

Report Information from ProQuest

16 April 2026 14:59

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Search Strategy.....	iv
1. U.S. News: Pope Warns U.S. Bishops Over Unity.....	1
2. U.S. News: Mississippi Flood Fears Spur Levee Fights.....	3
3. U.S. News: Aide Testifies Against 'El Chapo'.....	5
4. Business & Finance.....	7
5. U.S. News: Courts Make Do During Stalemate, for Now.....	9
6. Democrats Take Over House Amid Standoff --- Under Pelosi leadership, bills aiming to end shutdown pass, but GOP to block in Senate.....	11
7. U.S. News: Global Slowdown Dents U.S. Factories.....	14
8. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	17
9. Stocks Slide As Growth Fears Spread --- Apple's warning, soft U.S. economic data heighten concern about global slowdown.....	19
10. U.S. News: House Vote Raises Stakes in Standoff.....	22
11. World-Wide.....	25
12. U.S. News: Pelosi Lines Up Legislative Priorities.....	27
13. World News: U.S. Urges Russia to Explain Detention.....	28
14. Banking & Finance -- Currencies: Yen Soars Against Dollar on Growth Worries.....	30
15. Business News: Qatar Airways Taps Asia --- Carrier buys 5% stake in Chinese airline as it tries to fight effects of Mideast economic feud.....	32
16. U.S. News: President Expects to Win Over Romney.....	35
17. Ex-de Blasio Fundraiser Convicted --- A federal jury found businessman Jeremy Reichberg guilty of bribing NYPD officials.....	36
18. World News: China Is First to Land a Spacecraft on the Far Side of Moon.....	38
19. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	40
20. Banking & Finance: Inflows Into China Startups Cool.....	43
21. U.S. News: New Faces Greet Trump at Cabinet Meeting.....	45
22. U.S. News: Long Shutdown Risks Tax-Refund Delay.....	48
23. U.S. News: Test Strip Lets Drug Users Identify Fentanyl Contamination.....	50
24. Treasurys Extend Rally After China Data.....	52
25. World News: Brazil's Leader Moves To Revamp Economy.....	54
26. World News: Fire Cripples Car Carrier in Pacific.....	56
27. U.S. News: Work-Visa Website Still Shut After Crash.....	58
28. U.S. News: Anti-Drone Suppliers Avoid Airports.....	59
29. U.S. News: Colleges Press for Early Sign-Ups --- Some schools push prospective freshmen to commit, if accepted, in race to fill their spots.....	62

TABLE OF CONTENTS

30. World-Wide.....	64
31. U.S. News: Democrats Aim To Loosen Rules On Debt Limit.....	66
32. World News: China's Leader Presses Taiwan to Unify --- Xi urges peaceful unification but says force remains an option; Taipei rejects proposal.....	68
33. U.S. News: Coach Pleads Guilty to Bribery.....	70
34. Investors Bet Fed Rates Will Stay Put.....	72
35. Business & Finance.....	75
36. Charter, Tribune at Impasse.....	77
37. World News: Detained American Isn't Spy, Family Says --- Paul Whelan, held by Russia, was in Moscow for wedding of fellow ex-Marine, brother says.....	79
38. U.S. News: At Pentagon, Shanahan Aligns Vision With Trump's.....	81
39. Netflix Lures Activision Executive.....	83
40. U.S. News: Warren Takes Crucial Step Toward Presidential Run.....	85
41. World News: Bolsonaro Sworn In, As Brazil Sees Shift.....	87
42. Business News: Bill Gates Project Hit by Trade Fight.....	89
43. Business News: Mining Firms Cut Output In Biggest U.S. Coal Region.....	91
44. Business & Finance.....	93
45. World-Wide.....	95
46. U.S. News: Demand Crashes Work-Visa Website.....	96
47. World News: EU Surplus Tests U.S. Trade Truce.....	98
48. Huawei, Under Fire, Holds Off Rivals.....	101
49. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	103
50. U.S. News: New for 2019: Laws on Guns, Harassment, Straws.....	106
51. U.S. News: Fight for Tech-Savvy Vets Heats Up.....	108
52. U.S. News: Equifax Is A Priority For House Democrats.....	111
53. U.S. News: Trump Presses On for Wall Funds --- Congressional leaders invited to bipartisan meeting to resolve a shutdown impasse.....	113
54. Business News: Chesapeake Shifts to Oil From Gas.....	115
55. World News: U.S. Forces Face Missile Threat.....	117
56. U.S. News: More U.S. Agencies Run Out of Money.....	120
57. U.S. News: Cities Covet 'Deck Parks' To Aid Cores.....	121
Bibliography.....	125

SEARCH STRATEGY

Set No.	Searched for	Databases	Results
S10	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20190101-20191231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	8057
S9	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20210101-20211231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6575
S8	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20220101-20220817)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	3797
S7	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20210101-20211231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6575
S6	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20190101-20191231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	8057

S5	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20210101-20211231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6575
S4	(US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20210101-20211231)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6575
S3	(US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20240814-20250814)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	5421
S2	(us fiscal policy) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal (Online)" OR "Wall Street Journal") AND at.exact("News") AND pd(20210101-20211231))	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	696
S1	(us fiscal policy) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal (Online)" OR "Wall Street Journal") AND at.exact("News") AND pd(20240814-20250814)) AND (bdl(1006968) AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20200816-20250816))	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	222

U.S. News: Pope Warns U.S. Bishops Over Unity

Rocca, Francis X. Rocca, Francis X.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Pope Francis warned U.S. bishops against disunity in the Catholic Church, after months of conflict between the bishops and the Vatican over how to respond to the clerical sex-abuse crisis.

Catholics "continue to suffer greatly" from clerical sex abuse and coverups by bishops, "as well as the pain of seeing an episcopate lacking in unity and concentrated more on pointing fingers than on seeking paths of reconciliation," the pope wrote in a letter distributed to the bishops this week as they gathered for a spiritual retreat outside Chicago. He also rebuked the bishops for "disparaging, discrediting, playing the victim or the scold" and admonished them to "break the vicious circle of recrimination, undercutting and discrediting, by avoiding gossip and slander."

Those were apparent allusions to accusations by a former Vatican diplomat that the pope ignored sexual misconduct by a U.S. cardinal. Many U.S. bishops have said publicly that they found the accusations credible.

The letter, dated Jan. 1, is Pope Francis' most explicit acknowledgment yet of the tensions between him and the U.S. episcopate. It comes less than two months before bishops from around the world are set to gather at the Vatican for a four-day summit on sex abuse, following clerical abuse scandals last year in the U.S., Latin America, Europe and Australia.

Writing after the Vatican in November stopped the bishops from voting on anti-abuse measures at their annual meeting in Baltimore, the pope told the bishops they couldn't regain credibility lost over sex abuse by "issuing stern decrees or by simply creating new committees or improving flow charts, as if we were in charge of a department of human resources," but through humble service to their people.

Cardinal Daniel DiNardo of Galveston-Houston, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, voiced disappointment in November when the Vatican halted the plan to vote on new protocols for handling complaints against bishops. Vatican officials said they didn't have enough time to review the proposed measures before the November assembly.

Tension between the bishops and the Vatican has been growing since the summer, when Cardinal DiNardo publicly called on Pope Francis to order an investigation into the rise to power of Archbishop Theodore McCarrick, who in July became the first man in nearly a century to lose the title of cardinal after a church investigation found credible a claim that he had abused a teenager in the early 1970s.

After Archbishop Carlo Maria Vigano in late August publicly accused Pope Francis of ignoring Archbishop McCarrick's history of sexual misconduct with seminarians and priests and making him a powerful adviser, Cardinal DiNardo said those accusations also deserved answers.

Archbishop McCarrick has said he is innocent of the accusation involving the teenager and his lawyer has said he expects due process regarding the other accusations.

Credit: By Francis X. Rocca

DETAILS

Subject:	Catholicism; Catholic churches; Sexual abuse
----------	--

Business indexing term:	Industry: 81311 : Religious Organizations
Location:	Baltimore Maryland; Australia; Chicago Illinois; United States--US; Latin America; Europe
People:	Vigano, Carlo Maria; Francis (Pope)
Company / organization:	Name: United States Conference of Catholic Bishops; NAICS: 813110
Classification:	81311: Religious Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162961681
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-pope-warns-bishops-over-unity/docview/2162961681/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Mississippi Flood Fears Spur Levee Fights

Maheer, Kris . Maheer, Kris.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Some landowners and environmental groups in Missouri are urging federal officials to force levees to be lowered along a stretch of the Mississippi River in Illinois, fearing that neighboring areas will be more vulnerable to flooding if nothing is done.

The Great Rivers Habitat Alliance, a river conservation group in St. Louis, has asked the Federal Emergency Management Agency to force the Sny Island Levee and Drainage District to lower its levees by rescinding district landowners' federal flood insurance if they don't.

Community fights over levee heights on the Upper Mississippi River are particularly heated because the region has seen increased flooding in recent years. Levees are permanent earthen barriers designed to protect low areas from rising floodwaters. Higher levees protect farms and towns behind them but can cause greater flooding across the river, downstream or even upstream.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers surveyed roughly 200 miles of levees along the Mississippi in 2016 and found that levee heights along 80 miles, or 40%, were higher than authorized by federal law.

Levees were found to be too high in Iowa, Missouri and Illinois. Of the 10 levees that were up to 4 feet too high, the Sny district, located in Illinois near Hannibal, Mo., accounted for three, covering 30 to 40 miles.

Levees are usually built and maintained by local authorities known as levee districts under supervision or approval from various federal agencies. In recent years, some districts have raised levees to prepare for floods but not lowered them afterward, according to an Army Corps official.

Levees along the Mississippi date to the late 19th century, when they were built to protect crops and businesses as well as people from waterborne diseases following floods. In recent decades, disputes have arisen in part because not knowing the exact heights of levees makes it difficult to plan for flood emergencies.

David Stokes, executive director of the Great Rivers Habitat Alliance, said uncertainty about levee heights has inspired "this constant arms race" among districts to raise their levees higher to offer protection.

A spokeswoman for FEMA said the agency has been working with the state of Illinois and the Army Corps of Engineers to determine the best way to address the Great Rivers Habitat Alliance concerns.

Mike Reed, superintendent of the Sny district, said the district's levees were approved in 2004 by FEMA, with involvement of the Army Corps, to protect against a "100-year-flood," or a flood with a chance of occurring once every 100 years. The designation allows landowners to qualify for lower flood-insurance premiums and determines standards for building development.

"We complied with all the regulations and all the processes that were in place when we received our accreditation in 2004," Mr. Reed said.

The Army Corps, one of the agencies with oversight of the national levee system, disagrees with the Sny district's interpretation and has already removed it from a federal program that helps cover the cost of repairing levees damaged during flooding.

Scott Whitney, flood-risk manager with the Army Corps' Rock Island District, which includes the Sny, said the Army Corps, FEMA and the three states involved have been in discussions to try to resolve the situation.

"It's a complex situation. It's politically charged, and public safety is at the center of it," Mr. Whitney said.

Mike Klingner, chairman of the Upper Mississippi, Illinois & Missouri Rivers Association, which represents levee districts, said the Sny district and others want to maintain their FEMA certification for reduced flood insurance. The association is pushing for a plan for the Upper Mississippi that would call for some increased levee heights as well as agreements with districts to take on water during certain flood conditions. The plan hasn't received federal approval.

"What we're trying to do is prevent future disasters," he said. "We all ought to be working together."

Some landowners, however, oppose the plan. "Water is on our land longer, saturating our land and that can make a difference between getting your crop in or not," said Nancy Guyton, whose family farms land in Missouri across from the Sny district.

She is part of a group of Missouri landowners called Neighbors of the Mississippi, which is also fighting the higher levees. She also supports action by FEMA.

In Hannibal, city manager Jeff LaGarce has some concern about higher levee heights. But the city has a floodwall, and he hasn't taken a position in the fight. "From a municipal standpoint, I don't know who's right and who's wrong," he said.

Credit: By Kris Maher

DETAILS

Subject:	Levees & battures; Rivers; Flood control; Flood insurance; Landowners
Business indexing term:	Subject: Flood insurance
Location:	Missouri; United States--US; Iowa; Illinois; Mississippi; Mississippi River
Company / organization:	Name: Army Corps of Engineers; NAICS: 928110; Name: Federal Emergency Management Agency; NAICS: 922190; Name: Department of the Army; NAICS: 928110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162961466
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-mississippi-flood-fears-spur-levee/docview/2162961466/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 3 of 57

U.S. News: Aide Testifies Against 'El Chapo'

Hong, Nicole . Hong, Nicole.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The former logistics manager of the Sinaloa cartel testified at trial Thursday against his former boss Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman, giving jurors a rare opportunity to hear details of alleged high-level discussions within the cartel's inner circle.

The testimony of Vicente Zambada Niebla, who was arrested in Mexico in 2009 and extradited to Chicago, was highly anticipated. Mr. Zambada served among the leadership of the Sinaloa cartel for nearly a decade and recently pleaded guilty to drug-conspiracy charges. Officials have called him one of the most significant drug traffickers to ever be extradited to the U.S.

As part of his plea agreement, Mr. Zambada agreed to a U.S. forfeiture order of more than $1.3 billion and to assist federal prosecutors. In exchange, he said the government allowed his family to move to the U.S. for their safety. He remains in federal custody.

Mr. Zambada's father, Ismael "El Mayo" Zambada Garcia, once ran the cartel alongside Mr. Guzman. The elder Mr. Zambada is still the cartel's leader and remains at large.

Mr. Guzman, who is on trial in Brooklyn federal court, faces a 17-count indictment that accuses him of building a multibillion-dollar international narcotics empire over nearly three decades. Mr. Guzman has pleaded not guilty. As the person in charge of coordinating drug shipments for the cartel, Mr. Zambada offered jurors a detailed account of how massive amounts of cocaine and methamphetamines were ferried from Colombia through Mexico into U.S. cities.

According to Mr. Zambada, the cartel hired families with U.S. citizenship who lived in El Paso, Texas, to drive across the Mexican border several times a day and return to the U.S. carrying cocaine or drug proceeds in hidden compartments in their cars.

To get cocaine from the Mexican border to Chicago, drugs were hidden on trains carrying meat and other products, Mr. Zambada said.

Cartel members also smuggled drugs from South America to Mexico in submarines, he said. Using longitude and latitude coordinates, fast boats would meet the subs in open water and then bring the drugs to the coast, where they would be loaded onto cars and moved into safehouses. Mr. Zambada said one submarine shipment he coordinated carried at least five tons of cocaine.

Mr. Zambada described a 2008 meeting in which representatives of Mexican state oil company Petroleos Mexicanos, known as Pemex, and corrupt politicians asked Mr. Guzman and other cartel members if they could help transport 100 tons of cocaine in an oil tanker owned by the company. Mr. Zambada said he didn't know if the shipment was successful because he was arrested a few months after the meeting. A spokeswoman for Pemex declined to comment.

Mr. Zambada was responsible for facilitating payments to corrupt agents at every level of Mexico's law enforcement, who were collectively paid $1 million a month in bribes, he said. Commanders working for the cartel tipped Mr. Guzman off about the operation by Mexican officials to recapture him after he escaped from a maximum-security prison in 2001 in a laundry cart.

After that escape, Mr. Zambada said Mr. Guzman described to him the anxiety of hiding among the sheets and blankets in the laundry cart, counting each door the cart passed. At one point, the prison worker helping him briefly let go of the cart and it started rolling back, sending Mr. Guzman into a panic about being discovered, Mr. Zambada testified. He said Mr. Guzman told him the last minutes getting out of the prison seemed like an eternity.

Mr. Zambada also told jurors about conversations in which Mr. Guzman allegedly ordered the killings of rival cartel members. He rattled off personal details about dozens of rivals and business partners, highlighting the level of access he had within the cartel.

Credit: By Nicole Hong

DETAILS

Subject:	Cocaine; Drug trafficking; Trials; Cartels; Submarines
Business indexing term:	Subject: Cartels
Location:	South America; Chicago Illinois; Mexico; Texas; United States--US; Colombia
People:	Zambada Niebla, Jesus Vicente; Guzman, Joaquin (El Chapo)
Company / organization:	Name: Petroleos Mexicanos; NAICS: 211120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3

Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162961432
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-aide-testifies-against-el-chapo/docview/2162961432/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 4 of 57

Business & Finance

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Fears about the global economy intensified as downbeat news in the U.S. and around the world sent stocks falling and pushed bond yields to their lowest level in almost a year. The Dow sank 2.8% and the S&P 500 and the Nasdaq lost 2.5% and 3%, respectively. Apple's shares slid 10%.

The Chinese consumer, a previously reliable driver of economic growth, is under stress, threatening to worsen a slowdown in China.

American manufacturing growth lost steam in December, adding to concerns about cooling expansions in the U.S. and abroad.

U.S. auto sales held steady last year despite predictions the market would cool, capping the best four-year period ever for the industry.

Bristol-Myers Squibb agreed to acquire Celgene in a blockbuster transaction valued at about $74 billion, combining two leading sellers of cancer drugs.

Delta said fare revenue didn't climb as much as expected during the holiday travel season, unnerving airline investors.

Loeb's Third Point, the activist hedge-fund firm, lost about 11% last year, its worst performance since 2008.

Three ex-Credit Suisse bankers were arrested in London on U.S. charges over an alleged fraud scheme tied to Mozambique deals.

KKR intends to invest an initial $1 billion in a commercial-aircraft venture as part of a push by the firm into the jet-rental business.

DETAILS

Location:	China; Mozambique; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Credit Suisse Group AG; NAICS: 523150, 523920; Name: Bristol-Myers Squibb Co; NAICS: 325412, 325620
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162961288
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/2162961288/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 5 of 57

U.S. News: Courts Make Do During Stalemate, for Now

Kendall, Brent . Kendall, Brent.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The federal courts have largely maintained normal operations during the government shutdown so far, but that could change quickly if the stalemate lasts beyond next week.

Officials at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts say the judiciary will begin to face significant challenges after Jan. 11 if funding hasn't been restored. The courts have been dipping into court fees and other sources that aren't dependent on new congressional appropriations, but those funds have their limits.

If the shutdown continues, federal courts will have to come up with plans for managing reduced operations, and funding could be in jeopardy for jurors, court reporters, public defenders and some court staffers, as well as for some supervision and other services the courts provide to offenders on probation.

The Supreme Court faces the same funding timeline as the rest of the courts, a high-court spokeswoman said Wednesday.

However, the courts won't simply shut down, said David Sellers, a spokesman for the Administrative Office. Federal law allows courts to continue their work to the extent it is necessary to support the exercise of judicial powers -- a phrasing that lets judges continue issuing rulings and keep some critical cases moving through the pipeline. Criminal cases in particular are likely to continue, as federal prosecutors have latitude to work on cases that are connected to public safety. But civil litigation could see a significant slowdown, something that has already started in cases where the U.S. government is a party.

Some federal courts, including in Manhattan and Chicago, have issued blanket orders temporarily suspending civil cases involving the government. The Justice Department, for its part, has sought stays of litigation even in some of its highest-profile cases.

One court, for example, agreed recently to a postponement in a case where the Justice Department is defending President Trump from claims by the attorneys general of Maryland and the District of Columbia that he is unlawfully profiting from his presidency.

In other cases, judges have required the Justice Department to continue to litigate despite the funding lapse, including in a coming California trial where the department is defending the administration's decision to include a question on the 2020 census that asks people if they are U.S. citizens.

Justice Department lawyers have pledged they will continue to work on cases when a court order requires them to do so. Past shutdowns created lingering headaches for the judiciary once lawmakers restored funding. Judges had to scramble to reschedule postponed cases, adding to already crowded calendars and forcing courts to play catch-up on priorities like building maintenance.

Credit: By Brent Kendall

DETAILS

Subject:	Funding; Judges & magistrates; Federal government; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government shutdowns Shutdowns
Location:	Maryland; Chicago Illinois; California; United States--US; Washington DC
People:	Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162960832
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-courts-make-do-during-stalemate-now/docview/2162960832/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 6 of 57

Democrats Take Over House Amid Standoff --- Under Pelosi leadership, bills aiming to end shutdown pass, but GOP to block in Senate

Andrews, Natalie; Peterson, Kristina . Andrews, Natalie; Peterson, Kristina.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Corrections & Amplifications

In the election for speaker of the House, 15 lawmakers voted for candidates other than Democrat Nancy Pelosi and Republican Kevin McCarthy, and three voted present. A Page One article on Friday about the new session of Congress incorrectly said 18 lawmakers cast votes for other candidates.

(WSJ Jan. 7, 2019)

WASHINGTON -- Nancy Pelosi was elected House speaker as the 116th Congress convened Thursday and Democrats passed bills aimed at ending the partial government shutdown, but those measures were expected to stall in the GOP-controlled Senate.

The Democrats' takeover of the House opened a new and contentious era of divided government in Washington, giving Mrs. Pelosi and her party a platform to challenge President Trump as the early stages of the 2020 race for the White House take shape.

Mrs. Pelosi won the speakership for the second time -- no one else has lost and reclaimed the gavel since 1955 -- with 220 votes to 192 for Rep. Kevin McCarthy of California, the newly installed GOP leader. Eighteen members voted for other candidates and three members voted present.

The House passed on Thursday night a series of bills that would reopen the government after 13 days.

But Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) said he wouldn't hold votes on the Democratic bills, and there are few signs of a resolution to the standoff as Democrats resist Mr. Trump's demand for $5 billion to build a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Mrs. Pelosi, the only woman ever to serve as speaker, takes the reins with an ideologically diverse Democratic caucus that won its majority in part by opposing Mr. Trump's policies. Democratic lawmakers, who now take over the House's oversight machinery, have said they would use their authority to review the Republican president's tax returns and probe his business dealings.

Mrs. Pelosi has resisted calls from some members of her caucus to open impeachment proceedings against Mr. Trump, saying the House would wait for the results of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election and any collusion between Moscow and the Trump campaign. Mr. Trump and Russia have denied any wrongdoing.

On the legislative front, House Democrats plan to focus on measures to lower prescription-drug prices, ramp up spending on the nation's infrastructure and overhaul ethics and campaign-finance rules in Washington.

Mr. Trump, whose 2016 campaign included a trillion-dollar infrastructure package, has said he was willing to work with Democrats on infrastructure legislation. The president congratulated Mrs. Pelosi on being named speaker in a surprise news briefing at the White House.

"It's a very, very great achievement, and hopefully we're going to work together, and we're going to get lots of things done, like infrastructure and so much more," Mr. Trump said.

Democrats are expected to bring up legislation that expands background-check requirements for firearm purchases, said Rep. Mike Thompson (D., Calif.), chairman of the Gun Violence Prevention Task Force, a body of Democratic lawmakers who support changing the nation's gun laws.

Democrats also plan to intervene in a federal court ruling that found the Affordable Care Act unconstitutional.

Rep. Maxine Waters (D., Calif.), the new chairwoman of the House Financial Services Committee, has said she would make housing finance a priority. She will also have oversight of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and could try to spur changes at the agency, which Democrats set up in 2010 and believe has been neutered by the last two years of GOP control of Congress and the White House.

"We enter this new Congress with a sense of great hope and confidence for the future, and deep humility and prayerfulness in the face of the challenges ahead," Mrs. Pelosi said in a speech to the House, describing the Democrats' mandate as lowering health-care and prescription-drug costs, protecting individuals with pre-existing medical conditions and "rebuilding America with green and modern infrastructure."

Mrs. Pelosi, 78 years old, was first chosen to lead the caucus in 2002 and served as the first female speaker from 2007 to 2011. The Baltimore-born daughter of a congressman, she rose through California party politics, starting as a campaign volunteer, and was first elected to Congress in 1987. Her election Thursday makes her the first person to reclaim the gavel since Sam Rayburn, a Texas Democrat, in 1955.

Democrats largely elided the divisions that had riven them leading up to Mrs. Pelosi's election. Many wore blue buttons proclaiming "Madame Speaker" and started calling Mrs. Pelosi affectionately by her initials, NDP.

Clusters of newly elected lawmakers took pictures on the House floor, an infraction of the chamber's rules, ahead of casting their first votes. Rep. Jahana Hayes (D., Conn.) fixed the hairstyle of fellow freshman lawmaker Rep. Alexandria

Ocasio-Cortez (D., N.Y.). Lawmakers from both parties passed around children and grandchildren. The new Congress was the first in modern memory to convene during a government shutdown. Rep. Liz Cheney (R., Wyo.), nominating Mr. McCarthy for speaker, praised him for bringing up legislation last year that would fund the border wall that has become the sticking point in the negotiations, drawing a standing ovation from House Republicans.

Democrats, meanwhile, focused on legislation they passed Thursday that is aimed at reopening the government but without the funds the White House is seeking for a border wall. It includes a package of six full-year spending bills that would fund most of the closed part of the government through September. Separately, they passed a short-term extension of current funding through Feb. 8 for the Department of Homeland Security.

Voting for Mrs. Pelosi as speaker, new Rep. Veronica Escobar (D., Texas) said she cast her vote for "Nancy No Wall Pelosi."

Mr. McConnell has said the Senate, where the GOP holds a 53-47 edge, won't consider any legislation that isn't guaranteed a signature by the president. Mr. McConnell, who has led his party in the Senate since 2007, has two more seats than before last year's midterm elections. He has largely put the onus of negotiating on Mr. Trump and Senate Democrats, whose votes will be needed to pass spending legislation through the chamber.

The new Congress is the most diverse in terms of race and gender, and both chambers will include more members hailing from their parties' more ideologically extreme wings.

The incoming Democratic ranks include the first two Muslim women, Reps. Rashida Tlaib (D., Mich.) and Ilhan Omar (D., Minn.). Ms. Tlaib wore a thobe, a traditional Palestinian garment, while Ms. Omar became the first lawmaker to wear a head scarf in Congress.

House Democrats now include 89 women out of 235 members. The House GOP now includes 13 women out of 199 members.

Credit: By Natalie Andrews and Kristina Peterson

DETAILS

Subject:	Political finance; Firearm laws & regulations; Legislators; Political leadership; Speakers of the House; Leadership; Infrastructure; Government shutdowns; Border walls; Presidents; Congressional elections; Election results; Legislation; Firearms
Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership Infrastructure Government shutdowns; Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations 92111 : Executive Offices 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; McCarthy, Kevin; McConnell, Mitch; Waters, Maxine; Cheney, Liz; Ocasio-Cortez, Alexandria; Mueller, Robert S III; Pelosi, Nancy; Omar, Ilhan; Tlaib, Rashida; Hayes, Jahana; Escobar, Veronica
Company / organization:	Name: House of Representatives; NAICS: 921120; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations; 92111: Executive Offices; 92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1

Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162960816
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/democrats-take-over-house-amid-standoff-under/docview/2162960816/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-10-28
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 7 of 57

U.S. News: Global Slowdown Dents U.S. Factories

Nunn, Sharon; Timiraos, Nick . Nunn, Sharon; Timiraos, Nick.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- American manufacturing growth slowed in December, adding to concerns about cooling expansions in the U.S. and abroad.

The Institute for Supply Management said Thursday that its manufacturing index fell to 54.1 in December, the largest one-month drop since the end of 2008, during the financial crisis. Still, a reading above 50 indicates factory activity is expanding.

The report offers the most concrete sign that the U.S. economy is losing steam after expanding strongly in 2018. It follows others indicating ebbing U.S. consumer confidence and vehicle sales last month.

If followed by other data pointing to a worse-than-expected loss of economic momentum, the Federal Reserve would likely break from its recent pattern of raising interest rates by a quarter of a percentage point each quarter.

That precedent would have pointed to another rate increase in March, but continued weak economic reports could lead officials to leave rates unchanged at that meeting, according to recent public statements and interviews.

Fed officials raised their benchmark federal-funds rate by a quarter-percentage point to a range between 2.25% and 2.5% when they met on Dec. 19. They penciled in two rate increases in 2019, but that assumed the economy would grow slightly above the 1.8% annual pace they deem likely over the long run.

Fed officials have stressed that their policy plans aren't on autopilot. "We know that the economy may not be as kind to our forecasts next year as it was this year," Fed Chairman Jerome Powell said at a press conference last month.

"Unforeseen events as the year unfolds may buffet the economy and call for more than a slight change from the policy projections released today."

Dallas Fed President Robert Kaplan, speaking Thursday on Bloomberg Television, said the central bank should hold off on additional rate increases until it determines whether rising anxiety about the economy and financial markets is temporary or a sign of something more troubling.

"In the first couple of quarters in this year, if you ask me my base case, my base case would be take no action at all. That could change if things improve," Mr. Kaplan said. "We should be patient and give some time for the economy, and watch how this situation unfolds."

Economists at Goldman Sachs last week lowered their U.S. growth forecast for the first half of this year to a 2% annual rate from 2.4%. They expect a 1.8% growth pace in the second half. Economists at Morgan Stanley expect the economy to grow just 1.7% this year, the slowest pace since 2012, with quarterly growth slackening to a low of 1% in the July-to-September quarter.

The ISM index has posted a decline of more than 5 percentage points in only two other months in the past 30 years, in October 2001 and October 2008. The index is still above the current expansion's low point of 47.8 in January 2016.

December's ISM drop was driven by slowing new orders for American-made products. Tim Fiore, who oversees the survey of factory purchasing and supply managers, attributed that to cooling global economic growth, as some of the world's largest economies, including Germany, Japan and China, have shown signs of sputtering in recent months. Analysts blame U.S.-China trade tensions for much of the slowdown. But the broad decline in the manufacturing index suggests the weakness wasn't confined to worries over trade and declines in oil prices that have idled production in the energy sector.

"The U.S. is definitely in the late innings of the current business cycle," said Joseph Brusuelas, chief economist at consulting firm RSM U.S.

Michael S. Derby contributed to this article.

Credit: By Sharon Nunn and Nick Timiraos

DETAILS

Subject: Interest rates; Economic growth; Global economy; Manufacturing; Factories

Business indexing term:	Subject: Interest rates Economic growth Global economy Manufacturing Factories
Location:	China; United States--US; Germany; Japan
People:	Powell, Jerome
Company / organization:	Name: Goldman Sachs Group Inc; NAICS: 523150; Name: Institute for Supply Management; NAICS: 813910; Name: Morgan Stanley; NAICS: 523150, 523920
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.2
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162960815
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-global-slowdown-dents-factories/docview/2162960815/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

HEALTH CARE

Affordable Care Act

Ruling Is Appealed

Sixteen states appealed a Texas judge's ruling that invalidated the Affordable Care Act, opening the next phase of legal proceedings over the fate of the Obama-era health-care law.

The ACA, which overhauled the nation's health insurance system in 2010, will remain in effect during the appeals process, which could last a year -- or potentially longer if the case lands at the Supreme Court. That timeline also means the health-care law will likely continue to be a major political issue, including in the 2020 presidential campaign.

The appeal will go to the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, based in New Orleans, which will soon set out a schedule to consider the case. Thursday's short legal filing, by 16 Democratic-led states and the District of Columbia, was the first step in the appeals process.

-- Brent Kendall and Stephanie Armour

CHICAGO

Alderman Charged in

Attempted Extortion

Federal officials charged Chicago Alderman Edward Burke with attempted extortion as part of a continuing investigation into the longest-serving member of the city council in Chicago history.

According to a 37-page complaint filed Thursday in federal court by the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, Mr. Burke, 75 years old, demanded the owner of a fast-food restaurant hire his private law firm before he would issue a permit to remodel a restaurant in his district in 2017.

Chicago has been anticipating charges against Mr. Burke, who has been on the council for nearly 50 years, since the FBI raided his offices in November and again in December. The investigation is "active and ongoing," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Joseph D. Fitzpatrick, in an email.

Mr. Burke, who was released on a $10,000 bond after a brief court appearance Thursday afternoon, didn't return a call seeking comment. In a statement after the initial raid, he expressed certainty that he would ultimately be cleared as he had in other investigations he has faced over the years.

-- Douglas Belkin

ECONOMIC DATA

Jobless Claims

Increased Last Week

The number of Americans filing applications for new unemployment benefits rose by more than expected last week, but remained at a low level indicative of a tight labor market.

Initial jobless claims, a proxy for layoffs across the U.S., increased by 10,000 to a seasonally adjusted 231,000 in the week ended Dec. 29, the Labor Department said Thursday.

Economists surveyed by The Wall Street Journal expected 220,000 new claims last week. Claims for the week ended Dec. 22 were revised up to 221,000. The four-week moving average of claims, a steadier measure, fell last week by 500 to 218,750.

-- Harriet Torry

EDUCATION

College Operator

Settles investigation

For-profit college operator Career Education Corp. will offer $493.7 million in debt relief to 179,529 former students to settle allegations that it misled prospective students about costs, transfer credits and the value of its credentials in the workplace.

The agreement with attorneys general of 48 states and the District of Columbia covers students who attended any Career Education school that closed before Jan. 1 of this year, or who left American InterContinental University or Colorado Technical University by Dec. 31, 2013.

The company, which denies wrongdoing, already settled with New York. It expects to enter a separate stipulated judgment with California, which the company said would bring the total debt relief to $556 million.

-- Melissa Korn

DETAILS

Subject:	Extortion; Appeals; Public prosecutors; Education; Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US; State court decisions; Debt cancellation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US Debt cancellation; Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	Texas; Chicago Illinois; United States--US; New York; Illinois; Washington DC; Colorado; California
Company / organization:	Name: Career Education Corp; NAICS: 551112, 611310; Name: American InterContinental University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Colorado Technical University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Wall Street Journal; NAICS: 513110, 516210; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.2
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162960802
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/2162960802/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 9 of 57

Stocks Slide As Growth Fears Spread --- Apple's warning, soft U.S. economic data heighten concern about global slowdown

Ramkumar, Amrith . Ramkumar, Amrith.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Fears about the health of the global economy intensified Thursday as downbeat news in the U.S. and around the world sent stocks falling and pushed bond yields to their lowest level in almost a year.

Investors were rattled by a rout in Apple Inc. shares, which dropped 10% following the iPhone maker's warning late Wednesday that quarterly sales in China would fall far short of estimates. Amplifying those concerns were another round of soft U.S. auto sales, for December, and the largest one-month drop in a key manufacturing survey since the end of 2008.

Just weeks after Federal Reserve officials penciled in two interest-rate increases in 2019, half of investors now expect the central bank to cut rates this year, up from about 10% a day earlier, CME Group data show.

Though economic data largely held up during last quarter's stock slide, Thursday's figures forced investors to reassess the impact of factors including trade tensions and tightening financial conditions on the U.S. economy.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 660 points, or 2.8%, while the S&P 500 dropped 2.5%, with both benchmarks logging their worst two-day start to a year since 2000.

The yield on the 10-year U.S. Treasury note, which often is factored into mortgage rates and other consumer borrowing, slid below 2.6% for the first time since January 2018 as it posted its largest one-day drop in seven months. Since bond yields fall when prices rise, the move is a sign that investors are shifting to safer investments and bidding up government debt.

While worries of a slowdown have persisted for months, Apple's first cut in its quarterly revenue forecast in more than 15 years crystallized Wall Street fears that tech behemoths could face fallout from weakening economic conditions and trade disputes that threaten corporate earnings.

Many investors had largely discounted that possibility when pushing valuations of Apple and Amazon.com Inc. to $1 trillion each last summer. Analysts at the time said the duo and its peers would be able to continue expanding their revenue growth even if tariffs curbed economic activity outside the U.S.

But Wednesday's letter to investors from Apple Chief Executive Tim Cook was a sign that the largest tech companies are also vulnerable to economic shifts. Tepid growth in China, which has powered much of the global expansion in recent years, and other emerging markets appears to be dragging on the U.S.

Apple's 10% slide marked its largest one-day drop since January 2013 and pushed the stock to its lowest level since April 2017. The company shed nearly $75 billion from its market value, roughly the size of Qualcomm Inc., General Electric Co. or Morgan Stanley, according to Dow Jones Market Data. From its peak in early October, Apple has lost almost $430 billion in market value.

Combined with slumping raw materials prices, falling Treasury yields and declining stock prices, some investors are seeing a worrying picture of growth world-wide.

"All of it is coming home to roost more directly in the United States," said Jim Paulsen, chief investment strategist at Leuthold Group. "The slowdown is here and happening."

Analysts in December cut their 2019 earnings forecasts on more than half the companies in the S&P 500 index, according to FactSet, the first time that had happened in two years. Kevin Hassett, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said in an interview Thursday with The Wall Street Journal that he expects other companies with exposure to China also will face challenges.

"There are signs that the Chinese economy is slowing sharply," he said. "Multinational firms with profits in China are probably going to see at least that part of their profit picture sour a little bit."

While some analysts think a resolution to trade friction between the U.S. and China could boost the outlook for global growth, others are skeptical. They said tariffs already imposed and the Federal Reserve's four interest-rate increases last year hurt corporate activity. Shipping giant FedEx Corp. recently lowered profit targets for its fiscal year, also citing slowing economic activity abroad.

Thursday's market turbulence was the latest illustration of those growth fears dragging down a range of investments - worries that spurred the worst December for U.S. stocks since 1931. The price of copper, an industrial metal often viewed as a growth indicator, tumbled 2.1% to its lowest level since August. The commodity is mired in a bear market, defined by a drop of 20% from a recent peak.

Weak economic data Wednesday and Thursday added intensity to continued choppy trading, analysts said, heightening the focus on Friday's jobs report for December.

The Institute for Supply Management said Thursday its manufacturing index fell to 54.1 in December, well below the 57.9 figure expected by economists.

Economic figures in the U.S. are trending lower, undershooting targets in a manner not seen last year, analysts said. "That's having the alarm bells go off with many clients and investors," said Torsten Slok, chief international economist at Deutsche Bank. "The cocktail of these things happening at the same time is what makes this situation more precarious."

As the stock market's selloff has continued, a number of assets are increasingly moving in tandem.

Rolling correlations between the S&P 500 and the S&P GSCI commodities index and the S&P 500 and the MSCI All Country World ex U.S. index have generally stayed above 0.85 in recent weeks, according to a Dow Jones Market Data analysis of 20-day periods.

Correlation is measured on a scale of minus-1 to 1. A reading of minus-1 means two assets are moving perfectly in opposite directions, while a correlation of 1 means they are moving perfectly in tandem.

"There's been nowhere to hide," said Trip Miller, managing partner at Gullane Capital Partners, which owns Apple shares.

Mr. Miller said his firm would continue to hold its Apple stake, but he expects it will take a long time for the company to come up with new products to boost sales.

"Because of their size, when they tend to go through a cycle like this, I would expect it to take a year or more to come out of it," Mr. Miller said. "This is not a quick fix for them to get back on the growth side."

Shares in Caterpillar Inc. and Boeing Co. -- industrial stalwarts tied to global growth -- each fell more than 3.8% Thursday, while the PHLX Semiconductor index of chip makers tumbled 5.9%.

Kevin Landis, chief investment officer of Firsthand Capital Management, said it has been frustrating to watch the firm's shares in Roku Inc. also slide on days when larger tech companies like Apple fall. The maker of streaming-media devices and software slumped 7.4% Thursday and is down nearly 60% since the start of October.

"It's a really crummy feeling," Mr. Landis said. "At some level everything is connected."

Credit: By Amrith Ramkumar

DETAILS

Subject:	Investments; Dow Jones averages; Daily markets (wsj); Stock exchanges; Stock prices; Corporate profits; Economic activity; Tariffs; Prices
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices Corporate profits Economic activity Tariffs; Corporation: Apple Inc; Industry: 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
People:	Cook, Timothy D
Company / organization:	Name: Apple Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334220, 513210
Classification:	52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162957826
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-slide-as-growth-fears-spread-apples/docview/2162957826/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 10 of 57

U.S. News: House Vote Raises Stakes in Standoff

Peterson, Kristina . Peterson, Kristina.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- House Democrats passed a spending package aimed at reopening the federal government, defying President Trump's demands for border-wall funding on their first day in power.

With a partial government shutdown approaching two full weeks, the House voted, 241-190, on Thursday night to approve a package that included six uncontroversial spending bills crafted in the Senate that would fund most of the government through September. To separate the feud over the border wall, Democrats also passed a stopgap spending bill funding the Department of Homeland Security, which oversees the wall, through Feb. 8.

"What we are asking President Trump and Senate Republicans to do is take yes for an answer," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D., Calif.) told reporters Thursday evening. "The president cannot hold public employees hostage because he wants to have a wall."

Mr. Trump has already notified Congress that he would veto the House Democratic approach. His opposition had prompted Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) to decline consideration of the House package.

"I would call it political theater, not productive lawmaking," Mr. McConnell said of the package, which Democrats presented on their first day in power at the House. "The Senate will not take up any proposal that does not have a real chance of passing this chamber and getting a presidential signature. Let's not waste the time."

Hours ahead of the House vote, Mr. Trump had made a surprise appearance in the White House press briefing room to insist on billions for a southern-border wall.

"Without a wall, you cannot have border security," said Mr. Trump, who was flanked by union officials for the border-patrol and immigration-enforcement agents. He said he had been flooded with public support for his demand of $5 billion for the wall, which Democrats have rejected as ineffective and expensive.

A Quinnipiac University poll last month found that a majority of Americans, 54%, oppose building a wall, while 43% support it. A CNN poll, also from December, found 57% against it and 38% for it. Mr. Trump didn't take questions from reporters.

With the House bill stalled in the Senate and no indication that Mr. Trump or Democrats were preparing to back down, lawmakers and aides said this week that the partial shutdown could stretch on for weeks.

Top congressional leaders met with Mr. Trump on Wednesday at the White House but made little progress in the negotiations, according to lawmakers. Mr. Trump and congressional leaders were expected to meet again Friday to resume discussions.

The House package includes six spending bills that have bipartisan support in the Senate. The bills would reopen the nine federal agencies affected by the shutdown: the Environmental Protection Agency and the Departments of Justice, State, Housing and Urban Development, Transportation, Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce and Interior.

The short-term homeland security bill would extend current funding for the department, including money for fencing, bollard barriers, levees and technology -- but not a concrete wall. Republicans have said those funds constitute wall money, while the Democrats frame the package as funding border security and not a wall.

The package passed by the House Thursday night differs from a Senate bill passed in December that would have funded all of the currently closed agencies, including DHS, but only through Feb. 8.

Mr. Trump's stance has shifted on what Congress must send him to reopen the government. He initially demanded $5 billion for the border wall, then signaled he would sign the short-term spending bill passed by the Senate, before reversing himself.

Recently, Vice President Mike Pence and acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney made an offer centered on $2.5 billion in border security to Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D., N.Y.) that Democrats rejected. But on Wednesday, Mr. Trump said he wouldn't accept a deal with $2.5 billion in border security.

Democrats said Mr. Trump's changing positions have made it impossible for anyone else to negotiate on his behalf.

Natalie Andrews and Alex Leary contributed to this article.

Credit: By Kristina Peterson

DETAILS

Subject:

National security; Bills; Funding; Border security; Presidents; Federal government; Leadership; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns; Border walls

Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership Government shutdowns Shutdowns; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, D onald J; Mulvaney, Mick; Pelosi, Nancy; Schumer, Charles E; McConnell, Mitch; Pence, Mike
Company / organization:	Name: Quinnipiac University; NAICS: 611310; Name: CNN; NAICS: 516210; Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120; Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110; Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120; Name: Department of Homeland Security; NAICS: 922120; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162954563
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-house-vote-raises-stakes-standoff/docview/2162954563/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-30

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 11 of 57

World-Wide

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Pelosi was elected House speaker as the 116th Congress convened and Democrats passed bills aimed at bringing the partial government shutdown to an end, but the measures were expected to stall in the Republican-controlled Senate.

Russia charged an American citizen who is detained in Moscow with espionage and said he can be held for up to two months.

Pope Francis warned U.S. Catholic bishops against disunity in the church, amid conflicts over how to respond to a clerical sex-abuse crisis.

The ex-logistics manager of the Sinaloa cartel testified against "El Chapo" Guzman at the accused drug lord's trial in Brooklyn.

A North Korean diplomat in Rome has gone into hiding along with his wife, South Korean lawmakers said.

A Saudi court opened the country's first trial in the killing of dissident journalist Khashoggi.

Fewer migrants crossed the Mediterranean last year than in 2017, and fewer drowned in the attempt, U.N. data show. U.K. officials asked the Royal Navy to help patrol the English Channel to deter people trying to enter the country illegally by boat.

French authorities arrested a prominent protester, signaling a crackdown on the yellow-vest movement.

Died: Herb Kelleher, 87, maverick co-founder of Southwest Airlines.

DETAILS

Subject:

Catholicism; Government shutdowns; Scandals

Business indexing term:

Subject: Government shutdowns

Location:	English Channel; Russia; United States--US; United Kingdom--UK
People:	Francis (Pope); Kelleher, Herb
Company / organization:	Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120; Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120; Name: Southwest Airlines Co; NAICS: 481111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162954538
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/2162954538/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Pelosi Lines Up Legislative Priorities

Jamerson, Joshua; Bykowicz, Julie . Jamerson, Joshua; Bykowicz, Julie.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- California Rep. Nancy Pelosi was elected speaker of the House of Representatives on Thursday with two immediate legislative priorities: ending a partial government shutdown and passing a government-overhaul package changing campaign-finance rules and government-ethics law while expanding voting rights. On ethics, the package would prohibit senior government officials from lobbying their former executive-branch peers for two years after they have left government. It also calls for establishing a nationwide automatic voter-registration system.

On the campaign-finance front, the legislation would require several classes of politically active organizations, including tax-exempt 501(c)(4) charitable groups, to disclose donors who have given $10,000 or more during an election cycle. Currently, those groups don't have to disclose their donors.

The bill also allocates a pool of taxpayer money to match certain small-dollar donations 6-to-1; aides didn't disclose how much money would be set aside for that initiative, which is meant to encourage grass-roots campaigning. "The most important thing we can do is come out strong with passage in the House," said Rep. John Sarbanes (D., Md.), who was one of the chief architects of the legislation, known as House Resolution 1, or H.R. 1.

House Republican leaders haven't been briefed on the Democrats' plans, according to a senior GOP aide. But Republicans in the House are already lining up against some portions of the bill.

"I haven't been a supporter of taxpayer funding to run political campaigns. I don't think that's a good idea," Rep. Steve Scalise of Louisiana, the No. 2 House Republican, said Wednesday, when asked about the Democratic plan to be unveiled Friday.

Credit: By Joshua Jamerson and Julie Bykowicz

DETAILS

Subject:	Bills; Federal government; Speakers of the House; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government shutdowns Shutdowns
Location:	California; United States--US; Louisiana
People:	Sarbanes, John P; Scalise, Steve; Pelosi, Nancy
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: House of Representatives; NAICS: 921120

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 4, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162954536
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-pelosi-lines-up-legislative-priorities/docview/2162954536/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 13 of 57

World News: U.S. Urges Russia to Explain Detention

Simmon, Ann M; McBride, Courtney; Kesling, Ben . Simmon, Ann M; McBride, Courtney; Kesling, Ben.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The Trump administration raised questions about Russia's detention of an American citizen as the U.S. ambassador to Moscow visited him on Wednesday.

Russia's main security agency, the FSB, detained Paul Whelan of Novi, Michigan, on Dec. 28 while he was "carrying out spying activities," the agency said, providing no further details.

Mr. Whelan's family has said he was traveling in the country for a wedding and denied he was involved in espionage. He works as a security official at a Michigan auto supplier, but was on personal travel, his company said.

Jon Huntsman, the U.S. ambassador, visited Mr. Whelan Wednesday in the Lefortovo prison in Moscow and "expressed his support" while offering U.S. Embassy assistance, a State Department spokeswoman said.

Mr. Huntsman also spoke by telephone with Mr. Whelan's family, the State Department said, declining to elaborate, citing privacy considerations.

U.S. officials, who had asked on Monday for access to the detained American, formally expressed concerns about the delay in access to Mr. Whelan, the official said.

Earlier Wednesday, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, during a trip to Brazil, said the U.S. wanted to know more about why Russia was holding Mr. Whelan.

"We've made clear to the Russians our expectation that we will learn more about the charges, come to understand what it is he's been accused of and if the detention is not appropriate we will demand his immediate return," Mr. Pompeo said.

If convicted of spying, Mr. Whelan could face up to 20 years in jail.

Mr. Whelan's detention comes as relations between Washington and Moscow grow increasingly hostile.

In recent years, the U.S. has hit Russia with a series of sanctions for wrongdoings, including alleged interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election, a charge the Kremlin denies.

The detention follows the U.S. arrest of a Russian citizen, Maria Butina, who last month pleaded guilty to conspiracy to influence American politics and could face as much as six months in prison. Russian officials have said they view Ms. Butina as a political prisoner and hostage held on false charges.

Russia has retaliated in the past against punitive U.S. and Western diplomatic moves.

Credit: Ann M. Simmon, Ben Kesling, Courtney McBride

DETAILS

Subject:	Espionage; Public officials; Diplomatic & consular services
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92812 : International Affairs
Location:	Brazil; Russia; United States--US; Michigan
People:	Butina, Maria; Pompeo, Mike
Classification:	92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.7
Publication year:	2019

Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162745961
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-urges-russia-explain-detention/docview/2162745961/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 14 of 57

Banking & Finance -- Currencies: Yen Soars Against Dollar on Growth Worries

Banerji, Gunjan . Banerji, Gunjan.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The yen surged against the dollar in late New York trading Wednesday, as a weaker-than-expected sales forecast from Apple Inc. and Chinese data raised concerns over a slowing global economy.

The dollar fell 1.5% against the yen at 107.20 yen. Other currencies sensitive to China and global growth, such as the Australian dollar, were also lower.

Apple lowered its sales forecast for its fiscal first quarter, a rare revision to its guidance, blaming slowing sales of smartphones and other devices in China.

It was the latest piece of negative news on China, whose economy has been bruised by its trade dispute with the U.S. An earlier report showed that China's manufacturing sector contracted in December, with an official measure of factory activity hitting its lowest level in nearly three years and pointing to gathering headwinds for the world's second-largest economy.

Some investors buy the yen during times of economic or political turmoil, believing it will hold its value better than other currencies when markets turn rocky.

The decline against the yen came on a day the dollar jumped in general. The WSJ Dollar Index, which measures the U.S. currency against a basket of 16 others, rose Wednesday by 0.4% to 90.11.

"Overall, 2019 has started as 2018 ended, with the outlook uncertain, the market mood cautious, and equity markets under pressure," wrote Nick Bannenbroek, head of currency strategy at Wells Fargo Securities in a note Wednesday.

Mr. Bannenbroek said he expects the dollar and Japanese yen to be among the strongest foreign-exchange performers early this year. The dollar just finished its best year since 2015, gaining 4.3% in 2018.

The euro fell 1.1% against the dollar to $1.1344, its biggest percentage decline since June.

Credit: By Gunjan Banerji

DETAILS

Subject:	Currency; Yen; American dollar; Foreign exchange money reports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Currency Yen American dollar Foreign exchange money reports
Location:	China; New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111; Name: Apple Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334220, 513210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B. 10
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162710958
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/banking-amp-finance-currencies-yen-soars-against/docview/2162710958/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 15 of 57

Business News: Qatar Airways Taps Asia --- Carrier buys 5% stake in Chinese airline as it tries to fight effects of Mideast economic feud

Parasie, Nicolas; Cameron, Doug . Parasie, Nicolas; Cameron, Doug.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Qatar Airways said Wednesday that it has acquired a small stake in China's largest airline, adding to a roster of minority holdings in carriers on three continents.

State-owned Qatar Airways said it bought a 5% stake in publicly listed China Southern Airlines Co. late last month and plans to expand cooperation as part of efforts to tackle an economic blockade from some of the Middle East state's neighbors.

The move comes as the three largest U.S. airlines step up their efforts to persuade the U.S. government to take action against Qatar Airways over alleged state subsidies.

A grouping led by American Airlines Group Inc., Delta Air Lines Inc. and United Continental Holdings Inc. allege Qatar

Airways has used government funds unfairly and distorted competition. Qatar Airways denies the allegation. Qatar Airways' purchase of a 49% stake in Air Italy, and that carrier's expansion of trans-Atlantic routes, has become a focus of U.S. airlines' concerns. Delta Chief Executive Ed Bastian said last month that Doha-based Qatar Airways was "cheating" on an agreement reached last year between the U.S. and Qatar governing air services between the countries.

Qatar Airways' purchase of a stake in China Southern is particularly sensitive. Some Chinese airlines also receive government support, but U.S. carriers have avoided any criticism of the practice in China, in stark contrast to their views on subsidies in the Middle East. This reflects the importance of the large China market, as well as existing relationships between U.S. and Chinese airlines.

American already owns a 7.4% stake in China Southern and this year plans to expand links with the airline. An effort by Qatar Airways to take a stake in American two years ago was rebuffed by the U.S. carrier.

Qatar Airways already has minority stakes in three other American partners: International Airlines Group SA, which owns British Airways and Iberia; Latam Airlines Group SA of Chile; and Cathay Pacific Airways Ltd., based in Hong Kong.

Delta, American and the Partnership for Open and Fair Skies -- a lobby group that includes United and some airline unions -- all declined to comment on Qatar Airways' stake in China Southern.

U.S. airline executives have previously said that while some Chinese airlines might receive government support, it is on a far smaller scale than that afforded to Qatar Airways and two neighboring carriers, Dubai-based Emirates Airline and Etihad Airways in Abu Dhabi.

Qatar Airways' stake in China Southern is valued at roughly $530 million based on current stock prices, and Chief Executive Akbar Al Baker said in a written statement that there is "massive potential for cooperation in the future."

The Middle East carrier is also contending with the effects of a regional economic feud. In 2017, the United Arab Emirates, Saudi Arabia, Bahrain and Egypt cut diplomatic, air and maritime links with Qatar, accusing their neighbor of fomenting unrest in the region. Doha denies those charges.

Mr. Al Baker has said the airline would have to continue growing outside its traditional Middle East markets to help soften the effects of Qatar's current isolation.

Qatar Airways posted a $69 million loss for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2018, blaming the continuing regional feud for a drop in passengers and revenue.

The company's fuel bill also increased as the carrier was forced into flying longer routes to circumvent its neighbors' airspace.

Credit: By Nicolas Parasie and Doug Cameron

DETAILS

Subject:	Embargoes & blockades; Cooperation; Alliances; Subsidies; Airline industry; Equity stake; Airlines
Business indexing term:	Subject: Subsidies Airline industry Equity stake; Industry: 48111 : Scheduled Air Transportation
Location:	Italy; Middle East; Egypt; Qatar; Dubai United Arab Emirates; Abu Dhabi United Arab Emirates; Hong Kong; Bahrain; Asia; United States--US; Saudi Arabia; China; Chile; United Arab Emirates
People:	Al Baker, Akbar; Bastian, Ed

Company / organization:	Name: United Continental Holdings Inc; NAICS: 551112; Name: International Airlines Group; NAICS: 481111; Name: American Airlines Group Inc; NAICS: 551114; Name: Qatar Airways; NAICS: 481111; Name: Cathay Pacific Airways Ltd; NAICS: 481111; Name: Latam Airlines Group SA; NAICS: 481111; Name: Delta Air Lines Inc; NAICS: 481111; Name: Emirates Airline; NAICS: 481111; Name: Etihad Airways; NAICS: 481111
Classification:	48111: Scheduled Air Transportat ion
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuestdocument ID:	2162701173
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-qatar-airways-taps-asia-carrier/docview/2162701173/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: President Expects to Win Over Romney

Bender, Michael C . Bender, Michael C.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- President Trump said he was surprised by recent criticism from fellow Republican Mitt Romney, saying that the party's 2012 presidential nominee would have won that election if he campaigned "the way he fights me."

Mr. Trump predicted that Mr. Romney, Utah's senator-elect, will soon fall in line and support him, and said he didn't expect him or any other Republican to challenge him for the party's presidential nomination in 2020.

"He agrees with many of the things we've done, and many of the things we have in mind, and we'll see what happens," Mr. Trump told reporters Wednesday at the White House.

Mr. Romney, who will be sworn in to the Senate on Thursday, criticized the president's character in an op-ed article published on Tuesday in the Washington Post.

Mr. Romney's article drew a rebuke from one of his nieces, Republican Party Chairwoman Ronna Romney McDaniel. "For an incoming Republican freshman senator to attack @realdonaldtrump as their first act feeds into what the Democrats and media want and is disappointing and unproductive," Ms. McDaniel posted on Twitter.

Natalie Andrews contributed to this article.

Credit: By Michael C. Bender

DETAILS

Subject:	Candidates
Location:	United States--US; Utah
People:	Trump, Donald J; Romney, W Mitt; McDaniel, Ronna Romney
Company / organization:	Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120; Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813 940; Name: Twitter Inc; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162699918
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-president-expects-win-over-romney/docview/2162699918/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 17 of 57

Ex-de Blasio Fundraiser Convicted --- A federal jury found businessman Jeremy Reichberg guilty of bribing NYPD officials

Zolan Kanno-Youngs; Rebecca Davis O'Brien . Zolan Kanno-Youngs; Rebecca Davis O'Brien.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

A Brooklyn businessman and former fundraiser for Mayor Bill de Blasio was convicted Wednesday of conspiring to bribe New York Police Department officials for favors.

A federal jury in Manhattan found the businessman, Jeremy Reichberg, guilty on four of five counts of conspiracy, bribery and obstruction of justice. He was acquitted of paying bribes or gratuities to his co-defendant, former NYPD Deputy Inspector James Grant.

Meanwhile, the jury acquitted Mr. Grant, who was accused of accepting bribes and conspiracy. The verdicts capped a two-month-long trial that included tawdry allegations involving the upper ranks of the NYPD, as well as accounts of the easy access Mr. Reichberg and the government's star witness, businessman Jona Rechnitz, had to Mr. de Blasio's administration.

At an unrelated news conference on Wednesday, Mr. de Blasio said he didn't pay attention to the trial because "it had nothing to do with me."

Mr. Reichberg, who is set to be sentenced on April 4, faces a maximum of 65 years in prison.

Messrs. Reichberg and Grant were arrested in June 2016, one of several cases to arise from a corruption investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the NYPD and the Manhattan U.S. attorney's office. Federal prosecutors outlined a network of bribery and favor-trading among top law-enforcement officials and politically connected members of the city's Orthodox Jewish community who paid for lavish trips, prostitutes and other gifts in exchange for police favors.

During the trial, prosecutors said Mr. Grant accepted bribes -- including flights, home improvements and sex with a prostitute -- from Mr. Reichberg and Mr. Rechnitz, who in exchange received police escorts, expedited gun-license applications and assistance with parking tickets.

Ives Bonilla, a juror in the trial, who captured the attention of the courtroom when he yelled "Bravo!" for all to hear during the closing arguments of Mr. Grant's lawyer, said there was too much evidence against Mr. Reichberg, while Mr. Grant "was just a dupe."

The juror said other police officials Mr. Reichberg and Mr. Rechnitz allegedly bribed should have been charged in the trial, and not Mr. Grant.

Mr. Reichberg's lawyer, Susan Necheles, said she plans to appeal the guilty verdict. She said she should have been allowed to submit additional evidence that showed Mr. Rechnitz was untruthful.

Mr. Reichberg was involved in Mr. de Blasio's political fundraising, which itself was under investigation by the FBI and the U.S. attorney's office. In March 2017, prosecutors said they wouldn't bring charges against the mayor and his associates related to those efforts.

Mr. de Blasio repeatedly has said his administration didn't provide special favors to Mr. Rechnitz and Mr. Reichberg. John Meringolo, Mr. Grant's lawyer, said: "I'm very happy that Jimmy Grant gets this opportunity to try and rebuild his life."

At the trial, lawyers for the defendants sought to discredit Mr. Rechnitz, and argued that prosecutors had mischaracterized simple favors as federal crimes, saying there was no quid pro quo dynamic in Mr. Grant's and Mr. Reichberg's longstanding friendship.

Katie Honan contributed to this article.

Credit: By Zolan Kanno-Youngs and Rebecca Davis O'Brien

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Public prosecutors; Bribery; Obstruction of justice; Conspiracy; Criminal investigations; Acquittals & mistrials; Legal arguments
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	United States--US; New York
People:	Grant, James; de Blasio, Bill; Rechnitz, Jona; Reichberg, Jeremy

Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697367
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/ex-de-blasio-fundraiser-convicted-federal-jury/docview/2162697367/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 18 of 57

World News: China Is First to Land a Spacecraft on the Far Side of Moon

FULL TEXT

SHANGHAI -- China has successfully landed a probe on the far side of the moon, the latest milestone for the country's ambitious space program.

The Chang'e-4 touched down in the Von Karman crater Thursday morning Beijing time, China's state news agencies reported. Having landed intact, it will deploy a rover to gather samples that could provide insights into the moon's internal composition.

More than just a technological achievement, the mission's success is a publicity coup for President Xi Jinping, who has personally endorsed China's space efforts, said Dean Cheng, an expert on China's space capabilities at the Washington-based Heritage Foundation. "This is huge -- a major first," said Mr. Cheng. "For Xi Jinping and his great Chinese revival, this is a wonderful example."

The landing makes China the first country to deploy a probe on the far side of the moon. To help achieve the feat, a communications relay satellite called Magpie Bridge was positioned 50,000 miles beyond the moon last June to bounce transmissions between the Chang'e-4 and terrestrial ground stations.

The Chang'e-4 began its descent early Thursday and then hovered 100 meters, or 330 feet, above the moon's surface to enable its sensors to pick out the smoothest spot for landing, before completing its approach, state media said.

The craft was launched from southwest China last month and took 4 1/2 days to reach the moon.

The first two Chang'e missions studied the moon from orbit, while 2013's Chang'e-3 was China's first probe to reach the lunar surface. A follow-up mission, the Chang'e-5, will attempt to gather lunar samples and return them to Earth. The mission's success heats up the competition between China and the U.S. to become the first in half a century to land astronauts on the moon -- and more broadly to claim leadership in space.

China aims to start building a lunar base by 2025 and to man the facility by 2030. In the long term it hopes to mine the moon for energy resources. The U.S. plans to return to the moon in around 2023.

Both countries face daunting technical hurdles. China's new superheavy lift rocket, the Long March 5, failed during its maiden flight in 2017 and has yet to fly again. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is still developing both the spacecraft and rocket it will need to return American astronauts to the lunar surface.

Credit: By Trefor Moss

DETAILS

Subject:	Astronauts; Moon; Ground stations
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92711 : Space Research and Technology
Location:	China; Beijing China; United States--US
People:	Xi Jinping
Company / organization:	Name: Heritage Foundation; NAICS: 54 1720; Name: National Aeronautics & Space Administration--NASA; NAICS: 927110
Classification:	92711: Space Research and Technology

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.16
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697364
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-china-is-first-land-spacecraft-on-far/docview/2162697364/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 19 of 57

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

ILLINOIS

Catholic Bishops to Pray Over Scandal

U.S.-based Roman Catholic bishops gathered Wednesday for a weeklong retreat near Chicago on the church sexual-abuse scandal that organizers say will focus on prayer and spiritual reflection and not formulating policy. Last fall, the Vatican blocked U.S. bishops from taking measures at this month's retreat to address the scandal because U.S. church leaders didn't discuss the legally problematic proposals with the Holy See enough beforehand. The rebuke from Rome was contained in a letter from a Vatican official before the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops met in November. The move stunned abuse survivors and some other Catholics demanding actions. The retreat also is a prelude to a summit of the world's bishops at the Vatican next month to forge a comprehensive response to the crisis that has lashed the church. The meetings follow two blistering reports during 2018 from state attorneys general -- in Illinois and Pennsylvania -- alleging negligence by state church leaders.

-- Associated Press

MISSOURI

Michael Brown Case Prosecutor Is Fired

St. Louis County's new prosecuting attorney is shaking up his staff just two days into the job, his spokeswoman confirmed Wednesday, and a veteran assistant prosecutor who presented evidence to the grand jury after the fatal police shooting of Michael Brown in Ferguson is reportedly among those let go.

Former Ferguson Councilman Wesley Bell defeated 28-year incumbent Bob McCulloch in the August Democratic primary and ran unopposed in November. He was sworn in Tuesday, becoming the first-ever African-American to hold the office.

Mr. Bell's election victory was seen by many as a referendum on Mr. McCulloch's handling of the investigation of Darren Wilson, the white Ferguson officer who killed Mr. Brown, a black and unarmed 18-year-old, after they got into a scuffle on Aug. 9, 2014, setting off months of sometimes-violent protests.

Mr. McCulloch turned the case over to a grand jury, which decided in November 2014 not to indict Mr. Wilson. Mr. Wilson resigned from the police force that same month.

-- Associated Press

OBITUARY

Musician Daryl Dragon Is Dead at 76

Daryl Dragon, the cap-wearing Captain of The Captain and Tennille who teamed with then-wife Toni Tennille on such hits as "Love Will Keep Us Together" and "Muskrat Love," died Wednesday at age 76.

Mr. Dragon died of renal failure at a hospice in Prescott, Ariz., according to a spokesman. Ms. Tennille was by his side. The duo divorced in 2014 after nearly 40 years of marriage, but they remained close and Ms. Tennille had moved back to Arizona to help care for him.

Mr. Dragon and Ms. Tennille met in the early 1970s and began performing together, with Ms. Tennille singing and Mr. Dragon on keyboards. Their breakthrough came in 1975 when they covered the Neil Sedaka-Howard Greenfield song "Love Will Keep Us Together," which topped the charts and won a Grammy for record of the year. They followed with a mix of covers such as "Muskrat Love" and "Shop Around" and original songs, including Ms. Tennille's "Do That to Me One More Time," which hit No. 1 in 1980. They also briefly starred in their own television variety show.

-- Associated Press

WEATHER

Cold Spell Hits

Western States

The weather was flipped Wednesday throughout much of the West, with snow falling on cactuses in the Arizona desert and Anchorage seeing balmy weather -- at least by Alaska standards.

In Phoenix, the overnight low was 30 degrees for the first time in five years and more cold temperatures were expected Thursday.

The Tucson area saw as much as 6 inches of snow.

Elsewhere, the National Weather Service issued a freeze warning in the Nevada county where Las Vegas is located.

Snow fell and stuck Tuesday on a desert highway over a mountain just 20 minutes outside the city.

Albuquerque saw heavy snowfall and icy roads that caused many government agencies and schools to close.

The cold weather and snow are "quite uncommon" for the area, National Weather Service meteorologist Glenn Lader said.

In Arizona, Nogales, a city on the Mexico border, had about 6 inches of snow.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Cold; Snow; Weather; Scandals; Catholicism
Location:	Mexico; Chicago Illinois; United States--US; Alaska; Arizona; Illinois; Pennsylvania; Nevada; Vatican City; Las Vegas Nevada
People:	Sedaka, Neil; Brown, Michael; Wilson, Darren; Bell, Wesley
Company / organization:	Name: Holy See; NAICS: 813110; Name: National Weather Service-US; NAICS: 924120; Name: United States Conference of Catholic Bishops; NAICS: 813110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.5
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697350
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/2162697350/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 20 of 57

Banking & Finance: Inflows Into China Startups Cool

Steinberg, Julie . Steinberg, Julie.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The flood of money rushing into Chinese internet startups has slowed, dashing hopes of quick windfalls for many investors.

Just six months ago, investors from the U.S. to Hong Kong were pouring cash into internet companies in China that were raising funds privately or going public, sending valuations soaring. Then a sharp turn in markets during the summer hammered the share prices of many newly listed tech companies, sending a chill through the sector.

Large investors say there is still money to be made in the sector, but they are more selective about what to invest in. Thousands of private Chinese tech companies raised a record $69.4 billion in equity financings in 2018, up 63% from 2017, according to CB Insights. The sum was more than triple the $21.4 billion that Chinese tech firms raised in a busy 2018 for initial public offerings, according to Dealogic.

The volume of stock sales has dropped off sharply of late. While some companies are still moving forward with listing plans, many have scaled back their fundraising ambitions. At least a dozen Chinese tech IPOs have been downsized or postponed in the past couple of months, according to bankers, and companies that earlier aimed for larger IPOs have had to settle for fractions of their fundraising targets.

They included Tencent Music Entertainment Group, which in December priced its New York IPO at the bottom of a proposed range and raised $1.1 billion, or about half of an earlier goal. Its market valuation at listing was 20% less than its earlier target.

Turbulent markets also are roiling companies that have yet to go public. "We're starting to see cracks in private valuations for Chinese technology companies, making us cautious in the near term," said Anton Levy, a managing director and global head of technology at private-equity firm General Atlantic.

The result is a funding lull for many smaller companies that could continue for a while.

"Some rationality has returned to China's private fundraising industry after years of irrational growth," said Zhou Wei, founder of China Creation Ventures, a venture-capital firm that focuses on early-stage investment in tech and media startups. He said tighter liquidity in mainland China also has made domestic investors wary.

In hindsight, some bankers say several public and private deals were priced too aggressively as investors eagerly bought into companies' optimistic growth projections.

Smartphone maker Xiaomi Corp. and e-commerce bookings app Meituan Dianping, which each raised more than $4 billion in Hong Kong IPOs in June and September 2018, have lost more than one-fifth of their market value. Most of the other IPOs of Chinese tech companies also have underperformed the broader market.

Some say the market wasn't ready for the influx of large deals in 2018. A global selloff in tech stocks didn't help either. Bankers expect lower IPO volumes in 2019 in Asia compared with 2018. Instead, more firms could opt to raise funds through other means, such as issuing convertible bonds.

Still, market volatility doesn't change the long-term opportunities that Chinese tech companies present, said Aaron Arth, head of the financing group for Asia excluding Japan at Goldman Sachs Group Inc.

"Investors will price that risk," he said. "Some of the noise from geopolitical and market events will impact valuations, but it won't impact access to capital broadly."

General Atlantic's Mr. Levy said the private-equity firm remains bullish in the long term on businesses built on stronger foundations and that have the potential to become top players in their fields regionally and globally.

Evidence of that comes from some industry front-runners which have had no trouble attracting investors. Bytedance Ltd., a Beijing-based startup that operates a popular Chinese news-aggregation app and short-form video platform, recently raised $3 billion from private investors in a deal that valued it at $78 billion, more than double what the company was worth a year ago.

An IPO of the rapidly growing company could take place as soon as 2019.

Stella Yifan Xie and Steven Russolillo contributed to this article.

Credit: By Julie Steinberg

DETAILS

Subject:	Startups; Acquisitions & mergers; Initial public offerings; Private equity; Equity; Entrepreneurial finance; Investments
Business indexing term:	Subject: Startups Acquisitions & mergers Initial public offerings Private equity Equity Entrepreneurial finance
Location:	Beijing China; New York; United States--US; China; Hong Kong; Asia; Japan
People:	Zhou Wei
Company / organization:	Name: Meituan Dianping; NAICS: 518210, 624210; Name: Goldman Sachs Group Inc; NAICS: 523150; Name: Tencent Music Entertainment Group; NAICS: 518210; Name: Xiaomi Corp; NAICS: 334220

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.10
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697343
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/banking-amp-finance-inflows-into-china-startups/docview/2162697343/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 21 of 57

U.S. News: New Faces Greet Trump at Cabinet Meeting

Bender, Michael C . Bender, Michael C.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- A slew of new faces surrounded President Trump at a cabinet meeting in which he expounded on a range of issues and aired grievances after spending much of the holidays alone in the White House amid a partial government shutdown.

During Wednesday's 95-minute discussion, the president was flanked on his right by David Bernhardt, the acting secretary of the Interior Department, and on the left by acting Defense Secretary Patrick Shanahan, who gently tapped his finger as the president criticized his former boss, Jim Mattis.

Mr. Trump said he "essentially" fired his former defense secretary after he underperformed in Afghanistan.

Mr. Mattis, a former Marine Corps general, submitted his letter of resignation in December, just after the president announced on Twitter an abrupt troop withdrawal from war-torn Syria, saying his views no longer aligned with the president's.

Highlighting an increase in military spending sought by the White House, the president asked of Mr. Mattis, "What's he done for me? How has he done in Afghanistan? Not too good. Not too good. I'm not happy with what he's done in Afghanistan and I shouldn't be happy."

Across from Mr. Trump at the cabinet meeting was Matthew Whitaker, the acting attorney general. At the far end of the large oval mahogany table was Andrew Wheeler, the acting head of the Environmental Protection Agency. At the other end, was Mick Mulvaney, the acting chief of staff, whose name the president mentioned several times, but was never called upon to speak.

As Mr. Trump opens the third year of his four-year term, he is increasingly focused on his re-election bid, people who have spoken to him in recent days said. These people said one of the president's main frustrations recently has been his sense that he hadn't been able to bank enough accomplishments during his first two years, and that he hasn't received enough credit for promises kept.

The president jumped from one issue to the next. Asked about when he would remove troops from Syria, Mr. Trump would only say soon. While answering that question, he waved a new letter from North Korea leader Kim Jong Un. "A great letter," Mr. Trump said, adding that Mr. Kim has stopped nuclear testing and launching missiles under his watch. Mr. Trump also claimed to have nearly eliminated Islamic State. "I'm the only person in the history of our country that could really isolate ISIS," he said.

Through it all, the president was seated in front of an unfurled "Game of Thrones"-style campaign poster of himself promoting new economic penalties against Iran. "Sanctions are coming," the poster read.

Credit: By Michael C. Bender

DETAILS

Subject:	Political appointments; Presidents; Federal government; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns; Attorneys general
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government shutdowns Shutdowns; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	North Korea; United States--US; Afghanistan; Iran; Syria

People:	Trump, Donald J; Shanahan, Patrick; Mattis, James; Kim Jong Un; Wheeler, Andrew; Mulvaney, Mick; Whitaker, Matthew
Company / organization:	Name: Twitter Inc; NAICS: 516210; Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940; Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697333
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-faces-greet-trump-at-cabinet-meeting/docview/2162697333/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Long Shutdown Risks Tax-Refund Delay

Rubin, Richard . Rubin, Richard.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- A prolonged government shutdown would likely delay billions of dollars in income-tax refunds. The Internal Revenue Service is one of the agencies that now lacks funding, and the U.S. tax collector has been operating with about 1 in 8 employees under the shutdown plan it uses outside the tax-filing season. During a shutdown, the IRS can continue activities that protect government property, and the agency may bring in more workers soon to prepare for the income-tax filing season. Even during a shutdown, the agency still processes some tax returns that include payments, keeps computer systems running and continues criminal investigations. But the IRS generally doesn't conduct audits, respond to taxpayer questions outside the filing season or -- brace yourself -- pay refunds.

A shutdown that gets resolved within a few weeks would have little ultimate effect on taxpayers, but lawmakers have made little or no movement toward a deal. That stalemate raises the prospect of an unprecedented extended closure during the individual income-tax filing season, which typically starts in mid-to-late January.

The IRS hasn't announced a start date yet for the 2019 filing season, the first under the tax law that Congress passed in 2017.

"We're in uncharted territory as each day gets longer," said Mark Steber, chief tax officer at Jackson Hewitt Tax Service Inc.

If the shutdown drags on, early filers won't receive the refunds they are expecting, a gap that could put pressure on congressional negotiators and President Trump to reach a deal.

By Feb. 2, 2018, the IRS had paid $12.6 billion in refunds to more than six million households. By Feb. 16, the IRS had paid $101.2 billion to nearly 32 million households. And by March 30, the IRS had paid $212 billion to 73 million households.

For many Americans, the tax refund is the single largest financial event of the year, and the people who tend to file early in the season are taxpayers who count on large refunds to pay down debt, catch up on bills or make major purchases. Those are disproportionately low-income households that benefit from the earned-income tax credit and other provisions that give them no income-tax liability or a net benefit from the income-tax system.

In turn, retailers count on those households spending their refunds in February. People who tend to owe additional taxes typically wait until near the mid-April deadline.

"Wealthier filers generally have more sophisticated returns and file later so they should not be affected as much" by an early season shutdown, said Floyd Williams, a former IRS director of legislative affairs.

Meanwhile, taxpayers may face more difficulty getting answers out of the IRS because the agency doesn't respond to taxpayer questions outside the filing season. The government may add people back to staff its toll-free phone lines once filing season starts, though it hasn't provided details yet.

"The commissioner's going to have to make a call: What does this mean for the beginning of the filing season?" said Mark Mazur, who was the top Treasury tax-policy official under President Obama.

During this first part of the shutdown, just 12.5% of the IRS's nearly 80,000 employees were considered exempt from furloughs. In early 2018, in preparation for potential shutdowns during the filing season, the IRS contingency plan made 43.5% of the agency's workforce exempt, suggesting many more staffers will return to work as filing season begins.

In addition, the agency received some two-year appropriations to implement the new tax law, so some activities related to the new law have been continuing, including updating technology and publications.

The coming filing season was already going to be challenging for the IRS because the tax-law changes affect the forms and rules for individual filers, which was likely to cause more questions and more calls than usual.

"You worry about the filing season because of the tax-law changes anyway. So there's no way that a shutdown is helpful," said Steven Miller, a former acting IRS commissioner. "The risk was already high as to whether the service could already get done what the service needed to get done with the paltry resources they already have."

Credit: By Richard Rubin

DETAILS

Subject:	Households; Federal government; Taxpayers; Tax refunds; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns; Tax services
Business indexing term:	Subject: Taxpayers Tax refunds Government shutdowns Shutdowns Tax services; Industry: 54121 : Accounting, Tax Preparation, Bookkeeping, and Payroll Services
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; Mazur, Mark; Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Jackson Hewitt Inc; NAICS: 533110, 541213; Name: Internal Revenue Service--IRS; NAICS: 921130; Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120
Classification:	54121: Accounting, Tax Preparation, Bookkeeping, and Payroll Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697327
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-long-shutdown-risks-tax-refund-delay/docview/2162697327/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text .
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 23 of 57

U.S. News: Test Strip Lets Drug Users Identify Fentanyl Contamination

Campo-Flores, Arian . Campo-Flores, Arian.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

There is a new tool to help battle the opioid epidemic that works like a pregnancy test to detect fentanyl, the potent substance behind the escalating number of deaths roiling communities around the country.

The test strip, originally designed for the medical profession to test urine, can also be used off-label by heroin and cocaine users who fear their drugs have been adulterated with the synthetic opioid fentanyl. The strips are dipped in water containing a minute amount of a drug and generally provide a result within a minute -- with one line indicating positive for fentanyl, and two lines negative.

Overdose-prevention organizations in the U.S. first started buying and handing out fentanyl test strips about two years ago, and they caught on quickly. Now, states like California and Rhode Island and cities such as Baltimore, Philadelphia and Columbus, Ohio, are distributing them, or plan to soon.

"This is an effective way to have people thinking about risks," said Louise Vincent, executive director of the Greensboro, N.C., chapter of the advocacy group Urban Survivors Union, which has been distributing strips since 2017. "It's so important to give people as many tools as we can."

The moves have encountered opposition. Elinore McCance-Katz, head of the federal government's Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, said the approach relied on the flawed premise that drug users would make rational choices. She also said the strips aren't guaranteed 100% accurate.

"We can't afford to create a false sense of security" for users, Dr. McCance-Katz wrote on the agency's blog in October. "Let's not rationalize putting tools in place to help them continue their lifestyle more 'safely.' "

Groups that work with drug users say the strips provide an additional means of saving lives, along with distributing overdose-reversal drug naloxone and clean needles. And they create another way to engage users and potentially steer them to treatment programs.

Several studies published in 2018 suggest test strips could alter drug users' behavior. Among a group of users who tested such drugs as cocaine, heroin and prescription painkillers with the strips, half got at least one positive result, according to a study published in November by researchers at Brown University and other institutions. Among those, 45% responded by using smaller amounts of the drug, 42% ingested it more slowly, and 36% did a test hit before taking a full dose.

Many of the advocacy organizations use fentanyl test strips made by Canadian biotechnology company BTNX Inc., and their sales have soared in the U.S., reaching 766,000 strips in 2018, as of mid-December, compared with 117,000 in 2017, said Chief Executive Iqbal Sunderani. The cost: $1 a piece.

The strips aren't approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. While they could fall under state drug-paraphernalia laws that usually ban the use of testing equipment, there isn't settled case law on the issue, said Lindsay LaSalle, director of public health law and policy at the Drug Policy Alliance. Some jurisdictions, including Maryland and Rhode Island, have passed measures making test strips legal.

Credit: By Arian Campo-Flores

DETAILS

Subject:	Cocaine; Heroin; Narcotics; Fentanyl
Location:	Baltimore Maryland; Maryland; California; United States--US; Ohio; Rhode Island
Company / organization:	Name: Brown University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Drug Policy Alliance; NAICS: 813940; Name: Food & Drug Administration--FDA; NAICS: 922190
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697325
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-test-strip-lets-drug-users-identify/docview/2162697325/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 24 of 57

Treasurys Extend Rally After China Data

Goldfarb, Sam . Goldfarb, Sam.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The nearly two-month-long rally in U.S. government bonds continued into the new year as investors scooped up safer assets following soft Chinese manufacturing data.

The yield on the benchmark 10-year U.S. Treasury note settled at 2.659% Wednesday, compared with 2.684% Monday. U.S. markets were closed Tuesday for New Year's Day.

Yields, which fall when bond prices rise, declined overnight after the Caixin China manufacturing purchasing managers index fell to 49.7 in December from 50.2 in November. It was the first time since May 2017 that the reading has been below 50, the mark that separates expansion from contraction.

Concerns about the global economy have helped push down Treasury yields since early November. A run of lackluster Chinese economic data -- combined with a continued trade dispute between the U.S. and China and signs of slowing growth in Europe -- all have contributed to investors' pessimism, boosting the appeal of safer assets such as Treasurys while depressing stock prices.

Wednesday's move is a "knee-jerk reaction to weak data and concerns about global growth," said Larry Milstein, head of government and agency trading at R.W. Pressprich & Co.

Pointing to signs that the U.S. economy is on solid footing, Federal Reserve officials have penciled in two interest-rate increases this year following their four rate increases in 2018. Still, investors are skeptical, with futures markets indicating that most don't expect any rate increases over the next 12 months.

Investors will have their next chance to hear from Fed Chairman Jerome Powell on Friday, when he will be interviewed at an economics conference in Atlanta along with his predecessors Janet Yellen and Ben Bernanke.

Minutes from the Fed's most recent meeting will be released Jan. 9, while the central bank's next policy meeting will take place on Jan. 29-30.

Notably, tumbling Treasury yields aren't leading to lower borrowing costs for businesses, as investors demand higher rates on assets such as corporate bonds. The average U.S. speculative-grade corporate-bond yield, for example, has jumped to around 8% from 6.2% in early October, according to BloombergBarclays data.

All eight policy meetings this year will be followed by a news conference with Mr. Powell, in contrast to recent years when news conferences were held quarterly.

While Treasury yields often rise when the Fed increases its benchmark federal-funds rate, they also can fall if investors think the central bank is raising rates too aggressively in a manner that would significantly slow the economy.

Credit: By Sam Goldfarb

DETAILS

Subject:	Investments; Credit markets (wsj); Purchasing managers index; Treasuries; Bond markets; Central banks; Yield
Business indexing term:	Subject: Purchasing managers index Treasuries Bond markets Central banks Yield; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	China; United States--US; Europe; Atlanta Georgia
People:	Bernanke, Ben; Yellen, Janet L; Powell, Jerome
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.11
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
column:	Credit Markets
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697123
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/treasurys-extend-rally-after-china-data/docview/2162697123/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 25 of 57

World News: Brazil's Leader Moves To Revamp Economy

Lewis, Jeffrey T . Lewis, Jeffrey T.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

SAO PAULO -- Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro's new government is moving quickly to impose changes to the economy intended to boost sluggish growth, while signaling plans to cut the deficit in part by scaling back Brazil's pension system.

Mr. Bolsonaro issued many presidential decrees on Tuesday after being sworn in that included a cut to a planned increase in the minimum wage, a money-saving reduction in the number of government ministries and a victory for the country's powerful agricultural sector.

But the Bolsonaro administration's biggest challenge will be attacking the giant deficits generated by Brazil's generous pension system, his new economy minister said at his own swearing-in ceremony on Wednesday.

"Pension reform is the first and the biggest challenge," said Paulo Guedes, as he took charge of a new ministry that combined the finance, planning and industry ministries.

Mr. Bolsonaro's party doesn't have enough votes on its own to get laws approved in either house of Congress, so his government will have to seek support from other parties. Efforts by previous presidents to reduce pension spending have met resistance from unions, legislators and the judiciary.

Mr. Bolsonaro won Brazil's October presidential elections on a platform that included a strong law-and-order plank, a popular commitment in a country with tens of thousands of murders a year, along with market-pleasing pledges to cut the budget deficit and reduce the role of the state in the government.

With his mix of market-friendly economic policies and social conservatism at home, Mr. Bolsonaro plans to align Brazil more closely with developed nations and particularly the U.S., shifting South America further to the right after decades of mostly leftist rule.

Most important for investors, Mr. Bolsonaro has promised to fix a deepening fiscal crisis left behind by years of free spending by left-wing governments.

"The government won't spend more than it takes in," he vowed during his inauguration speech.

Credit: By Jeffrey T. Lewis

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Budget deficits
Business indexing term:	Subject: Budget deficits; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	South America; Brazil; United States--US
People:	Bolsonaro, Jair
Company / organization:	Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.16
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	2162697121
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-brazils-leader-moves-revamp-economy/docview/2162697121/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 26 of 57

World News: Fire Cripples Car Carrier in Pacific

Paris, Costas . Paris, Costas.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

A Japanese-owned car carrier bound for Hawaii was ablaze Wednesday in the middle of the Pacific Ocean with four sailors feared dead and one other missing, according to the U.S. Coast Guard.

The captain of Sincerity Ace reported a major fire aboard the Mitsui OSK Lines-operated carrier and an intent to abandon ship after efforts to control the blaze failed.

Sixteen crew members, including the captain, were rescued by nearby merchant vessels.

Of the five remaining members, four were "unresponsive and unable to grab onto lifesaving equipment to be brought aboard" and one was still missing, the Coast Guard said.

A search for the missing crew member was under way. The Coast Guard deployed two planes to assist with the rescue and another was dispatched by the U.S. Navy from Japan.

The fire broke out on New Year's Eve, 2,070 miles northwest of the Hawaiian island of Oahu, which is about half the distance to Japan. The 650-foot-long ship, owned by Japan's Shoen Kisen Kaisha Ltd., was en route to Honolulu from Yokohama, Japan, and lost power. The owner has dispatched towboats to salvage the ship.

"The vessel is still on fire and listing," Sara Muir, a Coast Guard spokeswoman in Honolulu, said Wednesday. "The weather is a little better today than before but the towboats are still days away."

Five merchant ships were involved in the rescue of the Sincerity Ace's sailors.

Credit: By Costas Paris

DETAILS

Subject:	Sailors; Evacuations & rescues; Fires; Missing persons
Location:	Hawaii; United States--US; Pacific Ocean; Japan
Company / organization:	Name: Coast Guard-US; NAICS: 928110; Name: Department of the Navy; NAICS: 928110; Name: Mitsui OSK Lines Ltd; NAICS: 488510
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.6
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697118
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-fire-cripples-car-carrier-pacific/docview/2162697118/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Work-Visa Website Still Shut After Crash

Clozel, Lalita; Simon, Ruth . Clozel, Lalita; Simon, Ruth.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The Labor Department received nearly 100,000 temporary worker visa requests in the first five minutes of New Year's Day, an unprecedented demand that caused the online submissions portal to crash, the government said Wednesday.

Thousands of small businesses, including landscaping companies, restaurants and other seasonal businesses, remained in limbo as the website remained closed, a roadblock in the first step of the complex H-2B visa application process that yields a limited number of slots and requires approval from three government agencies.

In a notice posted on the visa-application portal, the Labor Department said it "is working diligently to have the system ready within a few days to accept a record number of H-2B applications" and would provide a further update on Thursday.

On New Year's Eve, business owners and immigration lawyers across the country counted the clock to midnight to get a head start on the competitive process to obtain visas for temporary workers in the spring and summer.

The number of H-2B visas granted each year is capped at 66,000, divided evenly between two six-month periods. The Labor Department said login volume was about 30 times higher in the first few minutes after it opened Tuesday, compared with New Year's Day 2018.

"Everybody was watching their clock at 12 midnight Eastern time," said Elizabeth Buckley, an immigration attorney in Lexington, Ky., "because we know if you're one hour late, you're going to be capped out."

On Jan. 1, 2018, businesses filed requests for more than 81,000 workers for the following summer season. In response, the Labor Department changed the process, turning it into a first-come, first-served system where every second counts, fueling the rush to sign up. On top of that, the tight U.S. labor market has increased demand for H-2B visas.

After obtaining a certification from the Labor Department, businesses must document their attempts to hire U.S. workers for the positions and then file petitions to the Department of Homeland Security, which implemented a lottery system last year in response to swelling demand.

The temporary glitch exacerbated an already fraught process, which creates uncertainty for companies needing to make staffing plans or bid contracts ahead of the upcoming busy season.

"We are all just in disbelief that the demand was so much that the website crashed," said Todd Callewaert, president of Rena's Fudge Shops, which operates a hotel, six restaurants, three fudge shops and other businesses on Mackinac Island, Mich.

Credit: By Lalita Clozel and Ruth Simon

DETAILS

Subject:	Passports & visas; New year; Immigration; Workers; Websites
Business indexing term:	Subject: Workers; Industry: 92812 : International Affairs

Location:	United States--US; Mackinac Island
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Homeland Security; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.2
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697100
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-work-visa-website-still-shut-after-crash/docview/2162697100/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Anti-Drone Suppliers Avoid Airports

Pasztor, Andy; Wall, Robert . Pasztor, Andy; Wall, Robert.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Despite world-wide concerns about unmanned aircraft buzzing around airports, suppliers of commercial drone-detection equipment generally have been looking elsewhere for sales.

With aviation authorities in the U.S., U.K. and other countries urging a go-slow approach to deploying such systems until regulations are in place, industry officials say military facilities, correctional institutions and stadiums currently are the primary customers for civilian technologies to track and deter unauthorized drones.

Air-safety regulators are worried that counterdrone systems designed to jam radio communications also could interfere with legitimate airport equipment and operations.

In the U.S., according to industry officials, the Federal Communications Commission's reluctance to authorize sales of hardware able to disrupt radio links has hobbled growth of the nascent counterdrone industry. Only a handful of U.S. airports have advanced drone-detection programs under way, according to industry officials, and nearly all are in the testing phase.

Congress, however, has instructed the Federal Aviation Administration to develop a strategy to permit wide use of counterdrone technologies across airports. Meanwhile, Airports Council International, a global trade and lobbying group, has called for clear guidance from governments about what kind of counterdrone technologies airports could install.

Christopher Williams, chief executive of antidrone equipment maker Citadel Defense Co., said the company was founded in 2016 to focus on protecting sites such as airports and sports venues from commercial drone incursions. But the Southern California company soon switched gears to focus on sales to the Defense Department while it waited for commercial prospects to develop. "Unfortunately, innovation outpaced regulation," Mr. Williams said.

To identify and deter drone intruders, companies are relying on a combination of mobile radars, video systems and acoustic devices, according to Pablo Estrada, vice president of marketing for San Francisco-based Dedrone Inc. He said Dedrone is working on both sides of the Atlantic to provide hardware and software to anticipate flight patterns, with the Pentagon and correctional facilities among customers most interested in the results.

Credit: By Andy Pasztor and Robert Wall

DETAILS

Subject:	Radio communications; Aviation; Drones; Airports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Airports; Industry: 48811 : Airport Operations
Location:	United States--US; Southern California; San Francisco California

Company / organization: Name: Airports Council International; NAICS: 813910; Name: Dedrone Inc; NAICS: 513210; Name: Citadel Defense Co; NAICS: 336411; Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120; Name: Federal Aviation Administration--FAA; NAICS: 926120; Name: Department of Defense; NAICS: 92 8110; Name: Federal Communications Commission--FCC; NAICS: 926130

Classification: 48811: Airport Operations

Publication title: Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

First page: A.3

Publication year: 2019

Publication date: Jan 3, 2019

Publisher: Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication: New York, N.Y.

Country of publication: United States

Publication subject: Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN: 00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 2162697098

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-anti-drone-suppliers-avoid-airports/docview/2162697098/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-06-06

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Colleges Press for Early Sign-Ups --- Some schools push prospective freshmen to commit, if accepted, in race to fill their spots

Belkin, Douglas . Belkin, Douglas.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Some colleges and universities have started asking students who have applied through the regular admissions process to try a binding option that would boost their chances and help the schools lock in acceptances.

Tulane University, Colorado College, Lehigh University and a handful of others now reach out to students who have submitted an application but haven't yet received a decision, asking them to commit to their school early if the application is successful. At some schools, the first early-decision round typically closes in November, and the second in January.

"If Tulane is your first choice school, you may want to consider switching to Early Decision II," with a Jan. 7 deadline, according to an email sent to an applicant and reviewed by The Wall Street Journal. "If you are admitted, your college search is over."

Not many schools have taken this approach but those that do say they are reminding students of their options. "We send informational emails that tell people the different options once they've applied," said Daniel Warner, vice provost for admissions and financial aid at Lehigh University.

Some high-school guidance counselors, students and parents say the emails are often read as pressuring students into committing to a college before they are ready. Students who receive these emails and decide to apply early decision aren't guaranteed to be accepted, but if they are admitted, they are obligated to pull all other applications. That means they can't compare different financial-aid packages.

"I've had discussions at forums about this complaint. We all want to serve the students, but at the end of the day I'm the dean of admissions and I have a responsibility to my institution," said Satyajit Dattagupta, dean of undergraduate admissions at Tulane.

Mr. Dattagupta said he introduced the emails last year and they yielded an additional 625 early-decision applications. Of that group, 95 earned admission and enrolled.

Early decision has been growing for years and is used by some schools to fill more than half of their incoming freshman class. For colleges, it helps guarantee enrollment at a time when they are competing more fiercely for students.

"We're all pushing early decision now," said Mark Hatch, Colorado College's vice president for enrollment. "This is a runaway train and it's not going to stop."

Kelsey Cohen, a high-school senior in Austin, Texas, applied to Tulane under a process that wouldn't bind her to go to the school if she was accepted. Last week, the school told her that her admission decision was deferred. It also asked her to consider applying under the next round of early decision, which has a Jan. 7 deadline.

That would mean if she were accepted, she would have to drop her applications to other schools.

Randy Cohen, Ms. Cohen's father, responded to his daughter via email: "They're just trying to force your hand."

Ms. Cohen said she thought the tactic was "dumb."

"If I didn't apply early decision the first time, I'm not going to apply after you defer me," she said.

Sara Harberson, a private admissions counselor in Lancaster, Pa., who advises high-schoolers on college application, says, "They are tapping into the students' own vulnerabilities to benefit themselves." She said this is the first year she has seen this tactic employed.

"A lot of the criticism is not off the mark," said Colorado College's Mr. Hatch, noting he didn't think the criticism would slow schools' use of the technique.

At Colorado College, 27% of students who applied early decision in 2018 were admitted compared with just 5% who applied regular admission. The overall admit rate for the year was 15%.

Mr. Hatch said by asking every student if they want to apply early decision, the college is making admissions more transparent. "We've opened it up to everyone," he said.

Credit: By Douglas Belkin

DETAILS

Subject:	Electronic mail systems; Students; College admissions; Schools
Location:	Colorado; Texas; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Lehigh University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Colorado College; NAICS: 611310; Name: Wall Street Journal; NAICS: 513110, 516210; Name: Tulane University; NAICS: 611310
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697078
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-colleges-press-early-sign-ups-some/docview/2162697078/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 30 of 57

World-Wide

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Trump and congressional leaders from both parties showed no sign of progress in resolving the partial government shutdown.

The IRS is one of the agencies that now lacks funding, and a prolonged stalemate would likely delay billions in tax refunds.

The Democratic majority poised to take control of the House has plans to make it easier to raise the federal borrowing limit.

The leaders of China and Taiwan sparred over the prospect of unification, showing a decades-old split remains potentially volatile.

China landed its Chang'e-4 probe on the far side of the moon, the latest milestone for the country's ambitious space program.

The Trump administration raised questions about Russia's detention of an American citizen, as the U.S. envoy to Moscow visited him.

A Labor Department online portal for seasonal work-visa requests remained down after a crash, leaving many businesses in limbo.

Brazil's new president issued decrees aimed at quickly making changes to the nation's economy.

Congo is being roiled by rising disorder in the wake of a long-delayed and chaotic presidential vote.

An ex-USC assistant coach entered a guilty plea in a college-basketball corruption scandal.

Died: Blake Nordstrom, 58, department-store heir.

DETAILS

Subject:	Government shutdowns; Tax refunds
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government shutdowns Tax refunds
Location:	China; Brazil; Russia; United States--US; Taiwan
People:	Nordstrom, Blake
Company / organization:	Name: Internal Revenue Service--IRS; NAICS: 921130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697072
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/2162697072/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2025-01-30
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 31 of 57

U.S. News: Democrats Aim To Loosen Rules On Debt Limit

Davidson, Kate; Peterson, Kristina . Davidson, Kate; Peterson, Kristina.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The Democratic majority poised to take control of the House has plans to make it easier to raise the federal borrowing limit.

In recent years, down-to-the-wire negotiations on Capitol Hill over the debt ceiling have raised concerns that the U.S. could default on its debt, alarming investors.

Democrats are hoping to avoid such showdowns, which have sometimes rattled markets, but Republicans have said that the votes on the debt limit have been useful in serving as a check on federal spending.

House lawmakers Thursday are set to vote on rules that would revive a measure known as the Gephardt rule, which would allow the chamber to suspend the debt ceiling at the same time it approves an annual budget. The provision would allow lawmakers to avoid taking a separate, direct vote on the borrowing limit.

Any debt-limit measure from the House would likely need 60 votes to pass the Republican-controlled Senate, which is unlikely to adopt its own version of the Gephardt rule, Senate GOP aides said. Republicans in recent years have pushed to pair any increase in the borrowing limit with spending cuts.

Still, the move by House Democrats could give momentum to bipartisan efforts to streamline the process.

"It does show that there is a strong desire, certainly among House Democrats [and] perhaps other constituencies in Congress, that the current mechanism for dealing with the debt limit is outdated and ineffective and carries costs and risks for the economy," said Shai Akabas, director of economic policy at the Bipartisan Policy Center.

The debt ceiling is set to be reinstated March 2 at a record $22 trillion, though BPC estimates the government will be able to conserve enough cash to keep paying its bills until at least midsummer. After that, the Treasury Department won't be able to tap bond markets to raise cash to fund government operations and could default on its debt -- unless Congress acts.

If the House approves the rule change, any budget resolution adopted would trigger the adoption of a separate resolution suspending the borrowing limit through the end of that fiscal year, which runs through September.

House lawmakers used the Gephardt rule, (named for former Rep. Richard Gephardt (D., Mo.), to make changes to the debt limit on 10 of 47 budget measures enacted into law between 1980 and 2010, according to the Congressional Research Service. The Senate has never used the approach.

In 2011, the House voted to repeal the rule after Republicans took control. Conservative GOP lawmakers have used the debt limit to push for spending changes, a strategy Democrats decried. One 2011 impasse left markets reeling and led credit-rating firm Standard & Poor's to downgrade the U.S. debt rating.

With a Republican in the White House, however, the conversation about the debt limit has shifted. President Trump has said he was open to eliminating the debt limit.

Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin has said he favored getting rid of the debt ceiling entirely, or at least making it easier to raise the borrowing limit.

Credit: By Kate Davidson and Kristina Peterson

DETAILS

Subject:	Bills; Legislators; Federal budget; Rating services; Bipartisanship
Business indexing term:	Subject: Federal budget Rating services; Industry: 56145 : Credit Bureaus 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; Gephardt, Richard A; Mnuchin, Steven T
Company / organization:	Name: Congressional Research Service; NAICS: 921120; Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120; Name: Bipartisan Policy Center; NAICS: 541720; Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120; Name: Standard & Poors Corp; NAICS: 523999, 541519, 561450; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	56145: Credit Bureaus; 92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.5
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 2162697048

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-democrats-aim-loosen-rules-on-debt-limit/docview/2162697048/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-30

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 32 of 57

World News: China's Leader Presses Taiwan to Unify -- Xi urges peaceful unification but says force remains an option; Taipei rejects proposal

Chun Han Wong . Chun Han Wong.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

BEIJING -- The leaders of China and Taiwan sparred over the prospects of unification, showing the decades-old split remains potentially volatile under intensifying pressure from Chinese President Xi Jinping to change the status quo. In a speech meant as an address to Taiwan on Wednesday, Mr. Xi said differences in political systems can't be used as an excuse to resist unification. He promised Taiwan's people a peaceful and prosperous future with the mainland while suggesting that Beijing's patience would wear thin if its overtures fail.

"Differences in systems aren't an obstacle to unification, much less an excuse for separatism," Mr. Xi said in televised remarks before an audience of officials in Beijing's Great Hall of the People.

He said unification between China and Taiwan is inevitable and that while Beijing prefers peaceful means for achieving that goal, military measures remain an option.

Mr. Xi's remarks were seen as a response to Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen, who said Tuesday in a New Year's Day address that the island's people want to preserve their own political system. Hours after Mr. Xi's speech the following day, Ms. Tsai rejected his offer of what is known as "one country, two systems." Such a framework would place the island under China's rule with limited autonomy, as in Hong Kong.

"Taiwan will never accept 'one country, two systems,'" Ms. Tsai said. "The vast majority of Taiwanese public opinion also firmly opposes 'one country, two systems.'"

With both leaderships digging in, China and Taiwan are locked into rising tensions, with a heightened risk of escalation, said Steve Tsang, director of the SOAS China Institute in London.

While bringing Taiwan under Communist Party control has been a longstanding priority for Communist leaders, Mr. Xi has pressed the issue with greater urgency, portraying unification as a marker of national greatness. His government has exerted political and economic pressure on Ms. Tsai since her election three years ago, to punish her for refusing to acknowledge that the mainland and the island are part of "one China" -- which her predecessor did.

Mr. Xi's speech on Wednesday marked a continuation of that campaign, modulating between inducements to unification and implicit threats.

"We are willing to create broad space for peaceful reunification but will leave no room for any form of separatist activities," Mr. Xi said. "We make no promise to renounce the use of force and reserve the option of using all necessary means."

The military option, Mr. Xi said, would be used to counter outside interference and Taiwan independence. Those labels have been applied to the U.S., Taiwan's main international backer, and to supporters of Ms. Tsai's Democratic Progressive Party, which traditionally backs independence.

President Trump has stepped up U.S. support for Taiwan, signing legislation in the past year to encourage higher-level contact, and the U.S. military has sent warships through the Taiwan Strait.

The U.S., like most countries, doesn't officially recognize Taiwan, having switched diplomatic recognition to China four decades ago.

In keeping with his recent approach toward Taiwan, Mr. Xi included enticements in his speech, including pledges to deepen trade links, build a common market and welcome Taiwanese youth to "fulfill dreams" on the mainland.

The mix of indirect threats with economic incentives shows that Beijing intends to maintain pressure on Taipei by driving a wedge between Ms. Tsai's government and Taiwan's people, especially those who disagree with her policies toward China, said Alexander Huang, a professor at Taipei's Tamkang University.

The Chinese leadership's approach toward Taiwan appeared to pay off when Ms. Tsai's party suffered heavy losses in local elections in November, leading her to step down as head of the party.

William Kazer in Taipei contributed to this article.
Credit: By Chun Han Wong

DETAILS

Subject:	Speeches; Armed forces; Leadership; Local elections
Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership; Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	China; Hong Kong; Beijing China; Taiwan Strait; United States--US; Taiwan
People:	Trump, Donald J; Xi Jinping; Tsai Ing-wen
Company / organization:	Name: Tamkang University; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.6

Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697047
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-chinas-leader-presses-taiwan-unify-xi/docview/2162697047/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 33 of 57

U.S. News: Coach Pleads Guilty to Bribery

Rebecca Davis O'Brien . Rebecca Davis O'Brien.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

A former assistant basketball coach at the University of Southern California pleaded guilty to conspiring to take bribes in exchange for steering top players to financial advisers and sports business managers.

Tony Bland was among four college assistant coaches arrested in September 2017 as a result of an investigation into alleged corruption in college basketball. His case was set to go to trial this spring.

Mr. Bland pleaded guilty Wednesday to one count of conspiracy to commit bribery. He faces a prison sentence of up to 12 months.

A lawyer for Mr. Bland, Jeffrey Lichtman, said the guilty plea "acknowledges an aberrant act in an otherwise law-abiding life." Mr. Bland hadn't intended to harm any players, Mr. Lichtman said, adding: "While the NCAA's system of how it treats college basketball players is antiquated and broken, Tony's actions still violated the law and he accepts that responsibility."

Mr. Bland, who played at Syracuse and San Diego State, was fired by USC last year.

He faced four counts, including soliciting bribes for himself from aspiring sports agent Christian Dawkins, arranging payments to the families of two players, and conspiring to defraud USC by causing the school to provide scholarships to athletes who were ineligible under NCAA rules because their families had received bribes.

Prosecutors alleged in charging documents that in July 2017, Mr. Bland met in a Las Vegas hotel room with several men, including Mr. Dawkins, a financial adviser and a purported investor (who was in fact an undercover agent from the Federal Bureau of Investigation). At the meeting, which was secretly recorded by the FBI, Mr. Dawkins said he would give Mr. Bland $13,000 in cash from the man posing as the investor.

In exchange for the bribe, prosecutors said, Mr. Bland agreed to make sure that two USC players would retain Mr. Dawkins's company. In subsequent phone conversations captured on wiretaps, Mr. Bland helped arrange for players' families to receive $9,000 in additional payments. "I definitely can get the players," Mr. Bland said in a call excerpted in the criminal complaint. "And I can definitely mold the players and put them in the lap of you guys."

The probe by the Manhattan U.S. attorney's office and the FBI yielded charges in 2017 in three separate schemes, one of which has already led to a guilty verdict.

In October, a Manhattan federal jury convicted an Adidas AG executive and two others on charges related to payments they made to the families of top-ranked players.

Two of the defendants in the Adidas case -- former consultant Merl Code and Mr. Dawkins -- were charged in the alleged scheme involving Mr. Bland. They are still set to face trial in that case, along with former University of Arizona assistant coach Emanuel "Book" Richardson and former Oklahoma State University assistant coach Lamont Evans.

Credit: By Rebecca Davis O'Brien

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal pleas; Trials; Bribery; College basketball; Sports agents; Coaches & managers
Business indexing term:	Corporation: Adidas AG; Industry: 71141 : Agents and Managers for Artists, Athletes, Entertainers, and Other Public Figures
People:	Bland, Tony
Company / organization:	Name: National Collegiate Athletic Association--NCAA; NAICS: 813990; Name: Adidas AG; NAICS: 315250, 316210, 339920; Name: University of Southern California; NAICS: 611310; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	71141: Agents and Managers for Artists, Athletes, Entertainers, and Other Public Figures
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697045
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-coach-pleads-guilty-bribery/docview/2162697045/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 34 of 57

Investors Bet Fed Rates Will Stay Put

Kruger, Daniel; Timiraos, Nick . Kruger, Daniel; Timiraos, Nick.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Investors increasingly believe the Federal Reserve won't raise interest rates in 2019, a sign of fading confidence that the U.S. economic expansion will continue at the stable pace the central bank foresaw just two weeks ago.

Whether investors are right will turn on how much U.S. economic growth slows in 2019, and the degree to which recent market volatility curbs business investment and hiring and weighs on consumer spending.

Fed officials already expect the U.S. growth rate to moderate this year as it faces slower growth abroad, waning government stimulus measures and the continued effects of the Fed's moves to drain its own monetary boost. For investors' bets to prove prescient, growth would need to slow below the 2.3% rate Fed officials expected when they raised rates last month and penciled in two more increases for 2019. The recent market turbulence could make investor skittishness a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Fed-funds futures, which investors use to bet on the direction of Fed policy, on Wednesday showed a 91% probability that the central bank's policy makers will finish the year with interest rates at or below their current level. That is a reversal from early November, when futures prices indicated a 90% probability that rates would end 2019 higher than they are now.

Futures even show a small chance that rates will fall this year -- raising the possibility of a market shock or economic downturn by year's end.

On Wednesday, U.S. stocks closed slightly higher after a tumultuous opening session of 2019. The Dow Jones Industrial Average finished up 18.78 points, or less than 0.1%, at 23346.24, after flipping between gains and losses. The S&P 500 added 3.18 points, or 0.1%, to 2510.03, while the Nasdaq Composite rose 30.66 points, or 0.5%, to 6665.94. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note -- a reference rate for everything from mortgages to corporate loans -- settled at 2.659%, its lowest close in almost a year. The yield, which falls as bond prices rise, tumbled back below 3% in recent weeks after reaching multiyear highs in November.

Fed officials last raised rates by a quarter-percentage point to a range between 2.25% and 2.5% when they met Dec. 19. They also projected two more rate increases, but those boosts rely on a forecast that the economy will grow 2.3% this year, still above the 1.8% pace officials deem is likely over the long run.

If the economy looked likely to slow to a growth rate closer to the lower long-run trend, that would remove the impetus for rate increases this year. Signs that growth is likely to decline by more than officials project raise the chance that the Fed pauses in March from its recent quarterly pace of increases.

In the two weeks since Fed officials last met, stocks have fallen, yields on corporate debt have widened relative to those on safer government bonds and other measures of financial conditions have tightened considerably.

By raising costs for businesses and households to borrow and invest, tighter conditions could slow growth more than central-bank officials anticipated.

Fed officials made relatively modest changes to their growth projection: Their median growth forecast for 2019 edged down to 2.3% from the 2.5% they had projected in September. Because financial conditions had also tightened, the downward revision was enough to reduce the median projection by analysts of fed-funds rate increases in 2019 to two from three.

This sets up a tension between the central bank -- which must manage rates in keeping with its twin goals of stable prices and full employment -- and investors, many of whom would prefer looser monetary policy.

The Fed's rate increases have also attracted criticism from President Trump. Mr. Trump said stocks had faced a "little glitch" last month but predicted they would recover at a cabinet meeting Wednesday. "We need a little help from the Fed," he said.

Meanwhile, a key bond-yield indicator tracked by Fed economists is signaling rates could be cut in 2020.

Research published last summer by economists Eric Engstrom and Steve Sharpe said comparing the difference between the yields on three-month Treasury bills and the yield implied by futures markets for the same bills some six quarters later produced a more reliable gauge of market-derived recession probabilities than traditional measures of the yield curve, such as the spread between two- and 10-year Treasuries.

This "near-term forward spread" turned negative on Wednesday for the first time since March 2008.

"The predictive power of our near-term forward spread indicates that, when market participants expected -- and priced in -- a monetary policy easing over the next 18 months, their fears were validated more often than not," wrote Messrs. Engstrom and Sharpe.

Fed Chairman Jerome Powell has said that the Fed's policy isn't on a fixed course and that it reacts to changes in the economy. At a news conference last month he pointed to the Fed's decision to slow the pace of rate increases in 2016 after worries of a growth slowdown in China fanned fears of recession. After projecting four rate increases in December 2015, the Fed raised its benchmark rate just once in 2016.

"We know that the economy may not be as kind to our forecasts next year as it was this year," Mr. Powell said last month. "Unforeseen events as the year unfolds may buffet the economy and call for more than a slight change from the policy projections released today."

Tighter financial conditions haven't yet shown up in most economic data, but a handful of recent surveys have pointed to softer manufacturing activity. An index that tracks U.S. manufacturing activity is set to be released Thursday morning by the Institute for Supply Management. Economists surveyed by The Wall Street Journal expect the index reading to decline to 57.9 in December from 59.3 in November.

Tighter financial conditions and weaker U.S. data prompted economists at Goldman Sachs last week to revise down their U.S. growth forecast for the first half of this year to 2% from 2.4%. They expect 1.8% growth in the second half. Meantime, economists at Morgan Stanley expect the economy to grow just 1.7% this year, the slowest pace since 2012, with quarterly growth declining to a low of 1% in the July-to-September quarter.

Credit: By Daniel Kruger and Nick Timiraos

DETAILS

Subject:	Futures; Growth rate; Dow Jones averages; Daily markets (wsj); Stock exchanges; Stock prices; Economic conditions; Federal Reserve monetary policy; Central banks; Interest rates; Economists; Economic growth; Recessions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices Economic conditions Federal Reserve monetary policy Central banks Interest rates Economists Economic growth Recessions; Industry: 92113 : Public Finance Activities 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US; China
People:	Trump, Donald J; Powell, Jerome
Company / organization:	Name: Dow Jones & Co Inc; NAICS: 513110, 513130, 516210, 523210; Name: Goldman Sachs Group Inc; NAICS: 523150; Name: Morgan Stanley; NAICS: 523150, 523920; Name: Institute for Supply Management; NAICS: 813910; Name: Wall Street Journal; NAICS: 513110, 516210
Classification:	92113: Public Finance Activities; 52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank; 52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019

Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697043
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/investors-bet-fed-rates-will-stay-put/docview/2162697043/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 35 of 57

Business & Finance

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Apple slashed its quarterly revenue forecast for the first time in over 15 years, a move that was prompted by a downturn in iPhone sales in China. The company's shares fell 7.6% in after-hours trading.

Tesla cut prices for its entire vehicle lineup, raising concerns about future Model 3 demand after the sedan drove record deliveries in the latest quarter.

Investors increasingly believe the Fed won't raise rates in 2019, a sign of fading confidence that the U.S. economic expansion will continue at a stable pace.

The Dow recouped a nearly 400-point loss to finish the year's first trading day just short of a 0.1% gain. The S&P 500 and Nasdaq rose 0.1% and 0.5%, respectively.

Thousands of shale wells that were drilled in the last five years are pumping less oil and gas than their owners forecast to investors.

Lampert's ESL is interested in acquiring Sears' real estate for $1.8 billion if it fails to buy the retailer out of bankruptcy as a going concern.

Insurers are resisting premium increases on their reinsurance contracts despite big disaster losses in the past two years.

China ended a freeze on new videogame licenses, though Tencent and NetEase were omitted from the first round of approvals.

Hedge fund FrontFour has launched an effort to shake up the board of embattled advertising firm MDC.

DETAILS

Location:	China; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162697042
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/2162697042/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-11
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 36 of 57

Charter, Tribune at Impasse

Armental, Maria; Mullin, Benjamin . Armental, Maria; Mullin, Benjamin.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Tribune Media Co.'s television stations and the WGN America cable channel have gone dark for Charter Communications Inc.'s Spectrum customers after the companies failed to reach an agreement over content fees. About six million Spectrum subscribers in 24 markets lost access Wednesday to local television stations owned by Tribune, and more than 14 million subscribers nationwide lost access to WGN America, Tribune Media said.

The contract between the two companies expired at 5 p.m. Wednesday.

At issue is the amount of fees Tribune charges for carrying its stations, including local TV stations that are available free with an antenna.

The programming that became unavailable as a result of the impasse includes not only local news but also broadcasts of the National Football League playoffs and National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball games, Tribune said. "The NFL playoffs are in jeopardy -- beginning this weekend with critical games in some key markets like Indianapolis and Seattle," the company said. Charter said NFL games are available free on the NFL and Yahoo Sports mobile apps.

"Tribune is demanding an increase of more than double what we pay today for the same programming," Charter said in a written statement. "That is more than we pay any other broadcaster. They're not being reasonable."

Such fights over distribution fees have become commonplace in the TV industry. Verizon Communications Inc. and Walt Disney Co. averted a similar blackout late last month.

AT&T Inc.'s HBO and sister channel Cinemax went dark on Dish Network Corp.'s cable system in November after the two parties couldn't agree on terms.

This is the first time that Tribune Media programming has been blacked out on Charter's cable system since Charter's $60 billion acquisition of Time Warner Cable in 2016.

The programming blackout comes about a month after Nexstar Media Group Inc. announced a $6.4 billion deal to acquire Tribune Media, which owns more than 42 stations in major markets across the U.S.

Credit: By Maria Armental and Benjamin Mullin

DETAILS

Subject:	Television stations
Business indexing term:	Subject: Television stations; Corporation: Tribune Media Co Charter Communications Inc; Industry: 51612 : Television Broadcasting Stations
Location:	United States--US; Indianapolis Indiana
Company / organization:	Name: Tribune Media Co; NAICS: 516110, 516210; Name: DISH Network Corp; NAICS: 517112, 517410; Name: WGN America; NAICS: 516210; Name: Verizon Communications Inc; NAICS: 513210, 517111, 517112; Name: Time Warner Cable Inc; NAICS: 517111, 517112; Name: Yahoo Inc; NAICS: 516210, 519290; Name: National Football League--NFL; NAICS: 711211, 813990; Name: Walt Disney Co; NAICS: 512110, 516120, 711211, 713110; Name: AT & T Inc; NAICS: 517111, 517112; Name: Charter Communications Inc; NAICS: 517111, 517112; Name: Cinemax; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	51612: Television Broadcasting Stations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.6
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 3, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162695934
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/charter-tribune-at-impasse/docview/2162695934/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-02-14
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 37 of 57

World News: Detained American Isn't Spy, Family Says --- Paul Whelan, held by Russia, was in Moscow for wedding of fellow ex-Marine, brother says

Simmons, Ann M; Strobel, Warren P . Simmons, Ann M; Strobel, Warren P.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The family of an American detained in Russia over spying allegations said he was traveling in the country for a wedding and denied he was involved in espionage.

David Whelan, the twin brother of Paul Whelan, 48 years old, said his brother was a former Marine and former law-enforcement officer and that the family learned of his detention in Russia this week from media reports. Russia's main security agency, the FSB, said in a brief statement Monday that Paul Whelan was arrested Dec. 28 while "carrying out spying activities," but it provided no further details.

Mr. Whelan works as director of global security for BorgWarner Inc., an auto parts company in Auburn Hills, Mich., the company said, adding that it was in contact with U.S. authorities and has offered its full cooperation to help Mr. Whelan and the government. BorgWarner said Mr. Whelan was in Russia for personal reasons.

"He would not have knowingly broken any law, let alone one involving espionage," David Whelan told The Wall Street Journal.

The family said they were "deeply concerned for his safety and well-being. His innocence is undoubted, and we trust that his rights will be respected." In the statement, issued Tuesday, the family said it lost communication with Mr. Whelan on Dec. 28. That was highly unusual, they said, even when he was overseas.

David Whelan said the U.S. Embassy staff in Moscow was expected to see his brother "within a 72-hour window that has already started."

The State Department said Monday that the U.S. was aware of the detention of a U.S. citizen in Russia, but hasn't commented on his identity or occupation, citing privacy considerations. The department indicated Tuesday that U.S. officials had yet to be provided access to Mr. Whelan.

Mr. Whelan said his brother was in Moscow for the wedding of a fellow former Marine. He had traveled to Russia before "and understood the risks that country poses to Western travelers." Mr. Whelan said Paul traveled regularly related to his corporate security work.

"He was not in Russia on any work-related travel this visit," Mr. Whelan said.

If convicted of spying, Paul Whelan could face up to 20 years in jail.

David described his brother as "an incredibly kind person, intensely loyal to family . . . and friends."

The detention of Mr. Whelan threatens to intensify increasingly frosty relations between the U.S. and Russia. In the past four years, Washington has slapped Moscow with a series of sanctions for transgressions including the annexation of Crimea from neighboring Ukraine, interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election, and the Kremlin's alleged role in the poisoning of a former Russian spy in the U.K. Russia has denied tampering in the election or playing a role in the poisoning in Britain.

The Trump administration has also said it would withdraw from a Cold War-era missile treaty that it accused Moscow of violating. Russia has pushed back with measures including banning or raising the cost of selected Western imports. The detention comes on the heels of a high-profile arrest of a Russian citizen in the U.S. Last month, Maria Butina pleaded guilty to conspiracy to influence American politics. She could face up to six months in prison. Russian officials have said that Ms. Butina was arrested "under fabricated charges," and they view her as a political prisoner and hostage.

Ms. Butina's case raised scrutiny of U.S. and Russian human spying on each other's home turf. While it is hard to gauge, current and former U.S. security officials say such espionage continues at high levels.

Jim Oberman in New York and Chester Dawson in Detroit contributed to this article.

Credit: Ann M. Simmons, Warren P. Strobel

DETAILS

Subject:	Weddings; Poisoning; Espionage
Location:	Russia; United States--US; New York; Crimea; Ukraine; United Kingdom--UK; Detroit Michigan
People:	Butina, Maria
Company / organization:	Name: BorgWarner Inc; NAICS: 333618; Name: Wall Street Journal; NAICS: 513110, 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.6
Publication year:	2019

Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162459567
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-detained-american-isnt-spy-family-says/docview/2162459567/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 38 of 57

U.S. News: At Pentagon, Shanahan Aligns Vision With Trump's

Lubold, Gordon . Lubold, Gordon.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- A new acting secretary of defense has taken the reins at the Pentagon, vowing to work with President Trump to fulfill his goals for the military amid a broader transition across the Defense Department and the administration.

Pat Shanahan, a onetime Boeing Co. executive and previously the deputy secretary, was chosen by Mr. Trump after the president removed Defense Secretary Jim Mattis, who had submitted a resignation letter that cited his differences with the White House. It was unclear whether Mr. Shanahan will be nominated to fill the position permanently, officials said.

Mr. Shanahan assumed control of the Defense Department at 11:59 p.m. Monday, saying he looks "forward to working with President Trump to carry out his vision," along with other military and civilian leaders.

Mr. Shanahan confronts a range of issues, including Mr. Trump's plans to withdraw U.S. forces from Syria and Afghanistan. The president has indicated in recent days he will slow the drawdown of troops from Syria after first deciding the drawdown would be rapid; a final decision hasn't been made yet about how the reduction of forces will occur in Afghanistan, officials said.

Credit: By Gordon Lubold

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidents
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US; Syria; Afghanistan
People:	Trump, Donald J; Mattis, James
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Defense; NAICS: 928110; Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162396041
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-at-pentagon-shanahan-aligns-vision-with/docview/2162396041/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 39 of 57

Netflix Lures Activision Executive

Flint, Joe . Flint, Joe.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Netflix Inc. is expected to name Activision Blizzard Inc. Chief Financial Officer Spencer Neumann as its new chief financial officer as early as this week, a person familiar with the matter said.

Activision Blizzard said in a securities filing Monday that it was putting Mr. Neumann on paid leave and he would subsequently be fired for cause unrelated to the company's financial reporting or disclosure procedures. The videogame company said chief corporate officer Dennis Durkin would take over as chief financial officer, a post he previously held.

Mr. Neumann joined Activision Blizzard 18 months ago, and his contract hadn't expired, according to a securities filing. Netflix is known for poaching executives who are still under contract and has been sued over that practice by 21st Century Fox and Viacom Inc. Wall Street Journal parent News Corp and 21st Century Fox share common ownership.

Before working for Activision Blizzard, Mr. Neumann held several positions at Walt Disney Co. in its theme-park and television divisions. He also had stints at private-equity firms Providence Equity Partners and Summit Partners.

Mr. Neumann, who will be based in Los Angeles, will succeed David Wells, who announced his intention to step down as Netflix's chief financial officer in August.

News of Netflix's plans to hire Mr. Neumann were first reported by Reuters.

Sarah Needleman contributed to this article.

Credit: By Joe Flint

DETAILS

Subject:	Chief financial officers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Chief financial officers; Corporation: Netflix Inc Activision Blizzard Inc
Location:	Los Angeles California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Summit Partners; NAICS: 523910; Name: Netflix Inc; NAICS: 512120, 518210, 532282; Name: 21st Century Fox; NAICS: 516120; Name: Wall Street Journal; NAICS: 513110, 516210; Name: Viacom Inc; NAICS: 512110, 516110, 516120, 532282, 541850; Name: News Corp; NAICS: 513110, 516120, 551112; Name: Walt Disney Co; NAICS: 512110, 516120, 711211, 713110; Name: Activision Blizzard Inc; NAICS: 513210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395766
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/netflix-lures-activision-executive/docview/2162395766/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-30

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 40 of 57

U.S. News: Warren Takes Crucial Step Toward Presidential Run

Epstein, Reid J . Epstein, Reid J.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren kicked off Democrats' 2020 presidential campaign, becoming the party's first top-tier candidate to declare an intention to challenge President Trump.

Ms. Warren's Monday announcement that she is forming a presidential exploratory committee -- a precursor to a formal campaign apparatus -- is likely to begin a cascade of Democrats launching campaigns or exploratory committees in January to begin raising money prior to the first major fundraising deadline March 31.

California Sen. Kamala Harris has a book due to be released Jan. 8 and is expected to launch her campaign following a brief book tour. Four would-be candidates spoke at a liberal Iowa group's fundraising dinner two weeks ago. And former Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe said Sunday that he is considering a White House campaign. In all, more than two dozen Democrats are considering entering the contest.

The contours of the Democratic presidential field, which is expected to be the party's largest since 17 candidates ran in 1976, will be shaped by decisions made by former Vice President Joe Biden and Texas Rep. Beto O'Rourke. The two are each publicly weighing a run but haven't yet committed.

Ms. Warren, 69 years old, an Oklahoma-born former Harvard Law School professor with a specialty in bankruptcy law, saw her national political stature rise following the 2008 financial crisis. She was the architect of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and was President Obama's first choice to lead it before her nomination was blocked by Senate Republicans.

But she has seen her political stature within the party diminished since her October release of a genetic analysis that she said provided evidence of her Native American ancestry. That was received poorly within the party and was mocked by Mr. Trump.

Ms. Warren made no mention of her ancestry during her 4-minute, 30-second announcement video. "For the last two years, millions of people have done more than they ever thought they would to protect the promise of America," she said in the video. "Here's what we learned: If we organize together, if we fight together, if we persist together, we can win. We can and we will."

Republican National Committee Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel on Monday criticized Ms. Warren as "another extreme far-left obstructionist and a total fraud." In a Fox News interview Mr. Trump said, "I wish her well. I hope she does well. I'd love to run against her."

In a nod to contemporary Democratic voters' demands that candidates reveal more of their personality, Ms. Warren spent part of New Year's Eve live-streaming herself discussing her candidacy while drinking a beer from her kitchen in Cambridge, Mass. Mr. O'Rourke, meanwhile, aired video of himself and his wife drinking New Year's champagne from inside an igloo they built at a New Mexico ski resort.

Ms. Warren's standing within the party has fallen in recent months. In September, a poll of Iowa Democrats by the firm Focus on Rural America found she had support of 16% of would-be Iowa caucus-goers -- second only to Mr. Biden. By mid-December, Ms. Warren's support dropped to 9%, putting her in fifth place. She is planning a trip to Iowa this weekend.

Credit: By Reid J. Epstein

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Candidates; Primaries & caucuses; Bankruptcy laws
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bankruptcy laws; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Texas; New Mexico; United States--US; Massachusetts; California; Virginia; Iowa; Oklahoma
People:	Harris, Kamala; Trump, Donald J; O'Rourke, Beto; Warren, Elizabeth; Biden, Joseph R Jr; McAuliffe, Terence R; Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Consumer Financial Protection Bureau; NAICS: 926150; Name: Fox News Channel; NAICS: 516120; Name: Harvard Law School; NAICS: 611310; Name: Republican National Committee; NAICS: 813940; Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395764
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-warren-takes-crucial-step-toward/docview/2162395764/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 41 of 57

World News: Bolsonaro Sworn In, As Brazil Sees Shift

Pearson, Samantha; Trevisani, Paulo . Pearson, Samantha; Trevisani, Paulo.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

BRASILIA -- Jair Bolsonaro was sworn in as Brazil's first right-wing president elected since the end of military rule three decades ago, vowing Tuesday to restore order to a country hobbled by crime, corruption and a deepening fiscal crisis. The ex-army captain, who is recovering from a near-fatal stabbing during the election campaign, rode in an open-top Rolls-Royce under heavy security to Congress, where he formally took office in a ceremony boycotted by swaths of left-wing politicians.

Mr. Bolsonaro, 63 years old, stunned the political establishment in October by defeating the leftist Workers' Party and centrist PSDB party that have won every other presidential election since 1994.

Thousands of Mr. Bolsonaro's supporters came out to celebrate in the capital Brasilia, praising their new paratrooper-turned-president, who many see as a much-needed break from a corrupt and neglectful political class.

"For too long this country was governed to benefit the interests of political parties and not Brazilians. We will bring back order to this country," Mr. Bolsonaro said.

He said Brazilians should celebrate the beginning of their "freedom from socialism . . . and political correctness."

President Trump congratulated him on Twitter, saying "the U.S.A. is with you!"

With a mix of market-friendly economic policies and social conservatism at home, Mr. Bolsonaro plans to align Brazil more closely with developed nations and particularly the U.S.

About three-quarters of Brazilians believe Mr. Bolsonaro is "on the right track," according to a poll by Brazil's main industry lobby, CNI, last month, but he has evoked deep hatred and fear among the opposition.

During his 27 years as a congressman for various parties on the fringe of national politics, Mr. Bolsonaro was largely only known for offending gay people and women, and waxing nostalgic about the 1964-85 dictatorship he once served. Several of his ministers come from Brazil's armed forces.

On Saturday, his son and communications adviser Carlos Bolsonaro posted a video compilation of his father's most bellicose moments with the caption "cry you lefties." It shows Brazil's new president cursing "human rights" and firing rocket launchers.

Mr. Bolsonaro has adopted a more moderate tone, vowing to respect the constitution as the "guiding star" of democracy, and promising to govern for all.

Credit: By Samantha Pearson and Paulo Trevisani

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidents; Politics; Inaugurations
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Brazil; United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; Bolsonaro, Jair
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.7
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395651

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bolsonaro-sworn-as-brazil-sees-shift/docview/2162395651/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-09

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 42 of 57

Business News: Bill Gates Project Hit by Trade Fight

Greene, Jay . Greene, Jay.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Add Bill Gates to the list of executives whose businesses have been ensnared by the Trump administration's battle with China over technology and trade.

The tech tycoon and philanthropist said in an essay that a nuclear-energy project in China by a company he co-founded called TerraPower LLC is now unlikely to proceed because of recent changes in U.S. policy toward China. That leaves TerraPower, which had been working on the China project for more than three years, searching for a new partner and uncertain where it might be able to run a pilot of the nuclear reactor it has been developing, according to company officials.

Mr. Gates, TerraPower's chairman, helped start and fund the Bellevue, Wash., company, which incorporated in 2008, in a long-term bid to make nuclear reactors smaller, less expensive and safer.

Regulatory restrictions and limited federal funding made building the facility in the U.S. difficult and led TerraPower to look for partners abroad, Chief Executive Chris Levesque said. TerraPower signed a deal in 2015 with state-owned China National Nuclear Corp. to develop the technology, and, in 2017, agreed to build a demonstration reactor to test the technology in Cangzhou, about 130 miles south of Beijing.

But the U.S. Energy Department announced rules in October that, while not banning all nuclear deals with China, require a high degree of assurance that the technology wouldn't be used for military or other unauthorized purposes. The policy change was part of an effort by the Trump administration to thwart China's pursuit of critical U.S. technology, and came amid a broader trade battle between the two economic giants. The administration has placed tariffs on $250 billion of Chinese imports, from computer chips to seafood to bicycles, and has threatened to increase levies by March 1 unless it can strike a new trade deal with Beijing.

TerraPower, which has 180 employees, was counting on the China pilot to validate technology it has been working on for more than a decade. The company now is trying to figure out its options, Mr. Levesque said. "We're regrouping," he said. "Maybe we can find another partner."

The Energy Department is also encouraging TerraPower to look beyond China. The agency "sees opportunities for global exports of this technology to nations who seek to develop their own civilian nuclear-power programs for peaceful purposes," department spokeswoman Shaylyn Hynes said.

Mr. Gates, in a year-end essay posted on his personal website on Saturday, said TerraPower might be able to build its nuclear-reactor pilot project in the U.S., but only if there are changes to regulation.

The Microsoft Corp. co-founder said he intends to advocate for those changes in 2019 because he sees nuclear power as "the only carbon-free, scalable energy source that's available 24 hours a day."

"The world needs to be working on lots of solutions to stop climate change," he wrote. "Advanced nuclear is one, and I hope to persuade U.S. leaders to get into the game."

Credit: By Jay Greene

DETAILS

Subject:	Nuclear reactors; International trade
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade
Location:	China; Beijing China; United States--US
People:	Gates, Bill
Company / organization:	Name: China National Nuclear Corp; NAICS: 221113; Name: Microsoft Corp; NAICS: 334610, 513210; Name: TerraPower LLC; NAICS: 332410
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 2162395573

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-bill-gates-project-hit-trade-fight/docview/2162395573/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-30

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 43 of 57

Business News: Mining Firms Cut Output In Biggest U.S. Coal Region

Maidenberg, Micah . Maidenberg, Micah.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Miners in the nation's largest coal-producing region are leaving more of the fossil fuel in the ground as prices fall for alternatives, including natural gas, and demand erodes from power-generation customers.

Coal production from the Powder River Basin, an arid region spread over parts of Wyoming and Montana that produces about 40% of all U.S. coal, fell by one-third between 2008 and 2017. Demand is also expected to weaken this year. Many mining companies in the region have cut staff or benefits, reduced their exposure to the basin or left it entirely.

"We've seen in the last few years, especially with the amount of gas coming online and fuel switching, that's biting into our customer base," said Travis Deti, executive director of the Wyoming Mining Association. "That remains a concern for the future."

Production from the Powder River Basin was expected to rise slightly to about 338 million tons of coal in 2018, but that total is projected to fall to 329 million tons in 2019, according to a December report from Seaport Global analyst Mark Levin. Coal analyst John Hanou, of Hanou Energy Consulting LLC, forecasts weaker results, predicting that Powder River Basin output will drop to 315 million tons in 2019.

The drop in demand is expected despite the Trump administration's efforts to boost the coal industry by easing regulations.

Cloud Peak Energy Inc., the third-largest producer in the basin, said in November it is considering a sale as a result of coal-market declines. Cost-saving moves for Cloud Peak have included ending a medical plan for retirees. Shares in Cloud Peak, which are trading near 40 cents each, sank over 90% in 2018.

In 2017, Contura Energy Inc. exited the region, selling two mines to Blackjewel LLC, a closely held venture.

Peabody Energy Corp., the region's largest miner, has sought to relinquish Powder River Basin acreage, a move that moderates its exposure to the market for thermal coal, used in power plants.

The region remains a core area for Peabody, as it offers coal that is among the most competitive with natural gas, the company said. It described the relinquishment as trivial.

Credit: By Micah Maidenber

DETAILS

Subject:	Mining; Coal; Natural gas
Location:	Wyoming; Montana; United States--US; Powder River Basin
Company / organization:	Name: Peabody Energy Corp; NAICS: 212115; Name: Wyoming Mining Association; NAICS: 813910; Name: Cloud Peak Energy Inc; NAICS: 212114; Name: Contura Energy Inc; NAICS: 212114
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395535
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mining-firms-cut-output-biggest-u-s/docview/2162395535/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-09

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 44 of 57

Business & Finance

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

U.S. stocks closed out 2018 with their steepest annual declines since the financial crisis, but retail investors are trying to hold on despite intense volatility. The Dow, S&P 500 and Nasdaq lost 5.6%, 6.2% and 3.9%, respectively, for the year.

Analysts expect corporate profits to keep growing in 2019, but at a slower pace, another potential hurdle for the stock market.

Pharmaceutical firms are ringing in the new year by raising the price of hundreds of drugs, with Allergan setting the pace, according to a new analysis.

Saudi Arabia's flagship government investment arm has suffered prominent defections by Western executives, hampering it amid expanded responsibilities.

Huawei is holding off Nokia and Ericsson, its biggest rivals in the telecom-gear business, despite scrutiny by the U.S. and its allies.

House Democrats have put legislation responding to the 2017 Equifax hack back at the top of their agenda for this year.

Netflix is expected to tap Activision Blizzard finance chief Neumann as its new CFO as early as this week.

The EU will face headwinds in fulfilling its 2018 pledge to rebalance trade to avoid a bruising economic war with the U.S.

Chesapeake Energy, best known for its trailblazing pursuit of natural gas from shale formations, is now making a big bet on oil.

DETAILS

Location:	United States--US; Saudi Arabia
Company / organization:	Name: Allergan PLC; NAICS: 325412, 339113; Name: Netflix Inc; NAICS: 512120, 518210, 532282; Name: Activision Blizzard Inc; NAICS: 513210; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395472
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/2162395472/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09

LINKS

Document 45 of 57

World-Wide

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

North Korea's Kim offered a new peace overture in his New Year's address, saying his country is refraining from producing nuclear weapons, a gesture some experts interpreted as a potential opening for resuming talks with Trump.

The president ramped up pressure on Democrats to end an impasse over funding for a border wall, inviting them to a bipartisan meeting on Wednesday amid a partial government shutdown.

Sen. Warren of Massachusetts kicked off Democrats' 2020 presidential campaign, becoming the party's first top-tier candidate to declare an intention to challenge Trump.

Shanahan has taken the post of acting defense secretary after Mattis's exit, vowing to work with Trump to fulfill the president's goals for the military.

The family of an American detained in Russia over espionage allegations said he was traveling there for a wedding and isn't a spy.

Bolsonaro was sworn in as Brazil's first right-wing president elected since the end of military rule three decades ago.

The Labor Department's online portal for seasonal work-visa applications crashed on New Year's Eve amid heavy filing demand.

A German national drove into a crowd in Bottrop, in what police said appears to have been a deliberate attack motivated by xenophobia.

DETAILS

Subject:	Government shutdowns
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government shutdowns
Location:	North Korea; Brazil; Russia; Massachusetts; United States--US

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.1
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395394
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/2162395394/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 46 of 57

U.S. News: Demand Crashes Work-Visa Website

Clozel, Lalita; Simon, Ruth . Clozel, Lalita; Simon, Ruth.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The Labor Department's online portal for seasonal work-visa applications crashed on New Year's Eve, throwing thousands of landscapers, restaurant owners and other seasonal businesses into limbo as they make staffing plans for the spring and summer.

"For a lot of these companies, they cannot bid contracts without knowing that they have a stable workforce," said Sarah Molina, an immigration lawyer in St. Louis who stayed up late Monday to file nine H-2B visa applications on behalf of landscaping companies.

The online portal slowed down and then froze late Dec. 31 and early Jan. 1, according to users. Eventually, the Labor Department shut it down with a note apologizing for the system outage caused by overwhelming filing demand. Companies rush to file as soon as the application opens, as that allows their requests to be handled ahead of competitors for the limited number of slots.

None have been processed yet for the coming summer season, an agency spokeswoman said. The Labor Department will provide an update on Jan. 2, and will give at least 24 hours' notice before bringing it back online, she added.

The Labor Department is fully funded through September, and the problems with the online portal are unrelated to the partial government shutdown.

U.S. law caps the number of H-2B visas available every year at 66,000, divided evenly between a winter and summer season. In recent years, businesses have bumped up against the cap.

Credit: By Lalita Clozel and Ruth Simon

DETAILS

Subject:	Passports & visas; Federal government; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government shutdowns Shutdowns; Industry: 92812 : International Affairs
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395375
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-demand-crashes-work-visa-website/docview/2162395375/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company , Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 47 of 57

World News: EU Surplus Tests U.S. Trade Truce

Peker, Emre . Peker, Emre.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

BRUSSELS -- The European Union narrowly avoided a bruising economic war with the U.S. in 2018 by vowing to rebalance trade. In 2019, the EU faces headwinds to fulfilling its promise and satisfying President Trump's demands. EU and U.S. negotiators missed a self-imposed November deadline to deliver quick results on removing nontariff barriers. Their talks on a broader free-trade deal appear doomed amid sparring over the scope of any pact. And the EU trade surplus in goods with the U.S. -- a top concern for Mr. Trump -- is on track for a record for 2018. U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer is slated to meet EU Trade Commissioner Cecilia Malmstrom in Washington on Jan. 9 to continue talks.

EU officials say their strategy is to negotiate with the U.S. to cut duties and red tape in ways that satisfy the interests of both Washington and Europe. They also hope market forces will boost some U.S. exports, such as soybeans and liquefied natural gas, providing breathing room as talks continue.

But slow progress, coupled with Mr. Trump's focus on eliminating trade deficits, risks landing the EU back in his sights for punitive measures -- led by tariffs on European automobiles.

"So long as the EU leadership plays the delay game, the more we'll have to use leverage," said Gordon Sondland, U.S. ambassador to the EU. "Recalibrating our trade relationship to make it more free and fair is the United States' No. 1 goal."

Mr. Trump renegotiated Washington's free-trade deal with Canada and Mexico by threatening to scrap a 1994 pact, and he forced South Korea's hand with steel and aluminum tariffs to revise a Seoul-Washington accord.

The president has focused his main firepower on China, imposing tariffs on $250 billion of Chinese exports.

Washington is seeking to balance trade flows and curb Beijing's state capitalism. Beijing has responded with retaliatory tariffs on $110 billion in U.S. goods -- or 85% of American goods that entered China in 2017.

The EU avoided a similar tit-for-tat escalation with Washington. Europeans kept communication channels open, even after Mr. Trump imposed metals tariffs on EU exporters and the bloc responded.

Starting a trade war would be "stupid," but that wouldn't deter the EU from defending itself, the bloc's top executive, European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker, said in March. He visited Mr. Trump in Washington in late July and clinched a truce.

The presidents pledged in a joint statement to "work together toward zero tariffs, zero nontariff barriers, and zero subsidies on nonauto industrial goods." They also agreed to boost commerce in services, chemicals, pharmaceuticals, medical products and soybeans.

Mr. Juncker sweetened the deal, pledging increased EU imports of U.S. liquefied natural gas to help diversify its energy supplies. The EU imports roughly 40% of its natural gas from Russia. Mr. Trump had lambasted Germany's dependence on Russian gas two weeks earlier.

In exchange, Mr. Trump promised to shield European car makers from potential U.S. tariffs, which would hit more than $40 billion in annual EU auto exports.

Since the handshake, the EU has posted arresting statistics: American soybean exports to the EU have almost doubled since July, giving the U.S. 69% of the EU market. LNG exports are up 52% in the period.

Yet European and American officials acknowledge that those surges were driven by market dynamics like China's retaliatory tariffs on U.S. exports. U.S. LNG exports still equal only roughly 2% of annual EU natural-gas imports from Russia.

The deeper problem with U.S.-EU trade from the White House's perspective is that following the 2008 global financial crisis, Europe's trade surplus in goods -- including cars and machines -- rose to a record 122 billion euros ($139.9 billion) in 2015. In 2018, it hit 115 billion euros in October.

"We permanently get the message that the president is losing patience," said Markus Beyrer, director-general of BusinessEurope, the biggest association of European trade federations.

A senior European diplomat said the EU hopes to appease Mr. Trump until he either gives the 28-member bloc a pass or leaves office.

"The objective is to keep the process alive and keep Washington happy," the diplomat said. "How long can this go on? Very difficult to say."

Credit: By Emre Peker

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidents; Natural gas; US exports; Tariffs; Steel industry; International trade; Trade surplus; Liquefied natural gas
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: US exports Tariffs Steel industry International trade Trade surplus; Industry: 92111 : Executive Office s 21113 : Natural Gas Extraction 32512 : Industrial Gas Manufacturing
Location:	Beijing China; Mexico; Russia; United States--US; Canada; Germany; China; Europe; South Korea
People:	Lighthizer, Robert; Trump, Donald J; Juncker, Jean-Claude; Malmstrom, Cecilia
Company / organization:	Name: European Commission; NAICS: 928120; Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 21113: Natural Gas Extraction; 32512: Industrial Gas Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.6
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395325
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-eu-surplus-tests-u-s-trade-truce/docview/2162395325/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

LINKS

Document 48 of 57

Huawei, Under Fire, Holds Off Rivals

Woo, Stu . Woo, Stu.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

U.S.-led scrutiny of Huawei Technologies Co. should have been good news for its two biggest competitors in the telecommunications-equipment business, Nokia Corp. of Finland and Ericsson AB of Sweden.

It isn't turning out to be so simple.

Major European wireless providers -- big customers of all three -- say Nokia and Ericsson have been slow to release equipment that is as advanced as Huawei's.

Nokia and Ericsson also face a new, deep-pocketed challenger in Samsung Electronics Co., the South Korean smartphone company that is aiming to quickly expand its nascent cellular-infrastructure business.

And there is another big pitfall for the two: Both Nokia and Ericsson fear that if they are seen trying to take advantage, Beijing could retaliate by cutting off access to the massive Chinese market, people familiar with the matter said.

In recent years, Huawei has surpassed the Nordic companies to become the world's biggest maker of cellular-tower hardware, internet routers and related telecom equipment.

For the first three quarters of 2018, Huawei had a 28% share of the global telecom-equipment market, Nokia had 17% and Ericsson 13.4%, according to research-firm Dell'Oro Group. That compares with market shares in 2017 of 27.1% for Huawei, 16.8% for Nokia and 13.2% for Ericsson.

Huawei has dominated the world-wide industry despite being essentially barred from the U.S. over concerns that Beijing could order Huawei to spy on or disable communications networks. Recently, the U.S. has been urging allies to enact similar bans.

Governments and wireless providers in Australia, France, New Zealand and other countries are avoiding Huawei after saying that the concerns are legitimate.

Huawei says it is employee-owned and has never done espionage or sabotage on behalf of any government.

Major European wireless carriers that already use Huawei say switching to a different company would add costs and complexity, because it would require training people to use different technology.

Executives at one British wireless carrier say Huawei can deliver products nearly a year before Nokia and Ericsson can offer hardware with comparable technology. They said they were telling U.K. officials, who plan to decide by spring 2019 whether to exclude major Huawei equipment from the country, that blacklisting Huawei could delay by nine months the U.K.'s launch of 5G, the coming generation of superfast wireless technology.

A Nokia spokesman said the Finnish company is already selling cutting-edge technology in leading 5G markets, including the U.S., and has the advantage of being able to sell its products "to the entire global market."

A spokesman for Ericsson said the company is focused on providing the best products and that "the competitiveness of our technology is what matters."

The two Nordic providers, though, come with something Huawei now lacks: a seal of approval from much of the West's national-security establishment.

Nokia and Ericsson representatives have advised the U.S., Canadian and British governments over cybersecurity issues, according to people familiar with the matter, who say the talks are part of normal government relations. In the U.S., conversations have involved giving technical advice to authorities, including congressional intelligence committees and the National Security Agency, people familiar with the matter said.

Nokia has long had a relationship with U.S. national-security officials, which in 2015 formally reviewed the Finnish company during its acquisition of French competitor Alcatel-Lucent.

As part of that merger, Nokia bought Bell Labs, a New Jersey research center that does sensitive U.S. government work.

Leaders at both companies have been careful not to publicly pile on against Huawei, people familiar with the matter said. Nokia and Ericsson are competing to be the top supplier in their industry in China, which promised about 30% of its telecom-equipment market to European companies as part of a 2014 settlement with the European Union, according to people familiar with the matter.

About 12% of Nokia's 2017 telecom-equipment revenue of 20.5 billion euros ($23.7 billion) came from its Greater China region, which includes Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan.

An Ericsson spokesman said 7% of Ericsson's 2017 revenue of 201.3 billion Swedish kronor ($22.7 billion) came from China.

Nokia's telecom-equipment business now has six research-and-development centers in China and more than 50 offices spread over megacities and provinces in the country. As of the end of 2017, Nokia and Ericsson each had an equipment-manufacturing site in China.

In 2017, Nokia's telecom-equipment business had about 15,000 employees in its China region -- about double its Finnish head count. Ericsson has 12,000 employees in its Northeast Asia region, which includes China, Japan, South Korea and Taiwan.

Lawyers for Huawei, in a challenge to U.S. anti-Huawei measures, said in an August filing with the Federal Communications Commission that Western telecom-equipment giants all had major operations in China, too. Nokia responded in an FCC filing that amounts to its only public criticism of Huawei. Brian Hendricks, a former congressional staffer who leads Nokia's U.S. government-relations office, wrote that Nokia had never been suspected of participating in cyber espionage, intellectual-property theft or evading major international sanctions. "The same cannot be said of Huawei," Mr. Hendricks wrote.

Drew FitzGerald contributed to this article.

Credit: By Stu Woo

DETAILS

Subject:	Competition; Espionage; Employees; Alliances
Business indexing term:	Subject: Employees; Corporation: Huawei Technologies Co Ltd
Location:	Beijing China; United Kingdom--UK; New Jersey; Australia; Northeast Asia; Hong Kong; France; Macao; South Korea; New Zealand; Sweden; United States--US; China; Finland; Taiwan; Japan

Company / organization: Name: Huawei Technologies Co Ltd; NAICS: 334111, 334210, 513210, 541511; Name: Alcatel-Lucent; NAICS: 334210, 334220, 513210, 517112; Name: Telefon AB LM Ericsson; NAICS: 331420, 334210; Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120; Name: Samsung Electronics Co Ltd; NAICS: 334118, 334210; Name: Federal Communications Commission--FCC; NAICS: 926130; Name: National Security Agency; NAICS: 928110

Publication title: Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

First page: B.1

Publication year: 2019

Publication date: Jan 2, 2019

Publisher: Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication: New York, N.Y.

Country of publication: United States

Publication subject: Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN: 00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 2162395210

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/huawei-under-fire-holds-off-rivals/docview/2162395210/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-30

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

SPACE

Craft Flies by Object

4 Billion Miles Away

NASA's New Horizons spacecraft has survived the most distant exploration of another world, a tiny, icy object 4 billion miles away that looks to be shaped like a peanut or bowling pin.

Word of success came 10 hours after the middle-of-the-night encounter, once flight controllers in Maryland received word from the spacecraft late Tuesday morning.

New Horizons zoomed past the object known as Ultima Thule 3 1/2 years after its brush with Pluto. Scientists said it would take nearly two years for New Horizons to beam back all its observations of Ultima Thule, which is a billion miles beyond Pluto.

Based on rudimentary pictures taken hundreds of thousands of miles before the 12:33 a.m. close approach, Ultima Thule is about 22 miles long by 9 miles wide. It has been in a deep-freeze preservation state since the solar system formed 4.5 billion years ago.

-- Associated Press

COURTS

More Charged With

Illegal Re-Entry in '18

The Trump administration's immigration crackdown has reverberated through the federal courts, with 2018 seeing a 40% increase in defendants charged with unauthorized re-entry to the U.S., according to the year-end report on the federal judiciary released Monday by Chief Justice John Roberts.

At the same time, former Attorney General Jeff Sessions' opposition to marijuana use -- and its continued prohibition under federal law -- didn't stem state-level movement toward the drug's acceptance. The number of marijuana defendants in federal court fell 19%, the report says, even as overall narcotics defendants grew by 2%, making up 28% of federal criminal filings.

-- Jess Bravin

CHICAGO

Homicides Last Year

Fell by About 100

Preliminary numbers indicate that homicides in Chicago fell by about 100 last year, though the total again eclipses the number of homicides in Los Angeles and New York combined, according to data released Tuesday.

Police in Chicago, the nation's third-largest city, report that 561 homicides were committed between Jan. 1 and Dec. 31, 2018. That compares to 660 homicides in 2017 and more than 770 in 2016, which marked a 19-year high that put a national spotlight on Chicago's persistently high rates of gun violence.

Chicago police credit the decreases in part to the addition of more than 1,000 new officers in recent years. Police also cite the creation of high-tech nerve centers in 20 out of 22 police districts, where officers rely on gunshot-detection technology and predictive analytics that help quickly get police to areas where violence is most likely to erupt.

Official numbers for 2018 are expected to be released in several weeks, according to the department. Police Superintendent Eddie Johnson has previously said "a reasonable goal" would be to one day get the annual number of homicides to below 300.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Murders & murder attempts
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92711 : Space Research and Technology
Location:	Maryland; Chicago Illinois; Los Angeles California; United States--US; New York
People:	Sessions, Jeff; Roberts, John G Jr
Company / organization:	Name: National Aeronautics & Space Administration--NASA; NAICS: 927110
Classification:	92711: Space Research and Technology
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.2
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395134
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/2162395134/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2023-01-20

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 50 of 57

U.S. News: New for 2019: Laws on Guns, Harassment, Straws

Gershman, Jacob . Gershman, Jacob.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The new year is bringing in a flurry of new laws and ordinances across the country -- from crackdowns on plastic straws and foam containers to new measures spurred by last year's school shooting massacre in Parkland, Fla., and the #MeToo scandals.

Here is a look at some of notable changes to the books heading into 2019.

It was a busy year for California, whose Democratic state leaders churned out more than 1,000 new laws. Among them are gun restrictions aimed at keeping firearms away from the mentally disturbed and domestic abusers.

Californians convicted of some domestic-violence offenses can now lose their gun rights for life. A new law adds misdemeanor domestic violence or battery -- including harmful touching of a spouse, roommate or dating partner -- to the crimes that permanently disqualify a person from owning a gun.

Gun owners who are committed to a mental institution twice in a year -- and deemed a danger to themselves or others -- also face a lifetime ban. Departing Gov. Jerry Brown signed the measure months after the Florida rampage, which was carried out by a mentally disturbed ex-student who had acquired his weapon legally.

Washington state now requires purchasers of rifles or shotguns to be at least 21, raising the legal age from 18, as Florida did several months ago. Gun owners in Washington can now also face criminal liability if they let their weapons slip into the hands of a child or anyone else unauthorized to carry a weapon.

California has new laws targeting workplace sexual harassment. One bars employers from staving off discrimination claims by offering bonuses or job offers to aggrieved employees. Another makes it harder for companies to keep a lid on sexual-misconduct claims that they have settled. Employers can conceal the size of payouts but settlement terms may not make a complainant keep silent about the underlying allegations.

Virginia has a new #MeToo law mandating sexual-harassment training for legislators and their staffs. Large businesses in Delaware have to provide harassment training to all of their employees.

A California law lowers the bar for proving sex discrimination in court, making clear that a single incident of office harassment can support a plaintiff's claim. The statute also says that a stray sexist joke or remark made by a manager can count as evidence in a discrimination suit, even if the comment didn't relate to a hiring decision.

Other notable laws deal with health, death, abortion and defendants' rights.

Hawaii now allows terminally ill and suffering patients to end their lives with the help of a doctor. It is the sixth state to legalize physician-assisted suicide, following Oregon, Vermont, Washington, Colorado and California.

In Tennessee, women who get an ultrasound before an abortion must be offered an "opportunity to learn the results," which must indicate whether a heartbeat was detected.

A new Democratic-backed health-insurance law requires New Jersey residents to maintain coverage or pay hundreds of dollars in fines. Following efforts by the Trump administration to roll back the Affordable Care Act, New Jersey became the second state, after Massachusetts, to impose a statewide individual mandate.

Under a New York City law, people who don't identify as male or female can now list their gender as "X" on birth certificates. New Yorkers can also adjust their gender on birth certificates without the blessing of medical and mental-health professionals.

On the criminal-justice front, Louisiana has abolished split verdicts in felony trials and now requires a unanimous jury vote to convict. The change leaves Oregon as the only state without a unanimous jury requirement.

The new year also means higher minimum wages in 19 states and 21 cities. More than a dozen cities and counties now have wage floors around $15, according to the National Employment Law Project. The $15 threshold was reached in New York City and Seattle for businesses with 11 or more employees. About 10 California cities clustered around Silicon Valley now have minimum wages at or above $15.

Finally, New York City and California took aim at the way foods and drinks are packaged and consumed. A legally contested law in New York City bans restaurants, stores and manufacturers from using foam takeout containers, cups and packing peanuts.

In California, restaurant patrons who want a plastic straw will have to ask for one. Effective Jan. 1, full-service restaurants can be fined $25 a day for serving beverages with unsolicited plastic straws.

Another law makes it more difficult for California bar patrons to get drunk and high on marijuana in the same sip.

While recreational marijuana is legal in the state, a new law prohibits taverns from selling their customers cannabis-spiked booze.

Credit: By Jacob Gershman

DETAILS

Subject:	Domestic violence; Firearm laws & regulations; State laws; Bars; Criminal liability; Abortion; Firearms; Cities; Employees; Birth certificates; Sex discrimination
Business indexing term:	Subject: Employees Sex discrimination; Industry: 72241 : Drinking Places (Alcoholic Beverages)
Location:	Louisiana; New Jersey; Colorado; Hawaii; Florida; Virginia; Vermont; Washington (state); Silicon Valley-California; Massachusetts; New York; United States--US; Tennessee; California; Delaware; Oregon
Classification:	72241: Drinking Places (Alcoholic Beverages)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019

Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395123
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-2019-laws-on-guns-harassment-straws/docview/2162395123/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 51 of 57

U.S. News: Fight for Tech-Savvy Vets Heats Up

Cameron, Doug; Kesling, Ben . Cameron, Doug; Kesling, Ben.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

Amazon.com Inc.'s planned regional headquarters in the heart of the U.S. military establishment is creating a new potential battleground for veterans. This time, the fight is for them.

Amazon says it wants to hire 25,000 staff for its planned facility near Washington, D.C., over the next several years. That would be almost a sixth of the existing private-sector workforce for defense contractors and government IT specialists in the area.

Defense companies including Lockheed Martin Corp. and Booz Allen Hamilton Holdings Corp. are already tackling a shortage of skilled tech workers in a tight labor market. Contractors working through a two-year uptick in Pentagon spending on projects including cybersecurity and cloud-computing capabilities say they worry Amazon's arrival will exacerbate a local talent crunch.

"Amazon does put stress on the system," said Mac Curtis, CEO of Perspecta Inc. a government IT specialist with 14,000 staff that counts the Pentagon and the Central Intelligence Agency among its clients.

Amazon wouldn't say what kind of workers it plans to hire and has yet to post any job listings for the office complex in the National Landing neighborhood of Arlington, Va. The company plans to add another 25,000 workers over the next decade in New York City, the site of its other new second headquarters, or "HQ2." While less of a magnet for government work, those offices will also require software engineers and cloud experts.

Amazon already employs more than 18,000 U.S. veterans and their spouses, about 3% of its global workforce. The company has said it wants to increase this to 25,000 over the next three years. Last year, Amazon expanded a partnership with the Labor Department to train 1,000 veterans in cloud computing. Some who have completed the program are now working for Amazon Web Services.

"We've found members of the military community are a great fit at Amazon -- bringing a bias for action and customer obsession that fit in well with our culture," said Ardine Williams, the company's vice president of Worldwide People Operations, and an Army veteran.

The web services unit is Amazon's fastest growing, with sales up 48% annually in the nine months to Sept. 30. The company is pursuing more government contracts, including with the Pentagon. Many analysts view Amazon as the front-runner for a deal worth up to $10 billion to shift more Defense Department data to the cloud.

Some of the most prized new hires for defense contractors, and potentially for Amazon, are the roughly 250,000 people who leave active-duty military service each year, said companies and recruitment specialists. Big government-services companies such as Leidos Inc., which is remapping the Pentagon's health care system, draw a third or more of their staff from people leaving the military.

"Veterans are clearly going to be a target," said John Barney, a senior consultant at recruitment specialist Korn Ferry. The Washington area is home to almost 210,000 employment-age veterans, the biggest metropolitan concentration nationwide, according to northern Virginia's successful pitch for the new Amazon site.

The most sought-after are those with security clearances, a requirement for around 15% of the private-sector government IT and defense jobs advertised in the Arlington area that includes National Landing on recruitment site Glassdoor. The Pentagon is working through a backlog of 275,000 first-time applications for clearance, pushing wait times to more than a year.

The military is considering ways to ease the cleared-worker shortage, including by possibly allowing active-duty members to move more smoothly between civilian jobs and the armed services, said Navy Secretary Richard V. Spencer.

Credit: By Doug Cameron and Ben Kesling

DETAILS

Subject:	Defense contracts; Armed forces; Workers; Shortages; Contractors; Recruitment
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Workers Shortages Contractors Recruitment; Industry: 92811 : National Security
--------------------------------	---

Location:	New York; United States--US; Washington DC; Virginia
People:	Spencer, Richard V
Company / organization:	Name: Leidos Inc; NAICS: 334511, 541330, 541512, 541715; Name: Department of Defense; NAICS: 928110; Name: Central Intelligence Agency--CIA; NAICS: 928110, 928120; Name: Amazon.com Inc; NAICS: 334310, 454110, 518210; Name: Lockheed Martin Corp; NAICS: 212319, 334290, 336411, 336413, 336414; Name: Amazon Web Services Inc; NAICS: 518210, 541513
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.2
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395079
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fight-tech-savvy-vets-heats-up/docview/2162395079/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Equifax Is A Priority For House Democrats

Hayashi, Yuka . Hayashi, Yuka.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The credit-reporting industry has largely escaped new oversight from Washington following the 2017 hack of Equifax Inc. that exposed the personal information of millions of Americans. That could change in 2019 when Democrats take over the House.

House Democrats have put legislation responding to the Equifax hack at the top of their agenda for this year. A handful of proposals, some bipartisan, offer a road map for possible changes to how the industry handles consumer information, including subjecting credit-reporting companies to tougher cybersecurity standards and making it easier for consumers to fix credit-report errors.

"The Equifax data breach response is far from over," said Jaret Seiberg, an analyst for Cowen Washington Research Group. "There will be more legislation in the next two years that impacts Equifax and the other credit bureaus."

An Equifax spokesman said the company has undertaken "a host of security, operational, and technological improvements" since the breach.

Lawmakers from both parties criticized Equifax after the company announced the breach that resulted in the loss of Social Security numbers and other sensitive information of 147.9 million people.

That led to the proposal of bills to increase oversight of credit-reporting companies, which collect data to help lenders vet applications for mortgages, credit cards and other products. Legislation mostly stalled, however, amid pushback from the industry and disagreement between Republicans and Democrats.

One exception was a provision to allow adults and children to freeze and unfreeze their credit reports free of charge to prevent identity thieves from using their information to open new accounts. That was approved in 2018 as part of a broader banking bill.

Rep. Maxine Waters (D., Calif.), the incoming head of the House Financial Services Committee, wants to revive the credit-reporting debate, saying her panel will focus on the industry and will use as a template a bill she introduced to overhaul the industry.

"I believe that credit reporting reform and holding Equifax accountable for its massive breach are bipartisan issues that touch nearly every American," she said in November. Her committee is expected to hold a hearing in early 2019 on the issue, possibly with testimony from top officials at the three main credit-reporting companies, Equifax, Experian PLC, and TransUnion.

Credit: By Yuka Hayashi

DETAILS

Subject:	Legislation; Congressional committees; Credit bureaus; Credit reports; Bipartisanship
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Credit bureaus Credit reports; Corporation: Equifax Inc; Industry: 56145 : Credit Bureaus 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	United States--US
People:	Waters, Maxine
Company / organization:	Name: Experian Group PLC; NAICS: 561450; Name: Equifax Inc; NAICS: 519290, 522320, 541613, 561450; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	56145: Credit Bureaus; 92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.2
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162395006
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-equifax-is-priority-house-democrats/docview/2162395006/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Trump Presses On for Wall Funds --- Congressional leaders invited to bipartisan meeting to resolve a shutdown impasse

Nicholas, Peter; Andrews, Natalie . Nicholas, Peter; Andrews, Natalie.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- President Trump ramped up pressure on Democrats to end an impasse over funding for a border wall, formally inviting them to a bipartisan meeting at the White House on Wednesday amid a partial government shutdown.

It wasn't immediately clear, though, that the Democratic congressional leaders would take part. Their leverage stands to grow a day later, when the party officially takes control of the House and Rep. Nancy Pelosi of California is expected to become speaker.

Congressional aides also said that it might be difficult for some of the eight leaders invited to the meeting to attend, given that they are returning to Washington from the holidays.

With the shutdown in its second week, Mr. Trump has been looking to cast Democrats as unwilling to negotiate, highlighting his decision to forgo a vacation and stay in the White House.

"I'm in the Oval Office," the president tweeted on Monday. "Democrats, come back from vacation now and give us the votes necessary for Border Security, including the Wall."

With neither side talking to each other directly, a meeting would bring them face-to-face, though they remain split over the central issue that triggered the shutdown: Funding for a wall along the U.S. border with Mexico.

Mr. Trump has insisted that he won't sign a measure reopening the government unless he gets money for the wall, while Democrats remain staunchly opposed. A border wall was Mr. Trump's signature campaign promise -- and his progress in building one figures to be an issue in the 2020 presidential race.

Mr. Trump's invitation, issued on New Year's Day, went to the top eight Republican and Democratic leaders in both the House and Senate.

The meeting, if it takes place, is expected to include a briefing on border security from the Department of Homeland Security, a congressional aide said.

Aides to Mrs. Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D., N.Y.), as well as their two deputies, all confirmed Tuesday afternoon that they had received the invitation from the White House, but declined to say whether they would attend.

Outgoing Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.) -- whose last official day in power is Wednesday -- won't attend. Incoming House Republican leader Kevin McCarthy of California plans to go, as does incoming GOP Whip Steve Scalise (R., La.), aides said. Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky also plans to attend the meeting.

In recent tweets, Mr. Trump has sought to coax Democrats to the negotiating table, while portraying their opposition to wall funding as an irresponsible acceptance of what he called "open borders."

"Border Security and the Wall 'thing' and Shutdown is not where Nancy Pelosi wanted to start her tenure as Speaker!"

Mr. Trump tweeted on Tuesday. "Let's make a deal?"

House Democrats say they would push to reopen the government when they take control of the chamber on Thursday with a package of six spending bills that would fund most of the government through September -- setting aside the question of border wall funding.

But the president balked at the idea, tweeting, "The Democrats, much as I suspected, have allocated no money for a new Wall. So imaginative! The problem is, without a Wall there can be no real Border Security -- and our Country must finally have a Strong and Secure Southern Border!"

Credit: By Peter Nicholas and Natalie Andrews

DETAILS

Subject:	Bills; Funding; Border security; Federal government; Leadership; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns; Border walls; Bipartisanship; Political leadership
Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership Government shutdowns Shutdowns; Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	Mexico; United States--US; California; Kentucky
People:	Trump, Donald J; McCarthy, Kevin; Scalise, Steve; Pelosi, Nancy; Schumer, Charles E; McConnell, Mitch; Ryan, Paul
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940; Name: Department of Homeland Security; NAICS: 922120; Name: Senate; NAICS: 921120; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 2162394856

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-trump-presses-on-wall-funds/docview/2162394856/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-30

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 54 of 57

Business News: Chesapeake Shifts to Oil From Gas

Elliott, Rebecca . Elliott, Rebecca.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

DOUGLAS, Wyo. -- Chesapeake Energy Corp., best known for its trailblazing pursuit of natural gas from shale formations, is making a big bet on the oil below the rolling grasslands of eastern Wyoming. Its timing doesn't look great. U.S. oil prices have fallen more than 40% since early October to close at $45.41 a barrel on Monday, straining the finances of the debt-laden company co-founded by Aubrey McClendon, the late wildcatter. It is a rough time to be planning new shale wells anywhere, but especially in Wyoming's Powder River Basin, an expensive and geologically complex place.

"It seems like every time we make a big strategic step forward we get snake-bitten," Chesapeake board member Archie Dunham said in an interview. Mr. Dunham, who was previously chief executive of Conoco Inc., has purchased more than $9 million worth of Chesapeake stock in recent weeks.

Chesapeake's challenges exemplify how oil's recent price drop is jeopardizing the recoveries of shale drillers still trying to regain their strength after the last crash in prices in 2014 and 2015. The company's share price has fallen nearly 56% since early October, compared with a 40% drop in a broad index of U.S. producers.

Chief Executive Doug Lawler said lower oil prices stress a company like Chesapeake, which reported $9.4 billion in long-term debt at the end of the third quarter. The Oklahoma City-based company plans to dedicate at least 80% of 2019 capital expenditures to oil production because it sees crude as the key to a more profitable future, he said.

"Quite simply, the margins are far superior to gas," Mr. Lawler said. "We have to run the company regardless of what price is."

Chesapeake is moving to oil later than many of its peers, which anticipated that a glut of natural gas in the U.S. would depress prices and make drilling for it less lucrative. In addition to stepping up oil drilling in Wyoming over the past two years, Chesapeake announced in October a deal to acquire oil-focused Wildhorse Resource Development Corp. for $4 billion, its first large acquisition in more than a decade.

Crude was trading at about $67 a barrel when the companies announced the deal, which has yet to close. It would allow Chesapeake to increase its oil output while reducing its financial leverage. Although Wildhorse had $1.1 billion in long-term debt at the end of the third quarter, the company has a lower debt ratio than Chesapeake.

Timing the market is notoriously difficult and getting more so, said Robert McNally, president of Rapidan Energy Group, an energy consulting firm.

"You're starting to see massive price swings caused by unusual triggers," Mr. McNally said. "This is making it even harder for deal makers to price deals."

Chesapeake's oil and gas output fell more than 20% from its peak in 2014 to the end of 2017, the result of reining in spending and selling oil and gas interests as it moved to reduce debt. Meanwhile, the company has spent more than it has taken in every year starting with 2010, according to FactSet.

To improve cash flow, Chesapeake needs to produce more. Even so, lower oil prices crimp profits.

Chesapeake says it has fine-tuned its approach such that its Wyoming wells can generate returns at $25 to $35 oil, well below the basin-wide average of $47 a barrel, according to consulting firm RS Energy Group. However, those so-called break-even prices don't take into account full corporate overhead or land costs.

Chesapeake hasn't released its 2019 spending plan, but Mr. Lawler said with oil below $50, it would consider adjusting its capital program.

Credit: By Rebecca Elliott

DETAILS

Subject:	Natural gas; Debt management; Capital expenditures; Consulting firms; Budgets; Long term debt; Crude oil prices
Business indexing term:	Subject: Debt management Capital expenditures Consulting firms Budgets Long term debt Crude oil prices
Location:	Wyoming; United S tates--US; Powder River Basin; Oklahoma
People:	McClendon, Aubrey
Company / organization:	Name: Chesapeake Energy Corp; NAICS: 211120; Name: Resource Development Corp; NAICS: 513210; Name: Conoco Inc; NAICS: 211120, 324110, 424720, 486110, 486910
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	B.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162394787
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-chesapeake-shifts-oil-gas/docview/2162394787/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 55 of 57

World News: U.S. Forces Face Missile Threat

Kesling, Ben . Kesling, Ben.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

An upgraded class of high-powered weaponry has flooded the battlefields of the Middle East, threatening even the most sophisticated battle tanks and highlighting a gap in U.S. military preparedness.

The weapons -- antitank guided missiles, or ATGMs -- were first developed decades ago, but recent years have brought advances in their technology, ease of use and availability on the battlefield, making them a fearsome and little-acknowledged threat to U.S. troops.

The proliferation is largely the result of efforts of powers such as the U.S., Russia and Iran to arm and train proxy fighters.

A U.S. program begun in mid-2013 provided weapons including ATGM missiles to rebels fighting the Assad regime in Syria. President Trump canceled the program, saying in a 2017 interview with The Wall Street Journal that it allowed weapons to fall into al Qaeda's hands.

"There is absolutely the possibility that the U.S. may face some of the same ATGMs it has delivered in the past to the Middle East," said Omar Lamrani, a senior military analyst with the Austin, Texas-based defense-intelligence firm Stratfor. Islamic State and al Qaeda offshoots, among others, now possess American-made missiles, he said. Those and other nonstate actors in the Middle East also have antitank missiles -- some of them based on U.S. designs -- manufactured in Bulgaria, China, France, Iran and Russia, according to analysts who track weapons proliferation. Unlike a typical rocket-propelled grenade, which has a range of a few hundred yards and can't be steered, a modern ATGM typically is fired from a mile or more away and then directed to its target using videogame-like controls. "The modern ATGM can penetrate 1,000 millimeters or more of cold-rolled steel plate," said John Gordon, an analyst with Rand Corp., adding that nothing on the battlefield is safe from a weapon able to blast through 3 feet of armor. "These things are now in the hands of groups like ISIS, the Taliban and Hezbollah, and increasing numbers of nonstate military forces."

The Army is fast-tracking a program to equip combat vehicles with advanced armor designed to counter the ATGM threat. While Mr. Trump has ordered the withdrawal of U.S. forces from Syria, there are currently more than 2,000 U.S. troops there, an estimated 5,000 in Iraq, 14,000 in Afghanistan and others around the Middle East and Africa. Israel has become a leader in devising protection against these weapons, having faced missile proliferation threats for more than a decade. American forces have been fighting enemies during that time that more commonly used improvised explosive devices, mines and rocket-propelled grenades.

"The Israelis have an environment where they have an immediate threat that has been driving their development. Most of the time that we were in Iraq and Afghanistan, we weren't too concerned about antitank guided missiles," said Col. Glenn Dean, project manager for the Army's Stryker Brigade Combat Team.

Two Israeli companies have taken the lead in developing and fielding what is known as active protection or active armor, which isn't really armor at all. It is a high-tech system that uses sensors to detect an incoming missile and shoot back at it, destroying the threat midflight.

In 2009, as the Israelis leapt ahead with the technology, the Pentagon mothballed a multibillion-dollar Army program known as the Future Combat Systems, which featured active armor. The army has worked on this technology since the 1950s, but eventually came to rely primarily on an Israeli armor system for its top-tier battle vehicles and slowed development of homegrown technology.

"When you stop the future activity, you fall back on the current investments you have, and that current investment was not good," Col. Dean said.

"It's not that the need wasn't seen," said Mr. Lamrani of Stratfor. "It's just that developing this system and equipping a broad fleet of vehicles is expensive and the technology wasn't developed."

Army officials and military analysts blame the stalled armor programs in part on the Army's complex acquisition system, which the current Army chief of staff, Gen. Mark Milley, has said he wants to streamline. President Trump in December chose Gen. Milley to become the next chairman of the Pentagon's Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Credit: By Ben Kesling

DETAILS

Subject:	Threats; Missiles; Armed forces; Armor; Weapons; Military withdrawals
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
--------------------------------	-------------------------------------

Location:	Middle East; Russia; Israel; Iraq; Afghanistan; Iran; Africa; Syria; France; Texas; United States--US; China; Bulgaria
------------------	--

People:	Trump, Donald J; Milley, Mark
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Defense; NAICS: 928110; Name: Rand Corp; NAICS: 541720; Name: Wall Street Journal; NAICS: 513110, 516210; Name: Hezbollah-Party of God; NAICS: 813940; Name: Taliban; NAICS: 813940; Name: Joint Chiefs of Staff; NAICS: 921110; Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.7
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162394777
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-forces-face-missile-threat/docview/2162394777/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with per mission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-09
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: More U.S. Agencies Run Out of Money

Davidson, Kate; Duehren, Andrew . Davidson, Kate; Duehren, Andrew.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- As the partial government shutdown enters its second week, its scope is broadening as a growing number of agencies and federal institutions run out of money.

Nine of the 15 federal agencies are affected by the shutdown, which began before Christmas. About 420,000 employees at the agencies, deemed essential, are working without pay, while 380,000 federal employees have been placed on unpaid leave, or furlough.

The Environmental Protection Agency ran out of money over the weekend, and the Federal Trade Commission has closed.

The shutdown hasn't affected the mail or the delivery of Social Security checks.

The Smithsonian museums and the National Zoo, which have stayed open using leftover money, will close Wednesday. Many national parks are open to visitors, but workers have stopped providing visitor services, including trash collection.

Essential workers, such as air-traffic controllers, prison guards, weather-service forecasters and food-safety inspectors, have continued coming to work. Federal Bureau of Investigation agents, Forest Service firefighters, Border patrol agents and TSA workers have also kept working. Special counsel Robert Mueller's probe hasn't been affected.

Credit: By Kate Davidson and Andrew Duehren

DETAILS

Subject:	Border patrol; Federal government; Government shutdowns; Shutdowns; Federal employees
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government shutdowns Shutdowns
Location:	United States--US
People:	Mueller, Robert S III
Company / organization:	Name: National Zoological Park; NAICS: 712130; Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120; Name: Federal Trade Commission--FTC; NAICS: 926150
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.4
Publication year:	2019

Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162394650
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-more-agencies-run-out-money/docview/2162394650/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-30
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 57 of 57

U.S. News: Cities Covet 'Deck Parks' To Aid Cores

McWhirter, Cameron . McWhirter, Cameron.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

ATLANTA -- Leaders here want to draw more young workers, and their strategy includes covering congested downtown highways with acres of green park land.

Jennifer Ball, who works with a business group promoting a plan to cover over a section of interstate downtown, said cities such as Atlanta that in the past neglected their urban centers need to make improvements to compete for tech jobs and millennials.

"The urban core just has to be attractive," she said.

As living and working in walkable urban centers becomes more popular, interest has risen in such projects, which are often called deck parks. Dallas completed a $112 million, 5.2-acre park over the Woodall Rodgers Freeway in 2012, sparking commercial and residential development around it. It now draws crowds for food trucks, a reading area, a playground and free concerts.

Since then, dozens of deck parks have been proposed in about 30 cities including Philadelphia, Denver and Los Angeles, said James Burnett, a landscape architect whose firm works on many such plans, including two in Atlanta. "Open space drives real-estate values through the roof," he said. "It was this big cavern and now it's a green oasis." Backers of deck parks say they could help lure tech companies seeking to expand their presence outside Silicon Valley. Critics say they often benefit developers and siphon valuable dollars -- either through direct government support or tax-financing plans -- from more-pressing needs such as road repairs, expanded public transit and affordable housing.

As the U.S. boomed in the last century, new highways divided many cities with noisy rivers of traffic. Neighborhood activists in some areas were able to stop highways or force small deck parks to be built over roadways. But many poorer neighborhoods, often with large minority populations, lacked the political clout to stop or modify highway projects.

Building deck parks "isn't really a new idea, it's just now we are ready to spend the money" in postrecession years, said Francesca Russello Ammon, a University of Pennsylvania assistant professor of city and regional planning and author of "Bulldozer: Demolition and Clearance of the Postwar Landscape."

Current interest is high. Delegations from other cities, including Atlanta, have come to Dallas to learn about its park. The $112 million cost was tough to line up, but eventually the project secured money from the City of Dallas, the Texas Department of Transportation and other sources. A nonprofit runs the park and raises millions needed for the annual cost of park maintenance.

The city broke ground early in 2018 on another deck park, which will cover over part of an interstate near the Dallas Zoo.

Charlie McCabe, director for the Trust for Public Land's center for city park excellence, said after the success in Dallas, a southern city known for sprawl, many developers decided "it could happen anywhere."

"I'm glad to see them re-emerging," he added.

In Atlanta, three plans are under consideration. Each has backing from powerful business groups or executives.

The "Stitch" plan -- which preliminary cost estimates put at more than $300 million -- would create about 14 acres of new park land, attract businesses and apartment complexes and revive an area "that long lost its luster," said A.J. Robinson, president of Central Atlanta Progress, the group pushing the Stitch.

"We decided we needed to reconnect what the interstate disconnected," he said.

Another plan with an estimated $250 million price tag proposes covering part of busy Georgia State Route 400 near a shopping mall. A third would cover portions of the connected Interstates 75 and 85 near Georgia Tech and Midtown Atlanta.

Trae Payton, a manager at a dog kennel and grooming business near the proposed Stitch, said he would welcome the deck park and any spinoff development in the area, which he described as "sketchy at night."

"What's the downside?" he said. "I'm always for more green space."

But Jennifer Thompson, who has lived in a nearby apartment for three years, said the proposed park "will become a mini-Skid Row," attracting more homeless to the area, while other infrastructure problems like potholes abound. "I don't really need a new park," she said. "Can we fix our streets?"

Credit: By Cameron McWhirter

DETAILS

Subject:	Landscape architecture; Parks & recreation areas; Cities; Cost estimates
Business indexing term:	Subject: Cost estimates; Industry: 54132 : Landscape Architectural Services
Location:	Silicon Valley-California; Texas; United States--US; Georgia; Los Angeles California; Atlanta Georgia
Company / organization:	Name: University of Pennsylvania; NAICS: 611310; Name: Trust for Public Land; NAICS: 813312; Name: Central Atlanta Progress; NAICS: 813910; Name: Dallas Zoo; NAICS: 712130; Name: Department of Transportation-Texas; NAICS: 926120; Name: Georgia Institute of Technology; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	54132: Landscape Architectural Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
First page:	A.3
Publication year:	2019
Publication date:	Jan 2, 2019
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	2162394530
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-cities-covet-deck-parks-aid-cores/docview/2162394530/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2019 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-30

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Bibliography

Citation style: APA 6th - American Psychological Association, 6th Edition

Rocca, F. X. (2019, Jan 04). U.S. news: Pope warns U.S. bishops over unity. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-pope-warns-bishops-over-unity/docview/2162961681/se-2?accountid=14681>

Maher, K. (2019, Jan 04). U.S. news: Mississippi flood fears spur levee fights. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-mississippi-flood-fears-spur-levee/docview/2162961466/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hong, N. (2019, Jan 04). U.S. news: Aide testifies against 'el chapo'. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-aide-testifies-against-el-chapo/docview/2162961432/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2019, Jan 04). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/2162961288/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kendall, B. (2019, Jan 04). U.S. news: Courts make do during stalemate, for now. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-courts-make-do-during-stalemate-now/docview/2162960832/se-2?accountid=14681>

Andrews, N., & Peterson, K. (2019, Jan 04). Democrats take over house amid standoff --- under pelosi leadership, bills aiming to end shutdown pass, but GOP to block in senate. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/democrats-take-over-house-amid-standoff-under/docview/2162960816/se-2?accountid=14681>

Nunn, S., & Timiraos, N. (2019, Jan 04). U.S. news: Global slowdown dents U.S. factories. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-global-slowdown-dents-factories/docview/2162960815/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2019, Jan 04). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/2162960802/se-2?accountid=14681>

Ramkumar, A. (2019, Jan 04). Stocks slide as growth fears spread --- apple's warning, soft U.S. economic data heighten concern about global slowdown. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-slide-as-growth-fears-spread-apples/docview/2162957826/se-2?accountid=14681>

Peterson, K. (2019, Jan 04). U.S. news: House vote raises stakes in standoff. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-house-vote-raises-stakes-standoff/docview/2162954563/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2019, Jan 04). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/2162954538/se-2?accountid=14681>

Jamerson, J., & Bykowicz, J. (2019, Jan 04). U.S. news: Pelosi lines up legislative priorities. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-pelosi-lines-up-legislative-priorities/docview/2162954536/se-2?accountid=14681>

Simmon, A. M., McBride, C., & Kesling, B. (2019, Jan 03). World news: U.S. urges russia to explain detention. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-urges-russia-explain-detention/docview/2162745961/se-2?accountid=14681>

Banerji, G. (2019, Jan 03). Banking & finance -- currencies: Yen soars against dollar on growth worries. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/banking-amp-finance-currencies-yen-soars-> against/docview/2162710958/se-2?accountid=14681

Parasie, N., & Cameron, D. (2019, Jan 03). Business news: Qatar airways taps asia --- carrier buys 5% stake in chinese airline as it tries to fight effects of mideast economic feud. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-qatar-airways-taps-asia-carrier/docview/2162701173/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bender, M. C. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: President expects to win over romney. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-president-expects-win-over-romney/docview/2162699918/se-2?accountid=14681>

Zolan Kanno-Youngs, & Rebecca Davis O'Brien. (2019, Jan 03). Ex-de Blasio fundraiser convicted --- A federal jury found businessman jeremy reichberg guilty of bribing NYPD officials. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/ex-de-blasio-fundraiser-convicted-federal-jury/docview/2162697367/se-2?accountid=14681>

Moss, T. (2019, Jan 03). World news: China is first to land a spacecraft on the far side of moon. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-china-is-first-land-spacecraft-on-far/docview/2162697364/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2019, Jan 03). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/2162697350/se-2?accountid=14681>

Steinberg, J. (2019, Jan 03). Banking & finance: Inflows into china startups cool. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/banking-amp-finance-inflows-into-china-startups/docview/2162697343/se-2?accountid=14681>

Bender, M. C. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: New faces greet trump at cabinet meeting. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-faces-greet-trump-at-cabinet-meeting/docview/2162697333/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rubin, R. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: Long shutdown risks tax-refund delay. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-long-shutdown-risks-tax-refund-delay/docview/2162697327/se-2?accountid=14681>

Campo-Flores, A. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: Test strip lets drug users identify fentanyl contamination. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-test-strip-lets-drug-users-identify/docview/2162697325/se-2?accountid=14681>

Goldfarb, S. (2019, Jan 03). Treasurys extend rally after china data. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/treasurys-extend-rally-after-china-data/docview/2162697123/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lewis, J. T. (2019, Jan 03). World news: Brazil's leader moves to revamp economy. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-brazils-leader-moves-revamp-economy/docview/2162697121/se-2?accountid=14681>

Paris, C. (2019, Jan 03). World news: Fire cripples car carrier in pacific. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-fire-cripples-car-carrier-pacific/docview/2162697118/se-2?accountid=14681>

Clozel, L., & Simon, R. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: Work-visa website still shut after crash. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-work-visa-website-still-shut-after-crash/docview/2162697100/se-2?accountid=14681>

Pasztor, A., & Wall, R. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: Anti-drone suppliers avoid airports. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-anti-drone-suppliers-avoid-airports/docview/2162697098/se-2?accountid=14681>

Belkin, D. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: Colleges press for early sign-ups --- some schools push prospective freshmen to commit, if accepted, in race to fill their spots. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-colleges-press-early-sign-ups-some/docview/2162697078/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2019, Jan 03). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/2162697072/se-2?accountid=14681>

Davidson, K., & Peterson, K. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: Democrats aim to loosen rules on debt limit. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-democrats-aim-loosen-rules-on-debt-limit/docview/2162697048/se-2?accountid=14681>

Chun, H. W. (2019, Jan 03). World news: China's leader presses taiwan to unify --- xi urges peaceful unification but says force remains an option; taipei rejects proposal. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-chinas-leader-presses-taiwan-unify-xi/docview/2162697047/se-2?accountid=14681>

Rebecca Davis O'Brien. (2019, Jan 03). U.S. news: Coach pleads guilty to bribery. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-coach-pleads-guilty-bribery/docview/2162697045/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kruger, D., & Timiraos, N. (2019, Jan 03). Investors bet fed rates will stay put. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/investors-bet-fed-rates-will-stay-put/docview/2162697043/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2019, Jan 03). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/2162697042/se-2?accountid=14681>

Armental, M., & Mullin, B. (2019, Jan 03). Charter, tribune at impasse. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/charter-tribune-at-impasse/docview/2162695934/se-2?accountid=14681>

Simmons, A. M., & Strobel, W. P. (2019, Jan 02). World news: Detained american isn't spy, family says --- paul whelan, held by russia, was in moscow for wedding of fellow ex-marine, brother says. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-detained-american-isnt-spy-family-says/docview/2162459567/se-2?accountid=14681>

Lubold, G. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: At pentagon, shanahan aligns vision with trump's. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-at-pentagon-shanahan-aligns-vision-with/docview/2162396041/se-2?accountid=14681>

Flint, J. (2019, Jan 02). Netflix lures activision executive. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/netflix-lures-activision-executive/docview/2162395766/se-2?accountid=14681>

Epstein, R. J. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: Warren takes crucial step toward presidential run. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-warren-takes-crucial-step-toward/docview/2162395764/se-2?accountid=14681>

Pearson, S., & Trevisani, P. (2019, Jan 02). World news: Bolsonaro sworn in, as brazil sees shift. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bolsonaro-sworn-as-brazil-sees-shift/docview/2162395651/se-2?accountid=14681>

Greene, J. (2019, Jan 02). Business news: Bill gates project hit by trade fight. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-bill-gates-project-hit-trade-fight/docview/2162395573/se-2?accountid=14681>

Maidenberg, M. (2019, Jan 02). Business news: Mining firms cut output in biggest U.S. coal region. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-mining-firms-cut-output-biggest-u-s/docview/2162395535/se-2?accountid=14681>

Business & finance. (2019, Jan 02). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/2162395472/se-2?accountid=14681>

World-wide. (2019, Jan 02). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/2162395394/se-2?accountid=14681>

Clozel, L., & Simon, R. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: Demand crashes work-visa website. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-demand-crashes-work-visa-website/docview/2162395375/se-2?accountid=14681>

Peker, E. (2019, Jan 02). World news: EU surplus tests U.S. trade truce. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-eu-surplus-tests-u-s-trade-truce/docview/2162395325/se-2?accountid=14681>

Woo, S. (2019, Jan 02). Huawei, under fire, holds off rivals. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/huawei-under-fire-holds-off-rivals/docview/2162395210/se-2?accountid=14681>

U.S. news: U.S. watch. (2019, Jan 02). Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/2162395134/se-2?accountid=14681>

Gershman, J. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: New for 2019: Laws on guns, harassment, straws. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-2019-laws-on-guns-harassment-straws/docview/2162395123/se-2?accountid=14681>

Cameron, D., & Kesling, B. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: Fight for tech-savvy vets heats up. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fight-tech-savvy-vets-heats-up/docview/2162395079/se-2?accountid=14681>

Hayashi, Y. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: Equifax is A priority for house democrats. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-equifax-is-priority-house-democrats/docview/2162395006/se-2?accountid=14681>

Nicholas, P., & Andrews, N. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: Trump presses on for wall funds --- congressional leaders invited to bipartisan meeting to resolve a shutdown impasse. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-trump-presses-on-wall-funds/docview/2162394856/se-2?accountid=14681>

Elliott, R. (2019, Jan 02). Business news: Chesapeake shifts to oil from gas. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-chesapeake-shifts-oil-gas/docview/2162394787/se-2?accountid=14681>

Kesling, B. (2019, Jan 02). World news: U.S. forces face missile threat. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-forces-face-missile-threat/docview/2162394777/se-2?accountid=14681>

Davidson, K., & Duehren, A. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: More U.S. agencies run out of money. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-more-agencies-run-out-money/docview/2162394650/se-2?accountid=14681>

McWhirter, C. (2019, Jan 02). U.S. news: Cities covet 'deck parks' to aid cores. Wall Street Journal Retrieved from <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-cities-covet-deck-parks-aid-cores/docview/2162394530/se-2?accountid=14681>

Database copyright © 2026 ProQuest LLC. All rights reserved.

Terms and Conditions Contact ProQuest