept. 6, though not every economist answered every question.

-- Josh Zumbrun

DETAILS

Subject:	Court decisions; Corruption; Governors; Unemployment; Labor market; Recessions
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Subject: Unemployment Labor market Recessions; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Virginia; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729747
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1817729747/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Republican Senators Decry Obama's Nuclear Ban Effort

Sonne, Paul . Sonne, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Obama administration's pursuit of a possible United Nations Security Council resolution against nuclear-weapons tests has riled a group of Republican lawmakers, who have warned President Barack Obama not to take action that would circumvent the U.S. Senate's constitutional power to ratify treaties.

FULL TEXT

The Obama administration's pursuit of a possible United Nations Security Council resolution against nuclear-weapons tests has riled a group of Republican lawmakers, who have warned President Barack Obama not to take action that would circumvent the U.S. Senate's constitutional power to ratify treaties.

A group of 33 Republican senators sent a letter to Mr. Obama on Thursday threatening to withhold congressional funding for an existing international monitoring system for nuclear tests if the administration signs up for any international obligations through the U.N. that the Senate has rejected previously.

"We urge you to respect your constitutional obligations and warn that if you do not, your efforts at the United Nations on this issue are likely to set back any supposed progress on achieving a testing ban," the group of senators, including Marco Rubio (R., Fla.), John McCain (R., Ariz.) and Lindsey Graham (R., S.C.), wrote.

Their warning concerns the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, or the CTBT, an international treaty prohibiting nuclear-test explosions. Former President Bill Clinton signed the treaty in 1996, but the Senate declined to ratify it in a vote three years later.

The Obama administration, which favors U.S. ratification of the test-ban treaty but hasn't won backing for its ratification in the Senate, now is pursuing action in the U.N. to reaffirm the U.S.'s support for the treaty and keep its spirit alive -- part of a final push by Mr. Obama to advance his nuclear-disarmament agenda before leaving office. The U.S. independently has obeyed a national moratorium on nuclear testing since 1992.

Republican senators, including Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Bob Corker of Tennessee, have voiced concern that the administration is skirting the Senate by pursuing action related to the treaty at the U.N. The Obama administration has suggested those worries are misplaced. It has said its U.N. actions wouldn't impose any new legally binding obligations on the U.S. or supersede desired Senate ratification of the test-ban treaty.

Mr. Corker, who has written his own letter to the administration and didn't sign the letter sent by his fellow senators, held a hearing on the matter Wednesday on Capitol Hill, where he sought to make sure the administration didn't submit the U.S. to any new obligations related to a treaty that the Senate has rejected.

The White House and the State Department say the administration is proposing a U.N. Security Council resolution and separate statement from the council's five permanent members, known as the P5. The resolution will call for an end to nuclear testing and strengthen the detection system the test-ban treaty established to monitor nuclear explosions around the world, which functions even though the treaty hasn't entered into force.

In their letter, the Republican senators wrote that the U.S. doesn't need the international detection system, anyway, because the U.S. operates one of its own.

Farnaz Fassihi contributed to this article.

(See related letter: "Letters to the Editor: U.S. Is Already a Signatory to Test Ban Treaty" -- WSJ September 12, 2016)

Credit: By Paul Sonne

DETAILS

Subject:	Treaties; Constitutional law; Nuclear tests; International relations; Bans; Councils
Business indexing term:	Subject: International relations
Location:	United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120; Name: United Nations Security Council; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1817729737

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-republican-senators-decry-obamas-nuclear/docview/1817729737/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 334 of 500

World News: U.S. Hostage Rescue In Afghanistan Failed

Lubold, Gordon . Lubold, Gordon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.S. military forces tried but failed to rescue two civilian hostages in Afghanistan in a raid launched last month under presidential authority, the Pentagon said Thursday.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- U.S. military forces tried but failed to rescue two civilian hostages in Afghanistan in a raid launched last month under presidential authority, the Pentagon said Thursday.

The raid was mounted in the days after two educators, an American and Australian working at the American University of Afghanistan in Kabul, were kidnapped while on their way from their guesthouse to the campus on Aug. 7. Their whereabouts remain unknown and State Department officials said Thursday that they couldn't discuss their case.

Pentagon officials, without confirming the two teachers were the object of the rescue attempt, said that when American forces arrived at the site of the raid, the hostages they were seeking weren't there. A fierce firefight ensued, with U.S. personnel killing "hostile forces," said Peter Cook, Pentagon press secretary.

"No U.S. personnel or civilians were harmed," Mr. Cook said, declining to provide further information. "Military hostage rescue operations are inherently sensitive and dangerous and careful deliberation went into this mission," he said in a statement.

The American University also was the site of an attack by militants last month that left 16 people dead and more than 50 wounded. The university has long been at high risk of attack from Taliban militants because of its association with foreigners.

Credit: By Gordon Lubold

DETAILS

Subject:	Militancy; Hostages; Raids
Location:	United States--US; Afghanistan
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729716
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-hostage-rescue-afghanistan-failed/docview/1817729716/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 335 of 500

City News: Bloomberg Backs Ex-Aide in Race

Dawsey, Josh . Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Donors at the fundraiser, which is being held at Mr. Bloomberg's Upper East Side townhouse, will be listed as a "friend" for a $1,000 donation, a "sponsor" for $3,500 and a "co-host" for $7,000, according to an invitation reviewed by The Wall Street Journal.

FULL TEXT

Former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, who has largely stayed out of New York politics since leaving City Hall, is re-entering the scene Monday night with a fundraiser for former aide Micah Lasher's state Senate bid.

Mr. Bloomberg's backing of Mr. Lasher, who is running against three others for the Democratic nomination in the state Senate's 31st District, drew immediate criticism from Mr. Lasher's opponents. Mr. Bloomberg, who is currently unaffiliated with any party, won three terms at City Hall on the Republican ballot.

Donors at the fundraiser, which is being held at Mr. Bloomberg's Upper East Side townhouse, will be listed as a "friend" for a $1,000 donation, a "sponsor" for $3,500 and a "co-host" for $7,000, according to an invitation reviewed by The Wall Street Journal.

Howard Wolfson, an adviser to Mr. Bloomberg, said the former mayor decided to re-engage in New York politics for this race because he holds Mr. Lasher in "such high regard" for his work during Mr. Bloomberg's administration. Mr. Lasher served as Mr. Bloomberg's director of state legislative affairs, leading the administration's lobbying efforts in Albany.

"This is certainly the exception to the rule," Mr. Wolfson said. "This is not the beginning of a return to New York politics."

Mr. Lasher, running for a seat that encompasses much of Manhattan's West Side, has been criticized for his ties to Mr. Bloomberg. His opponents have rebuked him for leaving his work for the former mayor off some of his campaign materials while mentioning his work for other elected officials. Mr. Lasher does cite his work with Mr. Bloomberg prominently on his website.

The timing of the fundraiser has also raised eyebrows because it occurs the night before the primary and after fundraising-disclosure deadlines.

"It's more than a little disingenuous and deceptive after going through the entire campaign leaving Mayor Bloomberg's name out of his literature and saying he will take no hedge-fund or charter-school money that Micah would wait until after the last filing deadline to have this fundraiser," said Richard Fife, a spokesman for former City Councilman Robert Jackson, one of Mr. Lasher's primary opponents.

A spokesman for Marisol Alcantara, another candidate in the race, said, "While Micah Lasher is dining with billionaires on the Upper East Side, Marisol Alcantara will be campaigning with tenants, seniors, and working families in the actual district she's running to represent."

Mr. Wolfson described the criticism as "unfortunate." Mr. Bloomberg's busy schedule partially dictated the timing of the fundraiser, he said.

Mr. Lasher said he was too busy campaigning for an interview but issued a statement praising Mr. Bloomberg.

"He's shown enormous courage on so many issues that are important to me, from reproductive freedom, to leading the fight against gun violence in America, to telling the truth about Donald Trump at the Democratic National Convention," said Mr. Lasher, referring to Mr. Bloomberg's support of Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton.

Mr. Lasher is running in a heavily Hispanic, Democratic district to succeed state Sen. Adriano Espaillat, who is the Democratic nominee to succeed U.S. Rep. Charles Rangel. Mr. Espaillat is backing Ms. Alcantara. The fourth candidate in the state Senate primary is Luis Tejada.

Credit: By Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	State elections; Endorsements; Primaries & caucuses; Fund raising; Nominations; Mayors; Candidates
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Bloomberg, Michael; Lasher, Micah
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729703
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-bloomberg-backs-ex-aide-race/docview/1817729703/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 336 of 500

Election 2016: Nominees Grapple With Reaction to Forum Comments

Paletta, Damian; Nicholas, Peter . Paletta, Damian; Nicholas, Peter.

ABSTRACT

Laurie Blank, director of the International Humanitarian Law Clinic at Emory University School of Law, said Mr. Trump's proposal would violate the Fourth Geneva Convention, as well as international agreements reached as part of The Hague Conventions in 1899 and 1907.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Donald Trump's push to replace U.S. generals and his support for seizing oil from Iraq drew criticism Thursday as the two presidential campaigns wrestled with the aftermath of their first joint forum.

Hillary Clinton faced pressure over a response she gave at the forum in which she vowed to not send ground troops into Iraq "ever again," nor to commit U.S. troops to Syria. Mr. Trump's campaign found itself Thursday contending with reaction to his comment that American generals "have been reduced to rubble."

And congressional Republicans as well as Democrats took issue with Mr. Trump's praise for Russian President Vladimir Putin's leadership. "Vladimir Putin is an aggressor that does not share our interests," said House Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.).

The fallout from Wednesday's session, sponsored by NBC News, in which the candidates appeared onstage but not together, reflects the challenge national security poses for both candidates.

Among the most striking comments at the forum was Mr. Trump's suggestion that he would quickly replace many American generals and promote his own. "I think under the leadership of Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton, the generals have been reduced to rubble," Mr. Trump said. "They have been reduced to a point where it's embarrassing to our country."

Some retired generals said that reflects a misunderstanding of the military chain of command, given established procedures for promoting generals, which include promotion boards in some cases and Senate confirmation in others.

"He does not seem informed as to proper relations between military and civilian authorities of our government," said retired Army Maj. Gen. William Nash, a political independent.

Mr. Trump also said the U.S. should have taken oil out of Iraq following the 2003 invasion, because that would have blocked Islamic State's use of oil to finance its operations. "It used to be, 'To the victor belong the spoils,'" Mr. Trump said.

Legal experts took issue with that idea. Laurie Blank, director of the International Humanitarian Law Clinic at Emory University School of Law, said Mr. Trump's proposal would violate the Fourth Geneva Convention, as well as international agreements reached as part of The Hague Conventions in 1899 and 1907.

Mrs. Clinton faced her own struggles in the forum's aftermath, in part because of her statement ruling out sending troops to Iraq or Syria. In a fast-changing Middle East landscape, a U.S. commander-in-chief would need more flexibility than her answer allowed, some critics said.

In a press conference Thursday, Mrs. Clinton appeared to modify her answer and give herself more room to maneuver should she win in November. Rather than rule out ground troops altogether, she said she opposed putting a "big contingent" of American troops in the two Middle East countries.

Mrs. Clinton was thrown on the defensive at the forum by moderator Matt Lauer, who asked detailed questions about her email practices when she was secretary of state, an issue that has dogged her campaign.

Mrs. Clinton offered a new twist in defending her actions Wednesday, saying she didn't send or receive any emails with a "header" designating the material as secret. In previous explanations, Mrs. Clinton said she didn't send or receive anything "marked" classified.

Mr. Trump seized on the new wording Thursday. "Every time she talks about the subject, it's different," he said. "She's got to get her act together."

If Mrs. Clinton's email problems undercut her argument that she is competent and seasoned, Mr. Trump's struggles risk undermining his case that he would be a strong leader.

Mr. Trump's supporters say that while his phrases can at times be inartful, the message is on target. "When he says, 'The generals have been reduced to rubble,' it's my perspective that he means their advice and counsel has not been accepted in areas where they have enormous competence and expertise," said retired Army Gen. B.B. Bell.

Kristina Peterson, Colleen McCain Nelson and Gordon Lubold contributed to this article.

Credit: By Damian Paletta and Peter Nicholas

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; International law; International agreements; Presidential elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729694
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-nominees-grapple-with-reaction/docview/1817729694/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 337 of 500

U.S. News: California Bolsters Emissions Laws

Emshwiller, John R; Lazo, Alejandro . Emshwiller, John R; Lazo, Alejandro.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

After more than a year of political battling, Gov. Jerry Brown signed two bills into law Thursday expanding California's plans to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions while also providing increased oversight of that effort by elected officials.

FULL TEXT

LOS ANGELES -- After more than a year of political battling, Gov. Jerry Brown signed two bills into law Thursday expanding California's plans to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions while also providing increased oversight of that effort by elected officials.

The legislation makes California a large, powerful testing ground for such initiatives, which are generally hailed by environmentalists and derided by some industry leaders.

The signing marks a belated victory for the governor and his allies after a similar effort failed to get out of the legislature last year after opposition from industry groups and others who argued that the tightening restrictions would harm the economy.

"What we are doing is farsighted and far-reaching," Gov. Brown said Thursday. "I hope it sends a message across the country."

The new laws could further burnish Mr. Brown's reputation as one of the most aggressive elected officials in the nation when it comes to pushing for climate-change actions.

One of the laws the governor signed sets a new target to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions, usually carbon-based products, in the state to 40% below the 1990 levels by 2030.

"It is the most ambitious emission-reduction target in the nation and one of the most ambitious in the world . . . and sets an important example for other states and nations," said Ken Kimmell, president of the Union of Concerned Scientists, an environmental lobbying group that backed the legislation.

The measure expands upon a previous law, enacted in 2006, which required greenhouse-gas emissions to be cut to 1990 levels by 2020.

The second measure signed Thursday increases legislative oversight of the California Air Resources Board, an appointed body charged with carrying out the state's climate programs. The board has been the target of criticism from various parties, including business interests and legislators, regarding where it focuses its efforts and where it spends money.

Credit: By John R. Emshwiller and Alejandro Lazo

DETAILS

Subject:	Emissions; Greenhouse effect
Location:	California; United States--US
People:	Brown, Edmund G Jr (Jerry)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729654
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-california-bolsters-emissions-laws/docview/1817729654/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 338 of 500

Business News: Formula One Travels Over Tough Course --- Liberty Media deal steers racing circuit to new U.S. push as global following flags

Zekaria, Simon; Clark, Simon . Zekaria, Simon; Clark, Simon.

ABSTRACT

Bankrolled by broadcasting deals, race fees, ticket sales and a roster of corporate sponsors including luxury watchmakers and fuel suppliers, the nine-month-long series now stages 21 races across five continents, up from 19 last year.

FULL TEXT

LONDON -- The multibillion-dollar sale of Formula One to Liberty Media Corp. represents a new push into the U.S. market for the glamorous motor sport -- but John Malone's media empire has its work cut out for it.

Formula One has grown rapidly since the 1970s under its longtime chief executive, the former car salesman Bernie Ecclestone, who will continue to run the sport from London under the new ownership. Bankrolled by broadcasting deals, race fees, ticket sales and a roster of corporate sponsors including luxury watchmakers and fuel suppliers, the nine-month-long series now stages 21 races across five continents, up from 19 last year.

Still, the 1970s might be the last time many Americans paid close attention to the sport: The most recent Formula One drivers' champion from the U.S., Mario Andretti, won his title in 1978.

Formula One holds a race at the Circuit of the Americas in Austin, Texas, and features one U.S. team, Haas F1 Team. Even so, the sport's popularity runs far behind Nascar stock-car racing and most team sports.

In 2015, Nascar's premier race, the Daytona 500, averaged 13.4 million television viewers, according to Nielsen. That compares with just 6.4 million viewers for the most popular "open wheel" race, the Indianapolis 500. That year's Major League Baseball World Series averaged 14.7 million television viewers, while the National Basketball Association finals averaged 20 million and the National Football League's Super Bowl averaged 114 million.

Formula One's world-wide audience, though stronger, has suffered in recent years as well. In the six years through 2014, global Formula One viewership slipped to 425 million from 600 million, according to Christian Sylt, who authors the trade publication Formula Money.

The sport now attracts more than 400 million unique television viewers globally, Liberty Media said.

Long dominated by races in Europe, Formula One added circuit locations such as Abu Dhabi and Singapore in recent years to tap interest for the sport in emerging economies.

Still, analysts said Formula One's marketing efforts have been inadequate and the sport has lost appeal among younger fans in the globally competitive sports market. The rising cost to teams, the use of lower-powered cars and the predictability of car and driver winners have also hurt.

Analysts said the key for Liberty Media is pushing the sport into new media, including social networks, and targeting new audiences. Cars and drivers might share data with smartphone-wielding fans on social-media platforms, for example.

"F1 is completely behind on social media," said James Allen, a British radio and television commentator on the sport.

Liberty Media could also tap the appeal of Formula One's big brands, including car makers such as Ferrari NV and Daimler AG's Mercedes-Benz, as well as such driving stars as Lewis Hamilton and Sebastian Vettel.

In a statement, Liberty Media, which is controlled by Mr. Malone, a billionaire cable-television pioneer, said it has "extensive experience in media, entertainment, live events and digital."

The Englewood, Colo., company said it would increase promotion and marketing, and enhance digital-content distribution, without elaborating or providing figures.

Liberty Media's acquisition underscores the value of live sports content to broadcasters, which are trying to win eyeballs and steal subscribers from challengers such as Netflix Inc. and Amazon.com Inc. in an increasingly crowded media market.

"F1 is a key player in growing market for live premium sports rights, driven by increasing demand from broadcasters, advertisers and sponsors for access to mass live audiences," Liberty Media said.

The company said Tuesday it agreed to acquire Formula One in a cash-and-stock deal that values the auto-racing franchise at $4.4 billion.

Credit: By Simon Zekaria and Simon Clark

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile racing; Social networks; Corporate sponsorship; Acquisitions & mergers; Automobiles; Professional baseball
Business indexing term:	Subject: Social networks Corporate sponsorship Acquisitions & mergers; Corporation: Liberty Media Corp Mercedes-Benz Group AG; Industry: 71121 : Spectator Sports
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Liberty Media Corp; NAICS: 516210, 517111, 517112, 551112; Name: Formula One Holdings; NAICS: 711219
Classification:	71121: Spectator Sports
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729652
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-formula-one-travels-over-tough/docview/1817729652/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 339 of 500

Business News: Walgreens To Divest Additional Stores

Steele, Anne . Steele, Anne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Walgreens Boots Alliance Inc. on Thursday said it would divest more of its stores than previously expected to help satisfy the Federal Trade Commission's review of its pending acquisition of Rite Aid Corp. The Deerfield, Ill.-based drugstore operator said it and Rite Aid remain "actively engaged" with the FTC in exploring potential divestiture remedies "to address certain issues raised in those discussions."

FULL TEXT

Walgreens Boots Alliance Inc. on Thursday said it would divest more of its stores than previously expected to help satisfy the Federal Trade Commission's review of its pending acquisition of Rite Aid Corp.

The Deerfield, Ill.-based drugstore operator said it and Rite Aid remain "actively engaged" with the FTC in exploring potential divestiture remedies "to address certain issues raised in those discussions."

Walgreens said it now expects it will be required to divest more than the 500 stores previously expected, but still fewer than 1,000.

The company continues to anticipate that the acquisition would add to its adjusted per-share earnings in the first full year after the deal's closing, which it expects will happen in the second half of this year.

In October, Walgreens agreed to buy Camp Hill, Penn.-based Rite Aid for about $9.4 billion in a move that would beef up the drugstore and retail giant as companies across the U.S. health-care industry look for ways to bulk up.

Credit: By Anne Steele

DETAILS

Subject:	Drug stores; Acquisitions & mergers; Divestiture
Business indexing term:	Subject: Drug stores Acquisitions & mergers Divestiture; Corporation: Walgreen Co Rite Aid Corp Walgreens Boots Alliance Inc; Industry: 45611 : Pharmacies and Drug Retailers
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Walgreens Boots Alliance Inc; NAICS: 456110; Name: Rite Aid Corp; NAICS: 456110
Classification:	45611: Pharmacies and Drug Retailers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Documenttype:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729645
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-walgreens-divest-additional-stores/docview/1817729645/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 340 of 500

Business News: Meeting Ties Bosch CEO To VW Chief

Boston, William . Boston, William.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to court documents in the suit, cooperation between Volkswagen and Bosch on developing, maintaining and hiding the defeat device goes back more than a decade.

FULL TEXT

Nearly 18 months before Volkswagen AG admitted to cheating on auto-emissions tests, its chief executive at the time met with the head of supplier Robert Bosch GmbH to discuss the cars' illegal "defeat device" software, according to a newly public filing in a civil lawsuit.

The meeting, between Volkswagen's then-chief, Martin Winterkorn, and Volkmar Denner, Bosch's CEO, came shortly after a U.S. environmental group published a report showing inexplicably high emissions of nitrogen oxides from two Volkswagen diesel vehicles, the suit says. Five days earlier, Mr. Winterkorn received a memo from an aide warning of an impending U.S. investigation.

On the meeting agenda, according to the filing, was Volkswagen's "acoustic function," what plaintiffs' attorneys say was code to describe the defeat device. Bosch supplied the vehicles' engine control system that Volkswagen has admitted was used to bypass a U.S. emissions test.

Evidence about the May 28, 2014 meeting emerged in a filing last week; its details had been redacted from earlier public documents.

The complaint, by plaintiffs' law firm Loeffel-Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein LLP, cites sealed court filings. It alleges the meeting shows "Denner and Winterkorn were aware of the illegal use of the defeat devices at least by May 2014," according to papers filed in a San Francisco federal court.

Spokesmen at Volkswagen and Bosch declined to comment. Mr. Winterkorn, through his lawyer, didn't respond to a request for comment.

In August 2015, Volkswagen admitted to having installed software to cheat on emissions tests on nearly 500,000 diesel vehicles in the U.S. Authorities reached a $15 billion settlement with Volkswagen for misleading environmental regulators and consumers.

Mr. Winterkorn resigned several days after the admission, though insisting he was unaware of any wrongdoing on his part.

According to court documents in the suit, cooperation between Volkswagen and Bosch on developing, maintaining and hiding the defeat device goes back more than a decade. In 2008, Bosch wrote Volkswagen and demanded that Volkswagen indemnify Bosch for anticipated liability arising from the use of the Bosch-created device, the filing states, and Volkswagen denied the request.

An email from a Bosch employee on June 23, 2008, indicates Bosch was concerned about getting caught but suggested it could help Volkswagen rig engines to recognize when they were being tested by enhancing the "acoustic function." The email, reviewed by The Wall Street Journal, isn't part of the court filing.

The email exchange was first reported by the German weekly Bild am Sonntag.

In response to the original complaint, a Bosch spokesman said in an email: "We are working on a rebuttal. That is going to take some time. There is no submission deadline with the court. Until then we will not comment on ongoing investigations and court proceedings."

Ilka Kopplin contributed to this article.

Credit: By William Boston

DETAILS

Subject:	Emissions; Automobile industry; Automobiles; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry; Corporation: Volkswagen AG; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
People:	Denner, Volkmar
Company / organization:	Name: Volkswagen AG; NAICS: 336110, 336390; Name: Robert Bosch GmbH; NAICS: 336390
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publicationtitle:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729613
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-meeting-ties-bosch-ceo-vw-chief/docview/1817729613/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 341 of 500

U.S. News: House GOP Mulls Move Against IRS Head

Rubin, Richard . Rubin, Richard.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Impeachment backers plan to use a procedural tactic to force a vote on the House floor as soon as next week, and House Republicans will meet beforehand in an effort to hash out the disagreement.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- House Republicans have no affection for the Internal Revenue Service after three years of mounting frustration about what they see as the tax agency's slow and incomplete responses to congressional investigations. But many are shying away from the aggressive step urged by some hard-liners: impeaching IRS Commissioner John Koskinen now.

Lawmakers are debating how far to go as they weigh the political risks of any vote that even resembles letting Mr. Koskinen off the hook.

What is giving them pause about impeachment are conservatives' push to bypass the Judiciary Committee and the slim chances of removing Mr. Koskinen from office. Impeachment would require Senate Republicans to also attract more than 20 Democratic votes -- the number needed to get the necessary two-thirds majority in the chamber -- making it a clear dead end.

House Republicans' internal standoff shows the limits of raw politics in the general-election season after years of conservatives rallying against the IRS, a movement that has helped to restrict the agency's budget.

Impeachment backers plan to use a procedural tactic to force a vote on the House floor as soon as next week, and House Republicans will meet beforehand in an effort to hash out the disagreement.

Mr. Koskinen met with two separate groups of House Republicans on Wednesday and said there was a "very good exchange of views."

Rep. Mike Kelly (R., Pa.) said he didn't want Mr. Koskinen to get "railroaded" and said Republicans should follow the proper process.

Rep. Jim Jordan (R., Ohio), a leader of the impeachment effort, said the expedited approach is necessary because the Judiciary Committee hasn't acted. "We've tried and tried and tried and tried and tried" to go through the committee, Mr. Jordan said.

A spokeswoman for Rep. Bob Goodlatte (R., Va.), the committee's chairman, declined to comment.

Rather than an immediate vote by the entire House, the committee should have "very serious long hearings" to examine the allegations against Mr. Koskinen, said Rep. Kenny Marchant (R., Texas).

It wouldn't take much Republican opposition in the House to block impeachment. If all Democrats oppose it, they would need just 30 of the 246 GOP members.

Mr. Koskinen is an unlikely target for conservatives' anger. He had nothing to do with the controversy that erupted in 2013, when an inspector general's report found the IRS had given extra scrutiny to tea-party groups seeking tax-exempt status. Top officials who were directly involved resigned.

The bill of particulars against him stems from his response to congressional investigations. Under his watch, the agency destroyed backup data that included emails belonging to Lois Lerner, who had led the office that oversaw nonprofit groups. The impeachment resolution says Mr. Koskinen "failed to act with competence and forthrightness" in disclosing the destruction and that the agency didn't try hard enough to preserve all documents.

Mr. Koskinen has said the destruction was unintentional.

Credit: By Richard Rubin

DETAILS

Subject:	Congressional investigations; Committees
People:	Koskinen, John
Company / organization:	Name: Internal Revenue Service--IRS; NAICS: 921130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729470
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-house-gop-mulls-move-against-irs-head/docview/1817729470/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 342 of 500

Loaded Handgun Taken to School On the First Day

Brody, Leslie; Shallwani, Pervaiz . Brody, Leslie; Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The weapon discovery came shortly after Mayor Bill de Blasio said in a back-to-school news conference that crime was down in city public schools.

FULL TEXT

A 15-year-old boy brought a loaded gun to a Brooklyn high school Thursday, the first day of classes for more than a million New York City children.

Police said that shortly before 9 a.m., a metal detector found a .22-caliber handgun in a student's backpack at the School for Career Development.

The student was taken into custody after security guards called the police, and he was later charged with criminal possession of a weapon as a juvenile. There was one bullet in the chamber with three more in the magazine, police said.

A law-enforcement official said the student told police that the backpack belonged to a friend.

The weapon discovery came shortly after Mayor Bill de Blasio said in a back-to-school news conference that crime was down in city public schools. Some charter-school advocates have disputed his claim, citing state violence data that officials have called flawed and are planning to revise.

In an email, a city Department of Education spokeswoman called the incident "deeply troubling" and said the department was working with police as they conduct an investigation.

"Safety always comes first," she added, "and there is zero tolerance for weapons of any kind in schools."

Seven firearms were found in city schools last year, down from nine in 2014-15 and 10 in 2013-14, according to the New York Police Department.

Thursday's gun incident marred what officials hoped would be a celebratory start to the school year, with the number of children enrolled in public preschool hitting 70,430, a record.

This will be the last full academic year for the mayor to show success in his vision for improving schools, especially the most troubled ones, before voters have their say in the 2017 mayoral elections.

Mr. de Blasio and Chancellor Carmen Fariña visited schools in all five boroughs to highlight their agenda. This year, they emphasized a "single shepherd" effort to assign a long-term counselor to help each student in grades six through 12 in District 7 in the South Bronx and District 23 in Brownsville.

They also visited classes tied to expanding computer science, algebra and Advanced Placement courses, as well as a push to have children reading at grade level by the end of second grade.

Mr. de Blasio went to KIPP Infinity Middle School in West Harlem to show the value of collaboration between charters and traditional public schools. His warm conversations with students and educators there contrasted with his clashes with charters in the past, and his comments last month that some charters' high test scores stemmed from test prep rather than real learning.

At KIPP, he saw an eighth-grade math class where students tutored their peers. After watching a pair work together, he praised one girl's effort to lead her friend toward solving a math problem but advised her to resist saying too much.

"It's only going to take hold if she figures out the next steps fully on her own," Mr. de Blasio said.

Credit: By Leslie Brody and Pervaiz Shallwani

DETAILS

Subject:	Arrests; Secondary school students; Firearms; Public schools; Charters; Students; Mayors
Business indexing term:	Subject: Charters; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Brooklyn New York; United States--US
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729463
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/loaded-handgun-taken-school-on-first-day/docview/1817729463/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Developer Is Charged in Tax Case

Barbanel, Josh . Barbanel, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In May, another New York City real-estate developer, Aby Rosen, agreed to pay $7 million to settle allegations by the state attorney general that he failed to pay sales and use taxes on art purchases by using resale certificates that exempt dealers from sales tax.

FULL TEXT

An art collector and developer of luxury Manhattan real estate was charged Thursday with evading more than $1 million in city and state taxes in connection with the purchase of fine art, furniture, jewelry and a Ferrari 458 Spider.

Michael Shvo, 43 years old, was indicted on 28 counts, including criminal tax fraud. He pleaded not guilty in state Supreme Court in Manhattan and was released on a $500,000 bond. He was ordered to surrender his U.S. and Israeli passports.

Ronn Torossian, a spokesman for Mr. Shvo, said that "Mr. Shvo looks forward to his day in court where he will mount a defense to all charges related to his art business."

"Mr. Shvo is prominent in the art world," Mr. Torossian said. "He has not committed any crime whatsoever nor did he act with any criminal intent."

Mr. Shvo had cultivated a reputation during the last real-estate boom as a brash broker and has trademarked the slogan "Let's Shvo." In the last few years, he had begun a series of condominium projects. He is noteworthy for driving around the Hamptons in a red Ferrari.

The indictment is part of a stepped-up effort by state and local tax authorities to audit and investigate art purchases. In May, another New York City real-estate developer, Aby Rosen, agreed to pay $7 million to settle allegations by the state attorney general that he failed to pay sales and use taxes on art purchases by using resale certificates that exempt dealers from sales tax. Mr. Rosen denied the allegations, and said he was acting as an art dealer.

Mr. Shvo is accused of telling galleries and auction houses that he was shipping purchases to a company, Shvo Art Ltd., registered in the Cayman Island, where no sales taxes were due, or to other overseas locations.

The purchases were instead sent to Mr. Shvo's Fifth Avenue office or his homes in the Time Warner Center and in Water Mill on the East End of Long Island, prosecutors said.

Two executives at moving companies were also indicted with Mr. Shvo and charged with criminal tax fraud and falsifying business records.

Mr. Shvo is also accused of failing to file corporate tax returns and evading more than $275,000 in corporate taxes when Shvo Art Ltd. sold certain pieces of fine art and furniture at a profit in New York.

Prosecutors said the $264,000 Ferrari was purchased through a limited liability company in Montana, even though it was used primarily in New York.

In announcing the indictment, Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus R. Vance Jr. said that "Mr. Shvo went to great lengths to defraud New Yorkers out of more than a million dollars in tax revenue."

Mr. Vance said the indictment "puts other purchasers of fine art on notice."

Credit: By Josh Barbanel

DETAILS

Subject:	Taxes; Limited liability companies; Tax evasion; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Taxes Limited liability companies Tax evasion
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Shvo, Michael
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1817729382
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-developer-is-charged-tax-case/docview/1817729382/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 344 of 500

U.S. News: Latino Population Growth Slows

Jordan, Miriam . Jordan, Miriam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Latino settlement across the country, which gave rise to Hispanic enclaves in the likes of North Carolina and Iowa in the 1990s and early 2000s, has also slowed since the onset of the recession in 2007, according to an analysis of U.S. Census data by the Pew Research Center released Thursday.

FULL TEXT

The growth in the population of U.S. Latinos, who represent the nation's largest minority, has slowed substantially since the Great Recession, and most Hispanics in the country are now born here, according to a new study.

Latino settlement across the country, which gave rise to Hispanic enclaves in the likes of North Carolina and Iowa in the 1990s and early 2000s, has also slowed since the onset of the recession in 2007, according to an analysis of U.S. Census data by the Pew Research Center released Thursday.

Between 2007 and 2014, the U.S. Hispanic population grew about 2.8% annually, down from 4.4% between 2000 and 2007, and 5.8% annually in the 1990s.

"Lower fertility combined with less immigration has led to slower growth of Hispanics," said Mark Hugo Lopez, Pew's director of Hispanic Research and co-author of the report. "It has also led to a slowdown in their dispersion," he said.

These two trends point to the end of the U.S. demographic earthquake unleashed by rapid Latino population growth that began in the 1990s. That growth caused Latinos to surpass blacks and become the second-largest population group in the country, after whites.

"The demographic impact of Latinos that we have seen over the last 2.5 decades will continue into the future, but it is going to be a declining impact," said Mr. Lopez.

All told, the U.S. was home to 55.4 million Hispanics in 2014, out of a total population of around 319 million that year. U.S. Latinos, or Hispanics, are individuals born mainly in Mexico, Caribbean countries like Cuba and the Dominican Republic, and Central American countries like Guatemala and El Salvador, as well as all Americans who trace their ancestry to those places.

Despite the slowdown, Latinos still represented 54% of the nation's population growth between 2000 and 2014, according to Pew.

Minorities could determine the outcome of the presidential election in November, and Latino electoral clout will continue to climb in coming years. That is in part because Hispanics in the U.S. are increasingly born here -- and, thus, automatically eligible to vote.

Immigration, once the biggest driver of Hispanic population growth, has taken a back seat to U.S. births. Indeed, more people from Mexico, the biggest source of Latino immigrants, are now leaving than entering the U.S., according to Pew.

In most states, Hispanics born in the U.S. now outnumber their foreign-born brethren.

In California, the country's most populous state and home to the most Latinos, nearly two-thirds of Hispanics were U.S.-born in 2014. In Texas, which ranks second, 70% of Hispanics were born in the U.S. In Colorado, that figure was 76%.

Among the 15 metropolitan areas with the largest Hispanic population, only two are majority foreign-born. In Miami-Fort Lauderdale-West Palm Beach, 61% of Latinos are foreign-born, and in Washington, D.C., and adjacent Virginia and Maryland suburbs, 53% are immigrants.

The Hispanic fertility rate has fallen as the share of Hispanics who are immigrants has declined.

Throughout the early 2000s, the birthrate among Hispanic women of childbearing age was 95 births per 1,000 women, peaking at 98.3 in 2006. The Hispanic birthrate declined steadily, to 72.1 in 2014, and is unlikely to reverse.

Take Ana Villegas, one of six U.S.-born children to Mexican immigrants in California.

The 33-year-old executive assistant at a nonprofit in Los Angeles plans to have one or two children to "make sure I can offer them the best possible quality of life," she said.

Her sister, 35-year-old Gricelda, the oldest of the six children and the only one who is married, has two kids and doesn't want more, she said.

The Pew analysis found that Hispanics were more evenly distributed across U.S. counties in 2014 than previously, but that their dispersion has slowed since 2007.

The biggest increase in Latino population happened in North Dakota, where energy-related jobs due to expansion of the oil and natural-gas sectors also attracted other groups. The size of that state's Hispanic population doubled in the seven-year postrecession period, albeit to just 18,000.

Credit: By Miriam Jordan

DETAILS

Subject:	Population growth; Noncitizens; Hispanic Americans; Fertility; Immigration; Hispanic people; Immigrants
Location:	United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 9, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817729335
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-latino-population-growth-slows/docview/1817729335/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 345 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Emails released by House Democrats reveal new details of advice Powell gave Clinton for avoiding State Department computer systems.

FULL TEXT

Trump and Clinton sketched dueling visions of the U.S. role on the global stage in back-to-back appearances during an NBC forum. Earlier Wednesday, the GOP nominee laid out plans for a military buildup.

Emails released by House Democrats reveal new details of advice Powell gave Clinton for avoiding State Department computer systems.

Trump's campaign said a political donation from his charitable foundation was an inadvertent mistake.

U.S. officials warned Russia over alleged hacks into DNC files, but one suspect denied ties to Russia and promised more leaks.

Syria's opposition issued a road map for a transition to a democratic state without Assad at talks in London on ways to end the war.

Mexico's finance minister resigned amid a public uproar over last week's visit to the country by Trump.

Southeast Asian nations and China agreed to create a hotline to help avoid accidental clashes at sea.

A Russian jet fighter flew within 10 feet of a U.S. Navy plane in international airspace over the Black Sea.

The U.S. oil reserve is increasingly ineffective, with aging infrastructure a factor, an Energy Department report said.

DETAILS

Subject:	Bills; Charitable foundations
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81321 : Grantmaking and Giving Services
Location:	China; Russia; Mexico; Syria; United States--US; Black Sea
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Navy-US; NAICS: 928110
Classification:	81321: Grantmaking and Giving Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1817506413

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1817506413/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 346 of 500

Election 2016: U.S. Officials Warn Russia Over Hacking

Paletta, Damian . Paletta, Damian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Because the interview was conducted through a private social-media exchange, the Journal couldn't verify the identity of the person sending the messages.

FULL TEXT

Top Obama administration officials sent warnings to Russia on Wednesday over that country's alleged hacks into Democratic Party computer files, but one of the suspected hackers told The Wall Street Journal that his alleged Russia ties are "nonsense," while saying more records would be leaked as soon as next week.

A series of cyberattacks has evolved into an international dispute with political and security implications. U.S. law-enforcement and intelligence officials are working to gauge the breaches' severity and to prevent tampering with voting in November's elections.

So far, the White House response has been relatively muted, but it shows signs of changing. Defense Secretary Ash

Carter, speaking in England on Wednesday, said the U.S. and its partners wouldn't ignore Russia's "efforts to interfere with our democratic processes," though he didn't cite hacking in particular.

Director of National Intelligence James Clapper, at a conference in Washington, quoted a recent statement by President Barack Obama that said, "Experts have attributed this to the Russians." Mr. Clapper added, "So I won't get out ahead of the president on this, particularly while the [Federal Bureau of Investigation] is conducting its investigation."

The FBI is probing at least four actual or attempted breaches with ties to the 2016 elections, and officials suspect Russian intelligence services are behind the hacks.

"I don't think there's any doubt that it was the Russian government that was behind the hacks," said James Lewis, a cybersecurity expert at the Center for Strategic and International Studies who has served in the State and Commerce departments.

Russian President Vladimir Putin, in an interview with Bloomberg News published last week, denied the Kremlin was involved in the hacks. But he appeared to praise a leak of information from Hillary Clinton's campaign. "Is it really important who hacked this information from Clinton's election campaign?" he said. "What's important is the content of what was made public."

The intrusions have also targeted or penetrated computer systems controlled by the Democratic National Committee and the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, as well as the Illinois and Arizona election systems.

Some of the stolen records were published online by someone self-identified as Guccifer 2.0, and other records were released by the organization WikiLeaks. Both Guccifer 2.0 and WikiLeaks have said more of the hacked records will be released soon.

"I won't disclose all details now as I'm preparing a thing," a correspondent identifying himself as Guccifer 2.0 wrote in an interview conducted through a social-media messaging service. He said he is a male working alone and that his "goal is to bring the truth, I call it to bring the light."

He denied allegations he is connected to Russian spy services, saying claims he has used technology that is routed through Russia are meaningless. "if I drive bmw, does it mean i'm german?" he wrote.

Because the interview was conducted through a private social-media exchange, the Journal couldn't verify the identity of the person sending the messages. The account is the same one used to publish personal information about Democrats for weeks, and the same one that was briefly suspended because it violated a Twitter policy on publication of personal information.

Some of the leaked records have embarrassed Democrats, suggesting that the party machinery sought to boost Mrs. Clinton over her primary rival, Sen. Bernie Sanders.

Paul Sonne and Devlin Barrett contributed to this article.

Credit: By Damian Paletta

DETAILS

Subject:	Espionage; Hackers; International relations-US; Political campaigns; Personal information
Location:	United States--US; Russia
Company / organization:	Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817506386
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-u-s-officials-warn-russia-over/docview/1817506386/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 347 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Intel agreed to sell a majority stake in its computer-security unit to private-equity firm TPG. ---

FULL TEXT

Hanjin Shipping's woes have left as much as $14 billion worth of cargo stranded at sea, sending companies scurrying to try to recover their goods.

Goldman is handing out to clients free the prized tool that helped make it a trading powerhouse.

Apple unveiled improvements to the iPhone that stopped short of a major overhaul, hoping the upgrades will revive sagging sales.

Wells Fargo is to be the subject of regulatory action related to its cross-selling of products and sales tactics.

Lawyers are among the clients most affected by a higher asset minimum at J.P. Morgan's private bank.

Apache said it has discovered the equivalent of at least two billion barrels of oil in a new West Texas field.

Liberty Media agreed to buy Formula One in a deal that values the auto-racing franchise at $4.4 billion.

HP Enterprise disclosed a deal to spin off and merge most of its software operations with Micro Focus.

Intel agreed to sell a majority stake in its computer-security unit to private-equity firm TPG.

U.S. stocks ended little changed, but the Nasdaq eked out a fresh high. The Dow shed 11.98 points.

DETAILS

Location:	West Texas; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: JPMorgan Chase & Co; NAICS: 522110, 522292, 523150; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111; Name: Liberty Media Corp; NAICS: 516210, 517111, 517112, 551112
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817506331

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1817506331/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 348 of 500

Trump, Clinton Clash on Security

Michael C. Bender; Colleen McCain Nelson; Bender, Michael C; Colleen McCain Nelson . Michael C. Bender; Colleen McCain Nelson; Bender, Michael C; Colleen McCain Nelson.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton sketched dueling visions Wednesday night of the U.S. role on the global stage, with the two leading presidential candidates both arguing that their experience better prepared them to make the life-or-death decisions required of the commander in chief.

FULL TEXT

Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton sketched dueling visions Wednesday night of the U.S. role on the global stage, with the two leading presidential candidates both arguing that their experience better prepared them to make the life-or-death decisions required of the commander in chief.

In back-to-back appearances during a forum televised on NBC, they sparred over questions about their judgment and wrestled with issues that have tripped them up in the past.

Mrs. Clinton, who spoke first after losing a coin toss, said the most important quality the next president must possess is "an absolute rock steadiness and mixed with strength to be able to make the hard decisions." She added that "I've had the unique experience of watching and working with several presidents, and these are not easy decisions."

Mr. Trump countered later, saying that building a "great" company and traveling the world prepared him to make the difficult decisions required of a commander in chief.

"The main thing is I have great judgment," he said. "I know what's going on. I've called so many of the shots."

The discussion came as voters rank national security higher as a priority than in any other presidential election in the past generation, and neither candidate has gained a decisive edge on the issue.

A majority of voters said they weren't confident in either nominee's ability to be an effective commander in chief, according to an NBC News/SurveyMonkey online poll released Wednesday. But Mrs. Clinton had a wide lead -- 44% to 24% -- when voters were asked which candidate they trusted to make the right decisions about using nuclear weapons.

Moderator Matt Lauer pressed both candidates Wednesday on issues that have dogged their campaigns: Mrs. Clinton's use of a private email server and her handling of classified information and Mr. Trump's apparent admiration of Russian President Vladimir Putin.

The former secretary of state defended her handling of classified material, saying she took that responsibility seriously while acknowledging that using her own server was "a mistake" that she would not repeat.

"I make no excuses for it," she said.

Mr. Trump stood by his controversial comments, saying that it was an honor to be praised by Mr. Putin. The GOP nominee has called Russia's president a strong leader and Mr. Trump noted that Mr. Putin has an 82% approval rating in his own country.

"I think when he calls me brilliant, I'll take the compliment," said Mr. Trump, who also said the U.S. should have stymied the rise of Islamic State by "taking the oil" in Iraq after the war, a move that likely would have violated international agreements and fed the perception that President George W. Bush's reason for starting the war was economic and not based on strategic concerns.

Mr. Trump also sought to explain his past assertion that he knows more about Islamic State than U.S. generals do. He said he has faith in the military and in "certain" commanders.

"I think under the leadership of Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton, the generals have been reduced to rubble," Mr. Trump said. "They have been reduced to a point where it's embarrassing for our country."

In a speech in Philadelphia earlier Wednesday, Mr. Trump laid out plans to jettison current defense-spending caps and embark on a military buildup that includes big outlays for ships, planes and troops.

He also said that, if elected, he would give the Pentagon 30 days to present a plan for destroying Islamic State.

Mr. Trump said he wants to increase the number of active Army troops to 540,000 from 490,000, and boost the number of Marine Corps battalions to 36 from 23, or an extra 12,480 troops. He promised to build a Navy of 350 surface ships and submarines, up from 275 ships, and to add about 100 fighter craft to the Air Force, bringing the total to 1,200.

Mr. Trump didn't put a price tag on his plan. Mackenzie Eaglen, a resident fellow at the conservative American Enterprise Institute, estimated that the plan could cost $55 billion to $60 billion more a year than the current military budget.

Chris Harmer, a retired commander in the U.S. Navy and a defense-policy expert, said the broader point that the military was overtaxed and underfunded in its current missions abroad has merit. But he said that there was little need to increase defense spending if Mr. Trump is simultaneously proposing scaling back U.S. commitments in Asia and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Before he could embark on a military buildup, Mr. Trump would have to persuade Congress to rescind mandatory defense-spending limits, part of what is known as the sequester. Those limits were established as part of a 2011 budget agreement that set a decade's worth of spending caps to try to reduce the federal budget deficit.

"As soon as I take office, I will ask Congress to fully eliminate the defense sequester," Mr. Trump said.

Calls to end the sequester have increased as military officials have warned lawmakers that the cuts jeopardize preparedness. But lawmakers have been only able to agree on temporary deals easing spending limits for both the military and domestic programs.

Many Republicans want to increase military spending, but Democrats say they won't agree to any spending increases for the military unless domestic programs get an equal boost.

Mr. Trump said that the cost of his plan could be offset by, among other things, targeting tax cheats and reducing Pentagon bureaucracy.

Kristina Peterson, Byron Tau and Gordon Lubold contributed to this article.

Credit: By Michael C. Bender and Colleen McCain Nelson

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; National security; Budget deficits; Political campaigns; Nominations; Defense; International agreements
Business indexing term:	Subject: Budget deficits; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817506329
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-clinton-clash-on-security/docview/1817506329/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 349 of 500

World News: On Trip, Obama Faces Tests to U.S. Power --- During his final visit to Asia, various leaders try to undercut his agenda in region

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Richard Haass, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, said most of these developments "are just the latest installments of long-running sagas," citing Russia and Syria, North Korea and differences between the U.S. and Turkey over the Kurds.

FULL TEXT

VIENTIANE, Laos -- One of President Barack Obama's final turns on the international stage before leaving office spotlighted how some world leaders are testing the limits of U.S. power just months before a new American administration.

From the moment Mr. Obama stepped off the plane in the lakeside city of Hangzhou, China, through his meetings at a summit of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in Laos, he has faced challenges to his policies and overall American authority in ways large and small.

Russian President Vladimir Putin left the Obama administration empty-handed after intense negotiations on a deal to reduce violence in Syria. North Korea, the glaring setback in Mr. Obama's Asia policy, tested ballistic missiles. On Tuesday, U.S. officials said Iran made yet another provocative move toward a U.S. Navy ship in the Persian Gulf.

Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte made profane comments about Mr. Obama on the eve of their first meeting, leading the White House to cancel a sit-down with the leader of one of America's treaty allies. President Recep Tayyip Erdogan of Turkey was unexpectedly positive in public remarks about relations with the U.S., yet also challenged a core component of Mr. Obama's strategy against Islamic State extremists: backing Kurdish forces in Syria.

And while Chinese President Xi Jinping hosted Mr. Obama for a lengthy one-on-one meeting and cooperated with the U.S. on climate change, significant areas of tension between the countries went unresolved.

Richard Haass, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, said most of these developments "are just the latest installments of long-running sagas," citing Russia and Syria, North Korea and differences between the U.S. and Turkey over the Kurds.

"They are all manifestations of what I would describe as a world in disarray," he said.

Still, the Obama administration's effort to shift U.S. diplomatic and military attention toward Asia has left a mark, sending more U.S. forces, ships, planes into the region on a rotating basis while increasing military sales. Two key steps include a new U.S.-Philippine military agreement implemented this year, and a decision this year to lift restrictions on military sales to Vietnam.

"The Obama administration has been successful in deepening relationships with its treaty allies -- notably Japan, Australia and the Philippines -- and in accelerating growing ties with newer partners like Vietnam and India," said Michael Mazza, a research fellow in foreign and defense policy studies at the American Enterprise Institute, a Washington think tank. He called the steps important in maintaining a favorable balance of power.

However, the steps haven't yet deterred China from acting assertively and even aggressively, he said. "It's too early to call the 'rebalance' a failure, but with Asia on the edge of crisis for several years now, nor can we call it a success," Mr. Mazza said.

Given U.S. investments in Southeast Asia, and its massive military presence, "it's China that is trying to compete with U.S. influence in the region -- not the other way round," said Ian Storey, a Southeast Asia expert at the Singapore-based ISEAS-Yusof Ishak Institute.

"That's not to say that Southeast Asian countries aren't eager to attract Chinese money," he added. "But when you're throwing your weight around the South China Sea, I think there's a limit as to how much influence and reassurance you can buy."

There have been bright spots during Mr. Obama's trip to Asia. In China, Messrs. Obama and Xi announced new efforts to address climate change. Each country formally adopted the climate-change deal reached in Paris in December and a road map for talks on reducing emissions in commercial aircraft and phasing out hydrofluorocarbons, which are linked to climate change.

The president also pledged to double aid to Laos to help clean up unexploded ordnance left over from the Vietnam War -- to $90 million over the next three years. Unexploded bombs dropped by American planes decades ago have killed or maimed thousands of Laotians since the war.

Still, there was a sense that as Mr. Obama enters the autumn of his second term, concerns are rising that the U.S. is losing its ability to shape events in Asia. "There is a great power shift taking place," said Bilveer Singh, an associate professor and an expert in international relations at the National University of Singapore.

Mr. Obama's focus on Asia has been substantial as he implemented his policy of rebalancing relations in the region through engagement with China while also countering its influence by strengthening ties with its neighbors.

The president's advisers say his approach has given the U.S. more, not less, influence in the region than when he entered the White House, pointing to deeper commercial ties and a larger U.S. military presence in the region.

"U.S. influence in the Asia-Pacific has increased, and we have climbed back from the substantial damage that the Iraq war and the financial crisis did to America's standing," said Ben Rhodes, a deputy national-security adviser.

"There is a natural evolution in the global power dynamic that has been taking place for decades as China and other nations have risen," he said. "But we have focused on strengthening the institutions, international norms and global cooperation in ways that extend U.S. leadership."

Ben Otto and Trefor Moss contributed to this article.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	State visits; International relations-US; Leadership; International relations; Cooperation; Presidents; Climate change; Armed forces; Kurdish people; Military sales
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership International relations; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92811 : National Security
Location:	Asia
People:	Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Association of Southeast Asian Nations--ASEAN; NAICS: 928120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817490225
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-on-trip-obama-faces-tests-u-s-power/docview/1817490225/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

City News: City Graffiti Lingers Longer

Gay, Mara . Gay, Mara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Anthony Hoglebe, a spokesman for the Economic Development Corp., the city agency that runs much of the administration's graffiti-removal operations, said length of time from complaint to resolution wasn't the best way to measure the city's success.

FULL TEXT

New York City's average response time for addressing graffiti complaints has risen to almost four months under Mayor Bill de Blasio, according to an Independent Budget Office report released Wednesday.

The report found the city took an average of 114 days to handle graffiti complaints in fiscal years 2014 and 2015, a 65% increase in the average response time of 69 days at the end of former Mayor Michael Bloomberg's final term at City Hall.

The response time has grown longer despite a decrease in the number of graffiti complaints. There were 13,415 complaints in the fiscal year that ended June 30, compared with 15,393 in fiscal year 2011.

Officials at the Independent Budget Office, a city-funded organization that serves as a fiscal watchdog, also said New Yorkers may be removing the graffiti themselves instead of waiting for the city to do the job.

Mr. de Blasio, a Democrat who is seeking re-election next year, has been dogged by persistent criticism that quality of life in the city has declined since he took office in 2014.

Kathryn Wylde, president of the Partnership for New York City, a business group, said it was critical to remove graffiti as speedily as possible.

Ms. Wylde said the late Robert Kiley, a former chairman of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, showed the city it was important to take quick action to eliminate graffiti, in part, because the markings were seen by fewer people, removing an incentive for some who defaced property.

"He was right," she said of Mr. Kiley.

Anthony Hoglebe, a spokesman for the Economic Development Corp., the city agency that runs much of the administration's graffiti-removal operations, said length of time from complaint to resolution wasn't the best way to measure the city's success.

The city's graffiti-removal operations had been spread thin because of a decrease in federal funding in recent years, Mr. Hoglebe said. He also said the time it takes to clean graffiti can vary from year to year. If the city has a severe winter, some graffiti complaints may take longer to address, he said.

The city removed 5.9 million square feet of graffiti under Mr. de Blasio in fiscal year 2015, up from 4.1 million under Mr. Bloomberg in fiscal year 2013, Mr. Hoglebe said.

"The IBO report doesn't tell the whole story," said Mr. Hoglebe, adding that the mayor had increased city funding for graffiti removal.

City Councilman Stephen Levin, a Brooklyn Democrat whose district saw a 10% rise in graffiti complaints, said the city had been responsive to concerns over the issue.

"I've actually seen graffiti removal trucks in my district just in the last few days actually," he said. "So I know they're out there."

Councilman Rafael Espinal, a Brooklyn Democrat whose East New York district saw a 12% increase in complaints, said graffiti had long been an issue there. But Mr. Espinal said not all graffiti should be treated the same.

"There are many cases where graffiti is art," he said, "and there are many cases when graffiti is just straight-up acts of vandalism."

Credit: By Mara Gay

DETAILS

Subject:	Complaints; Funding; Graffiti; Fiscal years; Response time; Mayors
Business indexing term:	Subject: Fiscal years; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	de Blasio, Bill
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817490155
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-graffiti-lingers-longer/docview/1817490155/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 351 of 500

U.S. News: Report Says Oil Reserve Functions Inefficiently

Harder, Amy; Friedman, Nicole . Harder, Amy; Friedman, Nicole.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The government created the reserve after the 1973 oil embargo by the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, which sent global oil prices skyrocketing, along with U.S. gasoline prices.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The U.S. government's reserve stockpile of nearly 700 million barrels of oil is increasingly ineffective due to aging infrastructure and a booming domestic oil industry, according to an Energy Department report released Wednesday morning.

The government stores the oil stockpile, known as the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, or SPR, in 60 underground caverns in Texas and Louisiana. The Energy Department says most of the complex's infrastructure is getting too old to function efficiently and it needs money from Congress to fix it.

The Obama administration is releasing the report a few weeks before Congress is expected to pass a bill to fund the government through fiscal year 2017, which begins Oct. 1. The Energy Department is seeking $375.4 million to address many of the issues the report raised.

A budget bill Congress passed last year authorized the energy secretary to draw down and sell up to $2 billion of crude oil from the reserve during fiscal years 2017 through 2020 to update much of the complex's infrastructure, but the department still needs Congress to actually appropriate the money.

The report also highlights a continuing debate about whether a large strategic reserve, intended as a hedge against a crisis or shortage, is still needed, given the boom in domestic oil production.

The report suggests the optimal size for the reserve would be 530 million to 600 million barrels, or up to a month's worth of daily oil consumption. The stockpile currently has 695 million barrels of oil.

The government created the reserve after the 1973 oil embargo by the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, which sent global oil prices skyrocketing, along with U.S. gasoline prices. The purpose of the reserve is to safeguard the U.S. against emergency supply disruptions like the OPEC embargo.

Wednesday's report notes that the boom in domestic drilling -- oil production nearly doubled between 2008 and 2015 -- has created what it calls a "major" logistical problem.

Pipelines servicing the Gulf Coast are flowing south toward the coast to accommodate the increased oil production, instead of north, the direction the oil from the reserve would need to go.

The reserve is designed to release oil at a rate of 4.4 million barrels a day, but its current capacity could fall short of that by more than two million barrels a day, the report said.

Credit: By Amy Harder and Nicole Friedman

DETAILS

Subject:	Infrastructure; Petroleum production; Strategic petroleum reserve
Business indexing term:	Subject: Infrastructure Petroleum production Strategic petroleum reserve
Location:	United States--US

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817490133
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-report-says-oil-reserve-functions/docview/1817490133/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 352 of 500

World News: Merkel Tells Her Party to Moderate Its Tone After Loss

Troianovski, Anton . Troianovski, Anton.

ABSTRACT

Speaking here to the Bundestag, the lower house of parliament, Ms. Merkel said "scolding the voters achieves nothing" in her most extensive comments on the anti-immigrant, populist party since it defeated her conservative party in a state election over the weekend.

FULL TEXT

BERLIN -- German Chancellor Angela Merkel urged fellow politicians on Wednesday to avoid escalating their rhetoric in combating the upstart Alternative for Germany.

Speaking here to the Bundestag, the lower house of parliament, Ms. Merkel said "scolding the voters achieves nothing" in her most extensive comments on the anti-immigrant, populist party since it defeated her conservative party in a state election over the weekend.

"Politicians who, like us, carry responsibility today should at any rate moderate their language," Ms. Merkel said, suggesting that adopting a more combative tone only gives an advantage to those who oversimplify the issues.

The three-year-old Alternative for Germany, or AfD, jolted Berlin on Sunday by coming in second in the election in the sparsely populated northeastern state of Mecklenburg-West Pomerania.

Ms. Merkel said while voters' concerns had to be taken seriously, Germany was on the right track in assuring Germans' security, reducing the refugee flow, and integrating those who have already arrived. She also urged Germans not to fear change and promised that the country's core values wouldn't change despite the more than a million new arrivals in the past year and a half.

Credit: By Anton Troianovski

DETAILS

Subject:	Elections; State elections
Location:	Germany
People:	Merkel, Angela
Company / organization:	Name: Alternative for Germany; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817490054
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-merkel-tells-her-party-moderate-tone/docview/1817490054/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 353 of 500

World News: Russian Jet Flies 'Within 10 Feet' Of Navy Plane

Sonne, Paul . Sonne, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A Russian jet fighter conducted what the Pentagon described as an "unsafe," close-range intercept of a U.S. Navy surveillance aircraft in international airspace over the Black Sea, at one point closing to within 10 feet on Wednesday, U.S. officials said.

FULL TEXT

A Russian jet fighter conducted what the Pentagon described as an "unsafe," close-range intercept of a U.S. Navy surveillance aircraft in international airspace over the Black Sea, at one point closing to within 10 feet on Wednesday, U.S. officials said.

The maneuver came amid Washington-Moscow tensions over talks in Syria, a cease-fire in Ukraine and U.S. concern that Russian hackers are targeting U.S. electoral systems.

Navy Capt. Jeff Davis, a Pentagon spokesman, said the intercept lasted about 19 minutes and described it as a potentially dangerous maneuver. "These actions have the potential to unnecessarily escalate tensions, and could result in a miscalculation or accident," Capt. Davis said.

A U.S. defense official said the Russian Su-27 maintained a 30-foot distance from the U.S. P-8A Poseidon aircraft before closing to within 10 feet, a perilously close brush.

Russia has denied it is behind recent cyberattacks against the Democratic National Committee and said Wednesday that talks with the U.S. over Syria may continue this week. The U.S. didn't confirm any planned talks after President Barack Obama and Russian President Vladimir Putin failed to forge a deal on the sidelines of the Group of 20 summit.

Russia hadn't commented late Wednesday on the U.S. complaints about the intercept.

Credit: By Paul Sonne

DETAILS

Subject:	Military aircraft; Aircraft
Location:	United States--US; Russia
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817487236
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russian-jet-flies-within-10-feet-navy/docview/1817487236/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 354 of 500

Business News: Tegna Plans to Spin Off Cars.com

Hufford, Austen . Hufford, Austen.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The TV-station operator and digital-media company also said it was evaluating strategic alternatives for its job directory website CareerBuilder.

FULL TEXT

Tegna Inc. said Wednesday that it would spin off its Cars.com unit into a separate publicly traded company, and Tegna's chief executive would retire afterward.

The TV-station operator and digital-media company also said it was evaluating strategic alternatives for its job directory website CareerBuilder.

The Virginia company, the largest independent owner of NBC and CBS affiliates, is what remained after Gannett Co. spun off its publishing arm last year. This year, it has been benefiting from a surge in political advertising. Cars.com is an online car marketplace and review database.

The latest split again separates faster-growing assets from more traditional ones, continuing the process of creating smaller, but more focused, companies.

The company said that Cars.com will be able to invest more in buying digital automotive assets and Tegna will continue to focus on organic growth in its TV business and "opportunistic" acquisitions.

"Each business will have increased strategic, operating, and financial flexibility at a time when the broadcast and digital sectors are both rapidly evolving," Chief Executive Gracia Martore said.

Ms. Martore will retire when the split is completed, expected in the first half of 2017.

The move is subject to conditions, including final board approval. Cars.com will be based in Chicago.

Alex Vetter will be chief executive officer and president of Cars.com and Dave Lougee will be chief executive officer and president of Tegna.

Credit: By Austen Hufford

DETAILS

Subject:	Chief executive officers; Acquisitions & mergers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Chief executive officers Acquisitions & mergers
Location:	Virginia; United States--US
People:	Martore, Gracia
Company / organization:	Name: Cars.com; NAICS: 441120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817487224
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-tegna-plans-spin-off-cars-com/docview/1817487224/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 355 of 500

School Ruling Rocks Conn. --- Judge says funding is unconstitutional, orders new standards in educational system

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Superior Court Judge Thomas Moukawsher ruled that the state's funding mechanism for public schools violated the state constitution and ordered the state to come up with a new funding formula. Hartford Mayor Luke Bronin said it was "one of the most significant Connecticut court decisions in decades" that "shines a bright light on the profound inequalities that exist between school districts."

FULL TEXT

A Connecticut judge's sweeping ruling Wednesday declaring vast portions of the state's educational system as unconstitutional sent shock waves across the state.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Moukawsher ruled that the state's funding mechanism for public schools violated the state constitution and ordered the state to come up with a new funding formula. He also ordered the state to set up a mandatory standard for high school graduation, overhaul evaluations for public-school teachers and create new standards for special education.

"This is a very, very big deal," said Preston Green, professor of urban education at the University of Connecticut's Neag School of Education. "We are talking almost a total revamping of the educational system."

The ruling stemmed from a lawsuit filed against the state in 2005. A coalition of cities, local school boards, parents and their children claimed Connecticut didn't give all students a minimally adequate and equal education. The plaintiffs had sought to address funding disparities between wealthy and poor school districts.

"Nothing here was done lightly or blindly," said Judge Moukawsher as he read the ruling from the bench in a Hartford courtroom. "The court knows what its ruling means for many deeply ingrained practices, but it also has a marrow-deep understanding that if they are to succeed where they are most strained, schools have to be about teaching and nothing else."

The mayors of Hartford and Bridgeport, two Connecticut cities with some of the state's highest poverty rates, applauded the judge's ruling.

"This decision by Judge Moukawsher is a game changer for our children," said Joe Ganim, mayor of Bridgeport.

Hartford Mayor Luke Bronin said it was "one of the most significant Connecticut court decisions in decades" that "shines a bright light on the profound inequalities that exist between school districts."

A spokesman for Connecticut's Attorney General's office, which defended the state in the lawsuit, said the office was reviewing the ruling and declined to comment further. The state is expected to appeal the decision.

The state allocated $4.23 billion for the state Department of Education for the fiscal year that began in July. Connecticut Gov. Dannel Malloy, a Democrat, defended the state's educational system and said the state has invested hundreds of millions of dollars on education since he has been in office.

"These investments are working -- students across the board are showing growth in math and reading on recent state tests," Mr. Malloy said in a news release.

Judge Moukawsher also ordered the state to submit plans to address the issues he identified within 180 days. The plaintiffs will then have 60 days to make comments on the state's recommendations.

Republican Senate Minority Leader Len Fasano said the 180-day deadline is a tight time frame, citing the November election and the possibility the makeup of the Legislature would change.

In 2010, the state's Supreme Court said the state constitution required the state to provide a minimally adequate education to the students. The high court didn't weigh in on whether the state had met that standard, leaving it to the lower courts to make that determination.

Judge Moukawsher said the plaintiffs hadn't proved beyond a reasonable doubt the state failed to give all children a minimally adequate instruction.

But the judge agreed with the plaintiffs' other chief complaint regarding school funding. He said the state had "no rational, substantial and verifiable plan to distribute money for education aid and school construction."

The state has disputed the point and said Connecticut's distribution of school money was fair and rational.

Joseph Moodhe, an attorney for Connecticut Coalition for Justice in Education Funding, one of the plaintiffs in the lawsuit, said that while the judge said didn't set how much the state must spend on education, he didn't preclude it from spending more.

"If the state can do it cost free I think everyone would be delighted," Mr. Moodhe said. "But as a practical matter many of the issues that the judge has identified are going to require dedicated funding to address those deficiencies."

The Connecticut Education Association, the state's largest teachers union, said it was pleased the court acknowledged the disparities in low-income communities. "Unfortunately, the court declined to provide any remedy for the disparity in resources and revenue for students in the state's poorest communities -- the essence and heart of the . . . litigation," said CEA president Sheila Cohen.

While Judge Moukawsher offered some praise to the state's education system, his ruling delivered stinging rebukes to many elements of Connecticut's educational policy. He dismissed the teacher evaluation system as "little more than cotton candy in a rainstorm."

He ordered the state to submit plans to change that include proposals for hiring, evaluating, promoting, removing and compensating teachers and administrators.

Judge Moukawsher also ordered the state to overhaul its special education system as well as to produce a statewide graduation standard which could include a test or several tests that all students must pass to graduate.

(See related letters: "Feedback Friday: Different Takes / The People Behind Successful Students" -- WSJ Sept. 23, 2016)

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

ERIC Subject:	Educational Policy; Equal Education; Educational Equity (Finance)
Subject:	State court decisions; Education reform; School finance; Special education; Students; Funding; Litigation; School districts; School boards

Business indexing term:	Industry: 61111 : Elementary and Secondary Schools
Location:	Connecticut; United States--US
People:	Moukawsher, Thomas
Classification:	61111: Elementary and Secondary Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817487210
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/school-ruling-rocks-conn-judge-says-funding-is/docview/1817487210/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-07-15
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: With Bridge Case Set to Begin, Court Halts Release of Names

Mann, Ted . Mann, Ted.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A three-judge panel of the Third Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals vacated the decision by District Judge Susan Wigenton, siding with "John Doe" to block the release of the names.

FULL TEXT

A federal appeals court on Wednesday blocked a court order that would have revealed a list of people prosecutors call "unindicted co-conspirators" in the 2013 George Washington Bridge lane-closure scandal.

The federal judge overseeing the trial of two defendants accused of helping orchestrate the lane closures ruled in May that the sealed list of unindicted co-conspirators could be released to the public, following motions by a group of news organizations including North Jersey Media Group and Dow Jones & Co., publisher of The Wall Street Journal.

On the eve of the publication of the list, however, an anonymous individual, filing court papers as "John Doe," moved to block the release of the list, saying that being identified as a conspirator in the case could cause reputational harm.

A three-judge panel of the Third Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals vacated the decision by District Judge Susan Wigenton, siding with "John Doe" to block the release of the names.

In a 31-page decision, the court held that the sealed letter filed by federal prosecutors that identified the unindicted co-conspirators didn't constitute a "bill of particulars," a legal document to which there is a "recognized right of public access."

"The time may come, perhaps at trial, when the information in the Conspirator Letter ought to be made public," Judge Kent A. Jordan wrote for the court, "but that time is not here yet."

The identities aren't likely to remain secret for long. Jury selection in the trial of the two defendants in the bridge case, Bill Baroni and Bridget Kelly, begins Thursday. Both have pleaded not guilty to conspiracy charges. Prosecutors say the two associates of New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie conspired with a third accomplice, David Wildstein, to inflict traffic jams as punishment after the mayor of Fort Lee, the borough at the New Jersey end of the bridge, declined to endorse Mr. Christie for re-election.

Mr. Wildstein has pleaded guilty in the case and is cooperating with prosecutors. Mr. Christie has said he had no knowledge of the alleged scheme.

Opening statements in the trial -- at which prosecutors are expected to reveal the names of others who they believe were aware of the lane-closure plot and of attempts to cover it up -- begin Sept. 19.

Credit: By Ted Mann

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Trials; Bridges; Scandals; Prosecutions; Legal arguments; State court decisions; Public prosecutors
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Christie, Christopher J
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817487161
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-with-bridge-case-set-begin-court-halts/docview/1817487161/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 357 of 500

World News: Germany Rethinks Once-Taboo Tax Cuts --- Europe's largest nation is one of the most taxed, but many Germans don't want a reduction Thomas, Andrea . Thomas, Andrea.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]Mr. Schauble's pledge would also benefit low- and middle-income earners -- who have benefited less from Germany's economic upswing in recent years and are particularly concerned by the huge migrant inflow since last year.

FULL TEXT

BERLIN -- For more than a decade, Germany's focus on promoting fiscal discipline in Europe made any discussion of tax cuts at home off-limits -- but no longer.

This week, Finance Minister Wolfgang Schauble, seen across the continent as the face of austerity, floated limited tax relief as a possibility from 2018, a concession of sorts after years of pressure from the U.S. and other governments to loosen the purse strings in Europe's largest economy.

But there is a twist: Most Germans don't want tax cuts.

An Infratest Dimap survey conducted last month for public broadcaster ARD showed 58% of respondents thought the government should spend surplus taxes on investments and 22% said it should be used to reduce debt. Only 16% said they would like their money back in the form of tax cuts.

Such lack of interest jars with Germany's position as one of the world's most heavily taxed economies -- a burden that has also risen in recent years. Yet pollsters say it is no surprise: About half of Germans, including students, pensioners and the unemployed, live off state handouts. Statistics show 29% of the roughly 39 million people eligible to pay taxes don't because their incomes are too low.

Yet allies of Mr. Schauble say his promise, in a speech to parliament on Tuesday, for 15 billion euros ($16.9 billion) of tax cuts starting in 2018 -- after national elections next year -- could still make political sense.

First, of those people who would welcome such cuts -- those who do pay a lot of taxes -- a disproportionate number are traditional supporters of the center-right Christian Democratic Union, the party of Mr. Schauble and Chancellor Angela Merkel.

"The time is now right for tax cuts," said Hans Michelbach, a lawmaker with Ms. Merkel's Bavarian allies, the Christian Social Union. "We owe it to our people."

Second, Mr. Schauble's pledge would also benefit low- and middle-income earners -- who have benefited less from Germany's economic upswing in recent years and are particularly concerned by the huge migrant inflow since last year.

For years, said Klaus-Peter Schoppner of polling institute Mente>Factum GmbH, the government has said it couldn't afford tax cuts. "And suddenly there is all this money available for refugees. In this context, it's important for the government to show that good deeds will not only be handed out to asylum seekers."

Supporters say tax cuts could also help many Germans worried about dwindling income from their savings since the European Central Bank's loose monetary policy has sent returns on many popular fixed-income products crashing.

"We tell people every day that they must provide for their old age even though interest rates are so low. These people ask us where this money should be coming from," said Carsten Linnemann, lawmaker with Ms. Merkel's Christian Democrats.

Lower-income Germans -- the 40% of taxpayers with a monthly disposable income below 1,500 euros -- "make up the backbone of our society," he said. "If we neglect them, social cohesion is at risk."

It has become harder lately for the government to claim it has no leeway to cut taxes. Despite a costly refugee crisis, the public sector recorded a 19.4 billion euro surplus last year.

That is hardly the result of tight cost controls: federal spending increased to 311.4 billion euros last year from 292.3 billion euros in 2009 and is foreseen to grow a further 12% by 2020.

This, some economists say, means that despite its reputation as a champion of austerity, Germany is less fiscally conservative than it is overtaxed.

Credit: By Andrea Thomas

DETAILS

Subject:	Fiscal policy; Taxes; Central banks; Tax cuts
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Fiscal policy Taxes Central banks Tax cuts; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	Germany
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817487000
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-germany-rethinks-once-taboo-tax-cuts/docview/1817487000/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: ITT Students Chart Tough Course

Korn, Melissa . Korn, Melissa.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. Education Department is working with state education groups to coordinate transfer fairs, and Undersecretary Ted Mitchell said Tuesday that he was reaching out to community-college leaders directly to encourage them to accept ITT students.

FULL TEXT

This week's abrupt closure of ITT Technical Institute left more than 40,000 students struggling to figure out how, or even if, they could continue their studies in programs like criminal justice, computer drafting and nursing.

The answer, they are finding, is that it's complicated.

A number of community colleges and technical schools near now-shuttered ITT campuses have made appeals in recent days to former ITT students, posting on social media and buying radio advertisements announcing they are open for business and able to accommodate eager learners.

But many of the colleges don't award credit for the school's courses, because ITT is accredited by a different body than many nonprofit institutions are. That means students would have to start over if they enroll at most community colleges, no matter how close they were to finishing their degrees at ITT. And if they do transfer credits, they lose the ability to have some of their loans forgiven by the federal government.

Meanwhile, other for-profit vocational schools have dangers of their own. Many such programs are accredited by the Accrediting Council for Independent Colleges and Schools, which is itself facing scrutiny for lax standards. That group may be shut down later this year, which would require the schools it accredits to find other oversight bodies in order to remain eligible for federal student-aid funds.

Cecily Davis, who was about six months away from graduating with an associate degree in nursing at one of ITT's Chicago-area campuses, has struck out so far when asking other local programs about transferring her credits.

"It's devastating," the 27-year-old said, noting that some schools said they would accept a couple of the prerequisite courses she took at ITT, but not the nursing classes. "I'll have to start from scratch."

The U.S. Education Department is working with state education groups to coordinate transfer fairs, and Undersecretary Ted Mitchell said Tuesday that he was reaching out to community-college leaders directly to encourage them to accept ITT students.

Paradise Valley Community College in Phoenix posted on Facebook late Tuesday, "Did ITT Technical Institute shut the door on you!? There's still time to enroll at PVCC for fall semester." Classes there begin Sept. 19.

Central Piedmont Community College in Charlotte, N.C., said Tuesday it is "ready to help" displaced ITT students, and can even get them enrolled for classes that begin in October. But while the school may allow some students to take placement exams, it won't accept any credits directly from ITT programs.

Credit: By Melissa Korn

DETAILS

Subject:	Shutdowns; Social networks; Students; Schools; Nursing; College campuses; Community colleges; Colleges & universities
Business indexing term:	Subject: Shutdowns Social networks Colleges & universities; Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools 61121 : Junior Colleges
Company / organization:	Name: ITT Technical Institute; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools; 61121: Junior Colleges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817486966
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-itt-students-chart-tough-course/docview/1817486966/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 359 of 500

Business News: A Flea-Market App Comes to U.S. --- Japan's Mercari dares to challenge Amazon and eBay as it tailors service to Americans

Martin, Alexander . Martin, Alexander.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Kara Sugimoto, 23, said she has sold used shoes and bags on the site, usually for $15 or less, and appreciates that private information such as her bank-account number isn't disclosed to buyers.

FULL TEXT

TOKYO -- In an increasingly competitive global e-commerce market, it is daring for an Asian startup to challenge American giants such as Amazon.com Inc. and eBay Inc. on their own turf.

That is what Tokyo-based Mercari Inc. is trying to do with its app that allows people to buy and sell used goods like $35 purses and $15 videogames -- and it is making some inroads.

Downloads of Mercari's flea-market app reached 19 million in the U.S. at the end of August, up from 12 million a month earlier, the company said Tuesday. Downloads in Japan have climbed to 35 million. At one point recently, Mercari's app rose as high as No. 3 in rankings for U.S. downloads, according to analytics firm App Annie.

Mercari said it has succeeded by tailoring its app for American consumers.

Japanese online shopping sites offer storefronts stuffed with product categories and brimming with information about discounts. U.S. shoppers want something cleaner. "Research told us that Americans preferred a simple interface, so that is what we aimed for," said Ryo Ishizuka, one of the founders of Mercari who heads the company's

U.S. operations.

Mercari plans a U.K. version of its app next year and is considering an initial public offering down the road although it has no immediate plans, said Chief Executive Shintaro Yamada.

"We had our eyes set on the U.S. from the onset," he said, adding that 90% of development efforts over the past year have focused on improving the U.S. version.

Mercari focuses almost exclusively on smartphone users -- a big difference from other used-goods sites like eBay and Craigslist that date back to the desktop computer era. The app is designed so sellers can upload photos quickly and buyers can make one-click purchases. It also handles the payment process.

Once a buyer purchases a listed item, the money goes first to Mercari, which informs the seller that payment has been received, greenlighting shipment. The seller is paid only after the buyer confirms receipt -- preventing instances where sellers pocket payments without shipping anything.

One of the few startups to make a splash in a nation still dominated by old-line companies, three-year-old Mercari has built a strong following among Japanese women in their 20s and 30s.

Ryoko Wada, a 35-year-old Tokyo office worker, said she used the app to buy or sell items three or four times a month and has spent more than $900. She said she has sold about $200 worth of goods.

"It is useful since being a mother I don't get much time to go out shopping, and it is a shame to buy children's clothes at the retail price when they grow out of them so fast," she said.

Kara Sugimoto, 23, said she has sold used shoes and bags on the site, usually for $15 or less, and appreciates that private information such as her bank-account number isn't disclosed to buyers. But buyer beware: Ms. Sugimoto says some of the items she sees for sale are listed at prices far above market value.

When tweaking the app for American consumers, Mercari streamlined instructions and notifications to speed up transactions, and offered discounted shipping labels to sellers. At the moment, it isn't applying the 10% transaction fee that it charges in Japan.

Credit: By Alexander Martin

DETAILS

Subject:	Flea markets; Software; Electronic commerce
Business indexing term:	Subject: Electronic commerce; Corporation: eBay Inc; Industry: 45411 : Electronic Shopping and Mail-Order Houses 45951 : Used Merchandise Retailers
Location:	United States--US; Japan
Company / organization:	Name: Mercari Technologies Inc; NAICS: 513210; Name: Amazon.com Inc; NAICS: 334310, 454110, 518210

Classification:	45411: Electronic Shopping and Mail-Order Houses; 45951: Used Merchandise Retailers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817486943
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-flea-market-app-comes-u-s-japans/docview/1817486943/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 360 of 500

City News: New Effort Aims to Support Preschool Social Skills

Brody, Leslie . Brody, Leslie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

ParentCorps is expected to provide training for about 1,000 preschool workers, along with 14-week workshops for parents at some sites and professional development for social workers.

FULL TEXT

As more than 1 million New York City children start public school on Thursday, officials have promised a new resource: More support helping the youngest ones develop social skills.

The city plans to spend nearly $14 million over the next three years on ParentCorps, a program based at NYU Langone Medical Center that aims to assist many preschool staffers and families in helping preschoolers take turns, verbalize their feelings and get along. Such skills are widely seen as foundations for learning.

ParentCorps is expected to provide training for about 1,000 preschool workers, along with 14-week workshops for parents at some sites and professional development for social workers.

This increasing focus on social and emotional support to prevent disruptive behavior comes as many districts are taking steps to limit suspensions and expulsions for young children. This week New Jersey curtailed such removals in preschool through second grade, with certain exceptions, such as if a child brings a gun to school.

This summer, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio announced plans to ban suspensions in kindergarten through second grade, though the details haven't been clarified or adopted. The city already bars such removals from public preschool.

"We feel really strongly about it," said Josh Wallack, a deputy schools chancellor. "We need to provide supports to pre-K leaders and teachers to carry out alternatives."

Many states have been experimenting with techniques to prevent unruly behavior early on. A study released Thursday found promise in a Connecticut program that gave preschool teachers access to mental-health professionals, who helped them deal with students' aggression, hyperactivity and other distracting behaviors.

The research, by the Yale Child Study Center, part of the Yale School of Medicine, looked at a statewide program called the Early Childhood Consultation Partnership from 2008 to 2010. Through the program, which is ongoing, a preschool director can ask for a consultant -- at no charge -- to help teachers improve their classroom-management skills or deal with a specific child who was hitting, biting or acting up.

Funded by state grant for up to $2.4 million, the program's interventions last two or three months and involve the child's parents as well.

The study published Thursday in the Journal of the American Academy of Child & Adolescent Psychiatry divided 88 classes randomly into a group that would get the service and a group that wouldn't. It found that children who got the intervention had significantly fewer problem behaviors afterward than their peers. The study of short-term outcomes didn't include a long-term follow-up, however.

Walter Gilliam, an author of the study, said one key to the Connecticut program's success was having the consultant work with a parent and teacher together, leaving them with a stronger rapport and strategies to handle a child.

"We were able to find very big positive impacts in a relatively short period of time," Dr. Gilliam said. "It tells you the model can work. It doesn't tell you that everybody who attempts it will make it work. It comes down to the quality of implementation."

Mr. Wallack, the deputy chancellor, took a team of about a dozen people to visit Dr. Gilliam in New Haven, Conn., during the summer to discuss such mental-health services for city students.

Credit: By Leslie Brody

DETAILS

Subject:	Social skills; Child development; Public schools; Behavior; Children & youth; Child & adolescent psychiatry; Alliances
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.16
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817486919

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-new-effort-aims-support-preschool/docview/1817486919/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 361 of 500

U.S. News: Health Law Faces Key Time --- Officials look to enroll more healthy people during this year's critical sign-up period

Radnofsky, Louise; Armour, Stephanie . Radnofsky, Louise; Armour, Stephanie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since the main parts of the law went into effect in late 2013, the uninsured rate has dropped to historic lows, a fact confirmed by fresh data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention on Wednesday.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Significant spikes in premiums, insurer dropouts and persistently low enrollment numbers are combining to make this fall's sign-up period a crossroads for the Obama administration's signature health law.

Federal officials characterize the turbulence as temporary. At the same time, the administration is making a push in its final months to shore up the law by trying to sign up healthy people who are critical to the law's sustainability but have rejected insurance. That push will take place against a backdrop of elections that will shape the law's future.

Since the main parts of the law went into effect in late 2013, the uninsured rate has dropped to historic lows, a fact confirmed by fresh data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention on Wednesday. Millions of Americans have coverage through a government program such as Medicaid, or subsidized private coverage through a site such as HealthCare.gov sold, for the first time, without exclusions based on pre-existing conditions.

But that doesn't translate directly into success for the individual health insurance market. Indeed, without better enrollment in private coverage for 2017, premiums will likely rise further and the insurers in the program will find participation even less appealing. Their proposals for increased rates across the country already reflect the assumption that the law's offerings are most attractive to people who are sick and likely to incur large medical claims. Premium increases and limited choice of health plans can themselves impede sign-ups from all but the most desperate, creating a vicious circle sometimes referred to by health-insurance experts more ominously as a "death spiral."

"It's a critical year ahead both in a business perspective and from a political perspective," said Drew Altman, president of the Kaiser Family Foundation, a health-care think tank. "The bottom line is that enrollment numbers need to go up."

Many experts characterize the condition of the market for people who buy coverage on their own under the law as serious. Each said its decline into a critical state would likely be slowed and could be reversed by policy changes in a new administration.

"I do not think we're in one [a death spiral] at the moment," said Caroline Pearson, senior vice president at Avalere Health, a consulting firm. "We're vulnerable."

Health and Human Services Secretary Sylvia Mathews Burwell acknowledges that the coming year is an important one, but characterizes it as a "transition" period.

One indicator will be the health of the population in the individual market. Insurers had assumed sicker people would sign up first, followed by healthy enrollees soon after. That hasn't been borne out in the current data, which indicate the health of the population of people who have coverage through HealthCare.gov or directly from an insurer has remained largely steady since the law's rocky launch in 2013.

To turn things around, the Obama administration is putting much of its faith in its ability to persuade more healthy people to sign up in the coming open enrollment period that starts Nov. 1.

But even supporters caution that the lessons of the past three years have been that enrollment is time-consuming work being done on a shoestring budget -- and there are few winning messages to offer cash-strapped consumers who see insurance as a luxury.

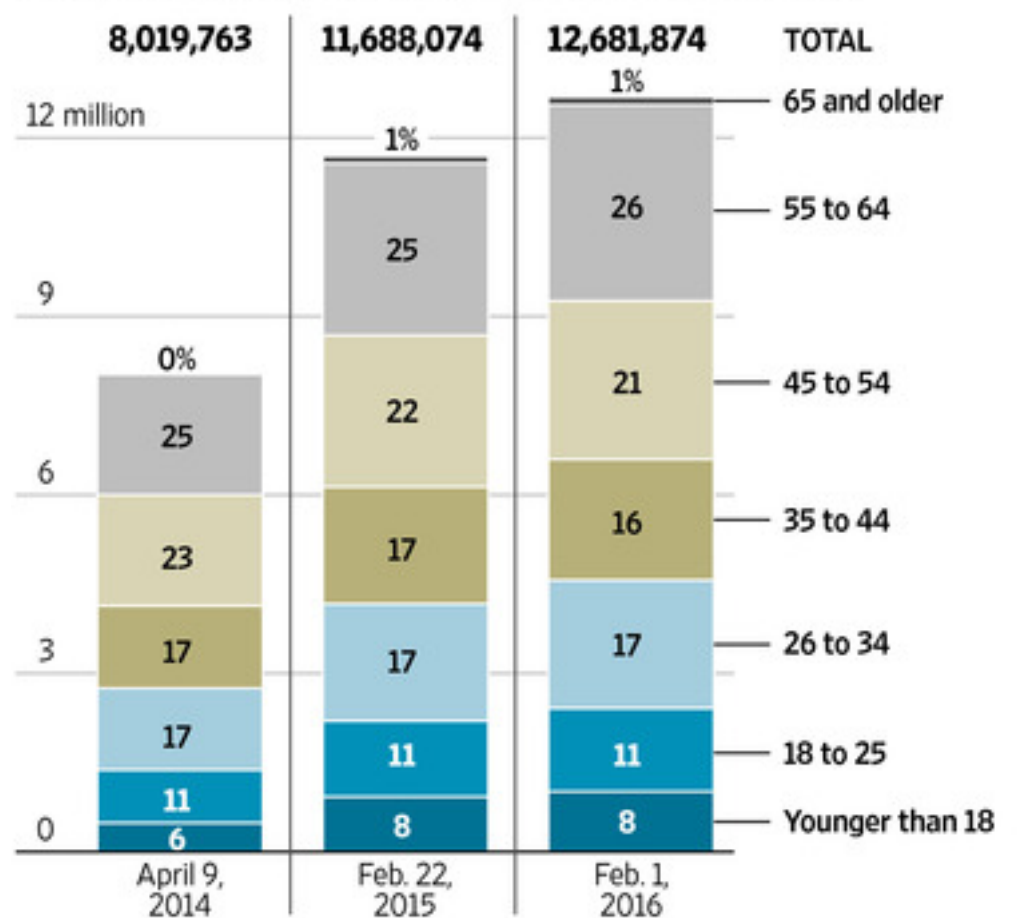

Ms. Burwell said the administration was making it a priority to find ways to enroll and retain young and healthy people where it could, including improving its ability to resolve instances in which the government cannot confirm data involving an individual's income or immigration status, two factors that have booted hundreds of thousands of people from their coverage. She suggested people who are ill are motivated to resolve those issues more quickly.

She said her agency would time its messages to people under 35 around key sign-up dates. She also said HHS had enlisted the Internal Revenue Service to contact people who paid a penalty for going without coverage in 2015, and may be on course to pay a higher one for 2016, too.

The first enrollment numbers will likely be public by the time the next president is inaugurated. The final sign-up deadline will come later, on Jan. 31.

Stagnant Pools

While the number of people picking coverage through HealthCare.gov has inched up over the past three annual enrollment periods, the demographic makeup of enrollees has hardly shifted at all.

Note: Figures may not total 100% due to rounding.

Source: U.S. Department of Health and Human Services

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Louise Radnofsky and Stephanie Armour

DETAILS

Subject: Group health insurance; Insurance coverage; Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US; Enrollments

Business indexing term: Subject: Group health insurance Insurance coverage Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US

Publication title: Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages: A.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817486829
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-health-law-faces-key-time-officials-look/docview/1817486829/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 362 of 500

Business News: Ackman's Move Pressures Chipotle

Jargon, Julie; Benoit, David . Jargon, Julie; Benoit, David.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Proxy advisory firm Institutional Shareholder Services in April recommended that shareholders vote against the re-election of two Chipotle board members, saying the chain's food-safety problems "exposed a flawed board succession process that has not allowed the directors' skill sets to keep pace with the company's size and complexity."

FULL TEXT

William Ackman's large investment in Chipotle Mexican Grill Inc. puts additional pressure on the burrito chain that has faced longstanding shareholder concerns about the board and its ability to handle its food-safety crisis.

Chipotle is still reeling from a series of food-safety problems last year, including a case of salmonella in Minnesota, E. coli in several states, and norovirus in California and Boston. Its strategy to lure back customers with free burritos and free children's meals doesn't appear to be working, while its new loyalty program hasn't kept restaurants full.

Some investors and powerful shareholder-advisory firms have laid the blame for the crisis, and the subsequent stock fall, at the feet of the directors. In a filing late Tuesday disclosing that Pershing Square Capital Management LP had taken a 9.9% stake in Chipotle, Mr. Ackman hinted that changing up the board would be among his priorities, even as he lauded the brand and management's vision.

Judging from Chipotle's 5.9% stock bounce Wednesday, investors welcomed the move by Mr. Ackman. The restaurant chain's shares have fallen more than 40% in the past year.

Chipotle spokesman Chris Arnold said the company had its first call with Mr. Ackman on Wednesday and that he expects a meeting with him soon. "We certainly welcome the opportunity to engage in conversation with Mr. Ackman, just as we do with all of our investors," Mr. Arnold said.

Analysts and investors expect Mr. Ackman to push for board changes, including a possible seat for his firm. Chipotle's board earlier this year was criticized for its directors' lack of experience in dealing with the type of crises that can befall restaurant companies.

Proxy advisory firm Institutional Shareholder Services in April recommended that shareholders vote against the re-election of two Chipotle board members, saying the chain's food-safety problems "exposed a flawed board succession process that has not allowed the directors' skill sets to keep pace with the company's size and complexity."

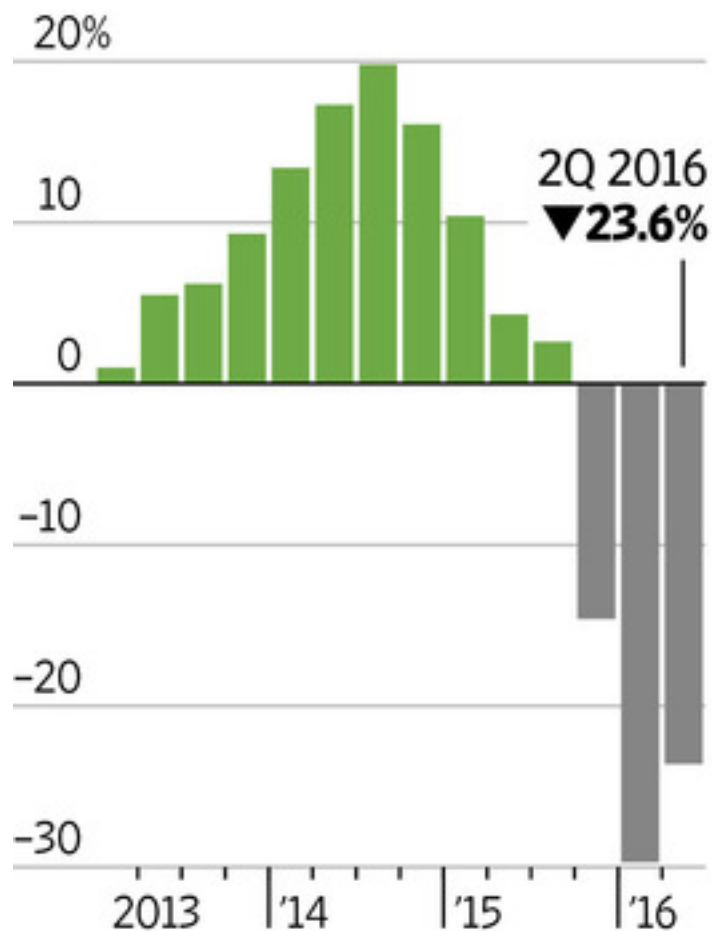

The board is made up of nine directors, five of whom have served for 17 years or more. It is chaired by Chipotle founder and co-CEO Steve Ells. Three directors are over 70 years old and two worked at a company where Mr. Ells' father, who helped fund the start of Chipotle, worked as an executive.

At Chipotle's annual meeting in May, the targeted board members were all re-elected, but shareholders approved a nonbinding proxy-access proposal that would give an investor group that has owned 3% or more of Chipotle's shares outstanding for at least three years the ability to nominate its own board candidates.

Mr. Arnold, the Chipotle spokesman, said Wednesday that Chipotle may make additional changes to its board, and that it is in the process of adopting new proxy-access provisions.

Slow Recovery

Chipotle's quarterly same-store sales, change from a year earlier

Source: the company
THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Julie Jargon and David Benoit

DETAILS

Subject:	Restaurants; Stockholders; Fast food industry; Food safety; Investments; Directors
Business indexing term:	Subject: Restaurants Stockholders Fast food industry; Industry: 72251 : Restaurants and Other Eating Places
Location:	Minnesota; California; United States--US

People:	Ackman, William
Company / organization:	Name: Pershing Square Capital Management LP; NAICS: 523920; Name: Chipotle Mexican Grill; NAICS: 722513
Classification:	72251: Restaurants and Other Eating Places
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817486461
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ackmans-move-pressures-chipotle/docview/1817486461/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Uber Scores Win In Ruling on Drivers

Bensinger, Greg; Weber, Lauren . Bensinger, Greg; Weber, Lauren.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The decision by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals applies to a lawsuit challenging Uber's background-check practices, but the reasoning in it likely also applies to a high-profile case over drivers' classification.

FULL TEXT

Uber Technologies Inc. was handed a victory on Wednesday in a fight with its legions of drivers after a U.S. appeals court ruled most of its contract workers must resolve their differences through individual actions, rather than as a group.

The decision by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals applies to a lawsuit challenging Uber's background-check practices, but the reasoning in it likely also applies to a high-profile case over drivers' classification. In that class-action suit, Uber had agreed to pay as much as $100 million to some 385,000 drivers in two U.S. states, but a federal judge rejected the proposed settlement last month.

Wednesday's ruling is a setback for labor advocates who had hoped the classification suit would proceed to trial and set a precedent for workers participating in the so-called gig economy.

That suit sought to recover wages and win new rights for drivers, including classification as employees rather than contractors and reimbursement for expenses like gasoline. Last month, U.S. District Judge Edward Chen of San Francisco ruled the settlement wasn't fair, accurate or reasonable for drivers.

Before the proposed settlement in April, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals had agreed to review Judge Chen's decision declaring the arbitration clause in Uber's driver agreement unenforceable. That decision had allowed the cases to proceed in court rather than in arbitration. The Ninth Circuit also had agreed to review Judge Chen's similar decision in the background-check case, brought by drivers Ronald Gillette and Abdul Mohamed.

On Wednesday, the Ninth Circuit ruled that Uber's arbitration clause holds, in effect substantially reducing the class size in both cases to the small percentage of drivers who opted out of them.

Shannon Liss-Riordan, the attorney representing the drivers in the classification suit, said the ruling on Wednesday was a setback.

Uber's attorney, Theodore Boutrous, of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, said arbitration is a fair and less costly alternative to class-action litigation.

Credit: By Greg Bensinger and Lauren Weber

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Arbitration; Litigation; State court decisions; Classification; Ride sharing services
Business indexing term:	Subject: Ride sharing services
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Uber Technologies Inc; NAICS: 513210, 518210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817486423
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-uber-scores-win-ruling-on-drivers/docview/1817486423/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 364 of 500

Business News: Airline Stocks Rise on Outlook

Cameron, Doug . Cameron, Doug.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Shares in American Airlines Group Inc., Delta Air Lines Inc., United Continental Holdings Inc. and Southwest Airlines Co. all gained roughly 5% on expectations that carriers would keep capacity growth in check and boost average fares and profits.

FULL TEXT

U.S. airline stocks rose sharply Wednesday as executives flagged an improving revenue outlook for the domestic market that combined with rising fuel costs may provide more scope to boost ticket prices.

Shares in American Airlines Group Inc., Delta Air Lines Inc., United Continental Holdings Inc. and Southwest Airlines Co. all gained roughly 5% on expectations that carriers would keep capacity growth in check and boost average fares and profits.

Investor sentiment has been battered during the past 18 months as a series of fare wars weighed on average ticket prices and overshadowed the cost-cutting and sale of ancillary perks and products that have helped airlines generate record profits.

Delta Chief Financial Officer Paul Jacobson led a parade of bullish comments about capacity and revenue trends from executives at an industry conference on Wednesday.

Atlanta-based Delta also said Wednesday that the outage would trim $150 million from its pretax profits in the third quarter and leave its unit revenue down around 7% from the same period a year earlier, instead of 4% to 6% decline previously forecast. Mr. Jacobson didn't say when Delta expected the metric to turn positive, but the No. 3 U.S. airline by traffic in July said it hoped that could occur by the end of this year.

Mr. Jacobson predicted Delta would be the first of the three network carriers to report a positive year-over-year increase in unit revenue, a closely watched metric of how much an airline takes in for each passenger flown a mile.

Investors have remained wary of carriers diluting the benefits of cheaper fuel with pricier labor deals and expanded flying, but Mr. Jacobson said higher fuel "traditionally" allowed carriers to boost ticket prices and average revenue.

Delta shares finished up 5.6% at $38.90, recouping most of the losses during the past month.

Shares in American led the gains among the big network carriers, ending up 4.8% at $38.75. Robert Isom, the carrier's new president, laid out plans to boost revenue with more segmentation of its aircraft to attract fliers willing to pay different ticket prices.

Southwest said this week that it expected to expand capacity by less than 4% next year compared with 2016, less than most analysts expected and a move that could give carriers more flexibility to boost fares as fuel prices increase.

Credit: By Doug Cameron

DETAILS

Subject:	Stock prices; Airline industry; Profits; Airlines; Air fares; Alliances
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock prices Airline industry Profits Air fares; Industry: 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Southwest Airlines Co; NAICS: 481111; Name: United Continental Holdings Inc; NAICS: 551112; Name: American Airlines Group Inc; NAICS: 551114; Name: Delta Air Lines Inc; NAICS: 481111
Classification:	48111: Scheduled Air Transportation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 8, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1817486367

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-airline-stocks-rise-on-outlook/docview/1817486367/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 365 of 500

Free-Trade Agreements Help Us Get More Balanced Trade

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

When trade is not free, countries such as China and Japan artificially tilt the playing field against the U.S. via tariffs and nontariff barriers to trade.

FULL TEXT

Business should be worried about the political backlash against free trade ("Trade Talk Worries Business," U.S. News, Aug. 25). Our trade with the 20 countries with which we have free-trade agreements, or FTAs, was relatively balanced in 2015 -- $710 billion in exports and $774 billion in imports. In contrast, trade with the 175 nations with which no FTA is in place was grossly unbalanced -- $792 billion in exports and $1,472 billion in imports.

A whopping 91% of our trade deficit comes from countries with which we have no FTA. When trade is not free, countries such as China and Japan artificially tilt the playing field against the U.S. via tariffs and nontariff barriers to trade. If America is truly losing on trade, it isn't because of bad free-trade deals but because of the lack of such agreements.

Prof. Jason E. Taylor

Central Michigan University

Mount Pleasant, Mich.

DETAILS

Subject:	International trade; Trade agreements; Trade deficit
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade Trade agreements Trade deficit
Location:	United States--US; China; Japan
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Section:	Letters to the Editor
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817049536
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/free-trade-agreements-help-us-get-more-balanced/docview/1817049536/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 366 of 500

World News: Obama Sets Laos Ties on a New Track -- - President recognizes secret war, pledges aid to clean up bombs left from Vietnam era

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On Wednesday, he flies to Luang Prabang, northern Laos, where he will hold an event with young Southeast Asian entrepreneurs and activists and tour the Wat Xieng Thong Buddhist temple. ---

FULL TEXT

VIENTIANE, Laos -- President Barack Obama recognized America's secret war in Laos from decades ago, a symbolic gesture intended to move the two countries' relations beyond their dark Cold War past.

Mr. Obama, the first sitting U.S. leader to visit the small Southeast Asian nation, stopped short of apologizing for the conflict in his comments Tuesday, but said he came to the country in the "spirit of reconciliation."

Mr. Obama said the U.S. would give Laos $90 million over three years to help clean up the remnants of two million tons of bombs it dropped on the tiny, landlocked country during the Vietnam War, doubling its current commitment. Decades later, unexploded bombs continue to maim and kill Laotians.

"Today I stand with you in acknowledging the suffering and sacrifices on all sides of that conflict," he said at the Lao National Cultural Hall, on what he said would be his last trip as president to Asia. "Given our history here, I believe that the United States has a moral obligation to help Laos heal."

The president framed his outreach to Laos as a finishing touch on his so-called rebalance policy in Asia, which is aimed at countering China's influence by engaging other countries in the region. He also sought to reassure the region that the U.S. wouldn't ease up on its engagement in Asia under his successor. America's interests in Asia, he said, "are not a passing fad."

"And in the United States -- across the political spectrum -- there is a widespread recognition that the Asia-Pacific will become even more important in the century ahead," Mr. Obama said. Many world leaders are gathered in Laos for a summit of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

The White House also has built closer relations with Myanmar as that country emerged from decades of military rule.

Mr. Obama began his visit by meeting with Laotian President Bounnhang Vorachith, where he acknowledged the "challenging history" between the two countries.

At a lunch following their meeting, Messrs. Obama and Bounnhang clinked glasses of red wine as the U.S. president proposed a toast to "the dignity and the future of the people of Laos" and a relationship "to make our two countries whole again."

During his three-day visit, Mr. Obama also is making the case for a cornerstone of his Asia policy that has stalled in Congress amid opposition from lawmakers in both parties: a new trade pact with Asia.

"The Trans-Pacific Partnership is a core pillar of America's rebalance to the Asia-Pacific," he said. "And so failure to move ahead with TPP wouldn't just have economic consequences, it would call into question America's leadership in this vital region."

The president was supposed to meet with Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte on Tuesday, but he canceled the meeting after the Philippine leader made disparaging comments. A Philippine government spokesman later said that Mr. Duterte "regrets that his remarks to the press have caused much controversy."

Mr. Obama said he would meet with survivors of explosions from bombs still scattered throughout Laos, a former French colony. "I know that the remnants of war continue to shatter lives," he said.

On Wednesday, he flies to Luang Prabang, northern Laos, where he will hold an event with young Southeast Asian entrepreneurs and activists and tour the Wat Xieng Thong Buddhist temple.

Ben Otto and Chun Han Wong contributed to this article.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Government aid; International relations-US; Leadership; Presidents
Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Laos
People:	Obama, Barack
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817049503
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-sets-laos-ties-on-new-track/docview/1817049503/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 367 of 500

Business News: Shipping Line to Sell Ports --- CMA CGM of France seeks up to $1 billion to lower debt burden; assets in U.S. on block

Venkat, P R; Paris, Costas . Venkat, P R; Paris, Costas.

ABSTRACT

French container-ship operator CMA CGM SA is looking to raise as much as $1 billion by selling port assets of Singapore's Neptune Orient Lines, including some in the U.S., to cut its debt, people familiar with the matter said Tuesday.

FULL TEXT

French container-ship operator CMA CGM SA is looking to raise as much as $1 billion by selling port assets of Singapore's Neptune Orient Lines, including some in the U.S., to cut its debt, people familiar with the matter said Tuesday.

CMA CGM, the world's third-largest shipping line by capacity, recently concluded its acquisition of NOL, paying $2.4 billion in cash for the container company. Including NOL's debt, the deal was valued at roughly $5 billion. As of June 30, CMA CGM's adjusted net debt stood at $8.2 billion.

The purchase kicked off a rare round of consolidation in the highly fragmented shipping industry, which is struggling to emerge from one of its longest slumps to date.

"The sale process should begin by late September or early October, when CMA CGM will reach out to potential bidders," one of the people said.

The terminals to be put up for sale include Dutch Harbor in Alaska and Global Gateway South in Los Angeles. NOL also operates terminals in China, Taiwan, Japan, Vietnam and Thailand.

CMA CGM didn't respond to a request for comment.

BNP Paribas and HSBC have been appointed to handle the sale. CMA CGM said Monday it will delist NOL from the Singapore Exchange.

Container shipping has been plagued by a capacity glut, with supply exceeding demand by 30%. Slowing trade between China and the West, along with anemic growth in Europe, has pushed operators into successive price wars, driving freight rates well below ships' operational costs over the past two years.

Shipping companies are fighting the downturn by merging or forming vessel-sharing agreements. Some have gone out of business.

Container ships move the vast majority of the world's manufactured goods, from electronics and toys to designer dresses and furniture.

South Korea's Hanjin Shipping Co., the world's seventh-largest shipping line, filed for bankruptcy last week, while local competitor Hyundai Merchant Marine Co. is trying to restructure its debt to stay viable.

Danish conglomerate A.P. Moeller-Maersk A/S posted a 90% decline in second-quarter net profit in August. Maersk

Line, its container-shipping unit, swung to a loss. The unit is cutting staff and pushed back deliveries of new ships, while the parent company is considering breaking up the group and possibly selling or listing some of the units, which also include oil and port operations.

"I expect combined losses of between $8 billion and $10 billion this year for the top 20 container" companies, said Lars Jensen, the chief executive of SeaIntel Consulting in Copenhagen. "Freight rates will stay below operational levels this year, and 2017 will mark the start of a slow and painful climb out of the slump."

Credit: By P.R. Venkat and Costas Paris

DETAILS

Subject:	Debt restructuring; Shipping industry; Ships; Ports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Debt restructuring Shipping industry Ports; Industry: 48831 : Port and Harbor Operations 48311 : Deep Sea, Coastal, and Great Lakes Water Transportation 48321 : Inland Water Transportation
Location:	France
Company / organization:	Name: CMA-CGM Group; NAICS: 483111
Classification:	48831: Port and Harbor Operations; 48311: Deep Sea, Coastal, and Great Lakes Water Transportation; 48321: Inland Water Transportation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1817049127

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-shipping-line-sell-ports-cma-cgm/docview/1817049127/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-03-08

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 368 of 500

Business News: Lego's Profit Declines As U.S. Growth Slows

Verbergt, Matthias . Verbergt, Matthias.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Amid that strong performance, however, Lego experienced supply shortages in the region, Lego's finance chief John Goodwin said in an interview. [...]the business was a little bit slow to start in 2016," he said.

FULL TEXT

Lego A/S, recently closing in on rival Mattel Inc.'s status as the world's biggest toy maker, has hit an unexpected stumbling block, reporting flat sales in the U.S. that cut first-half profits.

The Danish maker of colorful interlocking plastic bricks blamed supply-chain bottlenecks for the slowdown, and vowed to invest in new production capacity to fix them. On Tuesday, family-controlled Lego said net profit for the six months ended June 30 slipped to 3.49 billion Danish kroner ($522.8 million) from 3.55 billion kroner a year earlier.

Revenue increased 11% globally to 15.7 billion kroner.

Lego said sales in Asia -- its growth engine in recent years -- were still strong, as were European sales. Both regions accounted for sales increases of more than 10%.

The company said its overall sales growth was driven by its established lines of brick sets, including Lego City, Lego Ninjago and Lego Star Wars, as well as its new Lego Nexo Knights theme.

Lego isn't publicly listed and doesn't report quarterly results, nor did it break out detailed financial data on Tuesday. That makes it more difficult to determine just how significant the company's lack of sales growth in the U.S. might be for the rest of the year, or in the longer term.

Still, it was a sharp change from last year, when Lego recorded double-digit growth in the Americas, its second-biggest market after Europe. Amid that strong performance, however, Lego experienced supply shortages in the region, Lego's finance chief John Goodwin said in an interview.

"Therefore, the business was a little bit slow to start in 2016," he said.

Mr. Goodwin said Lego has built sufficient supply capabilities to address potential demand in the second half of the year, traditionally the time when toy makers rack up their biggest sales ahead of the holiday season. Lego is expanding its factory in Monterrey, Mexico, which mainly supplies the U.S. market, to potentially double its capacity.

Lego said it is also making "considerable investments in capacity and capabilities" in Asia, its fastest-growing market last year, with a new factory under construction in Jiaxing, China.

Mr. Goodwin said the new investments in people and infrastructure will have an impact on Lego's profit in the second half of 2016. Lego said it added 3,500 workers over the first six months of this year and currently employs 18,500 people.

The U.S. slowdown comes just a few months after family patriarch Kjeld Kirk Kristiansen stepped aside as vice chairman, passing the reins to his son, Thomas. That was part of a long succession process that included Lego bringing in its first nonfamily chief executive in 2004.

The slowdown puts Lego back on the defensive in the U.S. That market, while mature, is still highly lucrative, and, Mr. Goodwin said "very healthy."

Last year, Lego pulled close behind Mattel as the world's largest toy maker by annual sales, in part thanks to stumbles by Mattel with its Barbie line.

While Lego outsold its biggest competitors in the first half of the year, it has yet to beat Mattel in full-year sales, which include the busy holiday season.

Credit: By Matthias Verbergt

DETAILS

Subject:	Sales; Toy industry; Production capacity; Financial performance; Dolls
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sales Toy industry Production capacity Financial performance; Corporation: Mattel Inc; Industry: 33993 : Doll, Toy, and Game Manufacturing

Company / organization:	Name: Mattel Inc; NAICS: 336991, 339930; Name: Lego AS; NAICS: 339930
Classification:	33993: Doll, Toy, and Game M anufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817048886
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-legos-profit-declines-as-u-s-growth/docview/1817048886/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Investors are now paying for the privilege of lending money to European companies, a fresh sign of how aggressive central-bank policy is upending conventional patterns in finance. ---

FULL TEXT

Investors are now paying for the privilege of lending money to European companies, a fresh sign of how aggressive central-bank policy is upending conventional patterns in finance.

ITT shut amid a U.S. crackdown on for-profit colleges, potentially leaving taxpayers on the hook for hundreds of millions in student loans.

Canada's Enbridge agreed to buy Houston pipeline firm Spectra Energy for about $28 billion in stock.

Activist investor Ackman disclosed that he has acquired a 9.9% stake in restaurant chain Chipotle.

OPEC is unlikely to make aggressive efforts to curb output when it meets in Algiers later this month.

Many oil analysts see a price rally ending amid easing demand from drivers and anemic economic growth.

U.S. stocks rose, with the Dow industrials gaining 46.16 points to 18538.12. The Nasdaq hit a record.

Fox settled a suit brought by former news anchor Carlson, who accused Ailes of sexually harassing her.

Morningstar's founder is stepping down as CEO after over 30 years heading the mutual-fund data firm.

A judge agreed to bring South Korea's Hanjin Shipping under the umbrella of U.S. bankruptcy law.

DETAILS

Subject:	Student loans; Bankruptcy laws
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bankruptcy laws
Location:	Canada; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries--OPEC; NAICS: 813910; Name: Spectra Energy; NAICS: 486210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	Un ited States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817026860
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1817026860/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 370 of 500

U.S. News: Percentage of Uninsured Remains at a Low

Radnofsky, Louise . Radnofsky, Louise.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Separately, the figures also show a notable uptick in people enrolled in a high-deductible health plan, which have become popular offerings by employers and individual insurers in recent years as the enrollee bears a greater share of the costs in exchange for lower premiums.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The number of uninsured people in the U.S. remained at a historic low in early 2016, according to a federal survey that found 8.6% of respondents without health coverage at the time of the interview.

That translates to about 27.3 million people who lacked medical insurance when they were asked about it between January and March as part of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's National Health Interview Survey. The previous survey, covering the whole of 2015, had put the figure at 9.1%, or about 1.3 million more people. CDC officials said the latest reduction wasn't statistically significant.

For supporters of the 2010 Affordable Care Act, the data show the law has had an impact in its stated goal of lowering the number of people without coverage, through a combination of public and private health insurance. The uninsured rate, according to the CDC survey, stood at 16% in 2010, the year the law was passed, and 14.4% in 2013, the year before its main provisions were implemented.

Skeptics typically argue that the results are lackluster compared with the law's costs.

The 2016 analysis was based on a sample of 24,317 people, CDC's National Center for Health Statistics said.

Other figures from the survey released Wednesday show the challenges still facing the individual health insurance market after the broad changes brought about by the health law, chiefly its requirement that insurers sell to everyone at the same price regardless of their medical history or risk.

Health plans say premiums will continue to rise unless the number and makeup of enrollees change significantly, with more young, healthy individuals signing up for coverage to balance the costly claims incurred by older and less healthy people who currently have it.

But the increase in the past 12 months in the number of people using HealthCare.gov or a state equivalent to obtain individual private coverage wasn't statistically significant, the agency said.

And the young consumers prized by insurers are almost twice as likely to be uninsured as older ones. Some 15.9% of 25-to-34-year-olds were uninsured in early 2016, the survey found. Among 45-to-64-year-olds, only 8.1% were uninsured.

Hispanic adults aged 18 to 64 were significantly more likely to be uninsured, with 24.5% of those interviewed reporting they lacked a health plan at the time of the interview.

For white respondents the figure was 8.4%, while among black respondents 13% said they didn't have coverage.

Separately, the figures also show a notable uptick in people enrolled in a high-deductible health plan, which have become popular offerings by employers and individual insurers in recent years as the enrollee bears a greater share of the costs in exchange for lower premiums.

Around 40% of people under age 65 were in such a plan when interviewed earlier this year, the CDC said. That proportion has steadily climbed from 25.3% in 2010.

Credit: By Louise Radnofsky

DETAILS

Subject:	Uninsured people; Insurance coverage; Insurance premiums; Health insurance; Interviews; Disease control
Business indexing term:	Subject: Uninsured people Insurance coverage Insurance premiums Health insurance
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Centers for Disease Control & Prevention--CDC; NAICS: 923120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817026855
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-percentage-uninsured-remains-at-low/docview/1817026855/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 371 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous. Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Trump and Mrs. Clinton haven't released their public schedules for Sunday but both campaigns confirmed they will halt television ads for the anniversary, maintaining a tradition of avoiding partisan presidential politics on 9/11.

FULL TEXT

MANHATTAN

No Ground Zero Visit

Set for Clinton, Trump

Neither Hillary Clinton nor Donald Trump is slated to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks with a visit to Ground Zero.

"We have not heard from either presidential candidate, nor the president of the United States, that they will be attending," said Michael Frazier of the National September 11 Memorial & Museum.

Mr. Trump and Mrs. Clinton haven't released their public schedules for Sunday but both campaigns confirmed they will halt television ads for the anniversary, maintaining a tradition of avoiding partisan presidential politics on 9/11.

Memorial officials have said they didn't extend formal invitations to either candidate or to President Barack Obama, in keeping with past practice, but would welcome a visit from them.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK CITY

Museum Fills Void

With a New Director

The former head of El Museo del Barrio, Jorge Daniel Veneciano, is moving across town to join the Museum of Arts and Design.

Mr. Veneciano will start on Oct. 3, museum officials said Tuesday.

His appointment as director fills a leadership void at the museum, which has undergone a number of transitions. Once focused on craft, the museum has embraced a more multidisciplinary approach, presenting the work of artists, designers and artisans.

The museum's previous director, Glenn Adamson, stepped down earlier this year after 2 1/2 years in the role.

Before that, the museum was led by Holly Hotchner. During her 16-year tenure she oversaw a significant makeover that included both a name change -- from the American Craft Museum -- and a 2008 move to the institution's current home on Columbus Circle.

-- Jennifer Smith

NEW YORK STATE

Schools Have to Test

Their Water for Lead

Schools in New York state will be required to test their drinking water for lead contamination under legislation signed Tuesday by Gov. Andrew Cuomo.

The law requires school districts to report test results to local and state officials and parents. Schools found to have high levels of lead will have to develop plans to fix the problem.

Exposure to the toxic chemical can cause significant neurological problems for young children.

Elementary schools must complete the tests by the end of this month. Schools for older children have until the end of October. Schools that can show they have already conducted tests can apply for waivers.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK

Oyster Project Uses

Porcelain From Toilets

New York City is placing 50,000 oysters in Jamaica Bay on beds made with the porcelain from 5,000 recycled toilets.

Mayor Bill de Blasio and the Department of Environmental Protection said Tuesday that the project is the largest single installation of breeding oysters in New York City.

The project will buffer New York from storms while cleaning the water and creating wildlife habitat, said the northeastern director of the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation. The project is being done in partnership with the Harbor School's Billion Oyster Project.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Public officials; Museums; Political campaigns; School districts; Oysters
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Industry: 71211 : Museums 61111 : Elementary and Secondary Schools
--------------------------------	--

Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack; Veneciano, Jorge Daniel; Adamson, Glenn; Cuomo, Andrew M; Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	71211: Museums; 61111: Elementary and Secondary Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817025852
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1817025852/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A substantial bloc of GOP-leaning voters has declined so far to back either major-party candidate, suggesting a possible opportunity for Trump.

FULL TEXT

A $400 million payment to Iran in January was followed by two more cash shipments totaling another $1.3 billion, the administration told lawmakers.

A substantial bloc of GOP-leaning voters has declined so far to back either major-party candidate, suggesting a possible opportunity for Trump.

Trump announced support from ex-military officials as he highlighted his call to rebuild the armed forces.

Clinton turned up the pressure on Trump to release his tax returns.

Immigrants to the U.S. from China and India are outpacing Mexican arrivals in most regions, a marked reversal from a decade ago.

Obama recognized the U.S.'s secret war in Laos from decades ago and pledged more aid to clear bombs.

Philippine leader Duterte backed off after an anti-U.S. rant led to the cancellation of a meeting with Obama.

The eurozone economy grew more slowly in the first half of the year than previously estimated.

Afghan forces ended a Taliban siege of a Kabul compound, shooting dead the last of the attackers.

A British judge sentenced an Islamist cleric blamed for radicalizing young Muslims to 5 1/2 years in prison.

DETAILS

Location:	Kabul Afghanistan; United States--US; Iran; India; China; Laos; Afghanistan
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Taliban; NAICS: 8139 40
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024402
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1817024402/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2021-09-15

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 373 of 500

U.S. News: Tax Proposal Stirs Debate --- Critics question using public bonds to support a planned Baltimore project

Calvert, Scott . Calvert, Scott.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Officials in Kansas City, Mo., said they take a more conservative approach to TIF deals after tax revenue shortfalls in a downtown entertainment district required city taxpayers to use more than $34 million from the city's $550 million general fund in a recent three-year span, with tens of millions more expected to be paid in coming years.

FULL TEXT

BALTIMORE -- A bid to use more than $500 million in future property taxes to help finance the transformation of a 260-acre peninsula here is fueling a renewed debate about the benefits and drawbacks of diverting tax revenue away from schools and public safety.

The financing method, called tax-increment financing, or TIF, is staging an uneven rebound nationally after a dip that began in the 2007-09 recession. Under Armour Inc. Chief Executive Kevin Plank plans a $5.5 billion mini-city, anchored by a new headquarters for the growing Baltimore-based apparel company.

His development firm is asking the city to approve $535 million in bonds to pay for roads, parks and other public infrastructure on the underused industrial land in South Baltimore. Work would span 25 years, with new property taxes generated by the project earmarked to repay the bonds over 40 years.

"If there was ever a case to be made for a city that needs an economic boost, it's Baltimore," said Marc Weller, president of Mr. Plank's Sagamore Development Co., which projects 36,000 jobs on the Port Covington peninsula at full build-out, including 10,000 at Under Armour. An outside analysis projects about 25,000.

Critics, including community activists and the American Civil Liberties Union, want the City Council to reject the current plan. Among their complaints: It won't benefit the entire city or ensure lower-income people can afford the thousands of planned homes.

Other communities around the country in recent years have put tax-increment financing under a magnifying glass.

Chicago formalized the process by which city TIF funds are distributed, and posts financial figures for the array of TIF districts that collectively have a $1.5 billion balance.

In Florida this year, a Miami-Dade County grand jury issued a report claiming many local redevelopment agencies funded through TIF money have "failed miserably" to tackle affordable-housing shortages, even though eliminating "slums" is part of their mission.

Officials in Kansas City, Mo., said they take a more conservative approach to TIF deals after tax revenue shortfalls in a downtown entertainment district required city taxpayers to use more than $34 million from the city's $550 million general fund in a recent three-year span, with tens of millions more expected to be paid in coming years.

Backers of tax-increment financing say using future property taxes lets local governments avoid taxing residents or tapping general funds while still paying for infrastructure. Supporters also say TIF can be key to making projects feasible -- Port Covington's developer will see a 9.2% internal rate of return with the TIF, and a loss of 1.9% without it, the outside analysis found -- and that new jobs and related economic spinoff provide immediate benefits.

Mr. Plank's advisers say he has made a big gamble on Port Covington, spending over $100 million to buy property there.

Critics say diverting tax revenue for decades means those dollars can't pay for essential services like schools. They also say it can be hard to know if public support is truly needed or merely pads a developer's bottom line.

Port Covington would rank among the highest-dollar TIF deals in the U.S., said Greg LeRoy, executive director of Good Jobs First, a nonprofit group that has criticized tax-increment financing practices.

Charly Carter, executive director of Maryland Working Families, criticizes plans to set aside just 10% of Port Covington homes for affordable housing and says maximum income levels would be too high.

Sagamore officials say they will lower the top income level if they secure low-income housing tax credits.

Although the developer wants $535 million in tax-increment financing, nearly $660 million in public bonds would have to be issued, counting a reserve fund and capitalized interest. The developer also seeks $574 million in state and federal funding.

Sagamore's allies include a business group and South Baltimore neighborhoods that could receive $39 million over 30 years under a community benefits agreement.

(See related article: "Plans Target Infrastructure" -- WSJ September 7, 2016)

Credit: By Scott Calvert

DETAILS

Subject:	Infrastructure; Tax increment financing; Tax revenues; Low income housing credit; Affordable housing; Property taxes; Site planning
Business indexing term:	Subject: Infrastructure Tax increment financing Tax revenues Low income housing credit Affordable housing Property taxes; Corporation: Under Armour Inc
Location:	Baltimore Maryland; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: American Civil Liberties Union--ACLU; NAICS: 541110, 813311; Name: Under Armour Inc; NAICS: 315 250
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024330
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-tax-proposal-stirs-debate-critics/docview/1817024330/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 374 of 500

U.S. News: Graffiti of Maine Governor In KKK Garb Fuels Uproar

Levitz, Jennifer . Levitz, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Portland, frustrated by a relentless cycle of removing graffiti only to see it return, has for more than a decade provided the community with a large, publicly sanctioned graffiti wall, at a wastewater treatment plant along a recreation path.

FULL TEXT

Officials in Portland, Maine, weighed free speech versus controversial street art on Tuesday as new graffiti on a public wall depicted the state's embattled governor as a Ku Klux Klansman.

Portland, frustrated by a relentless cycle of removing graffiti only to see it return, has for more than a decade provided the community with a large, publicly sanctioned graffiti wall, at a wastewater treatment plant along a recreation path.

But the latest installation, which appears to have cropped up in recent days, is creating quite a buzz: The mural, stretching across the roughly 100-foot wall, shows Republican Gov. Paul LePage in a white hood and robe, emblazoned with a red Klan insignia.

Painted alongside the image are the words "racist, homophobe, moron." A fourth word, "governor," is slashed out in red paint.

While city spokeswoman Jessica Grondin said earlier on Tuesday that the Portland police department "does not police matters of free speech," she later said officials had received complaints and were exploring the potential legal and cultural implications of removing the graffiti.

Portland's Democratic Mayor Ethan Strimling said Tuesday that he wanted the graffiti taken down, she said.

"I think he felt it crossed the line," Ms. Grondin said. A final action could also depend on how the full City Council feels, she said.

"Tomorrow, we might all wake up, and it might be gone," she said, referring to the fact that it could be painted over by another graffiti artist.

Mr. LePage apologized last week for leaving a profanity-riddled phone message for a Democratic lawmaker whom the governor initially believed had called him racist.

Mr. LePage also suggested he would like to challenge the lawmaker to an armed duel.

The lawmaker said he called Mr. LePage's recent remarks, linking African-Americans and Hispanics to drug sales in Maine, racially charged.

Facing calls for his resignation from state Democratic leaders and criticism from some in the state GOP leadership, Mr. LePage said he wouldn't resign but would seek spiritual guidance.

Credit: By Jennifer Levitz

DETAILS

Subject:	Freedom of speech; Governors; Graffiti; Political leadership
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Maine; United States--US
People:	LePage, Paul
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations; 92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1817024295

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-graffiti-maine-governor-kkk-garb-fuels/docview/1817024295/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 375 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The veteran central banker -- he is the longest-serving regional Fed bank president -- and Kansas City Fed President Esther George are scheduled to testify Wednesday before the House Committee on Financial Services' Monetary Policy and Trade subcommittee.

FULL TEXT

PENNSYLVANIA

Judge Sets Trial

Date in Cosby Case

A Pennsylvania judge said Tuesday that comedian Bill Cosby will stand trial on sexual assault charges next June, as his defense attorneys and prosecutors continue to spar over what evidence a jury should be allowed to hear.

Mr. Cosby, 79 years old, appeared in court outside Philadelphia, as his lawyers are seeking to exclude two potentially key pieces of evidence in his criminal case stemming from allegations that he drugged and molested a woman in his home in 2004. These include testimony he gave in a 2005 civil case and a phone call recorded that year by the mother of the alleged victim in the case.

Meanwhile, prosecutors filed a motion Tuesday asking the judge to allow 13 other women who have made allegations of sexual assault against Mr. Cosby to testify at trial. Mr. Cosby has denied the allegations.

Judge Steven O'Neill of Montgomery County Court of Common Pleas set a tentative trial date of June 5, 2017.

The Montgomery County District Attorney charged Mr. Cosby in December with three felony counts of aggravated indecent assault. Mr. Cosby has pleaded not guilty to the charges.

-- Kris Maher

FEDERAL RESERVE

Fed's Lacker Backs

Bank's Structure

Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond President Jeffrey Lacker is set to tell a congressional panel Wednesday the U.S. central bank's structure is effective, and that he is reluctant to see it altered in any major way.

In an interview with The Wall Street Journal, Mr. Lacker said the U.S. central bank -- with its Washington-based board of governors and 12 quasiprivate, quasigovernmental regional banks across the country -- "works well."

The Federal Reserve, created more than a century ago, might seem like "an archaic structure, but the choices and trade-offs they were facing then are still relevant choices and trade-offs now. Our federated structure reflected a desire to ensure that the diversity of views were reflected in monetary policy," he said.

Mr. Lacker spoke to the Journal on Thursday in his office overlooking the James River, ahead of speech in which he argued the Fed was increasingly likely to face trouble if it doesn't raise short-term interest rates soon.

The veteran central banker -- he is the longest-serving regional Fed bank president -- and Kansas City Fed President Esther George are scheduled to testify Wednesday before the House Committee on Financial Services' Monetary Policy and Trade subcommittee. They will discuss the structure of their banks and "how it relates to the conduct of monetary policy and economic performance."

The Fed in recent years has faced critics from the right and left who would like to change the way the central bank operates.

-- Michael S. Derby

FLORIDA

NASA to Chase

Asteroid for Samples

NASA is launching a spacecraft to the exotic black rock named Bennu, vacuuming up handfuls of gravel from the surface, and then delivering the dirt all the way back to Earth.

The mission will take seven years, from Thursday's planned liftoff from Cape Canaveral, Fla., to the return of the asteroid samples in 2023, and cover a 4 billion miles through space.

It promises to be the biggest cosmic bounty since the Apollo moon rocks in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Sex crimes; Trials; Monetary policy; Banking industry; Central banks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Monetary policy Banking industry Central banks; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	United States--US
People:	George, Esther
Company / organization:	Name: House of Representatives-Financial Services, Committee on; NAICS: 921120
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024269
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1817024269/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 376 of 500

Business News: Hanjin Gains U.S. Protection From Creditors

Corrigan, Tom . Corrigan, Tom.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the judge's order doesn't guarantee that the ships' cargo -- which includes children's toys, tires, clothes and computers -- will make it to shore and onto store shelves soon. Since the carrier filed for bankruptcy in Seoul last week, ports, cargo handlers, truckers and railways have refused to touch Hanjin's containers, fearing they won't get paid.

FULL TEXT

Container ships operated by South Korea's Hanjin Shipping Co., now stranded at sea, soon should be able to dock in U.S. ports, but it remains unclear if the company can afford to pay the army of workers needed to unload the ships.

After a hearing Tuesday, U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Sherwood agreed to bring Hanjin under the umbrella of U.S. bankruptcy law, temporarily preventing creditors in the U.S. from seizing assets.

But the judge's order doesn't guarantee that the ships' cargo -- which includes children's toys, tires, clothes and computers -- will make it to shore and onto store shelves soon. Since the carrier filed for bankruptcy in Seoul last week, ports, cargo handlers, truckers and railways have refused to touch Hanjin's containers, fearing they won't get paid.

"The logistical issues here are pretty substantial," Judge Sherwood said at Hanjin's debut appearance in U.S. Bankruptcy Court. "There's a lot of manpower, time and expense that goes into bringing a cargo ship into port and unloading it."

Hanjin, one of the world's largest shipping companies, sought chapter 15 bankruptcy protection Friday in Newark, N.J., just days after filing for the equivalent of chapter 11 in South Korea.

Once approved by a judge, chapter 15 gives a foreign company the benefits of U.S. bankruptcy law, including the so-called automatic stay that halts lawsuits and otherwise prevents interference from creditors while the company focuses on restructuring at home.

"This is a very, very key aspect of the company's rehabilitation plan," Hanjin's bankruptcy lawyer Ilana Volkov told the judge Tuesday.

Hanjin's bankruptcy has caused widespread disruptions in freight shipments, creating a logistics nightmare for many suppliers. The refusal of ports to handle cargo, for fear they won't be paid, has stranded nearly 80 Hanjin ships and at least half a million containers at sea. Many containers that have been unloaded have yet to be handed off to the next link in the supply chain, lawyers for suppliers said Tuesday.

Lawyers for Hanjin, terminal operators, suppliers and others on Tuesday said they hoped to arrive at agreements that will address some of these issues in the next few days. Another bankruptcy court hearing on the matter is slated for Friday morning.

Hanjin's parent company Hanjin Group already has agreed to put up 100 billion won ($90 million) to help resolve the cargo crisis, but that hasn't been enough to fully assuage concerns from both suppliers and cargo handlers.

On Tuesday, Ms. Volkov said Hanjin is aware of the problems and "working feverishly" to address them.

Coming months are critical to retailers preparing for Black Friday and the holiday-shopping season, and many companies appeared in court Tuesday to urge the judge to help get ships into port.

In-Soo Nam and Patrick Fitzgerald contributed to this article.

Credit: By Tom Corrigan

DETAILS

Subject:	Shipping industry; Container ships; Bankruptcy reorganization; Court hearings & proceedings; Federal courts; Ports; Bankruptcy laws
-----------------	---

Business indexing term: Subject: Shipping industry Container ships Bankruptcy reorganization Ports Bankruptcy laws; Industry: 48311 : Deep Sea, Coastal, and Great Lakes Water Transportation 48321 : Inland Water Transportation 92211 : Courts 48831 : Port and Harbor Operations

Location: United States--US; South Korea

Company / organization: Name: Hanjin Shipping Co; NAICS: 483111

Classification: 48311: Deep Sea, Coastal, and Great Lakes Water Transportation; 48321: Inland Water Transportation; 92211: Courts; 48831: Port and Harbor Operations

Publication title: Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages: B.3

Publication year: 2016

Publication date: Sep 7, 2016

Publisher: Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication: New York, N.Y.

Country of publication: United States

Publication subject: Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN: 00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1817024256

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hanjin-gains-u-s-protection/docview/1817024256/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-03-08

Database: ProQuest Central

City Won't End J'Ouvert --- Mayor says violence at annual festival can be curbed; police call for community help

Gay, Mara; Shallwani, Pervaiz . Gay, Mara; Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

New York's event takes place in Brooklyn's Crown Heights neighborhood every Labor Day, in the predawn hours leading up to the West Indian Day Parade.

FULL TEXT

Mayor Bill de Blasio said Tuesday that New York City wouldn't try to put a stop to J'Ouvert, an annual predawn celebration that ended in the fatal shooting of two people over the weekend in Brooklyn.

The decision came a day after Mr. de Blasio said "all options were on the table" regarding the future of the festival, which precedes the West Indian Day Parade each year and has long been marred by violence.

"J'Ouvert will continue. It's an event that is very important to the community and about a quarter million people came," the mayor said Tuesday.

The New York Police Department had doubled its presence for this year's event after an aide to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo was killed by a stray bullet at last year's festival.

Despite the latest deaths, city and police officials said they were confident they could bring the event under control with the community's help.

"Police cannot do these parades on our own," Police Commissioner William Bratton said. "We rely a lot on the communities self-policing many of the activities at these events."

The NYPD said Tuesday it had arrested Reginald Moise, 20 years old, in the death of Tiarah Poyau, one of two people killed during the J'Ouvert festivities early Monday.

Mr. Moise was charged with second-degree murder. He was awaiting arraignment and couldn't be reached for comment. It wasn't clear if an attorney had been assigned to his case.

In an interview with investigators, Mr. Moise said he didn't know his gun was loaded, said NYPD Chief of Detectives Robert Boyce.

Ms. Poyau, a 22-year-old St. John's University student, was out with three friends when she was struck by a bullet around 4:15 a.m. She died at NYC Health + Hospitals/Kings County.

About four hours later, officers arrested Mr. Moise for drunken driving after they stopped him in Brooklyn as he was riding around on an illegal three-wheel vehicle, Chief Boyce said. Mr. Moise had a cut hand wrapped in a flag.

A preliminary investigation determined that shortly after the shooting, Mr. Moise went to a nearby home to drop off a gun, Chief Boyce said. While there, Mr. Moise fired two shots and cut his hand on a broken mirror, Chief Boyce said.

Shell casings from that crime scene matched the one from Ms. Poyau's killing, Chief Boyce said. The gun was left behind and is being tested for DNA to see if it matches Mr. Moise, he said.

Police were still working to determine the details of the death of 17-year-old Tyreke Borel, who was shot once in the chest in a separate incident.

J'Ouvert is celebrated across the Caribbean and in Caribbean communities in the U.S. and elsewhere. New York's event takes place in Brooklyn's Crown Heights neighborhood every Labor Day, in the predawn hours leading up to the West Indian Day Parade.

There have been five killings, eight shooting incidents and one stabbing at the event since 2014, NYPD officials said.

Mr. de Blasio said he was confident the NYPD would find a way to quell the violence at the festival, something he said it had done over the years at the St. Patrick's Day and the Puerto Rican Day parades.

Those events, he said, "all had a history of disorder and violence and they all had to be brought under control."

"We're going to do that here, too," the mayor said.

Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams, a former NYPD captain, said trying to end J'Ouvert would be akin to canceling the Fourth of July.

He noted that the celebrations, which include barbecues and block parties, had taken place for decades before the city issued a permit for the event for the first time this year.

"They still will do J'Ouvert. They did J'Ouvert without the permit for years before this," Mr. Adams said.

"Those who are calling to end J'Ouvert because it would stop violence, that's not realistic," he said. "J'Ouvert is not causing violence, illegal guns are causing violence."

Mr. de Blasio said the festival was part of a long tradition for many New Yorkers.

"People are going to be celebrating," he said. "Our job is to control that and make it safe."

(See related article: "City News: J'Ouvert Poses Special Challenges" -- WSJ Sept. 7, 2016)

(See related letters: "Feedback Friday: Different Takes / The People Behind Successful Students" -- WSJ Sept. 23, 2016)

DETAILS

Subject:	Violent crime; Criminal investigations; Festivals; Murders & murder attempts; Violence; Parades; Shootings; Stabbings
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	de Blasio, Bill
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024221
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-wont-end-jouvert-mayor-says-violence-at/docview/1817024221/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 378 of 500

Facebook's 'Trending' Fix Has Own Flaws

Wells, Georgia . Wells, Georgia.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"Choosing what to highlight in the trending section, whether by algorithm or humans, is an editorial process," said Zeynep Tufekci, an associate professor at the University of North Carolina who studies the social impact of technology.

FULL TEXT

At Facebook Inc., the algorithm doesn't always know best.

In late August, the social network put an algorithm in charge of its "trending" feature, selecting the most popular topics, articles and keywords. The change came after allegations in the spring that the contract workers who curated the news headline feature altered which articles appeared for political reasons.

Yet in recent days, the "trending" lists have appeared more flawed than when humans were in charge. There have been false stories, misidentified keywords, and celebrity gossip in the place of more serious news.

"This doesn't seem like an appropriate solution," said Jason Turcotte, assistant professor of communication at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona. "Algorithms don't necessarily respond to news values or journalistic ethics. Algorithms respond to keywords, search terms and trends."

In doing away with the team of curators who had run "trending," Facebook redefined what it perceives as news. It modified the guidelines for the feature, giving more importance to smaller publications. "It's intentionally broad so we can be inclusive of a wide range of interests," Facebook said in the guidelines for the staff, published in late August.

Facebook has ambitions to use the algorithm to expand "trending."

"A more algorithmically driven process allows us to scale Trending to cover more topics and make it available to more people globally over time," Facebook said in a statement last month.

Several former curators now wonder if Facebook will simply get rid of the feature.

"If Facebook wanted to scale the trending module, they would have waited until the product was ready," said a former news curator for Facebook who left prior to the changes.

Facebook didn't respond to requests for comment about the future of "trending." There are a few people still involved with monitoring the feature.

The recent "trending" fumbles show how Facebook grapples with its role as a tech company providing a significant amount of news. "We are a technology company, not a media company," Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg said on Aug. 29 during a town-hall meeting broadcast on the site.

The company was stung by the criticism that "trending" was biased, as alleged in a May report by tech blog Gizmodo. Facebook denied it was biased.

Relying on an algorithm distances the company from what appears on the site -- though the algorithm itself is written by humans.

"Choosing what to highlight in the trending section, whether by algorithm or humans, is an editorial process," said Zeynep Tufekci, an associate professor at the University of North Carolina who studies the social impact of technology. "Catching misinformation, fake news or even incitement are journalistic decisions."

Facebook has become a major source of news for its 1.71 billion users. "Trending" selects topics if a lot of people are talking about them, or if there is a sharp increase in popularity over a short period. It is distinct from the main news feed, where users and media organizations also share news stories.

Other tech companies also rely on algorithms to surface news. Alphabet Inc.'s Google News uses hundreds of signals to compile and rank stories. The company aims to surface "quality" stories, it says, in part by selecting articles that are cited by other news organizations. Google doesn't write its own headlines; it only uses information provided by the news organizations.

When Facebook launched "trending" in 2014, it set guidelines for its team of contractors to select news stories. A topic had to be mentioned in five of the top 10 national news outlets, including The Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, Fox News and BuzzFeed, to be considered important. The contractors filtered out irrelevant topics, and wrote headlines and summaries based on their judgment of the topic's common themes across news outlets, according to the former curator.

Over the summer, Facebook reduced the responsibilities of the human curators, instructing them to focus on accepting or rejecting the topics the algorithm picked, the former curator said. The curators rejected many of the selected topics because they were unsuitable, the person added.

Credit: By Georgia Wells

DETAILS

Subject:

Keywords; Algorithms; Social networks; Curators

Business indexing term:	Subject: Social networks
People:	Zuckerberg, Mark
Company / organization:	Name: Facebook Inc; NAICS: 516210, 518210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024164
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/facebooks-trending-fix-has-own-flaws/docview/1817024164/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: Security Council Denounces North Korea Missile Launch

Fassihi, Farnaz . Fassihi, Farnaz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In March, the Security Council adopted a resolution imposing economic sanctions on North Korea in response to a series of missile launches and disputed claims by North Korea that it had tested a hydrogen bomb.

FULL TEXT

UNITED NATIONS -- The U.N. Security Council condemned on Tuesday North Korea's latest ballistic missile launches that landed near the coast of Japan a day earlier and threatened to take further action if violations continue.

The statement, issued hours after an emergency Security Council meeting called by the U.S., Japan and South Korea, signaled a sense of urgency and rare unity among council members on how to respond to world challenges. The council's previous statement condemning North Korea's actions took weeks of diplomatic wrangling with China.

Any further action, such as harsher sanctions, would again test the collaboration of the U.S. and China, both veto-holding members of the council. The U.S. has favored swift and tough reaction to North Korea's military provocations.

President Barack Obama said earlier Tuesday that the U.S. would work to intensify U.N. sanctions on North Korea in response to the missile launches, a move he said would involve closing loopholes in existing sanctions.

"North Korea needs to know that provocations will only invite more pressure and further deepen its isolation," he said, after meeting with South Korean President Park Geun-hye in Laos.

China has been reluctant to approve any measures that could destabilize North Korea and potentially send refugees across its borders. China's ambassador to the U.N. didn't comment after the meeting.

Mr. Obama also said the U.S. is committed to a missile-defense system for South Korea. Seoul said in July that it would deploy a missile-defense system from the U.S. by the end of 2017, a move China opposes.

North Korea has violated Security Council resolutions 22 times this year, according to U.S. Ambassador Samantha Power. North Korea launched the latest round of ballistic missiles on Monday as China was hosting a summit of leaders from the Group of 20 nations. The missiles traveled about 600 miles and landed within 200 miles of Japan's coast.

In March, the Security Council adopted a resolution imposing economic sanctions on North Korea in response to a series of missile launches and disputed claims by North Korea that it had tested a hydrogen bomb.

That resolution put restrictions on shipments by sea, land and air, and on banking and trade with North Korea. It banned the sale of weapons, small arms and most fuel. It targeted individuals involved in the country's weapons or nuclear program.

At the time, the resolution was hailed as one of the most comprehensive sanctions against a member state. North Korea's recent actions suggest that it has done little to deter the country from expanding its missile program.

Credit: By Farnaz Fassihi

DETAILS

Subject:	Missile defense; Nuclear weapons; Diplomatic & consular services; Councils; Economic summit conferences; Sanctions; Missiles
Business indexing term:	Subject: Economic summit conferences Sanctions; Industry: 92812 : International Affairs
Location:	China; United States--US; Japan; North Korea; South Korea
People:	Obama, Barack; Power, Samantha
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110
Classification:	92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1817024152
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-security-council-denounces-north-korea/docview/1817024152/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 380 of 500

Business News: Shale Driller EOG To Buy Yates Petroleum

Cook, Lynn; Stynes, Tess . Cook, Lynn; Stynes, Tess.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Joining the companies' acreage together will allow EOG to drill longer horizontal wells, ultimately unlocking more crude oil.

FULL TEXT

EOG Resources Inc., one of the most prolific shale drillers in the U.S., agreed to acquire privately owned Yates Petroleum Corp. for $2.34 billion in a deal that expands its presence from Texas and New Mexico to Colorado and Wyoming.

EOG management has famously shunned deals in recent years, saying the company's best prospects for growth came directly through the drill-bit by tapping new oil-and-gas wells. But Yates, one of the nation's biggest privately held oil firms, has land in prime oil basins that is too good to pass up, Bill Thomas, EOG's chief executive, told investors Tuesday.

Houston-based EOG's shares, up 32% so far this year, rose 6.7% to $94.83.

Yates, which is controlled by descendants of Martin Yates Jr., an early wildcatter who helped discover New Mexico's oil reserves, has been the target of multiple corporate inquiries over the years. It has assembled vast acreage in some of the sweetest oil drilling prospects. Even though Yates's oil production is relatively low, the company's tracts, combined with EOG's cutting-edge technology, will be transformational to the company and the development of several big fields, Mr. Thomas said.

"This really isn't about getting bigger. It's about getting better," he said.

Much of the acreage that Yates controls borders EOG's existing leases in places like the Delaware Basin in West Texas, which has emerged as one of the hottest drilling spots even during a two-year-long oil bust. Joining the companies' acreage together will allow EOG to drill longer horizontal wells, ultimately unlocking more crude oil.

Credit: By Lynn Cook and Tess Stynes

DETAILS

Subject:	Acquisitions & mergers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Acquisitions & mergers
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Yates Petroleum; NAICS: 211120; Name: EOG Resources Inc; NAICS: 211120, 213112
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1817024102
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-shale-driller-eog-buy-yates/docview/1817024102/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 381 of 500

World News: Philippine Leader Says He Regrets Anti-U.S. Rant

Moss, Trefor . Moss, Trefor.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Ben Rhodes, a deputy national-security adviser, said the White House canceled the meeting because the attention on Mr. Duterte's comments would have distracted from a substantive agenda.

FULL TEXT

MANILA -- An anti-American rant by Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte, which he later recanted, cast a shadow on Washington's bid to bolster ties with Asian allies such as Manila to help offset China's growing might.

President Barack Obama canceled a planned meeting with Mr. Duterte in Laos on Tuesday after the outburst, which strained ties with one of Washington's oldest Asian allies. Although Mr. Duterte expressed regret for his remarks, the U.S.-Philippine tensions contrasted with Mr. Duterte's apparent determination to improve ties with China.

Mr. Duterte, who took office in June, had been scheduled to hold his first meeting with Mr. Obama at a regional summit in Laos. But before leaving Manila on Monday he reacted angrily to reporters' questions about how he would respond if Mr. Obama expressed concern about the deaths of more than 2,000 people in an antidrug campaign being waged by Mr. Duterte's administration.

Mr. Duterte blamed the U.S., which ran the Philippines as a colony until 1946, for the country's problems. Switching from English to Tagalog in an aside, he used the phrase "son of a bitch," interpreted by some international press as an insult directed at Mr. Obama.

The White House said the bilateral meeting was off, and Mr. Duterte softened his tone on Monday night. "I do not want to quarrel with [Mr. Obama]. He's the most powerful president of any country on the planet," Mr. Duterte said after arriving in Laos. He blamed State Department officials for needling him by continually raising the issue of human rights, which Mr. Duterte says matters less to him than curbing crime.

On Tuesday, a Philippine government spokesman said both sides decided to postpone the meeting to a later date but that Mr. Duterte "continues to value the alliance with the United States."

Mr. Duterte separately issued a statement accepting blame for the postponement and regretting that "it came across as a personal attack on the U.S. president." He said the Philippines aims to chart an independent foreign policy "while promoting closer ties with all nations, especially the U.S."

The White House tried to play down the public spat, saying Tuesday that Mr. Obama probably would speak with Mr. Duterte informally during meetings at the Association of Southeast Asian Nations summit, and stressed the close relations between the U.S. and the Philippines.

Ben Rhodes, a deputy national-security adviser, said the White House canceled the meeting because the attention on Mr. Duterte's comments would have distracted from a substantive agenda. "The nature of those comments was not constructive," he said.

"People should certainly expect that our very close relationship with the Philippines is going to be enduring," he said.

Chun Han Wong and Carol E. Lee in Vientiane, Laos, contributed to this article.

Credit: By Trefor Moss

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Presidents
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US; Philippines
People:	Obama, Barack; Duterte, Rodrigo R
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024094
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-philippine-leader-says-he-regrets-anti/docview/1817024094/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 382 of 500

City News: Transformation of Lower Manhattan's Economy Detailed

Morris, Keiko . Morris, Keiko.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

New office buildings have opened, and employment gains in sectors such as business services have diversified an economy that once relied heavily on the finance industry, according to an economic report released Tuesday by the Office of the New York state Comptroller.

FULL TEXT

A state report released Tuesday suggests the economic changes that have come to lower Manhattan since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks are as dramatic as the physical reconstruction of the World Trade Center and the surrounding area.

Young, affluent families have taken up residence there. New office buildings have opened, and employment gains in sectors such as business services have diversified an economy that once relied heavily on the finance industry, according to a an economic report released Tuesday by the Office of the New York state Comptroller.

"It is impossible to miss the fact that lower Manhattan is truly a residential neighborhood," said state Comptroller Thomas P. DiNapoli, "and a residential neighborhood very much on the rise."

Shaping the changes in the area south of Chambers Street has been an increase in young, affluent families. Between 2000 and 2014, the neighborhood's population has risen from 22,700 to 49,000, with the number of those under 18 tripling to 7,300. More than one-third of lower Manhattan's families had household incomes of $200,000 or higher, compared with 7% citywide.

Jobs in lower Manhattan also have rebounded, rising to the highest level since the 2001 attacks. This time, however, a much wider range of industries is involved. The finance industry, which in 2000 accounted for 151,200, or 56% of the positions, made up 34% of the area's jobs in 2015.

Meanwhile, the second- largest job sector is the category of business services. It made up 30% of employment in lower Manhattan in 2015, compared with 23% in 2000. Jobs in leisure and hospitality added 4,200 jobs, or a 43% increase between 2000 and 2015.

Lower Manhattan's shifts largely mirror changes citywide over the past 15 years, said Nicole Gelinas, a senior fellow with the Manhattan Institute, a conservative think tank. Tourism has increased, and high-spending foreign visitors are more important to the city's economy, she said.

"Lower Manhattan was a much more extreme example and saw these changes happen on a much bigger scale because the attacks left so much room for all of these changes to happen," Ms. Gelinas said.

Credit: By Keiko Morris

DETAILS

Subject:	Neighborhoods; Comptrollers; Economic conditions; Employment; Business services
----------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Comptrollers Economic conditions Employment
Location:	Manhattan New York; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024091
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-transformation-lower-manhattans-economy/docview/1817024091/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Students' Federal Aid Kept School Operator Afloat

Korn, Melissa . Korn, Melissa.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to the company, scholarships and grants reduced total costs for students by nearly half, and the average net price for an associate's degree program across its schools was about $23,300 in the latest year.

FULL TEXT

ITT Educational Services Inc. couldn't survive without access to federal student aid, making last month's announcement that the government wouldn't approve loans or grants for new students enrolling at its schools a veritable death sentence.

A company securities filing shows that about 56% of ITT's cash receipts came from the federal direct loan program in 2015, and another 23% came from the Pell Grant program, earmarked for the neediest students.

State financial aid programs, veteran and military benefit programs contributed another 14% to total cash receipts.

ITT has kept its tuition flat at about $18,050 a year at most campuses for the past half-dozen years, mindful of the scrutiny for-profit colleges have been receiving for graduating students who can't pay back their loans.

The net price, which is the total cost of attendance excluding grant and scholarship aid, was $23,447 for students who received aid at ITT's Baton Rouge campus in the 2014-15 academic year, and $24,433 in Boise, according to U.S. Department of Education data.

According to the company, scholarships and grants reduced total costs for students by nearly half, and the average net price for an associate's degree program across its schools was about $23,300 in the latest year.

(See related article: "Loan Curbs Shut College" -- WSJ Sept. 7, 2016)

Credit: By Melissa Korn

DETAILS

Subject:	Government grants; Financial aid; Student loans; Students
Location:	Baton Rouge Louisiana; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: ITT Educational Services Inc; NAICS: 611519

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024061
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-students-federal-aid-kept-school/docview/1817024061/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 384 of 500

City News: J'Ouvert Poses Special Challenges

Shallwani, Pervaiz; Gay, Mara . Shallwani, Pervaiz; Gay, Mara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On Tuesday, a day after two bystanders were killed and others injured in a series of shootings and stabbings, Mr. de Blasio and his police department were again searching for answers as preparations begin for next year's event.

FULL TEXT

J'Ouvert, the festival that precedes the West Indian Day parade each Labor Day, has historically seeded violence like nearly no other event in New York City.

The event draws 250,000 people and takes place in the early morning hours in Brooklyn's Crown Heights neighborhood, an area plagued by guns and gangs, officials said.

"It's always been big and it's always been the biggest nightmare," said John Cutter, a former deputy chief in the New York Police Department's Intelligence division who retired in 2007. "You have a tremendous amount of people in a small area, a lot of alcohol, a lot of marijuana and other types of drugs."

Adding to the problem, authorities said, is the event takes place in the neighborhood where many of the participants live, leading to house parties that go all night. Other large parades, including the St. Patrick's Day and Puerto Rican Day parades, take place during the day in Midtown Manhattan.

"It compounds the policing issues, but doesn't necessarily make them impossible," Police Commissioner William Bratton said.

To prepare this year, the NYPD doubled the number of officers to 3,400, brought in floodlights and forced organizers to obtain a city permit. Leading up to the event, NYPD intelligence officers targeted area gangs and focused on getting guns off the streets, Mayor Bill de Blasio said.

On Tuesday, a day after two bystanders were killed and others injured in a series of shootings and stabbings, Mr. de Blasio and his police department were again searching for answers as preparations begin for next year's event.

"A lot of the right things were done in advance," Mr. de Blasio said. "We have to find new ways and additional ways."

In the aftermath, the NYPD went back 10 years to look at shootings citywide over Labor Day weekend and found the highest number occurred in 2011, when there were 40, and the lowest was 12 in 2010, said Chief of Department James O'Neill, who will become police commissioner when Mr. Bratton steps down later this month.

This past weekend, there were 21 shootings citywide for the long weekend, Chief O'Neill said.

The department took a similar look at homicides throughout the city over the Labor Day weekend, and found a high of 10 in 2005, four in 2015 and seven in 2014. This year there were seven

At this year's J'Ouvert, the NYPD made 15 arrests and handed out 32 criminal summonses, Chief O'Neill said.

Policing the event is "not an easy task," Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams said. He said the focus going forward needed to be on continuing to use floodlights, getting on the ground early and taking down gangs.

Mr. de Blasio said that people shouldn't "have the illusion that if we said tomorrow there is no J'Ouvert that J'Ouvert is going to go away."

(See related article: "City Won't End J'Ouvert --- Mayor says violence at annual festival can be curbed; police call for community help" -- WSJ Sept. 7, 2016)

Credit: By Pervaiz Shallwani and Mara Gay

DETAILS

Subject:	Murders & murder attempts; Parades; Festivals; Violent crime; Mayors; Shootings; Stabbings; Gangs
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Documenttype:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817024048

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-jouvert-poses-special-challenges/docview/1817024048/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 385 of 500

U.S. News: Tribe Protest Spurs Halt To Project in North Dakota

Maher, Kris . Maher, Kris.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Protests led by the tribe and others have grown more aggressive, with some protesters chaining themselves to equipment and several police officers getting injured over the weekend, according to the Morton County Sheriff's Department.

FULL TEXT

A federal judge said Tuesday that construction would temporarily halt on a portion of a $3.8 billion oil pipeline in North Dakota where tensions have flared between Native American protesters and law enforcement.

U.S. District Judge James Boasberg said work would stop at an area near Lake Oahe, which the Standing Rock Sioux tribe has said contains sacred and culturally significant sites. Protests led by the tribe and others have grown more aggressive, with some protesters chaining themselves to equipment and several police officers getting injured over the weekend, according to the Morton County Sheriff's Department.

The four-state Dakota Access pipeline is scheduled to be completed by year-end and would be a major conduit for crude oil from North Dakota's Bakken Shale formation. The pipeline is being built by Energy Transfer Partners LP and an affiliate company. Phillips 66, the refiner, owns 25%.

A spokeswoman for Energy Transfer Partners couldn't be reached to comment.

Credit: By Kris Maher

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Pipelines; Sheriffs; Demonstrations & protests
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	North Dakota; United States--US
Classification:	92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817023991
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-tribe-protest-spurs-halt-project-north/docview/1817023991/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 386 of 500

U.S. News: Plans Target Infrastructure

Calvert, Scott . Calvert, Scott.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Typically, new property tax revenue generated by development in a TIF district is pledged to pay for public infrastructure within the district.

FULL TEXT

Tax-increment financing began in 1952 in California as a way to jump-start development in blighted areas.

Since then it has spread to nearly every state. Typically, new property tax revenue generated by development in a TIF district is pledged to pay for public infrastructure within the district. Laws in some states also allow sales tax to be diverted and some permit TIF funds to be spent on private development costs.

New TIF bond issues in 2015 totaled nearly $700 million, according to data analyzed by Elise Lomel of the financial advisory firm PFM Group in Atlanta. That total, which excludes refinancings, was the highest yearly total since 2006, excluding California, which largely exited the TIF sector by 2012. Not all TIF projects involve the issuance of debt.

However, the numbers have bounced around in recent years, and the total in the first half of 2016 came to just $77 million, her analysis found.

(See related article: "Tax Proposal Stirs Debate --- Critics question using public bonds to support a planned Baltimore project" -- WSJ September 7, 2016)

Credit: By Scott Calvert

DETAILS

Subject: Tax increment financing; Site planning

Business indexing term: Subject: Tax increment financing

Company / organization:	Name: PFM Group; NAICS: 541611
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817023989
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-plans-target-infrastructure/docview/1817023989/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 387 of 500

World News: World Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

POLAND Warsaw Buys Patriot Missile System Poland's defense minister said he signed an agreement on Tuesday to buy eight Patriot missile defense systems from Raytheon Co. Antoni Macierewicz said the first two batteries are expected in Poland by the end of 2019.

FULL TEXT

POLAND

Warsaw Buys Patriot

Missile System

Poland's defense minister said he signed an agreement on Tuesday to buy eight Patriot missile defense systems from Raytheon Co. Antoni Macierewicz said the first two batteries are expected in Poland by the end of 2019.

Poland shares a land border with the heavily militarized Kaliningrad region of Russia and has grown increasingly nervous about its security position since Russia seized Crimea and supported separatist forces in eastern Ukraine.

Russia has reacted with irritation to the buildup of Polish and U.S. military infrastructure in Central Europe. It has repeatedly threatened to target its warheads on Poland and has rehearsed attacks on the country.

Poland has for years sought forward deployment of troops and hardware by North Atlantic Treaty Organization member states. At NATO's summit in July, the allies agreed the U.S. would send about 1,000 troops to Poland.

-- Martin M. Sobczyk

SOUTH AFRICA

Manufacturing

Boosts Growth Rate

South Africa's economy grew by an annualized 3.3% in the second quarter, thanks to a sharp increase in manufacturing activity and a recovery in the mining sector, the country's statistics office said Tuesday.

The rise in gross domestic product, South Africa's largest since the fourth quarter of 2014, follows a 1.2% contraction in the first three months of the year.

The GDP jump was driven by an 8.1% increase in the manufacturing sector, which contributed 1 percentage point to overall growth, the statistics office said. South Africa expanded its production of petroleum products, chemicals as well as cars and other transport equipment.

-- Gabriele Steinhauser

DETAILS

Subject:	Missile defense; Missiles; Manufacturing
Business indexing term:	Subject: Manufacturing
Location:	Crimea; Russia; United States--US; Poland; Central Europe
Company / organization:	Name: North Atlantic Treaty Organization--NATO; NAICS: 928120; Name: Raytheon Co; NAICS: 334511, 336411, 336414, 541330
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 7, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1817023979
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1817023979/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 388 of 500

Business News: GM Settles Last Suits on Switches

Spector, Mike . Spector, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]more cases can now proceed against GM after a federal appeals court in July undid a legal shield blocking some suits that preceded the auto maker's 2009 bankruptcy restructuring.

FULL TEXT

General Motors Co. settled the final two ignition-switch cases slated for trial in a New York federal court this year, moving the Detroit auto maker closer to clearing remaining legal hurdles stemming from a safety defect linked to 124 deaths.

The cases were the final two among a half dozen selected for so-called bellwether trials aimed at setting settlement patterns for remaining personal-injury and wrongful-death suits. The cases arose from roughly 2.6 million older cars GM recalled in early 2014 with faulty ignition switches that risk jostling off and cutting power to engines and safety features including power steering, power brakes and air bags. GM reached an agreement last week to settle the lawsuits, which alleged injuries tied to the defective ignition switches, said Bob Hilliard, a Texas plaintiffs' lawyer involved in the litigation.

Lawyers are expected to file court papers as soon as this week alerting a judge the cases have been settled, he said. Mr. Hilliard, who declined to reveal the settlement payouts, said GM's willingness to settle "creates momentum" to continue resolving litigation in a sprawling New York legal proceeding culling hundreds of cases brought by thousands of plaintiffs. "We have an agreement to settle the last two federal bellwether cases scheduled for 2016," said GM spokesman Jim Cain, adding the terms are confidential.

GM has found ignition-switch trials in New York and a separate Texas proceeding this year "extremely helpful," Mr. Cain said.

They each involved allegations of injuries motorists suffered in crashes that were tied to GM's defective switches and subsequent air-bag failures.

The latest two cases were set for trials this month and November, respectively. GM previously reached settlements over the safety lapse with the U.S. Justice Department, shareholders and thousands of consumers totaling more than $2 billion.

Included in that total is a $900 million penalty the Detroit auto maker paid about a year ago after admitting to misleading regulators and consumers about the defective switch as part of settling a U.S. criminal case.

A report GM commissioned by former U.S. attorney Anton Valukas found the auto maker failed for more than a decade to recall vehicles with the faulty switch despite internal evidence of a safety problem.

Chief Executive Mary Barra dismissed 15 employees, including lawyers and engineers, in the wake of the report and overhauled GM's safety processes. The latest settlements are part of a so-called multidistrict litigation proceeding consolidating suits in a Manhattan federal court. As part of the proceeding, GM and plaintiffs selected six cases for trials, with the results expected to guide settlement discussions in other lawsuits.

GM still faces another round of trials next year stemming from safety recalls, including those of vehicles with different ignition switches that can suffer unintended rotations.

In addition, more cases can now proceed against GM after a federal appeals court in July undid a legal shield blocking some suits that preceded the auto maker's 2009 bankruptcy restructuring. GM has asked a full panel of the appeals court's judges to reconsider the decision.

Earlier cases showed evidence the switch led to deadly engine stalls and failing air bags. GM later offered roughly $600 million to victims making claims to a compensation fund the auto maker established. GM settled a shareholder suit and another roughly 1,380 injury and death claims for $575 million.

Credit: By Mike Spector

DETAILS

Subject:	Air bags; Defective products; Settlements & damages; Automobile industry; Injuries; State court decisions; Litigation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry; Corporation: General Motors Corp; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	Texas; New York; United States--US
People:	Barra, Mary
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130; Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816819046
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-settles-last-suits-on-switches/docview/1816819046/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 389 of 500

Business News: VW to Take Navistar Stake

Cimilluca, Dana; Boston, William; Tita, Bob . Cimilluca, Dana; Boston, William; Tita, Bob.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Volkswagen AG plans to buy a minority stake in Navistar International Corp. to provide a foothold in the U.S. and bolster its global truck-market aspirations, according to people familiar with the situation.

FULL TEXT

Volkswagen AG plans to buy a minority stake in Navistar International Corp. to provide a foothold in the U.S. and bolster its global truck-market aspirations, according to people familiar with the situation.

The proposed transaction, which could be announced as early as Tuesday, comes as Navistar deals with the fallout from a run-in over emissions regulations and a declining market share that has left it trailing rivals in a North American commercial truck market wrestling with a slump.

VW's plan to pay roughly $200 million for a nearly 17% stake in Navistar signals that executives at the German auto maker feel confident enough to expand strategically in the U.S., even as they work through the fallout from a scandal over the rigging of emissions tests on many of VW's most popular passenger cars.

The scandal has cost VW nearly $20 billion so far, forcing the company to slash spending and put any big acquisition plans on hold.

Lisle-Ill.-based Navistar is still trying to overcome its own emissions problems. The company agreed earlier this year to pay the Securities and Exchange Commission $7.5 million to settle charges it misled investors about its ability to comply with tougher U.S. standards on diesel engine exhaust beginning in 2010.

Although Navistar neither admitted nor denied the charges, the company's emissions strategy plunged it into a prolonged tailspin that has cost it hundreds of millions of dollars, halved its share of the U.S. heavy-duty truck market and wiped out about 80% of its market value over the past five years.

VW has agreed to pay $16 a share for Navistar, a nearly 14% premium on Friday's closing share price of $14.07, according to people familiar with the situation. Navistar had a market value of $1.2 billion at Friday's close.

In exchange, VW will get two seats on Navistar's board. The two companies, which have been in on-again, off-again talks since early 2015, have agreed to cooperate on purchasing and developing new products, the people said.

VW would be joining a board that already includes representatives of activist investors Carl Icahn and Mark Ratchesky, who each control about 20% of the company.

Mr. Icahn originally bought into Navistar as part of an attempt to combine it with specialty truck builder Oshkosh Corp. Navistar's losses have driven its stock price well below what the activists paid for their shares.

VW has long been rumored to be interested in Navistar. The German company is a powerhouse in the global truck market, particularly in Europe and Brazil, but doesn't sell many large commercial trucks in the U.S.

Rival Volvo AB produces trucks in the U.S. under the Mack brand, while Daimler AG owns Freightliner.

Navistar draws most of its sales from the U.S., Canada and Mexico and has a limited overseas business, making it a potentially good fit for VW. Navistar also has a strong dealer network that provides service and replacement parts.

VW bundled its commercial vehicle businesses, including its European brands MAN and Scania, into a holding company in 2015. VW's combined commercial vehicles businesses generated 34.5 billion euros ($38.6 billion) in revenue in 2015 and 1.7 billion euros in earnings before interest and taxes.

VW is entering a North American truck market where demand has fallen off significantly after an elevated stretch of truck buying. Production of heavy-duty trucks this year is expected to fall by about one-third from last year. Trucking companies have pulled back on purchases after restocking their fleets with more fuel-efficient trucks in recent years.

Navistar would likely receive a much-needed boost in truck and engine technology from VW. But even with Volkswagen's deep pockets and commitment to growth, it could be difficult to quickly nurse Navistar back to health.

Navistar is saddled with about $5 billion in debt, according to S&P Global Market Intelligence, and is expected to report another loss this year. The company, which has a large unfunded pension liability, hasn't consistently earned a profit in four years. Navistar recorded $10.1 billion in revenue for its fiscal year ended Oct. 31, 2015 and a loss of $184 million.

Navistar ranks fourth in the North America heavy-duty truck market with about 11% of retail sales. Market-leader Freightliner has about 40% of the market. In between are strong competitors Paccar Inc. -- the maker of Peterbilt and Kenworth trucks -- and Volvo.

Navistar's market share in heavy-duty trucks is about half the size it was five years ago. Customers abandoned Navistar's trucks for competitors' models when Navistar's strategy for complying with the 2010 regulations on diesel engine emissions undermined the reliability of Navistar's trucks.

Navistar had attempted to develop a proprietary solution to comply with the tougher pollution-reduction standard, rather than using the same exhaust treatment technology as the rest of the truck and engine industry.

VW's wager on Navistar isn't sure of success. The U.S. truck maker has lost a lot of ground over the past few years and it is uncertain whether the two companies will be able to align their corporate cultures to quickly improve the brand's reputation and its products.

The German auto maker doesn't have engines tailored to the U.S. market yet, which it will now have to develop for Navistar. It is also unclear how Volkswagen will position Navistar in North America in relation to its main truck brands MAN and Scania.

Daimler has the benefit of owning a U.S.-based engine subsidiary, Detroit Diesel, and has been able to incorporate improvements in fuel economy and performance from other Daimler engines into the Detroit brand, which is well known in the trucking industry.

Credit: By Dana Cimilluca, William Boston and Bob Tita

DETAILS

Subject:	Industrial trucks; Emissions testing; Automobile industry; Market shares; Product development; Shareholder activism; Equity stake; Trucks; Automobiles; Energy efficiency; Diesel engines; Competition
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Market shares Product development Shareholder activism Equity stake; Corporation: Volkswagen AG; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
People:	Rachetsky, Mark; Icahn, Carl C
Company / organization:	Name: Volkswagen AG; NAICS: 336110, 336390; Name: Navistar International Corp; NAICS: 336110
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816802589
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-vw-take-navistar-stake/docview/1816802589/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 390 of 500

Univision, Televisa Drama Heightens --- Companies wrestle with changing tastes among Hispanic millennials

Ramachandran, Shalini; Campo-Flores, Arian . Ramachandran, Shalini; Campo-Flores, Arian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Besides supplying the bulk of Univision's programming, Televisa owns a 10% stake in the company, excluding convertible warrants.

FULL TEXT

A seismic shift in young Hispanics' television tastes is testing Univision Communications Inc.'s 24-year marriage to its longtime programming supplier, Mexican TV giant Grupo Televisa SAB, a relationship that helped fuel the rise of Hispanic media in the U.S.

Distressed by a major ratings falloff at Univision's flagship Spanish-language broadcast network, Univision in recent months has been pressuring Televisa's content chief Jose "Pepe" Baston to infuse its programming -- dominated by "telenovelas," a genre akin to soap operas -- with more American flair to appeal to younger and U.S.-born Hispanics, said people familiar with the matter.

Fed up with Televisa's lukewarm response, Univision Executive Chairman Haim Saban and other board members have even proposed canceling the Televisa deal or cutting Univision's payments in half, one of the people said. "It's gotten really, really messy," said one former Univision executive.

A lot of money is at stake: Univision's pact with Televisa runs through 2030 and involves payments of more than $300 million a year -- outlays that would increase in 2018.

Restructuring the deal could give Univision resources to invest in other programming but could raise significant uncertainty as it prepares to go public. Univision network's average prime-time audience has fallen from 3.7 million viewers five years ago to 2 million this season, including a week of DVR playback. Its average prime-time viewership this season has dropped 25% compared with last year.

Besides supplying the bulk of Univision's programming, Televisa owns a 10% stake in the company, excluding convertible warrants. Univision's board, which includes Televisa executives, has hotly debated how and whether to make changes to the agreement, said people close to the board.

In a statement, Mr. Saban said the agreement is an "invaluable asset for Univision" and the relationship between Univision and Televisa "has never been stronger."

Televisa's Mr. Baston said, "we are completely aligned with Univision both on our licensing agreement and our shared view of the future." One person close to the board said there are no plans to change or cancel the Televisa deal.

In a U.S. television landscape filled with English-language media giants, Univision has carved out a high-profile position as a news and entertainment source for Hispanics.

But its flagship Spanish-language network has struggled to adapt its programming for younger viewers. Nearly 60% of the 55 million Hispanics in the U.S. are millennials or younger, with one-quarter between the ages of 18 and 33, according to Pew Research Center.

The millennials, who are less likely to be immigrants, tend to prefer watching TV in English, according to some surveys, and analysts say they are drawn to edgier and more fast-paced programs than traditional telenovelas.

To counter, Univision is making bold moves to invest in digital assets such as Gawker Media in a bid to attract a younger multicultural audience. Those acquisitions, and audience gains at some of its smaller TV networks like Univision Deportes Network, have helped increase Univision's overall "reach" to about 83 million average monthly unique consumers, up 24% year to year, the company said.

Even so, its private-equity owners -- which include Mr. Saban, Madison Dearborn Partners, Providence Equity Partners, TPG Capital and Thomas H. Lee Partners -- haven't found an easy path to exit their 2007 investment, a $13.7 billion leveraged buyout that saddled the company with debt. After failing to find suitable buyers, they filed to take the company public last year. But they have delayed the IPO as media stocks have come under pressure due to broader investor worries about pay-TV "cord-cutting."

Univision and Televisa share a contentious history. In the 1960s, the Azcarraga family, which built up Televisa, helped launch the U.S. business that eventually became Univision.

In 1992, the companies struck an agreement that gave Univision exclusive access to Televisa content. Since then, the companies have sparred repeatedly, even in court, with each seeking to extract more favorable terms.

Three years ago, Univision Chief Executive Randy Falco commissioned a study that found Televisa's style of telenovelas wouldn't resonate with a new generation of Univision viewers, said people familiar with the study. When Univision executives presented the findings to Televisa, the Mexican TV giant's executives dismissed the concerns, the people said.

During the past couple of years, Mr. Falco traveled multiple times to Televisa's Mexico City offices to plead for more contemporary story lines, or scenes shot in Miami or Los Angeles. Televisa executives have argued that Univision's ratings woes were its own fault -- that it was poorly scheduling and promoting the telenovelas, the people said.

Univision executives sought out other paths. Mr. Saban teamed up with Simon Cowell, ex-host of "American Idol," to create a music competition reality show for the network called "La Banda."

Earlier this year, Univision struck an unusual deal to air old seasons of Netflix Inc. bilingual dramas "Club de Cuervos" and "Narcos" on Univision's networks, and to create a crime drama with Netflix called "El Chapo."

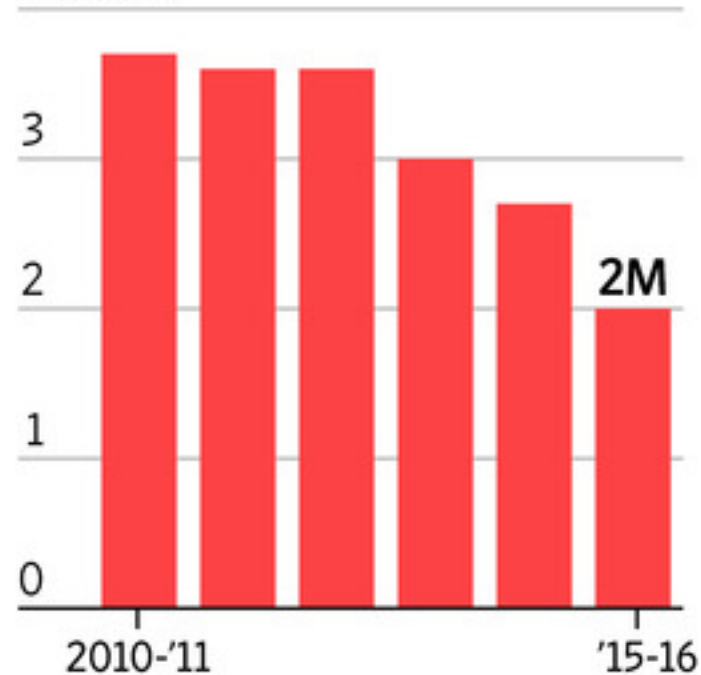

Univision is restricted in how much it can overhaul its schedule while locked into the Televisa pact.

Telenovela Fatigue

Univision's prime-time audience is eroding, due to changing tastes.

Average prime-time audience*

4 million

*Includes live viewership plus seven days of DVR playback

Source: Nielsen

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Shalini Ramachandran and Arian Campo-Flores

DETAILS

Subject:	Spanish language; Agreements; Prime time; Television programming; Millennials; Audiences; Latin music; Hispanic people
Business indexing term:	Corporation: Netflix Inc Univision Communications Inc Grupo Televisa
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Univision Communications Inc; NAICS: 512250, 516110, 516120; Name: Grupo Televisa; NAICS: 512110, 512250, 513130, 516110, 516120, 517112, 517410, 519290
Publication title:	Wall Street Jou rnal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816802554
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/univision-televisa-drama-heightens-companies/docview/1816802554/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19

LINKS

Document 391 of 500

U.S. News: L.A. Rams' Faithful Relish Team's Return -- - 'Big Seed' Lance Goldberg is back, with his watermelon hat, and plenty of followers

Calfas, Jennifer . Calfas, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Rams Chief Operating Officer Kevin Demoff said he often speaks with fans who are passionate about the uniform colors, and that he plans to "re-establish our brand" now that the team has returned to the Golden State.

FULL TEXT

LOS ANGELES -- Lance Goldberg was so devoted a Los Angeles Rams fan that he wore a scooped-out watermelon painted team colors on his head in the 1980s and 1990s when the football team was in Southern California. That earned him the nickname the "Big Seed."

Now, the 51-year-old Mr. Goldberg's Rams have returned from St. Louis, and once again, his heart is full and his melons are hollow.

There are so many old Rams fans rejoicing with melons on their heads that they make an entire "Melon Patch." The patch, which now includes the Big Seed's sprout -- Mr. Goldberg's 4-year-old daughter, Sofia -- has appeared at preseason games and is ready for the new fall season after a two-decade hiatus.

"I'm amazed how many people come up to us and remember us now," Mr. Goldberg said. "It baffles me."

The return of the Rams to Los Angeles has old fans digging into closets for pre-St. Louis hats, squeezing into decades-old T-shirts and resurrecting traditions not seen since 1994, the year the team left.

Many insist on the original Rams colors and symbols. During the team's first season in Los Angeles in 1946, the Rams wore royal blue and yellow gold. In 1948, the team added its signature horn symbol to its helmets. In 1965, yellow was swapped for white, then it returned in 1979. The big change came in 2000, while the team was in St. Louis, with the switch from yellow-gold to "true gold" and a darker blue.

On a recent Saturday at the Los Angeles Coliseum, Joe Ramirez stood in an aisle just a few rows away from the field to watch a team scrimmage, wearing a custom-ordered royal blue shirt with yellow writing and a homemade blue helmet with two large, yellow ram horns sticking out on top. On the field, players wore the "new" colors, or, as some

Los Angeles fans call them, "St. Louis colors."

"I only buy old-school colors," said Mr. Ramirez, who helped found a club that lobbied for years to bring the Rams back to L.A. "I want the Rams to come back to these colors. We want to honor the team we know."

Aron Gonzalez, who stood next to Mr. Ramirez in similar apparel and a matching helmet, said, "What I like to say is 'Dodgers Blue plus Lakers Gold equals L. A. Rams.' Those classic uniforms mean much more to us."

The team plans to change its colors in 2019, when the Rams move into a new stadium in Inglewood, Calif.

Rams Chief Operating Officer Kevin Demoff said he often speaks with fans who are passionate about the uniform colors, and that he plans to "re-establish our brand" now that the team has returned to the Golden State. "Everything is on the table for our new uniforms, and fan input will be part of the process," he said.

The Big Seed is sticking with the old colors. "Nobody wants to wear those St. Louis colors," said Mr. Goldberg, who still uses bright blue and yellow paint on his watermelons. Mr. Goldberg said he was inspired by the Dodgers to begin with, when he saw Dodgers fans wearing pieces of watermelon rinds on their heads during a hot day decades ago.

He recalled, "I thought, 'Oh, I could put the whole watermelon on my head.' "

Credit: By Jennifer Calfas

DETAILS

Location:	Southern California; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816802316
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-l-rams-faithful-relish-teams-return-big/docview/1816802316/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-13
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 392 of 500

U.S. News: Wells' Link to Quake Scrutinized

Bustillo, Miguel; Strum, Beckie . Bustillo, Miguel; Strum, Beckie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin, who declared a state of emergency for Pawnee County following the earthquake, said in a statement that information on the event would be reviewed by a state council on seismic activity.

FULL TEXT

The U.S. Geological Survey is examining whether the 5.6-magnitude earthquake that shook Oklahoma on Saturday was triggered by the underground disposal of wastewater from oil and gas production.

The quake, which damaged some buildings but didn't cause serious injuries, spurred Oklahoma regulators within hours to demand that operators of 37 disposal wells in a 500-square-mile area shut down. It took place near Pawnee, Okla., roughly 55 miles northwest of Tulsa, and was felt as far as Kansas City and Houston.

"Without studying the specifics of the wastewater injection and oil and gas production in this area, the USGS cannot currently conclude whether or not this particular earthquake was caused by industrial-related, human activities," the USGS said in a statement. "However, we do know that many earthquakes in Oklahoma have been triggered by wastewater fluid injection."

The USGS will continue to process seismic data in the coming days and weeks "that will help answer this question," it added.

Oklahoma has a history of seismic activity. But the state has stepped up regulation of injection wells after seeing a dramatic increase in quakes over the past decade that experts at the USGS and in academia have tied to the practice of burying wastewater near faults underground.

In 2015, the USGS recorded 2,500 quakes with a magnitude of 2.5 or higher in the state, up from just three in 2005. The USGS in March released maps that for the first time show the potential risk of man-made as well as naturally occurring earthquakes, and they listed some parts of Texas and Oklahoma now with the same risk of temblors as California.

Saturday's quake occurred on a fault that experts hadn't previously known about, roughly perpendicular to a larger known fault system, Daniel McNamara, a research geophysicist at the USGS Geologic Hazards Science Center in Golden, Colo., said in an email. He was set to travel to Oklahoma Tuesday to help state officials on wastewater-injection issues, he added.

Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin, who declared a state of emergency for Pawnee County following the earthquake, said in a statement that information on the event would be reviewed by a state council on seismic activity.

Credit: By Miguel Bustillo and Beckie Strum

DETAILS

Subject:	Investigations; Earthquakes; Underground waste disposal; Hydraulic fracturing
Location:	Oklahoma; United States--US
People:	Fallin, Mary
Company / organization:	Name: US Geological Survey; NAICS: 541714, 924120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816802287
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-wells-link-quake-scrutinized/docview/1816802287/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 393 of 500

World News: Obama, Putin Stumble on Syria --- Meeting of leaders fails to end impasse, as Islamic State claims deadly bombings

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

An agreement, which U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov have been negotiating, would increase cooperation between Washington and Moscow in Syria and implement a cease-fire to provide humanitarian relief.

FULL TEXT

HANGZHOU, China -- President Barack Obama and Russian President Vladimir Putin met Monday for the first time in nearly a year but failed to break an impasse between the two countries over how to reduce violence in Syria.

Talks between U.S. and Russian officials stalled this weekend. After meeting for 90 minutes with Mr. Putin on the sidelines of an international summit of major economies, Mr. Obama said Washington and Moscow haven't yet bridged their divide on a deal.

The meeting came amid escalating violence in Syria, where Islamic State carried out bombings Monday that targeted mainly government-held areas and, according to the state-run Syrian Arab News Agency, killed at least 40 people. The explosions occurred after Russian and Syrian forces rolled back rebels from southern Aleppo city on Sunday to reimpose a siege.

"We have had some productive conversations about what a real cessation of hostilities would look like that would allow us both, the United States and Russia, to focus our attention on common enemies," Mr. Obama said at a news conference following the Group of 20 summit. "But given the gaps of trust that exist that's a tough negotiation, and we haven't yet closed the gaps in a way where we think it would actually work."

The Russian leader, speaking to reporters, said his government would intensify cooperation with the U.S. to combat extremists in Syria and work to repair relations with Washington. "We are up for a full-format recovery of relations with the United States," Mr. Putin said.

U.S. and Russian officials have pushed versions of plans over the past several months aimed at tightening cooperation and coordination, but have barely dented violence levels in Syria.

A White House official described the final differences between the U.S. and Russia on a Syria deal as "technical" and related to implementation of the proposed agreement.

An agreement, which U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov have been negotiating, would increase cooperation between Washington and Moscow in Syria and implement a cease-fire to provide humanitarian relief.

Mr. Obama said he and Mr. Putin directed Messrs. Kerry and Lavrov to work out the remaining differences to come up with a deal that implements a "meaningful, serious, verifiable cessation of hostilities in Syria."

The U.S. official said "there was some backsliding" by Russia during talks over the last two days, but the two sides were now at the same place in talks that they were at the start of the negotiations in China on Saturday.

Mr. Obama is also hoping to convince Russia to abide by cease-fire and peace accords on Ukraine reached in 2015 in the Belarus capital of Minsk. The White House official said Mr. Obama "made clear to President Putin that sanctions will continue on Russia if Minsk isn't fully implemented." Mr. Obama described the Ukraine discussion as constructive but not conclusive.

Republican Sen. Bob Corker, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, criticized Mr. Obama over the Syria impasse. He pointed to Mr. Obama's 2013 decision to pull back on military strikes in Syria after the Bashar al-Assad regime crossed a U.S. "red line" by using chemical weapons.

"Russia and the rest of the world knows there are no consequences when negotiations break down with the U.S.," Mr. Corker said in a statement Monday.

Maria Abi-Habib and Andrey Ostroukh contributed to this article.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Civil war; Truces & cease fires; Economic summit conferences; International relations; Violence; Cooperation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Economic summit conferences International relations
Location:	Russia; United States--US; Syria
People:	Obama, Barack; Putin, Vladimir
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800469
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-putin-stumble-on-syria-meeting/docview/1816800469/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 394 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

North Korea fired three ballistic missiles that landed in the Sea of Japan. ---

FULL TEXT

Thousands of pages of Clinton's official records are set to be released in coming weeks, testing the candidate in the final two months of the campaign.

Merkel's party lost to an anti-immigrant party in the German leader's home state, in another sign of populist forces jolting Europe.

Obama and Putin met for the first time in nearly a year but failed to break a U.S.-Russian impasse over reducing violence in Syria.

China rallied the G-20 around measures to revive global growth, but the group's statement was short of concrete steps.

Kabul was hit by a third attack, hours after twin suicide bombings in the Afghan capital killed at least 24.

The USGS is probing if Oklahoma quake was caused by wastewater disposal from oil and gas output.

Obama canceled a meeting with the Philippine leader following comments by Duterte on human rights.

The Philippines said Beijing is stepping up its presence in disputed South China Sea waters.

North Korea fired three ballistic missiles that landed in the Sea of Japan.

Died: Phyllis Schlafly, 92, conservative activist.

DETAILS

Subject:	Suicide bombings
Location:	Kabul Afghanistan; Beijing China; Philippines; Oklahoma; Europe; China; United States-US; Syria; Sea of Japan; North Korea; South China Sea; Afghanistan
People:	Schlafly, Phyllis
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110; Name: US Geological Survey; NAICS: 541714, 924120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800452
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1816800452/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 395 of 500

World News: Confusion Over Obama's Arrival Draws a Rebuke

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Chinese staff shouted at reporters and White House aides to keep them at a distance and tried to block national-security adviser Susan Rice from getting closer to Mr. Obama.

FULL TEXT

BEIJING -- China's foreign ministry blamed U.S. media for a fracas surrounding President Barack Obama's arrival in Hangzhou on Saturday, when Mr. Obama emerged from an exit in the belly of Air Force One rather than descending as usual from the main cabin door via a mobile staircase.

The unusual exit surprised reporters traveling with the president. Standing behind a rope strung under the wing of the plane, they strained to get a view of him. His arrival in China was the first time a rope was used to cordon them off.

Chinese staff shouted at reporters and White House aides to keep them at a distance and tried to block national-security adviser Susan Rice from getting closer to Mr. Obama. In Western media, some saw the incident, dubbed "Stairgate," as a snub to Mr. Obama. Some Chinese media portrayed it as American arrogance.

Mr. Obama played down the episode when asked about it at a news conference, saying, "I wouldn't overcrank the significance of it." Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump, campaigning Monday in suburban Cleveland, said he would have ordered Air Force One to "get out of here" had he received a similar welcome.

Describing it as a "small episode," Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying said the botched greeting resulted from "dozens of U.S. reporters" rushing a Chinese security cordon at the airport. Only 13 reporters were on board for the flight to Hangzhou.

Ms. Hua and U.S. officials said the confusion came from a disagreement over staircases as the plane prepared to land in Hangzhou. The U.S. normally provides its own staircase for the plane, but Chinese officials had offered a different set. Neither side could agree by the time Mr. Obama touched down, U.S. officials said.

-- Chuin-Wei Yap and Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Reporters; Aircraft; Staircases; Summit conferences; Political campaigns
Location:	United States--US; Hangzhou China; China
People:	Rice, Susan E; Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800392
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-confusion-over-obamas-arrival-draws/docview/1816800392/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 396 of 500

World News: Comments Spur U.S.-Philippine Rift

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since Mr. Duterte became president in June, police and vigilantes have killed more than 2,000 people in the Philippines.

FULL TEXT

VIENTIANE, Laos -- President Barack Obama canceled a planned meeting with Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte, in a rare diplomatic rupture that follows an outbreak of tensions between two close allies over the Philippines' new drug war.

The White House said last week that Mr. Obama planned to meet with Mr. Duterte for the first time during his trip to Laos for a summit of Asian leaders beginning Tuesday.

But in a notable expression of U.S. concern, Mr. Obama on Monday cast doubt on those plans, suggesting he may pull out of the meeting over bombastic comments from the Philippine leader demanding their discussion not touch on his approach to human rights and referring to the U.S. leader in Tagalog with an expression widely translated to mean "son of a bitch."

After Mr. Obama arrived in Laos, the White House early Tuesday said that the meeting with Mr. Duterte wouldn't occur and that Mr. Obama would instead meet with South Korea's president, Park Geun-hye.

Mr. Obama said Monday that he expects the U.S. and the Philippines to maintain close relations. The countries are longstanding treaty allies, and Manila relies on American support in its territorial disputes with China in the South China Sea. Washington is also due to deploy troops to the Philippines as part of the Obama administration's strategy of rebalancing to the Asia-Pacific region under terms of a 2014 defense pact.

At a news conference in China before flying to Vientiane, Mr. Obama said he had directed his aides to talk with their Philippine counterparts to make sure "the timing is right" for a meeting after learning that Mr. Duterte said forcefully on Monday that the U.S. president has no standing to confront him about human rights and that "plenty will be killed" in the Philippines' antidrug campaign.

Asked Monday how he would react if Mr. Obama raised the human-rights issue, Mr. Duterte appeared angry and blamed the U.S. -- which ran the Philippines as a colony until 1946 -- for causing the country's problems.

"The Philippines is not a vassal state -- we have long since ceased to be a colony of the United States," said Mr. Duterte, rejecting criticism of his anticrime efforts. He then spoke in Tagalog, referring to Mr. Obama with the slur.

Since Mr. Duterte became president in June, police and vigilantes have killed more than 2,000 people in the Philippines. The killings have led to allegations of human-rights abuses and criticism from the United Nations and statements of concern from the U.S. State Department.

"Clearly he's a colorful guy," Mr. Obama said at the end of a summit of the Group of 20 in China.

Administration officials didn't elaborate on the administration's calculation in canceling the meeting, but made clear it came in response to Mr. Duterte's comments Monday. There was no immediate reaction from Manila.

Trefor Moss contributed to this article.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Human rights; Economic summit conferences; Presidents
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Economic summit conferences; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Laos; China; United States--US; Philippines
People:	Obama, Barack; Duterte, Rodrigo R
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	Unit ed States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800348
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-comments-spur-u-s-philippine-rift/docview/1816800348/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 397 of 500

U.S. News: Economic Calendar

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Central bankers will be in the spotlight this week as a Federal Reserve official gives a closely watched speech ahead of this month's policy meeting. Also, the European Central Bank caps off a two-day policy meeting on Thursday.

TUESDAY: The president of the Federal Reserve Board of San Francisco, John Williams, will give his outlook for the U.S. economy in Reno, Nev. Mr. Williams is considered closely aligned with Chairwoman Janet Yellen, who in a speech last month left the door open for a rate increase as soon as the central bank's Sept. 20-21 policy meeting.

THURSDAY: ECB President Mario Draghi will take center stage in Frankfurt after the central bank's two-day policy meeting. The ECB isn't expected to alter its policy mix, but most investors expect an extension of an 80 billion euro-a-month bond-purchase program. Recent economic data appear to show the eurozone weathering Britain's vote to leave the European Union, but inflation remains far below the ECB's near -2% target.

FRIDAY: China will report inflation data as markets look at whether another deceleration in the consumer price index - which was 1.8% in July, down from 1.9% in June -- will give the central bank more latitude to ease monetary policy as the economy slows.

DETAILS

Subject:	Central banks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Central banks; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800268
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1816800268/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 398 of 500

City News: Parade Goes On as Revelers Gather

Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Dawsey, Josh . Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Simone Clinton, a 30-year-old rapper from Barbados, stood behind stalls full of chicken, shark and salt fish on the sidewalk selling "nutcrackers," a mixture of mango juice and Hennessy.

FULL TEXT

Overnight shootings didn't stop thousands of flag-bearing residents from celebrating their heritage at the West Indian Day Parade in Brooklyn on Monday.

Spectators danced and ate jerk chicken in Crown Heights as carnivalesque reggae played from large floats and trucks going down Eastern Parkway. Marchers donned vibrant, feathered costumes while some men marched to Grand Army Plaza on stilts.

"It's like the one day all the West Indian countries get together and have fun," said Stokley Wilson, 28 years old, of Flatbush.

The parade came hours after tragedy struck the predawn J'Ouvert festival, a celebration long plagued by violence. Two people were killed in four shootings.

On Monday, Mayor Bill de Blasio said the city would review the future of the festival, which runs from 1 a.m. to sunrise.

Around noon, Mr. de Blasio, wearing a blue shirt and sneakers while often waving two flags, was greeted warmly at the parade, with crowds frequently whooping and cheering for him by name.

Crowds thickened along the route throughout the afternoon, along with the smells of jerk chicken and marijuana.

During the last half of the parade, Mr. de Blasio frequently stopped to shake hands and take pictures. His wife, Chirlane McCray, wearing a brown dress, often danced down the route to Caribbean songs as she accompanied him to shake hands and hug onlookers.

Mr. Wilson said the day parade shouldn't be known for the crime that happens hours before during J'Ouvert.

"It's not everybody. That's not the people's intentions," said Mr. Wilson, who donned a Jamaican flag around his neck. "There's just certain people that do stupid stuff."

Deshaun Wright, 28, of Bedford Stuyvesant, isn't Caribbean but said he often draws connections between his African-American culture and the parade. He loves the fashion and music but particularly enjoys the food.

"If you like a little bit of spice, you'll definitely get it," Mr. Wright said before buying some roti.

Simone Clinton, a 30-year-old rapper from Barbados, stood behind stalls full of chicken, shark and salt fish on the sidewalk selling "nutcrackers," a mixture of mango juice and Hennessy.

"It's lit," Ms. Clinton said of the parade's atmosphere. "It's super lit right now."

Ms. Clinton said the parade is one of the few chances she has to flaunt her Caribbean culture.

"It's a day where we can just exist," Ms. Clinton said. "And be ourselves."

Credit: By Zolan Kanno-Youngs and Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Caribbean culture; Parades; Shootings
Location:	Brooklyn New York; United States--US
People:	McCray, Chirlane; de Blasio, Bill
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800146
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-parade-goes-on-as-revelers-gather/docview/1816800146/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Two Fatally Shot At Predawn Fest; Future Uncertain

Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Morales, Mark . Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Morales, Mark.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since 2014, there have been eight shooting incidents, one stabbing and five deaths at the J'Ouvert festival, according to data from the NYPD.

FULL TEXT

Mayor Bill de Blasio said the city would review the future of the predawn celebration before the West Indian Day Parade in Brooklyn after two people were shot and killed during the festival long marred by violence.

"I'm just making a broad, strategic statement," Mr. de Blasio said of the J'Ouvert festival. "All options are on the table."

Monday's violence began around 3:50 a.m., when 17-year-old Tyreke Borel of Brooklyn was shot in the chest in crossfire near the intersection of Empire Boulevard and Flatbush Avenue, police said. He was taken to Kings County Hospital Center where he died, police said.

During that shooting, a 72-year-old woman was shot in the arm, police said. She was expected to survive.

Less than an hour later, Tiarah Poyau, 22, was shot in the face near the intersection of Franklin Avenue and Empire Boulevard, police said. She was taken to Kings County Hospital Center where she died, police said.

The New York Police Department significantly ramped up security for the predawn J'Ouvert festival, where a year ago Carey Gabay, an aide to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo, was shot and killed by a stray bullet.

This year's festival and parade had thousands of officers on hand, light towers and ShotSpotter technology to pinpoint gunfire. There were 48 officers and six light towers in the location of the first shooting on Monday, police said.

NYPD Commissioner William Bratton also said police conducted multiple gang busts in central Brooklyn in the weeks leading up to the events.

But the celebration, which runs from Grand Army Plaza and down Flatbush Avenue, brings unique challenges, Mr. Bratton said.

"It's a very confusing event in terms of the sheer number of people," he said. "It is not a controlled event in the sense that people are screened coming into the event so there are elements of it that we don't have full control over."

Since 2014, there have been eight shooting incidents, one stabbing and five deaths at the J'Ouvert festival, according to data from the NYPD.

Mr. de Blasio didn't say whether J'Ouvert would be canceled or how the city would change it next year.

"It was not that long ago that unfortunately the St. Patrick's Day parade was plagued by violence. The Puerto Rican parade was unfortunately plagued by violence," Mr. de Blasio said. "The simple point here: all of those previously violent events were brought under control. We will find a way to bring this one under control."

At least three other people were injured during the festivities, police said. Just before 4 a.m., a woman was stabbed in the lower back near the intersection of Empire Boulevard and Ocean Avenue, police said. She refused medical attention at the scene, police said.

At about 5:30 a.m., a man in his 20s was walking along Classon Avenue at Eastern Parkway when an unknown man slashed him in the face and neck, police said. He was taken to Methodist Hospital in stable condition, police said.

Later in the morning, a 20-year-old man was shot in the leg near the corner of Clarkson Avenue and Rogers Avenue, police said. He was also taken to Kings County Hospital and is expected to survive. The man was with a group that began arguing with another group, police said. The dispute turned physical and "a man stepped out of the crowd and fired one round."

Mr. de Blasio marched in the West Indian Day Parade hours after the violence, shaking hands with residents and waving a Trinidad and Tobago flag.

Candace Mitchell of Brooklyn made a trip to the parade on Monday for the second straight year. She said she hasn't yet gone to J'Ouvert because of "the fact that people get killed."

"It's not like that back at the islands," she said. "It's just fun."

Credit: By Zolan Kanno-Youngs and Mark Morales

DETAILS

Subject:	Festivals; Shootings; Criminal investigations; Violent crime; Parades; Violence; Stabbings
Location:	Brooklyn New York; United States--US
People:	Bratton, William; de Blasio, Bill
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800133
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-two-fatally-shot-at-predawn-fest-future/docview/1816800133/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner . Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 400 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Junk bonds have boomed this year, but some investors worry how a rate rise would affect high-yield debt. ---

FULL TEXT

Bayer raised its offer for Monsanto, though it said the higher price depended on achieving a "negotiated transaction."

VW plans to pay about $200 million for a 17% stake in Navistar as a U.S. entry point for the auto maker's global truck aspirations.

The ECB should invest in stocks, some economists say, arguing the central bank may run out of bonds to buy if it raises its stimulus.

Junk bonds have boomed this year, but some investors worry how a rate rise would affect high-yield debt.

Saudi Arabia and Russia signed an oil-cooperation pact but stopped short of agreeing to limit output.

Britain's services sector returned to growth in August, a sign the economy is rebounding after Brexit.

The pound hit a seven-week high on release of the service-sector data.

GM settled the final two lawsuits over faulty ignition switches slated for trial in federal court this year.

Apple will introduce new iPhones Wednesday, but they likely won't include significant new features.

Google is killing its three-year-old project to make a modular smartphone.

Sony's "Don't Breathe" was No. 1 at the box office.

DETAILS

Subject:	High yield investments; Bond markets
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bond markets
Location:	Russia; United Kingdom--UK; United States--US; Saudi Arabia
Company / organization:	Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Google Inc; NAICS: 334310, 519290
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816800053
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1816800053/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

Union Boss Hits Ground Running

Ramey, Corinne . Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Before this summer, Mr. Husamudeen operated almost exclusively behind the scenes; if an inmate attacked an officer, he would go to the jail or the hospital to assess the damage, he said. [...]he started an underground newspaper, Union Watch, which was critical of the union and the department. Because of the paper, he got approached by Mr. Seabrook, who led a coalition seeking to replace the union's executive board.

FULL TEXT

Elias Husamudeen was in a meeting with the commissioner of the city's Department of Correction in late July when his phone rang with news that an inmate at Rikers Island had slashed an officer's face. Shortly after, Mr. Husamudeen issued a statement demanding changes at the jail complex.

It was a stark reminder of how much Mr. Husamudeen's life has changed since he was tapped to take over as head of the union after his former boss was arrested on fraud charges. Before this summer, Mr. Husamudeen operated almost exclusively behind the scenes; if an inmate attacked an officer, he would go to the jail or the hospital to assess the damage, he said.

"I've lost about 10 pounds," Mr. Husamudeen said of his first two months in office, "and not because I wanted to."

As president of the Correction Officers' Benevolent Association, Mr. Husamudeen represents 9,000 workers at New York City jails. The union is often at odds with the correction department and City Hall, largely because of disagreements over changes in disciplinary practices or conditions at the jails.

He replaced his longtime friend and union head Norman Seabrook, an outsize figure known for his public confrontations with city leaders. Federal prosecutors allege Mr. Seabrook accepted bribes in exchange for investing $20 million of union money in a hedge fund. He has pleaded not guilty and said he would fight the charges.

Sitting in his office, Mr. Husamudeen, 56 years old, bristled at the suggestion that he had big shoes to fill.

"I'm never going to step in Norman's shoes," said Mr. Husamudeen. "I have my own shoes."

Literally, at least, few disagree. Mr. Seabrook had 10 pairs of Ferragamo shoes in his closet, according to federal prosecutors. Mr. Husamudeen is known for his slightly wrinkled look and black Under Armour baseball cap.

Mr. Seabrook was charismatic, mercurial and had a borderline-autocratic management style, according to several union members. An attorney for Mr. Seabrook said his record of accomplishment for his members is unparalleled.

Mr. Husamudeen is mellower, quieter and doesn't seek the spotlight, some union members say. He is more likely to delegate and typically checks in with others before making a decision, said Marc Alain Steier, the union's director of legal affairs and a longtime labor lawyer.

"He's really different than a lot of labor leaders I've known over the years," Mr. Steier said.

Others say such personality differences aren't meaningful.

"He is a watered-down version of Norman Seabrook," said William Valentin, a member who sought to oust the union's executive board. Mr. Valentin said Mr. Husamudeen hadn't accomplished anything for his members or safeguarded their pension fund.

Mr. Husamudeen says he has fought hard for his members, including calling for the resignation of Department of Correction Commissioner Joseph Ponte, who he says is more concerned with keeping inmates safe than officers.

The administration of Mayor Bill de Blasio has spent more than $200 million on officer safety, city officials say, and last week unveiled several initiatives, such as introducing Tasers, designed to protect officers. Serious assaults on staff decreased 46% from fiscal 2015 to fiscal 2016, officials said.

Among Mr. Husamudeen's primary concerns is the department's reduction of solitary confinement, which it calls punitive segregation. The department has sharply curtailed the practice, and is working to eliminate it for inmates under 22.

The union believes the practice protects its officers from assaults. The department has reduced punitive segregation without providing a disciplinary alternative, Mr. Husamudeen said.

The department has introduced new housing units designed as alternatives to punitive segregation, Mr. Ponte said last week.

Mr. Husamudeen, who has two sisters and five brothers, was born in Charleston, S.C., and raised in Harlem by a single mother. All five of his brothers spent time at Rikers, typically for crimes like drugs or robbery, he said.

"I understand this thing from both sides," he said. "For a lot of us it's just a reality."

Mr. Husamudeen earned a GED, but never completed college. In 1988, he began working as a correction officer, first at a former jail barge and later at Rikers Island. There, he started an underground newspaper, Union Watch, which was critical of the union and the department.

Because of the paper, he got approached by Mr. Seabrook, who led a coalition seeking to replace the union's executive board. In 1995, he became the group's treasurer, and in 2010, its first vice president.

He now lives on Staten Island and is married to a woman who briefly worked for the union. He has three children from a previous marriage, all in their 30s. He is a Muslim and sometimes attends a mosque in Harlem.

Correction officers catch a raw deal, he said. "It's not the cleanest job, but it's a necessary job," he said. "We're raising other people's kids."

Credit: By Corinne Ramey

DETAILS

Subject:	Correctional personnel; Prisoner treatment; Union leadership; Robbery; Public prosecutors
Business indexing term:	Subject: Union leadership; Industry: 92214 : Correctional Institutions 81393 : Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Husamudeen, Elias
Company / organization:	Name: Rikers Island (prison complex); NAICS: 922140; Name: Correction Officers Benevolent Association-New York City NY; NAICS: 813930
Classification:	92214: Correctional Institutions; 81393: Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816799971

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/union-boss-hits-ground-running/docview/1816799971/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 402 of 500

U.S. News: Cracking Zika's Genetic Code

Hernandez, Daniela . Hernandez, Daniela.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]it's something we monitor," said Ann Powers, a virologist at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's diseases branch in Fort Collins, Colo.

FULL TEXT

In June, a group of international researchers embarked on a Zika-hunting mission in Brazil, where the virus has infected tens of thousands of people and caused a dramatic rise in birth defects. They collected 2,000 samples from people around northeastern Brazil to better understand Zika's genetics.

"What we know about Zika virus evolution is almost nothing," said Marcio Nunes, one of the scientists leading the genetic-sleuthing expedition and the director of the Evandro Chagas Institute's genetic core in Brazil.

As Zika continues its rapid spread across the Americas and into the U.S., scientists like Dr. Nunes are racing to answer a puzzling question: Is the virus evolving in ways that make it more dangerous?

Viruses are packaged strands of genetic material that, once inside cells, get copied over and over. With each replication, the virus can change slightly. Most of the time these changes are benign, but sometimes they can help it infect its hosts more easily or cause new types of health problems.

Several studies suggest Zika's genome -- its repertoire of genes -- is relatively stable, but there is some early evidence that certain genes may be changing -- in some cases in ways that could, in theory, help it to replicate more efficiently once inside human cells, prompting researchers to seek more data.

Scientists know two main families of Zika exist, the so-called African and Asian lineages. They think the Asian version hopped from French Polynesia to the Americas in recent years. It was first detected in Brazil in 2015, but scientists think the virus may have made its way there as early as 2013, perhaps during the Confederations Cup soccer tournament. One study suggests Zika has been in Haiti since 2014.

To date, there are few full Zika genomes available to study. The U.S. public genome repository contains just 69. Dr. Nunes and his colleagues say their Brazilian road trip, dubbed ZiBRA -- short for Zika in Brazil Real Time Analysis -- yielded roughly 60 new full genomes and about a hundred partial ones. The goal is to sequence hundreds more.

Some experts say that from what little data are available, it appears that the genetic changes scientists are now detecting are probably just part of Zika's normal life cycle. So-called RNA viruses, like Zika, are especially prone to changing because they have no way of checking for mistakes when they copy themselves. Most errors don't affect virulence. Changes can also be detrimental to viral survival so they are weeded out because the viruses that have them don't reproduce as effectively.

"This is a natural process. It's not particularly alarming or scary. [But] it's something we monitor," said Ann Powers, a virologist at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's diseases branch in Fort Collins, Colo.

The slight tweaks, several scientists say, appear random, which is encouraging. It would be more worrisome, for instance, if they clumped in one particular gene.

Also, Zika isn't actually well-suited to Aedes aegypti mosquitoes, one of its primary modes of transmission, according to Paolo Zlotnik, a Zika expert at the University of Sao Paulo. The insect creates a powerful evolutionary filter that keeps the virus pretty stable as it ferries it from one human host to the next.

If Zika starts to pass directly from person to person more frequently, through sex for example, that could potentially allow it to change more rapidly, he said. Right now, "the virus has to negotiate two distinct systems, human and invertebrate, that combined could impose different types of constraints to viral-genetic variation."

Still, many questions remain. Zika was always regarded as "mild and weak," said Dr. Zlotnik. "How did it turn into a monster?"

One possibility is that past Zika outbreaks in Asia or Africa just weren't large enough to produce the noticeable effects public-health workers are seeing in the Americas -- or that over time, people in Asia and Africa have built up an immunity to the virus that those in countries like Brazil just don't have. The recent outbreak in Singapore may put that theory to the test.

Credit: By Daniela Hernandez

DETAILS

Subject:	Studies; Genomes; Zika virus; Genetic research; Epidemics
-----------------	---

Location:	United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816799914
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-cracking-zikas-genetic-code/docview/1816799914/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 403 of 500

Business News: SpaceX Blast Threatens To Leave NASA in a Bind --- With schedule in doubt for U.S.

spacecraft, agency faces prospect of using costly stopgap

Pasztor, Andy . Pasztor, Andy.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Before the latest accident, NASA inspector general Paul Martin had determined that both SpaceX and Boeing Co., the other contractor seeking to carry astronauts to the space station under fixed-price contracts, faced multiple challenges in meeting their schedules.

FULL TEXT

The explosion of a Space Exploration Technologies Corp. rocket during ground tests last week has added urgency to a key question for NASA: When will U.S. spacecraft be ready once again to carry astronauts into orbit?

The accident involving billionaire Elon Musk's company turned its roughly 15-story-tall Falcon 9 rocket into a fireball, destroyed a commercial satellite on board and damaged the launchpad at Florida's Cape Canaveral Air Force Station.

It is too early for investigators to conclude exactly what caused the accident or what it means for SpaceX, as the Southern California company is called, or its commercial customers, who already are fuming about launch delays.

But the incident has space experts questioning projections that U.S.-built boosters and capsules, including the Falcon 9, are likely to start ferrying U.S. crews to the international space station in less than two years.

If that forecast turns out to be too optimistic, top officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration might decide to reserve extra seats, costing more than $81 million each, on Russian space vehicles as a stopgap.

NASA has contracted for seats through 2018. But, with what industry officials say are up to three-year lead times required for reservations, NASA may have to act soon in case it appears U.S. alternatives won't be ready until 2019.

Over the weekend, SpaceX said it began "the careful and deliberate process of understanding the causes and fixes" for the blast. "The pad clearly incurred damage, but the scope has yet to be fully determined," the company said, adding it was confident that two alternate launchpads could fulfill its launch needs.

NASA expressed confidence that its commercial partners could transport its crews. But the agency said it was too soon to know whether spacecraft-development schedules would be affected. It added that commercial spacecraft must meet NASA's safety requirements, such as an abort system that can be activated while still on the ground to propel crews out of danger.

"Accidents of that magnitude are not supposed to happen on the launchpad," Howard McCurdy, a space policy expert at American University in Washington, said on Monday. A 1967 explosion that killed three astronauts during a test on the launchpad "revealed deep-seated deficiencies that had to be overcome" before the U.S. could fly astronauts to the Moon, he said.

Before the latest accident, NASA inspector general Paul Martin had determined that both SpaceX and Boeing Co., the other contractor seeking to carry astronauts to the space station under fixed-price contracts, faced multiple challenges in meeting their schedules. He said in a report that manned missions to the orbiting laboratory were bound to slip to at least late 2018.

As recently as June, according to the report, SpaceX still hoped to have NASA certify the first unmanned demonstration of the company's Dragon capsule sometime this month, and to blast off before the end of 2016. By the time of the accident, however, plans for that flight had slipped to the third quarter of 2017.

A SpaceX spokesman didn't say when Falcon 9 launches might resume. He said the priority was "safely and reliably returning to flight."

Pad repairs may take several months, and another Florida launch site won't be ready before November.

One feature accident investigators are expected to scrutinize is the rocket's use of a supercooled propellant to increase thrust, and whether a malfunction of the rocket itself or in the ground-based fueling system might have touched off the explosion.

The probe also is expected to look at SpaceX's effort to save time and money by loading satellites and crews atop rockets before engines are test-fired at the pad. Established launch providers previously had shunned that practice as too risky.

Credit: By Andy Pasztor

DETAILS

Subject:	Astronauts; Space stations; Commercial space ventures; Explosions; Rocket launches; Moon
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92711 : Space Research and Technology
Location:	Cape Canaveral Florida; United States--US
People:	Musk, Elon
Company / organization:	Name: National Aeronautics & Space Administration--NASA; NAICS: 927110; Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414; Name: Space Exploration Technologies Corp; NAICS: 336414, 336415
Classification:	92711: Space Research and Technology
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816799620
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-spacex-blast-threatens-leave-nasa/docview/1816799620/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 404 of 500

Investing in Funds & ETFs: A Monthly Analysis --- News Challenge: The Month in Funds and Investing: Test Your Smarts on Herbalife, OJ and Indexing

Adinolfi , Joseph . Adinolfi, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In the 30 days leading up to Aug. 23, the U.S. stock market saw volatility fall to its lowest level in more than two decades. Who was named fund manager of the decade in 1999 by Morningstar Inc. and last month ended a long partnership with one of the U.S.'s best-known money managers? A. Bill Miller B. Mario Gabelli C. John Bogle D. Sir John Templeton ANSWER:

FULL TEXT

August was an almost unbelievably quiet month for markets.

In the 30 days leading up to Aug. 23, the U.S. stock market saw volatility fall to its lowest level in more than two decades. The 10-year Treasury yield moved in a tight range, mostly between 1.5% and 1.6%. The U.S. dollar, driven by hawkish remarks from top Federal Reserve officials, crept higher. The Dow Jones Industrial Average ended the month down 0.2%, ending a six-month winning streak.

Looking ahead, the question on many investors' minds is: Will the Fed raise interest rates in September? Whatever the Fed does, its decision is sure to have a major impact across markets.

How much do you know about news in fund investing and markets last month? Here's a quiz to test your knowledge.

1. This investing titan discussed selling his stake in a nutritional-supplements company to a group that included one of the company's most prominent critics.

A. William Ackman

B. Daniel Loeb

C. Carl Icahn

D. Leon Black

ANSWER: C. Carl Icahn, instead of selling, bought more shares in Herbalife Ltd., days after news Carl Icahn of the prospective sale surfaced.

2. Who was named fund manager of the decade in 1999 by Morningstar Inc. and last month ended a long partnership with one of the U.S.'s best-known money managers?

A. Bill Miller

B. Mario Gabelli

C. John Bogle

D. Sir John Templeton

ANSWER: A. Funds managed by Bill Miller's firm saw their assets drop 38% over the first seven months of the year to $1.8 billion as investors soured on active managers.

3. This prominent buyout firm agreed to pay more than $50 million in fines to settle charges over its fee practices.

A. Apollo Global Management LLC

B. KKR & Co.

C. Warburg Pincus LLC

D. Blackstone Group LP

ANSWER: A. The SEC alleged that Apollo Global Management failed to sufficiently disclose to its fund investors that it planned to collect large one-time fees from companies it sold or took public.

4. The market for this type of commodities future has nearly disappeared thanks to disease and declining consumer demand.

A. Soybean oil

B. Lean hogs

C. Frozen orange-juice concentrate

D. Chicago SRW wheat

ANSWER: C. The number of futures contracts for frozen orange-juice concentrate held by traders has dropped by more than two-thirds to just 15,410 in August from a high of 48,921 in 1997.

5. The summer rise in the U.S. dollar London interbank offered rate (dollar Libor) has helped spur bets that this currency, long confined in a tight range, could strengthen. Which of the following is it?

A. The Saudi riyal

B. The Taiwan dollar

C. The Chinese yuan

D. The Hong Kong dollar

ANSWER: D. Traders are betting that the Hong Kong dollar will overshoot its decades-old peg of 7.75 to the dollar as ample liquidity and high dividend yields draw global investors into Hong Kong's financial system.

6. A widely publicized report from investment firm Sanford C. Bernstein alleged that passive investing is worse for the global economy than _____.

A. Active investing

B. Fascism

C. Millennials

D. Marxism

ANSWER: D. Marxism. Researchers worry that the rapid growth of passive index funds could lead to a concentration of ownership unrivaled since the days of J.P. Morgan and John D. Rockefeller.

7. Regulatory filings suggested that this hedge-fund investor turned bearish on gold in the second quarter after locking in impressive gains.

A. George Soros

B. Larry Robbins

C. Bill Ackman

D. Jacob Gottlieb

ANSWER: A.

George Soros sold the majority of his stake in the world's largest gold producer, and his full stake in mining company Silver Wheaton. Gold is up 24% for the year.

8. This firm became the latest pharmaceutical company to face popular outrage after jacking up the cost of a widely used emergency allergy treatment.

A. Gilead Sciences Inc.

B. Pfizer Inc.

C. Roche

D. Mylan NV

ANSWER: D. Mylan NV said that it would introduce a cheaper, generic version of its lifesaving EpiPen after the backlash led to a 12% drop in the company's share price in one week.

9. The three main U.S. stock benchmarks each logged a new closing high on the same day, the first time this has happened since:

A. 2007

B. 2000

C. 1999

D. 1995

ANSWER: C. 1999. U.S. stocks pulled off the elusive "triple record day" twice during the month of August, on Aug. 11 and Aug. 15, as shares drifted higher in quiet summer trading.

10. Shares in this health-care company slid after Muddy Waters Capital LLC, which is known for shorting stocks, announced it was betting against the company.

A. UnitedHealth Group Inc.

B. St. Jude Medical Inc.

C. Tenet Healthcare Corp.

D. HCA Holdings Inc.

ANSWER: B. In its report, Muddy Waters claimed that St. Jude's pacemakers and other heart devices were vulnerable to hacking and other cybersecurity threats. St. Jude denied the claims.

Mr. Adinolfi is a markets reporter for MarketWatch in New York. Email him at joseph.adinolfi@dowjones.com.

Credit: By Joseph Adinolfi

DETAILS

Subject:	Series & special reports; Mutual funds; Stock exchanges; American dollar; Investments; Dow Jones averages
Business indexing term:	Subject: Mutual funds Stock exchanges American dollar; Corporation: Mylan NV Herbalife Ltd; Industry: 52591 : Open-End Investment Funds 52599 : Other Financial Vehicles 52394 : Portfolio Management and Investment Advice 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
People:	Icahn, Carl C
Company / organization:	Name: Morningstar Inc; NAICS: 513140, 513210; Name: Herbalife Ltd; NAICS: 325411, 325412, 424490
Classification:	52591: Open-End Investment Funds; 52599: Other Financial Vehicles; 52394: Portfolio Management and Investment Advice; 52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	R.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 6, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816791301
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/investing-funds-amp-etfs-monthly-analysis-news/docview/1816791301/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 405 of 500

U.S. News: Stanford Student In Assault Case Freed

Calfas, Jennifer . Calfas, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Santa Clara County Sheriff Laurie Smith told reporters on the scene she supports a bill passed by California lawmakers earlier this week that bans probation under certain conditions for those convicted of sexual assault, which could have resulted in a longer prison term for Mr. Turner.

FULL TEXT

Former Stanford University swimmer Brock Turner was released from jail Friday morning after serving three months of a six-month jail term for sexually assaulting an unconscious woman.

Mr. Turner, whose sentence drew national outrage and launched an effort to unseat the judge who imposed it, walked out of a Northern California jail before dawn and said nothing as he walked straight into an SUV.

Santa Clara County Sheriff Laurie Smith told reporters on the scene she supports a bill passed by California lawmakers earlier this week that bans probation under certain conditions for those convicted of sexual assault, which could have resulted in a longer prison term for Mr. Turner.

"He should've never been in our jail. He should've been in prison," Sheriff Smith said after Mr. Turner's release.

Mr. Turner, 21, was convicted in March after sexually assaulting a woman on Stanford's campus after a fraternity party in January 2015. He was found guilty of three felony counts of sexual assault.

The charges could have amounted to 14 years in prison. Mr. Turner was sentenced to six months in county jail and three years of probation in early June.

In sentencing, Santa Clara County Superior Court Judge Aaron Persky said a longer term "would have a severe impact" on Mr. Turner. Mr. Turner was released after serving half his sentence as California's penal code awards credit for time served.

The victim, who remains anonymous, wrote a statement to the court in June that sparked a public response. Earlier this week, California lawmakers passed a bill that would bar probation as an option for someone convicted of sexually assaulting someone who is unconscious or intoxicated and unable to give consent. The bill awaits a decision from Gov. Jerry Brown.

Mr. Turner was also sentenced to three years of probation, and must register as a sex offender. Mike Armstrong, the attorney representing Mr. Turner, declined to comment.

Judge Persky will no longer hear criminal cases at his request, according to Judge Rise Jones Pichon, who presides over the Superior Court of California, County of Santa Clara. Judge Persky couldn't be reached for comment.

Mr. Turner won't be returning to Stanford, as the university expelled him.

Credit: By Jennifer Calfas

DETAILS

Subject:	Parole & probation; Sex crimes; Criminal sentences; Sex offenders; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92215 : Parole Offices and Probation Offices
Location:	California; United States--US
People:	Turner, Brock
Company / organization:	Name: Stanford University; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	92215: Parole Offices and Probation Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293206
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-stanford-student-assault-case-freed/docview/1816293206/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 406 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Pervaiz Shallwani --- NEW YORK CITY Bronx Man Indicted On Murder Charge A Bronx man accused of grabbing a police officer's gun and using it to kill a man was indicted on murder and other charges, the Bronx district attorney's office said Friday.

FULL TEXT

NEW JERSEY

Pennsylvania Tax

Deal Ending: Christie

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie said Friday he is pulling out of a nearly 4-decade-old income-tax agreement with Pennsylvania, all but ensuring that thousands of residents in each state will see their tax burdens go up.

The Republican governor said his hand was forced because the Democratic-led Legislature failed to find $250 million in health-insurance savings for public workers despite assuming the savings in the budget. He said he would reconsider ending the agreement if lawmakers deliver the savings.

The 1977 reciprocity agreement allows residents who work in either state to pay income taxes at their home state's rate.

A spokesman for Democratic Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf said that Mr. Christie "erred significantly" and that his action punishes Pennsylvanians.

Democratic New Jersey Senate President Steve Sweeney said Mr. Christie is burdening New Jersey residents and called on him to renegotiate.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK CITY

Fifth Gabay Shooting

Suspect Is Arrested

A man arrested in California is expected to be returned to New York this weekend to face charges in the shooting death of an aide to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo last Labor Day weekend, authorities said Friday.

Kenny Bazile was the fifth suspect arrested in the death of Carey Gabay, authorities said. Mr. Gabay was caught in the crossfire of a gang shootout last Sept. 7 during J'Ouvert, the overnight street party that serves as the unofficial start of the annual West Indian American Day Parade.

Authorities tracked Mr. Bazile to Palm Desert, Calif., where he was arrested Thursday, police said.

Mr. Bazile was expected to be flown back to New York on Saturday for arraignment on charges including murder. He couldn't be reached for comment.

-- Pervaiz Shallwani

NEW YORK CITY

Bronx Man Indicted

On Murder Charge

A Bronx man accused of grabbing a police officer's gun and using it to kill a man was indicted on murder and other charges, the Bronx district attorney's office said Friday.

Prosecutors said Efrain Guzman, 30 years old, assaulted and tried to rob a bodega worker. He then pulled a New York Police Department officer's gun from its holster and killed another man who had rushed to help the worker, they said.

An attorney for Mr. Guzman declined to comment.

-- Corinne Ramey

QUEENS

Museum Will Close

During U.S. Open

The Queens Museum will be closed from Sept. 3 until Sept. 14 because of increased security at the U.S. Open tennis tournament, museum officials said Friday.

The USTA Billie Jean King National Tennis Center and the museum are adjacent to one another at Flushing Meadows-Corona Park in Queens.

This year the United States Tennis Association debuted a new, expanded Grandstand Stadium located in the southwest corner of the tennis center -- closer to the museum. A USTA spokesman said the tennis center's fence was moved about 30 feet to the south as a result.

The museum now sits inside the security perimeter for the event, and the police presence is more intense, said Laura Raicovich, the museum's executive director.

She said the museum hoped to be open next year during the tournament.

-- Jennifer Smith

DETAILS

Subject:	Shootings; Agreements; Museums; Indictments
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71211 : Museums
Location:	Pennsylvania; California; New Jersey; United States--US
People:	King, Billie Jean; Gabay, Carey; Cuomo, Andrew M

Company / organization:	Name: Senate-New Jersey; NAICS: 921120; Name: United States Tennis Association; NAICS: 813990; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	71211: Museums
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293154
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1816293154/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Top Education Official in N.J. To Step Down

Brody, Leslie . Brody, Leslie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Gov. Chris Christie tapped Kimberley Harrington, a former classroom teacher who has been serving as the state's chief academic officer, as acting commissioner of the Department of Education. Since joining the agency in 2012, she has led its efforts to have teachers align their curriculum with the state's changing academic expectations.

FULL TEXT

New Jersey Education Commissioner David Hespe said Friday he will step down at the end of September after more than two years as the state's education chief.

Mr. Hespe steered the system for nearly 1.4 million children through a turbulent era with changes in teacher evaluations, the expansion of charter schools, a new online state test and a surge of families opting out of annual exams.

Gov. Chris Christie tapped Kimberley Harrington, a former classroom teacher who has been serving as the state's chief academic officer, as acting commissioner of the Department of Education. Since joining the agency in 2012, she has led its efforts to have teachers align their curriculum with the state's changing academic expectations.

If confirmed to the $141,000-a-year post by the state Senate, Ms. Harrington would be New Jersey's fifth education commissioner in seven years.

Mr. Hespe, a 56-year-old resident of Montgomery Township, also held the commissioner's post from 1999 through 2001. He said in an interview that he wanted to explore new opportunities -- likely in education -- and it was "a good time to move on" after helping schools use data more effectively to improve teaching.

During his latest stint as commissioner, Mr. Hespe said he aimed to help teachers see "standards and assessment as an integral part of learning, not as an accountability add-on, and I think we accomplished that."

Some parents and teachers have criticized the state's emphasis on standardized testing as excessive. Thousands of students, especially those in high school, opted out of annual assessments during the past two years.

One of Mr. Hespe's latest moves drew condemnation from the state's main teachers union. On Wednesday, the department said that students' improvement on state exams would make up 30% of 2016-17 evaluations for principals and teachers in certain grades and subjects.

That is a significant increase from the past two years when 10% of these educators' reviews were tied to student scores.

The New Jersey Education Association, which has long called this method of rating teachers unreliable, said it would lead to more time being spent on test preparation for an exam the union described as flawed.

Mr. Hespe said the state's evaluation law aimed to give student achievement substantial weight.

The union's president, Wendell Steinhauer, said it has had "serious disagreements" with Mr. Hespe on policy matters but Mr. Hespe has "always been accessible and willing to listen."

Mr. Steinhauer said Ms. Harrington's classroom experience would serve her well in her new role.

Ms. Harrington, 45, of Warren County, was a teacher for 16 years in all grades from kindergarten through eighth, mostly in Blairstown. She also served as a curriculum coordinator there. She earned a master's degree in education leadership from the College of New Jersey and has two children.

The New Jersey School Boards Association, an advocacy group for school boards, said in an email that it "enjoyed an excellent relationship" with Ms. Harrington.

If confirmed, her tenure likely wouldn't last beyond the GOP governor's term, which ends in January 2018. New Jersey governors typically appoint their own education chiefs.

Credit: By Leslie Brody

DETAILS

Subject:	Education; Resignations; Labor unions; Curricula; Teachers; School boards
Business indexing term:	Subject: Resignations Labor unions; Industry: 81393 : Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations 61111 : Elementary and Secondary Schools
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Hespe, David
Classification:	81393: Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations; 61111: Elementary and Secondary Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293149
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-top-education-official-n-j-step-down/docview/1816293149/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 408 of 500

U.S. News: Economic Data Not Likely To Help Either Campaign

Timiraos, Nick . Timiraos, Nick.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Friday's jobs report for August provides the latest sign that economic ups and downs aren't likely to confer an obvious edge for either Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump entering the final stretch of the presidential campaign.

FULL TEXT

Friday's jobs report for August provides the latest sign that economic ups and downs aren't likely to confer an obvious edge for either Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump entering the final stretch of the presidential campaign.

Employers added 151,000 jobs in August and the unemployment rate held steady at 4.9%, indicating neither an impending slowdown that might boost Mr. Trump, the Republican nominee, nor a strong upturn that would free Mrs. Clinton to more tightly embrace the economic record of President Barack Obama.

To be sure, the economy is generally sturdy and many of the worst-case economic fears for Democrats this year haven't materialized. Hiring in May slowed sharply, with employers adding just 24,000 jobs, the worst month in five years. That proved an aberration. Job growth over the three months since then has averaged 232,000 jobs, near the highest level of the year.

Republicans cast Friday's data in a harsh light. The report showed "another month of mediocre job growth," said RNC Chairman Reince Priebus. The Trump campaign called separate trade and manufacturing data "horrible."

On the trail, Mrs. Clinton has conducted a balancing act, touting the Obama administration's postcrisis policies while focusing more attention on continuing economic anxieties. Last month in Philadelphia, she said Mr. Obama had saved the economy from its worst crisis since the 1930s, rescued the auto industry and imposed tougher rules on Wall Street.

But at other events in Iowa, Ohio and Michigan, her remarks on the economy didn't mention Mr. Obama and focused on problems like income inequality. "The tide is not rising fast enough, and it's certainly not lifting all boats," she said in Warren, Mich.

Several economic measures have surpassed benchmarks GOP candidates laid out four years ago. Republican nominee Mitt Romney, for example, promised to bring unemployment down to 6% by this year.

But other economic indicators have been disappointing, giving Mr. Trump fodder to press his argument for change. Gross domestic product rose by a seasonally adjusted annual rate of just 1.1% in the second quarter after disappointing readings of 0.8% and 0.9% in the prior two periods.

Polls show voters divided on the economy. Last month's Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll showed 50% agreed with the statement that Democrats should continue to control the White House, while 48% said it was "time for change."

Credit: By Nick Timiraos

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Gross Domestic Product--GDP; Unemployment; Economic conditions; Political campaigns; Nominations
Business indexing term:	Subject: Gross Domestic Product--GDP Unemployment Economic conditions; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
People:	Trump, Donald J; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293132
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-data-not-likely-help-either/docview/1816293132/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 409 of 500

U.S. News: Hermine Heads Up the Atlantic Coast

McWhirter, Cameron . McWhirter, Cameron.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

North Carolina officials prepared for the storm by staging rescue boats, high-water trucks, Humvee military trucks and state National Guard members in eastern counties susceptible to flooding, said Mike Sprayberry, director of North Carolina's Division of Emergency Management.

FULL TEXT

After battering part of Florida's Gulf Coast, Hurricane Hermine weakened to a tropical storm as it moved northeast through Georgia into South Carolina, threatening to wallop the coastal areas of the Carolinas and mid-Atlantic states.

The storm's center was about 35 miles southwest of Myrtle Beach, S.C., as of 8 p.m. Friday, with wind as high as 50 miles per hour and heavy rain, according to the National Weather Service. The storm was expected to move across coastal North Carolina on Friday night and into Saturday morning, and move off the North Carolina coast by Saturday afternoon.

Although it weakened after striking landfall in Florida early Friday, the National Weather Service warned Friday that Hermine "could reinvigorate" once it reaches open water again.

About 44,000 customers in South Carolina were without power, according to the state Emergency Management Division. The state delivered 1,000 sandbags to Darlington County in central South Carolina, and shelters were on standby but were empty as of late Friday afternoon. Pawleys Island, S.C., police posted a tweet Friday afternoon warning residents to expect roadways to flood during the next high tide, which was expected at about 9:50 p.m. Friday.

North Carolina officials prepared for the storm by staging rescue boats, high-water trucks, Humvee military trucks and state National Guard members in eastern counties susceptible to flooding, said Mike Sprayberry, director of North Carolina's Division of Emergency Management. Duke Energy, which provides power to most of the state, lined up about 150 workers in central North Carolina in case of outages.

"We want this thing to move in and out as quickly as possible with as little damage as possible," said North Carolina Gov. Pat McCrory, who added that he was encouraged by forecasts that showed a weakened Hermine.

He said his goal is to be "over-prepared and underwhelmed."

Dave Smith, who works at Hurricane Jack's Marine, a boat parts consignment shop in Bridgeton, N.C., in the path of the storm, said workers brought down some canvas sails in anticipation of the storm, but not much else.

"It's nothing but a rain storm," said Mr. Smith. "Good weather for ducks." He did expect a 3-foot rise on the Neuse River next to Bridgeton and flooding of some areas from rain, he said.

Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe declared a state of emergency on Friday and activated the National Guard to provide help if needed to local governments as they clear roads, restore electricity and repair other damage. The Maryland Emergency Management Agency also made preparations for the storm, warning residents of the state's Eastern Shore to watch the storm's progress.

In Georgia, roughly 125,000 utility customers lost power in the storm. Crystal Buchanan, spokeswoman for the Georgia Emergency Management & Homeland Security Agency, said she expected many of them to regain power quickly as work crews repaired the damage to power lines.

Valerie Bauerlein contributed to this article.

Credit: By Cameron McWhirter

DETAILS

Subject:	Hurricanes; Military reserves; Storm damage; Floods; Coasts; Rain
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	Atlantic states
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293082
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hermine-heads-up-atlantic-coast/docview/1816293082/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 410 of 500

Stocks Rally, Even as Drugmakers Falter --- A new drug-pricing proposal from Clinton dents biotech shares; gold and oil advance

Driebusch, Corrie; Gold, Riva . Driebusch, Corrie; Gold, Riva.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Shares of biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies fell after Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton unveiled a new drug-pricing plan that would let government officials impose penalties for "unjustified price increases" on older treatments.

FULL TEXT

U.S. stocks rose, even as declines by drugmakers cut into the broader market's advance.

Shares of biotechnology and pharmaceutical companies fell after Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton unveiled a new drug-pricing plan that would let government officials impose penalties for "unjustified price increases" on older treatments.

The moves served as a reminder that news unrelated to the Federal Reserve still matter to markets.

Stocks, bonds and even the dollar have been locked in a fairly narrow trading range and volumes have dropped off sharply. Both implied and realized volatility have plumbed their lowest levels in months, which many traders have blamed on uncertainty about the next moves by the Fed.

Many traders expected Friday's jobs report, the last broad reading of the labor market before the Fed's September meeting, to spark stock-market swings, but that wasn't the case. In morning trading, major stock indexes rose following a slightly softer-than-expected August jobs report. Declines in health-care stocks caused indexes to pare gains in the afternoon.

The Nasdaq Biotechnology index declined 0.2%, while health-care companies gained the least in the S&P 500, rising less than 0.1%.

Shares of EpiPen maker Mylan, a company at the heart of the drug-pricing debate, fell $1.95, or 4.7%, to $39.97.

The S&P 500 ended the day up 9.12 points, or 0.4%, at 2179.98 and the Dow Jones Industrial Average gained 72.66, or 0.4%, to 18491.96. The Nasdaq Composite edged up 22.69, or 0.4%, to 5249.90.

For the week, the S&P 500 and Dow both rose 0.5%; the Nasdaq rose 0.6%.

Fed officials, including Chairwoman Janet Yellen and Vice Chairman Stanley Fischer, have signaled in recent speeches that interest rates may be on an upward trend in the near future as long as economic data cooperates.

That has called into question some of the most popular, yield-chasing trades of 2016. Utilities, one of the best-performing S&P 500 sectors this year, fell more than 6% in August. Financial stocks have rallied in recent weeks on hopes for higher rates, which can boost bank profitability.

Friday's jobs data weren't decisive enough to spark substantial buying or selling of these interest-rate-sensitive trades, traders said.

The KBW Nasdaq Bank index, which is up about 8.5% from a month ago, rose 0.5%. Utility companies in the S&P 500 also gained, up 1.2%.

Some traders said they aren't taking the fewer-than-expected jobs gains at face value, and instead they are discounting them in order to take into account the so-called August curse. Historically, the August jobs report has been a seasonally weak and volatile one, and it is often revised substantially higher.

Investors largely expect the next U.S. interest-rate rise to take place by December. The odds of an increase by December, as measured by the fed-funds-futures market, remained steady compared with before the jobs report was released at more than 50%.

Gold rose 0.8% Friday to $1,322.10 an ounce.

The dollar weakened initially before reversing to be higher against most major currencies in late New York trading.

The WSJ Dollar Index, which tracks the value of a basket of 16 currencies, gained 0.1%.

The Stoxx Europe 600 advanced 2% following a mixed session in Asia.

Shares in Australia fell 0.8% to a seven-week low, while markets in Japan closed little changed.

Hong Kong's Hang Seng Index gained 0.5% to its highest close this year.

U.S.-traded crude oil rose 3% to $44.44 a barrel, snapping a four-session losing streak after Russia signaled support for a limit on output.

Credit: By Corrie Driebusch and Riva Gold

DETAILS

Subject:	Dow Jones averages; Daily markets (wsj); Stock exchanges; Stock prices; Interest rates; Volatility
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices Interest rates Volatility; Industry: 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
People:	Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Classification:	52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
column:	Friday's Markets
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293081
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-rally-even-as-drugmakers-falter-new-drug/docview/1816293081/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 411 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Clinton used more than a dozen email devices during her time as secretary of state, and a technician took steps to delete an archive of her emails after House lawmakers demanded they be saved, according to documents released by the FBI. ---

FULL TEXT

Clinton used more than a dozen email devices during her time as secretary of state, and a technician took steps to delete an archive of her emails after House lawmakers demanded they be saved, according to documents released by the FBI.

China has announced several actions that appear aimed at addressing foreign concerns about its economy ahead of the G-20 summit.

Uzbek President Karimov, who ruled his nation with an iron hand for over 25 years, died following a stroke.

Spain's Rajoy lost a second confidence vote, with parliament again rejecting his bid for a new term as premier.

An explosion left at least 14 dead in the hometown of Philippine leader Duterte, who called the blast terrorism.

A bomb attack at a court complex in northwestern Pakistan killed at least 12.

Hermine moved up the Atlantic Coast after battering parts of Florida.

DETAILS

Location:	China; Spain; Florida; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293074

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1816293074/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2021-09-13

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 412 of 500

World News: Putin and Abe, Seeking Closer Economic Ties, Discuss Disputed Islands

Grove, Thomas . Grove, Thomas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Russian President Vladimir Putin and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe on Friday discussed ways to resolve a decadeslong territorial dispute between their countries as they seek to deepen economic ties.

FULL TEXT

MOSCOW -- Russian President Vladimir Putin and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe on Friday discussed ways to resolve a decadeslong territorial dispute between their countries as they seek to deepen economic ties.

Japan is eager to enforce its claim to the southern part of a chain of islands that Moscow has controlled since Soviet troops seized them at the end of World War II.

The dispute over the archipelago known as the Kuril Islands in Russia and the Northern Territories in Japan has been a thorn in relations between the countries and has precluded their signing a peace treaty after the war.

Both nations are eager to develop economic relations, with Moscow seeking Japanese investment in the country's underdeveloped far-eastern region, and Tokyo increasingly relying on Russia for energy imports.

"Regarding the peace treaty, we were able to have a fairly detailed discussion among just the two of us," Mr. Abe said following his meeting with Mr. Putin in Vladivostok.

"At the meeting [today] I felt a strong sense that we are moving ahead," Mr. Abe said.

Before the end of the talks, Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said no substantive resolution to the territorial dispute was expected.

Mr. Putin plans to visit Japan on Dec. 15 for the first time since 2009.

The meeting in Vladivostok follows a meeting in Sochi in which the two leaders agreed on a plan to boost economic cooperation in eight sectors, including energy development, assistance for industry modernization in Russia and the development of infrastructure in the Far East.

Credit: By Thomas Grove

DETAILS

Subject:	Territorial issues; International relations; Prime ministers
Business indexing term:	Subject: International relations
Location:	Japan; Russia
People:	Putin, Vladimir; Abe, Shinzo
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1816293040
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-putin-abe-seeking-closer-economic-ties/docview/1816293040/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 413 of 500

City News: Top Newark Teachers Receive Bonuses

Brody, Leslie . Brody, Leslie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Newark public school officials said Friday they handed out $1.7 million in bonuses to 283 top teachers, part of a groundbreaking contract for performance pay.

FULL TEXT

Newark public school officials said Friday they handed out $1.7 million in bonuses to 283 top teachers, part of a groundbreaking contract for performance pay.

Merit pay began in the city schools as part of a 2012 contract that was funded in part by a $100 million grant from Facebook founder Mark Zuckerberg, who said he hoped to make Newark a model for turning around a troubled school system.

The contract's provision to give financial incentives for strong classroom performance was unusual: Teachers unions often balk at bonuses, saying they cause dissension and competition among colleagues who need to collaborate. Teachers typically get increases for longevity and other accomplishments, such as earning advanced degrees.

In Newark, where teachers deemed effective get raises for longevity and other factors, this year's bonuses ranged from $5,000 to $12,500. The highest ones went to three teachers who worked in hard-to-staff subject areas in the most struggling schools. Officials in the state-operated district said these bonuses helped with its efforts to retain talent, and this year they were funded from the district's budget.

It is unclear whether the merit pay plan will continue. The Newark Teachers Union and district are in negotiations over a new contract to replace the one that expired in June 2015. Union president John Abeigon said merit pay remained in the draft language, but in order for it to remain he wanted the district to say where the money would come from. Mr. Abeigon said his priority was getting raises across the board and retroactive increases for the past year.

"Don't talk poverty to me with one mouth and then tell me with a separate tongue we will have millions to give" on performance bonuses, he said.

A spokesman said the district didn't discuss contract negotiations, rewarding top teachers is a priority, and the bonuses represent just a small piece of a nearly $1 billion budget.

(See related letters: "Feedback Friday: Different Takes / The People Behind Successful Students" -- WSJ Sept. 23, 2016)

Credit: By Leslie Brody

DETAILS

Subject:	Teachers; Bonuses; Merit increases; Contract negotiations; Labor unions; School districts
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bonuses Merit increases Contract negotiations Labor unions; Industry: 81393 : Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations 61111 : Elementary and Secondary Schools
Location:	Newark New Jersey; United States--US
Classification:	81393: Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations; 61111: Elementary and Secondary Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293036
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-top-newark-teachers-receive-bonuses/docview/1816293036/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 414 of 500

U.S. News: Trade Gap Narrows As Exports Rebound

Anna Louie Sussman . Anna Louie Sussman.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. trade deficit narrowed in July as American exports picked up, a potential sign of strengthening global demand.

FULL TEXT

The U.S. trade deficit narrowed in July as American exports picked up, a potential sign of strengthening global demand.

The export bump was largely due to record shipments of beverages, foods and feeds, especially soybeans. While the increase in exports will support third-quarter growth, some economists warned it could be a one-off.

"The massive surge in soybean exports likely will reverse," said Ian Shepherdson, chief economist at Pantheon

Macroeconomics. "In the meantime, though, these data suggest that foreign trade is set to make a positive contribution to third-quarter GDP growth."

The trade gap shrank 11.6% from a month earlier to a seasonally adjusted $39.47 billion, the Commerce Department said. Imports fell 0.8% while overall exports rose 1.9%.

July's rise in exports was the largest increase in over two years. It came despite an increase in the dollar's value against other currencies in late June after Britain's vote to leave the EU, a rise that lasted through most of July. A strong dollar makes U.S. goods and services more expensive for overseas buyers and imports cheaper for U.S. consumers.

The fall in imports was led by a drop in imported consumer goods, especially pharmaceutical preparations.

Credit: By Anna Louie Sussman

DETAILS

Subject:	International trade; Exports; Trade deficit
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade Exports Trade deficit
Location:	United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816293021

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-trade-gap-narrows-as-exports-rebound/docview/1816293021/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 415 of 500

Business News: Merck Abandons Osteoporosis Drug

Steele, Anne . Steele, Anne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Merck & Co. said Friday it would discontinue developing the osteoporosis drug odanacatib and not seek regulatory approval for the treatment because it carries a higher risk of stroke.

FULL TEXT

Merck & Co. said Friday it would discontinue developing the osteoporosis drug odanacatib and not seek regulatory approval for the treatment because it carries a higher risk of stroke.

New Jersey-based Merck said it decided to stop development after an independent analysis confirmed an increased risk of stroke with use of the drug. The data from the analysis will be presented this month at the American Society for Bone Mineral Research.

"We are disappointed that the overall benefit-risk profile for odanacatib does not support filing or further development," said Dr. Roger Perlmutter, president of Merck Research Laboratories.

Merck, in its annual report in February, said it had planned to seek regulatory approval for the drug in the U.S. and Japan following the independent analysis.

Osteoporosis reduces bone density and strength, leading to an increased risk of bone fractures.

Dr. Perlmutter said that while the treatment showed the ability to reduce the risk of osteoporotic fractures, the increased risk of stroke "does not support further development."

Merck's problems with odanacatib predates the hiring of Dr. Perlmutter. In February 2013, the drugmaker signaled delays in seeking approval for the drug. A month later, Merck hired Dr. Perlmutter, the former research chief at Amgen Inc., to lead and restructure its own research-and-development operation.

Merck shares have risen 19% so far this year.

Credit: By Anne Steele

DETAILS

Subject:	Osteoporosis; Pharmaceutical industry; Regulatory approval; Fractures
Business indexing term:	Subject: Pharmaceutical industry Regulatory approval; Industry: 32541 : Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Merck & Co Inc; NAICS: 325411, 325412
Classification:	32541: Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816292994

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-merck-abandons-osteoporosis-drug/docview/1816292994/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 416 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. trade deficit narrowed in July as American exports picked up. ---

FULL TEXT

U.S. employers added 151,000 jobs in August, but the cooled growth from recent months reinforced expectations that the Fed will push off a rate increase until December at the earliest.

The U.S. trade deficit narrowed in July as American exports picked up.

Treasurys reversed early gains as investors assessed the jobs data. Stocks rose, even as drugmaker declines cut into a broader advance.

An FAA advisory group is proposing that U.S. airlines be able to hire co-pilots with far less cockpit experience than currently required.

Samsung said it would replace millions of Galaxy Note 7 smartphones because of battery fires.

Ireland will appeal the EU's ruling that it should recoup billions in allegedly unpaid taxes from Apple.

Beijing has opened an antitrust review of the acquisition of Uber's China business by ride-hailing firm Didi.

DETAILS

Subject:	Trade deficit
Business indexing term:	Subject: Trade deficit
Location:	Beijing China; Ireland; China; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Aviation Administration--FAA; NAICS: 926120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1816292991
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1816292991/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 417 of 500

U.S. News: Individual Doctor 'Report Cards' Show Impact

Calvert, Scott . Calvert, Scott.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Several states, including Arizona, Kentucky and Ohio, are using their state prescription monitoring databases to send doctors individualized "report cards" that show how their prescribing of addictive opioids and other drugs compares with their peers.

FULL TEXT

Several states, including Arizona, Kentucky and Ohio, are using their state prescription monitoring databases to send doctors individualized "report cards" that show how their prescribing of addictive opioids and other drugs compares with their peers.

Arizona's quarterly reports rate a doctor's prescribing of oxycodone and certain other drugs as normal, high, severe or extreme compared with the state's other doctors in his medical specialty.

During a two-year pilot program, opiate prescriptions fell 10% in five counties in the pilot and rose in other counties not involved in the test, said Dean Wright, former head of the state's prescription-monitoring program.

The report cards also contributed to a 4% drop in overdose deaths in the pilot counties, he said. The state in June sent notices to more than 13,000 doctors statewide.

The report cards list statistics such as how many of a doctor's patients received controlled substances from five or more doctors.

(See related article: "States Fight Opioid Epidemic With Data --- Authorities monitor doctors' prescriptions; critics decry risk to patient relationships" -- WSJ Sept. 3, 2016)

Credit: By Scott Calvert

DETAILS

Subject:	Narcotics; Physicians
Location:	Kentucky; Ohio; Arizona; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816292980
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-individual-doctor-report-cards-show/docview/1816292980/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 418 of 500

U.S. News: States Fight Opioid Epidemic With Data --- Authorities monitor doctors' prescriptions; critics decry risk to patient relationships

Calvert, Scott; Campo-Flores, Arian . Calvert, Scott; Campo-Flores, Arian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The ACLU has filed briefs in several court cases around the U.S., including a lawsuit by California doctor Alwin Lewis claiming the state medical board violated his and his patients' rights when it reviewed his prescriptions and later placed his medical license on probation.\n

FULL TEXT

To see if an internal medicine doctor was improperly prescribing medication, Kentucky health officials turned to a statewide database listing the millions of prescriptions for opioids and other controlled drugs written for patients throughout the state.

Guided by the data, they determined a Bowling Green, Ky., doctor, Dwight Sutton, prescribed painkillers such as oxycodone in amounts he should have known were excessive, according to Kentucky Board of Medical Licensure records. Dr. Sutton agreed in 2015 to stop prescribing all controlled substances, a power he regained to a limited degree this year after steps that included further medical education, Kentucky records show. His lawyer declined to comment about the case.

Prescription databases are playing an increasingly useful role in the battle against the U.S. opioid epidemic, federal and state officials say. A number of states are analyzing the data to probe doctors for practices that could jeopardize their medical licenses.

Nationally, the number of opioid prescriptions fell by about 12% from 2012 to 2015, according to drug-research firm IMS Health, though last year's total was still 39% higher than the total in 2000. At the same time, the abuse of heroin and other illicit street drugs has skyrocketed in the U.S. in recent years.

Use of state databases in 24 states was associated with a 30% drop in the prescribing rate for opioids such as OxyContin between 2001 and 2010, according to a study by Yuhua Bao, a health-care policy and research expert at Weill Cornell Medicine, published in June in the journal Health Affairs.

The decrease probably isn't entirely due to monitoring programs, she said, since states have employed other policies to stem abuse. Other factors could include greater awareness by physicians of substance abuse and concerns that their prescribing behavior was being scrutinized.

Some doctors and civil libertarians say they worry the more aggressive scrutiny of prescribing could jeopardize patient privacy and due-process protection for doctors.

Every state but Missouri has a prescription monitoring database. Though the earliest prescription monitoring program dates to 1939, most modern versions have come into effect since 2000. At first, a main focus was on preventing drug users from "doctor shopping" -- seeking multiple prescriptions from different providers. Over time, states have become more assertive in scrutinizing doctors' prescribing behavior, sometimes allowing access by law enforcement.

In Kentucky, an advisory council that includes doctors and pharmacists runs periodic searches -- for instance, looking for doctors who prescribe opioids with benzodiazepines such as the antianxiety drug Xanax, a potentially dangerous mix. Those who are flagged are investigated, including a doctor whose license was restricted last year after he was identified as a top hydrocodone prescriber.

The database, which has accounts for nearly 20,000 doctors, dentists and other prescribers, has helped reduce painkiller prescribing in Kentucky, said Van Ingram, executive director of the state Office of Drug Control Policy. For example, the number of dispensed hydrocodone prescriptions fell about 21% from 2012 to 2015, he said.

Giving regulators and law enforcement agencies broad power to search the databases risks chilling the doctor-patient relationship, said American Civil Liberties Union lawyer Nathan Wessler.

"The more entities that have access to these records, the more patients may think twice about seeking or filling a prescription for a necessary medication," he said.

The ACLU has filed briefs in several court cases around the U.S., including a lawsuit by California doctor Alwin Lewis claiming the state medical board violated his and his patients' rights when it reviewed his prescriptions and later placed his medical license on probation. State lawyers say in court papers that the board had authority to access the data without a warrant or other court order.

Federal and state efforts are under way to better integrate the prescription monitoring programs, which vary widely from state to state, said Wesley Sargent, a health scientist at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. States are increasingly sharing prescription data via online hubs like PMP InterConnect, developed by the National Association of Boards of Pharmacy, he said. The association says the system links 33 states.

(See related article: "Individual Doctor 'Report Cards' Show Impact" -- WSJ Sept. 3, 2016)

(See related letter: "Letters to the Editor: First Try to Understand the Opioid Epidemic" -- WSJ September 14, 2016)

DETAILS

Subject:	Prescriptions; Narcotics; Databases; Drug stores; Patients; Law enforcement; Health care policy; Physicians
Business indexing term:	Subject: Drug stores Physicians; Industry: 62111 : Offices of Physicians 45611 : Pharmacies and Drug Retailers
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	62111: Offices of Physicians; 45611: Pharmacies and Drug Retailers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 3, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1816292956
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-states-fight-opioid-epidemic-with-data/docview/1816292956/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2024-08-26

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 419 of 500

Business News: Auto Sales Lose Steam As U.S. Buyers Pull Back

Colias, Mike; Steele, Anne . Colias, Mike; Steele, Anne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The biggest U.S. and Japanese auto makers posted declines, except Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV, in part as demand for passenger cars continued to drop.

FULL TEXT

The pace of U.S. auto sales decelerated sharply in August, and deliveries fell 4.2% even as car companies ladled out sweeter incentives, the strongest signal yet the industry's growth streak is losing steam.

Monthly sales volumes remain at a historically strong level with auto makers consistently selling 1.5 million units a month. If those levels continue, this year's light vehicle sales could top the 17.5 million sales record set in 2015.

The seasonally adjusted annual sales rate, however, slipped to 17 million last month, according to researcher Autodata Corp. That represents the slowest pace for an August since 2013, and below July's 17.9 million pace and the 17.7 million set in the same month last year.

The biggest U.S. and Japanese auto makers posted declines, except Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV, in part as demand for passenger cars continued to drop.

To keep customers flocking to lots, auto makers are dangling bigger incentives before shoppers. Spending on sales promotions and other discounts so far this year is at its highest level since 2009, according to research firm Kelley Blue Book.

"The market is still very, very strong by historical standards, but tougher and more difficult," said Ford Motor Co. U.S. Sales Chief Mark LaNeve. Ford sold 213,411 light vehicles, an 8.8% decline compared with a year before, and said it doesn't expect the industry to match last year's record, and predicts a further annual decline in 2017.

Rival General Motors Co. is more bullish even as its August sales dropped 5.2% to 256,429. GM Chief Economist Mustafa Mohatarem said solid economic underpinnings point to a "sustainable high level of customer demand."

Mark Wakefield, head of AlixPartners LLP's automotive practice, said richer discounts in recent months is a sign of peak sales. "We're shifting from a demand-growth story to a push story, where demand is propped up by incentives," he said.

The frothiest deals can be had on bread-and-butter sedans, luxury cars and compact vehicles struggling to find takers amid a growing preference for sport utilities. Nissan Motor Co., for instance, reported a 6.9% decline to 124,638 vehicles even as its light-truck sales rose 19%.

Judy Wheeler, Nissan's head of U.S. sales, said the auto maker will prioritize production of smaller SUVs, such as the Rogue, to avoid deep discounts. "Some of the incentive wars on the car side have just gotten crazy," she said.

Retail sales have fallen in four of the past six months, after rising for 66 straight months, according to research firm J.D. Power. Fleet sales to rental lots are generally seen as a far less profitable business than retail deliveries.

Toyota Motor Corp.'s sales fell short of analyst expectations and slid 5% to 213,125, while Honda Motor Co. fell 3.8% to 149,571.

Fiat Chrysler Automobiles sales rose 3.1% to 196,756 on the strength of its Jeep brand.

Jonathan Bach contributed to this article.

Credit: By Mike Colias and Anne Steele

DETAILS

Subject:	Incentives; Automobile shows; Automobile sales
Business indexing term:	Subject: Incentives Automobile sales; Corporation: Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV; NAICS: 336110; Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944242
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-auto-sales-lose-steam-as-u-s-buyers/docview/1815944242/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 420 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

(WSJ Sept. 7, 2016) FLORIDA Zika Virus Found in Mosquito Samples Florida authorities said they have found the dangerous Zika virus in samples of trapped mosquitoes in Miami Beach, confirming for the first time the presence of the virus in the insects within the continental U.S. The Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services said positive Zika readings were found in three batches of mosquitoes in Miami Beach. --

FULL TEXT

Corrections & Amplifications

The Maryland Society of Jesus, a Jesuit group that ran Georgetown University, sold slaves in 1838 to provide operating revenue for the school. A U.S. Watch item Friday about Georgetown's moves to address the slavery legacy incorrectly said the school was the seller.

(WSJ Sept. 7, 2016)

FLORIDA

Zika Virus Found in

Mosquito Samples

Florida authorities said they have found the dangerous Zika virus in samples of trapped mosquitoes in Miami Beach, confirming for the first time the presence of the virus in the insects within the continental U.S.

The Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services said positive Zika readings were found in three batches of mosquitoes in Miami Beach.

-- Jon Kamp

HIGHER EDUCATION

Georgetown Moves to Address Slavery Ties

Georgetown University said it plans to offer preferred admissions and financial incentives to a unique group of students: descendants of 272 slaves the university sold in 1838 to provide operating revenue for the school.

"The most appropriate ways for us to redress the participation of our predecessors in the institution of slavery is to address the manifestations of the legacy of slavery in our time," said John DeGioia, president of the Washington, D.C., school.

Many universities have been wrestling with their historic ties to slavery in recent years, including Harvard and Princeton.

-- Douglas Belkin

TEXAS

Dallas Police Chief

To Retire in October

Dallas police Chief David O. Brown, who showed calm leadership in the tense days after a sniper killed five police officers in the city in July, announced his retirement. Chief Brown, 55, will step down in October after more than six years as the top officer at the country's seventh-largest police department. He didn't offer specific reasons.

-- Zusha Elinson

DETAILS

Subject:	Slavery; Zika virus; Mosquitoes
Location:	United States--US
People:	Brown, David O
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944219
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1815944219/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 421 of 500

U.S. News: Hurricane Hermine Threatens Gulf Coast to Atlantic States

Kamp, Jon . Kamp, Jon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Tropical Storm Hermine strengthened into a hurricane Thursday afternoon, churning toward Florida's Gulf Coast as residents prepared for the state's first hurricane strike in more than a decade.

FULL TEXT

Tropical Storm Hermine strengthened into a hurricane Thursday afternoon, churning toward Florida's Gulf Coast as residents prepared for the state's first hurricane strike in more than a decade.

The storm was forecast to bring strong winds and life-threatening flooding to the state's northern reaches as it hit the panhandle and Gulf Coast. The National Hurricane Center said the storm would lash the state with up to 10 inches of rain while pushing up water to dangerous levels. The storm's center was expected to near the coast by late Thursday or early Friday.

A late evening update from the center said the storm's maximum sustained winds were at 80 miles an hour, above the threshold for hurricanes. No storm of that category has made landfall since October 2005.

"This is life threatening," Florida Gov. Rick Scott said at a news conference where he warned of a storm impact stretching from Tampa Bay to Pensacola. He urged residents -- many of whom have moved to Florida since the last hurricane hit nearly 11 years ago -- to be ready for dangerous winds, flooding, power outages and tornadoes.

He also urged people to clear standing water when the storm is over, since the mosquitoes that transmit the Zika virus like to lay eggs there.

The governor closed state offices in 51 counties at noon Thursday as the storm approached, and authorities also shut down schools as well as the Sunshine Skyway Bridge crossing Tampa Bay. There were mandatory evacuation requirements for coastal areas in a handful of counties. "Preparations to protect life and property should be rushed to completion," the National Hurricane Center warned earlier in the day.

The storm won't be done after lashing Florida's northwest coast. A tropical storm warning extended from the northern part of the state's Atlantic coast up to North Carolina.

Georgia Gov. Nathan Deal issued a state of emergency Thursday that extends through Saturday. Further north, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said the storm could bring high rip currents, heavy rain and strong winds there over Labor Day weekend.

The Apalachicola River Inn, located in the small city of Apalachicola on Florida's Gulf Coast, was nearly empty as the storm approached, desk clerk Angel Feder said. "I've got people coming in tomorrow, if we're still here," she said.

Credit: By Jon Kamp

DETAILS

Subject:	Storms; Hurricanes; Floods; Cyclones
Location:	Atlantic states
Company / organization:	Name: National Hurricane Center; NAICS: 924120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944213
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hurricane-hermine-threatens-gulf-coast/docview/1815944213/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 422 of 500

Election 2016: Speech Sets Off Hispanic Backlash

Bender, Michael C; Reinhard, Beth . Bender, Michael C; Reinhard, Beth.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The rejection of Mr. Trump by high-profile conservative Hispanics is a setback for a campaign that only recently set out to expand its support to the minority voters who could determine the outcome of the presidential race.

FULL TEXT

Donald Trump's immigration proposals outlined during an evening rally Wednesday shocked some Hispanic leaders his campaign was courting, and may have narrowed the Republican presidential nominee's path to victory in November.

At least two members of Mr. Trump's Hispanic Advisory Council -- Texas attorney Jacob Monty and business executive Massey Villareal -- resigned after the speech, in which Mr. Trump said all illegal immigrants in the country would be "subject to deportation."

"I gave Donald Trump a plan that would improve border security, remove hardened criminal aliens and most importantly give work authority to the millions of honest, hardworking immigrants in the US," Mr. Monty wrote on Facebook. "He rejected that tonight and so I must reject him."

Asked for comment about the resignations, Jason Miller, a spokesman for the Trump campaign, said the GOP nominee "has been consistent in advocating for an end to illegal immigration and he will continue to reach out and work with voters from all communities to defeat crooked Hillary Clinton this fall."

Artemio Muniz, who leads the Federation of Hispanic Republicans in Texas, said Mr. Trump's warning to minority voters that illegal immigrants were taking their jobs would fall flat, and that his campaign was trying to "win with the Caucasian coalition."

"Pitting Hispanics and blacks against illegal immigrants is class warfare, not conservatism," Mr. Muniz said. "Hispanic voters can see right through that."

The rejection of Mr. Trump by high-profile conservative Hispanics is a setback for a campaign that only recently set out to expand its support to the minority voters who could determine the outcome of the presidential race.

If he can't recover, Mr. Trump would be forced to rely in November on the same base of white, blue-collar workers who carried him to victory in the GOP primaries, a risky strategy in must-win battleground states such as Florida, where the electorate is increasingly diverse.

"Unless they have a magic wand, they can't create more white, pro-Trump voters," said Bettina Inclan, a former Hispanic outreach director at the Republican National Committee. "Elections are simple math: subtraction and addition, and I don't see the addition."

Jeff Roe, who managed Texas Senator Ted Cruz's Republican presidential campaign, said a strategy that focuses on white voters could work for Mr. Trump if his campaign modestly boosts white turnout from four years ago and wins a larger share of these voters.

But to succeed, Mr. Trump must improve his standing among suburban woman and college educated white voters who Mr. Roe said are turned off by the New York billionaire's combative style. Both groups are roughly split between Mr. Trump and Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton.

"He needs to get his base juiced up, and get the independents thinking he can do a state visit without embarrassing himself," Mr. Roe said.

That conflict -- how to keep core supporters enthusiastic while winning over college-educated white voters -- resulted in the seemingly mixed messages from Mr. Trump over the past week. He held his first meeting with a newly formed National Hispanic Advisory Council and began making direct appeals to minority voters at rallies that attracted mostly white audiences.

On Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Trump won applause from Republican strategists and Hispanic community leaders for his measured and welcoming posture at a news conference with Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto.

But hours later, Mr. Trump promised in his Phoenix speech a "new, special deportation task force" and vowed to end President Obama's orders that protect an estimated 750,000 young undocumented people from deportation.

While Mr. Roe said his party's nominee had a successful day appealing to white voters, Ms. Inclan said her party's nominee was losing Hispanic voters by "hanging the ills impacting society around the necks of illegal immigrants."

She said that would also add to his troubles in Colorado and Nevada, two other traditional battleground states with significant Hispanic populations.

Credit: By Michael C. Bender and Beth Reinhard

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; Hispanic Americans; Speeches; Presidential elections; Immigration policy; Noncitizens; Nominations; Deportation; Candidates; Voter behavior; Immigrants; Political conventions
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
People:	Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 8139 40
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944212
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-speech-sets-off-hispanic-backlash/docview/1815944212/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 423 of 500

City News: Evidence Detailed in Imam's Death

Morales, Mark . Morales, Mark.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Morel said nothing as his attorney, Michael Schwed, entered the not-guilty plea to one count of first-degree murder, two counts of second-degree murder and two counts of second-degree criminal possession of a weapon.

FULL TEXT

Moments after Oscar Morel was arrested in the shooting deaths of a Queens imam and his friend, he told detectives, "I knew you were coming," prosecutors said.

Mr. Morel, 36 years old, pleaded not guilty to murder charges Thursday in the killings of Imam Maulana Alauddin Akonjee and Thara Uddin. Mr. Akonjee, a 55-year-old Bangladeshi immigrant, and Mr. Uddin, 64, were gunned down last month as they walked home from a mosque in the Ozone Park section of Queens.

Ballistics testing showed that two bullets taken from the imam's body came from a gun found in Mr. Morel's Brooklyn home, prosecutors said in Queens Supreme Court.

Mr. Morel said nothing as his attorney, Michael Schwed, entered the not-guilty plea to one count of first-degree murder, two counts of second-degree murder and two counts of second-degree criminal possession of a weapon. Justice Gregory Lasak denied bail.

After the court proceeding, Mr. Schwed criticized the prosecution's case, saying about four witnesses had seen Mr. Morel in a lineup but no one picked him out.

"He's starting to feel a little better that the case seems to be falling apart somewhat," said Mr. Schwed.

Authorities allege Mr. Morel ran up behind the victims and fired a revolver, striking both men in the head.

The killings shook New York City's Muslim community, with some calling it a hate crime and demanding extra security at mosques. Police haven't give a motive for the Aug. 13 shooting, but have said they have no evidence that it was a hate crime.

The day after the shooting, Mr. Morel was arrested for allegedly hitting a cyclist with his sport-utility vehicle and then fleeing the scene. Police said the cyclist suffered a knee injury in the accident, which occurred a short time after the shooting.

Investigators confronted Mr. Morel at his home as he was leaving to go to work, officials said.

Detectives searched the home and found a revolver in a bag that was hidden inside a wall, authorities said.

"The gun recovered from his home was scientifically discovered to be the gun used in this murder and there is ample corroborations of the defendant's involvement in this case," Queens Assistant District Attorney Peter Lomp said in court Thursday.

Mr. Schwed said he hadn't seen any evidence about where the gun was found.

"If he touched the gun, there would be fingerprints on it," Mr. Schwed said.

Mr. Morel is due back in court on Oct. 18.

Credit: By Mark Morales

DETAILS

Subject:	Hate crimes; Criminal investigations; Evidence; Murders & murder attempts; Shootings
Location:	Queens New York; United States--US
People:	Uddin, Thara; Akonjee, Maulana Alauddi; Morel, Oscar
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944169
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-evidence-detailed-imams-death/docview/1815944169/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 424 of 500

City News: Art Store Draws to a Close --- Lower East Side shop catered to renowned artists and students; a paper lover's dream

Furfaro, Hannah . Furfaro, Hannah.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On the weekends when he was growing up, Mr. Steinberg said, his father would "bring a trunk full of art supplies out to the Hamptons," and do drop-offs to artists like painter Willem de Kooning, a contemporary of Jackson Pollock who was best known for his gestural abstractions. Inside the drawers of the shop's back office, assistant manager Christopher Colvin remembers finding pre-World War II architectural drawing tools and compasses, small artifacts of the store's long history.

FULL TEXT

Pop artists Andy Warhol and Roy Lichtenstein bought art supplies there. So did Jean-Michel Basquiat. Abstract expressionist Willem de Kooning got custom orders personally delivered to the Hamptons.

On Friday, after 111 years of serving generations of downtown artists, students and teachers, New York Central Art Supply Inc. is closing its doors. Located on Third Avenue and East 11th Street, a few blocks from Cooper Union school of art and architecture, it has been owned and operated by the Steinberg family for four generations.

A "perfect storm of bad business conditions" led to the closure, said Doug Steinberg, a descendant of founder Benjamin Steinberg. That included losing a month-to-month lease, competition from chain stores and complications in ownership after his father and aunt, co-owners of the store, both died last year.

Mr. Steinberg said the four-story building is in the process of being sold, and that neither the price nor the buyer's intentions for the property had yet been disclosed. The Lower East Side has undergone significant gentrification, and real-estate prices have been soaring.

In addition to paints, brushes and other standard artist supplies, Central is renowned for its extensive inventory of handmade and imported papers, hailing from places as far away as Bhutan and Zimbabwe.

The shop offers a nearly 200-page catalog detailing its paper selection, many made from materials like hemp, oatmeal husks and recycled bananas.

Kiki Smith, who lives in the East Village and whose artwork is collected by museums world-wide, said she cried when she heard Central was closing.

"I learned an enormous amount about being an artist from going there," said Ms. Smith, who teaches printmaking at both New York University and Columbia University.

In the early 1980s, when she worked as a cook, she said she would get paid "and spend all my money at New York Central buying paper."

"I continue to buy excessive amounts of paper," she said.

Paying attention to artists' needs is what made the store special, said Mr. Steinberg, who described how his father, Steven, became friends with some of the city's most renowned contemporary artists.

On the weekends when he was growing up, Mr. Steinberg said, his father would "bring a trunk full of art supplies out to the Hamptons," and do drop-offs to artists like painter Willem de Kooning, a contemporary of Jackson Pollock who was best known for his gestural abstractions.

When Mr. de Kooning needed a specialized brush, his father had a manufacturer make one to Mr. de Kooning's specifications.

"He was an inventor," said Mr. Steinberg of his father. "He made it from a run-of-the-mill art-supply store into a rock-star art-supply store."

Inside the drawers of the shop's back office, assistant manager Christopher Colvin remembers finding pre-World War II architectural drawing tools and compasses, small artifacts of the store's long history.

Among the many treasures he has found: a pencil set so old and delicate it has begun to disintegrate. It is a token that Mr. Colvin said he bought for himself and will cherish long after he says goodbye to the staff, the store and its loyal patrons for the last time.

On Wednesday, many shelves were already emptied. Several customers could be heard swapping stories while sorting through discounted colored pencils, tins of glitter and pastel paints.

"This is like my fifth time back since the sale. I just came to say goodbye to people," said Claudia Sbrissa, a professor of art and design at St. John's University.

"It is -- it was -- such a great institution," she said, catching herself.

Teng Teng, 29 years old and of Queens, spent nearly two hours scooping up marked-down paints and tools.

"The quantity and quality are very, very good," she said. Asked where she would shop in the future, she said possibly Blick Art Materials. Or maybe, she said with a shrug, she will shop online.

At one time, nearly a dozen art-supply businesses occupied the neighborhood, said Jay Schall, the general manager and one of many employees with a 20-year-plus tenure.

Mr. Schall was just 15 years old when he first took a Saturday shift at the store, sweeping floors and stocking shelves.

The year was 1968, and though the neighborhood was known for "Bowery bums" who would sleep on the streets, it was also home to the Fillmore East rock venue and the Electric Circus nightclub. "It was an exciting place for a teenager to be," said Mr. Schall, now 64.

He kept the job through college, then got involved with the store's shipping and buying departments. Now 48 years later, he said he has watched a seemingly endless list of renowned New York City artists come through the doors: Al Hirschfeld, Robert Motherwell and many more.

He has also witnessed the vulnerabilities of the industry in the age of mail-order and the internet.

Through it all, he said the company "deserves a lot of credit."

"I was proud all these years to be part of this organization that did try to do the best at what they did," he said. "I guess that's all we can ask for."

Credit: By Hannah Furfaro

DETAILS

Subject:	Art; Architecture; Business closings; Art markets; Art supplies
Business indexing term:	Subject: Architecture Business closings; Industry: 33994 : Office Supplies (except Paper) Manufacturing
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Classification:	33994: Office Supplies (except Paper) Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944132
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-art-store-draws-close-lower-east-side/docview/1815944132/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Factory Sector Contracted In August

Sparshott, Jeffrey . Sparshott, Jeffrey.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The manufacturing sector stumbled through the end of 2015 and into early 2016, as a strong dollar, which makes exports more expensive for foreign customers, weak global growth and low commodity prices tamped down demand for an array of products.

FULL TEXT

The U.S. factory sector retrenched in August, highlighting manufacturers' struggles and a broader drag on the economy from weak business spending and an uncertain global outlook.

The Institute for Supply Management's index of manufacturing activity fell to 49.4 in August from 52.6 in July. A reading above 50 indicates factory activity is growing, while a reading under 50 signals contraction.

The index over the past 12 month has averaged 50.2, a figure barely into expansion territory. The overall economy also has been growing only slowly, propped up by brisk consumer spending.

"The U.S. manufacturing sector remains in an extended period of stagnation following a modest improvement in recent months," said Michael Gapen, chief U.S. economist at Barclays.

The August reading for the index was the first below 50 since February and the lowest since January.

The manufacturing sector stumbled through the end of 2015 and into early 2016, as a strong dollar, which makes exports more expensive for foreign customers, weak global growth and low commodity prices tamped down demand for an array of products.

The sector stabilized and for five consecutive months -- March through July -- had been slowly expanding amid strong gains in consumer spending. Household outlays accelerated this spring to their strongest pace in a year and a half, according to separate government data.

But U.S. businesses still appear cautious -- investment in structures and equipment is down, and profits have been getting thinner at many firms. That could crimp business investment in coming months.

Big equipment manufacturers exposed to commodities like iron ore and petroleum have been among the hardest hit. Deere & Co. last month said global sales fell 11% in its third quarter and announced plans to scale back production of its tractors and other equipment. The slowdown "reflected the continuing impact of the global farm recession as well as difficult conditions in construction equipment markets," said Chairman and CEO Samuel Allen.

While ISM's August figure was disappointing, the group cautioned against reading too much into a single month's number. "I'm left thinking this is an anomaly and just sort of a pause in the action and nothing to suggest we won't get back in growth mode," said Bradley Holcomb, who leads the ISM survey.

The worst effects of the strong dollar may be waning. The ISM index for new export orders showed growth for the sixth straight month, suggesting steady demand from overseas. Consumer spending could also help support the manufacturing sector.

Credit: By Jeffrey Sparshott

DETAILS

Subject:	Manufacturers; Consumer spending; Economic conditions; Reading; Manufacturing; Factories
Business indexing term:	Subject: Manufacturers Consumer spending Economic conditions Manufacturing Factories; Industry: 32721 : Glass and Glass Product Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	32721: Glass and Glass Product Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944057

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-factory-sector-contracted-august/docview/1815944057/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 426 of 500

Business News: Fiat Sales Calls Are Focus of Probe

Rogers, Christina; Viswanatha, Aruna . Rogers, Christina; Viswanatha, Aruna.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A criminal investigation by the U.S. Justice Department and a civil probe by the Securities and Exchange Commission were triggered following two separate lawsuits filed by dealers in New York and Chicago, alleging the U.S.-Italian auto maker pressured dealers to falsify sales in exchange for financial rewards, according to people briefed on the investigation.

FULL TEXT

Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV regional sales managers and U.S. dealers periodically would get calls from company executives, letting them know the fictitious "unnatural acts department" was open for business, according to people familiar with the matter.

The motivational phrase, used over several years on conference calls or in one-on-one conversations, was meant to convey the urgency of drumming up last-minute vehicle sales, particularly if the auto maker's results were coming up short of monthly objectives, the people said.

Now, as federal investigators probe allegations of fraud in Fiat Chrysler's sales-reporting practices, the expression has emerged as a focal point in the government's questioning, according to people briefed on the investigation.

Authorities are trying to determine whether the term, believed to be used by at least one senior executive, was simply a way to rally dealers to meet objectives and keep a long-running sales streak alive or an important piece of evidence indicating sales officials knowingly deceived the public, the people said.

A criminal investigation by the U.S. Justice Department and a civil probe by the Securities and Exchange Commission were triggered following two separate lawsuits filed by dealers in New York and Chicago, alleging the U.S.-Italian auto maker pressured dealers to falsify sales in exchange for financial rewards, according to people briefed on the investigation.

A Fiat Chrysler spokeswoman declined to comment on the "unnatural acts department" or the investigation. The company has said its sales reporting led to inaccuracies and it has since revised its practices to avoid further miscalculation. The company said it is cooperating with the investigations, and has called the lawsuits baseless.

One of the lawsuits, filed by a Chicago dealer, alleges Fiat Chrysler was offering as much as $20,000 in payments in exchange for falsely reporting the sale of 40 vehicles and then reversing that sale in the next month before warranties were activated.

Credit: By Christina Rogers and Aruna Viswanatha

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Fraud; Sales; Reporting requirements; Automobile sales
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sales Reporting requirements Automobile sales
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV; NAICS: 336110; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1815944009

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-fiat-sales-calls-are-focus-probe/docview/1815944009/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 427 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The IMF signaled another downgrade in its global growth forecast, warning of protectionism and weak trade and investment. ---

FULL TEXT

Trump's Mexico visit was weeks in the making and aimed at appealing to moderates, but his subsequent immigration speech may have narrowed his path to an election victory.

New Clinton emails show how top aides drew on Clinton Foundation contacts during her tenure as secretary of state.

Obama will strive to complete key elements of his foreign-policy agenda as he heads to Asia and plunges into a month of summits.

The IMF signaled another downgrade in its global growth forecast, warning of protectionism and weak trade and investment.

Pakistan's military said it eradicated an Islamic State network, arresting more than 300 alleged operatives and sympathizers.

The pope will canonize Mother Teresa Sunday, in a ceremony that will highlight his ideal of a "poor church for the poor."

Retailers asked Washington to help resolve a cargo crisis after Hanjin Shipping's near collapse.

Much forensic analysis used in criminal trials isn't scientifically valid, according to a panel's draft report.

Florida residents made preparations as Hurricane Hermine approached.

DETAILS

Location:	Mexico; Asia; Florida; Pakistan; United States--US
People:	Teresa (Mother)
Company / organization:	Name: Clinton Foundation; NAICS: 813211, 813319
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815944007
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1815944007/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company , Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-13
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 428 of 500

City News: After Shooting Spike, Bridgeport Patrols Increased

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Malloy said at a news conference Thursday that as well as posting more troopers in the city, the state police would meet more regularly with the Bridgeport Police Department to exchange information.

FULL TEXT

Connecticut Gov. Dannel Malloy directed the state police on Thursday to beef up patrols in Bridgeport after the city experienced a spike in shootings in August.

Although homicides are down from 2015, there were 37 shooting victims in Bridgeport last month, an unusually high amount, city officials said. That included an incident on Aug. 21 at a party where assailants shot 13 victims, all of whom survived.

Mr. Malloy said at a news conference Thursday that as well as posting more troopers in the city, the state police would meet more regularly with the Bridgeport Police Department to exchange information. In addition, the state Department of Correction would provide help apprehending individuals wanted on warrants.

"The stepped-up efforts will be both covert and visible," Bridgeport Mayor Joseph Ganim said at the news conference.

Mr. Malloy added that the state police and Department of Correction would spend more on overtime to assist the city.

"I think people in Bridgeport will see change pretty rapidly," he said.

There have been six homicides and 83 shooting victims in Bridgeport through August. There were nine homicides and 70 shooting victims during the same period last year.

Bridgeport Police Chief Armando Perez said his department has taken 120 guns off the street this year. Many of those guns are coming from southern states, he said.

"We are getting the guns, but they are still coming in," Chief Perez said.

Police have yet to arrest any suspects in the Aug. 21 shooting incident, but Mr. Ganim said investigators are making progress.

They "have active investigations, they have good leads, they have evidence," Mr. Ganim said. "They are confident that they are going to bring closure to this as quickly as possible."

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal statistics; Shootings; Press conferences; State police; Murders & murder attempts
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	Bridgeport Connecticut; United States--US
People:	Malloy, Dannel P
Classification:	92212: Police Protection

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815943994
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-after-shooting-spike-bridgeport-patrols/docview/1815943994/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 429 of 500

Mexico Comment Spurred Pushback

Langley, Monica . Langley, Monica.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

All told, Wednesday was a day of exceptional twists and turns, spanning multiple time zones and two countries, on the trade and immigration issues that have become signatures of the Trump presidential campaign.

FULL TEXT

As Donald Trump arrived in Phoenix late Wednesday, fresh from a visit to Mexico City's presidential palace, he had in his hands a big immigration speech that omitted the usual line that Mexico would have to pay for his proposed wall along the U.S. southern border.

Just after landing, though, Mr. Trump discovered that Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto had tweeted that he had told the Republican presidential nominee during their private meeting earlier that day that his country would refuse to pay for the wall.

Mr. Trump was peeved that Mr. Pena Nieto had gone public with the fact that the Mexican president had broken what Mr. Trump considered a deal to keep the question of paying for the wall off the table at their initial meeting.

So Mr. Trump hurriedly inserted a new sentence in his immigration speech, and he soon boomed out from the podium his traditional declaration that the wall would be paid for by Mexico -- adding, "They don't know it yet but they're going to pay for the wall."

"I had no choice," Mr. Trump said in an interview on Thursday. But he also said of the Mexican president, "I liked him very much."

All told, Wednesday was a day of exceptional twists and turns, spanning multiple time zones and two countries, on the trade and immigration issues that have become signatures of the Trump presidential campaign.

The day wasn't only one of the most unusual in the campaign, but one of the most controversial. Many Mexicans were incensed that their president invited Mr. Trump. A poll published in the Reforma newspaper Wednesday showed 85% of Mexicans disapproved of the invitation, and 72% thought it weakened the Mexican government.

As the dispute between Mr. Trump and Mr. Pena Nieto over paying for the wall escalated, John Podesta, the chairman of Democrat Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign, tweeted late Thursday: "What a mess."

The high-stakes day, which seemed to have been put together at the last minute, actually had been discussed internally for weeks, according to Trump campaign advisers. The campaign saw the meeting in Mexico as a chance to appeal to moderate voters, and the immigration speech as a chance to motivate Mr. Trump's core voters.

Jared Kushner, the real-estate investor married to Mr. Trump's daughter Ivanka, initially floated to his father-in-law the idea of a trip to Mexico, Mr. Trump said. Mexico, of course, had been a central and controversial topic since the day Mr. Trump announced his presidential campaign with a speech in which he accused it of sending the U.S. its criminals and "rapists."

Meanwhile, Mr. Pena Nieto was asked by media in his country if he would ever meet with Mr. Trump. He ultimately responded by sending invitations to both Mr. Trump and Mrs. Clinton last week. The former secretary of state hasn't accepted, but Mr. Kushner moved quickly to accept on Mr. Trump's behalf and orchestrate logistics.

At the same time, Mr. Trump's team and the candidate himself suggested in media interviews that he was "softening" his immigration stance, particularly on deporting illegal immigrants already in the U.S.

As the campaign set Wednesday's speech in Phoenix as the time when Mr. Trump would lay out his detailed immigration platform, it also concluded the plan to meet the Mexican president. Over last weekend, the two sides drew up a list of items for discussion for this "initial meeting," according to former New York Mayor and current Trump adviser Rudy Giuliani.

Both sides agreed on several points -- the need to reduce crime, including drugs and guns, each country's right to protect its "sovereign border" by whatever means, and that the North American Free Trade Agreement should be improved to benefit each country, Trump advisers said.

One point on which they agreed to disagree: who would pay for a wall. Trump advisers said the two sides decided they wouldn't discuss the topic of payment in their first meeting, to ease the process of getting acquainted and to focus on the bigger picture.

Mr. Trump flew to Mexico City with a small team, landing Wednesday morning. They flew by helicopter into the grounds of the presidential palace, where they were met by Mr. Pena Nieto. Messrs. Trump and Pena Nieto sat in two wingback chairs with their advisers on either side. Mr. Trump brought into the meeting Mr. Giuliani, Alabama GOP Sen. Jeff Sessions, an early supporter and hard-liner on immigration, and Mr. Kushner.

The hourlong meeting began on a cordial tone, as the two men agreed on areas in common, such as an American-Mexican task force to go after drug cartels, similar to one that the U.S. implemented with Colombia, Mr. Giuliani said.

But Mr. Pena Nieto surprised Mr. Trump when he stated flatly that his country wouldn't pay for the wall. Immediately, Mr. Giuliani responded for Mr. Trump, "That's off the table." With that, Mr. Trump moved to another topic.

A person close to Mr. Pena Nieto said that "since there was such a clear disagreement in preparatory conversations over issues about the wall and its payment, both parties agreed not to discuss them at the meeting." The person added: "Before the conversation began, Mr. Pena Nieto reiterated to Mr. Trump that Mexico won't pay for any wall, and as agreed, they discussed other topics."

At the press conference after the meeting, the Trump campaign got the photo op it wanted of Mr. Trump and a world leader. When asked if they discussed the GOP nominee's wall, Mr. Trump said they did, but not who would pay for it. Mr. Pena Nieto stayed silent. It wasn't until landing in Phoenix that Mr. Trump saw the Mexican's tweet about not paying.

Mr. Trump and his team were stunned, advisers said. News reports were questioning why Mr. Trump didn't discuss the payment issue at the joint press conference.

"I have to add back the line that Mexico will pay," Mr. Trump said, according to the people with him, adding that he couldn't let that tweet go unanswered.

Credit: By Monica Langley

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; Speeches; Presidential elections; Immigration policy; Noncitizens; Press conferences; Nominations; Immigration
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US; Mexico
People:	Trump, Donald J; Pena Nieto, Enrique
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815943964
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/mexico-comment-spurred-pushback/docview/1815943964/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 430 of 500

Retailers Appeal for Help With Cargo Snarl

Ziobro, Paul; Paris, Costas . Ziobro, Paul; Paris, Costas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Hanjin handles about 7.8% of the trans-Pacific trade volume for the U.S. market, Ms. Kennedy's letter said. Since the shipping company filed for bankruptcy protection in Seoul Wednesday, terminal operators, ports, cargo handlers, truckers and others have refused to handle its cargo, for fear they won't get paid.

FULL TEXT

U.S. retailers, bracing for a blow as they stock up for the crucial holiday sales season, asked the government to step in and help resolve a growing crisis caused by the near-collapse of South Korea's Hanjin Shipping Co., one of the world's largest container shipping companies.

"While the situation is still developing, the prospect of harm is significant and apparent," Sandra Kennedy, president of the Retail Industry Leaders Association, wrote in a letter to the Department of Commerce and the Federal Maritime Commission. Hanjin's recent bankruptcy filing "presents an enormous challenge to U.S. shippers," she said, and "could have a substantial impact on consumers and the economy at large."

The trade group is urging the U.S. to work with ports, cargo handlers and the South Korean government to resolve the widespread disruption in freight shipments caused by the Hanjin bankruptcy filing.

Hanjin handles about 7.8% of the trans-Pacific trade volume for the U.S. market, Ms. Kennedy's letter said. Since the shipping company filed for bankruptcy protection in Seoul Wednesday, terminal operators, ports, cargo handlers, truckers and others have refused to handle its cargo, for fear they won't get paid. That is causing turmoil at U.S. ports and beyond, said shippers, importers and freight forwarders.

U.S.-bound cargo has been delayed at the point of origin, and cargo-laden Hanjin ships are unable to get into U.S. ports. Several Hanjin ships have been seized by creditors or barred from shipping cargo from Busan, South Korea's main port, and vessels have been turned away from ports in the U.S., China, Canada, Spain and elsewhere.

An official at the Korea International Trade Association said about 10 Hanjin vessels were either seized or denied access at Chinese terminals in Shanghai and Tianjin over the past 48 hours.

The ships were seized after legal action by shipowners who leased them to Hanjin and didn't get charter fees, workers who didn't get paid, terminals which weren't paid docking fees and bunker fuel suppliers.

Earlier in the week another Hanjin vessel was seized in Singapore.

Freight brokers in Asia said about 540,000 containers are expected to face delivery delays that one of them said could range from a few days to more than a month.

Shipping rates soared as freight capacity shrank overnight. Cargo owners said rates from Busan, South Korea, to Los Angeles had risen to $2,300 a container by Thursday, up from $1,700 four days earlier. One U.S. importer said he was getting rate quotes of $2,000 a container, compared with $700 before the Hanjin news.

The turmoil can only aggravate problems for retailers grappling with the challenges and high costs of e-commerce and at a crucial time. Those most likely to be affected include Wal-Mart Stores Inc., Target Corp., J.C. Penney Co. and clothing retailers.

A Home Depot Inc. spokesman said Hanjin isn't its only carrier so it doesn't expect a material impact. The company is working through contingency plans, he said.

A Target spokeswoman said the retailer is watching development closely and assessing the situation.

Marilee McInnis, a spokeswoman for Wal-Mart, said, "Right now, we are waiting to hear the final determination on bankruptcy proceedings and the implications to their current assets before we will be able to assess any impact."

The $25 billion U.S. toy industry has been sweating the Hanjin news, as it prepares for the holiday season, which accounts for half its annual sales.

In-Soo Nam in Seoul contributed to the article.

Credit: By Paul Ziobro and Costas Paris

DETAILS

Subject:	International trade; Bankruptcy; Retailing industry; Container ships; Ships; Ports
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade Bankruptcy Retailing industry Container ships Ports; Corporation: Walmart Inc; Industry: 48831 : Port and Harbor Operations
Location:	United States--US; South Korea
Company / organization:	Name: Hanjin Shipping Co; NAICS: 483111
Classification:	48831: Port and Harbor Operations

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815943947
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/retailers-appeal-help-with-cargo-snarl/docview/1815943947/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 431 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Authorities probing Fiat Chrysler's sales-reporting practices are examining calls to dealers and managers. ---

FULL TEXT

An explosion that destroyed a SpaceX rocket and a satellite on the ground casts a pall over the pioneering space-transport company run by Elon Musk.

The performance of Andreessen Horowitz has trailed that of some of its top venture-capital rivals.

Bank groups are debating the possibility of challenging the Fed in a bid to force changes to stress tests.

EpiPen maker Mylan put a special incentive plan in place over two years ago that rewards executives if they hit aggressive profit targets.

Apple is pushing to cut better deals for parts with its suppliers as it contends with falling iPhone sales.

HP Enterprise is seeking a buyer for its software unit in a deal that could be valued at as much as $10 billion.

Factory activity fell in August, a sign of weak business spending and an uncertain global outlook.

The pace of auto sales in the U.S. decelerated sharply in August, with deliveries falling 4.2%.

Authorities probing Fiat Chrysler's sales-reporting practices are examining calls to dealers and managers.

U.S. stocks closed little changed ahead of Friday's jobs report. The Dow rose 18.42 points to 18419.30.

DETAILS

Subject:	Incentive plans
Business indexing term:	Subject: Incentive plans
Location:	United States--US
People:	Musk, Elon
Company / organization:	Name: Andreessen Horowitz; NAICS: 523910
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815943854
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1815943854/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2025-01-29
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 432 of 500

U.S. News: Manufacturers Search for Workers

Anna Louie Sussman . Anna Louie Sussman.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Chuck Jones, president of United Steelworkers Local 1999 in Indianapolis, said Boeing Co. in Seattle, hungry for skilled tradespeople like tool and die makers and electricians, was offering $35 an hour plus help with relocation costs.

FULL TEXT

Amid growing anxiety about the disappearance of factory jobs, thousands of them are going unfilled across the U.S.

The number of open manufacturing jobs has risen since 2009 and this year stands at the highest level in 15 years, according to Labor Department data.

Factory work has evolved over the past 15 years or so as companies have invested in advanced machinery requiring new sets of skills. Many workers laid off in recent decades -- as technology, globalization and recession wiped out lower-skilled roles -- don't have the skills to do today's jobs. The mismatch is a growing problem for the economy, stymieing businesses' ability to boost production and weighing on growth, executives say.

Gary Miller has observed manufacturing's evolution firsthand. When he started at Ohio-based Kyocera SGS Precision Tools Inc. in 1989, it employed 550 production employees. Despite shedding half its workers, it now produces twice as much, thanks to higher-skilled employees and equipment like computer-controlled machine tools, which cost up to $500,000 each.

Mr. Miller, KSPT's director of training, struggles to find technicians with the electrical and mechanical skills needed to maintain complex machines. One maintenance role went unfilled for over a year as he sought someone with an associate's or bachelor's degree, ideally in manufacturing engineering. "Back 15 years or so, the machines weren't as sophisticated as they are now," he said.

His problems are mirrored across the country. Openings for manufacturing jobs this year have averaged 353,000 a month, up from 311,000 in 2015 and 122,000 in 2009.

As manufacturing has become more technology-driven, its share of managers and professionals has risen, the Labor Department says. In 2000, 53% of manufacturing workers had no education past high school. By 2015, that share had fallen 9 percentage points, while the share with college or graduate degrees increased 8 points.

Research-intensive sectors like pharmaceutical or aerospace manufacturing often seek candidates with science and engineering degrees. Other hard-to-fill roles are middle-skill positions, like maintenance technician, that require education beyond high school.

The "upskilling" in manufacturing mirrors a broader bias in the economy toward more educated workers. In 2016, college-educated workers for the first time outnumbered workers with a high-school diploma or less, a study by Georgetown University's Center on Education and the Workforce found.

Companies say education and training haven't evolved with industry needs. As manufacturing lost jobs to technology and outsourcing, young people pursued college degrees or jobs in the services sector. Colleges and high schools reduced their focus on technical education.

Eight in 10 manufacturing executives said the growing skills gap will affect their ability to keep up with customer demand, according to a 2015 survey by Deloitte and the Manufacturing Institute, an industry-backed nonprofit. It takes an average of 94 days to recruit for highly skilled roles such as scientist or engineer, and 70 days for skilled production workers, they found.

That is despite a large pool of available labor. Between June 2015 and June 2016, there was an average of two unemployed manufacturing workers for each open job.

The fate of the 1,400 workers set to lose their jobs at Carrier Corp.'s plant in Indiana illustrates the shift. After the manufacturer of gas furnaces and fan coils said it would move jobs to Mexico, Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump made the plant a talking point, promising to curb future outsourcing.

Chuck Jones, president of United Steelworkers Local 1999 in Indianapolis, said Boeing Co. in Seattle, hungry for skilled tradespeople like tool and die makers and electricians, was offering $35 an hour plus help with relocation costs. But he estimates there are 60 Carrier employees who would be eligible. Most of the others are assembly-line workers with little training beyond high school.

With workers, and the institutions that educate them, slow to adapt, executives like Mike Magee, president of Akron Tool & Die Co. in Ohio, spend months searching for candidates. He has had three or four machinist jobs open since the beginning of the year, positions that command $23 to $25 an hour for an experienced candidate.

Some say there is a simple solution: pay more.

"No one says, 'We can't find the workers we need even though we raised wages significantly,'" said Brad Markell, executive director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Council. "If there's a scarcity of something, you raise wages."

But companies say it isn't that simple. Mr. Magee said he would lose a bidding war to bigger firms in his area, and it won't solve the problem of too few skilled workers.

DETAILS

ERIC Subject:	Technical Education; High Schools; Machine Tools; Mechanical Skills; Wages; Outsourcing; Manufacturing; Labor; Aerospace Education
Subject:	Skills; Employees; Workforce; Secondary schools; Education; Manufacturing
Business indexing term:	Subject: Employees Workforce Manufacturing; Industry: 61111 : Elementary and Secondary Schools
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	61111: Elementary and Secondary Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815942717
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-manufacturers-search-workers/docview/1815942717/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2024-07-15
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 433 of 500

Business News: Wal-Mart to Trim Staff --- Retailer moves staff from behind desks and onto store floor; 7,000 jobs in flux

Nassauer, Sarah . Nassauer, Sarah.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The back-office cuts to Wal-Mart's 4,600 U.S. stores is a sign that retail workers -- one of the largest employee cohorts in America -- face big changes as their employers spend heavily to compete with Amazon.com Inc. and grab foot traffic from other chains.

FULL TEXT

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. plans to cut thousands of back-office positions around the country, a sign that the retailer's effort to make its cavernous stores more efficient is also changing the face of its workforce.

The largest private employer in the U.S. is eliminating about 7,000 store accounting and invoicing positions over the next several months. The jobs are mostly held by long-term employees, often some of the highest paid hourly workers in stores. The retailer wants those employees working with shoppers, not in backrooms, say company executives. Centralizing or automating most of their current tasks is more efficient, they say.

The jobs are coveted as a rare desk job in retail. "You are not running around the store on your feet all day" and receive decent pay, said a Wal-Mart store accounting employee who earns about $13 an hour, or $27,000 a year. "Everybody wants to get in there. The jobs never open up," said this person, who has worked at the store for nine years.

The back-office cuts to Wal-Mart's 4,600 U.S. stores is a sign that retail workers -- one of the largest employee cohorts in America -- face big changes as their employers spend heavily to compete with Amazon.com Inc. and grab foot traffic from other chains.

The positions Wal-Mart is eliminating manage an individual store's daily cash flow or process claims from manufacturers delivering goods directly to stores, among other tasks. Starting early next year, much of that work will be handled by a central office or new money-counting "cash recycler" machines in stores.

Wal-Mart tested the change in about 500 stores earlier this year.

The company believes most displaced employees will find customer-facing roles, said Deisha Barnett, a Wal-Mart spokeswoman. "We've seen many make smooth transitions during the pilot," she said. Employees facing cuts could see their salaries go up or down in a new position, she said.

Store workers at Wal-Mart and other retailers are being asked to work differently as retailers adjust to industry changes. For example, Wal-Mart is rapidly expanding a service that lets shoppers order groceries online and pick them up curbside. That requires employees to pull produce off shelves, pack orders and deliver them to a customer's car, jobs that didn't exist at Wal-Mart three years ago.

Wal-Mart also is doing more shelf-stocking during the day -- rather than overnight -- to put more employees in contact with customers.

Wal-Mart is spending billions to boost e-commerce sales and make stores more efficient and pleasant places to shop, while reducing inventory and raising wages.

Last year the retailer lifted its store employee starting wage to $9, or about $18,700 a year, for a full-time employee. As of earlier this year, new hires can move to $10 an hour after completing a six-month training program.

In August Wal-Mart said it planned to purchase discount online retailer Jet.com Inc. for $3.3 billion.

While Wal-Mart's online sales have been sluggish, comparable-store sales have risen for eight straight quarters, outshining many competitors struggling to compete for recession-weary customers or online shopping converts. Other retailers, including Target Corp. and Costco Wholesale Corp., are also raising starting wages.

Credit: By Sarah Nassauer

DETAILS

Subject:	Retail stores; Electronic commerce; Layoffs; Employees; Employment; Discount department stores; Competition
Business indexing term:	Subject: Retail stores Electronic commerce Layoffs Employees Employment Discount department stores; Corporation: Walmart Inc; Industry: 45411 : Electronic Shopping and Mail-Order Houses 45511 : Department Stores
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Walmart Inc; NAICS: 454110, 455110, 455211
Classification:	45411: Electronic Shopping and Mail-Order Houses; 45511: Department Stores

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890734
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-wal-mart-trim-staff-retailer-moves/docview/1815890734/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 434 of 500

World News: Libyan Militias Seek Power After Battle --
- Rivalries, violence are threats even if pro-government forces beat Islamic State in Sirte

ABSTRACT

Since the weekend, three dozen militiamen have died fighting Islamic State in Sirte. After a suicide bombing recently left a dozen militiamen dead, a heated argument broke out at a field hospital over whether to admit civilians.

FULL TEXT

SIRTE, Libya -- When Islamic State captured this Mediterranean port last year, fighters tagged walls and buildings with the group's name.

Now, pro-government forces are on the verge of driving the extremists out of Sirte and a new claim to power is spray-painted on homes and blast walls: "The State of Misrata."

Dozens of militias from Misrata, another coastal city about 150 miles to the west, are spearheading the offensive. The battle for Sirte is as much about shoring up support for a Western-backed unity government in the capital, Tripoli, as defeating Islamic State. But the boastful graffiti show that victory won't easily bring together the fragmented country.

And even if Islamic State loses in Sirte, militants are shifting to other cities where Western and Libyan officials fear they could try to capitalize on antigovernment sentiment to maintain a foothold in Libya.

Commanders of Misrata militias say that once the battle is over, they will head for the capital, Tripoli. Their aim is to gain greater political power within the unity government, which was installed in March with backing from the United Nations. Prime Minister Faiez Serraj traveled to Sirte this week to reassure ground forces of Tripoli's support.

Yet Tripoli is in turmoil. Rival militias representing city-states vie for power and carry out extrajudicial killings in daylight. The arrival of Misrata militias, which back the government, could spark violence.

"After Sirte, we need to work hard on reconciliation to prevent a full-scale civil war," said Ali Abu Sitta, a member of Misrata's local council and a supporter of the government.

Fighters from Misrata are quick to point out the role they have played in driving Islamic State from Sirte, just as they did in the 2011 civil war that ousted Moammar Gadhafi.

The unity government got a boost to its legitimacy in May when Misrata militias backed the Sirte offensive, and it billed the assault as an important exercise in nation building by enlisting militias from across Libya. The U.S. has tried to shore up the government by launching airstrikes in support of the offensive in Sirte against Islamic State.

Once the battle for Sirte is over, the government and Misrata officials hope to establish a firm grip on Tripoli.

Yet Western and Libyan officials fear Islamic State will replicate its rise elsewhere by sympathizing with local grievances before launching a violent takeover, a blueprint they have used across the Mideast.

Islamic State militants have moved to other Libyan cities such as Bani Walid and Ghat, officials in Misrata say, where residents are often resentful of Tripoli and Misrata.

In Sirte, Islamic State had established its most powerful base outside of its strongholds in Iraq and Syria. The city became a magnet for violent jihadists from across Africa.

Pro-government militias have now cornered the extremists in one neighborhood, where they are waging street-to-street warfare to reclaim a batch of villas overlooking the sea. The city could be fully under their control within days.

Yet Farhat Abu Zeid, a Sirte resident, said Islamic State will continue to find refuge elsewhere in Libya unless the country is able to unify.

"The people of Misrata see themselves as heroes, and us as unable to confront the problem of Islamic State and therefore responsible," said Mr. Abu Zeid, a captain in the military police, part of the coalition fighting Islamic State in the city. "There's a lot of hate and a lot of gunpowder."

On the front lines in Sirte, the animosity is all too apparent. Misratans punitively left Sirte in ruins after Gadhafi was killed, which is how Islamic State found a home in the city, residents said.

Recently, a pickup truck from the Marsa Brigade, a powerful Misrata militia, blocked a convoy of troops from Sirte. "We are dying and you're driving around? This is a Misrata front line," a militiaman said, ordering the vehicles to leave.

Since the weekend, three dozen militiamen have died fighting Islamic State in Sirte. The casualties are mostly from Misrata, doctors say, and commanders, fighters and nurses on the battlefield are bitter about a lack of support from militias in other Libyan cities.

After a suicide bombing recently left a dozen militiamen dead, a heated argument broke out at a field hospital over whether to admit civilians. "Most of these people are Gadhafi supporters. They support Islamic State now. It's not our job to support these people," said Walid Harmoush, an anesthesiologist. "I am here to treat the fighters from Misrata," he said, pounding his chest.

Ayman Harami, a doctor from another Libyan city, has grown sympathetic to Sirte's civilians, delivering babies and proudly displaying photos of those newborns. "Dr. Walid is one of my oldest friends, but we disagree. I am willing to die here to help the women and children," Dr. Harami said. "He is willing to die helping the militias he supports."

Credit: By Maria Abi-Habib and Hassan Morajea

DETAILS

Subject:	Extremism; Militia groups; Political power; Militancy; Cities
Location:	Libya
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890695
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-libyan-militias-seek-power-after/docview/1815890695/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 435 of 500

World News: Obama Seeks to Cement Asia Pivot --- Trade, North Korea and South China Sea are among priorities at coming summits

ABSTRACT

"TPP is seen as a litmus test for U.S. leadership," said Ben Rhodes, a deputy national-security adviser, adding that "it would be seen as a significant setback, I think, for American leadership if we don't move forward."

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- President Barack Obama will strive to put some final touches on key elements of his foreign-policy agenda and log progress on unfinished priorities as he leaves for Asia on Friday to plunge into a month of international summits.

Mr. Obama will attend a series of gatherings with world leaders, starting with this weekend's Group of 20 leading nations talks in China, that will provide one of his last opportunities to engage counterparts before leaving office and reinforce his so-called Asia rebalance.

Mr. Obama will meet Saturday with Chinese President Xi Jinping, ahead of his final summit of G-20 leaders in Hangzhou beginning Sunday. Next week, at a meeting of leaders of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, he will hold one-on-one talks with the contentious Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte. That meeting will take Mr. Obama to Laos, making him the first sitting U.S. president to visit the country.

Later this month, Mr. Obama will make his last appearance as president at the United Nations General Assembly, where he plans to address nuclear nonproliferation and the international refugee crisis.

The G-20 gathering in the past has played a role in addressing global economic tumult and has served as a forum for pivotal policy debates, such as one in recent years over austerity measures.

Global finance ministers, concerned about slow growth, in July promised to redouble efforts to use all available policy tools to boost output. But unlike a 2009 meeting, when the world economy was headed into a recession, the G-20 isn't crafting a new plan to counter those challenges.

The gathering will provide a backdrop to Mr. Obama's broader goals in Asia at a time when the longevity of his approach there is in doubt, mainly due to opposition in Congress to a new trade pact with Asia-Pacific nations.

The Trans-Pacific Partnership, or TPP, is a cornerstone of Mr. Obama's pivot to Asia, which has aimed to strengthen U.S. relations with China while establishing closer ties with other countries in the region as a counterweight to Beijing's growing influence.

The president plans to make the case for the trade deal throughout his trip, and White House officials said they still see a path to legislative approval for the pact.

"TPP is seen as a litmus test for U.S. leadership," said Ben Rhodes, a deputy national-security adviser, adding that "it would be seen as a significant setback, I think, for American leadership if we don't move forward."

China isn't part of the trade deal. The White House plans for Messrs. Obama and Xi to discuss a range of tensions in the U.S.-China relationship, including the South China Sea, the economy, human rights and cybersecurity.

One of Mr. Obama's top economic priorities at the G-20 summit will be to push China to tackle excess capacity in steel and other sectors that is contributing to anemic global growth.

Beyond Asia, Mr. Obama will use the G-20 summit to work on lingering foreign-policy challenges. White House officials said he would meet with Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan on Sunday; relations between the two allies have been strained following the attempted coup in Turkey in July.

Mr. Obama is also expected to discuss Ukraine and Syria with Russian President Vladimir Putin.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee and Ian Talley

DETAILS

Subject:	Foreign policy; International relations-US; Leadership; Economic summit conferences; Trade agreements; Presidents; Global economy
Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership Economic summit conferences Trade agreements Global economy; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Asia; South Korea
People:	Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890624
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-seeks-cement-asia-pivot-trade/docview/1815890624/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 436 of 500

Business News: Gap Faces Setback After Fire At Facility

Whelan, Robbie; Safdar, Khadeeja . Whelan, Robbie; Safdar, Khadeeja.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Gap Inc.'s turnaround efforts hit a glitch this week as a fire at one of the retailer's largest distribution centers set back the company's ability to fulfill online orders heading into the holiday season.

FULL TEXT

Gap Inc.'s turnaround efforts hit a glitch this week as a fire at one of the retailer's largest distribution centers set back the company's ability to fulfill online orders heading into the holiday season.

On Monday, a fire burned through a company warehouse in Fishkill, N.Y. The building supplies Gap and Banana Republic merchandise to online and store customers primarily in the Northeast and represents about 10% of the company's nationwide warehouse capacity. A nearby building supplying Old Navy should reopen soon, the company said.

The cause of the blaze, which wasn't fully under control until about 9:30 p.m. on Wednesday, hasn't been determined, said Brandon Knapp, chief of the Fishkill fire department. Mr. Knapp said that about 25% of the building was damaged beyond repair, while the remainder had significant smoke and water damage, and it could be weeks before inspections for insurance purposes are done.

The San Francisco retailer is in the midst of a sales slump and has been trying to turn itself around by revamping its merchandise to better compete with fast-fashion chains such as Hennes & Mauritz AB.

The disruption from the fire would "create a meaningful bottleneck given the upcoming critical holiday season" and "more uncertainty regarding the stability of their domestic business," Wells Fargo analyst Ike Boruchow wrote in a note Tuesday.

Gap shares fell 1.3% Thursday to $24.55 and are down 7% this week.

Credit: By Robbie Whelan and Khadeeja Safdar

DETAILS

Subject:	Fires; Retail stores; Financial performance
Business indexing term:	Subject: Retail stores Financial performance
Location:	San Francisco California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Gap Inc; NAICS: 458110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1815890576

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gap-faces-setback-after-fire-at/docview/1815890576/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 437 of 500

World News: Bodies of U.S. Fighters in Syria Wait to Come Home

Kesling, Ben . Kesling, Ben.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The three men are the latest Americans to die fighting with Kurdish groups in Syria, where an unknown number of foreign fighters have joined groups battling Islamic State.

FULL TEXT

The bodies of three U.S. citizens killed while fighting Islamic State as part of a Kurdish militia in Syria await repatriation, a spokesman for the Kurdish force said.

A final round of paperwork is needed before the bodies can be flown from northern Iraq back to the U.S., the spokesman said Thursday. It has taken weeks of coordination between Kurdish officials and the State Department to complete paperwork to repatriate the bodies, family members of two of the men said.

The men -- Levi Jonathan Shirley, William Savage and Jordan MacTaggart -- died in battles during the U.S.-backed summer offensive to oust Islamic State from Manbij and sever one of its key supply lines, family members said. They served in the People's Protection Units, or YPG, said the spokesman for the armed Syrian Kurdish group, which receives U.S. military support, including assistance from special forces on the ground.

The three men are the latest Americans to die fighting with Kurdish groups in Syria, where an unknown number of foreign fighters have joined groups battling Islamic State.

Credit: By Ben Kesling

DETAILS

Subject:	Human remains
Location:	United States--US; Syria
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890572
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bodies-u-s-fighters-syria-wait-come/docview/1815890572/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19

LINKS

Document 438 of 500

U.S. News: Social Media Sees Romance Scams

Levitz, Jennifer . Levitz, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command's website said it "receives hundreds of allegations a month" from people who say they were scammed on dating or social-media sites by someone claiming to be a U.S. soldier.

FULL TEXT

Dating websites aren't the only online services used in romance scams. Profiles on social-media sites such as Facebook have been used to find victims, and many of the profiles take the persona of a military officer.

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command's website said it "receives hundreds of allegations a month" from people who say they were scammed on dating or social-media sites by someone claiming to be a U.S. soldier.

Jeff Mellinger, a retired U.S. Army command sergeant major living in Georgia, says he has reported to Facebook hundreds of bogus profiles using his photo and his name, or a variation of it.

Trusting people, Mr. Mellinger recently wrote to Facebook, are "sending money to these toads."

A Facebook spokesman said "misrepresenting yourself" violates policies and that a dedicated team helps shut down profiles.

Referring to Mr. Mellinger's complaint, the spokesman said Facebook removed the imposters' sites, while automated systems blocked several others. "It's an area we're continually working to improve," he said.

But a few days later, several more Facebook profiles used Mr. Mellinger's photo.

Facebook said it's testing a process for alerting users when other accounts have the same profile and name. Facebook also said people shouldn't accept suspicious "friend" requests because some scammers make inroads that way.

In Fort Wayne, Ind., 66-year-old Tanya Zent said she is out more than $60,000 after a virtual romance with "Ken," who she met when he sent her a Facebook "friend" request out of the blue more than a year ago, after she changed her Facebook status to "widowed."

Ken's Facebook friend request indicated he and Ms. Zent had a mutual friend -- though she later learned her friend didn't know him either. His profile photo showed a fit outdoorsman.

She couldn't see his face well, but he sent her more photos. Through a reverse-image search tool that scans the internet for similar photos, she later realized "Ken" had sent her photos of another person.

Ms. Zent said of her experience: "It's not like me to do stuff like this. I just wanted someone to be happy with again."

Credit: By Jennifer Levitz

DETAILS

Subject:	Military personnel; Dating services; Fraud; Social networks; Photographs
Business indexing term:	Subject: Social networks; Industry: 81299 : All Other Personal Services
Company / organization:	Name: Facebook Inc; NAICS: 516210, 518210
Classification:	81299: All Other Personal Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890549
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-social-media-sees-romance-scams/docview/1815890549/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 439 of 500

Business News: Apple May Send Cash to the U.S.

Hannon, Paul; Schechner, Sam . Hannon, Paul; Schechner, Sam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Companies based in the U.S. are subject to 35% corporate tax rate on global profits when they bring that money home, though they can also get tax credits for payments to foreign governments. ---

FULL TEXT

Apple Inc. Chief Executive Tim Cook said the company may repatriate some of the billions of dollars of cash it holds offshore as early as next year, in the wake of a $14.5 billion tax clawback decision by European authorities.

Mr. Cook, aggressively challenged that ruling, blasting the decision as "political crap" and saying anti-competition authorities in Brussels miscalculated how much tax the company paid in Ireland.

"They just picked a number from I don't know where," Mr. Cook told Ireland's Independent newspaper. EU antitrust chief Margrethe Vestager responded Thursday by denying the decision was a political move, and she defended Brussels' math. She said officials used figures Apple provided to them, as well as from a U.S. Senate hearing into the matter several years ago.

The European Union's antitrust regulator demanded Tuesday that Ireland recoup the taxes from Apple, alleging that arrangements the government offered the company in 1991 and 2007 allowed it to pay around 1% to almost zero tax on its European profits between 2003 and 2014. Apple said it would appeal the decision. Ireland's finance minister also criticized the decision, but the government hasn't officially blessed an appeal.

The clawback decision at the EU has ratcheted up scrutiny in the U.S. of the stockpile of cash that Apple and other American companies hold offshore. Some U.S. politicians have fashioned the move as a European grab for that cash amid deadlock in Washington over how to change the corporate tax code.

Apple holds about $215 billion in cash and other liquid investments offshore. It has long provisioned for an eventual repatriation of some of the funds. But Apple has also long suggested it wasn't considering moving any of that money back soon. Mr. Cook told the Washington Post in August that the company wouldn't bring the money back "until there's a fair rate" but said he was optimistic of corporate tax changes next year.

On Thursday, Mr. Cook, in an interview with Irish state radio broadcaster RTE, said it could start repatriating that cash as early as next year.

"We provisioned several billion dollars for the U.S. for payment as soon as we repatriate it, and right now I would forecast that repatriation to occur next year," Mr. Cook said in the interview.

An Apple spokeswoman said Mr. Cook was referring to his optimism that the U.S. will change its tax code next year, and that his comments didn't represent any change to Apple's position on the question.

U.S. companies hold some $2 trillion in cash offshore, protected from U.S. taxes. Companies based in the U.S. are subject to 35% corporate tax rate on global profits when they bring that money home, though they can also get tax credits for payments to foreign governments.

Natalia Drozdiak in Brussels contributed to this article.

Credit: By Paul Hannon and Sam Schechner

DETAILS

Subject:	Repatriation; Antitrust; Tax rates; Corporate taxes; Clawback; Offshore
Business indexing term:	Subject: Antitrust Tax rates Corporate taxes Clawback; Corporation: Apple Inc
Location:	United States--US; Ireland
People:	Cook, Timothy D
Company / organization:	Name: Apple Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334220, 513210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890428
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-apple-may-send-cash-u-s/docview/1815890428/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 440 of 500

U.S. News: At Northern Border, Calls for Vigilance --- Security debate draws attention to remote, hard-to-patrol parts of U.S.-Canada boundary

Dawson, Chester . Dawson, Chester.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. border with Canada is attracting greater scrutiny as debate rages in the U.S. presidential campaign about security on its southern border with Mexico, and concern grows over global terrorism and vulnerability to illegal crossings.

FULL TEXT

WESTBY, Mont. -- The U.S. border with Canada is attracting greater scrutiny as debate rages in the U.S. presidential campaign about security on its southern border with Mexico, and concern grows over global terrorism and vulnerability to illegal crossings.

The U.S. government has been steadily beefing up surveillance of the northern border with new technology designed to help monitor areas too remote for round-the-clock patrols by field agents. Much of the change comes from the gradual rollout of new technologies that were promised in the aftermath of a security reassessment following the 2001 terrorist attacks.

Sen. Heidi Heitkamp (D., N.D.) this year called on the Department of Homeland Security to pay closer attention to the northern border and not view it as an "afterthought." Last year, she co-sponsored a bill with Sen. Kelly Ayotte (R., N.H.) to step up funding for recruiting more border agents to specifically target more remote areas along the border with Canada.

Some lawmakers in northern border states cite Canada's greater willingness to accept refugees from war-torn areas such as the Middle East as a potential threat to the U.S. In particular, they note the Canadian government has resettled more than 25,000 Syrians since November 2015, more than double the 10,000 Syrian refugees that the U.S. has agreed to take in by September. A U.S. Senate homeland security hearing addressed the topic in February, but there have been no reported U.S. border incidents involving Canada's Syrian refugees.

"I do worry about it," said Mike Cuffe, a state legislator in Montana who lives about 4 miles from the border in the town of Eureka.

Mr. Cuffe harbors concerns about the possibility of terrorist infiltration from the north, but says that must be balanced with other issues such as the hit to commerce and road congestion caused by backups at a border crossing with Canada that once was guarded by little more than wooden sawhorses at night.

"A threat to one country is a threat to the other," said Christine Constantin, a spokeswoman for the Canadian Embassy in Washington, adding that Canada has a "zero tolerance" policy for refugees with security concerns.

About 300,000 people a day legally cross the U.S.-Canada border, the largest bilateral flow of people in the world.

Some 2,200 agents are assigned to patrol the northern border in shifts, a 500% increase since Sept. 11, 2001, but that still leaves only one every 2 miles if deployed simultaneously. That is in addition to 3,700 officers stationed at 117 authorized land border crossings between the U.S. and Canada.

In rural stretches of Montana and North Dakota, where there are few natural obstructions and even fewer fences, fields of wheat and heavily treed forests make the border so hard to find that it can seem almost irrelevant to locals used to crossing daily.

U.S. officials say they focus on protecting the border where risks are highest, which means fewer resources are devoted to isolated areas in the north. "I'm not going to say it's not an issue, but absent specific intelligence we don't place it at the top of our priorities," said Alan Bersin, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security's assistant secretary for International affairs and chief diplomatic officer.

The southern border looms large in the U.S. presidential campaign. Representatives for Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton didn't reply to a request for comment about the northern border. Her Republican rival Donald Trump hasn't made it an issue, saying at a Republican primary debate in February that if elected he wouldn't seek to build a wall on the Canadian border like the one he plans for Mexico.

By far, more incidents -- from drug arrests to unauthorized entry attempts -- occur on the Mexican border, which is where 86% of U.S. Border Patrol agents were stationed in 2015 and most of the government's remote land border-protection resources are deployed.

The number of unauthorized entrants apprehended in the Grand Forks sector surged to an 11-year high of 789 in 2015, but U.S. officials say only a few of those crossed from Canada. Most were Mexicans who migrated north in search of work in North Dakota's oil patch.

But the U.S. has quietly stepped up efforts to prevent unauthorized entry in sparsely populated areas with technology such as underground sensors, thermal cameras and unmanned drones targeting 1,100 miles of the northern border, mostly between Minnesota and Washington.

Julian Routh contributed to this article.

Credit: By Chester Dawson

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; National security; Border patrol; Political campaigns; Security management; Presidential elections; Diplomatic & consular services
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92812 : International Affairs
Location:	Canada
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Homeland Security; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890384
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-at-northern-border-calls-vigilance/docview/1815890384/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 441 of 500

Business News: Driverless Tractor Steals Farm Show

Tangel, Andrew . Tangel, Andrew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

CNH Industrial NV, which owns the Case IH brand, cast its completely driverless tractor as a tool to boost productivity and cut down on labor and other costs.

FULL TEXT

BOONE, Iowa -- A driverless tractor stole this year's premier farm equipment show, drawing throngs of onlookers and some skeptics of automation's continuing creep across the farmyard.

The red prototype for a Case IH self-driving, cabless tractor was a highlight of the Farm Progress Show that ends here on Thursday, a premier showcase for new agricultural equipment and products.

Many tractors already offer automatic steering systems that keep them on precise paths up and down farmers' fields. But they require a driver to correct for unforeseen obstacles, or drive a machine from its shed into the fields and back.

CNH Industrial NV, which owns the Case IH brand, cast its completely driverless tractor as a tool to boost productivity and cut down on labor and other costs.

Some farmers fretted it could take away jobs and wouldn't respond to mechanical problems or obstacles as nimbly as a human operator. One farmer imagined the tractor plowing into a house.

CNH executives said the tractor would carry an array of built-in sensors to prevent such crashes. Skilled farmers would still be needed to supervise the tractor, they said.

CNH executives said the tractor wouldn't likely go on sale for at least three years.

Credit: By Andrew Tangel

DETAILS

Subject:	Farm machinery; Autonomous vehicles; Trade shows
Business indexing term:	Subject: Trade shows
Location:	Iowa; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Case International Harvester; NAICS: 333111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1815890374

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-driverless-tractor-steals-farm-show/docview/1815890374/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 442 of 500

U.S. News: Forensic Methods Are Questioned

Fields, Gary; O'Keeffe, Kate . Fields, Gary; O'Keeffe, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Barry Pollack, president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, said the entire area of forensic science in trials "cries out for further independent analysis."

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Much of the forensic analysis used in criminal trials isn't scientifically valid, according to a draft report by the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology.

The report, a copy of which was reviewed by The Wall Street Journal, raises questions about the use of bite-mark, hair, footwear, firearm and tool-mark analysis routinely used as evidence in thousands of trials annually in state and federal courts.

"It has become increasingly clear in recent years that lack of rigor in the assessment of the scientific validity of forensic evidence is not just a hypothetical problem but a real and significant weakness in the judicial system," said the draft review by the advisory council of scientists and engineers. It is expected to be made final in September.

Some in law enforcement said the report will affect trials in state and federal courts. "What they've done is turn the accepted reliability of expert witnesses and their evidence on their heads," said Jim Pasco, executive director of the Fraternal Order of Police. People who should be incarcerated won't be, he said.

President Barack Obama requested the review in 2015 following other studies and reviews. One report done by the National Research Council and released in 2009 said "much forensic evidence is introduced in criminal trials without any meaningful scientific validation, determination of error rates, or reliability testing to explain the limits of the discipline."

"No final version of the report has been produced," a spokeswoman for the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy said.

A Justice Department spokeswoman declined to comment on the draft report. On its website, the department says it plans to conduct a review of forensic testimony by its personnel though "not because of known or suspected problems with particular forensic science disciplines."

In the draft, the council looked at several analyses used in trials, including latent fingerprints, firearms, footwear, bite marks and DNA. What it found was a number of them either weren't scientifically valid or hadn't been independently scrutinized enough by "science based agencies" to have met the standard for "whether evidence is based on reliable principles and methods."

DNA analysis of single-source and simple mixture samples met the standard.

One of the panel's recommendations was that science-based federal agencies conduct "ongoing evaluation" of forensics analysis.

"Just because there is a lack of science does not mean the analysis is inaccurate or done wrong or is not worthwhile," said Jim Bueermann, president of the Police Foundation, which does law enforcement-related research.

Barry Pollack, president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, said the entire area of forensic science in trials "cries out for further independent analysis." He anticipated defense attorneys would use the final report to cross-examine expert witnesses to raise questions with the judge or jury about the science behind any testimony.

Credit: By Gary Fields and Kate O'Keeffe

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Forensic sciences; Evidence; Presidents; Councils
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices

Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 2, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815890299
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-forensic-methods-are-questioned/docview/1815890299/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Weiner Investigated By Child Welfare

Gay, Mara . Gay, Mara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Weiner's wife, Huma Abedin, the boy's mother and a senior adviser to Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, said Monday that she was separating from her husband "after long and painful consideration and work on my marriage."

FULL TEXT

New York City's child-welfare agency has opened an investigation into former U.S. Rep. Anthony Weiner after he allegedly sent a lewd photo of himself lying next to his son over the internet, a city official said Wednesday.

The Administration for Children's Services is looking into the behavior of Mr. Weiner and his interactions with his 4-year-old son, Jordan, according to the city official.

Mr. Weiner's wife, Huma Abedin, the boy's mother and a senior adviser to Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, said Monday that she was separating from her husband "after long and painful consideration and work on my marriage."

Ms. Abedin issued the statement after the New York Post published a report about sexual text messages and images that Mr. Weiner allegedly sent a woman over the internet, including a photo in which he is seen in his underwear alongside his son.

Mr. Weiner, 51 years old, didn't respond to requests for comment. Asked for a comment from Ms. Abedin, a spokesman for Mrs. Clinton's campaign declined Wednesday afternoon to provide one.

Mr. Weiner, a Democrat, resigned from the U.S. House in 2011 after admitting he sent sexually explicit photos of himself over the internet to multiple women. In 2013, he ran unsuccessfully for New York City mayor and was briefly at the top of the polls before admitting he had continued to engage in the same online behavior.

Carol Caceres, a spokeswoman for the Administration for Children's Services, said agency officials couldn't comment on specific cases or allegations of abuse to protect the privacy of the child involved.

A friend of Mr. Weiner described him as "a loving and devoted father who would never do anything to hurt his son."

"He has dedicated himself to Jordan since his birth and has done a great job raising a kind, sweet and thoughtful little boy," this person said.

In her statement Monday, Ms. Abedin said: "Anthony and I remain devoted to doing what is best for our son, who is the light of our life."

DETAILS

Subject:	Investigations; Child welfare; Political campaigns; Internet; Children & youth; Sons
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Weiner, Anthony D
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815619074
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-weiner-investigated-child-welfare/docview/1815619074/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

Business News: Deere, Monsanto Equipment Deal Faces U.S. Challenge

Kendall, Brent; Bunge, Jacob . Kendall, Brent; Bunge, Jacob.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"Deere would dominate the market for high-speed precision planting systems and be able to raise prices and slow innovation at the expense of American farmers," said Renata Hesse, the acting head of the Justice Department's antitrust division.

FULL TEXT

The Justice Department on Wednesday filed a lawsuit challenging Deere & Co.'s planned acquisition of a high-tech farming equipment line from Monsanto Co., saying the deal would suppress competition for technology that allows farmers to plant crops at higher speeds.

At issue is a deal from last November in which Deere agreed to buy Monsanto's Precision Planting equipment business. Precision has been a leader in new technology that allows farmers to plant seeds accurately at up to twice the speed of conventional planting systems, which can increase growing seasons and crop yields. The equipment can be retrofitted on farmers' current planting machines, and is being installed on new planters built by other companies.

Deere has its own competing high-speed technology which it is installing on its own new planting equipment and selling in retrofit kits.

Deere and Monsanto said they would vigorously fight the lawsuit, calling the Justice Department's concerns misguided.

"The proposed acquisition benefits farmers by accelerating the development and delivery of new precision equipment solutions that help farmers increase yield and productivity," officials for the companies said in a joint statement.

The companies said competition among high-tech planter developers is "strong and growing" and Deere said upon completing the deal, it would "preserve Precision Planting's independence to ensure innovation and speed-to-market."

The Justice Department said the companies remain the dominant providers of the technology, accounting for at least 86% of U.S. sales. Allowing them to combine would end aggressive competition between the two firms that has produced better deals for customers, the department argued.

"Deere would dominate the market for high-speed precision planting systems and be able to raise prices and slow innovation at the expense of American farmers," said Renata Hesse, the acting head of the Justice Department's antitrust division.

The department filed the lawsuit in an Illinois federal court, where a judge will consider whether to block the deal.

The case is the latest from Obama administration antitrust enforcers who have been active in opposing deals in the twilight of their tenure.

The Justice Department lawsuit could deal a blow to Deere's ambitions to expand its suite of high-tech farm offerings as farmers are closely scrutinizing spending on everything from machinery to seeds and insecticides.

Deere last year signed a string of small deals, purchasing a French planter company and forming a joint venture centered on farm-management software.

Credit: By Brent Kendall and Jacob Bunge

DETAILS

Subject:	Farm machinery; Antitrust; Acquisitions & mergers; Farmers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Antitrust Acquisitions & mergers
Company / organization:	Name: Precision Planting Inc; NAICS: 333120; Name: Deere & Co; NAICS: 333111, 333112, 333120; Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1815618933

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-deere-monsanto-equipment-deal-faces/docview/1815618933/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 445 of 500

City News: Tensions Escalate Over Hoosick Falls Water Crisis

Vilensky, Mike . Vilensky, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's administration has long blamed federal guidelines for hampering its response to an upstate village's water-contamination crisis and accused the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency of sowing confusion.

FULL TEXT

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's administration has long blamed federal guidelines for hampering its response to an upstate village's water-contamination crisis and accused the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency of sowing confusion.

The EPA is now hitting back with a media tour and a war of words that escalated Wednesday when an agency official offered an extensive timeline of events that contradicts Mr. Cuomo's administration's narrative of the response to the polluted water in Hoosick Falls.

"In general, we like to avoid public sparring matches," said Judith Enck, a regional administrator at the EPA whose portfolio includes New York, in an interview Wednesday.

"But what was different about yesterday," she said, referring to testimony on Tuesday by Howard Zucker, commissioner of the state Department of Health, "is that it was before a legislative oversight hearing, and it wasn't accurate."

A spokesman for the Department of Health said: "It is outrageous to suggest that Commissioner Zucker did anything in his testimony except to lay out the clear, indisputable facts."

The dispute marks one of the tensest moments between President Barack Obama's administration and Mr. Cuomo's since the Democratic governor took office in 2011.

There are two more state hearings about the water contamination planned for September and a congressional investigation is under way.

The battle began to unfold Tuesday when Dr. Zucker testified at a Senate hearing and reiterated the state's stance that it had followed federal guidelines. He said the EPA offered conflicting or ambiguous advice about how to handle the appearance of the chemical perfluorooctanoic acid in the village's water.

"What we could use is a little less confusion from the EPA," Dr. Zucker said.

On Wednesday, Ms. Enck said during an interview on WCNV radio that the Cuomo administration, not the federal government, had misled the residents of Hoosick Falls.

In some of her most extensive remarks on the matter to date, Ms. Enck said Wednesday in an interview with The Wall Street Journal that her agency was left in the dark about the extent of danger involving Hoosick Falls' water supply until October 2015, when she said county officials informed her.

Mr. Cuomo's office provided emails showing the federal agency was looped into conversations on the issue as far back as 2014, but Ms. Enck said that the information at that time didn't show how widespread the contamination was.

By the fall of 2015, some of the water tested above the EPA's recommended limit levels for the contaminant, but state officials have maintained it was still within an EPA-issued margin of safety and that EPA guidelines didn't demand residents stop drinking it.

Ms. Enck didn't dispute that. Still, she said, "there was no reason not to err on the side of public health" and tell residents to avoid the water.

When Ms. Enck said she discovered the extent of the contamination in October 2015, she called on the state to issue an order against drinking the water. She said Mr. Cuomo's administration pushed back, and she issued one herself.

The state soon followed with a notice that it says advises against drinking the water, but Ms. Enck and others have criticized the notice as ambiguous.

The spokesman for the Department of Health and other Cuomo officials said the EPA was kept apprised of the administration's actions throughout the process.

The EPA "had no issue with the actions being taken until close to a year later when they began issuing changing guidance and recommendations that conflicted" with its initial advisory, the spokesman said.

Michael Hickey, a resident in Hoosick Falls credited with first discovering and raising red flags about the water contamination, said Wednesday that he sided with Ms. Enck. The state, he said, "was only aggressive once it went into damage control mode."

Meanwhile, a spokesman for Senate Majority Leader John Flanagan, a Republican, called Ms. Enck "disingenuous" for not attending Tuesday's hearing. That "was the venue for the EPA to clarify its position," the spokesman said.

Ms. Enck said she didn't attend because it was a state event and the EPA is a federal agency.

Others have questioned why Mr. Cuomo, who has disregarded federal guidance before, relied on the EPA. He said earlier this year it wouldn't have been appropriate for the state to create guidelines conflicting with the federal government in this case.

Credit: By Mike Vilensky

DETAILS

Subject:	Water pollution; Government agencies; Congressional investigations
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Cuomo, Andrew M
Company / organization:	Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1815618822

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-tensions-escalate-over-hoosick-falls/docview/1815618822/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 446 of 500

World News: Into Syria's Chaos, Add a Kurdish State -- Rojava has four million people and its own constitution, alarming Turkey and the U.S.

Abdulrahim, Raja; Nissenbaum, Dion . Abdulrahim, Raja; Nissenbaum, Dion.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since late 2014, at least 6,000 young Syrian Kurds have been compelled to serve in the military, according to the regional administration's military ministry.

FULL TEXT

AMUDA, Syria -- Amid the chaos of Syria's years-long civil war, the Kurds have carved out a semiautonomous region called Rojava that is home to about four million people, is as big as Belgium and stretches nearly the full length of the 565-mile border between Syria and Turkey.

The emergence of Rojava also has added complexity to a region in turmoil, bringing resistance from outside and dissent from within.

Rojava's continuing territorial expansion has alarmed Turkey, which is battling Kurdish separatists within its own borders and has pushed deeper into Syria to attack Islamic State forces and rein in the Syrian Kurds. The U.S. is stuck uncomfortably in the middle because it relies on Syrian Kurds to fight Islamic State yet considers Turkey a crucial ally.

And as Rojava gets mightier and realizes long-held ambitions of self-rule for Kurds, some of its own people feel alienated by what they claim are heavy-handed tactics that feel reminiscent of the Syrian regime.

Instead of helping Jude Hamo finish his junior year of college, his parents sold the family car and borrowed money to smuggle the 23-year-old to Germany so he wouldn't be drafted into the Kurdish armed forces fighting Islamic State. "We chose the lesser of two evils," says Jude's father, Radwan.

Since late 2014, at least 6,000 young Syrian Kurds have been compelled to serve in the military, according to the regional administration's military ministry. More than two dozen died in battle.

In addition, the opposition group Syrian Network for Human Rights said Rojava officials have arrested and forced into military service a total of 1,178 civilians, including 217 minors and 69 women.

"Everyone has to participate," said Akram Hesso, former head of the Kurdish administration's executive council in one of the three Syrian provinces that form the self-proclaimed Rojava. "Those who come out against the draft can go and sit in European refugee camps."

Other sources of criticism include how the Kurdish administration, which established itself in early 2014, has cracked down on dissent, introduced an ideological school curriculum and consolidated power among one political party.

Kurdish leaders say the draft, which has led to an exodus of young men like Mr. Hamo, and other policies are necessities in the fight against Islamic State.

Other signs of Rojava's self-rule abound, from its opening of foreign offices in France, Germany, Sweden and Moscow to a constitution that embraces secularism and women's rights.

Rojava has hardened de facto lines of control that are accelerating Syria's fragmentation. The country is partitioned between the Assad regime, Islamic State, rebel groups and Syrian Kurds, with each group trying to implement its own ideology and vision of governance.

In neighboring Iraq's Kurdistan, recognized by the central government as an autonomous region since 2005, real independence remains elusive. Kurdistan wrestles with the Iraqi central government for a share of Iraq's budget, and Iraqi Kurdish leaders regularly threaten to secede.

After decades of being marginalized under Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and his late father, the Kurds were allowed by Syria's authoritarian regime to have some self-rule as part of a strategy to keep them from joining the uprising that began in March 2011 and morphed into civil war.

Government troops withdrew from historically Kurdish cities and towns in northeast Syria, and the Kurds then expanded their territory through conquests of land that had been seized by Islamic State.

The ethnic minority's growing power has become a concern for the Assad regime, which launched airstrikes in mid-August on Kurdish forces in the northeastern city of Hasakah. In a written statement about the fighting, the Syrian army used language linking the Kurdish forces with a militant group designated by the U.S. and Turkey as a terrorist organization.

Last week, Turkey supported Syrian rebels in a surprising cross-border offensive into northwestern Syria. The assault was aimed at pushing Islamic State forces from a strategic border town and halting the territorial gains of U.S.-backed Kurdish militants known as the YPG.

U.S. officials say they have made clear to Kurdish forces that American military backing isn't equivalent to an endorsement of their political ambitions.

Officials were angered when the YPG, viewed as the U.S.'s most effective fighting force against Islamic State, seized more territory during the recent Manbij offensive than they agreed to beforehand, according to Vice President Joe Biden.

Still, military support from the U.S. has stirred Kurdish aspirations and strained America's relationship with Turkey, a critical ally.

"It was kind of a short-term tactical decision that could have longer-term strategic downsides, all in the name of saying we were making progress on Islamic State," says Robert Ford, the U.S. ambassador to Syria when the uprising started.

In March, Syrian Kurds announced the formation of a federation of Rojava's three regions in an assertion of self-rule. "Rojava will be the basis of establishing a federalist system in Syria," said Mr. Hesso. Washington and other Western governments rejected the move.

Throughout Rojava, long-omnipresent photographs and statues of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and his late father have been replaced by banners of YPG fighters killed in battle. Many Rojava residents call them martyrs.

In the center of Amuda, a traffic circle adorned with a waving statue of Hafez al-Assad until it was torn down by protesters now has a statue of a woman who holds up a flame and carries a book and a few stalks of wheat. She is Rojava's own Lady Liberty.

Behind the displays of independence, however, is an enduring dependence on the Syrian regime. The Kurdish administration relies on the regime to pay the majority of civil-servant salaries, issue high-school and college diplomas, and run the region's airport.

Opposition parties say Kurdish leaders have arrested and beaten dissenters and shut down rival party headquarters. Rojava officials also banned two independent media outlets from operating freely. Elections originally scheduled for 2014 have been repeatedly postponed.

"Anything that has the hint of not working for their benefit, they ban it," says Imaad Omar Yusuf, general coordinator for the opposition Kurd Youth Movement. "Seventy percent of Kurds are against them."

On Aug. 13, Rojava's police force arrested the president of the Kurdish National Council, an umbrella group of opposition parties, deported him to Iraq and threatened to kill him if he returns, the group said in a statement.

Sinam Mohamad, foreign representative for Rojava, denies that anyone has been arrested or threatened because they are political dissenters. People detained or deported were guilty of criminal offenses, she says.

The independent media outlets were engaged in "intelligence gathering" and "antagonizing the autonomous administration," Ms. Mohamad adds. "And this is against the law."

In some villages, Sunni Arab residents who fled as the YPG pushed out the Sunni extremists of Islamic State have been banned from returning to their homes, according to some former residents and Syrian Kurdish officials.

Officials defend the ban on the grounds that Rojava is vulnerable to continuing attacks from Islamic State sleeper cells and sympathizers. Mass expulsions also are justified under tribal customs if one or two people in a family are members of Islamic State, say some Kurdish administration officials.

"No matter what, we are a tribal culture. So if there are problems that happen between my tribe and another family, the family at the very least is expelled," says Takoshar Tuhildaan, a commanding officer in the Kurdish administration's security force.

After being barred for decades by the Syrian regime from using the Kurdish language, Rojava leaders now require many schools to teach in Kurdish. That sparked a backlash from some parents and teachers who oppose the change.

At the start of the 2015-16 school year, the Kurdish administration instituted a new curriculum mandating that Kurds, Arabs and Assyrians all be taught in their native language.

Most teacher salaries are still paid by the Syrian regime, though, and it told teachers not to follow the new curriculum. That was seen as another attempt by the Syrian regime to undermine the Kurdish administration's authority.

Teachers say they signed in every day during the school year to get paid but didn't teach any students. Syrian Kurdish officials brought in replacement teachers, but they were poorly trained.

"Everything they do is to prove themselves," one first-grade teacher says about Rojava's administration. "Because the regime does it one way, they do it another way just to prove they are a country."

Credit: By Raja Abdulrahim and Dion Nissenbaum

DETAILS

ERIC Subject:	Presidents; Armed Forces; Native Language; Ideology; Family (Sociological Unit); Leaders; Fathers; Dissent; Government (Administrative Body); Grade 1; Tribes
Subject:	Armed forces; Sovereignty; Bans; Presidents; Opposition parties; Core curriculum; Politics; Teachers; Kurdish people
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92811 : National Security
Location:	Syria

Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815618695
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-into-syrias-chaos-add-kurdish-state/docview/1815618695/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-07
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 447 of 500

U.S. News: Award in Terror Case Dismissed On Appeal

Hong, Nicole . Hong, Nicole.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A federal appeals court in New York on Wednesday threw out a multimillion-dollar judgment awarded to a group of U.S. terrorism victims, ruling that the U.S. lacked jurisdiction over a lawsuit brought by the victims against the Palestinian Authority and Palestine Liberation Organization.

FULL TEXT

A federal appeals court in New York on Wednesday threw out a multimillion-dollar judgment awarded to a group of U.S. terrorism victims, ruling that the U.S. lacked jurisdiction over a lawsuit brought by the victims against the Palestinian Authority and Palestine Liberation Organization.

The ruling is a significant setback for the 10 American families who sued over terrorist attacks in Israel in the early 2000s that left 33 dead and more than 400 injured. After a trial in Manhattan federal court last year, jurors found the PLO and Palestinian Authority liable for the attacks and ordered the groups to pay the families $218.5 million, which was automatically tripled to $655.5 million under a U.S. antiterrorism law.

On Wednesday, three judges for the Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals dismissed the case, saying there wasn't enough of a connection between the U.S. and the Israel attacks. There is no U.S. jurisdiction in this case, "no matter how horrendous the underlying attacks or morally compelling the plaintiffs' claims," wrote Judge John Koetl.

One test of jurisdiction was whether the Palestinian Authority and the PLO could be considered "at home" in the U.S. Despite the groups' office and lobbying efforts in Washington, the appeals panel said that was insufficient to establish a substantial presence in the U.S.

The victims who brought the lawsuit were U.S. citizens, but the judges said that during the Israel attacks, the shooters "fired indiscriminately" at large groups of people, meaning they weren't expressly targeting Americans.

Gassan Baloul, a Squire Patton Boggs partner representing the Palestinian groups, said in a statement: "We are very gratified that the court fully accepted our clients' consistent position that the PA and the PLO are not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States courts in these matters."

Nitsana Darshan-Leitner, the Israel-based lawyer for the plaintiffs, said Congress and the State Department should intervene to "ensure that these families are compensated by the PA and PLO for these crimes."

Credit: By Nicole Hong

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Jurisdiction; Settlements & damages; Terrorism; Litigation; State court decisions
Location:	Israel; New York; United States--US
People:	Darshan-Leitner, Nitsana
Company / organization:	Name: Palestine Liberation Organization--PLO; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815618645
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-award-terror-case-dismissed-on-appeal/docview/1815618645/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distributio n is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Mattel's American Girls Head to Toys 'R' Us

Steele, Anne . Steele, Anne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mattel Inc. on Wednesday said it would begin selling its American Girl products in select Toys "R" Us Inc. locations, extending the iconic doll brand's reach beyond its novelty stores.

FULL TEXT

Mattel Inc. on Wednesday said it would begin selling its American Girl products in select Toys "R" Us Inc. locations, extending the iconic doll brand's reach beyond its novelty stores.

The partnership, which boosts the brands store base nearly sixfold, will make Toys "R" Us the only U.S.-based retailer to feature American Girl shop-in-shops in some stores. American Girl products are currently only available in 20 proprietary U.S. stores and online.

Sales of Mattel's American Girl brand fell 8% in 2015. In the most recent quarter ended in June, revenue from those products slid 19% year-over-year.

The company blamed the quarterly decline on its Truly Me line of contemporary 18-inch dolls, doll outfits and accessories and less promotional activity, but noted "encouraging early response" to Wellie Wishers, its newest -- and lower priced -- doll line designed for girls ages 5 to 7 years.

The Wellie Wishers product line will begin hitting Toys "R" Us shelves Sunday.

American Girl shop-in-shops will then debut in 97 stores across the country in late October, with additional locations slated to open in 2017.

Credit: By Anne Steele

DETAILS

Subject:	Dolls; Toys
Business indexing term:	Corporation: Mattel Inc
Location:	United States--US

Company / organization:	Name: Mattel Inc; NAICS: 336991, 339930; Name: Toys R Us Inc; NAICS: 459110, 459120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815618589
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mattels-american-girls-head-toys-r/docview/1815618589/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 449 of 500

Business News: McDonald's President Retires

ABSTRACT

The 47-year-old Mr. Kempczinski, meanwhile, joined McDonald's last year and is executive vice president of strategy, business development and innovation, coming over from Kraft Foods Group, where he served as president of international and vice president of growth initiatives.

FULL TEXT

McDonald's Corp. said Wednesday that retiring U.S. President Mike Andres would be succeeded by company executive Chris Kempczinski, effective Jan. 1.

The 58-year-old Mr. Andres is a 30-year veteran of the chain and among the chief architects of McDonald's makeover in the past year as the fast-food giant aimed to keep pace with shifting tastes toward fresher fare.

The 47-year-old Mr. Kempczinski, meanwhile, joined McDonald's last year and is executive vice president of strategy, business development and innovation, coming over from Kraft Foods Group, where he served as president of international and vice president of growth initiatives. He will become McDonald's fourth head of its U.S. business since November 2012.

"As we thank Mike for his contributions, we are confident Chris is the right leader to build upon our U.S. progress and bring a new level of convenience and excitement to the restaurant experience," said Chief Executive Steve Easterbrook.

McDonald's has moved to simplify its ingredients and satisfy increasingly conscientious customers. Most recently, the company said it would replace high-fructose corn syrup in its sandwich buns with sugar. The company also unveiled plans to roll out Chicken McNuggets and some breakfast items free of artificial preservatives.

On Wednesday, the burger chain also made a few other executive moves. Doug Goare, president of the international lead markets, will add the role of chief restaurant officer. Lucy Brady, who joined McDonald's in September, shifts into Mr. Kempczinski's role.

Credit: By Ezequiel Minaya

DETAILS

Subject:	Fast food industry; Presidents; Soft drinks; Retirement
Business indexing term:	Subject: Fast food industry Retirement; Industry: 72251 : Restaurants and Other Eating Places 92111 : Executive Offices 31211 : Soft Drink and Ice Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US

People:	Andres, Mike; Easterbrook, Steve
Company / organization:	Name: McDonalds Corp; NAICS: 533110, 722513
Classification:	72251: Restaurants and Other Eating Places; 92111: Executive Offices; 31211: Soft Drink and Ice Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815618568
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mcdonalds-president-retires/docview/1815618568/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Trump, hours after seeming to ease on his immigration and trade policy while standing with Mexico's president, reiterated the tough stance that has powered his presidential campaign.

FULL TEXT

Trump, hours after seeming to ease on his immigration and trade policy while standing with Mexico's president, reiterated the tough stance that has powered his presidential campaign.

Clinton slammed Trump's approach to foreign policy, saying he could jeopardize U.S. alliances and security.

Brazil's Senate voted to oust Rousseff after an impeachment trial that the president called a coup.

Michel Temer was sworn in as president hours before he was set to fly to China for the G-20 summit.

The Supreme Court rejected an appeal by North Carolina seeking to revive stricter state voting rules.

Russia said it had killed a top member of Islamic State, a day after the Pentagon said it had been the one to target the operative.

China's industrial sector showed signs of strength last month, but economists expect the pickup to fade.

Nigeria entered its first technical recession since 2004 in the second quarter.

An appeals court threw out a multimillion-dollar judgment awarded to a group of U.S. terrorism victims.

Spanish lawmakers rejected a second term for acting Prime Minister Rajoy, prolonging a stalemate.

DETAILS

Subject:	Impeachment; Presidents
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Russia; Brazil; Nigeria; Mexico; United States--US; China; North Carolina
People:	Temer, Michel
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Defense; NAICS: 928110; Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815606005

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1815606005/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 451 of 500

World News: World Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull said the conservative government had agreed to new rules of engagement requested by the military, amending laws that restricted strikes to only front-line Islamic State units.

FULL TEXT

INDIA

Growth Slows but

Pickup Is Forecast

India's economic expansion cooled last quarter amid slowdowns in the mining, construction and agriculture sectors.

Gross domestic product grew 7.1% in the three months to June 30, according to government data, down from the 7.9% expansion in the previous quarter and short of economists' expectations of a 7.6% increase.

For the first half of 2016, India's growth averaged 7.5%, making it the world's fastest-growing large economy.

Economists anticipate a pickup in the second half as farmers' income get a boost from favorable monsoon rains this year and close to 10 million government employees receive a big pay increase.

-- Anant Vijay Kala

AUSTRALIA

Military to Step Up

Islamic State Strikes

Australia will carry out more airstrikes against Islamic State, allowing its military for the first time to attack support facilities as well as militant fighters. Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull said the conservative government had agreed to new rules of engagement requested by the military, amending laws that restricted strikes to only front-line Islamic State units.

Australia, a close U.S. ally, has since 2014 committed combat aircraft and army special-forces advisers to the fight against Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, as well as to refueling, early warning and control aircraft. But U.S. warplanes have been attacking a wider range of targets.

Mr. Turnbull said Islamic State and the inspiration it provided for homegrown terrorism was the greatest strategic threat faced by Australia. --

-- Rob Taylor

DETAILS

Subject:	Aircraft; Paramilitary groups
Location:	Australia; India; United States--US
People:	Turnbull, Malcolm
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815605921
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1815605921/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 452 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

EDUCATION College Operator Sues Over Status The Center for Excellence in Higher Education, a Salt Lake City-based college operator, filed a civil lawsuit Tuesday in federal court in Utah challenging the U.S. Department of Education's decision last month to classify its schools as for-profit colleges for financial-aid purposes.

FULL TEXT

EDUCATION

College Operator

Sues Over Status

The Center for Excellence in Higher Education, a Salt Lake City-based college operator, filed a civil lawsuit Tuesday in federal court in Utah challenging the U.S. Department of Education's decision last month to classify its schools as for-profit colleges for financial-aid purposes.

The school group, known as CEHE, applied to the Education Department for nonprofit status nearly four years ago after buying four colleges from Carl Barney, who is now chairman of the board. It operates as a nonprofit for tax purposes and has nearly 10,000 students across the four institutions -- Stevens-Henager College, CollegeAmerica Denver, CollegeAmerica Arizona and California College San Diego.

The suit asks the court to declare its schools nonprofit for Title IV student-aid purposes, saying the department's decision is "arbitrary and capricious and inconsistent with the treatment of similarly situated nonprofit schools."

A spokeswoman from the Department of Education declined to comment on the suit.

As a for-profit chain, CEHE faces stricter oversight of student outcomes than do nonprofit institutions, such as having to report loan repayment data to prove it prepares students for gainful employment.

-- Melissa Korn

HOUSING

Pending Home Sales

Climbed in July

A measure of homes under contract for sale rose in July, a sign of steady demand amid low interest rates and rising employment.

The National Association of Realtors' pending home sales index, which tracks contract signings for purchases of previously owned homes, increased a seasonally adjusted 1.3% to 111.3 in July, the trade group said. Sales then typically close within a month or two of signings.

The index registered at a downwardly revised 109.9 in June. It reached a post-housing bust peak of 115.0 in April and now sits at the second-highest level of 2016. July's reading was 1.4% above its year-ago level.

"More home shoppers having success is good news for the housing market heading into the fall, but buyers still have few choices and little time before deciding to make an offer on a home available for sale," said Lawrence Yun, NAR's chief economist.

-- Jeffrey Sparshott

DETAILS

Subject:	Real estate sales; Colleges & universities; Education; Schools; Housing; Nonprofit organizations; Profits
Business indexing term:	Subject: Profits; Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Location:	California; Utah; United States--US
People:	Yun, Lawrence
Company / organization:	Name: Center for Excellence in Higher Education; NAICS: 813319; Name: Stevens-Henager College; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815605903
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1815605903/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 453 of 500

Herniated Disk Dims Outlook for Walker

Diamond, Jared . Diamond, Jared.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since July 27, he has gone 40-for-91 (.440) with 11 extra-base hits, carrying a struggling offense that ranks near the bottom of the major leagues in runs scored.

FULL TEXT

Mets second baseman Neil Walker plans to undergo season-ending surgery to repair a herniated disk in his lower back, a huge blow to a team suddenly surging back into playoff contention.

Manager Terry Collins announced the news shortly after the Mets' 5-2 win over the Miami Marlins, casting a pall on an otherwise celebratory night.

Acquired in a trade from the Pittsburgh Pirates in December, the 30-year-old Walker hit .282 with an .823 on-base-plus-slugging percentage in 2016. He's second on the Mets with 23 home runs and 55 RBIs. Since July 27, he has gone 40-for-91 (.440) with 11 extra-base hits, carrying a struggling offense that ranks near the bottom of the major leagues in runs scored.

"We're certainly very disappointed it's come to this," Collins said. "He's had a tremendous year for us. He makes the decision, and it's in his best interest."

Losing Walker for the season comes as a surprise to the Mets, who initially believed he could return at some point, even if in a limited role.

On Wednesday afternoon, general manager Sandy Alderson tried to downplay the severity of Walker's condition, calling it "pretty routine" and describing the speculation that it could shorten his career as "overblown."

But a few hours later, Collins continued to express concern about the possibility of Walker missing more time in the thick of a pennant race. He said that while Walker had dealt with a back issue for much of the season, the discomfort recently reached a breaking point, causing weakness and numbness in his legs and feet.

As a result, Walker missed his fourth consecutive game Wednesday, and Collins said he needed "to get some strength back in his leg in order to play." Ultimately, Collins hoped the Mets could use Walker in a "three on, one off" type of situation.

The Mets sent Walker for a second medical opinion on Wednesday, which surely informed his decision to opt for the procedure. A free agent this winter, Walker appears in line for a hefty payday after earning $10.55 million this season -- contingent upon his health.

Walker didn't address the media Wednesday, but Collins said he plans to speak with reporters about his rationale before Thursday's series finale against the Marlins.

"He didn't say one thing about next year. He didn't say one thing about down the road," Collins said before Wednesday's game. "He just said, 'Look, right now, I got to help, and I don't know if I can.'"

With Walker unavailable, the Mets will turn second base over to the tandem of Kelly Johnson and Wilmer Flores. Johnson delivered the crucial hit Wednesday night, a three-run double with two outs in the eighth inning to break a 2-2 tie, while Flores hit a two-run homer in the second.

"We're good with what we've got," Flores said. "We're here for a reason, and we'll keep battling."

Credit: By Jared Diamond

DETAILS

Subject:	Professional baseball
People:	Walker, Neil
Company / organization:	Name: New York Mets; NAICS: 711211
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Section:	Sports
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815605763
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/herniated-disk-dims-outlook-walker/docview/1815605763/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2017-11-23
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 454 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The EU will continue to push a raft of measures aimed at reining in U.S. tech giants following the Apple ruling. ---

FULL TEXT

Tesla and SolarCity, two pillars of Musk's empire, are facing financial crunches as the entrepreneur seeks to combine the firms.

French telecom Orange has entered preliminary discussions on acquiring a stake in Iran's largest cellular operator.

Deutsche Bank is weighing drastic options as the firm's woes continue. It discussed a Commerzbank tie-up but scrapped the idea.

Insurers are accelerating their move toward ACA plans that limit choices of doctors and hospitals.

Hanjin stopped taking new cargo after the South Korean shipper filed for bankruptcy protection.

Money has flowed out of European stock funds every week for over six months, a record stretch.

The Dow eased 53.42 points to 18400.88, ending August down less than 0.2% after six months of gains.

Amazon and Wells Fargo said their student-loan partnership has ended, six weeks after it was announced.

The EU will continue to push a raft of measures aimed at reining in U.S. tech giants following the Apple ruling.

Blacks lag far behind other groups in business ownership, but there are signs the gap is starting to narrow.

DETAILS

Location:	Iran; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111; Name: Deutsche Bank AG; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815605687
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1815605687/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-14
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 455 of 500

U.S. News: FDA Warns About Pairing Painkillers, Anxiety Drugs

Burton, Thomas M . Burton, Thomas M.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Food and Drug Administration, concerned about death and overdose risks from narcotic painkillers taken with certain anti-anxiety or sedative drugs, on Wednesday issued its most serious safety warning about the drug combinations.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The Food and Drug Administration, concerned about death and overdose risks from narcotic painkillers taken with certain anti-anxiety or sedative drugs, on Wednesday issued its most serious safety warning about the drug combinations.

The so-called boxed warning about combined use will be required on labels for opioid painkillers like oxycodone, hydrocodone and morphine, and for benzodiazepine drugs. Those are widely sold as generics, with names like alprazolam and diazepam, and under brand names like Xanax.

In all, 389 drugs are covered by the heightened warnings. FDA Commissioner Robert Califf said that during his recent visits to Tennessee, Kentucky and West Virginia, he saw that "benzodiazepines and opioids were an emerging threat in emergency rooms" and elsewhere.

Dr. Califf called on doctors to "please heed these warnings" and to make them known in drug information given to patients.

The National Center for Health Statistics estimated that benzodiazepines were involved in 31% of the opioid-painkiller deaths in 2011, up from 13% in 1999.

Credit: By Thomas M. Burton

DETAILS

Subject:	Prescription drugs; Narcotics; Benzodiazepines; Drugs
Company / organization:	Name: Food & Drug Administration--FDA; NAICS: 922190
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815600612
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fda-warns-about-pairing-painkillers/docview/1815600612/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 456 of 500

World News: China Faces Its Trade Critics

Chuin-Wei Yap . Chuin-Wei Yap.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

At the summit, scheduled for Sept. 4-5, Beijing is likely to emphasize its stewardship of "green" finance, tax transparency, financial regulation and other areas in a G-20-coordinated Hangzhou Action Plan that will allow it at least a symbolic chance to demonstrate global leadership.

FULL TEXT

BEIJING -- A summit of major economies meant to be a moment of glory for China coincides with a world-wide backlash against globalization -- and much of it is blamed on China.

Beijing sees gatherings of world leaders as its chance to emphasize China's ascending role on the world stage, and spares no effort to ensure outsize pomp for the occasion. But as President Xi Jinping prepares to welcome leaders of the Group of 20 economies to the ancient city of Hangzhou, keeping China from being singled out as a hindrance to global growth is increasingly emerging as a goal.

As China's growth slows and economies in the U.S. and Europe remain in the doldrums, complaints have gathered pace in recent months: China's industrial overcapacity has doused prices abroad. Access for foreign investors hasn't matched the terms Chinese encounter overseas. And the world's largest trading nation has become a fixture in trade spats from Brazilian pulp to U.S. chicken claws.

Western officials and businesses meanwhile see bidders in ever-larger Chinese acquisitions of major global brands as state-controlled beneficiaries of protected markets.

"China is the most closed of the G-20 countries in terms of inward direct investment, and at the same time it is emerging as the largest investor in the world," said David Dollar, senior fellow at the Brookings Institution. "The lack of reciprocity presents a real problem for the world."

Failing to tamp down these contentions at the G-20 would set back China's aspirations to reshape the global order, blunting triumphs such as the establishment of the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank.

Chinese officials suggest they will play up investment-treaty talks at the G-20 as evidence Beijing is committed to openness.

Beijing casts China as a victim, not a cause, of "rising trade protectionism." Commerce Ministry spokesman Shen Danyang told reporters last week that a rise in steel exports was due to more competitive Chinese mills. The G-20 communique, Mr. Shen predicted, would include language on "reducing trade protectionism."

Officials involved in G-20 planning say it is unlikely the forum will produce a major deal to support global growth, along the lines of the 2009 London summit that lined up more than $1 trillion in credit commitments to boost multilateral lending. At Hangzhou, they say, the focus is instead turning to persuading China to help get the global economy humming again.

At the summit, scheduled for Sept. 4-5, Beijing is likely to emphasize its stewardship of "green" finance, tax transparency, financial regulation and other areas in a G-20-coordinated Hangzhou Action Plan that will allow it at least a symbolic chance to demonstrate global leadership.

But China's attempt to return the G-20's agenda to the wider global economy could prove difficult. "If the final communique is going to be about overcapacity or other issues affecting trade, China wouldn't want its name" singled out for blame, an official with a Western business group said.

Prestige is at stake, as well as more tangible interests.

The scale and rock-bottom prices of China's exports have hit a nerve in working-class communities world-wide. Labor-affiliated economists in the West argue that opening markets, particularly to China, has suppressed wages and crowded out as many as three million American jobs. Such views have gained traction even in pro-trade circles in the U.S. and are a major issue in the presidential campaign.

Lingling Wei in Beijing and Valentina Pop in Brussels contributed to this article.

Credit: By Chuin-Wei Yap

DETAILS

Subject:	International trade; Leadership; Global economy; Globalization; Regulation of financial institutions; Protectionism
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade Leadership Global economy Globalization Regulation of financial institutions Protectionism
Location:	United States--US; China
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815600546
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-china-faces-trade-critics/docview/1815600546/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 457 of 500

U.S. News: Bad Romance: Falling for a Phony Online Suitor

Levitz, Jennifer . Levitz, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

When her sons realized she was sending money to someone she had never met, they went to law-enforcement agencies in the U.S. Authorities said there was little they could do because of the difficulty chasing overseas fraudsters, according to interviews with authorities.

FULL TEXT

Widowed in 2011 after 61 years of marriage, Wilma Jensen, now 84, last summer joined Match.com, where she was contacted by "Chris." Mrs. Jensen's printout of his profile shows a man with dark, full hair and business attire. It said he was a Christian, near 70 and enjoyed theater.

In daily phone calls and emails, which the Journal reviewed, Chris claimed to be an affluent antiques dealer in London who was from Kentucky. His wife had died in a car crash but he would begin a new chapter with Mrs. Jensen, he wrote.

Within months, Chris claimed to need heart surgery and had to pay medical bills before returning to the U.S. He said his money was tied up. She sent more than $120,000 in "loans" to London accounts, according to bank receipts.

When her sons realized she was sending money to someone she had never met, they went to law-enforcement agencies in the U.S. Authorities said there was little they could do because of the difficulty chasing overseas fraudsters, according to interviews with authorities. Match declined to discuss specific users.

Mrs. Jensen said she had fallen in love with Chris and believed he was in distress. "I was just trying to help out, because that's what I do. I help," she said.

(See related article: "Online Daters Are Falling Prey to Scams --- Fraudulent dating-service accounts are increasingly luring victims to send 'loans'" -- WSJ Sept. 1, 2016)

Credit: By Jennifer Levitz

DETAILS

Subject:	Dating services; Fraud
Company / organization:	Name: Match.com; NAICS: 812990
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815600475
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-bad-romance-falling-phony-online-suitor/docview/1815600475/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2017-11-23

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 458 of 500

City News: City Boosts Security for J'Ouvert Festival

Morales, Mark . Morales, Mark.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Almost a year after an aide to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo was shot by a stray bullet and killed hours before the West Indian Day parade, city officials have ramped up security for the annual J'Ouvert festival, planning the largest increase in security measures in the celebration's history.

FULL TEXT

Almost a year after an aide to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo was shot by a stray bullet and killed hours before the West Indian Day parade, city officials have ramped up security for the annual J'Ouvert festival, planning the largest increase in security measures in the celebration's history.

The New York Police Department is doubling its presence along the parade route and should have thousands of officers on hand, officials said. The NYPD will also increase the number of light towers and strategically located cameras at the event, which will kick off at 4 a.m. Monday, officials said.

"Anyone who attempts an act of violence, we're going to get them," said Mayor Bill de Blasio at a news conference. "Simple as that."

Authorities said Micah Alleyne was caught on camera firing a gun into a crowd at last year's J'Ouvert, the overnight street party that serves as the unofficial start of the annual West Indian American Day Parade. Carey Gabay, 43 years old, was shot in the head and died a week later. A Brooklyn resident, Mr. Gabay served as first deputy general counsel at the Empire State Development Corp., the state's chief economic-development agency.

Since then, elected officials, authorities and community organizers worked to make the event, which previously operated without a permit, safer, officials said.

Among new security measures, parade organizers were given a permit. J'Ouvert bands are expected to gather at around 2 a.m. Along Flatbush Avenue near the northern corner of Prospect Park. The procession is expected to head south before turning east on Empire Boulevard and south on Nostrand Avenue, before stopping at Maple Street at 10 a.m., officials said.

Marked NYPD vehicles are expected to be placed throughout the parade route, with 200 standing light towers and several cameras in the areas, officials said. ShotSpotter, a technology that detects the sound of gunfire, is also said to be in most locations along the route.

"The dual events -- the J'Ouvert and the Caribbean Day Festival Parade the events this year -- we believe will be the safest in the history of both events," said NYPD Commissioner William Bratton.

Mr. Gabay's brother, Aaron McNaughton, 32 years old, said he is comforted by the new measures but still concerned about safety.

"I think what they need to do is the side streets," said Mr. McNaughton, who was with Mr. Gabay just before he was shot. "The route is where they mainly focus on but that's not where the crime is. It happens in these pockets of side streets where people decide to commit crimes."

Credit: By Mark Morales

DETAILS

Subject:	Parades; Festivals; Public safety
Location:	Brooklyn New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815600469
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-boosts-security-jouvert-festival/docview/1815600469/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 459 of 500

U.S. News: Online Daters Are Falling Prey to Scams --- Fraudulent dating- service accounts are increasingly luring victims to send 'loans'

Levitz, Jennifer . Levitz, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Victims lost nearly $120 million to "romance scams" in the first six months of 2016, up 23% from the year-earlier period, according to the FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center, which collects data on crimes primarily reported in the U.S. Dating sites maintain they guard against phony profiles, but "a lot slip through," said Bruce Reppert, assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Illinois.

FULL TEXT

A fast-growing breed of global internet crime is revealing a troubling trend: Some fraudsters are easily infiltrating popular dating sites to fleece people out of their savings, law-enforcement officials say.

Cyber-swindlers lift photos of real people from the internet, and use the images to create profiles on dating sites such as Match.com, part of Match Group Inc. and the dominant brand in the U.S.'s $2.5 billion dating-services industry.

Victims lost nearly $120 million to "romance scams" in the first six months of 2016, up 23% from the year-earlier period, according to the FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center, which collects data on crimes primarily reported in the U.S.

Dating sites maintain they guard against phony profiles, but "a lot slip through," said Bruce Reppert, assistant U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Illinois.

Romance scammers often claim to be Americans temporarily working overseas, said Monica Whitty, a professor at the Cyber Security Centre at the University of Warwick in England. After a sometimes extended "grooming" process, the suitor manufactures emergencies and requests "loans," saying his own funds are temporarily tied up, said Ms. Whitty. Scammers typically target people middle-aged and up, said U.S. authorities.

Mr. Reppert's office prosecuted Olayinka Ilumsa Sunmola, a Nigerian man who was extradited to the U.S. and is awaiting sentencing, for what prosecutors described as being the ringleader of a South African crime organization. The group used photos of American men to create bogus profiles on Match.com, PlentyOfFish and eHarmony as well as MySpace, and bilked nearly $700,000 from 53 U.S. victims between 2008 and 2013, prosecutors said.

"Increasing consumer complaints of online scams and sexual predators on dating websites" are starting to worry state officials, IBISWorld, a market-research firm, cautioned in an April report. New York and New Jersey are among a handful of states with laws requiring dating sites to tell customers whether they perform background checks.

Mandy Ginsberg, chief executive of Match Group North America, which also runs PlentyofFish, said scams affect a tiny percentage of 3.3 million paid members in North America, and that antifraud efforts block "tens of thousands of people" from getting onto the site. Match said it requires customers to pledge not to send money to other users. "As long as our members don't do that, these kinds of things cannot happen," the company said.

MySpace and eHarmony didn't respond to requests for comment.

In one of the largest U.S. cyber-financial fraud cases yet, defendants are to be tried in January in Mississippi, where many of their victims were located, for an alleged multimillion dollar scheme involving many types of scams and stretching from South Africa to Canada to the U.S. The defendants preyed, in part, upon victims they met on dating sites, including Match's SeniorPeopleMeet.com, prosecutors said.

Match said on two email addresses authorities contacted it about, Match had blocked the users before they could interact with others. Match declined to discuss other defendants.

Separately, after being contacted by The Wall Street Journal, U.K. investigators said they are looking into a case in which an 84-year-old Indiana widow sent more than $120,000 to London accounts after striking up a virtual relationship with "Chris," who she met on Match.com last summer. With a search tool that scours the internet for similar photos, the Journal determined Chris's image was a photo for sale on Shutterstock.

Match said it takes steps to keep out the unsavory, such as weeding out anyone previously blocked from Match or on the national sex offender registry.

Mark Swindell, who worked at Match from 2005 until 2011 and was a manager of quality and training, said the company outsources the task of approving new-user profiles to a company in the Dominican Republic. He said workers there had quotas for screening photos and typically took less than a minute to review each photo.

Match confirmed that a Dominican Republic team screens profiles, and that there were quotas. "Quotas are based on historical data and what an agent should be able to reasonably process and still maintain a high quality of excellence," the company said.

Profiles deemed suspicious are reviewed by Match's U.S. risk team, while fraud specialists also monitor the site.

(See related article: "Bad Romance: Falling for a Phony Online Suitor" -- WSJ Sept. 1, 2016)

Credit: By Jennifer Levitz

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Fraud; Crime; Internet; Dating services; Cybercrime
Business indexing term:	Subject: Dating services; Corporation: Match Group Inc; Industry: 81299 : All Other Personal Services
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Match Group Inc; NAICS: 812990
Classification:	81299: All Other Personal Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1815600375

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-online-daters-are-falling-prey-scams/docview/1815600375/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-01-03

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 460 of 500

U.S. News: California Gun-Violence Center Picks Chief

Elinson, Zusha . Elinson, Zusha.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Garen Wintemute, an emergency-room doctor who leads a gun-violence research group at the school, will head the new University of California Firearm Violence Research Center at UC Davis, according to plans announced this week by University of California President Janet Napolitano.

FULL TEXT

SAN FRANCISCO -- A new gun-violence research center in California will be led by a doctor who has been using his own money to fund gun-violence research at the University of California, Davis.

Garen Wintemute, an emergency-room doctor who leads a gun-violence research group at the school, will head the new University of California Firearm Violence Research Center at UC Davis, according to plans announced this week by University of California President Janet Napolitano.

The state's Democratic-controlled Legislature set aside $5 million this year to fund the center, which the school said is the first state-funded center of its kind in the country.

There is little research on gun violence because of restrictions on such research placed on the U.S Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in the late 1990s. As federal funding dried up, Dr. Wintemute said, he donated $1.3 million to researching gun violence at the school.

Dr. Wintemute, 64 years old, said that he intends to study some basic questions about guns in California, including who is most at risk for gun violence and whether the state's tight controls on firearms are having an effect.

"We don't know about the prevalence of firearm ownership, we don't know about the risks and benefits of firearm ownership, we don't know nearly as much as we think we know about who is at risk and why," he said in an interview.

Gun-rights groups in California weren't pleased with the news. Arthur Przebinda, a spokesman for Doctors for Responsible Gun Ownership, said Dr. Wintemute isn't an impartial researcher. He argued the research focuses on ways to restrict gun ownership.

"In effect, $5 million of taxes, a large portion paid by California gun owners, is going to fund advocacy that will disarm them," said Dr. Przebinda.

Dr. Wintemute said he has supported gun-control policies that his research has found to be effective -- for example, restricting firearms access for people who abuse alcohol. He said his research isn't biased.

Credit: By Zusha Elinson

DETAILS

Subject:	Social research; Violence; Firearms; Research; Gun violence
Location:	California; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815600214
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-california-gun-violence-center-picks/docview/1815600214/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 461 of 500

U.S. News: Chicago Shooting Deaths Accelerate

Mahtani, Shibani . Mahtani, Shibani.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

CHICAGO -- The number of shooting deaths here has surpassed the total for last year with four months still to go, in a bloody 2016 in which Chicago has outpaced most major U.S. cities in homicides.

Police are stepping up efforts to confiscate illegal firearms from the streets, and the state recently passed a law toughening penalties for gun trafficking, but the moves so far seem to be having little effect. This August is shaping up to be the most violent in almost two decades.

By Wednesday morning, 425 people had been fatally shot so far this year in Chicago -- accounting for 91% of the total murders in the city. In all of 2015, 424 people were killed by gunshots, with a total of 493 homicides. By the end of the year, gun-related deaths are set to reach highs not seen since the early 2000s.

"This is a national emergency," said Eric Russell, a community activist from the Tree of Life Justice League, a Chicago group that helps to fight gun violence.

Chicago police said the staggering number of violent crimes here underscores the urgency of getting illegal guns off the street and toughening penalties for using a firearm in commission of a crime.

"The violence we are seeing is being committed by repeat offenders who do not fear the consequences of their actions, because too frequently they are not held accountable by the rest of the criminal justice system," said police Superintendent Eddie Johnson.

He called for legislation to "send a clear message that if you bring violence into our communities, you will be held fully accountable."

Last week, Illinois Gov. Bruce Rauner signed legislation raising the maximum sentence for bringing guns illegally into the state to 30 years.

In the first half of this year, homicides jumped 15% in the 51 large cities that submitted crime data, compared with the year-earlier period, according to a July survey released by the Major Cities Chiefs Association. But over half of that increase was driven by spikes in Chicago and Orlando, where a gunman fatally shot 49 people at a nightclub in June.

So far this year New York City has seen 227 homicides, down seven from the same period last year -- and a little more than half the number of homicides in Chicago, even though it is three times Chicago's size. Only 134 of the murders in New York -- less than 60% -- involved firearms.

The Chicago police have seized over 5,890 guns so far this year, effectively one gun confiscated per hour and about a 22% increase from the number seized last year.

Among the recent victims was Nykea Aldridge, cousin of Chicago Bulls star Dwyane Wade, killed Friday while she was pushing one of her children in a stroller after enrolling another in school. Two brothers charged by police over the homicide had both been arrested before, one on a gun-related offense, and were out on parole. The two are being held without bail and haven't entered a plea.

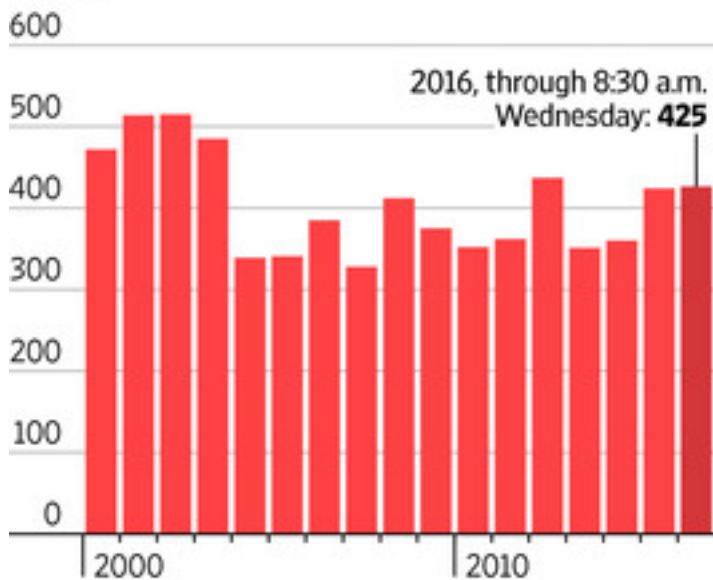

"We as a city must come together to support families whose loved ones have been lost to gun violence," said Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel, speaking at a recent funeral of the son of a police officer, who was killed on his porch during a visit home from college. "No gang member with a gun is stronger than the sense of community in this room."

Gun Deaths on the Rise

The number of shooting deaths in Chicago is on pace to reach a level not witnessed in more than a decade. Police are reacting by increasing efforts to seize illegal guns from the streets.

Murders by firearm in Chicago

By year

Source: Chicago Police Department

Illegal gun seizures in Chicago

Jan. 1 - Aug. 31

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Shibani Mahtani

DETAILS

Subject:	Shootings; Murders & murder attempts; Criminal statistics; Fines & penalties; Violence; Firearms; Cities; Gun violence
Location:	Chicago Illinois; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815600138
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-chicago-shooting-deaths-accelerate/docview/1815600138/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 462 of 500

Progressives Finally Embrace States' Rights

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

State attorneys general could use subpoena power to silence researchers and companies that show that a higher minimum wage causes economic damage, the gender pay gap isn't wide when adjusted for all relevant variables and the rise in income inequality is overstated because the value of government benefits is ignored, as are taxes paid by the rich.

FULL TEXT

Elizabeth Price Foley shares the good news that "The Climate Prosecutors Can't Dodge Congress Forever" (op-ed, Aug. 22), but the better news is that the state attorneys general of Massachusetts and New York, in their effort to avoid testifying before Congress, have suddenly embraced the cause of states' rights. Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey, who demanded full disclosure from Exxon Mobil and conservative think tanks regarding all communications dealing with climate research, insists that full disclosure demanded by Congress regarding her investigation of Exxon Mobil is an unconstitutional "affront to states' rights."

Federalism doesn't preclude Congress from issuing subpoenas to state officials who may be violating the First Amendment rights of Americans. Nonetheless, it is gratifying to finally have blue-state attorneys general join the states' rights side of the constitutional debate, even if the catalyst for change was an unconstitutional attack on free speech. Under the Obama administration, the left has disparaged states' rights advocates as reactionaries.

State attorneys general could use subpoena power to silence researchers and companies that show that a higher minimum wage causes economic damage, the gender pay gap isn't wide when adjusted for all relevant variables and the rise in income inequality is overstated because the value of government benefits is ignored, as are taxes paid by the rich.

Our constitutional rights will be reinforced if the attorneys general have to reveal all collusion with environmental groups and the Obama administration in their climate crusade against Exxon Mobil and the First Amendment.

Gary Phillips

Greenville, S.C.

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys general; Gender pay gap; Disclosure; First Amendment-US
Business indexing term:	Subject: Gender pay gap Disclosure; Corporation: Exxon Mobil Corp; Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	Massachusetts; New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Exxon Mobil Corp; NAICS: 211120, 457110
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 1, 2016
Section:	Letters to the Editor
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815592686
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/progressives-finally-embrace-states-rights/docview/1815592686/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 463 of 500

World News: Beijing Accuses American of Spying

Chun Han Wong . Chun Han Wong.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Chinese officials said this year that they were in talks with Washington over Ling Wancheng, a Chinese businessman believed to be living in the U.S. and a brother of a former senior Communist Party official who was sentenced to life in prison for corruption and theft of state secrets.

FULL TEXT

BEIJING -- Chinese authorities indicted a U.S. business consultant, detained for more than a year, on allegations she spied on behalf of a foreign government about two decades ago, her husband said Tuesday.

The charges filed in July against Phan Phan-Gillis, a 56-year-old naturalized American born in Vietnam and of Chinese descent, didn't specify the government she is accused of spying for, said her husband, Jeff Gillis, citing information from Ms. Phan-Gillis and her lawyers. He said Chinese investigators have asked her to confess to being a U.S. spy from 1996 to 1998.

"The charges are absolutely false," Mr. Gillis said in a statement detailing the allegations against his wife, which hadn't been disclosed previously. She faces life imprisonment if convicted, though a trial date hasn't been set, he said.

Ms. Phan-Gillis, who was based in Houston, hasn't been reachable to comment since she was detained in March 2015 during a business trip to southern China. In a recent letter that she dictated to a U.S. consular official and that was released last week by Mr. Gillis, she said, "I am accused of being a spy for the U.S. government. I have never been a spy."

A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman confirmed the prosecution but didn't elaborate. The ministry previously said she was detained on allegations of "engaging in activities that endangered China's national security."

News of the indictment against Ms. Phan-Gillis comes days before President Barack Obama is due to visit China to attend the Group of 20 summit and hold talks with Chinese President Xi Jinping.

Washington and Beijing have sparred over the treatment of detainees and alleged fugitives in each other's jurisdictions. Chinese officials said this year that they were in talks with Washington over Ling Wancheng, a Chinese businessman believed to be living in the U.S. and a brother of a former senior Communist Party official who was sentenced to life in prison for corruption and theft of state secrets. Mr. Ling hasn't been accused of wrongdoing.

The U.S. State Department's Bureau of Consular Affairs didn't respond to a request to comment on the indictment against Ms. Phan-Gillis. The department earlier expressed concern about her treatment and said her case has been raised with senior Chinese officials.

Credit: By Chun Han Wong

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal sentences; Indictments; Espionage
Location:	United States--US; China
People:	Phan-Gillis, Phan
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815282340
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-beijing-accuses-american-spying/docview/1815282340/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 464 of 500

Business News: Unlimited Data...Within Limits --- After pledging to ditch usage caps, Sprint and T-Mobile introduce costlier premium plans

Knutson, Ryan; Gryta, Thomas . Knutson, Ryan; Gryta, Thomas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Offering the "premium" version of unlimited plans helps comply with the Federal Communications Commission's net neutrality rules, upheld in court in June, that prohibit internet providers from slowing down, or "throttling," particular apps or entire classes of services.

FULL TEXT

Sprint Corp. and T-Mobile US Inc. recently said they would scrap data caps and give customers a simpler option: unlimited everything at a single price.

But the plans had restrictions. Days later, both carriers unveiled "premium" unlimited plans that cost $20 to $25 more a month. And even those had limitations.

"The truly unlimited plan doesn't yet exist," said Fredrik Jungermann, managing director of Tefficient, a telecom analytics firm. If the carriers sold unlimited plans without restrictions, "they might get users that would use hundreds of gigabytes a month or even thousands, and they wouldn't get even a single dollar more for them."

The latest round of unlimited offerings highlights the tactics carriers use to win customers in the competitive wireless market, and the maze of fine print that can catch consumers off guard. The new plans don't have a hard ceiling on usage, but put restrictions on everyday behaviors.

Take T-Mobile. The carrier said Monday its T-Mobile One plan is "a radically simple subscription to the mobile internet at one low price" with "unlimited everything." The carrier's website is decorated with an oversize infinity sign.

But the more than 450 words of fine print on T-Mobile's site describe the caveats. Video is delivered at a lower quality, internet speeds might get throttled after using 26 gigabytes in a month, and if a device is turned into a Wi-Fi hot spot, a practice known as tethering, it could be slowed.

On Monday, the carrier unveiled "T-Mobile Plus," which allows consumers to pay an extra $25 a month to get faster Wi-Fi tethering and higher-quality video streams -- but consumers must open an app to turn on higher-quality streams every day they want to use it.

Sprint launched its "Unlimited Freedom" plan in mid-August with limits on video, music and gaming streaming.

On Friday, the company added "Unlimited Freedom Premium," which is $20 more a month and allows for higher quality streaming than the original offering.

A Sprint spokesman said most customers can't differentiate between low- and high-quality video on smartphones because the screens are small. But the carrier wanted to offer a premium plan with high-quality video for the "segment of the population that wants the absolute very best."

Verizon Wireless doesn't offer any unlimited plans, and AT&T Inc. only sells unlimited to customers who also pay for one of its pay TV services, DirecTV or U-verse. That plan also comes with restrictions, including not allowing Wi-Fi tethering and customers potentially getting throttled after 22 gigabytes of monthly use.

To be sure, that is far more than the 3.7 gigabytes North American smartphone users typically consume each month, according to telecom equipment maker Ericsson. But for most people, it wouldn't be enough to replace a home broadband subscription.

For the smaller carriers, these new "unlimited" plans are also a subtle way of eventually raising prices. They start at $60 or $70 a month, and the companies say they might eventually eliminate cheaper options with limited data.

Offering the "premium" version of unlimited plans helps comply with the Federal Communications Commission's net neutrality rules, upheld in court in June, that prohibit internet providers from slowing down, or "throttling," particular apps or entire classes of services.

Wireless carriers have so far been allowed to offer plans with throttling as long as they offer multiple plans and the throttling is clearly communicated to customers.

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler has said the agency was keeping a close eye on these types of plans that provide free data or treat traffic differently.

An FCC spokesman declined to comment on the specifics of the T-Mobile and Sprint plans, but the agency's "informal policy review is ongoing."

T-Mobile Chief Operating Officer Mike Sievert said the company supports an open internet, but "that means different things to different people."

Paul Gallant, a policy analyst at Cowen & Co., said the plans were procompetitive. "These lower-priced unlimited plans -- even with [low quality] video -- could put pressure on Verizon's and AT&T's data caps," Mr. Gallant wrote in a research note.

Credit: By Ryan Knutson and Thomas Gryta

DETAILS

Subject:	Internet access; Wireless carriers; Smartphones; Service introduction; Wireless access points
Business indexing term:	Subject: Smartphones; Corporation: AT & T Inc Verizon Communications Inc T-Mobile USA Inc; Industry: 51711 : Wired and Wireless Telecommunications Carriers (except Satellite)
Company / organization:	Name: Sprint Corp; NAICS: 517112; Name: T-Mobile USA Inc; NAICS: 517112
Classification:	51711: Wired and Wireless Telecommunications Carriers (except Satellite)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815280757
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-unlimited-data-within-limits-after/docview/1815280757/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 465 of 500

CIA Venture Fund Operates in Shadows --- Trustees at agency firm In-Q-Tel have ties to companies it funds

Paletta, Damian . Paletta, Damian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]funds came in from a source based far from Silicon Valley: In-Q-Tel Inc., a venture-capital firm in Virginia funded by the Central Intelligence Agency. Some of its trustees, it said, are so enmeshed in the tech world it would be hard to avoid any ties that might be interpreted as conflicting. Besides technology, trustees come from a variety of backgrounds including academia, national security and venture capital.

FULL TEXT

Forterra Systems Inc., a California startup focused on virtual reality, was in need of money and its products didn't have much commercial appeal. Then funds came in from a source based far from Silicon Valley: In-Q-Tel Inc., a venture-capital firm in Virginia funded by the Central Intelligence Agency.

One catalyst for the 2007 infusion, according to a former Forterra executive and others familiar with it, was a recommendation by a man who sat on the board of the venture-capital firm -- and also on the board of Forterra.

In-Q-Tel pumped in cash, Forterra developed some tools useful to the military, and government contracts started coming in.

Like the agency that founded it, the CIA-funded venture-capital firm operates largely in the shadows. In-Q-Tel officials regard the firm as independent, yet it has extremely close ties to the CIA and runs almost all investment decisions by the spy agency. The firm discloses little about how it picks companies to invest in, never says how much, and sometimes doesn't reveal the investments at all.

Even less well-known are potential conflicts of interest the arrangement entails, as seen in this Forterra example and others continuing to the present. Nearly half of In-Q-Tel's trustees have a financial connection of one kind or another with a company In-Q-Tel has funded, a Wall Street Journal examination of its investments found.

In-Q-Tel's hunt for promising technology has led the firm, on at least 17 occasions, to fund businesses that had a financial link of some sort to an In-Q-Tel trustee. In three instances a trustee sat on the board of a company that had an In-Q-Tel investment, as in the Forterra case, according to the Journal's examination, which was based on a review of investment records and interviews with venture-capital and In-Q-Tel officials, past and present.

In-Q-Tel differs from other venture-capital firms in an important way: It is a nonprofit. Instead of trying to make money, it seeks to spur the development of technology useful to the CIA mission of intelligence gathering.

Tangled connections are endemic in the venture-capital business, where intimate industry knowledge is essential to success. Other venture-capital firms, however, are playing with their own money, or that of private investors.

In-Q-Tel uses public money, to which strict conflict-of-interest rules apply -- at least $120 million a year, say people familiar with the firm's financials. It sometimes deploys this capital in ways that, even if not by intent, have the potential to benefit the firm's own trustees by virtue of other roles they have in the tech industry.

In-Q-Tel investments often attract other funding. Each dollar In-Q-Tel invests in a small business typically is matched by $15 from elsewhere, the firm has found. That makes the small business likelier to succeed and makes its stock options more valuable for whoever has some.

In-Q-Tel said it needs to work with people who have industry connections if it hopes to find promising technology.

Some of its trustees, it said, are so enmeshed in the tech world it would be hard to avoid any ties that might be interpreted as conflicting. Besides technology, trustees come from a variety of backgrounds including academia, national security and venture capital.

"In-Q-Tel put in place rigorous policies to safeguard taxpayer funds, prevent possible conflicts-of-interest and stay focused on developing technology to meet mission requirements," said a CIA spokesman, Ryan Trapani. "We are pleased that both the In-Q-Tel model and the safeguards put in place have worked so well."

The firm permits its trustees to recommend investing in businesses to which they have ties, so long as they disclose these internally and to the CIA. Trustees are required to recuse themselves from reviews and votes after such recommendations.

To succeed, "you want a board who knows what the hell they are doing," said Jeffrey Smith, who helped design In-Q-Tel when he was CIA general counsel and is now its outside counsel, as well as a senior counsel at law firm Arnold & Porter. "This is to some extent a balance, and we know that," he said.

In the Forterra case, Charles Boyd, a retired Air Force four-star general, joined the boards of both Forterra and In-Q-Tel in 2006. The following year, In-Q-Tel sank money into Forterra, according to an In-Q-Tel news release at the time. The amount couldn't be determined.

Gen. Boyd said he made an initial recommendation for In-Q-Tel to invest but didn't take part in its decision to do so. He said he received no compensation from Forterra for recommending to In-Q-Tel that it invest in the startup.

"It definitely was a win-win from our perspective to have Charles on the board and open those doors for us," said Chris Badger, who was Forterra's vice president of marketing. He said there was discussion within Forterra about whether "In-Q-Tel's funding model was really generating a good benefit for the taxpayer."

The money from In-Q-Tel and subsequent federal contracts proved insufficient. Forterra failed to attract commercial interest and closed in 2010 after selling off pieces of itself. The buyer was another company where an In-Q-Tel trustee served on the board.

Investors in Forterra, including In-Q-Tel, took heavy losses, according to people involved in the unwinding. Gen. Boyd had no personal investment in Forterra, In-Q-Tel said.

He did have nonqualified stock options, according to In-Q-Tel, which said holders of such options didn't receive anything for them when Forterra stopped operating. Gen. Boyd said the only compensation he received from the small business was $5,000 as it was closing down. He left In-Q-Tel's board of trustees in 2013.

For the CIA, a captive venture-capital firm is a way to encourage and shape technology development without getting bogged down in bureaucracy.

In-Q-Tel's beginnings trace to a plan hatched in the late 1990s by George Tenet, then the CIA director, who expressed frustration that access to pioneering technology was held back by byzantine government procurement rules. Congress approved the creation of In-Q-Tel by agreeing to direct money to the organization. It started investing in 2000.

In-Q-Tel has at times received funds to invest from other agencies, among them the National Security Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Defense Department.

In one case, it invested in a business that analyzed chemical compounds in carpets, resulting in a method to detect deadly chemicals in Afghanistan and Iraq, said the venture-capital firm's chief executive, Christopher Darby.

Another time, it put money into a satellite antenna maker, leading to the development of portable satellite antennas that can help troops or intelligence agents communicate in remote locations, Mr. Darby added. "I've been told by our customers that the technology that we've delivered has saved countless lives," he said.

In an example of the financial links some trustees have within the technology world, In-Q-Tel CEO Christopher Darby also serves on the board of a for-profit tech company.

In-Q-Tel doesn't invest in that company, which is called Endgame Inc. But the company competes with other firms in its field -- cybersecurity -- that sometimes seek In-Q-Tel cash. If that happens, Mr. Darby doesn't take part in reviewing the funding requests, he said.

On the Endgame board, Mr. Darby serves as nonexecutive chairman. He said stock options he receives are "de minimis" next to the roughly $2 million a year he earns as In-Q-Tel's CEO.

The CIA has reviewed his role at Endgame and signed off on his work there, people familiar with the arrangement said.

Of about 325 investments In-Q-Tel says it has made since its founding, more than 100 weren't announced, although the identities of some of those companies have leaked out. The absence of disclosure can be due to national-security concerns or simply because a startup company doesn't want its financial ties to intelligence publicized.

While moneymaking isn't In-Q-Tel's goal, when that happens, such as when a startup it funded goes public, In-Q-Tel can keep the profit and roll it into new projects. It doesn't obtain rights to technology or inventions.

At In-Q-Tel's headquarters tucked in the back of an office park in Arlington, Va., the lobby is sparse, with three blank digital screens on the wall and an American flag in a stand. Some executives wear jeans, reflecting a Silicon Valley ethos. Its spy-world ties also are evident, in frosted windows and fingerprint scans to enter certain rooms.

In-Q-Tel's investments include one made last year in CyPhy Works, a Massachusetts company that produces small surveillance drones.

CyPhy's board includes Anita Jones, a computer scientist and former Defense Department official. She is also a trustee of In-Q-Tel, appointed in 2002.

Ms. Jones didn't connect CyPhy with In-Q-Tel, said CyPhy's chief executive, Helen Greiner. The suggestion to seek In-Q-Tel funding came from another investor. At In-Q-Tel, Ms. Jones stayed out of discussions of whether to invest, the firm said.

After In-Q-Tel put money in, it suggested certain modifications to one of CyPhy's surveillance drones, a model that can stay aloft for hundreds of hours because it is powered through a microfiber tether. The resulting new drone, called the Persistent Aerial Reconnaissance and Communications, or PARC, is used by the government and is available for commercial purchase.

In-Q-Tel "could see the military opportunity," Ms. Greiner said. "They work with their customer base to say, 'This is what these guys are doing now, but what would be the most useful?'"

Asked if In-Q-Tel's investment boosted the value of any stock options held by Ms. Jones, she and CyPhy said in a written statement that "the transaction may or may not have had an effect on the value of options held" by her.

Forterra's case was the only time In-Q-Tel funded a business that had been recommended by a trustee who was on that business's board, according to the venture-capital firm. It said that other times when it funded businesses where a trustee was a director, the trustee wasn't the one proposing the investment.

Connections between trustees and funded companies often are indirect, such as parallel investments by In-Q-Tel and by the primary employer of an In-Q-Tel trustee.

Three of In-Q-Tel's 12 trustees work for other, larger venture-capital firms. In-Q-Tel has invested in at least 13 businesses in which those other firms already held stakes.

In-Q-Tel trustee Peter Barris is a co-managing general partner at New Enterprise Associates, one of the largest venture-capital firms.

Mr. Barris joined In-Q-Tel's board in 2006. Four years later, In-Q-Tel invested in a data-storage startup at which New Enterprise already held a stake, a company called Cleversafe.

Mr. Barris didn't recommend the investment or vote on it, according to him and other In-Q-Tel officials.

A few years later, New Enterprise Associates increased its stake in Cleversafe to 25%, and Mr. Barris joined Cleversafe's board.

Later still, he was involved in a restructuring at Cleversafe that polished up the data-storage business for a $1.3 billion sale. At the time of the sale in 2015, Mr. Barris was on the board of Cleversafe as well as the boards of two of its investors: In-Q-Tel and Northwestern University.

Mr. Barris said that this triple connection was unusual, but that all of the investors' interests were aligned. "I could argue that In-Q-Tel benefited from [New Enterprise] rather than the other way around," he said.

Mr. Barris added that on at least three occasions, he has recommended In-Q-Tel look into investing in companies to which New Enterprise Associates had a connection, but In-Q-Tel didn't invest.

Ronald Gilson, a Columbia Law School professor who has written about governance and venture capital, said In-Q-Tel's unique semigovernmental model puts it in the situation of needing expert advice while trying to avoid overly cozy financial relationships.

"On the one hand, if you wanted really pristine independence, it means you are going to need people who don't have commercial ties to the industry," Mr. Gilson said. "On the other hand, if you have people without any commercial ties to the industry, they are not much use."

Credit: By Damian Paletta

DETAILS

Subject:	Intelligence gathering; Small business; Startups; Venture capital; Venture capital companies; Entrepreneurs; Conflicts of interest; Stock options; Trustees; Investments; Defense contracts; National security; Funding; Drones; Surveillance
Business indexing term:	Subject: Small business Startups Venture capital Venture capital companies Entrepreneurs Conflicts of interest Stock options Trustees; Industry: 52391 : Miscellaneous Intermediation
Company / organization:	Name: In-Q-Tel Inc; NAICS: 523910; Name: Forterra Systems Inc; NAICS: 511210; Name: Central Intelligence Agency--CIA; NAICS: 928110, 928120
Classification:	52391: Miscellaneous Intermediation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275952
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/cia-venture-fund-operates-shadows-trustees-at/docview/1815275952/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 466 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Canadian fertilizer firms Agrium and Potash are in preliminary talks about a possible merger of equals. ---

FULL TEXT

The EU demanded that Ireland recoup roughly $14.5 billion of unpaid taxes accumulated over more than a decade by Apple.

The ruling marks a sharp break with the U.S. Treasury and further complicates efforts to forge a bipartisan deal on U.S. tax policy.

Google is taking on Uber with a San Francisco ride-sharing service to help commuters join carpools.

Theranos withdrew its request for clearance of a Zika test after the FDA found that a study didn't include proper patient safeguards.

Canadian fertilizer firms Agrium and Potash are in preliminary talks about a possible merger of equals.

The FDIC's deposit-insurance fund reached its highest level since the financial crisis in the second quarter and surpassed a key threshold.

U.S. regulators defended anti-money-laundering rules that critics say cut off access to the financial system.

Stock trading has been particularly subdued in August, even for a month typically marked by muted action.

U.S. stocks eased, while as the dollar gained on the outlook for Fed action on rates. The Dow fell 48.69.

The success of an energy play by McClendon could help his heirs hang on to a stake in the NBA's Thunder.

DETAILS

Subject:	Banking industry; Acquisitions & mergers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Banking industry Acquisitions & mergers
Location:	Ireland; United States--US; San Francisco California
Company / organization:	Name: Food & Drug Administration--FDA; NAICS: 922190; Name: Federal Deposit Insurance Corp; NAICS: 524128; Name: Google Inc; NAICS: 334310, 519290; Name: National Basketball Association; NAICS: 813990
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275901
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1815275901/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 467 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Justice Department said it gave the Supreme Court erroneous data in a 2003 case over bail for imprisoned immigrants. ---

FULL TEXT

Islamic State said its chief spokesman, who played an important role in the militant group's external operations, was killed on a battlefield in northern Syria.

Some Democrats are pressing the Clinton family to cut all ties to the Clinton Foundation should Hillary Clinton be elected.

The State Department said it found approximately 30 emails from Clinton's account that could be related to the Benghazi attacks.

Trump plans a quick trip Wednesday to meet with Mexico's president before the nominee is scheduled to give a speech on immigration.

GOP Sen. Rubio and Rep. Wasserman Schultz, the ex-DNC chair, won their Florida primaries. Sen. McCain held off a challenge in Arizona's Republican primary.

Migration to Greece has risen this month despite an EU strategy aimed at deterring refugees.

Nearly 10,000 migrants and refugees have been rescued off the Libyan coast since Monday.

The Justice Department said it gave the Supreme Court erroneous data in a 2003 case over bail for imprisoned immigrants.

China charged a U.S. business consultant with spying for a foreign government about two decades ago.

DETAILS

Subject:	Noncitizens
Location:	Mexico; China; Arizona; Florida; Greece; United States--US
People:	McCain, John
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Clinton Foundation; NAICS: 813211, 813319
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016

column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275880
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1815275880/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-22
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 468 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In a tweet, the Republican governor wrote: "Regarding rumors of resignation, to paraphrase Mark Twain: 'The reports of my political demise are greatly exaggerated.'" In a radio interview earlier, Mr. LePage said he wasn't sure he would finish his second term, after apologizing for the voice mail: "I'm looking at all options."

FULL TEXT

MAINE

Governor Plays Down

Resignation Remarks

Maine Gov. Paul LePage backed off remarks earlier on Tuesday that he was considering resigning amid controversy over race-related comments and a profanity-riddled phone message to a lawmaker last week.

In a tweet, the Republican governor wrote: "Regarding rumors of resignation, to paraphrase Mark Twain: 'The reports of my political demise are greatly exaggerated.'"

In a radio interview earlier, Mr. LePage said he wasn't sure he would finish his second term, after apologizing for the voice mail: "I'm looking at all options. I'm not going to say that I'm not going to finish it. I'm not saying that I am going to finish it."

Mr. LePage said he planned to meet with Democratic Rep. Drew Gattine, the target of the voice mail, and with his own team about his next steps. State Democratic leaders on Friday called Mr. LePage "not mentally or emotionally fit to hold office."

The voice mail came after Mr. LePage believed a reporter said Mr. Gattine was among people calling Mr. LePage's statements racist -- which Mr. Gattine has denied -- over the governor's comments tying drug dealing in Maine to blacks and Latinos.

-- Jennifer Levitz

CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Obama Commutes

111 More Sentences

President Barack Obama on Tuesday granted 111 commutations, including shortening the terms of 35 federal inmates who were serving a life sentence.

The new grants of executive clemency bring his total number of commutations to 325 people in August. All told, Mr. Obama has granted 673 commutations, the most by any president.

The grants are part of an initiative to help reduce the size of the nation's prison population.

-- Byron Tau

AGRICULTURE

USDA Offices Shut

Amid Email Threats

A half-dozen U.S. Department of Agriculture offices across the country were closed Tuesday after multiple employees across five states received anonymous email threats.

Federal facilities were closed for the day and employees were sent home after officials received messages "concerning for the safety of USDA personnel and its facilities" late Monday, said USDA spokesman Matt Herrick.

Most offices will be reopened and operations will resume with enhanced security Wednesday, as the agency continues to assess the seriousness of the threats, Mr. Herrick said.

-- Kelsey Gee

DETAILS

Subject:	Governors; Presidents; Resignations; Political leadership
Business indexing term:	Subject: Resignations; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 81394 : Political Organizations
People:	Obama, Barack; Twain, Mark (Samuel Langhorne Clemens) (1835-1910)
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Agriculture; NAICS: 926140
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275777
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1815275777/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 469 of 500

U.S. News: Hackers Hit Groups Studying Russia

McMillan, Robert . McMillan, Robert.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A Russian hacking group linked to a series of computer intrusions at the Democratic National Committee and other organizations is now targeting Washington think tanks focused on Russian policy, according to investigators at computer-security firm CrowdStrike Inc. The company detected "several intrusions" at think tanks that it said bore the trademarks of a Russian hacking group alternatively known as Cozy Bear and APT 29, said Dmitri Alperovitch, CrowdStrike's co-founder and chief technology officer.

FULL TEXT

A Russian hacking group linked to a series of computer intrusions at the Democratic National Committee and other organizations is now targeting Washington think tanks focused on Russian policy, according to investigators at computer-security firm CrowdStrike Inc.

The company detected "several intrusions" at think tanks that it said bore the trademarks of a Russian hacking group alternatively known as Cozy Bear and APT 29, said Dmitri Alperovitch, CrowdStrike's co-founder and chief technology officer.

In June, CrowdStrike published a report linking Cozy Bear to a year-long intrusion at the DNC, after the security company was brought in to investigate.

One think tank, the Center for Strategic & International Studies, confirmed Tuesday it was under attack last week. "As with many research institutions we are constantly dealing with cyberattacks," Andrew Schwartz, the institute's senior vice president of external relations, said by email.

The Russian group has targeted think tanks in the past and also gained access to unclassified networks at the White House, State Department and U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, CrowdStrike says.

Asked about CrowdStrike's allegations, a Russian embassy spokesman referred to an Aug. 17 statement by Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov, who declined to comment on "pseudo sensational news" involving cybercrime allegations.

"President [Vladimir] Putin has repeatedly articulated our position and stated publicly that we never interfere in the internal affairs of other countries," Mr. Lavrov said at the time.

Credit: By Robert McMillan

DETAILS

Subject:	Think tanks; Hackers; Cybercrime
Company / organization:	Name: Crowdstrike; NAICS: 513210, 541511
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275776
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hackers-hit-groups-studying-russia/docview/1815275776/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-01-02
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 470 of 500

City News: Bratton: Law Prevents Release of Data

Shallwani, Pervaiz . Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The change, which was made earlier this year, has been criticized by good-government groups and others who say the New York Police Department is inappropriately interpreting the law to withhold critical information even as the city and the department champion transparency. [...]recently, the NYPD had made available internal documents it calls "personnel orders" to the public through its press office.

FULL TEXT

New York City Police Commissioner William Bratton defended his department's decision to cut off public access to officers' personnel data, saying Tuesday that the decades-old practice of disclosing that information was a "lapse in oversight on our part" and violated state law.

The change, which was made earlier this year, has been criticized by good-government groups and others who say the New York Police Department is inappropriately interpreting the law to withhold critical information even as the city and the department champion transparency.

Until recently, the NYPD had made available internal documents it calls "personnel orders" to the public through its press office. The documents are issued any time one of the NYPD's 36,000 officers has a change in status, including promotions, retirements and discipline.

The NYPD stopped making the discipline bulletins public at the end of March, a move that was reported by the Daily News last week.

Mr. Bratton made his first public remarks on the issue when asked about it Tuesday at police headquarters. He said the department's hands are tied and those who disagree should take it up with lawmakers in Albany.

"It was brought to our attention. We corrected it," said Mr. Bratton. "The resolution of it, despite all the hue and cry, is not with the New York City police department, not with the city of New York, but with the Legislature of the state of New York.

"So all the focus, all the ire, all the concern, basically, go a couple of hundred miles north and bang on those doors, rather than continuing to harangue the New York City police department for its conformity with the law," he said.

Critics say the NYPD's move goes against principles espoused by both Mr. Bratton and Mayor Bill de Blasio.

"For a police department that claims a commitment to transparency, this is a huge step backward," said Chris Dunn, associate legal director for the New York Civil Liberties Union. "We don't believe the existing statute requires that officer disciplinary decisions remain secret, but if it does, the law needs to be changed because this information is vital to the public."

The law in question is known as 50-a of the state civil right's code and governs all police, fire and correction departments statewide. The law, which went into effect in 1976, states that personnel records used to evaluate performance can't be made available to the public unless there is written consent or a court order.

The NYPD began making that information public in 1972 and kept up the practice even after the law prohibiting it went into effect, a department spokesman said. It was stopped after NYPD lawyers read the law while responding to a Freedom of Information Law request and determined it was in violation, said Lawrence Byrne, the NYPD's top lawyer.

The information falls "squarely within the definition" of the law, Mr. Byrne said. "It's not a discretionary act by us. It's not a change in policy. It's not a transparency issue. This is a strict prohibition that we are obligated legally to comply with."

Credit: By Pervaiz Shallwani

DETAILS

Subject:	Public access; Personnel policies; Police departments
----------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Personnel policies; Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Bratton, William
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275775
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-bratton-law-prevents-release-data/docview/1815275775/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

City News: Water Official Violated Rules

Gay, Mara . Gay, Mara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to the disposition, Mr. Finnerty "was asked" on April 28 to participate as a fundraiser for the May 12 event.

FULL TEXT

A member of the New York City Water Board resigned his position and was fined $1,000 for violating conflict-of-interest rules by hosting a fundraiser for Mayor Bill de Blasio's re-election bid, records released on Tuesday show.

Joseph Finnerty, whom Mr. de Blasio appointed to the board last year, co-sponsored a May 12 fundraiser that doubled as a celebration of the Democratic mayor's 55th birthday, according to a disposition released by the city's Conflicts of Interest Board.

In the disposition, Mr. Finnerty acknowledged that sponsoring a fundraiser for Mr. de Blasio's 2017 re-election campaign violated the section of the City Charter that prohibits public servants with substantial policy discretion from soliciting political contributions for city candidates.

The Water Board establishes rates for the city's water and sewer system, which distributes more than one billion gallons of water every day to nine million New Yorkers.

Mr. Finnerty, a partner at law firm DLA Piper, didn't respond to requests for comment. He resigned his position on May 12 immediately after he was informed by the acting commissioner of the Department of Environmental Protection that soliciting donations for the mayor's campaign violated city ethics rules.

According to the disposition, Mr. Finnerty "was asked" on April 28 to participate as a fundraiser for the May 12 event. The disposition doesn't identify who asked Mr. Finnerty to participate.

Mr. Finnerty's name appeared on the event's invitation as a host, requesting donations for Mr. de Blasio in amounts ranging from $100 to $2,500. Mr. de Blasio is running next year for a second four-year term.

The mayor said on Tuesday that his fundraising staff was wrong to ask Mr. Finnerty to sponsor the event and that he was "very sorry that happened."

"They shouldn't have, and it was an honest mistake," said Mr. de Blasio, adding that he plans to "tighten that up" to prevent a similar situation in the future.

"He's a good guy," the mayor said, referring to Mr. Finnerty. "He was trying to serve the city."

Mr. de Blasio's fundraising activities are under investigation by federal and state authorities looking at whether he exchanged government actions for donations, according to people familiar with the matter. Mr. de Blasio hasn't been accused of wrongdoing and has said that he and his aides have followed all campaign-finance laws.

On May 20, at Mr. de Blasio's recommendation, the Water Board voted to increase the city's water and sewer rates by 2.1% on July 1 while issuing a one-time $183 credit to ratepayers in one- to three-family households. A group representing city landlords filed a lawsuit on grounds that the rate structure would unfairly affect large-building owners.

In June, a state justice blocked the new rate schedule, calling the increase and the bill credit "unreasonable, arbitrary, capricious and an abuse of discretion." The city is appealing the decision.

Credit: By Mara Gay

DETAILS

Subject:	Political finance; Water utilities; Conflicts of interest
Business indexing term:	Subject: Water utilities Conflicts of interest; Industry: 22131 : Water Supply and Irrigation Systems
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Finnerty, Joseph; de Blasio, Bill
Classification:	22131: Water Supply and Irrigation Systems
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275773
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-water-official-violated-rules/docview/1815275773/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 472 of 500

U.S. News: Court Redefines Who Is a Parent

Randazzo, Sara . Randazzo, Sara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

New York's highest court Tuesday upended how the state legally defines parenthood, reversing course on a 25-year-old ruling that blocked many same-sex couples from seeking the court's help in custody disputes. [...] New York only recognized as parents those with a clear adoptive or biological tie to a child, shutting out those who may have played a key role in a child's upbringing.

FULL TEXT

New York's highest court Tuesday upended how the state legally defines parenthood, reversing course on a 25-year-old ruling that blocked many same-sex couples from seeking the court's help in custody disputes.

Until now, New York only recognized as parents those with a clear adoptive or biological tie to a child, shutting out those who may have played a key role in a child's upbringing.

Tuesday's decision by the New York Court of Appeals said society has changed and families formed by gay couples need to be protected.

The court ruled that going forward, a partner can seek visitation and custody if it is shown "by clear and convincing evidence that the parties agreed to conceive a child and to raise the child together." The court recognized some people could even deserve custody if they came into a child's life after the birth.

Gay-rights advocates cheered the decision, saying it moves New York into the modern day alongside dozens of other states that already have a broader scope of parenthood.

Opponents argued such expanded rules can lead to abusive partners or anyone claiming ties to a child to drag a biological parent into court for bogus legal challenges.

The decision from New York, which has been one of the largest states to still have such a narrow definition of parenthood, could influence courts in other states. A decision is expected soon from Massachusetts in a case challenging how that state recognizes parents.

Tuesday's decision stemmed from appeals of two custody disputes. In one, a woman sought visitation rights to a young boy she said she helped raise alongside the biological mother, who underwent artificial insemination while the two were dating. The ruling means the woman can now go to a lower court to try to prove she deserves legal rights. The biological mother and her attorney didn't return a request for comment Tuesday.

In the other, a woman sought to keep her ex-partner from seeing her child, even though a court had earlier said the other woman was considered a parent for purposes of child support. Christopher Chimeri, the biological mother's attorney, said while his client is disappointed, he welcomes the decision for the certainty it provides families going forward.

The decision, written by Judge Sheila Abdus-Salaam, said the court was wrong in a 1991 decision involving a lesbian couple in setting a "needlessly narrow" rule limiting the scope of parenthood to biology and adoption.

Credit: By Sara Randazzo

DETAILS

Subject:	Definitions; State court decisions; Families & family life
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Abdus-Salaam, Sheila
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275768
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-court-redefines-who-is-parent/docview/1815275768/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 473 of 500

City News: Judge Denies Politician's Request to Delay Election

Hackman, Michelle . Hackman, Michelle.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Martins, a Republican vying for retiring Democratic Rep. Steve Israel's U.S. House Seat, which encompasses parts of Nassau, Suffolk and Queens counties, was seeking to move the general election date after U.S. District Judge Frederick Scullin ruled earlier this month that Mr. Martins must face a primary challenge.

FULL TEXT

A federal judge on Tuesday afternoon denied state Sen. Jack Martins's request to delay the general election date for New York's 3rd Congressional District to December.

Mr. Martins, a Republican vying for retiring Democratic Rep. Steve Israel's U.S. House Seat, which encompasses parts of Nassau, Suffolk and Queens counties, was seeking to move the general election date after U.S. District Judge Frederick Scullin ruled earlier this month that Mr. Martins must face a primary challenge.

In his decision, Judge Scullin also affirmed Mr. Martins' Oct. 6 primary against Philip Pidot, a former fraud investigator who was initially denied a place on the June primary ballot after Mr. Martins challenged his petition signatures. "The court saw through what was a transparent attempt to manipulate the electoral process to his advantage," Mr. Pidot said following the decision.

Mr. Martins had contended that a November general election, 32 days after the newly set October primary, didn't allow military and overseas voters enough time, mandated by federal law, to receive absentee ballots. But the U.S. Defense Department on Monday afternoon granted New York state a waiver on the 45-day requirement, saying the state could overnight mail and even email ballots to military voters in time for a November election.

In his remarks, the judge said the case had been so cut-and-dried that had he read all the papers in advance, he wouldn't have allowed for oral arguments, according to two people present. Election officials estimated the cost of a special general election date would surpass $1 million.

Mr. Martins objected to the decision, saying it "disregards the federal law designed to protect our servicemen and women." His team planned to file an appeal on Wednesday morning to the U.S. court of Appeals for the Second circuit, asking for an immediate stay of Judge Scullin's decision.

Had Mr. Martins moved the date, analysts believe the stand-alone election would have boosted his chances of prevailing over his Democratic rival, former Nassau County Executive Tom Suozzi.

Credit: By Michelle Hackman

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Scheduling; Congressional elections; Voting machines; State court decisions; County executives
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Israel, Steve
Classification:	92112: Legislative Bodies

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275767
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-judge-denies-politicians-request-delay/docview/1815275767/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 474 of 500

City News: Hoosick Falls Hearing Grills Health Officials

Vilensky, Mike . Vilensky, Mike.

ABSTRACT

On Tuesday, lawmakers focused on a 2015 memo from the state Department of Health informing village residents that they should avoid the municipal water supply to prevent exposure to the contaminant.

FULL TEXT

Health officials in New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo's administration faced sharp questioning Tuesday at the first legislative hearing examining the water contamination crisis in the upstate village of Hoosick Falls.

The hearing, held by the state Senate at a school in Hoosick Falls, is the first of three planned to examine an issue that has dogged Mr. Cuomo's administration during the past year and led to some of the toughest criticism the Democratic governor has faced since he took office in 2011.

Hoosick Falls, about 30 miles from Albany with some 3,500 residents, has been rattled over the past year by the appearance of the chemical perfluorooctanoic acid in its water. The contaminant has been linked to cancer in studies but hasn't been labeled a carcinogen. Health officials have said it may have infiltrated the water supply by way of a plastics plant in the region.

On Tuesday, lawmakers focused on a 2015 memo from the state Department of Health informing village residents that they should avoid the municipal water supply to prevent exposure to the contaminant. But the letter also noted that the department didn't anticipate that normal use of the water would have adverse health effects.

Sen. Kemp Hannon, a Long Island Republican, described the memo as "inconsistent."

The day before the memo was issued, the federal government had told residents not to drink the water.

State Health Commissioner Howard Zucker, who appeared at the hearing, said the state had followed federal guidelines for navigating the issue, but that the federal government had offered confusing and conflicting directions. He called on the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to reimburse the state for Hoosick Falls costs.

In an interview Tuesday, Judith Enck, the EPA's regional administrator overseeing New York, said Mr. Zucker's testimony was inaccurate.

Ms. Enck said the EPA had advised the state to tell residents sooner not to drink the water, but the state "decided not to offer clarity."

While the EPA did lower its standard for safe perfluorooctanoic acid levels, that followed a common process and the state was "fully aware of that process," she said.

In response to Mr. Zucker's demand that the EPA reimburse the state, Ms. Enck said that was "throwing in the towel early" on recovering costs from the sources of the pollution. Aides to the governor pointed out that the administration also called on the pollution sources to pay.

Last year, Mr. Cuomo declared parts of the area a state Superfund site, classifying the contaminant as hazardous and authorizing its removal. State officials have since said the water is safe again.

Asked if he would have done anything differently in handling the water contamination, Mr. Zucker said he thinks about that a lot but is proud of how his department has managed the problem.

Credit: By Mike Vilensky

DETAILS

Subject:	Health risk assessment; Water supply; Water pollution; Perfluoroalkyl & polyfluoroalkyl substances
Location:	Hoosick Falls New York; United States--US
People:	Cuomo, Andrew M
Company / organization:	Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275759
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-hoosick-falls-hearing-grills-health/docview/1815275759/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 475 of 500

City News: Suspect Had Dispute With Ex-Employer

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to court records, the medical school began in 2008 to investigate claims by a colleague of Dr. Chao that he engaged in research misconduct.

FULL TEXT

Tuckahoe, N.Y., resident Hengjun Chao, who is charged with attempting to murder his former boss, moved from China to the U.S. in 1997 to begin a career in medical research.

He had obtained a medical degree from Peking Union Medical College while in China, according to court documents filed by Dr. Chao. When he came to the U.S., he received a postdoctoral fellowship at the Gene Therapy Center at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine. Later he found work at the prestigious Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai as an assistant professor of medicine in hematology and oncology.

Then, in 2010, Dr. Chao's career came to a halt. The school fired him following an investigation that concluded he engaged in research misconduct.

Dr. Chao, 49 years old, was arrested Monday for allegedly trying to kill Dennis Charney, dean of the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai and the person who had final say over whether Dr. Chao would be fired.

The shooting took place Monday morning outside of Lange's Little Store & Delicatessen in suburban Chappaqua, N.Y., a hamlet in the Westchester County town of New Castle. Presidential candidate Hillary Clinton and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, live in Chappaqua.

Dr. Charney, a 65-year-old Chappaqua resident, had just left the deli when he was struck in the upper body by a single round from a shotgun, New Castle police said. He was recovering from his wound Tuesday.

A 56-year-old Chappaqua man who police haven't named was also wounded in the attack. That person was treated at a hospital and released Monday.

New Castle Police Chief Charles Ferry said Monday it appeared that Dr. Chao had sought revenge over a workplace dispute.

Dr. Chao was arraigned Monday night and is due back in court Sept. 7. His attorney declined to comment.

After the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai fired Dr. Chao in 2010, he filed a discrimination lawsuit in U.S. District Court in the Southern District of New York seeking damages and injunctive relief. He ultimately lost his claim, and appealed his case all the way up to the U.S. Supreme Court, which denied his appeal in 2012.

According to court records, the medical school began in 2008 to investigate claims by a colleague of Dr. Chao that he engaged in research misconduct. The investigation concluded that Dr. Chao "promoted a laboratory culture of misconduct and authoritarianism by rewarding results consistent with his theories and berating his staff if the results were inconsistent with his expectations," according to court filings.

Dr. Chao disputed the findings and said in his lawsuit that the probe was "a biased and racially discriminatory investigation." He also claimed the investigation characterized him as authoritative, "which was attributed to his Chinese background and 'cultural differences.'"

Judge Harold Baer dismissed part of the lawsuit in 2010 and ruled in favor of the medical school on the remaining claims in 2011.

"A voluminous record indicates a rigorously investigated charge and finding that Chao committed research misconduct and violated professional or ethical standards," the judge wrote in his summary judgment opinion.

Judge Baer wrote that the investigation found that Dr. Chao directed a colleague to switch experiment results, omitted data from an article that conflicted with his hypothesis and retaliated against a colleague for questioning his authority.

"The complaints against Chao were numerous and suggested no discriminatory animus," Judge Baer continued.

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Murders & murder attempts; Medicine; State court decisions; Professional misconduct
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Subject: Professional misconduct
--------------------------------	----------------------------------

Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai; NAICS: 611310
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275758
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-suspect-had-dispute-with-ex-employer/docview/1815275758/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Theranos Halts New Zika Test After FDA Inspection

Carreyrou, John; Weaver, Christopher . Carreyrou, John; Weaver, Christopher.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]during an inspection by the Food and Drug Administration earlier this month, regulators concluded that Theranos had collected some data supporting the accuracy of the Zika test without implementing a patient-safety protocol approved by an institutional review board, according to the people familiar with the matter.

FULL TEXT

Theranos Inc. withdrew its request for emergency clearance of a Zika-virus blood test after regulators found that the company didn't include proper patient safeguards in a study of the new test, said people familiar with the matter.

The move is another setback for the Palo Alto, Calif., company as it tries to recover from crippling regulatory sanctions that followed revelations by The Wall Street Journal of shortcomings in Theranos's technology and operations. Theranos has said it is appealing.

Theranos founder Elizabeth Holmes announced Aug. 1 a new blood-testing device called miniLab that she said was designed for use outside a clinical laboratory and could run accurate tests from a few drops of blood.

Ms. Holmes also said Theranos was seeking clearance for its Zika test, and a company news release said Theranos had collected finger-stick blood samples from patients, including in the Dominican Republic, and run the tests on the new miniLab device, which showed that the test worked.

But during an inspection by the Food and Drug Administration earlier this month, regulators concluded that Theranos had collected some data supporting the accuracy of the Zika test without implementing a patient-safety protocol approved by an institutional review board, according to the people familiar with the matter. Institutional review boards ensure that patients are treated safely and ethically during medical studies.

"We hope that our decision to withdraw the Zika submission voluntarily is further evidence of our commitment to engage positively with the agency," said Dave Wurtz, Theranos's vice president of regulatory, quality and clinical affairs. An FDA spokeswoman declined to comment on the inspection, citing the agency's policy on pending product applications.

It isn't clear if the problem affected any patients. Some data in the submission was collected under review-board-approved protocols, the people said. Theranos didn't contest the agency's findings and withdrew its submission for authorization of the new Zika test, according to people familiar with the matter.

In an email to Theranos investors Saturday, the company said it plans to collect additional data requested by the FDA under properly reviewed protocols and resubmit the Zika application. The letter said Theranos would handle a submission for an Ebola test "in the same manner."

The miniLab that Ms. Holmes, Theranos's chief executive, unveiled to laboratory scientists in Philadelphia signaled a potential shift in the closely held company's business model and a new source of revenue. FDA approval of the miniLab would allow Theranos to sell the device for outside use even if she is banned from owning or running a lab for at least two years.

The federal agency that oversees labs, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, imposed the ban and other penalties in July because of problems it found at a Theranos lab. The agency said the deficiencies affected test accuracy and put patients at risk.

Theranos is appealing the closing, Ms. Holmes's ban and other sanctions imposed by CMS and is continuing to negotiate a possible settlement.

Theranos also has said it is doing no patient testing at the lab where the deficiencies were found. In its investor email Saturday, Theranos said its appeal will argue that CMS hasn't "fully accounted for the progress we have made toward correcting" problems.

A CMS spokesman said Tuesday the agency is "reviewing a copy of Theranos's appeal." He declined further comment.

The FDA's inspection in August was triggered by Theranos's request for "emergency-use authorization" to sell its new Zika test, a person familiar with the matter said.

The FDA has cleared Zika tests from several other companies since invoking a rule allowing the agency to lower hurdles for new medical products during emergencies.

An epidemic of the mosquito-borne Zika virus has swept through parts of South and Central America and reached into South Florida in recent months. The virus can cause serious birth defects in developing fetuses, including distinctively undersized heads and brain abnormalities.

Theranos's news release on Aug. 1 as Ms. Holmes spoke at the American Association for Clinical Chemistry's annual meeting said the company believed no other test for Zika that uses tiny blood samples collected by finger sticks was available.

"Theranos scientists conducted the tests reflected in the AACC presentation in 2016 under IRB-approved protocols," the company added.

Theranos told investors that company officials "recognized" during the inspection that some patient data was collected before the review-board protocols were in place.

After an inspection in August 2015, the FDA declared Theranos's finger-stick collection device, called the "nanotainer," an uncleared medical device, and the company said it stopped using it on patients in the U.S. The agency earlier approved the use of nanotainers for a herpes test.

Theranos said it used the nanotainer as part of its blood-collection system for the Zika study, which included the Dominican patients.

Separately, Theranos's general counsel, Heather King, is leaving the company to return to law firm Boies Schiller & Flexner LLP.

Theranos announced Ms. King's hiring in May 2015, and she led the company's legal response to accusations of technological snags. Boies Schiller Chairman David Boies is a Theranos director.

"We appreciate Heather's leadership and we wish her the very best," Theranos said in its email to investors.

Credit: By John Carreyrou and Christopher Weaver

DETAILS

Subject:	Regulatory agencies; Laboratories; Zika virus; Blood tests; FDA approval; Patients; Medical equipment
Business indexing term:	Subject: FDA approval
Location:	Palo Alto California; United States--US
People:	Holmes, Elizabeth
Company / organization:	Name: Food & Drug Administration--FDA; NAICS: 922190; Name: Theranos Inc; NAICS: 339113
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275755
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/theranos-halts-new-zika-test-after-fda-inspection/docview/1815275755/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 477 of 500

U.S. News: Farmers See Their Incomes Drop Further

Newman, Jesse . Newman, Jesse.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the USDA said, net farm income will drop 11.5% to $71.5 billion this year, from $80.7 billion in 2015.

FULL TEXT

CHICAGO -- U.S. farm incomes will hit their lowest point this year since 2009, the U.S. Department of Agriculture said Tuesday, deepening pain in the Farm Belt amid a multiyear downdraft in commodity prices.

The forecast reflects a painful slump in the U.S. agricultural economy driven by bumper corn and soybean harvests, swelling grain inventories and tougher export competition. Farmers are expecting record corn and soybean harvests again this fall, potentially pushing prices for the nation's two most common crops down even further.

As a result, the USDA said, net farm income will drop 11.5% to $71.5 billion this year, from $80.7 billion in 2015. That would be the third straight annual pay cut for farmers since incomes soared to record levels in 2013.

Futures prices for corn have fallen about 15% so far this year, and prices for the grain are trading at seven-year lows. Wheat prices have tumbled nearly 23% in 2016 to trade at 10-year lows thanks to excess supplies.

Domestic growers also are battling a strong U.S. dollar that has encouraged some of their foreign customers to find grain elsewhere.

Clement weather this summer has fueled expectations that U.S. farmers will harvest the largest U.S. corn and soybean crops in history. The USDA earlier this month projected that the nation's corn crop will reach about 15.2 billion bushels, and the soybean crop about 4.1 billion bushels.

Still, Tuesday's forecast was an improvement from the USDA's February estimate for net farm income of $54.8 billion this year, due mainly to signs that growers are cutting expenses -- particularly on farm equipment -- to ride out the multiyear slump. The USDA on Tuesday estimated farmers would spend $27.7 billion less this year than predicted in February.

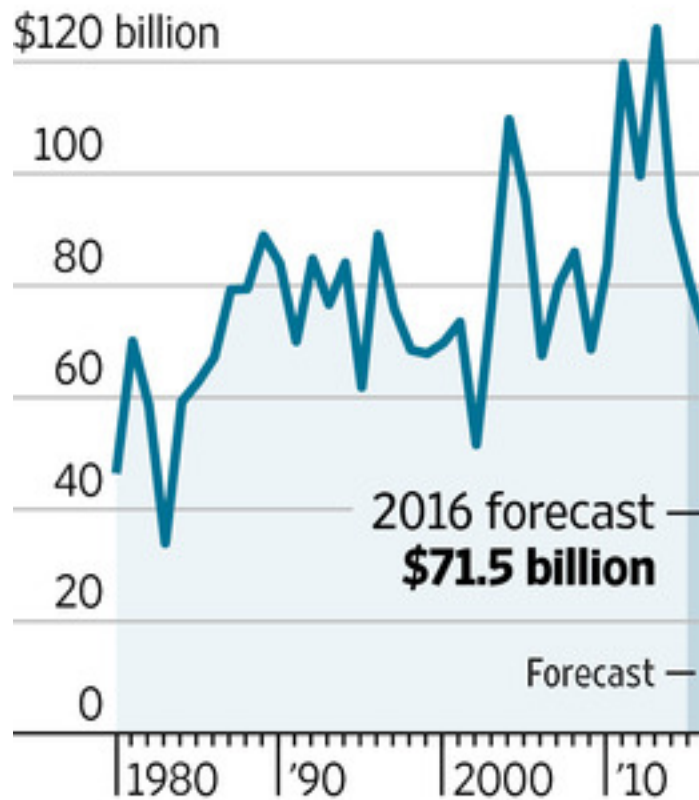

Earlier this month, tractor supplier Deere & Co. said it would curb output of its hallmark green tractors and combines as lower crop prices chip away at farmers' appetite for new machinery.

The USDA estimated production expenses for farmers would decline $10.1 billion, or 2.8%, thanks to reduced spending on livestock and poultry-related purchases, as well as on fertilizer and fuel. The declines mark the second straight year of lower farm expenses after spending peaked in 2014, and the second-biggest year-over-year reduction since 2009.

The agency also said government payments to farmers would increase nearly 25% this year to $13.5 billion, due in large part to insurance-like programs that pay growers when prices or revenues fall steeply.

Pay Slump

Net farm income in the U.S. is expected to hit its lowest levels since 2009.

Note: In constant 2016 dollars

Source: Agriculture Department

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Jesse Newman

DETAILS

Subject:	Agricultural commodities; Farms; Agriculture; Soybeans; Wheat; Corn; Farm income
Business indexing term:	Subject: Farm income; Industry: 11115 : Corn Farming 11114 : Wheat Farming 11111 : Soybean Farming
Location:	United States--US

Classification:	11115: Corn Farming; 11114: Wheat Farming; 11111: Soybean Farming
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275753
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-farmers-see-their-incomes-drop-further/docview/1815275753/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-08-21
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 478 of 500

U.S. News: A Big Grant for Big Data --- XSEDE project, which links researchers to supercomputers, wins

$110 million award from the National Science Foundation

Strum, Beckie . Strum, Beckie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

XSEDE has its headquarters at the National Center for Supercomputing Applications at the University of Illinois, which also houses the most powerful supercomputer on an academic campus.

FULL TEXT

A big-data project that connects researchers to close to a dozen supercomputers at universities and institutes across the U.S. scored a $110 million grant from the National Science Foundation, one of the largest awards so far this year.

The Extreme Science and Engineering Discovery Environment, known as XSEDE, is based at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and has assisted more than 6,000 researchers, from physicists to archaeologists, dig into big-data sets since it was formed in 2011.

Their work has ranged from mapping the Arctic and uncovering the structure of HIV, to preventing injuries from car accidents.

"Whether you're at a top-tier research university . . . or a tribal college," XSEDE offers data crunching and expertise free of charge, representing "a democratization of resources," said Irene Qualters, director for the Division of Advanced Cyberinfrastructure at NSF.

The $110 million grant is the largest award given so far this year by NSF's Computer and Information Science and Engineering Directorate, one of seven overarching departments, said Ms. Qualters.

Through the project, NSF hopes to make U.S. researchers more competitive, she said.

XSEDE has a pool of around 100 experts at 19 partner organizations who help researchers connect to supercomputers and carry out data analysis and visualization, said John Towns, a physicist and XSEDE project director. And the work isn't limited to math and physics.

"We're often working with researchers in the humanities and the arts and sciences," said Mr. Towns.

XSEDE has its headquarters at the National Center for Supercomputing Applications at the University of Illinois, which also houses the most powerful supercomputer on an academic campus. The computer, known as Blue Waters, is housed in a 20,000 square-foot room and can complete more than one quadrillion calculations per second.

The project has helped researchers study trading on Wall Street, prove the existence of gravitational waves and draw up one of the most detailed galaxy simulations ever done.

Nancy Wilkins-Diehr, a co-director based out of the University of California, San Diego, recalled a project that sought to better understand early humans by simulating the climate and vegetation around 140,000 years ago in modern day South Africa.

"To not have this would just be a big gaping hole in what researchers want to accomplish," Ms. Wilkins-Diehr said.

Credit: By Beckie Strum

DETAILS

Subject:	Supercomputers; Grants; Big Data; Researchers; Gravitational waves; Colleges & universities
Business indexing term:	Subject: Big Data Colleges & universities; Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Company / organization:	Name: University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275747
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-big-grant-data-xsede-project-which-links/docview/1815275747/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2023-11-07
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 479 of 500

City News: Port Regulators Win Case

Whelan, Robbie . Whelan, Robbie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Hiring of about 30 ILA maintenance workers had been frozen while both sides awaited the court's decision, and port officials have said they hope to hire as many as 200 new workers this fall to handle larger cargo ships passing through the expanded Panama Canal.

FULL TEXT

A federal appeals-court judge has sided with regulators in their long-running effort to increase racial diversity among the unionized dockworkers at port terminals around New York Harbor.

The ruling, handed down Tuesday, may bring to a close a three-year legal battle that has brought hiring at the East Coast's busiest port nearly to a standstill.

Judge Richard Nygaard upheld a lower court's dismissal of a 2013 lawsuit brought by the International Longshoremen's Association, a second union and a group representing port terminal operators against the Waterfront Commission of New York Harbor. The plaintiffs argued that the regulator exceeded its authority and interfered with collective-bargaining rights in seeking greater control over union hiring practices.

The Waterfront Commission requires that employers at the region's container terminals certify that their workers are hired in a nondiscriminatory way. The rule is meant to increase hiring of nonwhite workers, who in some ILA locals make up less than 15% of registered workers, even though many of the terminals are near large black and Hispanic populations.

The stated purpose of the commission, whose members are appointed by the governors of New York and New Jersey, is to rid the docks of "corrupt hiring practices," Judge Nygaard wrote in his opinion. "Can it be seriously argued that racial discrimination in hiring (or anywhere, for that matter), is not a corrupt practice?" he wrote.

Hiring of about 30 ILA maintenance workers had been frozen while both sides awaited the court's decision, and port officials have said they hope to hire as many as 200 new workers this fall to handle larger cargo ships passing through the expanded Panama Canal.

"This is huge," Waterfront Commission General Counsel Phoebe Sorial said of the ruling. "It's going to have a major impact on operations at the port."

The ILA and the New York Shipping Association, the terminal operators' group, declined to comment.

The roots of the dispute go back to 1953, when the Waterfront Commission was created by an act of Congress to root out crime and Mafia influence at the port terminals in New York and northern New Jersey.

In those days, union officials had total control over who was hired to load and unload cargo vessels and cruise ships through the "shape-up," a daily worker-selection process. Workers with connections to organized crime, or who paid kickbacks to corrupt union officials, were more likely to be hired.

Over the decades, the size of the workforce at New York and New Jersey marine terminals plummeted as shipping lines began to use large containers, which are moved using cranes and trucks rather than having cargo unloaded piece by piece, which was more labor-intensive.

The Waterfront Commission continued to investigate mob influence on hiring and the distribution of no-show jobs, through which organized-crime associates drew six-figure salaries for work never performed.

The commission's compact was amended in 1999 to require companies that employ dockworkers to abide by state and federal equal-opportunity employment laws. Since then, the union and the commission have sparred over how much control the watchdog should have over how workers are referred for waterfront jobs.

The union has lobbied New Jersey politicians to pull out of the commission entirely. Tensions came to a head this year when longshoremen walked off the job for a day to protest what the union described as "harassment" of workers by the commission.

Newark Mayor Ras Baraka asked the Labor and Justice departments this year to investigate discrimination in hiring at the port.

Credit: By Robbie Whelan

DETAILS

Subject:	Multiculturalism & pluralism; Workers; Workplace diversity; Hiring; Maritime industry; Organized crime; Ports
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Workers Workplace diversity Hiring Maritime industry Ports; Industry: 48311 : Deep Sea, Coastal, and Great Lakes Water Transportation 48831 : Port and Harbor Operations
Location:	New York Harbor; United States--US
Classification:	48311: Deep Sea, Coastal, and Great Lakes Water Transportation; 48831: Port and Harbor Operations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275746
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-port-regulators-win-case/docview/1815275746/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-03-08
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Emails Show Lobbyist's Close Ties to City Hall

Dawsey, Josh . Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The emails, released in response to a request under the state's Freedom of Information Law, show Mr. Capalino corresponding with top officials late at night, sending emails directly to deputy mayors and other commissioners and writing flattering notes to city officials on their performance or thanking them for being responsive.

FULL TEXT

James Capalino, a lobbyist and a fundraiser for New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, enjoyed a close relationship with the administration during the first two years of the mayor's term, recently released emails show.

That relationship appears to have changed this year in the wake of state and federal investigations into the mayor's administration and fundraising activities. On Tuesday, Mr. de Blasio said he no longer has any contact with Mr. Capalino.

The emails, released in response to a request under the state's Freedom of Information Law, show Mr. Capalino corresponding with top officials late at night, sending emails directly to deputy mayors and other commissioners and writing flattering notes to city officials on their performance or thanking them for being responsive.

"Our team of professionals communicates with officials at City Hall and city agencies on a daily basis -- thoughtfully, responsibly and respectfully -- as we advocate for our clients," said a spokesman for Mr. Capalino on Tuesday.

Eric Phillips, a spokesman for the mayor, said, "It's the opposite of news that he was communicating with City Hall" on behalf of his clients.

Mr. Capalino was involved in a number of issues now under scrutiny by investigators, including the development of Long Island College Hospital in Brooklyn to a deed modification on a Lower East Side nursing home that led to the property's sale to developers who plan to build luxury housing.

Investigators are looking at whether the mayor exchanged government action for donations, according to people familiar with the matter. The mayor hasn't been charged with wrongdoing and has said he has complied with all campaign-finance laws.

The newly released emails outline how involved Mr. Capalino was in the dispute over the hospital site. Mr. Capalino represented Fortis Property Group, which won the rights to develop the site.

Many in the community oppose Fortis's plans for the site because they include tall towers and less health care than those of others who wanted to develop the site.

In September 2014, Mr. Capalino asked Emma Wolfe, the mayor's top political aide, to intervene at a critical juncture in negotiations over the site.

"Emma, I am sharing this email with you because I believe it is urgent that the Mayor summon all the parties to a confidential meeting," Mr. Capalino wrote.

Later that month, Mr. Capalino again called on Ms. Wolfe, saying his client was "dismayed beyond words" at the prospect of a deal falling through. She responded two minutes later, and promised to call a top official in the governor's office.

Credit: By Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Mayors; Lobbyists; Investigations
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	de Blasio, Bill; Capalino, James
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275741
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-emails-show-lobbyists-close-ties-hall/docview/1815275741/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 481 of 500

World News: France Vows to Scrap U.S.-EU Trade Deal

Dalton, Matthew . Dalton, Matthew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Candidates Donald Trump and Sen. Bernie Sanders bolstered their standings during the presidential race by strongly opposing trade deals, putting pressure on Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton to adopt a more skeptical stance.

FULL TEXT

PARIS -- The French trade minister called for an end to trade negotiations between the European Union and the U.S., the firmest sign yet of opposition in Europe to what would be one of the most ambitious trade deals in decades.

Matthias Fekl said he would use the occasion of a meeting of trade ministers in late September to ask the European Commission, the EU's executive arm, to end talks over the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership, generally known as TTIP. The commission leads the EU's talks with the U.S.

"France no longer politically supports these negotiations," Mr. Fekl said Tuesday on French radio. "The Americans are giving us nothing," he added. "This is not how allies should be negotiating."

Mr. Fekl's comments illustrate how skepticism of trade liberalization is surging on both sides of the Atlantic, with critics saying deals depress wages, threaten regulatory protection and undermine national identity.

In the U.S., President Barack Obama faces a tough battle in Congress to pass another major trade deal, the Trans-Pacific Partnership. Candidates Donald Trump and Sen. Bernie Sanders bolstered their standings during the presidential race by strongly opposing trade deals, putting pressure on Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton to adopt a more skeptical stance.

It is unclear how the rest of Europe would react to a push by France to stop the talks. The commission has a mandate from the bloc's 28 member states to pursue the negotiations. All of them will be required to approve the deal should the talks be completed.

Margaritis Schinas, the commission's main spokesman, said Tuesday the institution would continue to negotiate the trade deal with the U.S.

But skepticism has been gaining ground elsewhere in Europe. "The negotiations with the Americans have failed," German Vice Chancellor Sigmar Gabriel said on Sunday. "Just nobody says that."

The U.S. and the EU agreed to start the talks in 2013 and both sides aimed for a deal by the end of Mr. Obama's term.

Most European nations, eager for policies to jolt the region's sagging growth prospects, enthusiastically backed the negotiations at the time.

"The European Commission and EU member state leaders have clearly reiterated their commitment to moving negotiations forward," said Matt McAlvanah, spokesman for U.S. Trade Representative Mike Froman on Tuesday.

Noemie Bisserbe contributed to this article.

Credit: By Matthew Dalton

DETAILS

Subject:	Trade agreements; Candidates
Business indexing term:	Subject: Trade agreements
Location:	United States--US; France
People:	Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275733
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-france-vows-scrap-u-s-eu-trade-deal/docview/1815275733/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 482 of 500

U.S. News: Immigrant Case Relied On Faulty Statistics

Bravin, Jess . Bravin, Jess.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A federal appeals court in San Francisco found that the Constitution's due process guarantee entitled such immigrants to a bail hearing.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The Justice Department said it provided the Supreme Court with erroneous information that helped it win a 2003 case upholding a blanket policy of denying bail to thousands of immigrants imprisoned while appealing deportation orders.

The department, in a Friday letter to the court, said it made "several significant errors" that greatly understated the time certain immigrants with criminal records spend in no-bail detention. The 2003 opinion, Demore v. Kim, cited government data to hold that "the very limited time of detention" such people face while their appeals are pending is too short to trigger a constitutional right to a hearing to argue for bail.

The new estimate put the average detention at more than a year, or more than three times the four-month estimate the Supreme Court relied on in the Demore ruling.

The letter by acting Solicitor General Ian Gershengorn is the second time in four years the government admitted providing incorrect information on immigration policy that helped it prevail at the Supreme Court. In 2012, the Justice Department told the court it had inaccurately asserted in a 2009 case, Nken v. Holder, that officials routinely "facilitate" the return to the U.S. of deported immigrants who later win immigration appeals.

In both instances, more accurate information emerged through Freedom of Information Act requests filed by immigrant advocates.

The Demore case involved a challenge to the government's practice of holding without bail people, including immigrants with "green cards," who became eligible for deportation because they committed a crime. A federal appeals court in San Francisco found that the Constitution's due process guarantee entitled such immigrants to a bail hearing.

By a 5-4 vote, the Supreme Court overturned the appellate ruling. Chief Justice William Rehnquist's majority opinion relied on data from the government to conclude that resolving deportation appeals "takes an average of four months, with a median that is slightly shorter."

"The conclusion the court drew is understandable, but it is incorrect," Mr. Gershengorn wrote. He said the Justice Department re-examined the data after records requests and inquiries and determined the average detention period was 382 days, and a median of 272 days. He said the Supreme Court "may wish to amend its opinion to delete" the error.

Mr. Gershengorn said the Demore precedent "is relevant to Jennings v. Rodriguez," a follow-up case scheduled for the court's next term. In it, the government seeks to overturn an appeals court decision entitling aliens to a bail hearing after six months of detention.

Nancy Morawetz, co-director of the Immigrant Rights Clinic at the New York University School of Law, called the government's admission "really outrageous. They say excise this sentence that relied on the wrong data but they're not saying look at the result you got from it."

She said the problem stems from the solicitor general's privilege of submitting new information outside the record created by the trial court. Such information isn't tested through the process of discovery and cross-examination.

Credit: By Jess Bravin

DETAILS

Subject:	Deportation; Immigration policy; Bail; Noncitizens; Immigration; State court decisions; Immigrants
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130; Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275732
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-immigrant-case-relied-on-faulty/docview/1815275732/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 483 of 500

Election 2016: Rubio and Former DNC Head Win --- Rubio to face Murphy in Senate race; Debbie Wasserman Schultz easily wins primary Hackman, Michelle; Campo-Flores, Arian . Hackman, Michelle; Campo-Flores, Arian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Ms. Wasserman Schultz was sidelined as the party's leader in the wake of hacked Democratic National Committee emails that suggested officials favored Hillary Clinton over Mr. Sanders in the party's presidential primary.

FULL TEXT

Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, the Florida Democrat who was pressured into quitting as chair of the national party on the eve of its presidential convention, survived a high-profile primary challenge for her House seat Tuesday.

The six-term lawmaker soundly defeated Tim Canova, a law professor who campaigned to Ms. Wasserman Schultz's left with the backing of Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders.

Her primary victory was among several wins for establishment figures Tuesday. Also in Florida, Rep. Patrick Murphy, a favorite of the national party leaders, prevailed over his closest opponent, Rep. Alan Grayson, in the Democrat primary to determine who will challenge Republican Sen. Marco Rubio in the fall.

Mr. Rubio decided in late June to seek a second term, three months after dropping out of the presidential race. He easily beat back a long-shot challenge from Carlos Beruff, an antiestablishment businessman who self-financed much of his uphill bid.

In Arizona, Sen. John McCain, who is campaigning for his sixth Senate term overcame a primary challenge from former state Sen. Kelli Ward, who took on Mr. McCain from the right and turned his age -- he turned 80 on Monday -- into a campaign issue.

Ms. Wasserman Schultz was sidelined as the party's leader in the wake of hacked Democratic National Committee emails that suggested officials favored Hillary Clinton over Mr. Sanders in the party's presidential primary. The emails fed into longstanding Sanders camp complaints that she wasn't a fair broker.

Ms. Wasserman Schultz will face Republican Joe Kaufman in the fall in her heavily Democratic district.

Mr. Rubio is polling an average of nearly 6 points ahead of Mr. Murphy, despite Mrs. Clinton's slight lead in the state. Analysts believe that the contested Democratic primary, coupled with news reports about Mr. Murphy's work history, may have weakened his standing with voters.

Local media have raised questions in recent months about Mr. Murphy's characterization of his work experience. One report, aired by CBS's local Miami affiliate, suggested he may have exaggerated his role as a small-business owner who helped with cleanup work in the Gulf of Mexico after the 2010 BP oil spill. The company he formed to do that work was an arm of his father's large construction business.

Mr. Murphy has rejected accusations that he embellished his resume and misrepresented past work. He has cited an analysis by PolitiFact Florida that concluded he had made clear in past public statements that the business that did oil-spill work was affiliated with his father's company.

"This is coming from Republican right-wing groups," he said in a recent interview. "They are trying to smear my record because they are trying to distract from Marco Rubio's abysmal record, not showing up to work, flip-flopping on issues, not caring about his job."

Democrats remain optimistic the race will tighten. They hope that Mr. Trump's unpopularity in the state will hurt Mr. Rubio's standing, and that Mr. Rubio's own comments criticizing the Senate will haunt him through the fall. As recently as May, Mr. Rubio tweeted: "I have only said like 10,000 times I will be a private citizen in January."

His entry into the race energized Republicans, who are defending 24 Senate seats to the Democrats' 10 this fall. Democrats need a net of five seats to regain control of the Senate, or four if Mrs. Clinton wins the White House, since the vice president breaks 50-50 ties in the Senate.

Elsewhere in Florida, Rep. Corrine Brown, a Democrat from Jacksonville, lost her primary to state Sen. Al Lawson. Earlier this year, Ms. Brown and her chief of staff were indicted on charges they had raised money under an unregistered charity and used the money as a personal fund. Mr. Lawson will face GOP businesswoman Glo Smith in November.

Ms. Brown has said she is innocent and will defend herself in court against what she called politically motivated allegations.

Credit: By Michelle Hackman and Arian Campo-Flores

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; Candidates; Congressional elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	Florida; United States--US

People:	Wasserman-Schultz, Debbie; Rubio, Marco
Classification:	92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275725
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-rubio-former-dnc-head-win-face/docview/1815275725/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Christie Vetoes Rise in Base Wage

King, Kate . King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"A substantial minimum-wage increase will help lift countless families out of poverty, decrease government dependency and boost commerce by pumping more dollars back into the economy," Mr. Prieto said in a written statement.

FULL TEXT

Saying it would kill jobs and stifle the economy, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie on Tuesday vetoed a bill backed by Democratic lawmakers that would have increased the state's minimum hourly wage to $15 by 2021.

Mr. Christie, a Republican, signed the veto message during a press conference held in the produce section of a Pennington, N.J., supermarket. The proposed increase, he said, "would trigger an escalation of wages that will make doing business in New Jersey unaffordable."

Assembly Speaker Vincent Prieto, a Democrat, said he was disappointed but not surprised by the governor's veto.

The Legislature has never overridden a Christie veto, and the governor said Tuesday that Republican lawmakers "will make sure" Democrats don't override Tuesday's.

Mr. Prieto said he would pursue a constitutional amendment to raise the minimum wage.

"A substantial minimum-wage increase will help lift countless families out of poverty, decrease government dependency and boost commerce by pumping more dollars back into the economy," Mr. Prieto said in a written statement.

Proposals to amend New Jersey's constitution, if approved by the Legislature, bypass the governor and go directly to the voters in the form of a ballot referendum. Anticipating Mr. Christie's veto, state Democrats this year discussed getting a minimum-wage proposal on the 2017 ballot.

Business groups praised the governor's move. The New Jersey Business & Industry Association called the proposed minimum-wage increase "too much too fast."

The New Jersey Policy Perspective, a left-leaning think tank, criticized Mr. Christie's veto as a missed opportunity to reduce income inequality in the state.

New Jersey's minimum wage is currently $8.38 an hour. In 2013, voters approved a constitutional amendment that raised it from $7.25 and provided for annual increases based on the consumer-price index.

Credit: By Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	Veto; Minimum wage; Governors; Referendums; Constitutional amendments
Business indexing term:	Subject: Minimum wage; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Christie, Christopher J
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275719
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-christie-veto-rises-base-wage/docview/1815275719/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 485 of 500

U.S. News: Fire Stations Open Doors to Addicts --- New Hampshire city hit by opioid crisis takes novel approach to getting people help

Kamp, Jon . Kamp, Jon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Anyone can walk into one of Manchester's 10 fire stations, where firefighters quickly check them for medical problems that might require a ride to the hospital, then connect them to one of the nearby nonprofits: Jim Duckworth, a firefighter in nearby Concord, N.H., recently raised safety worries on social media and a local news site, where he cited experience with an unstable man who came to a Concord fire house with a kitchen knife.

FULL TEXT

MANCHESTER, N.H. -- On a recent weekday afternoon in New Hampshire's largest city, a stocky 43-year-old man walked into the main fire station seeking help. After firefighters ushered him to a chair near the seven vehicle bays, he dumped needles and a crack pipe into a protective container.

Dennis, a longtime Manchester resident who declined to give his last name, said he developed a heroin addiction after leaving state prison in 2013.

Heroin is "not something that I want anymore, so I'm gonna try and do the right thing, and that's the reason why I'm here," he said. He said he got high only a day earlier and survived at least five overdoses last year. Minutes later, a recovery coach led him to a nearby nonprofit's office to talk about treatment options.

This city of 110,000, a hot spot in the nation's addiction to opioids such as heroin, has opened its fire stations to abusers in a novel attempt to address the epidemic.

Dennis was one of eight people who sought help at the station that day, and one of about 370 who have shown up since Manchester launched the "Safe Station" program in May.

New Hampshire saw 439 fatal drug overdoses last year, more than double the tally of two years earlier. The state Office of the Chief Medical Examiner projects the death toll will rise again to top 480 this year.

Through late August, Manchester alone has seen 524 drug overdoses, 70 of them fatal, according to the fire department. A bootleg version of the painkiller fentanyl, which is up to 50 times stronger than heroin, has rapidly emerged as a leading killer.

Anyone can walk into one of Manchester's 10 fire stations, where firefighters quickly check them for medical problems that might require a ride to the hospital, then connect them to one of the nearby nonprofits: Hope for New Hampshire Recovery and Serenity Place. Most addicts head to the main station near downtown, where the loudspeaker alarm "alpha response for a sick person" alerts firefighters to their arrival.

The addicts could end up in a recovery center or outpatient program, or they may simply gather information and return another day. While treatment advocates say New Hampshire has chronically limited resources, the fire houses give struggling addicts a new way to quickly find experts who know the system.

The Safe Station program, which Manchester officials believe is the first of its kind, is similar in concept to laws that allow people to drop off newborn babies, no questions asked, at safe havens like fire houses. Mayor Ted Gatsas said the program for addicts is estimated to cost about $300,000 a year to support the nonprofit groups. The fire houses are already staffed around the clock.

The idea mirrors an outreach program by the police chief in Gloucester, Mass., last year that has become a model for police departments elsewhere. But "we thought it would be more appropriate for fire," Mr. Gatsas said, referring to the fire department, because many addicts say they are afraid of getting arrested.

"People trust firemen, people trust EMTs," said Stephanie Bergeron, interim chief executive at Serenity Place. The fire houses are "an easy access point to get help," she said.

The Manchester program has drawn interest in other towns and cities, but might not work everywhere. Officials in Nashua, N.H., like the concept, but that city doesn't have a place to send addicts who show up, Assistant Fire Chief Brian Rhodes said.

Jim Duckworth, a firefighter in nearby Concord, N.H., recently raised safety worries on social media and a local news site, where he cited experience with an unstable man who came to a Concord fire house with a kitchen knife.

Mr. Duckworth commended the Manchester program in an interview, but said smaller cities don't have the same kind of large, heavily staffed central station. His post sparked a sharp rebuke in local media from Manchester Fire Chief Dan Goonan, who defended his city's program for helping addicts and firefighters alike.

Before Safe Station, firefighters who encountered addicts could hand them help cards with names and numbers to call, but "you don't really know what happened to them," the chief said.

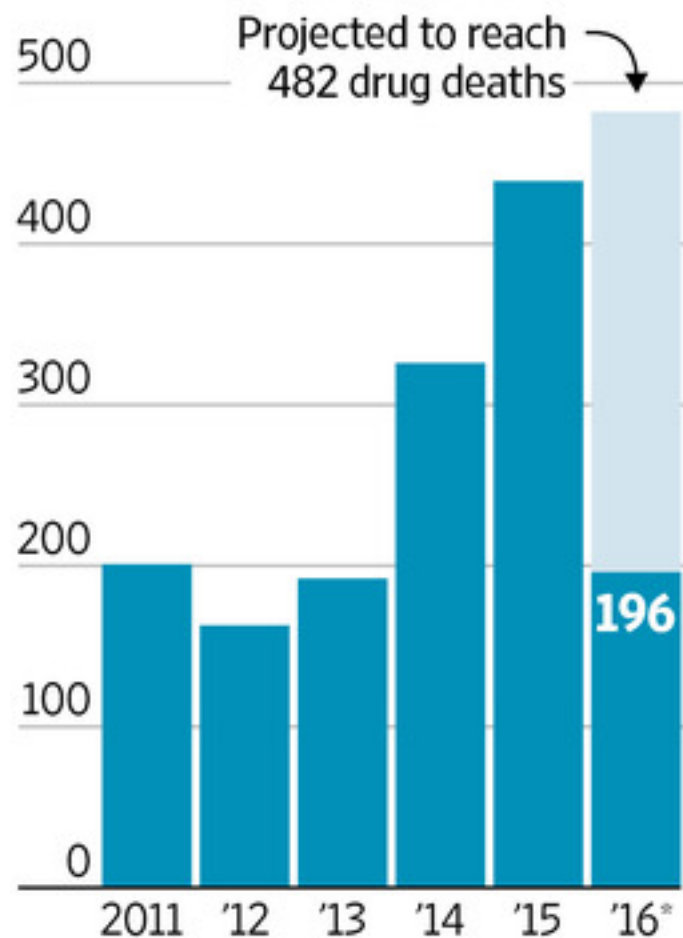

On another recent weekday, Kelly Hogan drove more than an hour from tiny, rural Milton Mills, N.H., to bring his daughter Melissa and a friend to the fire house. Melissa, a 33-year-old mother of two young boys, has struggled with heroin for years, and Mr. Hogan said he and his wife had to revive her from an overdose with the reversal drug naloxone two weeks earlier.

The overdose was a wake-up call for Melissa, and she made the decision to try Safe Station, which she heard about on the news, her dad said. She recently entered a treatment program. "I'm hopeful," Mr. Hogan said.

Overdose Toll

New Hampshire's largest city, Manchester, has had 70 suspected fatal overdoses so far this year as the state's opioid crisis worsens.

New Hampshire drug overdose deaths by year

*Confirmed data through Aug. 11. A total of 101 cases pending toxicology.

Source: N.H. Office of the Chief Medical Examiner; Manchester Fire Department

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Jon Kamp

DETAILS

Subject:	Nonprofit organizations; Fire stations; Drug addiction; Firefighters; Drug overdose; Fires; Heroin; Cities; Substance abuse treatment
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92216 : Fire Protection
Location:	Manchester New Hampshire; United States--US
Classification:	92216: Fire Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275708
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fire-stations-open-doors-addicts-new/docview/1815275708/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

World News: Fresh Surge in Migrants Strains Greece -- - More asylum seekers disregard EU strategy to deter them from Aegean Sea crossing

Stamouli, Nektaria . Stamouli, Nektaria.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The 19-year-old Syrian economics student is one of a rising number of people disregarding Europe's double strategy for deterring mass migration -- a deal with Turkey to return new arrivals, and the closure of Balkan borders to the north -- and stretching Greece's capacity to absorb more asylum seekers even thinner.

FULL TEXT

CHIOS, Greece -- Yasmin Ali made the perilous crossing from Turkey to this Aegean island two weeks ago even though she knew she would be trapped here, unable to travel farther into Europe.

The 19-year-old Syrian economics student is one of a rising number of people disregarding Europe's double strategy for deterring mass migration -- a deal with Turkey to return new arrivals, and the closure of Balkan borders to the north -- and stretching Greece's capacity to absorb more asylum seekers even thinner.

"We knew about the [Turkey] deal but we decided to come anyway," Ms. Ali said. She believes the European Union will have to let her, her mother and her sister join their male family members, who sought asylum in Germany a year ago. "They can't send just us back since we have family in Europe."

On average, the number of people landing on Greek islands has risen to about 100 a day in August, up from fewer than 50 a day in May and June. About 460 people landed on Greek islandson Monday, a number Greece hasn't experienced since early April.

The traffic is still far below daily peaks of 6,800 in October last year. But the rising numbers are making Greek and EU officials worried that the fragile deal with Turkey -- aimed at returning almost all who land on Greek shores -- could break down.

Turkish officials, angered by what they see as a lack of European support for Turkish democracy as Ankara roots out alleged supporters of July's failed coup, have threatened to scuttle the migration deal if the EU doesn't grant Turkish citizens visa-free travel to the bloc by October. Turkey says it was promised the concession.

The tough talk from Turkey has alarmed Athens, which knows that any sharp increase in migration would mainly affect Greece. "We will be tested very hard if the agreement with Turkey collapses," Greek Migration Minister Yiannis

Mouzas said this month.

Greek officials say they suspect the recent uptick in migrant arrivals partly reflects a manpower issue: Numerous Turkish military and police personnel were suspended as part of the government's postcoup crackdown. Turkey says it is assiduously keeping up its end of the migrant deal and that its security forces' operational ability hasn't been hampered in the wake of the coup attempt.

The closure of the Balkan migration route into the heart of Europe earlier this year has left nearly 60,000 refugees and other migrants trapped in Greece. Mr. Mouzas said that if it weren't for the deal with Turkey, which has slowed arrivals since March, 130,000 to 180,000 more people might be stuck in Greece.

Greece's neighbor Italy also faces major strains. Crossings from North Africa have continued at a high rate, bringing some 116,000 migrants -- many from sub-Saharan Africa -- to Italy so far this year. That compares with 154,000 for all of 2015, a phenomenon overshadowed by the surge of migrants arriving in Greece.

The closing of European borders to the migrants means that, unlike, in previous years, the vast majority are stuck in Italy, unable to reach Europe's north. Italian reception centers now host 145,000 migrants, according to Rome.

In poorer Greece, the numbers arriving on islands don't need to reach 2015's high levels to cause problems. The five islands that receive most of the newcomers -- Lesbos, Leros, Chios, Kos and Samos -- are already struggling.

The islands' reception centers already contain more than 12,000 people, 4,500 more than they were supposed to accommodate. "The [Turkish] deal is great for the EU but failed to consider the overflow on the Greek islands," says Emmanouil Vournos, the mayor of Chios.

Chios is currently sheltering about 3,300 migrants and refugees, three times its camp's capacity. In the camp, built around an abandoned aluminum factory, migrants live in overcrowded containers with unsanitary conditions.

"We live like animals here," says Wassim Omar, a 34-year-old English teacher from Syria, as he waits in the line for his family's dinner of potatoes, olives and bread.

Because of the overflow, many stranded on Chios are sleeping in two open camps closer to the island's port. Locals have complained of a surge in thefts and damage to crops. To ease the situation, the Greek government will transfer a few hundred people to a new camp on the mainland. Officials fear, though, that the move may encourage more people to come.

Giovanni Legorano contributed to this article.

Credit: By Nektaria Stamouli

DETAILS

Subject:	Migration; Displaced persons; Political asylum; Refugees; Islands; Coups d'etat
-----------------	---

Location:	Greece
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275705
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-fresh-surge-migrants-strains-greece/docview/1815275705/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 487 of 500

Business News: Sears to Resume Selling Paint

ABSTRACT

The move comes as home-improvement retailer Home Depot Inc. recently raised its outlook for the year after posting strong second-quarter results.

FULL TEXT

Sears Holdings Corp. said it would begin selling paint again after a roughly four-year hiatus and bring its Craftsman brand into the paint category for the first time, as the struggling retailer aims to benefit from stronger demand in the home-improvement market.

The Hoffman Estates, Ill., retailer initially plans to stock shelves at 23 U.S. stores with paint brands including the Craftsman, Weatherbeater and Easy Living labels.

"We are confident the time is right to re-enter the category," which Sears stepped away from in 2012, said Dean Schwartz, a Sears tools, lawn and garden executive. After the initial rollout, the retailer plans to reintroduce paint to all of its retail locations.

The move comes as home-improvement retailer Home Depot Inc. recently raised its outlook for the year after posting strong second-quarter results. Rival Lowe's Cos. also received a boost from an improving housing market, though not to the same degree.

Sears, which also owns the Kmart discount chain, in May said that it was exploring increasing the availability of its Kenmore, Craftsman and DieHard wares outside of Sears and Kmart stores. In June, Sears unveiled plans to put its DieHard brand on automobile tires, the brands first major expansion in more than a decade.

The company has been trying to turn itself around by spending on new technologies and services to better equip as consumers buy more goods online. Sears' efforts to return to profitability also have included cost-cutting and store closings. Like other retailers, Sears has faced challenges from a highly promotional environment.

Credit: By Tess Stynes

DETAILS

Subject:	Paints; Discount department stores; Financial performance
Business indexing term:	Subject: Discount department stores Financial performance; Corporation: Home Depot Inc; Industry: 32551 : Paint and Coating Manufacturing 45511 : Department Stores
Location:	United States--US

Company / organization:	Name: Home Depot Inc; NAICS: 444110; Name: Sears Holdings Corp; NAICS: 454110, 455110, 551114
Classification:	32551: Paint and Coating Manufacturing; 45511: Department Stores
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275076
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-sears-resume-selling-paint/docview/1815275076/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Mall Woes Squeeze Abercrombie

Safdar, Khadeeja . Safdar, Khadeeja.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Executive Chairman Arthur Martinez cited "traffic headwinds in the domestic mall business" and a "significant drop-off" in tourism.

FULL TEXT

Abercrombie & Fitch Co. posted a decline in quarterly sales and gave a more cautious outlook for the year, as the apparel retailer struggled to attract shoppers to its flagship properties.

Shares of Abercrombie tumbled 20% to $18.29 on Tuesday.

Sales at stores open at least a year are expected to "remain challenging" through the second half of the year, the company said. In May, the company expected "better results" in the back of the year following assortment changes and other investments.

Executive Chairman Arthur Martinez cited "traffic headwinds in the domestic mall business" and a "significant drop-off" in tourism. "We do not see those headwinds materially changing in the next few months," he said in an interview.

The New Albany, Ohio, company said sales at stores open at least a year fell 4% in the fiscal second quarter ended July 30, matching the first quarter decline and the results in the same period last year. Analysts had expected a 4.2% decline.

The company's Hollister brand, which has been a bright spot in past quarters, lost steam. Hollister sales at stores open at least a year fell 2%, while that metric fell 7% at Abercrombie.

The company's namesake brand released a new assortment in recent months, reflecting a different look from its highly sexualized image of previous years. The clothing, however, still features denim and other basics -- a market with many ailing competitors.

"What will set us apart is the quality we invest in the product, the patterns we use, particularly in the tops business, and the value for money," said Mr. Martinez.

Total revenue fell 4% to $783.2 million for the quarter. The company's net loss was $13.1 million, or 19 cents a share, compared with $0.8 million, or 1 cent, a year ago. Analysts had expected a loss of 20 cents a share on $783 million of revenue, according to FactSet.

The chain plans to close up to 60 stores in the U.S. and is evaluating other locations as about 50% of its U.S. leases expire by the end of fiscal 2017. The company has closed about a third of its U.S. locations over the past six years, leaving around 744 in its home market.

Mr. Martinez said the company is continuing to hold the line on promotions. "We took our foot off the gas on discounting in the second quarter," he said. "We believe it is right for the brand."

One source of improvement was its digital performance. Direct-to-consumer sales grew to approximately 23% of total company sales for the second quarter, compared with 21% last year.

Credit: By Khadeeja Safdar

DETAILS

Subject:	Retail stores; Net losses; Company reports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Retail stores Net losses Company reports
Company / organization:	Name: Abercrombie & Fitch Co; NAICS: 458110, 459420
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 31, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1815275029
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mall-woes-squeeze-abcrombie/docview/1815275029/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2025-01-29
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 489 of 500

U.S. News: Potential Zika Drugs Identified

Hernandez, Daniela . Hernandez, Daniela.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]because some of the virus's most harmful effects occur during pregnancy, scientists would have to test whether potential therapies are safe for expecting mothers -- first in animals and maybe eventually in humans, said Hongjun Song, a neuroscientist at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore and one of the lead authors on the study.

FULL TEXT

Scientists have identified several potential treatments for the Zika virus by testing 6,000 drugs already commercially available or undergoing clinical trials, according to a new study.

The research, published Monday in the journal Nature Medicine, could help quicken discovery of medications for the mosquito-borne virus and help prevent the neurological disorders associated with it, including microcephaly, in which babies are born with abnormally small heads associated with improper brain development.

The new paper identifies about a dozen substances, including a long-used treatment for worm infections, that suppress the virus's replication.

Another chemical, currently in clinical trials for liver disease, prevents brain cells in a lab dish from dying after Zika exposure, a potentially important effect given the fetal-brain defects associated with the virus. The study also suggests combinations of these two classes of compounds could be the most effective way to treat Zika.

Simply preventing cell death could lead to chronic infection, so it is also important to keep the virus from spawning, said Mariano Garcia-Blanco, a virologist at the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston. He wasn't involved with the research.

Commercial drugs are rarely tested on pregnant women due to potential toxic effects on the fetus. But because some of the virus's most harmful effects occur during pregnancy, scientists would have to test whether potential therapies are safe for expecting mothers -- first in animals and maybe eventually in humans, said Hongjun Song, a neuroscientist at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore and one of the lead authors on the study.

The team tested drug candidates in stem cells and so-called brain organoids, mini-reconstructions of the developing brain.

Apart from niclosamide, the worm-killing drug, it is unlikely the chemicals shown to halt viral replication would be approved for pregnant women. But, virologists said, treating men and nonpregnant women could reduce a pregnant woman's infection risk by reducing the amount of virus circulating in people around them, thus lowering the ability of mosquitoes to spread it.

The work is part of a recent trend called drug repurposing. Rather than engineer medicines from scratch, scientists sift through multitudes of existing ones to see if any can treat a particular disease.

To move the research forward the team will begin animal studies shortly, said Wei Zheng, a researcher at the National Institutes of Health's National Center for Advancing Translational Sciences and one of the study's lead authors. They also will test 80,000 more compounds with the help of robots, according to an NIH spokesman.

The researchers have filed a patent covering the findings. The goal is to incite companies to commercialize the research and develop Zika-busting drugs, said the NIH spokesman.

Credit: By Daniela Hernandez

DETAILS

Subject:	Clinical trials; Zika virus; Medical treatment; Drugs; Womens health; Brain research; Medical research
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814847684
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-potential-zika-drugs-identified/docview/1814847684/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 490 of 500

Business News: U.S. Implements Rules on Drones

Pasztor, Andy . Pasztor, Andy.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Calling it a "watershed moment" for U.S. aviation, Brian Wynne, president and chief executive of the drone industry's leading trade association, said unmanned aerial systems are "cleared for takeoff" and "poised for incredible growth."

FULL TEXT

With nationwide rules in place for routine flights of small commercial drones, federal regulators on Monday said their next big challenge will be evaluating industry waiver requests while balancing innovation and safety.

The regulations for the first time establish standard flight procedures and pilot licensing requirements for business uses of unmanned aircraft weighing less than 55 pounds and flying below 400 feet in daylight hours. In recent months, the Federal Aviation Administration was swamped, processing roughly 5,000 requests for case-by-case approvals of such operations.

But now, applicants will be able to proceed without first obtaining specific regulatory signoffs, as long as they comply with all the limits spelled out in the rules. FAA chief Michael Huerta told reporters the long-awaited step also "greatly simplifies the pilot-qualification process."

In a departure from most comprehensive air-safety initiatives, however, the rules themselves envision that continuing waiver or exemption requests will play a major role in shaping how the FAA regulates the budding industry. That option "will enable innovation to flourish," Mr. Huerta said, declining to predict how many requests are expected.

Other FAA officials have expressed concern about agency staff potentially being overwhelmed by a deluge of such paperwork. Over the next year alone, the FAA expects some 600,000 operators to begin commercial flights under the new rules.

Calling it a "watershed moment" for U.S. aviation, Brian Wynne, president and chief executive of the drone industry's leading trade association, said unmanned aerial systems are "cleared for takeoff" and "poised for incredible growth."

Still, Mr. Wynne and other industry officials have stressed that the waiver process won't satisfy pent-up demand for more-complex uses of unmanned aircraft -- especially at higher altitudes and beyond the sight of operators -- or approval of aerial vehicles substantially heavier than the current regulatory limit.

The rules also won't resolve growing controversy over privacy protections. On such issues, local governments increasingly are pre-empting Washington by staking out positions before federal agencies reach a consensus.

On Monday, Mr. Huerta said the FAA intends to launch a broad public-education campaign about the importance of privacy issues, while also developing and distributing policy guidance aimed at local governments.

Recognizing the need for quick action, the FAA earlier this year established separate registration requirements for all drone users. Agency leaders also have pledged to craft follow-on rules with unprecedented speed, including some giving the green light to night flights, others approving uses beyond the sight of operators and by year-end, regulations allowing unmanned vehicles to start flying over crowds.

Mr. Huerta said more than six dozen waivers already have been granted for some of these advanced operations, before formal regulatory proposals.

Agency officials haven't laid out the scope or methodology of future rules. The relevant technologies, as well as safety risks associated with them, continue to develop faster than federal efforts to control them. Some researchers have identified hundreds of incidents in which pilots reported drones flying close to airports in recent years, prompting many safety experts, drone proponents and lawmakers to call for automated digital "fencing" to prevent such incursions.

Credit: By Andy Pasztor

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal regulation; Unmanned aerial vehicles; Drones; Aircraft; Aviation; Waivers
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Industry: 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
People:	Wynne, Brian
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Aviation Administration--FAA; NAICS: 926120
Classification:	33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814847549
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-implements-rules-on-drones/docview/1814847549/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Medical School Dean Shot in Chappaqua

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to court documents, Mr. Chao, formerly an assistant professor of medicine at Mount Sinai, filed the lawsuit following an internal investigation that found that he committed research misconduct.

FULL TEXT

A former faculty member was arrested Monday in the shooting of a medical school dean and another person at a deli in Chappaqua, N.Y., the upscale Westchester County hamlet where presidential candidate Hillary Clinton lives.

One of the wounded is Dennis Charney, dean of the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai in Manhattan.

"This is an extremely disturbing event," said Kenneth Davis, chief executive of Mount Sinai Health System.

"Fortunately, Dr. Charney's injuries are not life-threatening and we expect he will fully recover."

The shooting took place around 7 a.m. Monday at Lange's Little Store & Delicatessen. Police said they responded to reports of shots fired and found two victims with gunshot wounds.

Police identified the alleged shooter as Chao Hengjun, 49 years old, of Tuckahoe, N.Y., who was arrested at the deli. He couldn't be reached for comment, and it wasn't clear if he had an attorney.

Mr. Chao was a Mount Sinai faculty member who was terminated for cause in 2010, according to Mount Sinai officials. Police said he appeared to be motivated by an old workplace dispute.

"I think he came up here intent on shooting someone," New Castle Police Chief Charles Ferry said during a news conference Monday. Chappaqua is in the town of New Castle.

Dr. Charney and the other victim, whose name wasn't released, were taken to Westchester Medical Center. The second victim was also expected to survive.

Mr. Chao sued Mount Sinai, Dr. Charney and others employed at Mount Sinai in 2010 for discrimination. According to court documents, Mr. Chao, formerly an assistant professor of medicine at Mount Sinai, filed the lawsuit following an internal investigation that found that he committed research misconduct. The lawsuit was dismissed.

Investigators recovered a shotgun in Mr. Chao's car, which, based on an initial investigation, had been fired once or twice, police said. Chief Ferry said Mr. Chao was arrested without incident and was cooperating with police.

Mrs. Clinton and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, have lived in Chappaqua for several years. Their home is about a mile away from the shooting scene.

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

Subject:	Murders & murder attempts
Location:	Westchester County New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai; NAICS: 611310
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30 , 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814843360
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/medical-school-dean-shot-chappaqua/docview/1814843360/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26

LINKS

Document 492 of 500

U.S. Stocks Rebound in Sleepy Session --- Major indexes shake off Friday's declines as financial sector heads broad advance

Puko, Timothy; Gold, Riva . Puko, Timothy; Gold, Riva.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Solid data would strengthen the case for a rate rise in September and call into question a recent rally in emerging markets, which hold large quantities of dollar-denominated debt, he said.

FULL TEXT

U.S. stocks advanced in the lightest day of trading so far this year.

Monday's broad gains wiped out Friday's losses, which came after Federal Reserve Chairwoman Janet Yellen said that the case for an interest-rate increase had improved.

But some investors are skeptical that an increase will come soon, or that it would be enough to shake the long-running rally.

"The bull market ends on a recession, it doesn't end on a rate hike," said Michael Antonelli, equity sales trader at Robert W. Baird.

Trading activity died down after Friday's intense focus on Ms. Yellen's comments. Roughly 4.9 billion U.S. shares changed hands, the lowest since Dec. 30. The daily average for 2016 is around 7.4 billion.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average climbed 107.59 points, or 0.6%, to 18502.99. The S&P 500 rose 11.34 points, or 0.5%, to 2180.38, its biggest gain since Aug. 5. The Nasdaq Composite added 13.41 points, or 0.3%, to 5232.33.

Financial shares led gains in the S&P 500, rising 1%. Higher interest rates tend to widen the difference between what banks charge on loans and what they pay on deposits, which should boost earnings.

The sector has trailed the broader index this year as investors curbed their expectations for rising rates. Financials are up 1.8% so far this year, compared with the S&P 500's gain of 6.7%. Health-care is now the biggest laggard in the S&P 500, up 1.4% in 2016.

Shares of Wells Fargo rose $1.05, or 2.2%, to $49.56 Monday. The SPDR S&P Regional Banking exchange-traded fund rose 32 cents, or 0.8% to 42.43.

Michael Ball, portfolio manager with Weatherstone Capital Management, said he was considering buying shares of the ETF but was waiting for a more definitive sign on interest rates. November's presidential election and the Fed's past hesitation make him skeptical that an increase will come before December, he said.

"They tend to err on the side of being cautious," he added, referring to the Fed. "So even if you have a good jobs report but something weak internationally, it may give them an excuse to say they're going to hold off."

U.S. economic data now faces heavy scrutiny ahead of the Fed's next policy meeting Sept. 20-21. The monthly jobs report is due Friday.

In the short term, "strong payrolls would be very bad news for equities," said Florian Ielpo at Swiss fund manager Unigestion. Solid data would strengthen the case for a rate rise in September and call into question a recent rally in emerging markets, which hold large quantities of dollar-denominated debt, he said.

Still, longer term, he said, "when a central bank decides to increase rates, it means the country and companies are doing very well."

The Stoxx Europe 600 inched down 0.2%.

Japan's Nikkei Stock Average rose 2.3%, its largest jump since Aug. 8, as the yen weakened.

Credit: By Timothy Puko and Riva Gold

DETAILS

Subject:	Dow Jones averages; Daily markets (wsj); Stock exchanges; Stock prices; Interest rates
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices Interest rates; Industry: 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
column:	Monday's Markets

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814842775
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-stocks-rebound-sleepy-session-major-indexes/docview/1814842775/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 493 of 500

City News: Shelter Employee Killed in Shooting

Shallwani, Pervaiz; Furfaro, Hannah . Shallwani, Pervaiz; Furfaro, Hannah.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The victim, who was driving a van owned by the shelter, was shot by a suspect who pulled up beside him in a sport-utility vehicle and opened fire, the New York Police Department said.

FULL TEXT

An employee of a women's homeless shelter was shot and killed Monday afternoon in Brooklyn as he was driving a shelter client to an appointment, police and shelter officials said.

The victim, who was driving a van owned by the shelter, was shot by a suspect who pulled up beside him in a sport-utility vehicle and opened fire, the New York Police Department said.

The 36-year old man was struck in the chest and was pronounced dead at Maimonides Medical Center, police said. His name wasn't released.

His female passenger wasn't hurt.

The shelter, Win, formerly known as Women in Need, said that as a safety precaution it would suspend operations of its vehicles and heighten security measures at its facilities.

Win's president and chief executive, Christine Quinn, said the driver was killed while taking a woman who is one of its clients to complete a housing application.

"We cannot begin to express the sadness this incident brings to our organization, its staff and our clients," Ms. Quinn said in a statement.

The shooting occurred around 12:20 p.m. on New Utrecht Avenue near 46th Street, a busy street in Brooklyn's Borough Park neighborhood.

Anthony Isaac, 42 years old, who lives in Brownsville, Brooklyn, said he was parked around the corner from the scene of the shooting when he heard gunshots.

"To hear three shots at that time of day, I'm like, wow, this is crazy," he said. "That shocked a lot of people in this area."

A preliminary investigation found that the victim was in the driver's seat of the van when a suspect in a red Nissan SUV pulled up next to him and fired several shots.

The suspect fled, driving west on 46th Street, police said. No one was in custody as of Monday evening.

It wasn't clear if the van was moving at the time of the shooting, but photos and video of the aftermath showed the vehicle had come to rest on the sidewalk along New Utrecht Avenue, which is bustling with business activity and sits below an aboveground subway line.

By Monday afternoon, the streets were largely empty as police conducted their investigation. The gray van remained surrounded by broken glass.

Credit: By Pervaiz Shallwani and Hannah Furfaro

DETAILS

Subject:	Homeless people; Murders & murder attempts; Shelters; Shootings; Criminal investigations
Business indexing term:	Industry: 62422 : Community Housing Services
Location:	Brooklyn New York; United States--US
Classification:	62422: Community Housing Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814842679
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-shelter-employee-killed-shooting/docview/1814842679/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Dollar Lift Gathers Steam --- As Federal Reserve signals a rate increase, traders watch for a stronger greenback Iosebashvili, Ira; Dulaney, Chelsey . Iosebashvili, Ira; Dulaney, Chelsey.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The central bank has been wary of damaging an uneven U.S. recovery by raising rates too quickly, while also fearing that higher borrowing costs in the U.S. could destabilize global markets.

FULL TEXT

Investors are dusting off the rising-dollar playbook.

The U.S. currency hit its highest level in three weeks on Monday, reflecting expectations that the Federal Reserve could increase short-term interest rates as soon as next month. Higher rates make dollar-denominated assets more attractive.

Traders are on the lookout for signs the dollar could surge further against the yen, euro and some emerging-market currencies. Currency gains this year have hampered sluggish economic recoveries in many nations. The Wall Street Journal Dollar Index is down 4% in the year to date, confounding many analysts who predicted the dollar would rise in 2016.

Bets on a stronger dollar stood at $7.18 billion in the week ended Aug. 23, down from nearly $15 billion in late July, according to data from the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission and Scotiabank.

Investors are "underexposed to the U.S. dollar right now," said Shaun Osborne, chief FX strategist at Scotiabank.

Any large currency shifts could roil other asset classes, from U.S. stocks to emerging-markets bonds to many commodities, that have benefited from the dollar's weakness.

One potential catalyst: A strong U.S. payroll number this Friday could bolster the case that Fed officials have recently made for higher rates. Last Friday, Chairwoman Janet Yellen and Vice Chairman Stanley Fischer said the economy was strong enough to warrant the first increase in the federal-funds rate this year. The comments spurred the biggest one-day rally in two months in the WSJ Dollar index, which tracks the value of a basket of 16 currencies.

"We have a period of dollar strength ahead," said Daniel Katzive, head of FX strategy for North America at BNP Paribas.

A stronger dollar boosts the purchasing power of U.S. consumers and businesses and pushes down inflation by making imports cheaper. But it also hits the profits of U.S. multinational companies with large overseas operations.

The dollar's strengthening is more problematic abroad, an effect that became evident during the global selloff in many asset classes in the first two months of 2016.

Commodities including oil are priced in dollars, and become more expensive to foreign buyers when the dollar strengthens. This pressure limits demand for those goods in those nations and can lead to a cycle of falling prices and soft global demand that can send bearish market signals about the health of the world economy.

A stronger dollar could be good news in Europe and Japan, which for years have struggled with slow growth and low interest rates. Currency appreciation in those regions has stifled efforts to gain competitiveness through easier monetary policy.

But a strengthening in the greenback likely also would hit emerging markets such as Brazil and Turkey, which have received billions of dollars of investor inflows this year. Many corporate borrowers there owe money in dollars. Those loans offered lower rates at inception but stand to become costlier to repay if the dollar rises, raising concerns about the potential for a broad and disorderly selloff.

At the same time, many investors are hesitant to bet on the Fed, which has stood pat after delivering a single rate increase late last year -- a much slower pace of tightening than many investors had expected.

The central bank has been wary of damaging an uneven U.S. recovery by raising rates too quickly, while also fearing that higher borrowing costs in the U.S. could destabilize global markets.

Most traders expect the Fed to raise rates just once in the next year, CME Group data show.

BNP Paribas predicts the dollar will rise about 1.7% against the euro to roughly 0.90 euros by the end of the year and 6% vs. the yen to 108 yen.

But even investors who expect the Fed to raise rates this year appear skeptical that more rate increases will quickly follow. Fed-funds futures show that investors see only a 27% chance that the Fed will raise rates twice by next July, according to CME data.

Betting on a Breakout

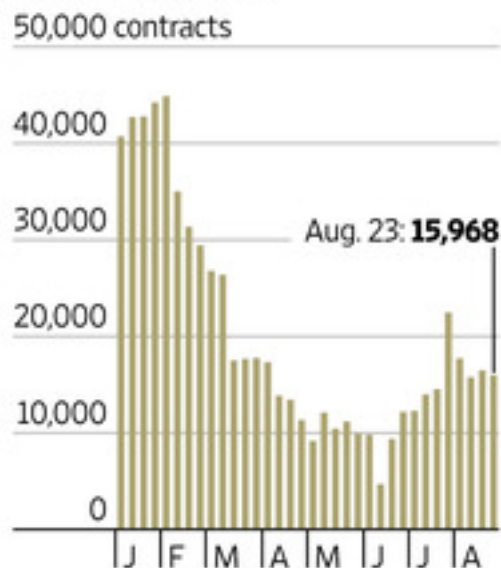

The dollar has slipped against many rivals, surprising analysts, but investor bets on a rebound have risen following a midyear retreat.

WSJ Dollar Index

Sources: WSJ Market Data Group (dollar index);
Commodity Futures Trading Commission

Net bullish bets on U.S. dollar index

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Ira Iosebashvili and Chelsey Dulaney

DETAILS

Subject:	Currency; Federal Reserve monetary policy; Yen; International finance; Interest rates; American dollar; Global economy
Business indexing term:	Subject: Currency Federal Reserve monetary policy Yen International finance Interest rates American dollar Global economy; Corporation: BNP Paribas Bank of Nova Scotia; Industry: 92113 : Public Finance Activities 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	92113: Public Finance Activities; 52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814842616
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/dollar-lift-gathers-steam-as-federal-reserve/docview/1814842616/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 495 of 500

Duke Won't Seek Oil Man's Money

Dezember, Ryan . Dezember, Ryan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A spokesman for the university said paperwork asking to withdraw the claim was filed on Friday in the Oklahoma City district court where the Chesapeake Energy Corp. co-founder's estate is being wound down.

FULL TEXT

Duke University said it has withdrawn a claim for about $10 million it made against the estate of oil man Aubrey McClendon, who died before he could make good on pledges the North Carolina college said he made to his alma mater.

A spokesman for the university said paperwork asking to withdraw the claim was filed on Friday in the Oklahoma City district court where the Chesapeake Energy Corp. co-founder's estate is being wound down. Records show the claim was filed Aug. 12, but it was only made public last week and first reported by The Wall Street Journal.

"While submitting such claims is generally a routine procedure, in this case our action was misperceived as adversarial to the McClendon family, which was never the intention," a Duke spokesman said in an email. "Aubrey was one of our most passionate and loyal graduates, always willing to support Duke when asked. We are deeply sorry for any pain this has caused the McClendon family."

The university's decision to withdraw its claim was reported Monday by the Chronicle, a student-run newspaper at Duke.

People close to Duke told the Journal last week that news of the claim caught members of the university's fundraising office by surprise.

Mr. McClendon graduated from Duke in 1981 and became a major benefactor for the school. Duke has said Mr. McClendon and his wife had given more than $20 million to the university over the years.

In its now-rescinded claim, Duke said that when Mr. McClendon died in March in a car crash in Oklahoma City, he had unfunded commitments to athletic funds, scholarships and campus improvement projects totaling about $9.94 million.

Kevin Helliker contributed to this article.

Credit: By Ryan Dezember

DETAILS

Subject:	Litigation; Estates
Location:	Oklahoma; United States--US
People:	McClendon, Aubrey
Company / organization:	Name: Chesapeake Energy Corp; NAICS: 211120; Name: Duke University; NAICS: 611310
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.1

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814842600
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/duke-wont-seek-oil-mans-money/docview/1814842600/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 496 of 500

World News: Venezuelans Mobilize for Recall Vote

Kurmanaev, Anatoly . Kurmanaev, Anatoly.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On Monday, Father Lenin, as he is called by his congregation, arrived in the capital after eight days of walking and hitchhiking, part of a wave of thousands of Venezuelans descending on the city as part of a last-gasp effort by the country's opposition to try to force President Nicolas Maduro to hold a referendum on his rule -- a vote he is fiercely resisting, as polls say it would lead to his removal.

FULL TEXT

VILLA DE CURA, Venezuela -- After surveying the decay of his malnourished flock at a recent Mass, Father Lenin Bastidas decided he had enough. The next day, he left his parish in the town of La Soledad -- which means "loneliness" -- and started a 400-mile walk to the capital, Caracas.

On Monday, Father Lenin, as he is called by his congregation, arrived in the capital after eight days of walking and hitchhiking, part of a wave of thousands of Venezuelans descending on the city as part of a last-gasp effort by the country's opposition to try to force President Nicolas Maduro to hold a referendum on his rule -- a vote he is fiercely resisting, as polls say it would lead to his removal.

The mobilization will culminate on Thursday in a mass rally the opposition hopes will draw hundreds of thousands of Venezuelans to the streets of Caracas, making a show of strength against a government overseeing the country's worst economic collapse since its independence in 1811.

"I have seen the face of misery: the children who come up to me and say 'Father, give us food,' the sick who ask for my prayers because they have no medicine," Father Lenin, 35, said in a homily on Saturday to some 300 people crammed into a church in Villa de Cura, a town he passed on his way to Caracas. "Either the president fixes an immediate date for a constitutional referendum, or he resigns."

Father Lenin -- named after the Russian revolutionary whose Red Army killed hundreds of priests and nuns -- isn't alone in hitting the road. About 500 bare-chested tribesmen are traveling 500 miles by ferry and bus from the Amazon jungle in the south, while three disabled opposition activists from the western city of Barquisimeto are traveling on wheelchairs on part of their 200-mile journey to the capital.

This week's protest may be the last, best chance to force a referendum that would almost certainly end a deeply unpopular government. The opposition has been trying to hold the plebiscite, as set out in the constitution, since March, but election officials have delayed giving the green light.

"This is a huge event. It's the biggest test of the opposition's strength and the government's tolerance of dissent in years," said Javier Corrales, professor of Latin American studies in Amherst College in Massachusetts. "The opposition is really running out of time to achieve their goal of the referendum this year."

Mr. Corrales said the government wants to put off the vote until next year. If the vote takes place after Jan. 10 and Mr. Maduro is ousted, a vice president of his choosing would serve out the term ending in 2019. A referendum held before that date wouldn't only remove the president, but also trigger new elections, which polls show would end 17 years of Socialist government.

The national electoral council this month issued a preliminary schedule suggesting the referendum might be held in February.

Mr. Maduro's control of courts, prosecutors and electoral officials has left street protests as the only means to pressure the government to comply with the laws, said Jesus Torrealba, head of the Democratic Unity Roundtable opposition alliance.

Mr. Maduro isn't taking any chances. He has called on supporters to hold a separate march in downtown Caracas on the same day.

Meanwhile, Caracas has taken on the feel of a city bracing for war. In recent weeks, the military built sandbag emplacements with armored vehicles outside key tunnels connecting parts of the capital.

The opposition says the soldiers will try to prevent busloads of supporters from reaching the capital on Thursday.

Maria Ramirez in Puerto Ordaz and Mayela Armas in Caracas contributed to this article.

Credit: By Anatoly Kurmanaev

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidents; Recall of government officials; Referendums
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Venezuela
People:	Maduro, Nicolas
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814839387
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-venezuelans-mobilize-recall-vote/docview/1814839387/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 497 of 500

World News: Obama to Meet Erdogan and Xi

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. wouldn't support Turkey moving south and engaging U.S.-backed Kurdish forces, he said, and for Kurds to conflict with Turkey would "complicate" the anti-Islamic State campaign.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- President Barack Obama will meet with Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan next week for the first time since the attempted coup in Turkey in July, the White House said on Monday.

Mr. Obama also will meet with Chinese President Xi Jinping for several hours in a session to review the status of U.S.-China relations,said Ben Rhodes, a deputy national-security adviser.

The meetings will take place on the sidelines of the Group of 20 summit in China.

Mr. Obama will also speak with Russian President Vladimir Putin during the summit about Syria and Ukraine, Mr. Rhodes said, but no formal meeting is scheduled.

Mr. Obama's meeting with Mr. Erdogan will focus primarily on the failed coup, according to Mr. Rhodes. Turkey's request for the U.S. to extradite a cleric living in Pennsylvania, who the government says was behind the coup attempt, has strained relations between the two allies.

Mr. Rhodes said they would also discuss the Turkish-led operation in Jarablus, Syria. "We have a broad and active agenda," he said.

The U.S. wouldn't support Turkey moving south and engaging U.S.-backed Kurdish forces, he said, and for Kurds to conflict with Turkey would "complicate" the anti-Islamic State campaign.

The president's meeting with Mr. Xi will cover an array of differences between the U.S. and China, including tensions in the South China Sea, the economy, human rights and cybersecurity, Mr. Rhodes said.

Mr. Obama also will travel to Laos for a meeting of leaders from members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, and plans to meet the new president of the Philippines, Rodrigo Duterte.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Economic summit conferences; Presidents; Coups d'etat; Kurdish people
Business indexing term:	Subject: Economic summit conferences; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US; China; Turkey
People:	Obama, Barack; Xi Jinping; Erdogan, Recep Tayyip
Company / organization:	Name: Group of Twenty; NAICS: 926110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814839351
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-meet-erdogan-xi/docview/1814839351/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 498 of 500

Business News: U.S. Warns Drillers About Bolts --- Failure of fasteners could result in an oil spill on the scale of 2010 disaster, officials say

Mann, Ted . Mann, Ted.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Dr. Marcia McNutt, the president of the National Academy of Sciences, compared the risk of a bolt failure leading to a major oil spill to the failure of an O-ring that doomed the space shuttle Challenger, which exploded after takeoff in 1986.

FULL TEXT

U.S. regulators Monday warned subsea oil drillers and equipment makers that bolt failures in the Gulf of Mexico could result in an oil spill on the scale of the Deepwater Horizon disaster.

"Fortunately, as of today we've had no major catastrophes from bolt failures," said Brian Salerno, director of the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement at the Interior Department, which oversees the offshore-oil industry.

"We believe it may only be a matter of time before our luck runs out," he said.

The warning came at a public forum Monday at the Interior Department in Washington, D.C., convened by the BSEE.

The agency's working group and a parallel task force set up by an oil-industry trade group are trying to determine why critical metal fasteners have corroded and failed in recent years.

Regulators and makers of oil-production equipment, including General Electric Co., Schlumberger Ltd. and National Oilwell Varco Inc., are trying to determine what is causing the failures, which have included premature corroding, stripping of threads or snapping outright.

The problems have been found during the past four years on safety equipment in underwater oil production, including on blowout preventers, which are designed as a last defense against a major oil spill like the Deepwater Horizon incident in the Gulf of Mexico.

"We could have another Macondo or something similar from this piece of equipment," said Joe Levine, a BSEE official, referring to the name of the well that blew out in the Gulf in 2010, killing 11 workers and releasing millions of barrels of oil into the gulf over almost three months.

Dr. Marcia McNutt, the president of the National Academy of Sciences, compared the risk of a bolt failure leading to a major oil spill to the failure of an O-ring that doomed the space shuttle Challenger, which exploded after takeoff in 1986.

The American Petroleum Institute, a trade group that sets industry standards, has said it is working with regulators to determine the reason for the bolt failures.

Equipment manufacturers say they, too, are searching for answers.

In 2013, GE recalled more than 10,000 bolts after a failure on one of its components, a blowout preventer connector, which led to a spill of more than 400 barrels of drilling fluid in the Gulf of Mexico.

The company and regulators previously have said that a variety of factors could have caused those failures, including metallurgical issues with the alloy used in the bolts themselves, as well as "over-torquing" of the fasteners during the assembly of the stacks of equipment that sit atop the subsea well.

BSEE officials said a new well-safety rule, passed in response to the Deepwater Horizon spill, that requires oil producers to report the failures to the government, even when an oil spill doesn't occur, would help the agency better understand the bolt problems.

U.S. regulators said they have contacted counterparts in other countries to alert them to their concerns about the failures.

Troy Trosclair, a BSEE supervisor for the Gulf of Mexico region, said Brazilian officials reported that 56 rigs working for Petroleo Brasileiro SA, or Petrobras, that country's biggest oil producer, were affected by the 2013 GE recall.

Credit: By Ted Mann

DETAILS

Subject:	Oil spills; Underwater pipelines; Petroleum production; Failure
Business indexing term:	Subject: Petroleum production; Corporation: Petroleos Brasileiro SA
Location:	Gulf of Mexico
Company / organization:	Name: Schlumberger Ltd; NAICS: 213111, 213112, 334419, 334513, 513210, 541512; Name: General Electric Co; NAICS: 332510, 334290, 334512, 334519; Name: Bureau of Safety & Environmental Enforcement; NAICS: 924110; Name: NOV Inc; NAICS: 333132
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814839350
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-warns-drillers-about-bolts/docview/1814839350/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 499 of 500

Business News: Cemex Agrees to Sell Some U.S. Assets for $306 Million

Harrup, Anthony . Harrup, Anthony.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Monterrey-based Cemex, one of the world's largest cement and building materials companies, will sell to GCC its cement plant in Odessa, Texas, two cement terminals and its building materials business in Texas and New Mexico, but will keep a cement plant and terminal in Colorado.

FULL TEXT

MEXICO CITY -- Mexican cement company Cemex SAB agreed on conditions to sell $306 million in U.S. assets to Grupo Cementos de Chihuahua SAB, a reduction from the $400 million agreed to in May, the companies said Monday.

Monterrey-based Cemex, one of the world's largest cement and building materials companies, will sell to GCC its cement plant in Odessa, Texas, two cement terminals and its building materials business in Texas and New Mexico, but will keep a cement plant and terminal in Colorado.

The companies expect the deal to close by the end of the year.

GCC, in which Cemex owns a minority stake, said the acquisition will bolster its plans for expansion in the U.S. where it operates three of its six plants. GCC has annual cement capacity of 4.5 million tons, and had sales of around $325 million in the first half of this year.

Cemex said separately that it intends to participate in GCC's planned corporate restructuring, which involves the merging of several GCC units to simplify the shareholder structure.

If the restructuring is approved by GCC shareholders, Cemex will have a 23% direct interest in GCC and a minority stake in Camcem, which will hold a majority interest in GCC. Cemex said it expects to hold the Camcem interest as a long-term investment, while the 23% direct stake in GCC is among assets it is considering for an eventual sale.

Cemex recently increased its asset-sale target by $500 million to between $1.5 billion and $2 billion in 2016-2017. The sales are part of the company's plans to lower debt by between $3 billion and $3.5 billion in 2016-2017 as it seeks to recover the investment grade it lost in the 2008 global crisis.

Credit: By Anthony Harrup

DETAILS

Subject:	Cement industry; Building materials industry; Asset acquisitions; Divestiture; Cement plants
Business indexing term:	Subject: Cement industry Building materials industry Asset acquisitions Divestiture Cement plants; Industry: 32111 : Sawmills and Wood Preservation 32731 : Cement Manufacturing
Company / organization:	Name: Cemex SA de CV; NAICS: 327310; Name: Grupo Cementos de Chihuahua SAB de CV; NAICS: 327310
Classification:	32111: Sawmills and Wood Preservation; 32731: Cement Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814839344
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-cemex-agrees-sell-some-u-s-assets/docview/1814839344/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-09-28
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 500 of 500

Business News: Truck Carrying Takata Air Bags Explodes

Bach, Jonathan . Bach, Jonathan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The crash occurred as the auto supplier is working through the largest safety recall in U.S. history for rupture-prone air-bag components known to explode and kill car occupants.

FULL TEXT

Takata Corp. said a truck hauling air-bag propellants exploded on a Texas highway last week after failing to negotiate a curve and crashing, killing a woman in a nearby home and injuring four others.

The explosion occurred in around 2:15 a.m. on Aug. 22 as the truck, operated by a subcontractor's driver, was headed to Takata's storage facility in Eagle Pass, the Texas Department of Public Safety said. The crash occurred as the auto supplier is working through the largest safety recall in U.S. history for rupture-prone air-bag components known to explode and kill car occupants.

Takata spokesman Jared Levy said the Japanese company is working with authorities on investigating the situation. It is unclear why the explosion occurred.

The Aug. 22 explosion killed Lucila Robles, 67, who was in her home when it occurred, Maverick County Sheriff Tom Schmerber said in a phone interview. The sheriff's department led a two-day search for Ms. Robles that ended with family members finding her remains in the area of the house, Mr. Schmerber said.

The driver of the truck hauling Takata components and a passenger, along with a motorist and their passenger, were injured in the explosion and taken to San Antonio for medical attention.

"Takata has strict safety procedures relating to the transportation of its products that meet or exceed all regulatory requirements," Mr. Levy said. "Our thoughts are with the family of the woman who died as a result of this accident, and with the four people injured."

Takata's air bags -- using an ammonium nitrate propellant that has been found to destabilize amid prolonged exposure to moisture and heat and cause the air bags to rupture -- have been linked to at least 11 deaths and more than 100 injuries around the world.

Mr. Levy declined to comment on what types of inflaters were being hauled in the truck that exploded.

Credit: By Jonathan Bach

DETAILS

Subject:	Fatalities; Air bags; Traffic accidents & safety; Explosions
Location:	Texas; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Takata Corp; NAICS: 313210, 336390
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Aug 30, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1814839337

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-truck-carrying-takata-air-bags/docview/1814839337/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets , including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Bibliography

Citation style: APA 6th - American Psychological Association, 6th Edition

Elinson, Z., & Greene, J. (2016, Sep 26). U.S. news: Suspect described as a troubled outcast --- man detained in mall shooting that killed 5 'was big on guns,' and 'scary,' classmates say. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-suspect-described-as-troubled-outcast/docview/1822946390/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abdulrahim, R., & Fassihi, F. (2016, Sep 26). Hundreds are killed as syria bombing intensifies. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/hundreds-are-killed-as-syria-bombing-intensifies/docview/1822946316/se-2?accountid=14681>

Colias, M. (2016, Sep 26). Business news: Auto workers win pact in canada. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-auto-workers-win-pact-canada/docview/1822932516/se-2?accountid=14681>

Spector, M. (2016, Sep 26). Business news: Takata didn't tell U.S. about incident. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-takata-didnt-tell-u-s-about/docview/1822932515/se-2?accountid=14681>

Colias, M. (2016, Sep 26). Business news: GM to add more diesel engines --- option to be offered in wider U.S. car lineup even as VW scandal hits category's outlook. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-add-more-diesel-engines-option/docview/1822932478/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 26). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822917872/se-2?accountid=14681>

Tameez, H. (2016, Sep 26). World news: Mexico grapples with a rise in killings --- surging homicide levels put heat on president, as early success fades; calm spots now at risk. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-mexico-grapples-with-rise-killings/docview/1822917853/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 26). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1822917842/se-2?accountid=14681>

Randazzo, S. (2016, Sep 26). Business news: Hearing junior lawyers would please some courts. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hearing-junior-lawyers-would-please/docview/1822917838/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: Economic calendar. (2016, Sep 26). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1822917822/se-2?accountid=14681>

Beck, M. (2016, Sep 26). U.S. news: Wrong-patient errors called common. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-wrong-patient-errors-called-common/docview/1822917807/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gardner, R., Jr. (2016, Sep 26). City news -- urban gardner: A throne that's worth the weight. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-urban-gardner-throne-thats-worth-weight/docview/1822917797/se-2?accountid=14681>

Election 2016: Campaign wire. (2016, Sep 26). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-campaign-wire/docview/1822917786/se-2?accountid=14681>

- Bauerlein, V. (2016, Sep 26). U.S. news: Police videos fail to quiet protests. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-police-videos-fail-quiet-protests/docview/1822917726/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Elinson, Z. (2016, Sep 26). U.S. news: Gun-seizure plan sees wide support. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-gun-seizure-plan-sees-wide-support/docview/1822917719/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Stancati, M. (2016, Sep 26). World news: Saudis press king over women's rights --- hundreds of telegrams in grass-roots campaign call for end to system of male guardianship. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-saudis-press-king-over-womens-rights/docview/1822917710/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Wall, R. (2016, Sep 26). World news: Spending on warplanes fuels arms race --- russian and chinese programs become U.S. air force's 'most pressing challenge'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-spending-on-warplanes-fuels-arms-race/docview/1822917708/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Peterson, K., & Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 26). World news: In washington, calls rise for syria sanctions. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-washington-calls-rise-syria-sanctions/docview/1822917701/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Business & finance. (2016, Sep 24). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1822603287/se-2?accountid=14681>
- World-wide. (2016, Sep 24). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1822603281/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Colias, M., & Stoll, J. D. (2016, Sep 24). Business news: GM culls cadillac dealers. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-culls-cadillac-dealers/docview/1822603252/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Zimmer, B. (2016, Sep 24). REVIEW --- word on the street: Captain boycott and his legacy. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-word-on-street-captain-boycott-his-legacy/docview/1822602444/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Lovett, I. (2016, Sep 24). REVIEW --- space mission: Christians ask if alien souls need saving. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-space-mission-christians-ask-if-alien/docview/1822602360/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Elinson, Z., Mahtani, S., & Bauerlein, V. (2016, Sep 24). U.S. news: Police diverge on camera usage --- some departments release video shortly after shootings, others keep it from the public. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-police-diverge-on-camera-usage-some/docview/1822602344/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Epstein, R. J. (2016, Sep 24). Election 2016: Cruz, in reversal, endorses GOP nominee. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-cruz-reversal-endorses-gop-nominee/docview/1822602342/se-2?accountid=14681>
- Cary, B. (2016, Sep 24). Open house saturday: Putting down roots in bronxville --- westchester village, once home to artists' colony, combines urban sophistication with suburban comfort. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/open-house-saturday-putting-down-roots-bronxville/docview/1822602334/se-2?accountid=14681>

Stevens, L., & Wells, G. (2016, Sep 24). Business news: UPS makes a delivery by drone. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ups-makes-delivery-drone/docview/1822602312/se-2?accountid=14681>

Akst, D. (2016, Sep 24). REVIEW --- play: News quiz. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-play-news-quiz/docview/1822602311/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dendrinou, V. (2016, Sep 24). World news: Prospects dim for landmark trade pact. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-prospects-dim-landmark-trade-pact/docview/1822602309/se-2?accountid=14681>

King, K. (2016, Sep 24). City news: N.J. casino measure doomed, say backers --- advocates cite polls as they stand down on $35 million campaign to push referendum. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-n-j-casino-measure-doomed-say-backers/docview/1822602306/se-2?accountid=14681>

Karp, H. (2016, Sep 24). Business news: Competition grows in on-demand music --- radio broadcaster IHeartMedia to enter packed market for subscription services. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-competition-grows-on-demand-music/docview/1822602305/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Sep 24). A bench player takes a star turn. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/bench-player-takes-star-turn/docview/1822602298/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 24). Christie used port as 'goody bag' --- witness says governor doled out perks to help secure endorsements of democratic officials. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/christie-used-port-as-goody-bag-witness-says/docview/1822602296/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E., & Peterson, K. (2016, Sep 24). U.S. news: Obama vetoes bill on terror lawsuits. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-vetoes-bill-on-terror-lawsuits/docview/1822602290/se-2?accountid=14681>

Schwartz, F. (2016, Sep 24). World news: Diplomats feud over syria's busted truce --- top U.S. and russian negotiators trade blame as others give voice to recriminations. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-diplomats-feud-over-syrias-busted/docview/1822602269/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 24). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822602268/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 24). City news: City comptroller trades sharp jabs with de Blasio. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-comptroller-trades-sharp-jabs-with-de/docview/1822602267/se-2?accountid=14681>

Herring, C. (2016, Sep 24). Phil Jackson 'not concerned' about Rose rape case. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/phil-jackson-not-concerned-about-rose-rape-case/docview/1822602265/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jo, C. M. (2016, Sep 24). U.S. news -- the numbers: Fiscal year change no fix for funding feuds. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-numbers-fiscal-year-change-no-fix/docview/1822602263/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chun, H. W. (2016, Sep 24). World news: Criminal link in Pyongyang probe. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-criminal-link-pyongyang-probe/docview/1822602262/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

Offerman, N. (2016, Sep 24). REVIEW --- my week: On the road again. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-my-week-on-road-again/docview/1822602257/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 24). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1822602256/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kadet, A. (2016, Sep 24). City news -- metro money: Rockaways block has seen better days. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-metro-money-rockaways-block-has-seen/docview/1822602255/se-2?accountid=14681>

Orden, E., & Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 24). U.S. news: Corruption case deals N.Y. governor a blow. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-corruption-case-deals-n-y-governor-blow/docview/1822602253/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bauerlein, V. (2016, Sep 24). U.S. news: Family of man shot by officer releases video. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-family-man-shot-officer-releases-video/docview/1822602234/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dalton, M., & Steinhauer, G. (2016, Sep 23). World news: France raps belgians for moving migrants across border. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-france-raps-belgians-moving-migrants/docview/1822358973/se-2?accountid=14681>

Erica Orden, Rebecca Davis O'Brien, Orden, E., & Rebecca Davis O'Brien. (2016, Sep 23). Ex-cuomo associates charged --- U.S. attorney details alleged plots involving economic programs; shows albania's graft. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/ex-cuomo-associates-charged-u-s-attorney-details/docview/1822328154/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 23). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1822328152/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 23). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1822324368/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bauerlein, V., & McWhirter, C. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: Riots upend charlotte's civic identity --- A beacon of the new south wrestles with tensions; 'charlotte way' falls short. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-riots-upend-charlottes-civic-identity/docview/1822324199/se-2?accountid=14681>

Peterson, K. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: Zika funding deal advances, but flint aid fight remains. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-zika-funding-deal-advances-flint-aid/docview/1822324129/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 23). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1822324095/se-2?accountid=14681>

Passy, C. (2016, Sep 23). Dos toros is bullish on expansion. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/dos-toros-is-bullish-on-expansion/docview/1822324023/se-2?accountid=14681>

Wall, R., & Cameron, D. (2016, Sep 23). Business news: Aircraft subsidy war escalates --- WTO's airbus ruling brings the EU closer to punitive U.S. tariffs; boeing at risk, too. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-aircraft-subsidy-war-escalates-wtos/docview/1822324005/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 23). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822323984/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sparshott, J. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: Immigration study sees more pros than cons. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-immigration-study-sees-more-pros-than/docview/1822323565/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 23). City news: Port head says bridge figure was 'protected'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-port-head-says-bridge-figure-was/docview/1822323502/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lovett, I. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: Iraqi catholic church in U.S. torn by relocation efforts. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-iraqi-catholic-church-torn-relocation/docview/1822323435/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M., & Shallwani, P. (2016, Sep 23). City news: Weiner investigated over texts with teenager. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-weiner-investigated-over-texts-with/docview/1822323294/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lazo, A. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: Leaning condo tower raises alarm. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-leaning-condo-tower-raises-alarm/docview/1822323246/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M. (2016, Sep 23). Corruption crackdown: Cuomo sees reputation put on the line --- governor isn't accused of any wrongdoing, but ex-allies face charges; honesty is 'paramount'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/corruption-crackdown-cuomo-sees-reputation-put-on/docview/1822323237/se-2?accountid=14681>

Miller, J. W. (2016, Sep 23). Business news: U.S. steelmakers ready china complaints. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-steelmakers-ready-china/docview/1822323122/se-2?accountid=14681>

Devlin, B., & Shallwani, P. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: Wife of bombing suspect returns from the mideast. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-wife-bombing-suspect-returns-mideast/docview/1822323063/se-2?accountid=14681>

Armour, S. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: U.S. urged not to settle health insurers' suits. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-urged-not-settle-health-insurers-suits/docview/1822323048/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mahtani, S. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: Officer charged in tulsa shooting. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-officer-charged-tulsa-shooting/docview/1822323036/se-2?accountid=14681>

Higgins, T. (2016, Sep 23). Business news: Tesla sues michigan on dealer law. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-tesla-sues-michigan-on-dealer-law/docview/1822323014/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 23). Corruption crackdown: SUNY poly president faces state charges. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/corruption-crackdown-suny-poly-president-> faces/docview/1822322994/se-2?accountid=14681

Paletta, D. (2016, Sep 23). U.S. news: State-sponsored cyberattacks prompt debate. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-state-sponsored-cyberattacks-prompt/docview/1822322969/se-2?accountid=14681>

Finance watch. (2016, Sep 23). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/finance-watch/docview/1822322953/se-2?accountid=14681>

Fassihi, F. (2016, Sep 23). World news: Iran's leader chides U.S., saudi arabia. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-irans-leader-chides-u-s-saudi-arabia/docview/1822322952/se-2?accountid=14681>

Teachout, T. (2016, Sep 23). ARENA --- arts & entertainment: Working-class wonder. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-working-class-wonder/docview/1822321994/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gamerman, E. (2016, Sep 23). ARENA --- arts & entertainment: As the world streams --- viewers in the U.S. are obsessed with nordic thrillers, korean dramas and a british baking show; their choices are transforming the once-fragmented TV market into a global one. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-as-world-streams/docview/1822321972/se-2?accountid=14681>

Maloney, J. (2016, Sep 23). ARENA --- arts & entertainment -- books: How to lose friends and influence people. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-books-how-lose/docview/1822321817/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rabinowitz, D. (2016, Sep 23). ARENA --- arts & entertainment -- review: The candidates revealed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-review-candidates/docview/1822321745/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sweet, C. (2016, Sep 23). Business news: SolarCity is cutting costs --- solar-panel company drops TV advertising, switches to cheaper marketing tactics. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-solarcity-is-cutting-costs-solar/docview/1822321633/se-2?accountid=14681>

Include relevant autopsies in drug and therapy trials. (2016, Sep 23). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/include-relevant-autopsies-drug-therapy-trials/docview/1822317597/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bauerlein, V. (2016, Sep 22). U.S. news: Protests grip charlotte, N.C. --- demonstrations over a fatal police shooting turn violent for a second night. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-protests-grip-charlotte-n-c/docview/1822061358/se-2?accountid=14681>

Shallwani, P., & Devlin, B. (2016, Sep 22). U.S. news: Rahami allegedly built bombs in open --- investigators say suspect ordered parts on eBay and tested explosives in backyard. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-rahami-allegedly-built-bombs-open/docview/1822061338/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mahtani, S. (2016, Sep 22). U.S. news: Winners of 'genius grants' unveiled. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-winners-genius-grants-unveiled/docview/1822061162/se-2?accountid=14681>

Olson, B., & Rapoport, M. (2016, Sep 22). Business news: Oil industry, investors react to SEC's exxon climate-change probe. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-oil-industry-investors-react-secs/docview/1822061117/se-2?accountid=14681>

Robert, L. H. (2016, Sep 22). U.S. news: Early text uncovered in burned scroll. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-early-text-uncovered-burned-scroll/docview/1822061106/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M. (2016, Sep 22). City news: Blast damage aid planned. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-blast-damage-aid-planned/docview/1822061081/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bender, M. C., & Hackman, M. (2016, Sep 22). Election 2016: Trump questions police shooting. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-questions-police-shooting/docview/1822060955/se-2?accountid=14681>

Seetharaman, D. (2016, Sep 22). Business news: Zuckerberg fund to invest $3 billion --- the family aims to create technology that could hasten research on disease in the next decade. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-zuckerberg-fund-invest-3-billion/docview/1822060928/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business watch. (2016, Sep 22). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1822055117/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gee, K., Craymer, L., & Blumenstein, R. (2016, Sep 22). Business news: U.S. beef producers cautious on china plan. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-beef-producers-cautious-on/docview/1822055052/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Sep 22). City news: Connecticut to pay sikorsky for hires. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-connecticut-pay-sikorsky-hires/docview/1822055048/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 22). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1822055046/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gardner, R., Jr. (2016, Sep 22). City news -- urban gardner: Explosion left city wary but uncowed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-urban-gardner-explosion-left-wary/docview/1822055043/se-2?accountid=14681>

Shallwani, P. (2016, Sep 22). City news: Pair who stumbled across bomb sought. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-pair-who-stumbled-across-bomb-sought/docview/1822055037/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 22). City news: Ex-officers charged in beating. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-ex-officers-charged-beating/docview/1822055026/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 22). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822055017/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 22). City news: Port executive was told to reopen closed lanes. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-port-executive-was-told-reopen-closed/docview/1822055006/se-2?accountid=14681>

Pop, V. (2016, Sep 22). World news: Paris climate deal gains momentum. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-paris-climate-deal-gains-momentum/docview/1822027088/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 22). World news: Obama, netanyahu discuss strife. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-netanyahu-discuss-strife/docview/1822026096/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kanno-Youngs, Z., & Mann, T. (2016, Sep 22). U.S. news: Suspect not well known at mosque. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-suspect-not-well-known-at-mosque/docview/1822026033/se-2?accountid=14681>

Peterson, K., & Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 22). World news: Congress poised to let 9/11 families sue saudi arabia. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-congress-poised-let-9-11-families-sue/docview/1822026004/se-2?accountid=14681>

Tita, B., & Tangel, A. (2016, Sep 22). Business news: Machine-tool makers cut prices to lift sales. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-machine-tool-makers-cut-prices-lift/docview/1822025887/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jordan, M. (2016, Sep 22). U.S. news: Texas warns on refugee program. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-texas-warns-on-refugee-program/docview/1822025881/se-2?accountid=14681>

Strum, B. (2016, Sep 22). U.S. news: U.S. loses top school ranking to U.K.'s oxford. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-loses-top-school-ranking-k-oxford/docview/1822025866/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lubold, G., & Sonne, P. (2016, Sep 22). World news: U.S. military seeks more troops for iraq --- up to 500 would help prepare campaign to retake city of mosul from islamic state. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-military-seeks-more-troops-iraq-up/docview/1822025860/se-2?accountid=14681>

Robert gates is mistaken about donald trump. (2016, Sep 22). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/robert-gates-is-mistaken-about-donald-trump/docview/1822025768/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mahtani, S. (2016, Sep 21). U.S. news: Civil-rights probe opened in police shooting. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-civil-rights-probe-opened-police/docview/1821710556/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 21). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1821710388/se-2?accountid=14681>

Blumenstein, R. (2016, Sep 21). World news: Beijing to end ban on U.S. beef. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-beijing-end-ban-on-u-s-beef/docview/1821710329/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 21). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1821710064/se-2?accountid=14681>

Entous, A., Schwartz, F., & Grove, T. (2016, Sep 21). World news: U.S. says russia bombed syria aid convoy --- kerry, U.N. declare cease-fire isn't over despite monday strike that killed at least 12. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-says-russia-bombed-syria-aid/docview/1821710035/se-2?accountid=14681>

Connors, W. (2016, Sep 21). U.S. news: Two men in terror plots are sentenced. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-two-men-terror-plots-are-sentenced/docview/1821709391/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramachandran, S., & Knutson, R. (2016, Sep 21). Business news: Comcast plans wireless service to start in 2017. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-comcast-plans-wireless-service/docview/1821709357/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 21). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1821647912/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kendall, B. (2016, Sep 21). Business news: Appeals court tosses verdict, says china can set vitamin C pricing. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-appeals-court-tosses-verdict-says/docview/1821647905/se-2?accountid=14681>

Scism, L., & Gay, M. (2016, Sep 21). City news: Terrorism-insurance picture is uncertain in chelsea. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-terrorism-insurance-picture-is/docview/1821647846/se-2?accountid=14681>

Stynes, T. (2016, Sep 21). Business news: Allergan to acquire biotechs. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-allergan-acquire-biotechs/docview/1821647814/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bunge, J. (2016, Sep 21). Business news: Seed companies defend mergers in washington. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-seed-companies-defend-mergers/docview/1821647802/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 21). World news: Obama urges course shift for world in conflict. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-urges-course-shift-conflict/docview/1821647713/se-2?accountid=14681>

Trottman, M. (2016, Sep 21). Business news: States sue U.S. over new pay rule. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-states-sue-u-s-over-new-pay-rule/docview/1821647623/se-2?accountid=14681>

Harrison, D. (2016, Sep 21). U.S. news -- 5 things on.... fed officials' latest policy meeting. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-5-things-on-fed-officials-latest-policy/docview/1821647544/se-2?accountid=14681>

Stevis, M. (2016, Sep 21). World news: South sudan violence engulfs aid workers --- rapes, looting by soldiers rattle global community as nation moves toward brink. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-south-sudan-violence-engulfs-aid/docview/1821647471/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vieira, P. (2016, Sep 21). Business news: Enbridge won't appeal ruling. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-enbridge-wont-appeal-ruling/docview/1821647438/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jordan, M. (2016, Sep 21). World news: Illegal immigrant mix shifts --- number of people in the U.S. illegally levels off as total entering from mexico falls. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-illegal-immigrant-mix-shifts-number/docview/1821647422/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cullison, A. (2016, Sep 21). U.S. news: No single profile for 'lone wolf' attacker. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-no-single-profile-lone-wolf-attacker/docview/1821647327/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gershman, J. (2016, Sep 21). U.S. news: Suspect's ex-girlfriend seeks custody of child. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-suspects-ex-girlfriend-seeks-> custody/docview/1821647053/se-2?accountid=14681

Fassihi, F., Raydan, N., & Schwartz, F. (2016, Sep 20). World news: Syria aid convoy struck as truce falters --- trucks were delivering assistance on the day the regime said the cease-fire was over. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syria-aid-convoy-struck-as-truce/docview/1821060902/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 20). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1820991238/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 20). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1820990518/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hook, J., & Bender, M. C. (2016, Sep 20). Trump, clinton clash on security. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-clinton-clash-on-security/docview/1820990448/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 20). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1820990442/se-2?accountid=14681>

Pop, V., & Fassihi, F. (2016, Sep 20). World news: U.N. delays negotiations on refugee pact until 2018. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-n-delays-negotiations-on-refugee/docview/1820990420/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business watch. (2016, Sep 20). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1820990334/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hollander, S. (2016, Sep 20). Region is wary but remains resolute --- after weekend blast, commuters remove their earphones, but tourists are unfazed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/region-is-wary-remains-resolute-after-weekend/docview/1820990294/se-2?accountid=14681>

Orden, E. (2016, Sep 20). Region is wary but remains resolute --- word 'terrorism' puts cuomo and de blasio on opposite ends again, but both are criticized. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/region-is-wary-remains-resolute-word-terrorism/docview/1820990229/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gale, A. (2016, Sep 20). World news: North korea says it tested a rocket engine. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-north-korea-says-tested-rocket-engine/docview/1820990070/se-2?accountid=14681>

Barrett, J. (2016, Sep 20). U.S. news: No ties found between mall attacker and islamic state. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-no-ties-found-between-mall-attacker/docview/1820990046/se-2?accountid=14681>

Smith, J. (2016, Sep 20). City news: Park advocates name new head. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-park-advocates-name-new-head/docview/1820990004/se-2?accountid=14681>

Passy, C. (2016, Sep 20). City news: Danny meyer puts his next spot in bryant park. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-danny-meyer-puts-his-next-spot-bryant/docview/1820989998/se-2?accountid=14681>

Knutson, R. (2016, Sep 20). U.S. news: Alerts, now basic, may expand. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-alerts-now-basic-may-expand/docview/1820989932/se-2?accountid=14681>

Elinson, Z., & Hong, N. (2016, Sep 20). U.S. news: Police seek more help in terror fight --- attacks on random, low-profile targets raise concern about other 'soft' locales. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-police-seek-more-help-terror-fight/docview/1820989922/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chaudhuri, S. (2016, Sep 20). Business news: Burberry CEO delivers swan song --- christopher bailey will step down amid drop in sales and failure to expand in the U.S. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-burberry-ceo-delivers-swan-song/docview/1820989813/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jordan, M. (2016, Sep 20). U.S. news: Businesses step up to aid refugees. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-businesses-step-up-aid-refugees/docview/1820989802/se-2?accountid=14681>

Schonhardt, S. (2016, Sep 20). World news: Southeast asia fires tied to deaths --- U.S. study says smoke from blazes set to clear land for crops killed more than 100,000. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-southeast-asia-fires-tied-deaths-u-s/docview/1820989726/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chaudhuri, S., & Terlep, S. (2016, Sep 20). Business news: Unilever buys seventh generation. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-unilever-buys-seventh-generation/docview/1820989685/se-2?accountid=14681>

Amiri, E., & Donati, J. (2016, Sep 20). World news: U.S. strikes said to hit afghan police. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-strikes-said-hit-afghan-police/docview/1820989663/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kamp, J. (2016, Sep 20). U.S. news: Zika fears abate in part of miami. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-zika-fears-abate-part-miami/docview/1820989617/se-2?accountid=14681>

Troianovski, A. (2016, Sep 20). World news: Merkel admits errors on migrants. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-merkel-admits-errors-on-migrants/docview/1820989478/se-2?accountid=14681>

Evans, M. (2016, Sep 20). U.S. news: Antibiotics use in hospitals grows. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-antibiotics-use-hospitals-grows/docview/1820989463/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mann, T., & Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 20). U.S. news: Prosecutors say christie was told of traffic jams. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-prosecutors-say-christie-was-told/docview/1820989442/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abi-Habib, M., Lubold, G., & Hodge, N. (2016, Sep 19). American airstrike threatens syrian cease-fire. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/american-airstrike-threatens-syrian-cease-fire/docview/1820570209/se-2?accountid=14681>

Alessi, C. (2016, Sep 19). Business news: Bayer seeks to offset rules --- europe bans many GMOs, but monsanto acquisition offers foothold in U.S. market. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-bayer-seeks-offset-rules-europe/docview/1820569506/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

Pasztor, A. (2016, Sep 19). Business news: As satellites multiply, officials seek ways to avoid collisions. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-as-satellites-multiply-officials/docview/1820567417/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 19). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1820567033/se-2?accountid=14681>

Barrett, J., Mahtani, S., & Campo-Flores, A. (2016, Sep 19). U.S. news: Minnesota city grapples with stabbings at mall. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-minnesota-city-grapples-with-stabbings/docview/1820567030/se-2?accountid=14681>

Viswanatha, A. (2016, Sep 19). Election 2016: Trump backers try to pin birtherism on clinton. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-backers-try-pin-birtherism-on/docview/1820567029/se-2?accountid=14681>

Shallwani, P., & Devlin, B. (2016, Sep 19). U.S. news: New york officials seek motive. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-york-officials-seek-motive/docview/1820567026/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 19). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1820567024/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: Economic calendar. (2016, Sep 19). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1820567018/se-2?accountid=14681>

Wexler, A. (2016, Sep 19). Business news: Taking aim at craigslist --- africa's biggest company pushes into the U.S. and wants to dethrone online-classified leader. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-taking-aim-at-craigslist-africas/docview/1820546474/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lubold, G., & Hodge, N. (2016, Sep 19). World news: U.S. alerted russia before strike. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-alerted-russia-before-strike/docview/1820546417/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gardner, R., Jr. (2016, Sep 19). City news -- urban gardner: Dogs sprung after good behavior help veterans cope. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-urban-gardner-dogs-sprung-after-good/docview/1820546408/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ferris-Rotman, A. (2016, Sep 19). World news: Putin uses vote to bolster mandate --- russian president shrugs off steep drop in turnout; 'what is important is the result'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-putin-uses-vote-bolster-mandate/docview/1820546393/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 19). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1820546391/se-2?accountid=14681>

Palazzolo, J. (2016, Sep 19). U.S. news: D.C. gun law faces challenges in court. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-d-c-gun-law-faces-challenges-court/docview/1820546352/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calvert, S., & Campo-Flores, A. (2016, Sep 19). U.S. news: Rampage probed in philadelphia. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-rampage-probed-> philadelphia/docview/1820546333/se-2?accountid=14681

Calvert, S. (2016, Sep 19). U.S. news: Baltimore struggles to oust monuments to confederates. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-baltimore-struggles-oust-monuments/docview/1820546306/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M. (2016, Sep 19). City news: Republican club at cornell causes rift with pick. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-republican-club-at-cornell-causes-rift/docview/1820546300/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M., & Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 19). City news: Leaders struggle to unite after blast. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-leaders-struggle-unite-after-blast/docview/1820546238/se-2?accountid=14681>

Frosch, D., & Elinson, Z. (2016, Sep 19). U.S. news: New mexico police shooting trial to start. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-mexico-police-shooting-trial-start/docview/1820546231/se-2?accountid=14681>

Binkley, C. (2016, Sep 19). Trends (A special report) --- the new fashion mantra for office attire: Comfort: As the line blurs between our professional and personal lives, so have the clothes we wear. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trends-special-report-new-fashion-mantra-office/docview/1820545500/se-2?accountid=14681>

Burton, T. M. (2016, Sep 17). U.S. news: Clinical-trial rules take aim at transparency. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-clinical-trial-rules-take-aim-at/docview/1821720502/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mann, T. (2016, Sep 17). City news: State tells EPA GE's cleanup isn't finished. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-state-tells-epa-ge-cleanup-isnt/docview/1821720305/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1821719879/se-2?accountid=14681>

Zumbrun, J. (2016, Sep 17). U.S. news: Household net worth rises to record. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-household-net-worth-rises-record/docview/1821719716/se-2?accountid=14681>

King, K. (2016, Sep 17). City news: N.J. lawmaker has plan to end road impasse. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-n-j-lawmaker-has-plan-end-road-impasse/docview/1821709053/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kuriloff, A. (2016, Sep 17). Business news: Tech sector gets boost from apple. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-tech-sector-gets-boost-apple/docview/1821709020/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1821708949/se-2?accountid=14681>

Leubsdorf, B. (2016, Sep 17). U.S. news: Inflation gained steam in august. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-inflation-gained-steam-august/docview/1821708794/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gold, R., & Huang, D. (2016, Sep 17). Stocks fall but end week higher --- financial shares follow deutsche bank down; energy sector sinks as oil hits one-month low. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-fall-end-week-higher-financial-shares/docview/1821708280/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1821708248/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1821708172/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mann, T. (2016, Sep 17). Business news: Jet-engine maker falls short of goal. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-jet-engine-maker-falls-short-goal/docview/1820252600/se-2?accountid=14681>

Epstein, R. J., & Bender, M. C. (2016, Sep 17). Election 2016: Trump backs off A 'birther' claim. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-backs-off-birther-claim/docview/1820251815/se-2?accountid=14681>

Simon, R. (2016, Sep 17). U.S. news: After a disaster, speed matters. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-after-disaster-speed-matters/docview/1820251810/se-2?accountid=14681>

OFF DUTY --- the off duty 50: Fifty reasons fall is the best season --- from sweater weather to fondue, hammock camping and suddenly empty beaches, here's why we're glad summer is history. (2016, Sep 17). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/off-duty-50-fifty-reasons-fall-is-best-season/docview/1820251807/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kadet, A. (2016, Sep 17). City news -- metro money: At 100 years old, this vintage VIP ain't misbehavin'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-metro-money-at-100-years-old-this/docview/1820251795/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hufford, A. (2016, Sep 17). Business news: Battery scare on U.S. flight. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-battery-scare-on-u-s-flight/docview/1820251787/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sonne, P. (2016, Sep 17). World news: Propaganda chief killed by airstrike, U.S. says. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-propaganda-chief-killed-airstrike-u-s/docview/1820251747/se-2?accountid=14681>

Olivarez-Giles, N., Dou, E., & Cherney, M. (2016, Sep 17). Business news: Shoppers click 'buy' for iPhone 7. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-shoppers-click-buy-iphone-7/docview/1820251735/se-2?accountid=14681>

Moss, T. (2016, Sep 17). World news: Duterte shift on U.S. worries army. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-duterte-shift-on-u-s-worries-army/docview/1820251714/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sider, A. (2016, Sep 17). U.S. news: Gasoline spill sparks federal probe. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-gasoline-spill-sparks-federal-probe/docview/1820251692/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abi-Habib, M. (2016, Sep 17). World news: Syrian refugees fear assad will remain --- opposition in turkey worries U.S. is no longer pushing that president leave office. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syrian-refugees-fear-assad-will-> remain/docview/1820251685/se-2?accountid=14681

McWhirter, C., & Simon, R. (2016, Sep 17). U.S. news: Flood-hit firms battle to rebuild --- many companies in the stricken area face steep recovery costs, even with insurance. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-flood-hit-firms-battle-rebuild-many/docview/1820251678/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jo, C. M. (2016, Sep 17). U.S. news -- the numbers: Earthquake 'magnitude' misses the mark. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-numbers-earthquake-magnitude-misses-mark/docview/1820251665/se-2?accountid=14681>

Pop, V., & Hinshaw, D. (2016, Sep 17). World news: Bloc remains split on migration, growth --- european leaders urge cooperation on borders, economy; warn against populist solutions. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bloc-remains-split-on-migration-growth/docview/1820251664/se-2?accountid=14681>

Tavris, C. (2016, Sep 17). REVIEW --- books: The thought that counts --- the most important part of any argument is preparing the audience to be convinced by it. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-books-thought-that-counts-most-important/docview/1820251380/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brett Finlay, Marie-Claire Arrieta, B., Finlay, B. B., & Marie-Claire Arrieta. (2016, Sep 17). REVIEW --- good & dirty --- our war against microbes has created serious health problems; the remedy: Get dirty, eat better and stop overusing antibiotics. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-good-amp-dirty-our-war-against-microbes/docview/1820251372/se-2?accountid=14681>

Meghan, C. G. (2016, Sep 17). REVIEW --- books -- children's books: Unexpected friends. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-books-childrens-unexpected-friends/docview/1820251323/se-2?accountid=14681>

Akst, D. (2016, Sep 17). REVIEW --- play: News quiz. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-play-news-quiz/docview/1820251302/se-2?accountid=14681>

Peterson, K., & FitzGerald, D. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: Internet plan slows spending accord. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-internet-plan-slows-spending-accord/docview/1819678635/se-2?accountid=14681>

Morath, E. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: Prospects for economic surge ebb --- retail sales, jobless claims, manufacturing data damp optimism for strong year-end. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-prospects-economic-surge-ebb-retail/docview/1819678535/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rubin, R. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: Attempt to impeach IRS chief is delayed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-attempt-impeach-irs-chief-is-delayed/docview/1819678444/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business watch. (2016, Sep 16). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1819678424/se-2?accountid=14681>

Paletta, D. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: President urged not to pardon snowden. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-president-urged-not-pardon-snowden/docview/1819678381/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 16). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1819678378/se-2?accountid=14681>

Higgins, T. (2016, Sep 16). Business news: Michigan denies tesla's request for dealership. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-michigan-denies-teslas-request/docview/1819678363/se-2?accountid=14681>

Aruna Viswanatha, Jenny Strasburg, , E. H., Viswanatha, A., Strasburg, J., & Henning, E. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. seeks heavy fine for deutsche --- justice department proposes $14 billion mortgage-securities probe settlement. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-seeks-heavy-fine-deutsche-justice-department/docview/1819678340/se-2?accountid=14681>

World news: World watch. (2016, Sep 16). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1819678285/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calfas, J. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: Fire crews fight over pay --- state firefighters in california seek wages more in line with city and local teams. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fire-crews-fight-over-pay-state/docview/1819678242/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 16). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1819678169/se-2?accountid=14681>

Scheck, J., Miller, J. W., & Patterson, S. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. chases chinese metals trail. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-chases-chinese-metals-trail/docview/1819678129/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brody, L. (2016, Sep 16). City news: Major crimes in city schools hit a new low. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-major-crimes-schools-hit-new-low/docview/1819621589/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brody, L. (2016, Sep 16). Christie seeks schools shake-up --- governor asks court to sidestep tenure law and cap state funding for struggling districts. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/christie-seeks-schools-shake-up-governor-asks/docview/1819621560/se-2?accountid=14681>

Maher, K. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: Ohio boy with BB gun killed by police. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-ohio-boy-with-bb-gun-killed-police/docview/1819621042/se-2?accountid=14681>

Geiger, F. (2016, Sep 16). World news: Germany falters in bid to employ migrants --- businesses answer call to hire but struggle to find asylum seekers with the right skills. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-germany-falters-bid-employ-migrants/docview/1819620977/se-2?accountid=14681>

Shallwani, P., & Kanno-Youngs, Z. (2016, Sep 16). City news: NYPD officers shoot man wielding cleaver. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-nypd-officers-shoot-man-wielding/docview/1819620960/se-2?accountid=14681>

Frosch, D. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: Sandra bland's family settles suit. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-sandra-blands-family-settles-suit/docview/1819620948/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Sep 16). City news: Connecticut school ruling appealed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-connecticut-school-ruling-appealed/docview/1819620875/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cullison, A. (2016, Sep 16). World news: Philippine diplomat reassures on ties, defends president. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-philippine-diplomat-reassures-on-ties/docview/1819620852/se-2?accountid=14681>

King, K. (2016, Sep 16). City news: Housing in newark is looking up --- two apartment towers are planned in the city, the first such projects in more than 40 years. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-housing-newark-is-looking-up-two/docview/1819620761/se-2?accountid=14681>

Wall, R., & Cameron, D. (2016, Sep 16). Business news: Boeing calls foul on jet contract --- plane maker says denmark's choice of lockheed fighter was deeply flawed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-boeing-calls-foul-on-jet-contract/docview/1819620708/se-2?accountid=14681>

Steele, A., & Trachtenberg, J. A. (2016, Sep 16). Business news: New CEO at time inc. selects digital boss as operating chief. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-new-ceo-at-time-inc-selects-digital/docview/1819620636/se-2?accountid=14681>

Winslow, R. (2016, Sep 16). U.S. news: Bloomberg bets big on research. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-bloomberg-bets-big-on-research/docview/1819620630/se-2?accountid=14681>

Morgenstern, J. (2016, Sep 16). ARENA --- morgenstern on film -- review -- 'snowden': A complex life turned to stone. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-morgenstern-on-film-review-snowden-complex/docview/1819620618/se-2?accountid=14681>

Knutsen, C. (2016, Sep 16). ARENA --- arts & entertainment -- memoir: 'avid reader': A veteran editor shares his war stories. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-memoir-avid-reader/docview/1819620593/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gasparro, A. (2016, Sep 16). Business news: Maker of instant ramen dials back the salt. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-maker-instant-ramen-dials-back-salt/docview/1819620584/se-2?accountid=14681>

Raydan, N., & Norman, L. (2016, Sep 15). World news: Aleppo aid sits at border as cease-fire is extended. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-aleppo-aid-sits-at-border-as-cess/docview/1819406905/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business news: Business watch. (2016, Sep 15). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-watch/docview/1819285598/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 15). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1819285588/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 15). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1819285539/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 15). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1819285507/se-2?accountid=14681>

Orden, E. (2016, Sep 15). City news: GOP leaders pick nominee after race is won by dead man. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-gop-leaders-pick-nominee-after-race-is/docview/1819285455/se-2?accountid=14681>

Moss, T. (2016, Sep 15). World news: Duterte confounds american allies --- philippine president's blunt remarks toward U.S. leave many in region pondering implications. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-duterte-confounds-american-allies/docview/1819285407/se-2?accountid=14681>

Tau, B., & Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 15). World news: U.S. to end sanctions against myanmar --- move comes despite prior demand to curb military influence and change constitution. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-end-sanctions-against-myanmar-move/docview/1819285354/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 15). City news: Jury is selected for bridge trial. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-jury-is-selected-bridge-trial/docview/1819285350/se-2?accountid=14681>

Grove, T. (2016, Sep 15). World news: Russian patriotism, by the glass --- tensions with west spur domestic wine revival; annexing imperial vineyards. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russian-patriotism-glass-tensions-with/docview/1819285309/se-2?accountid=14681>

Tau, B., & Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 15). World news: Obama looks to cement key policy objective. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-looks-cement-key-policy/docview/1819285304/se-2?accountid=14681>

Beck, M. (2016, Sep 15). U.S. news: Early prostate cancer threat seen as low. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-early-prostate-cancer-threat-seen-as-low/docview/1819285299/se-2?accountid=14681>

Solomon, J., & Cullison, A. (2016, Sep 15). World news: U.S. seeks strategy to sustain relations. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-seeks-strategy-sustain-relations/docview/1819285260/se-2?accountid=14681>

MacMillan, T. (2016, Sep 15). City news: Special primary is canceled. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-special-primary-is-canceled/docview/1819285259/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gold, R., & Huang, D. (2016, Sep 15). Stocks inch lower with trading calm --- bonds rebound as investors wait for direction at meetings of central bankers. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-inch-lower-with-trading-calm-bonds-rebound/docview/1819285248/se-2?accountid=14681>

Koh, Y. (2016, Sep 15). WSJ.D technology: Twitter adds TV app to draw users --- social-media service is making live streaming focus of its strategy to revive growth. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/wsj-d-technology-twitter-adds-tv-app-draw-users/docview/1819285207/se-2?accountid=14681>

Baer, J. (2016, Sep 15). Pimco, gross lock horns in filings. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/pimco-gross-lock-horns-filings/docview/1819285200/se-2?accountid=14681>

Maher, K. (2016, Sep 15). U.S. news: Missouri levee raises questions. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-missouri-levee-raises-questions/docview/1819285199/se-2?accountid=14681>

Palazzolo, J., & Emshwiller, J. R. (2016, Sep 15). U.S. news: Prison protests hit states --- inmates at facilities in several states hold strikes over pay, health care, living conditions. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-prison-protests-hit-states-inmates-at/docview/1819285147/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cherney, M. (2016, Sep 15). Business news: Vineyards struggle with climate --- rising temperatures are making grapes ripen faster, altering flavor, australian vintners say. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from

<https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-vineyards-struggle-with-climate/docview/1819278192/se-2?accountid=14681>

Binkley, C. (2016, Sep 15). Style & travel -- on style: Get ready for fashion's new personality --- designers take risks at new york fashion week; hello to crushed velvet, powder pink and sequins. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/style-amp-travel-on-get-ready-fashions-new/docview/1819277933/se-2?accountid=14681>

Knutson, R. (2016, Sep 14). City news: Verizon, city spar over cable rollout. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-verizon-spar-over-cable-rollout/docview/1819082740/se-2?accountid=14681>

Derby, M. S. (2016, Sep 14). U.S. news: President of atlanta fed to step down. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-president-atlanta-fed-step-down/docview/1819082737/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kanno-Youngs, Z., & Shallwani, P. (2016, Sep 14). City news: Woman killed in front of her baby. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-woman-killed-front-her-baby/docview/1819082735/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bauerlein, V., & Beaton, A. (2016, Sep 14). U.S. news: North carolina boycott may grow. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-north-carolina-boycott-may-grow/docview/1819082719/se-2?accountid=14681>

Langley, M. (2016, Sep 14). Trump, team recast his image --- nominee shifts from raucous rallies to 'presidential' appearances but still sometimes ad libs. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-team-recast-his-image-nominee-shifts/docview/1819082706/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abdulrahim, R., & Raydan, N. (2016, Sep 14). World news: Syria sieges drive out sunni population --- U.N., opposition accuse assad regime of forced evacuations to divide country. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syria-sieges-drive-out-sunni/docview/1819082697/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mills, L., & Futterman, M. (2016, Sep 14). World news: Russians stole olympians' data. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russians-stole-olympians-data/docview/1819081605/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mitchell, J. (2016, Sep 14). U.S. news: Groups push for debt relief --- farmers, real-estate agents and others say student-loan levels threaten industries. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-groups-push-debt-relief-farmers-real/docview/1819079737/se-2?accountid=14681>

Moss, T. (2016, Sep 14). World news: U.S. ally to buy weapons from adversaries --- philippine leader says he wants to work with russia and china; 'I do not like the americans'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-ally-buy-weapons-adversaries/docview/1819079732/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 14). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1819079726/se-2?accountid=14681>

Carlton, J. (2016, Sep 14). U.S. news: Threats detailed at oregon trial. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-threats-detailed-at-oregon-trial/docview/1819079724/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mauldin, W. (2016, Sep 14). U.S. news: Obama makes late push for trade vote. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-makes-late-push-trade-vote/docview/1819079716/se-2?accountid=14681>

World news: World watch. (2016, Sep 14). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1819079706/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jordan, M. (2016, Sep 14). U.S. news: Obama to increase refugees admitted. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-increase-refugees-admitted/docview/1819079703/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lubold, G. (2016, Sep 14). World news: Iran threatened to shoot down american spy planes. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-iran-threatened-shoot-down-american/docview/1819079698/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 14). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1819079690/se-2?accountid=14681>

Stoll, J. D. (2016, Sep 14). Business news: VW uncertain on a U.S. future for its diesel cars. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-vw-uncertain-on-u-s-future-diesel/docview/1819079680/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 14). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1819079664/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 14). Judge grills potential bridge jurors --- pool whittled down as questions center on travel over span, knowledge of case. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/judge-grills-potential-bridge-jurors-pool/docview/1819079656/se-2?accountid=14681>

Fung, E. (2016, Sep 14). More builders say no to parking lots. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/more-builders-say-no-parking-lots/docview/1819036575/se-2?accountid=14681>

Coker, M. (2016, Sep 14). World news: Turkey asks U.S. to arrest cleric. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-turkey-asks-u-s-arrest-cleric/docview/1819036545/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chan, C. (2016, Sep 14). Dollar-bond issues soaring. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/dollar-bond-issues-soaring/docview/1819036284/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bauerlein, V. (2016, Sep 13). U.S. news: NCAA to relocate events over law. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-ncaa-relocate-events-over-law/docview/1818654655/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 13). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1818654554/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 13). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1818654392/se-2?accountid=14681>

Morath, E. (2016, Sep 13). U.S. news: CEOs see sluggish growth. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-ceos-see-sluggish-growth/docview/1818654128/se-2?accountid=14681>

Henning, E. (2016, Sep 13). Business news: Industrial gas giants end talks on merger. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-industrial-gas-giants-end-talks-on/docview/1818654025/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business watch. (2016, Sep 13). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1818653915/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jun, K. (2016, Sep 13). Business news: Hanjin restarts freight deliveries --- ships stranded by financial woes begin to unload goods with help from korean air. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hanjin-restarts-freight-deliveries/docview/1818653663/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 13). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1818653641/se-2?accountid=14681>

Emshwiller, J. R. (2016, Sep 13). U.S. news: EPA proposes new water rules for nuclear emergencies. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-epa-proposes-new-water-rules-nuclear/docview/1818592074/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 13). City news: Nonprofit loses records ruling. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-nonprofit-loses-records-ruling/docview/1818592073/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kesling, B. (2016, Sep 13). World news: Bodies of U.S. fighters head home. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bodies-u-s-fighters-head-home/docview/1818592059/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abi-Habib, M., Schwartz, F., & Raydan, N. (2016, Sep 13). Syrian cease-fire gets fitful start. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/syrian-cess-fire-gets-fitful-start/docview/1818591929/se-2?accountid=14681>

Larano, C. (2016, Sep 13). World news: Duterte says U.S. advisers should leave --- philippine president suggests presence of american military invites extremism. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-duterte-says-u-s-advisers-should-leave/docview/1818591781/se-2?accountid=14681>

Palazzolo, J., & Elinson, Z. (2016, Sep 13). U.S. news: Inmate numbers climb back up --- after drops following new criminal justice laws, incarceration rates are rebounding. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-inmate-numbers-climb-back-up-after-cracked/docview/1818591719/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brody, L. (2016, Sep 13). City news: Attorney presses yeshiva changes. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-attorney-presses-yeshiva-changes/docview/1818591699/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ostrower, J. (2016, Sep 13). Business news: Southwest incident linked to cracked blade. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-southwest-incident-linked-cracked/docview/1818590427/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 12). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1818304161/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rebecca Davis O'Brien. (2016, Sep 12). U.S. news: NFL protest aren't widespread. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-nfl-protest-arent-widespread/docview/1818284706/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abi-Habib, M., & Raydan, N. (2016, Sep 12). World news: Rebel threat poses challenge to cease-fire in syria --- former al qaeda affiliate aims to rally other factions as U.S.- russia plan proceeds. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-rebel-threat-poses-challenge-cease/docview/1818284685/se-2?accountid=14681>

Raskin, A. (2016, Sep 12). Secondary falters as jets drop opener --- new york got some pleasant surprises in sunday's season-opening loss, but the secondary wasn't up to stopping cincinnati's passing game. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/secondary-falters-as-jets-drop-opener-new-york/docview/1818284680/se-2?accountid=14681>

Strum, B. (2016, Sep 12). U.S. news: Stretch of chicago river to get $1.5 billion revamp. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-stretch-chicago-river-get-1-5-billion/docview/1818284657/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 12). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1818284655/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 12). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1818284606/se-2?accountid=14681>

Aresu Eqbali, , A. F., Eqbali, A., & Fitch, A. (2016, Sep 12). World news: Iran denies harassment of U.S. ships. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-iran-denies-harassment-u-s-ships/docview/1818284577/se-2?accountid=14681>

Morales, M. (2016, Sep 12). Students injured in deck collapse. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/students-injured-deck-collapse/docview/1818284569/se-2?accountid=14681>

Zhong, R. (2016, Sep 12). World news: Summer of unrest grips kashmir. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-summer-unrest-grips-kashmir/docview/1818284519/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: Economic calendar. (2016, Sep 12). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1818284502/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gale, A. (2016, Sep 12). World news: Allies lack avenues to penalize pyongyang. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-allies-lack-avenues-penalize-pyongyang/docview/1818284488/se-2?accountid=14681>

Carey, S. (2016, Sep 12). Business news: Airlines offer more coach choices --- U.S. carriers expand categories to compete with discounters and increase revenue. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-airlines-offer-more-coach-choices-u/docview/1818284465/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C., Sharp, S., & Kanno-Youngs, Z. (2016, Sep 12). City news: 9/11 families find comfort in sharing their grief. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-9-11-families-find-comfort-sharing/docview/1818284445/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. is already a signatory to test ban treaty. (2016, Sep 12). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-is-already-signatory-test-ban-treaty/docview/1818283732/se-2?accountid=14681>

Nagesh, G. (2016, Sep 12). Business news: GM's eye-tracking tech aims to keep drivers alert. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gms-eye-tracking-tech-aims-> keep/docview/1818283726/se-2?accountid=14681

Carlton, J. (2016, Sep 12). U.S. news: First trial in oregon occupation set to start. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-first-trial-oregon-occupation-set-start/docview/1818283667/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C., Sharp, S., & Kanno-Youngs, Z. (2016, Sep 12). U.S. news: At memorials, past is present for families --- ceremonies mark 15th anniversary of 9/11; 'it's another way to get a little bit closer'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-at-memorials-past-is-present-families/docview/1818283572/se-2?accountid=14681>

Blackman, A. (2016, Sep 12). Wealth management (A special report) --- money and happiness: A surprising twist: It may not be about how much wealth you have, but how much cash. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/wealth-management-special-report-money-happiness/docview/1818283524/se-2?accountid=14681>

Glazer, E. (2016, Sep 10). At wells, A solid image is at risk. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/at-wells-solid-image-is-risk/docview/1818660967/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 10). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1818657380/se-2?accountid=14681>

Page, J., & Gale, A. (2016, Sep 10). World news: U.S.-china tensions center on koreas --- washington's plan to provide seoul with missile defense raises hackles in beijing. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-china-tensions-center-on-koreas/docview/1818657163/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gale, A., Lee, C. E., & Lubold, G. (2016, Sep 10). Nuclear test puts pressure on U.S. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/nuclear-test-puts-pressure-on-u-s/docview/1818308193/se-2?accountid=14681>

Maher, K., & Sider, A. (2016, Sep 10). U.S. news: U.S. agencies order pipeline work halted. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-agencies-order-pipeline-work-halted/docview/1818000034/se-2?accountid=14681>

Peterson, K., & McKay, B. (2016, Sep 10). U.S. news: Zika funding impasse nears breakthrough. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-zika-funding-impasse-nears-breakthrough/docview/1818000029/se-2?accountid=14681>

MacMillan, T. (2016, Sep 10). City news: For 9/11, sorrow over loss, triumph over return --- police march to honor officers who perished; mayor hails agencies' move to WTC tower. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-9-11-sorrow-over-loss-triumph-return/docview/1818000021/se-2?accountid=14681>

Carlton, J. (2016, Sep 10). U.S. news: Municipal park privatizations fuel conflicts. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-municipal-park-privatizations-fuel/docview/1818000001/se-2?accountid=14681>

Zuckerman, G. (2016, Sep 10). Returning to the lost towers --- harley di nardo couldn't grieve for his sister -- until he decided to reconstruct her last moments. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/returning-lost-towers-harley-di-nardo-couldnt/docview/1817999998/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 10). City news: Too many no-shows force council panel to call it a day. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-too-many-no-shows-force-council->

panel/docview/1817999989/se-2?accountid=14681

King, K. (2016, Sep 10). U.S. news: Court overturns bias case conviction. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-court-overturns-bias-case-conviction/docview/1817999974/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 10). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1817999973/se-2?accountid=14681>

Schwartz, F., & Sonne, P. (2016, Sep 10). World news: Syria cease-fire accord reached. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syria-cease-fire-accord-reached/docview/1817999963/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rebecca Davis O'Brien, Jim Chairusmi, , M. F., Rebecca Davis O'Brien, Chairusmi, J., & Futterman, M. (2016, Sep 10). U.S. news: NFL prepares for pregame protests during anthem. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-nfl-prepares-pregame-protests-during/docview/1817999960/se-2?accountid=14681>

Horobin, W. (2016, Sep 10). Business news: France's total expands in texas. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-frances-total-expands-texas/docview/1817999945/se-2?accountid=14681>

Spector, M. (2016, Sep 10). Business news: GM referral program spurs recall. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-referral-program-spurs-recall/docview/1817999845/se-2?accountid=14681>

Nassauer, S., & Rana, P. (2016, Sep 10). Business news: Wal-mart pulls 'egyptian cotton' sheets. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-wal-mart-pulls-egyptian-cotton/docview/1817999733/se-2?accountid=14681>

Scott Patterson, John W. Miller, Chuin-Wei Yap, Patterson, S., Miller, J. W., & Chuin-Wei Yap. (2016, Sep 09). Mexican metal cache linked to china mogul --- U.S. executives contend aluminum magnate gamed global trade system. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/mexican-metal-cache-linked-china-mogul-u-s/docview/1817792480/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kesling, B., & Lubold, G. (2016, Sep 09). World news: U.S. gets ready for new iraq offensive --- additional troops sent to bolster campaign to reclaim mosul; october battle anticipated. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-gets-ready-new-iraq-offensive/docview/1817792090/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hufford, A. (2016, Sep 09). Business news: Pulte chooses a new CEO. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-pulte-chooses-new-ceo/docview/1817745517/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 09). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1817745466/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 09). World news: Obama lays out tough to-do list for final stretch. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-lays-out-tough-do-list-final/docview/1817743809/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rogers, C., & Steele, A. (2016, Sep 09). Business news: Ford cuts guidance on recall charges. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ford-cuts-guidance-on-recall/docview/1817743805/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 09). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1817743717/se-2?accountid=14681>

Whittall, C., & Huang, D. (2016, Sep 09). Stocks steady as ECB holds fire --- technology shares lead modest declines in U.S., while market in europe edges down. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-steady-as-ecb-holds-fire-technology-shares/docview/1817742123/se-2?accountid=14681>

Devlin, B. (2016, Sep 09). U.S. news: FBI arrests two men in breaches at CIA, justice. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fbi-arrests-two-men-breaches-at-cia/docview/1817730059/se-2?accountid=14681>

Laura Meckler, Colleen, M. N., Meckler, L., & Colleen, M. N. (2016, Sep 09). Election 2016: Clinton aims at positive message --- democrat, on attack of late, is advised to pivot and give people reasons to back her. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-clinton-aims-at-positive-message/docview/1817729860/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lubold, G., & Sonne, P. (2016, Sep 09). U.S. news: Charges sought in muslim recruit's death --- investigators call for action against up to 20 marines in incident on parris island in march. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-charges-sought-muslim-recruits-death/docview/1817729855/se-2?accountid=14681>

Silverman, R. E. (2016, Sep 09). Business news: Deloitte says it will offer leave for range of caregiving needs. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-deloitte-says-will-offer-leave/docview/1817729815/se-2?accountid=14681>

Baskin, B., & Chao, L. (2016, Sep 09). Business news: Founder of trucking firm swift to retire. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-founder-trucking-firm-swift-retire/docview/1817729811/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 09). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1817729747/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sonne, P. (2016, Sep 09). U.S. news: Republican senators decry obama's nuclear ban effort. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-republican-senators-decry-obamas-nuclear/docview/1817729737/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lubold, G. (2016, Sep 09). World news: U.S. hostage rescue in afghanistan failed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-hostage-rescue-afghanistan-failed/docview/1817729716/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 09). City news: Bloomberg backs ex-aide in race. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-bloomberg-backs-ex-aide-race/docview/1817729703/se-2?accountid=14681>

Paletta, D., & Nicholas, P. (2016, Sep 09). Election 2016: Nominees grapple with reaction to forum comments. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-nominees-grapple-with-reaction/docview/1817729694/se-2?accountid=14681>

Emshwiller, J. R., & Lazo, A. (2016, Sep 09). U.S. news: California bolsters emissions laws. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-california-bolsters-emissions-laws/docview/1817729654/se-2?accountid=14681>

Zekaria, S., & Clark, S. (2016, Sep 09). Business news: Formula one travels over tough course --- liberty media deal steers racing circuit to new U.S. push as global following flags. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from

<https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-formula-one-travels-over-tough/docview/1817729652/se-2?accountid=14681>

Steele, A. (2016, Sep 09). Business news: Walgreens to divest additional stores. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-walgreens-divest-additional-stores/docview/1817729645/se-2?accountid=14681>

Boston, W. (2016, Sep 09). Business news: Meeting ties bosch CEO to VW chief. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-meeting-ties-bosch-ceo-vw-chief/docview/1817729613/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rubin, R. (2016, Sep 09). U.S. news: House GOP mulls move against IRS head. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-house-gop-mulls-move-against-irs-head/docview/1817729470/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brody, L., & Shallwani, P. (2016, Sep 09). Loaded handgun taken to school on the first day. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/loaded-handgun-taken-school-on-first-day/docview/1817729463/se-2?accountid=14681>

Barbanel, J. (2016, Sep 09). City news: Developer is charged in tax case. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-developer-is-charged-tax-case/docview/1817729382/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jordan, M. (2016, Sep 09). U.S. news: Latino population growth slows. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-latino-population-growth-slows/docview/1817729335/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 08). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1817506413/se-2?accountid=14681>

Paletta, D. (2016, Sep 08). Election 2016: U.S. officials warn russia over hacking. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-u-s-officials-warn-russia-over/docview/1817506386/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 08). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1817506331/se-2?accountid=14681>

Michael C Bender, Colleen, M. N., Bender, M. C., & Colleen, M. N. (2016, Sep 08). Trump, clinton clash on security. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-clinton-clash-on-security/docview/1817506329/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 08). World news: On trip, obama faces tests to U.S. power --- during his final visit to asia, various leaders try to undercut his agenda in region. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-on-trip-obama-faces-tests-u-s-power/docview/1817490225/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gay, M. (2016, Sep 08). City news: City graffiti lingers longer. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-graffiti-lingers-longer/docview/1817490155/se-2?accountid=14681>

Harder, A., & Friedman, N. (2016, Sep 08). U.S. news: Report says oil reserve functions inefficiently. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-report-says-oil-reserve-functions/docview/1817490133/se-2?accountid=14681>

Troianovski, A. (2016, Sep 08). World news: Merkel tells her party to moderate its tone after loss. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-merkel-tells-her-party-moderate-tone/docview/1817490054/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sonne, P. (2016, Sep 08). World news: Russian jet flies 'within 10 feet' of navy plane. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russian-jet-flies-within-10-feet-navy/docview/1817487236/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hufford, A. (2016, Sep 08). Business news: Tegna plans to spin off cars.com. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-teгна-plans-spin-off-cars-com/docview/1817487224/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Sep 08). School ruling rocks conn. --- judge says funding is unconstitutional, orders new standards in educational system. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/school-ruling-rocks-conn-judge-says-funding-is/docview/1817487210/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mann, T. (2016, Sep 08). City news: With bridge case set to begin, court halts release of names. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-with-bridge-case-set-begin-court-halts/docview/1817487161/se-2?accountid=14681>

Thomas, A. (2016, Sep 08). World news: Germany rethinks once-taboo tax cuts --- europe's largest nation is one of the most taxed, but many germans don't want a reduction. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-germany-rethinks-once-taboo-tax-cuts/docview/1817487000/se-2?accountid=14681>

Korn, M. (2016, Sep 08). U.S. news: ITT students chart tough course. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-itt-students-chart-tough-course/docview/1817486966/se-2?accountid=14681>

Martin, A. (2016, Sep 08). Business news: A flea-market app comes to U.S. --- japan's mercari dares to challenge amazon and eBay as it tailors service to americans. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-flea-market-app-comes-u-s-japans/docview/1817486943/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brody, L. (2016, Sep 08). City news: New effort aims to support preschool social skills. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-new-effort-aims-support-preschool/docview/1817486919/se-2?accountid=14681>

Radnofsky, L., & Armour, S. (2016, Sep 08). U.S. news: Health law faces key time --- officials look to enroll more healthy people during this year's critical sign-up period. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-health-law-faces-key-time-officials-look/docview/1817486829/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jargon, J., & Benoit, D. (2016, Sep 08). Business news: Ackman's move pressures chipotle. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ackmans-move-pressure-chipotle/docview/1817486461/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bensinger, G., & Weber, L. (2016, Sep 08). Business news: Uber scores win in ruling on drivers. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-uber-scores-win-ruling-on-drivers/docview/1817486423/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cameron, D. (2016, Sep 08). Business news: Airline stocks rise on outlook. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-airline-stocks-rise-on-outlook/docview/1817486367/se-2?accountid=14681>

Free-trade agreements help us get more balanced trade. (2016, Sep 07). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/free-trade-agreements-help-us-get-more-balanced/docview/1817049536/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 07). World news: Obama sets laos ties on a new track --- president recognizes secret war, pledges aid to clean up bombs left from vietnam era. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-sets-laos-ties-on-new-track/docview/1817049503/se-2?accountid=14681>

Venkat, P. R., & Paris, C. (2016, Sep 07). Business news: Shipping line to sell ports --- CMA CGM of france seeks up to $1 billion to lower debt burden; assets in U.S. on block. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-shipping-line-sell-ports-cma-cgm/docview/1817049127/se-2?accountid=14681>

Verbergt, M. (2016, Sep 07). Business news: Lego's profit declines as U.S. growth slows. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-legos-profit-declines-as-u-s-growth/docview/1817048886/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 07). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1817026860/se-2?accountid=14681>

Radnofsky, L. (2016, Sep 07). U.S. news: Percentage of uninsured remains at a low. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-percentage-uninsured-remains-at-low/docview/1817026855/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 07). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1817025852/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 07). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1817024402/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calvert, S. (2016, Sep 07). U.S. news: Tax proposal stirs debate --- critics question using public bonds to support a planned baltimore project. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-tax-proposal-stirs-debate-critics/docview/1817024330/se-2?accountid=14681>

Levitz, J. (2016, Sep 07). U.S. news: Graffiti of maine governor in KKK garb fuels uproar. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-graffiti-maine-governor-kkk-garb-fuels/docview/1817024295/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 07). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1817024269/se-2?accountid=14681>

Corrigan, T. (2016, Sep 07). Business news: Hanjin gains U.S. protection from creditors. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hanjin-gains-u-s-protection/docview/1817024256/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gay, M., & Shallwani, P. (2016, Sep 07). City won't end J'ouvert --- mayor says violence at annual festival can be curbed; police call for community help. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-wont-end-jouvert-mayor-says-violence-at/docview/1817024221/se-2?accountid=14681>

Wells, G. (2016, Sep 07). Facebook's 'trending' fix has own flaws. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/facebooks-trending-fix-has-own-flaws/docview/1817024164/se-2?accountid=14681>

Fassihi, F. (2016, Sep 07). World news: Security council denounces north korea missile launch. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-security-council-denounces-north-korea/docview/1817024152/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cook, L., & Stynes, T. (2016, Sep 07). Business news: Shale driller EOG to buy yates petroleum. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-shale-driller-eog-buy-yates/docview/1817024102/se-2?accountid=14681>

Moss, T. (2016, Sep 07). World news: Philippine leader says he regrets anti-U.S. rant. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-philippine-leader-says-he-regrets-anti/docview/1817024094/se-2?accountid=14681>

Morris, K. (2016, Sep 07). City news: Transformation of lower manhattan's economy detailed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-transformation-lower-manhattans-economy/docview/1817024091/se-2?accountid=14681>

Korn, M. (2016, Sep 07). U.S. news: Students' federal aid kept school operator afloat. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-students-federal-aid-kept-school/docview/1817024061/se-2?accountid=14681>

Shallwani, P., & Gay, M. (2016, Sep 07). City news: J'ouvert poses special challenges. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-jouvert-poses-special-challenges/docview/1817024048/se-2?accountid=14681>

Maher, K. (2016, Sep 07). U.S. news: Tribe protest spurs halt to project in north dakota. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-tribe-protest-spurs-halt-project-north/docview/1817023991/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calvert, S. (2016, Sep 07). U.S. news: Plans target infrastructure. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-plans-target-infrastructure/docview/1817023989/se-2?accountid=14681>

World news: World watch. (2016, Sep 07). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1817023979/se-2?accountid=14681>

Spector, M. (2016, Sep 06). Business news: GM settles last suits on switches. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-settles-last-suits-on-switches/docview/1816819046/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cimilluca, D., Boston, W., & Tita, B. (2016, Sep 06). Business news: VW to take navistar stake. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-vw-take-navistar-stake/docview/1816802589/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramachandran, S., & Campo-Flores, A. (2016, Sep 06). Univision, televisa drama heightens --- companies wrestle with changing tastes among hispanic millennials. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/univision-televisa-drama-heightens-companies/docview/1816802554/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calfas, J. (2016, Sep 06). U.S. news: L.A. rams' faithful relish team's return --- 'big seed' lance goldberg is back, with his watermelon hat, and plenty of followers. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-l-rams-faithful-relish-teams-return-big/docview/1816802316/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bustillo, M., & Strum, B. (2016, Sep 06). U.S. news: Wells' link to quake scrutinized. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-wells-link-quake-scrutinized/docview/1816802287/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 06). World news: Obama, putin stumble on syria --- meeting of leaders fails to end impasse, as islamic state claims deadly bombings. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-putin-stumble-on-syria-meeting/docview/1816800469/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 06). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1816800452/se-2?accountid=14681>

World news: Confusion over obama's arrival draws a rebuke. (2016, Sep 06). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-confusion-over-obamas-arrival-draws/docview/1816800392/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E. (2016, Sep 06). World news: Comments spur U.S.-philippine rift. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-comments-spur-u-s-philippine-rift/docview/1816800348/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: Economic calendar. (2016, Sep 06). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1816800268/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kanno-Youngs, Z., & Dawsey, J. (2016, Sep 06). City news: Parade goes on as revelers gather. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-parade-goes-on-as-revelers-gather/docview/1816800146/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kanno-Youngs, Z., & Morales, M. (2016, Sep 06). City news: Two fatally shot at predawn fest; future uncertain. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-two-fatally-shot-at-predawn-fest-future/docview/1816800133/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 06). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1816800053/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramey, C. (2016, Sep 06). Union boss hits ground running. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/union-boss-hits-ground-running/docview/1816799971/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hernandez, D. (2016, Sep 06). U.S. news: Cracking zika's genetic code. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-cracking-zikas-genetic-code/docview/1816799914/se-2?accountid=14681>

Pasztor, A. (2016, Sep 06). Business news: SpaceX blast threatens to leave NASA in a bind --- with schedule in doubt for U.S. spacecraft, agency faces prospect of using costly stopgap. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-spacex-blast-threatens-leave-nasa/docview/1816799620/se-2?accountid=14681>

Adinolfi, J. (2016, Sep 06). Investing in funds & ETFs: A monthly analysis --- news challenge: The month in funds and investing: Test your smarts on herbalife, OJ and indexing. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/investing-funds-amp-etfs-monthly-analysis-news/docview/1816791301/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calfas, J. (2016, Sep 03). U.S. news: Stanford student in assault case freed. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-stanford-student-assault-case-freed/docview/1816293206/se-2?accountid=14681>

City news: Greater new york watch. (2016, Sep 03). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1816293154/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brody, L. (2016, Sep 03). City news: Top education official in N.J. to step down. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-top-education-official-n-j-step-down/docview/1816293149/se-2?accountid=14681>

Timiraos, N. (2016, Sep 03). U.S. news: Economic data not likely to help either campaign. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-data-not-likely-help-either/docview/1816293132/se-2?accountid=14681>

McWhirter, C. (2016, Sep 03). U.S. news: Hermine heads up the atlantic coast. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hermine-heads-up-atlantic-coast/docview/1816293082/se-2?accountid=14681>

Driebusch, C., & Gold, R. (2016, Sep 03). Stocks rally, even as drugmakers falter --- A new drug-pricing proposal from clinton dents biotech shares; gold and oil advance. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-rally-even-as-drugmakers-falter-new-drug/docview/1816293081/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 03). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1816293074/se-2?accountid=14681>

Grove, T. (2016, Sep 03). World news: Putin and abe, seeking closer economic ties, discuss disputed islands. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-putin-abe-seeking-closer-economic-ties/docview/1816293040/se-2?accountid=14681>

Brody, L. (2016, Sep 03). City news: Top newark teachers receive bonuses. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-top-newark-teachers-receive-bonuses/docview/1816293036/se-2?accountid=14681>

Anna, L. S. (2016, Sep 03). U.S. news: Trade gap narrows as exports rebound. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-trade-gap-narrows-as-exports-rebound/docview/1816293021/se-2?accountid=14681>

Steele, A. (2016, Sep 03). Business news: Merck abandons osteoporosis drug. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-merck-abandons-osteoporosis-drug/docview/1816292994/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 03). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1816292991/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calvert, S. (2016, Sep 03). U.S. news: Individual doctor 'report cards' show impact. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-individual-doctor-report-cards-show/docview/1816292980/se-2?accountid=14681>

Calvert, S., & Campo-Flores, A. (2016, Sep 03). U.S. news: States fight opioid epidemic with data --- authorities monitor doctors' prescriptions; critics decry risk to patient relationships. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-states-fight-opioid-epidemic-with-data/docview/1816292956/se-2?accountid=14681>

Colias, M., & Steele, A. (2016, Sep 02). Business news: Auto sales lose steam as U.S. buyers pull back. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-auto-sales-lose-steam-as-u-s-buyers/docview/1815944242/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 02). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1815944219/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kamp, J. (2016, Sep 02). U.S. news: Hurricane hermine threatens gulf coast to atlantic states. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hurricane-hermine-threatens-gulf-coast/docview/1815944213/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bender, M. C., & Reinhard, B. (2016, Sep 02). Election 2016: Speech sets off hispanic backlash. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-speech-sets-off-hispanic-backlash/docview/1815944212/se-2?accountid=14681>

Morales, M. (2016, Sep 02). City news: Evidence detailed in imam's death. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-evidence-detailed-imams-death/docview/1815944169/se-2?accountid=14681>

Furfaro, H. (2016, Sep 02). City news: Art store draws to a close --- lower east side shop catered to renowned artists and students; a paper lover's dream. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-art-store-draws-close-lower-east-side/docview/1815944132/se-2?accountid=14681>

Sparshott, J. (2016, Sep 02). U.S. news: Factory sector contracted in august. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-factory-sector-contracted-august/docview/1815944057/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rogers, C., & Viswanatha, A. (2016, Sep 02). Business news: Fiat sales calls are focus of probe. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-fiat-sales-calls-are-focus-probe/docview/1815944009/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 02). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1815944007/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Sep 02). City news: After shooting spike, bridgeport patrols increased. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-after-shooting-spike-bridgeport-patrols/docview/1815943994/se-2?accountid=14681>

Langley, M. (2016, Sep 02). Mexico comment spurred pushback. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/mexico-comment-spurred-pushback/docview/1815943964/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ziobro, P., & Paris, C. (2016, Sep 02). Retailers appeal for help with cargo snarl. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/retailers-appeal-help-with-cargo-snarl/docview/1815943947/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 02). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1815943854/se-2?accountid=14681>

Anna, L. S. (2016, Sep 02). U.S. news: Manufacturers search for workers. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-manufacturers-search-workers/docview/1815942717/se-2?accountid=14681>

Nassauer, S. (2016, Sep 02). Business news: Wal-mart to trim staff --- retailer moves staff from behind desks and onto store floor; 7,000 jobs in flux. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-wal-mart-trim-staff-retailer-moves/docview/1815890734/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abi-Habib, M., & Morajea, H. (2016, Sep 02). World news: Libyan militias seek power after battle --- rivalries, violence are threats even if pro- government forces beat islamic state in sirte. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from

<https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-libyan-militias-seek-power-after/docview/1815890695/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E., & Talley, I. (2016, Sep 02). World news: Obama seeks to cement asia pivot --- trade, north korea and south china sea are among priorities at coming summits. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-seeks-cement-asia-pivot-trade/docview/1815890624/se-2?accountid=14681>

Whelan, R., & Safdar, K. (2016, Sep 02). Business news: Gap faces setback after fire at facility. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gap-faces-setback-after-fire-at/docview/1815890576/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kesling, B. (2016, Sep 02). World news: Bodies of U.S. fighters in syria wait to come home. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bodies-u-s-fighters-syria-wait-come/docview/1815890572/se-2?accountid=14681>

Levitz, J. (2016, Sep 02). U.S. news: Social media sees romance scams. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-social-media-sees-romance-scams/docview/1815890549/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hannon, P., & Schechner, S. (2016, Sep 02). Business news: Apple may send cash to the U.S. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-apple-may-send-cash-u-s/docview/1815890428/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawson, C. (2016, Sep 02). U.S. news: At northern border, calls for vigilance --- security debate draws attention to remote, hard-to-patrol parts of U.S.-canada boundary. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-at-northern-border-calls-vigilance/docview/1815890384/se-2?accountid=14681>

Tangel, A. (2016, Sep 02). Business news: Driverless tractor steals farm show. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-driverless-tractor-steals-farm-show/docview/1815890374/se-2?accountid=14681>

Fields, G., & O'Keeffe, K. (2016, Sep 02). U.S. news: Forensic methods are questioned. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-forensic-methods-are-questioned/docview/1815890299/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gay, M. (2016, Sep 01). City news: Weiner investigated by child welfare. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-weiner-investigated-child-welfare/docview/1815619074/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kendall, B., & Bunge, J. (2016, Sep 01). Business news: Deere, monsanto equipment deal faces U.S. challenge. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-deere-monsanto-equipment-deal-faces/docview/1815618933/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M. (2016, Sep 01). City news: Tensions escalate over hoosick falls water crisis. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-tensions-escalate-over-hoosick-falls/docview/1815618822/se-2?accountid=14681>

Abdulrahim, R., & Nissenbaum, D. (2016, Sep 01). World news: Into syria's chaos, add a kurdish state --- rojava has four million people and its own constitution, alarming turkey and the U.S. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-into-syrias-chaos-add-kurdish-state/docview/1815618695/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hong, N. (2016, Sep 01). U.S. news: Award in terror case dismissed on appeal. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-award-terror-case-dismissed-on-appeal/docview/1815618645/se-2?accountid=14681>

Steele, A. (2016, Sep 01). Business news: Mattel's american girls head to toys 'R' us. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mattels-american-girls-head-toys-r/docview/1815618589/se-2?accountid=14681>

Minaya, E. (2016, Sep 01). Business news: McDonald's president retires. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mcdonalds-president-retires/docview/1815618568/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Sep 01). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1815606005/se-2?accountid=14681>

World news: World watch. (2016, Sep 01). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1815605921/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Sep 01). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1815605903/se-2?accountid=14681>

Diamond, J. (2016, Sep 01). Herniated disk dims outlook for walker. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/herniated-disk-dims-outlook-walker/docview/1815605763/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Sep 01). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1815605687/se-2?accountid=14681>

Burton, T. M. (2016, Sep 01). U.S. news: FDA warns about pairing painkillers, anxiety drugs. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fda-warns-about-pairing-painkillers/docview/1815600612/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chuin-Wei Yap. (2016, Sep 01). World news: China faces its trade critics. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-china-faces-trade-critics/docview/1815600546/se-2?accountid=14681>

Levitz, J. (2016, Sep 01). U.S. news: Bad romance: Falling for a phony online suitor. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-bad-romance-falling-phony-online-suitor/docview/1815600475/se-2?accountid=14681>

Morales, M. (2016, Sep 01). City news: City boosts security for J'ouvert festival. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-boosts-security-jouvert-festival/docview/1815600469/se-2?accountid=14681>

Levitz, J. (2016, Sep 01). U.S. news: Online daters are falling prey to scams --- fraudulent dating- service accounts are increasingly luring victims to send 'loans'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-online-daters-are-falling-prey-scams/docview/1815600375/se-2?accountid=14681>

Elinson, Z. (2016, Sep 01). U.S. news: California gun-violence center picks chief. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-california-gun-violence-center-picks/docview/1815600214/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mahtani, S. (2016, Sep 01). U.S. news: Chicago shooting deaths accelerate. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-chicago-shooting-deaths-accelerate/docview/1815600138/se-2?accountid=14681>

2?accountid=14681

Progressives finally embrace states' rights. (2016, Sep 01). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/progressives-finally-embrace-states-rights/docview/1815592686/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chun, H. W. (2016, Aug 31). World news: Beijing accuses american of spying. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-beijing-accuses-american-spying/docview/1815282340/se-2?accountid=14681>

Knutson, R., & Gryta, T. (2016, Aug 31). Business news: Unlimited data...within limits --- after pledging to ditch usage caps, sprint and T-mobile introduce costlier premium plans. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-unlimited-data-within-limits-after/docview/1815280757/se-2?accountid=14681>

Paletta, D. (2016, Aug 31). CIA venture fund operates in shadows --- trustees at agency firm in-Q-tel have ties to companies it funds. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/cia-venture-fund-operates-shadows-trustees-at/docview/1815275952/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2016, Aug 31). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1815275901/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2016, Aug 31). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1815275880/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2016, Aug 31). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1815275777/se-2?accountid=14681>

McMillan, R. (2016, Aug 31). U.S. news: Hackers hit groups studying russia. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-hackers-hit-groups-studying-russia/docview/1815275776/se-2?accountid=14681>

Shallwani, P. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Bratton: Law prevents release of data. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-bratton-law-prevents-release-data/docview/1815275775/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gay, M. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Water official violated rules. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-water-official-violated-rules/docview/1815275773/se-2?accountid=14681>

Randazzo, S. (2016, Aug 31). U.S. news: Court redefines who is a parent. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-court-redefines-who-is-parent/docview/1815275768/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hackman, M. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Judge denies politician's request to delay election. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-judge-denies-politicians-request-delay/docview/1815275767/se-2?accountid=14681>

Vilensky, M. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Hoosick falls hearing grills health officials. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-hoosick-falls-hearing-grills-health/docview/1815275759/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Suspect had dispute with ex-employer. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-suspect-had-dispute-with-ex-employer/docview/1815275758/se-2?accountid=14681>

Carreyrou, J., & Weaver, C. (2016, Aug 31). Theranos halts new zika test after FDA inspection. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/theranos-halts-new-zika-test-after-fda-inspection/docview/1815275755/se-2?accountid=14681>

Newman, J. (2016, Aug 31). U.S. news: Farmers see their incomes drop further. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-farmers-see-their-incomes-drop-further/docview/1815275753/se-2?accountid=14681>

Strum, B. (2016, Aug 31). U.S. news: A big grant for big data --- XSEDE project, which links researchers to supercomputers, wins $110 million award from the national science foundation. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-big-grant-data-xsede-project-which-links/docview/1815275747/se-2?accountid=14681>

Whelan, R. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Port regulators win case. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-port-regulators-win-case/docview/1815275746/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dawsey, J. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Emails show lobbyist's close ties to city hall. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-emails-show-lobbyists-close-ties-hall/docview/1815275741/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dalton, M. (2016, Aug 31). World news: France vows to scrap U.S.-EU trade deal. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-france-vows-scrap-u-s-eu-trade-deal/docview/1815275733/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bravin, J. (2016, Aug 31). U.S. news: Immigrant case relied on faulty statistics. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-immigrant-case-relied-on-faulty/docview/1815275732/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hackman, M., & Campo-Flores, A. (2016, Aug 31). Election 2016: Rubio and former DNC head win --- rubio to face murphy in senate race; debbie wasserman schultz easily wins primary. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-rubio-former-dnc-head-win-face/docview/1815275725/se-2?accountid=14681>

King, K. (2016, Aug 31). City news: Christie vetoes rise in base wage. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-christie-vetoes-rise-base-wage/docview/1815275719/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kamp, J. (2016, Aug 31). U.S. news: Fire stations open doors to addicts --- new hampshire city hit by opioid crisis takes novel approach to getting people help. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fire-stations-open-doors-addicts-new/docview/1815275708/se-2?accountid=14681>

Stamouli, N. (2016, Aug 31). World news: Fresh surge in migrants strains greece --- more asylum seekers disregard EU strategy to deter them from aegean sea crossing. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-fresh-surge-migrants-strains-greece/docview/1815275705/se-2?accountid=14681>

Stynes, T. (2016, Aug 31). Business news: Sears to resume selling paint. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-sears-resume-selling-paint/docview/1815275076/se-2?accountid=14681>

Safdar, K. (2016, Aug 31). Business news: Mall woes squeeze abercrombie. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mall-woes-squeeze-abercrombie/docview/1815275029/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hernandez, D. (2016, Aug 30). U.S. news: Potential zika drugs identified. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-potential-zika-drugs-identified/docview/1814847684/se-2?accountid=14681>

Pasztor, A. (2016, Aug 30). Business news: U.S. implements rules on drones. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-implements-rules-on-drones/docview/1814847549/se-2?accountid=14681>

De Avila, J. (2016, Aug 30). Medical school dean shot in chappaqua. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/medical-school-dean-shot-chappaqua/docview/1814843360/se-2?accountid=14681>

Puko, T., & Gold, R. (2016, Aug 30). U.S. stocks rebound in sleepy session --- major indexes shake off friday's declines as financial sector heads broad advance. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-stocks-rebound-sleepy-session-major-indexes/docview/1814842775/se-2?accountid=14681>

Shallwani, P., & Furfaro, H. (2016, Aug 30). City news: Shelter employee killed in shooting. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-shelter-employee-killed-shooting/docview/1814842679/se-2?accountid=14681>

Iosebashvili, I., & Dulaney, C. (2016, Aug 30). Dollar lift gathers steam --- as federal reserve signals a rate increase, traders watch for a stronger greenback. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/dollar-lift-gathers-steam-as-federal-reserve/docview/1814842616/se-2?accountid=14681>

Dezember, R. (2016, Aug 30). Duke won't seek oil man's money. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/duke-wont-seek-oil-mans-money/docview/1814842600/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kurmanaev, A. (2016, Aug 30). World news: Venezuelans mobilize for recall vote. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-venezuelans-mobilize-recall-vote/docview/1814839387/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lee, C. E. (2016, Aug 30). World news: Obama to meet erdogan and xi. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-meet-erdogan-xi/docview/1814839351/se-2?accountid=14681>

Mann, T. (2016, Aug 30). Business news: U.S. warns drillers about bolts --- failure of fasteners could result in an oil spill on the scale of 2010 disaster, officials say. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-warns-drillers-about-bolts/docview/1814839350/se-2?accountid=14681>

Harrup, A. (2016, Aug 30). Business news: Cemex agrees to sell some U.S. assets for $306 million. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-cemex-agrees-sell-some-u-s-assets/docview/1814839344/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bach, J. (2016, Aug 30). Business news: Truck carrying takata air bags explodes. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-truck-carrying-takata-air-bags/docview/1814839337/se-2?accountid=14681>

Database copyright © 2026 ProQuest LLC. All rights reserved.

Terms and Conditions Contact ProQuest