

Report Information from ProQuest

17 April 2026 06:32

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Search Strategy.....	xx
1. U.S. News: Suspect Described as a Troubled Outcast --- Man detained in mall shooting that killed 5 'was big on guns,' and 'scary,' classmates say.....	1
2. Hundreds Are Killed As Syria Bombing Intensifies.....	4
3. Business News: Auto Workers Win Pact In Canada.....	7
4. Business News: Takata Didn't Tell U.S. About Incident.....	9
5. Business News: GM to Add More Diesel Engines --- Option to be offered in wider U.S. car lineup even as VW scandal hits category's outlook.....	11
6. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	14
7. World News: Mexico Grapples With a Rise in Killings --- Surging homicide levels put heat on president, as early success fades; calm spots now at risk.....	16
8. Business & Finance.....	19
9. Business News: Hearing Junior Lawyers Would Please Some Courts.....	21
10. U.S. News: Economic Calendar.....	24
11. U.S. News: Wrong-Patient Errors Called Common.....	26
12. City News -- Urban Gardner: A Throne That's Worth the Weight.....	28
13. Election 2016: Campaign Wire.....	31
14. U.S. News: Police Videos Fail to Quiet Protests.....	34
15. U.S. News: Gun-Seizure Plan Sees Wide Support.....	36
16. World News: Saudis Press King Over Women's Rights --- Hundreds of telegrams in grass-roots campaign call for end to system of male guardianship.....	39
17. World News: Spending on Warplanes Fuels Arms Race --- Russian and Chinese programs become U.S. Air Force's 'most pressing challenge'.....	42
18. World News: In Washington, Calls Rise for Syria Sanctions.....	45
19. Business & Finance.....	47
20. World-Wide.....	49
21. Business News: GM Culls Cadillac Dealers.....	51
22. REVIEW --- Word on the Street: Captain Boycott and His Legacy.....	53
23. REVIEW --- Space Mission: Christians Ask if Alien Souls Need Saving.....	55
24. U.S. News: Police Diverge on Camera Usage --- Some departments release video shortly after shootings, others keep it from the public.....	58
25. Election 2016: Cruz, in Reversal, Endorses GOP Nominee.....	61
26. Open House Saturday: Putting Down Roots in Bronxville --- Westchester village, once home to artists' colony, combines urban sophistication with suburban comfort.....	63

TABLE OF CONTENTS

27. Business News: UPS Makes a Delivery by Drone.....	68
28. REVIEW --- Play: News Quiz.....	70
29. World News: Prospects Dim for Landmark Trade Pact.....	75
30. City News: N.J. Casino Measure Doomed, Say Backers --- Advocates cite polls as they stand down on $35 million campaign to push referendum.....	77
31. Business News: Competition Grows in On-Demand Music --- Radio broadcaster IHeartMedia to enter packed market for subscription services.....	80
32. A Bench Player Takes a Star Turn.....	82
33. Christie Used Port as 'Goody Bag' --- Witness says governor doled out perks to help secure endorsements of Democratic officials.....	86
34. U.S. News: Obama Vetoes Bill On Terror Lawsuits.....	89
35. World News: Diplomats Feud Over Syria's Busted Truce --- Top U.S. and Russian negotiators trade blame as others give voice to recriminations.....	91
36. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	94
37. City News: City Comptroller Trades Sharp Jabs With de Blasio.....	96
38. Phil Jackson 'Not Concerned' About Rose Rape Case.....	98
39. U.S. News -- The Numbers: Fiscal Year Change No Fix for Funding Feuds.....	101
40. World News: Criminal Link in Pyongyang Probe.....	104
41. REVIEW --- My Week: On the Road Again.....	106
42. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	109
43. City News -- Metro Money: Rockaways Block Has Seen Better Days.....	111
44. U.S. News: Corruption Case Deals N.Y. Governor a Blow.....	114
45. U.S. News: Family of Man Shot by Officer Releases Video.....	117
46. World News: France Raps Belgians for Moving Migrants Across Border.....	119
47. Ex-Cuomo Associates Charged --- U.S. attorney details alleged plots involving economic programs; shows Albany's graft.....	121
48. Business & Finance.....	125
49. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	127
50. U.S. News: Riots Upend Charlotte's Civic Identity --- A beacon of the New South wrestles with tensions; 'Charlotte Way' falls short.....	130
51. U.S. News: Zika Funding Deal Advances, But Flint Aid Fight Remains.....	133
52. World-Wide.....	135
53. Dos Toros Is Bullish on Expansion.....	137
54. Business News: Aircraft Subsidy War Escalates --- WTO's Airbus ruling brings the EU closer to punitive U.S. tariffs; Boeing at risk, too.....	140

TABLE OF CONTENTS

55. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	143
56. U.S. News: Immigration Study Sees More Pros Than Cons.....	145
57. City News: Port Head Says Bridge Figure Was 'Protected'	147
58. U.S. News: Iraqi Catholic Church in U.S. Torn by Relocation Efforts.....	150
59. City News: Weiner Investigated Over Texts With Teenager.....	153
60. U.S. News: Leaning Condo Tower Raises Alarm.....	155
61. Corruption Crackdown: Cuomo Sees Reputation Put on the Line --- Governor isn't accused of any wrongdoing, but ex-allies face charges; honesty is 'paramount'	157
62. Business News: U.S. Steelmakers Ready China Complaints.....	160
63. U.S. News: Wife of Bombing Suspect Returns From the Mideast.....	163
64. U.S. News: U.S. Urged Not To Settle Health Insurers' Suits.....	165
65. U.S. News: Officer Charged In Tulsa Shooting.....	168
66. Business News: Tesla Sues Michigan on Dealer Law.....	170
67. Corruption Crackdown: SUNY Poly President Faces State Charges.....	172
68. U.S. News: State-Sponsored Cyberattacks Prompt Debate.....	174
69. Finance Watch.....	176
70. World News: Iran's Leader Chides U.S., Saudi Arabia.....	180
71. ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment: Working-Class Wonder.....	181
72. ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment: As the World Streams --- Viewers in the U.S. are obsessed with Nordic thrillers, Korean dramas and a British baking show; Their choices are transforming the once-fragmented TV market into a global one.....	184
73. ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment -- Books: How to Lose Friends And Influence People.....	190
74. ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment -- Review: The Candidates Revealed.....	193
75. Business News: SolarCity Is Cutting Costs --- Solar-panel company drops TV advertising, switches to cheaper marketing tactics.....	196
76. Include Relevant Autopsies In Drug and Therapy Trials.....	198
77. U.S. News: Protests Grip Charlotte, N.C. --- Demonstrations over a fatal police shooting turn violent for a second night.....	200
78. U.S. News: Rahami Allegedly Built Bombs in Open --- Investigators say suspect ordered parts on eBay and tested explosives in backyard.....	203
79. U.S. News: Winners Of 'Genius Grants' Unveiled.....	205
80. Business News: Oil Industry, Investors React to SEC's Exxon Climate-Change Probe.....	207
81. U.S. News: Early Text Uncovered in Burned Scroll.....	210
82. City News: Blast Damage Aid Planned.....	211
83. Election 2016: Trump Questions Police Shooting.....	213

TABLE OF CONTENTS

84. Business News: Zuckerberg Fund to Invest $3 Billion --- The family aims to create technology that could hasten research on disease in the next decade.....	215
85. Business Watch.....	218
86. Business News: U.S. Beef Producers Cautious on China Plan.....	221
87. City News: Connecticut to Pay Sikorsky for Hires.....	223
88. World-Wide.....	225
89. City News -- Urban Gardner: Explosion Left City Wary but Uncowed.....	228
90. City News: Pair Who Stumbled Across Bomb Sought.....	230
91. City News: Ex-Officers Charged In Beating.....	233
92. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	235
93. City News: Port Executive Was Told To Reopen Closed Lanes.....	238
94. World News: Paris Climate Deal Gains Momentum.....	241
95. World News: Obama, Netanyahu Discuss Strife.....	244
96. U.S. News: Suspect Not Well Known at Mosque.....	246
97. World News: Congress Poised to Let 9/11 Families Sue Saudi Arabia.....	248
98. Business News: Machine-Tool Makers Cut Prices to Lift Sales.....	250
99. U.S. News: Texas Warns on Refugee Program.....	253
100. U.S. News: U.S. Loses Top School Ranking to U.K.'s Oxford.....	255
101. World News: U.S. Military Seeks More Troops for Iraq --- Up to 500 would help prepare campaign to retake city of Mosul from Islamic State.....	257
102. Robert Gates Is Mistaken About Donald Trump.....	260
103. U.S. News: Civil-Rights Probe Opened in Police Shooting.....	263
104. Business & Finance.....	265
105. World News: Beijing to End Ban on U.S. Beef.....	267
106. World-Wide.....	269
107. World News: U.S. Says Russia Bombed Syria Aid Convoy --- Kerry, U.N. declare cease-fire isn't over despite Monday strike that killed at least 12.....	271
108. U.S. News: Two Men In Terror Plots Are Sentenced.....	274
109. Business News: Comcast Plans Wireless Service To Start in 2017.....	277
110. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	279
111. Business News: Appeals Court Tosses Verdict, Says China Can Set Vitamin C Pricing.....	283
112. City News: Terrorism-Insurance Picture Is Uncertain in Chelsea.....	285
113. Business News: Allergan To Acquire Biotech.....	288
114. Business News: Seed Companies Defend Mergers in Washington.....	290

TABLE OF CONTENTS

115. World News: Obama Urges Course Shift for World in Conflict.....	292
116. Business News: States Sue U.S. Over New Pay Rule.....	295
117. U.S. News -- 5 Things On.... Fed Officials' Latest Policy Meeting.....	297
118. World News: South Sudan Violence Engulfs Aid Workers --- Rapes, looting by soldiers rattle global community as nation moves toward brink.....	300
119. Business News: Enbridge Won't Appeal Ruling.....	303
120. World News: Illegal Immigrant Mix Shifts --- Number of people in the U.S. illegally levels off as total entering from Mexico falls.....	305
121. U.S. News: No Single Profile for 'Lone Wolf' Attacker.....	308
122. U.S. News: Suspect's Ex-Girlfriend Seeks Custody of Child.....	310
123. World News: Syria Aid Convoy Struck as Truce Falts --- Trucks were delivering assistance on the day the regime said the cease-fire was over.....	312
124. World-Wide.....	315
125. Business & Finance.....	317
126. Trump, Clinton Clash on Security.....	319
127. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	323
128. World News: U.N. Delays Negotiations on Refugee Pact Until 2018.....	326
129. Business Watch.....	328
130. Region Is Wary but Remains Resolute --- After weekend blast, commuters remove their earphones, but tourists are unfazed.....	332
131. Region Is Wary but Remains Resolute --- Word 'terrorism' puts Cuomo and de Blasio on opposite ends again, but both are criticized.....	335
132. World News: North Korea Says It Tested a Rocket Engine.....	338
133. U.S. News: No Ties Found Between Mall Attacker and Islamic State.....	340
134. City News: Park Advocates Name New Head.....	343
135. City News: Danny Meyer Puts His Next Spot in Bryant Park.....	345
136. U.S. News: Alerts, Now Basic, May Expand.....	347
137. U.S. News: Police Seek More Help in Terror Fight --- Attacks on random, low-profile targets raise concern about other 'soft' locales.....	349
138. Business News: Burberry CEO Delivers Swan Song --- Christopher Bailey will step down amid drop in sales and failure to expand in the U.S.....	352
139. U.S. News: Businesses Step Up to Aid Refugees.....	356
140. World News: Southeast Asia Fires Tied to Deaths --- U.S. study says smoke from blazes set to clear land for crops killed more than 100,000.....	358

TABLE OF CONTENTS

141. Business News: Unilever Buys Seventh Generation.....	360
142. World News: U.S. Strikes Said to Hit Afghan Police.....	363
143. U.S. News: Zika Fears Abate In Part of Miami.....	364
144. World News: Merkel Admits Errors on Migrants.....	366
145. U.S. News: Antibiotics Use In Hospitals Grows.....	369
146. U.S. News: Prosecutors Say Christie Was Told of Traffic Jams.....	371
147. American Airstrike Threatens Syrian Cease-Fire.....	374
148. Business News: Bayer Seeks to Offset Rules --- Europe bans many GMOs, but Monsanto acquisition offers foothold in U.S. market.....	377
149. Business News: As Satellites Multiply, Officials Seek Ways to Avoid Collisions.....	380
150. World-Wide.....	383
151. U.S. News: Minnesota City Grapples With Stabbings at Mall.....	385
152. Election 2016: Trump Backers Try to Pin Birtherism On Clinton.....	388
153. U.S. News: New York Officials Seek Motive.....	390
154. Business & Finance.....	393
155. U.S. News: Economic Calendar.....	395
156. Business News: Taking Aim at Craigslist --- Africa's biggest company pushes into the U.S. and wants to dethrone online-classified leader.....	397
157. World News: U.S. Alerted Russia Before Strike.....	400
158. City News -- Urban Gardner: Dogs Sprung After Good Behavior Help Veterans Cope.....	402
159. World News: Putin Uses Vote to Bolster Mandate --- Russian president shrugs off steep drop in turnout; 'What is important is the result'.....	405
160. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	408
161. U.S. News: D.C. Gun Law Faces Challenges in Court.....	411
162. U.S. News: Rampage Probed In Philadelphia.....	413
163. U.S. News: Baltimore Struggles to Oust Monuments to Confederates.....	416
164. City News: Republican Club At Cornell Causes Rift With Pick.....	419
165. City News: Leaders Struggle to Unite After Blast.....	422
166. U.S. News: New Mexico Police Shooting Trial to Start.....	424
167. Trends (A Special Report) --- The New Fashion Mantra for Office Attire: Comfort: As the line blurs between our professional and personal lives, so have the clothes we wear.....	427
168. U.S. News: Clinical-Trial Rules Take Aim At Transparency.....	430
169. City News: State Tells EPA GE's Cleanup Isn't Finished.....	433
170. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	435
171. U.S. News: Household Net Worth Rises to Record.....	438

TABLE OF CONTENTS

172. City News: N.J. Lawmaker Has Plan to End Road Impasse.....	441
173. Business News: Tech Sector Gets Boost From Apple.....	443
174. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	446
175. U.S. News: Inflation Gained Steam in August.....	449
176. Stocks Fall but End Week Higher --- Financial shares follow Deutsche Bank down; energy sector sinks as oil hits one-month low.....	451
177. World-Wide.....	454
178. Business & Finance.....	456
179. Business News: Jet-Engine Maker Falls Short of Goal.....	458
180. Election 2016: Trump Backs Off A 'Birther' Claim.....	461
181. U.S. News: After a Disaster, Speed Matters.....	463
182. OFF DUTY --- The Off Duty 50: Fifty Reasons Fall Is the Best Season --- From sweater weather to fondue, hammock camping and suddenly empty beaches, here's why we're glad summer is history.....	465
183. City News -- Metro Money: At 100 Years Old, This Vintage VIP Ain't Misbehavin'.....	503
184. Business News: Battery Scare on U.S. Flight.....	506
185. World News: Propaganda Chief Killed by Airstrike, U.S. Says.....	508
186. Business News: Shoppers Click 'Buy' for iPhone 7.....	510
187. World News: Duterte Shift on U.S. Worries Army.....	513
188. U.S. News: Gasoline Spill Sparks Federal Probe.....	515
189. World News: Syrian Refugees Fear Assad Will Remain --- Opposition in Turkey worries U.S. is no longer pushing that president leave office.....	517
190. U.S. News: Flood-Hit Firms Battle To Rebuild --- Many companies in the stricken area face steep recovery costs, even with insurance.....	520
191. U.S. News -- The Numbers: Earthquake 'Magnitude' Misses the Mark.....	523
192. World News: Bloc Remains Split on Migration, Growth --- European leaders urge cooperation on borders, economy; warn against populist solutions.....	526
193. REVIEW --- Books: The Thought That Counts --- The most important part of any argument is preparing the audience to be convinced by it.....	529
194. REVIEW --- Good & Dirty --- Our war against microbes has created serious health problems; The remedy: Get dirty, eat better and stop overusing antibiotics.....	533
195. REVIEW --- Books -- Children's Books: Unexpected Friends.....	538
196. REVIEW --- Play: News Quiz.....	540
197. U.S. News: Internet Plan Slows Spending Accord.....	544

TABLE OF CONTENTS

198. U.S. News: Prospects for Economic Surge Ebb --- Retail sales, jobless claims, manufacturing data damp optimism for strong year-end.....	547
199. U.S. News: Attempt to Impeach IRS Chief Is Delayed.....	550
200. Business Watch.....	552
201. U.S. News: President Urged Not To Pardon Snowden.....	555
202. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	557
203. Business News: Michigan Denies Tesla's Request For Dealership.....	559
204. U.S. Seeks Heavy Fine for Deutsche --- Justice Department proposes $14 billion mortgage-securities probe settlement.....	562
205. World News: World Watch.....	565
206. U.S. News: Fire Crews Fight Over Pay --- State firefighters in California seek wages more in line with city and local teams.....	568
207. Business & Finance.....	571
208. U.S. Chases Chinese Metals Trail.....	573
209. City News: Major Crimes In City Schools Hit a New Low.....	577
210. Christie Seeks Schools Shake-Up --- Governor asks court to sidestep tenure law and cap state funding for struggling districts.....	579
211. U.S. News: Ohio Boy With BB Gun Killed by Police.....	582
212. World News: Germany Falters in Bid to Employ Migrants --- Businesses answer call to hire but struggle to find asylum seekers with the right skills.....	584
213. City News: NYPD Officers Shoot Man Wielding Cleaver.....	587
214. U.S. News: Sandra Bland's Family Settles Suit.....	589
215. City News: Connecticut School Ruling Appealed.....	592
216. World News: Philippine Diplomat Reassures on Ties, Defends President.....	594
217. City News: Housing in Newark Is Looking Up --- Two apartment towers are planned in the city, the first such projects in more than 40 years.....	596
218. Business News: Boeing Calls Foul on Jet Contract --- Plane maker says Denmark's choice of Lockheed fighter was deeply flawed.....	599
219. Business News: New CEO at Time Inc. Selects Digital Boss as Operating Chief.....	602
220. U.S. News: Bloomberg Bets Big on Research.....	604
221. ARENA --- Morgenstern on Film -- Review -- 'Snowden': A Complex Life Turned to Stone.....	606
222. ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment -- Memoir: 'Avid Reader': A Veteran Editor Shares His War Stories.....	611
223. Business News: Maker of Instant Ramen Dials Back the Salt.....	614
224. World News: Aleppo Aid Sits at Border As Cease-Fire Is Extended.....	615

TABLE OF CONTENTS

225. Business News: Business Watch.....	618
226. Business & Finance.....	621
227. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	623
228. World-Wide.....	625
229. City News: GOP Leaders Pick Nominee After Race Is Won by Dead Man.....	628
230. World News: Duterte Confounds American Allies --- Philippine president's blunt remarks toward U.S. leave many in region pondering implications.....	630
231. World News: U.S. to End Sanctions Against Myanmar --- Move comes despite prior demand to curb military influence and change constitution.....	633
232. City News: Jury Is Selected For Bridge Trial.....	636
233. World News: Russian Patriotism, by the Glass --- Tensions with West spur domestic wine revival; annexing imperial vineyards.....	638
234. World News: Obama Looks To Cement Key Policy Objective.....	641
235. U.S. News: Early Prostate Cancer Threat Seen as Low.....	643
236. World News: U.S. Seeks Strategy To Sustain Relations.....	645
237. City News: Special Primary Is Canceled.....	648
238. Stocks Inch Lower With Trading Calm --- Bonds rebound as investors wait for direction at meetings of central bankers.....	649
239. WSJ.D Technology: Twitter Adds TV App to Draw Users --- Social-media service is making live streaming focus of its strategy to revive growth.....	652
240. Pimco, Gross Lock Horns in Filings.....	654
241. U.S. News: Missouri Levee Raises Questions.....	657
242. U.S. News: Prison Protests Hit States --- Inmates at facilities in several states hold strikes over pay, health care, living conditions.....	660
243. Business News: Vineyards Struggle With Climate --- Rising temperatures are making grapes ripen faster, altering flavor, Australian vintners say.....	663
244. Style & Travel -- On Style: Get Ready for Fashion's New Personality --- Designers take risks at New York fashion week; hello to crushed velvet, powder pink and sequins.....	666
245. City News: Verizon, City Spar Over Cable Rollout.....	669
246. U.S. News: President of Atlanta Fed to Step Down.....	672
247. City News: Woman Killed in Front of Her Baby.....	674
248. U.S. News: North Carolina Boycott May Grow.....	677
249. Trump, Team Recast His Image --- Nominee shifts from raucous rallies to 'presidential' appearances but still sometimes ad libs.....	679

TABLE OF CONTENTS

250. World News: Syria Sieges Drive Out Sunni Population --- U.N., opposition accuse Assad regime of forced evacuations to divide country.....	683
251. World News: Russians Stole Olympians' Data.....	685
252. U.S. News: Groups Push for Debt Relief --- Farmers, real-estate agents and others say student-loan levels threaten industries.....	688
253. World News: U.S. Ally to Buy Weapons From Adversaries --- Philippine leader says he wants to work with Russia and China; 'I do not like the Americans'	691
254. Business & Finance.....	694
255. U.S. News: Threats Detailed At Oregon Trial.....	696
256. U.S. News: Obama Makes Late Push for Trade Vote.....	699
257. World News: World Watch.....	701
258. U.S. News: Obama To Increase Refugees Admitted.....	703
259. World News: Iran Threatened to Shoot Down American Spy Planes.....	705
260. World-Wide.....	707
261. Business News: VW Uncertain on a U.S. Future for Its Diesel Cars.....	709
262. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	712
263. Judge Grills Potential Bridge Jurors --- Pool whittled down as questions center on travel over span, knowledge of case.....	716
264. More Builders Say No to Parking Lots.....	719
265. World News: Turkey Asks U.S. To Arrest Cleric.....	721
266. Dollar-Bond Issues Soaring.....	723
267. U.S. News: NCAA to Relocate Events Over Law.....	726
268. World-Wide.....	728
269. Business & Finance.....	730
270. U.S. News: CEOs See Sluggish Growth.....	732
271. Business News: Industrial Gas Giants End Talks On Merger.....	735
272. Business Watch.....	737
273. Business News: Hanjin Restarts Freight Deliveries --- Ships stranded by financial woes begin to unload goods with help from Korean Air.....	740
274. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	743
275. U.S. News: EPA Proposes New Water Rules for Nuclear Emergencies.....	745
276. City News: Nonprofit Loses Records Ruling.....	747
277. World News: Bodies of U.S. Fighters Head Home.....	750
278. Syrian Cease-Fire Gets Fitful Start.....	752
279. World News: Duterte Says U.S. Advisers Should Leave --- Philippine president suggests presence of American military invites extremism.....	756

TABLE OF CONTENTS

280. U.S. News: Inmate Numbers Climb Back Up --- After drops following new criminal justice laws, incarceration rates are rebounding.....	759
281. City News: Attorney Presses Yeshiva Changes.....	762
282. Business News: Southwest Incident Linked to Cracked Blade.....	764
283. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	766
284. U.S. News: NFL Protest Aren't Widespread.....	769
285. World News: Rebel Threat Poses Challenge to Cease-Fire in Syria --- Former al Qaeda affiliate aims to rally other factions as U.S.- Russia plan proceeds.....	771
286. Secondary Falters as Jets Drop Opener --- New York got some pleasant surprises in Sunday's season-opening loss, but the secondary wasn't up to stopping Cincinnati's passing game.....	774
287. U.S. News: Stretch of Chicago River To Get $1.5 Billion Revamp.....	777
288. World-Wide.....	779
289. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	782
290. World News: Iran Denies Harassment of U.S. Ships.....	785
291. Students Injured In Deck Collapse.....	787
292. World News: Summer of Unrest Grips Kashmir.....	789
293. U.S. News: Economic Calendar.....	792
294. World News: Allies Lack Avenues to Penalize Pyongyang.....	794
295. Business News: Airlines Offer More Coach Choices --- U.S. carriers expand categories to compete with discounters and increase revenue.....	796
296. City News: 9/11 Families Find Comfort in Sharing Their Grief.....	799
297. U.S. Is Already a Signatory to Test Ban Treaty.....	802
298. Business News: GM's Eye-Tracking Tech Aims to Keep Drivers Alert.....	804
299. U.S. News: First Trial In Oregon Occupation Set to Start.....	806
300. U.S. News: At Memorials, Past Is Present for Families --- Ceremonies mark 15th anniversary of 9/11; 'It's another way to get a little bit closer'.....	809
301. Wealth Management (A Special Report) --- Money and Happiness: A Surprising Twist: It may not be about how much wealth you have, but how much cash.....	811
302. At Wells, A Solid Image Is At Risk.....	815
303. Business & Finance.....	818
304. World News: U.S.-China Tensions Center on Korea --- Washington's plan to provide Seoul with missile defense raises hackles in Beijing.....	820
305. Nuclear Test Puts Pressure On U.S.....	822
306. U.S. News: U.S. Agencies Order Pipeline Work Halted.....	826
307. U.S. News: Zika Funding Impasse Nears Breakthrough.....	828

TABLE OF CONTENTS

308. City News: For 9/11, Sorrow Over Loss, Triumph Over Return --- Police march to honor officers who perished; mayor hails agencies' move to WTC tower.....	831
309. U.S. News: Municipal Park Privatizations Fuel Conflicts.....	833
310. Returning to the Lost Towers --- Harley Di Nardo couldn't grieve for his sister -- until he decided to reconstruct her last moments.....	836
311. City News: Too Many No-Shows Force Council Panel to Call It a Day.....	841
312. U.S. News: Court Overturns Bias Case Conviction.....	844
313. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	846
314. World News: Syria Cease-Fire Accord Reached.....	848
315. U.S. News: NFL Prepares for Pregame Protests During Anthem.....	851
316. Business News: France's Total Expands in Texas.....	853
317. Business News: GM Referral Program Spurs Recall.....	855
318. Business News: Wal-Mart Pulls 'Egyptian Cotton' Sheets.....	857
319. Mexican Metal Cache Linked to China Mogul --- U.S. executives contend aluminum magnate gamed global trade system.....	860
320. World News: U.S. Gets Ready for New Iraq Offensive --- Additional troops sent to bolster campaign to reclaim Mosul; October battle anticipated.....	867
321. Business News: Pulte Chooses a New CEO.....	870
322. World-Wide.....	872
323. World News: Obama Lays Out Tough To-Do List For Final Stretch.....	875
324. Business News: Ford Cuts Guidance On Recall Charges.....	877
325. Business & Finance.....	879
326. Stocks Steady as ECB Holds Fire --- Technology shares lead modest declines in U.S., while market in Europe edges down.....	881
327. U.S. News: FBI Arrests Two Men in Breaches at CIA, Justice.....	884
328. Election 2016: Clinton Aims at Positive Message --- Democrat, on attack of late, is advised to pivot and give people reasons to back her.....	887
329. U.S. News: Charges Sought in Muslim Recruit's Death --- Investigators call for action against up to 20 Marines in incident on Parris Island in March.....	889
330. Business News: Deloitte Says It Will Offer Leave For Range of Caregiving Needs.....	892
331. Business News: Founder of Trucking Firm Swift To Retire.....	895
332. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	897
333. U.S. News: Republican Senators Decry Obama's Nuclear Ban Effort.....	900
334. World News: U.S. Hostage Rescue In Afghanistan Failed.....	902

TABLE OF CONTENTS

335. City News: Bloomberg Backs Ex-Aide in Race.....	904
336. Election 2016: Nominees Grapple With Reaction to Forum Comments.....	906
337. U.S. News: California Bolsters Emissions Laws.....	909
338. Business News: Formula One Travels Over Tough Course --- Liberty Media deal steers racing circuit to new U.S. push as global following flags.....	911
339. Business News: Walgreens To Divest Additional Stores.....	914
340. Business News: Meeting Ties Bosch CEO To VW Chief.....	916
341. U.S. News: House GOP Mulls Move Against IRS Head.....	919
342. Loaded Handgun Taken to School On the First Day.....	921
343. City News: Developer Is Charged in Tax Case.....	924
344. U.S. News: Latino Population Growth Slows.....	926
345. World-Wide.....	929
346. Election 2016: U.S. Officials Warn Russia Over Hacking.....	931
347. Business & Finance.....	934
348. Trump, Clinton Clash on Security.....	936
349. World News: On Trip, Obama Faces Tests to U.S. Power --- During his final visit to Asia, various leaders try to undercut his agenda in region.....	939
350. City News: City Graffiti Lingers Longer.....	943
351. U.S. News: Report Says Oil Reserve Functions Inefficiently.....	945
352. World News: Merkel Tells Her Party to Moderate Its Tone After Loss.....	947
353. World News: Russian Jet Flies 'Within 10 Feet' Of Navy Plane.....	949
354. Business News: Tegna Plans to Spin Off Cars.com.....	951
355. School Ruling Rocks Conn. --- Judge says funding is unconstitutional, orders new standards in educational system.....	953
356. City News: With Bridge Case Set to Begin, Court Halts Release of Names.....	957
357. World News: Germany Rethinks Once-Taboo Tax Cuts --- Europe's largest nation is one of the most taxed, but many Germans don't want a reduction.....	959
358. U.S. News: ITT Students Chart Tough Course.....	962
359. Business News: A Flea-Market App Comes to U.S. --- Japan's Mercari dares to challenge Amazon and eBay as it tailors service to Americans.....	964
360. City News: New Effort Aims to Support Preschool Social Skills.....	966
361. U.S. News: Health Law Faces Key Time --- Officials look to enroll more healthy people during this year's critical sign-up period.....	969

TABLE OF CONTENTS

362. Business News: Ackman's Move Pressures Chipotle.....	972
363. Business News: Uber Scores Win In Ruling on Drivers.....	976
364. Business News: Airline Stocks Rise on Outlook.....	978
365. Free-Trade Agreements Help Us Get More Balanced Trade.....	980
366. World News: Obama Sets Laos Ties on a New Track --- President recognizes secret war, pledges aid to clean up bombs left from Vietnam era.....	982
367. Business News: Shipping Line to Sell Ports --- CMA CGM of France seeks up to $1 billion to lower debt burden; assets in U.S. on block.....	984
368. Business News: Lego's Profit Declines As U.S. Growth Slows.....	987
369. Business & Finance.....	989
370. U.S. News: Percentage of Uninsured Remains at a Low.....	992
371. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	994
372. World-Wide.....	998
373. U.S. News: Tax Proposal Stirs Debate --- Critics question using public bonds to support a planned Baltimore project.....	1000
374. U.S. News: Graffiti of Maine Governor In KKK Garb Fuels Uproar.....	1003
375. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	1005
376. Business News: Hanjin Gains U.S. Protection From Creditors.....	1008
377. City Won't End J'Ouvert --- Mayor says violence at annual festival can be curbed; police call for community help.....	1011
378. Facebook's 'Trending' Fix Has Own Flaws.....	1014
379. World News: Security Council Denounces North Korea Missile Launch.....	1016
380. Business News: Shale Driller EOG To Buy Yates Petroleum.....	1019
381. World News: Philippine Leader Says He Regrets Anti-U.S. Rant.....	1021
382. City News: Transformation of Lower Manhattan's Economy Detailed.....	1023
383. U.S. News: Students' Federal Aid Kept School Operator Afloat.....	1025
384. City News: J'Ouvert Poses Special Challenges.....	1027
385. U.S. News: Tribe Protest Spurs Halt To Project in North Dakota.....	1030
386. U.S. News: Plans Target Infrastructure.....	1032
387. World News: World Watch.....	1033
388. Business News: GM Settles Last Suits on Switches.....	1036
389. Business News: VW to Take Navistar Stake.....	1038
390. Univision, Televisa Drama Heightens --- Companies wrestle with changing tastes among Hispanic millennials.....	1042

TABLE OF CONTENTS

391. U.S. News: L.A. Rams' Faithful Relish Team's Return --- 'Big Seed' Lance Goldberg is back, with his watermelon hat, and plenty of followers.....	1046
392. U.S. News: Wells' Link to Quake Scrutinized.....	1048
393. World News: Obama, Putin Stumble on Syria --- Meeting of leaders fails to end impasse, as Islamic State claims deadly bombings.....	1050
394. World-Wide.....	1053
395. World News: Confusion Over Obama's Arrival Draws a Rebuke.....	1055
396. World News: Comments Spur U.S.-Philippine Rift.....	1057
397. U.S. News: Economic Calendar.....	1060
398. City News: Parade Goes On as Revelers Gather.....	1061
399. City News: Two Fatally Shot At Predawn Fest; Future Uncertain.....	1064
400. Business & Finance.....	1066
401. Union Boss Hits Ground Running.....	1069
402. U.S. News: Cracking Zika's Genetic Code.....	1072
403. Business News: SpaceX Blast Threatens To Leave NASA in a Bind --- With schedule in doubt for U.S. spacecraft, agency faces prospect of using costly stopgap.....	1074
404. Investing in Funds & ETFs: A Monthly Analysis --- News Challenge: The Month in Funds and Investing: Test Your Smarts on Herbalife, OJ and Indexing.....	1077
405. U.S. News: Stanford Student In Assault Case Freed.....	1083
406. City News: Greater New York Watch.....	1085
407. City News: Top Education Official in N.J. To Step Down.....	1088
408. U.S. News: Economic Data Not Likely To Help Either Campaign.....	1091
409. U.S. News: Hermine Heads Up the Atlantic Coast.....	1093
410. Stocks Rally, Even as Drugmakers Falter --- A new drug-pricing proposal from Clinton dents biotech shares; gold and oil advance.....	1096
411. World-Wide.....	1099
412. World News: Putin and Abe, Seeking Closer Economic Ties, Discuss Disputed Islands.....	1101
413. City News: Top Newark Teachers Receive Bonuses.....	1103
414. U.S. News: Trade Gap Narrows As Exports Rebound.....	1105
415. Business News: Merck Abandons Osteoporosis Drug.....	1107
416. Business & Finance.....	1109
417. U.S. News: Individual Doctor 'Report Cards' Show Impact.....	1111
418. U.S. News: States Fight Opioid Epidemic With Data --- Authorities monitor doctors' prescriptions; critics decry risk to patient relationships.....	1113
419. Business News: Auto Sales Lose Steam As U.S. Buyers Pull Back.....	1116

TABLE OF CONTENTS

420. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	1118
421. U.S. News: Hurricane Hermine Threatens Gulf Coast to Atlantic States.....	1121
422. Election 2016: Speech Sets Off Hispanic Backlash.....	1123
423. City News: Evidence Detailed in Imam's Death.....	1126
424. City News: Art Store Draws to a Close --- Lower East Side shop catered to renowned artists and students; a paper lover's dream.....	1128
425. U.S. News: Factory Sector Contracted In August.....	1132
426. Business News: Fiat Sales Calls Are Focus of Probe.....	1134
427. World-Wide.....	1136
428. City News: After Shooting Spike, Bridgeport Patrols Increased.....	1138
429. Mexico Comment Spurred Pushback.....	1140
430. Retailers Appeal for Help With Cargo Snarl.....	1144
431. Business & Finance.....	1146
432. U.S. News: Manufacturers Search for Workers.....	1149
433. Business News: Wal-Mart to Trim Staff --- Retailer moves staff from behind desks and onto store floor; 7,000 jobs in flux.....	1152
434. World News: Libyan Militias Seek Power After Battle --- Rivalries, violence are threats even if pro- government forces beat Islamic State in Sirte.....	1154
435. World News: Obama Seeks to Cement Asia Pivot --- Trade, North Korea and South China Sea are among priorities at coming summits.....	1157
436. Business News: Gap Faces Setback After Fire At Facility.....	1160
437. World News: Bodies of U.S. Fighters in Syria Wait to Come Home.....	1162
438. U.S. News: Social Media Sees Romance Scams.....	1164
439. Business News: Apple May Send Cash to the U.S.....	1166
440. U.S. News: At Northern Border, Calls for Vigilance --- Security debate draws attention to remote, hard-to- patrol parts of U.S.-Canada boundary.....	1168
441. Business News: Driverless Tractor Steals Farm Show.....	1171
442. U.S. News: Forensic Methods Are Questioned.....	1173
443. City News: Weiner Investigated By Child Welfare.....	1175
444. Business News: Deere, Monsanto Equipment Deal Faces U.S. Challenge.....	1178
445. City News: Tensions Escalate Over Hoosick Falls Water Crisis.....	1180
446. World News: Into Syria's Chaos, Add a Kurdish State --- Rojava has four million people and its own constitution, alarming Turkey and the U.S.....	1183
447. U.S. News: Award in Terror Case Dismissed On Appeal.....	1187

TABLE OF CONTENTS

448. Business News: Mattel's American Girls Head to Toys 'R' Us.....	1190
449. Business News: McDonald's President Retires.....	1191
450. World-Wide.....	1194
451. World News: World Watch.....	1196
452. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	1198
453. Herniated Disk Dims Outlook for Walker.....	1201
454. Business & Finance.....	1203
455. U.S. News: FDA Warns About Pairing Painkillers, Anxiety Drugs.....	1205
456. World News: China Faces Its Trade Critics.....	1207
457. U.S. News: Bad Romance: Falling for a Phony Online Suitor.....	1210
458. City News: City Boosts Security for J'Ouvert Festival.....	1212
459. U.S. News: Online Daters Are Falling Prey to Scams --- Fraudulent dating- service accounts are increasingly luring victims to send 'loans'	1214
460. U.S. News: California Gun-Violence Center Picks Chief.....	1217
461. U.S. News: Chicago Shooting Deaths Accelerate.....	1219
462. Progressives Finally Embrace States' Rights.....	1222
463. World News: Beijing Accuses American of Spying.....	1224
464. Business News: Unlimited Data...Within Limits --- After pledging to ditch usage caps, Sprint and T-Mobile introduce costlier premium plans.....	1226
465. CIA Venture Fund Operates in Shadows --- Trustees at agency firm In-Q-Tel have ties to companies it funds	1229
466. Business & Finance.....	1235
467. World-Wide.....	1237
468. U.S. News: U.S. Watch.....	1239
469. U.S. News: Hackers Hit Groups Studying Russia.....	1242
470. City News: Bratton: Law Prevents Release of Data.....	1244
471. City News: Water Official Violated Rules.....	1247
472. U.S. News: Court Redefines Who Is a Parent.....	1249
473. City News: Judge Denies Politician's Request to Delay Election.....	1251
474. City News: Hoosick Falls Hearing Grills Health Officials.....	1253
475. City News: Suspect Had Dispute With Ex-Employer.....	1256
476. Theranos Halts New Zika Test After FDA Inspection.....	1258
477. U.S. News: Farmers See Their Incomes Drop Further.....	1262
478. U.S. News: A Big Grant for Big Data --- XSEDE project, which links researchers to supercomputers, wins $110 million award from the National Science Foundation.....	1265

TABLE OF CONTENTS

479. City News: Port Regulators Win Case.....	1268
480. City News: Emails Show Lobbyist's Close Ties to City Hall.....	1271
481. World News: France Vows to Scrap U.S.-EU Trade Deal.....	1273
482. U.S. News: Immigrant Case Relied On Faulty Statistics.....	1275
483. Election 2016: Rubio and Former DNC Head Win --- Rubio to face Murphy in Senate race; Debbie Wasserman Schultz easily wins primary.....	1278
484. City News: Christie Vetoes Rise in Base Wage.....	1280
485. U.S. News: Fire Stations Open Doors to Addicts --- New Hampshire city hit by opioid crisis takes novel approach to getting people help.....	1283
486. World News: Fresh Surge in Migrants Strains Greece --- More asylum seekers disregard EU strategy to deter them from Aegean Sea crossing.....	1287
487. Business News: Sears to Resume Selling Paint.....	1289
488. Business News: Mall Woes Squeeze Abercrombie.....	1291
489. U.S. News: Potential Zika Drugs Identified.....	1294
490. Business News: U.S. Implements Rules on Drones.....	1296
491. Medical School Dean Shot in Chappaqua.....	1299
492. U.S. Stocks Rebound in Sleepy Session --- Major indexes shake off Friday's declines as financial sector heads broad advance.....	1301
493. City News: Shelter Employee Killed in Shooting.....	1303
494. Dollar Lift Gathers Steam --- As Federal Reserve signals a rate increase, traders watch for a stronger greenback.....	1306
495. Duke Won't Seek Oil Man's Money.....	1309
496. World News: Venezuelans Mobilize for Recall Vote.....	1311
497. World News: Obama to Meet Erdogan and Xi.....	1314
498. Business News: U.S. Warns Drillers About Bolts --- Failure of fasteners could result in an oil spill on the scale of 2010 disaster, officials say.....	1316
499. Business News: Cemex Agrees to Sell Some U.S. Assets for $306 Million.....	1319
500. Business News: Truck Carrying Takata Air Bags Explodes.....	1321
Bibliography.....	1324

SEARCH STRATEGY

Set No.	Searched for	Databases	Results
S4	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20160101-20161231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6415
S3	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20170101-20171231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	6471
S2	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20180101-20181231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	7907
S1	((US news) AND (publication.exact("Wall Street Journal") AND bdl(1006968) AND at.exact("News") AND stype.exact("Newspapers") AND pd(20190101-20191231)) AND bdl(1006968)) AND bdl(1006968)	Arts Premium Collection, British Periodicals, Coronavirus Research Database, Coronavirus Research Database, Early Modern Collection, Ebook Central, Education Research Index, ERIC, GeoRef, Periodicals Archive Online, Periodicals Index Online, ProQuest Central, ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Guardian and The Observer, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The New York Times, ProQuest Historical Newspapers: The Scotsman, ProQuest One Literature, Publicly Available Content Database, SciTech Premium Collection, Social Science Premium Collection	8057

U.S. News: Suspect Described as a Troubled Outcast - -- Man detained in mall shooting that killed 5 'was big on guns,' and 'scary,' classmates say

Elinson, Zusha; Greene, Jay . Elinson, Zusha; Greene, Jay.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to the Seattle Times, court records show he had faced three domestic-violence assault charges, with the victim identified as his stepfather.

FULL TEXT

Before police say he shot five people dead in a Macy's on Friday night, Arcan Cetin was already known in the small island city where he lived as a troubled young man with an affinity for guns.

"I know he was big on guns, his reputation wasn't great," said Bryce Diras, who went to Oak Harbor High School with Mr. Cetin. "He wasn't right in the head, and as much as it pains me to say it, I wouldn't have put something like this past him."

Investigators are still searching for a motive in the massacre at the Cascade Mall, about 60 miles north of Seattle in the small city of Burlington. Mr. Cetin, 20, was arrested Saturday night and is in custody in Skagit County jail. Jail records describe his offenses as five counts of murder. He hasn't been formally charged.

A Federal Bureau of Investigation spokeswoman said the bureau does "not have any information to suggest terrorist ties" but the investigation is continuing.

"We feel confident we have the shooter," Washington state Patrol Sgt. Mark Francis said. "Whether or not anyone else is involved has yet to be determined."

It was unclear whether Mr. Cetin has a lawyer. A man who answered the phone at his mother's home declined to comment.

Mr. Cetin was born in Turkey, and grew up in Oak Harbor, a small city on Whidbey Island about 50 miles north of Seattle dominated by a Naval Air Station and military culture.

He joined the Reserve Officers Training Corp, a program for potential young military recruits, and did well on the rifle team, former fellow members said. He cheered the 2011 death of Osama bin Laden on his Facebook page and scolded others for "ruining" a "national moment" when they commented with jokes.

According to his Facebook page, confirmed as his by a state law enforcement officer, he worked at the commissary on the Naval station as a bagger. A spokesman for the base said he couldn't confirm Mr. Cetin's employment.

Sgt. Francis said Sunday that an ex-girlfriend of Mr. Cetin's worked at a Macy's store, but investigators don't believe it is the one where the shooting took place. He said investigators have yet to find any connection between the suspect and the victims.

Those killed were a 16-year-old cancer survivor; a 95-year-old woman and her daughter, a 64-year-old probation officer; a 52-year-old Macy's cosmetics employee; and the only male fatality, a Boeing Co. employee believed to be about 60.

Detectives interviewed Mr. Cetin Saturday night for the first time.

"He was calm and collected," said Sgt. Francis.

Mr. Cetin had been arrested before for simple assault, law-enforcement officials said. According to the Seattle Times, court records show he had faced three domestic-violence assault charges, with the victim identified as his stepfather. A judge told Mr. Cetin last year he wasn't to possess a firearm, the Times reported.

Mr. Cetin used a .22-caliber Ruger rifle in the attack, and three guns were missing from a relative, one of which was that rifle, according to a law-enforcement official.

In a high school with 1,800 students in a Navy town where teens come and go, Mr. Cetin stood out, former high-school acquaintances said.

"Everyone knew him, but I don't think he had many close friends," said Nikeesha Gooding, 19. Mr. Cetin was a "troublemaker of sorts," she said. He could be "vulgar," she said, describing him as "an outcast with a troubled mind."

Mr. Cetin was an average student who didn't act out in class or skip many classes, said a woman who went to the same high school but didn't want to be identified. Mr. Cetin had a "vulgar humor, violent humor," and "held a lot of anger and resentment towards fellow classmates," she said.

"Everyone knew who he was, unfortunately because he made a lot of people uncomfortable because of how . . . scary he was honestly," she said.

Jim Carlton contributed to this article.

Credit: Zusha Elinson, Jay Greene

DETAILS

Subject:	Firearms; Criminal investigations; Murders & murder attempts; Shootings; Secondary schools
Business indexing term:	Corporation: Macys Inc; Industry: 61111 : Elementary and Secondary Schools

Location:	Burlington Washington; United States--US
People:	Cetin, Arcan
Company / organization:	Name: Macys Inc; NAICS: 445110, 455110; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	61111: Elementary and Secondary Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822946390
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-suspect-described-as-troubled-outcast/docview/1822946390/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Hundreds Are Killed As Syria Bombing Intensifies

Abdulrahim, Raja; Fassihi, Farnaz . Abdulrahim, Raja; Fassihi, Farnaz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Last November, a Russian military spokesman said warplanes had struck Islamic State targets with two 1,100-lb. "concrete-penetrating" bombs, the news agency Interfax reported.

FULL TEXT

Syria and its Russian allies pressed an assault on Aleppo amid what the United Nations called the most intense bombing in years of warfare there, and residents said hundreds of civilians have been killed since a cease-fire fell apart last week.

The surge in deaths came as a spokesman for U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon over the weekend cited reports of "bunker buster bombs." The bombs have left large craters in the rebel-held part of the divided city, Aleppo residents said, and caused shock waves felt blocks away from the point of impact.

The U.N. Special Envoy for Syria, Staffan de Mistura, told the Security Council on Sunday that he had seen videos and pictures of incendiary bombs "that create fireballs of such intensity that they light up the pitch darkness in eastern Aleppo, as though it was actually daylight."

Rebels and opposition leaders blamed Russia, Syria's key ally, for the bunker-buster bombs. The Russian Defense Ministry didn't immediately respond to a request for comment.

"The first time one struck, everyone thought there was an earthquake," said Muhammad al-Zein, who helps oversee hospitals in the rebel-held part of Aleppo. "But the next day another one hit and we realized it was not an earthquake."

Much of the death toll came in the four days since Thursday when the Syrian regime announced the start of a new offensive against Aleppo's rebel-controlled neighborhoods.

President Bashar al-Assad has vowed to retake all of Aleppo and the offensive was the latest indication that he aims to win the war militarily despite repeated efforts by the U.S. and Russia to reach a lasting cease-fire and a diplomatic solution. Syrian state media reported that the army on Saturday seized control of an area north of Aleppo city called Handarat Camp. Within hours, rebels said they had retaken the territory.

The U.N. Security Council held an emergency meeting on Sunday over the bombardment of Aleppo. The meeting, which lasted about three hours, was called jointly by the U.S., France and the U.K. Ambassadors of all three countries walked out when Syria's representative began speaking.

The U.S. ambassador to the U.N., Samantha Power, was sharply critical of the role Russia is playing in Syria.

"What you can be sure -- sure -- that Russia will not do today or any day is accept any responsibility for its actions. What you can be sure that Russia will not do is tell the truth," Ms. Power said.

She added that Russia was not engaged in "counterterrorism" but "barbarism" in Syria. Diplomats from France and the U.K. were also critical of Russia.

Russia criticized the U.S.-led coalition in Syria for arming and supporting opposition militias with links to terrorists, and said the coalition had used the brief cease-fire to shore up opposition rebels attacking Syrian army targets.

Ambassador Vitaly Churkin said Russia had helped Syria stop terrorists from taking over Aleppo and that "Damascus displayed enviable restraint."

Mr. Ban's spokesman on Saturday said that Aleppo was facing the most sustained and intense bombardment since the beginning of the conflict in 2011. He cited reports of the use of both incendiary weapons and "bunker buster bombs" and said the systematic use of these types of "indiscriminate weapons" in Aleppo's densely populated neighborhoods could amount to war crimes.

In Syria, state media have been mostly quiet about the Aleppo offensive. But on Saturday, state news agency SANA tweeted a video from inside a nightclub with a DJ and pyrotechnics with the caption: "GBP Aleppo, now dubbed as the 'World's Most Dangerous City,' still boasts a thriving nightlife."

The Russian military has acknowledged the use of munitions in Syria that are designed to penetrate concrete structures, which Russian media has called bunker busters.

Last November, a Russian military spokesman said warplanes had struck Islamic State targets with two 1,100-lb. "concrete-penetrating" bombs, the news agency Interfax reported. The spokesman added that the weapons weren't dropped on populated areas, Interfax added.

Local activists and medical officials in Aleppo said Sunday that in addition to the powerful bombs being referred to as bunker busters, they were being hit by phosphorus, cluster and barrel bombs in opposition-held neighborhoods where some 300,000 people live under siege by the regime.

The Syrian military and Russia kept up the bombardment of rebel-held eastern Aleppo on Sunday, killing at least 50 people, Mr. al-Zein said. More than 320 civilians have been killed since the cease-fire collapsed a week ago, said Ammar Ahmad Alselmo, director of the Syrian civil defense group known as the White Helmets.

Ms. Power said Russia and Syria's regime had launched 150 airstrikes in the past 72 hours. Mr. de Mistura said medical triages, bases for emergency responders, a school and civilian homes were flattened and 213 people were killed in Aleppo province in 72 hours. The U.S. and Russia haven't ruled out trying to revive the truce.

Yasser Ibrahim al-Youssef, a political representative for the rebel group Nour al-Dine al-Zinki, said the attacks created craters 7 meters deep and 20 meters wide. The shock waves were being felt for about 10 seconds and destroying buildings up to 75 meters away, he said.

On Saturday, rescuers were pulling survivors and bodies out of a building in the Bustan al-Qasir neighborhood when they suddenly heard a building on another street collapse, trapping seven people under the rubble, said Mr. Alselmo.

The attacks have reduced multistory buildings to a fine rubble within seconds, leaving rescuers combing through the debris with their hands as if excavating artifacts from sand, according to rescuers and videos posted online.

Those rescued have been taken to overwhelmed hospitals where doctors and nurses are working as if in a daze, said Mr. al-Zein. "People are dying under our hands because we are unable to cope," Mr. al-Zein said. "When you have 50 injured you have to treat the most injured and someone else might not get treated, they might bleed out as they are waiting."

After years of destructive barrel bombs -- oil drums full of explosives and shrapnel -- being dropped on Aleppo's rebel-held neighborhoods by regime helicopters, many buildings are already damaged and prone to collapse, said Mr. Alselmo.

"There is a mix of weapons being used as if it was planned before the cease-fire even ended -- as if to determine what this city requires in order for it to be destroyed over the heads of its residents," he said.

Nathan Hodge contributed to this article.

Credit: Raja Abdulrahim, Farnaz Fassihi

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Fatalities; Bombings; Military air strikes; Power; Diplomatic & consular services; Earthquakes; Neighborhoods
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92812 : International Affairs
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Aleppo Syria; Syria
People:	Ban Ki Moon; de Mistura, Staffan; Assad, Bashar Al
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120; Name: United Nations Security Council; NAICS: 928120
Classification:	92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publicationyear:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822946316
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/hundreds-are-killed-as-syria-bombing-intensifies/docview/1822946316/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 3 of 500

Business News: Auto Workers Win Pact In Canada

Colias, Mike . Colias, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

GM North America President Alan Batey said in an interview last week that the company "could use some more" pickups in its battle with Ford Motor Co. and Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV's Ram division.

FULL TEXT

The union representing Canadian auto workers won approval for a new four-year contract with General Motors Co., securing future investment for Canada's weakening auto sector and eventually giving GM more capacity for its profitable pickup trucks.

Nearly 65% of Unifor's rank-and-file GM members on Sunday ratified the pact notched by union and company negotiators last week. The deal clears the way for $544 million in investments by GM, mostly at its vehicle-assembly plant in Oshawa, Ontario, which was threatened with closure by around 2019 without a commitment from the company.

The contract, which covers about 3,900 Unifor workers, eventually will allow GM to squeeze out more U.S. production of its full-size pickup trucks, the Chevrolet Silverado and GMC Sierra. Unifor's contract calls for about 70,000 partially assembled pickups a year beginning in early 2018 to be shipped to Oshawa from a GM truck plant in Fort Wayne, Ind., where they will be painted and finished, said a union official who declined to be named.

GM has been working to boost production of its pickups amid record U.S. auto sales and a sustained period of low gas prices. GM North America President Alan Batey said in an interview last week that the company "could use some more" pickups in its battle with Ford Motor Co. and Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV's Ram division.

The assurance of future production at the Oshawa factory and a GM powertrain plant in St. Catharines, Ontario, had been the union's priority heading into the talks.

Credit: By Mike Colias

DETAILS

Subject:	Trucks; Automobile industry; Labor contracts; Automobile production; Automobile shows; Factories
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Labor contracts Automobile production Factories; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US; Oshawa Ontario Canada; Canada
Company / organization:	Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390; Name: Unifor-Canada; NAICS: 813930
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822932516
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-auto-workers-win-pact-canada/docview/1822932516/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 4 of 500

Business News: Takata Didn't Tell U.S. About Incident

Spector, Mike . Spector, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Japanese automotive supplier Takata Corp. failed to alert U.S. regulators to a 2003 rupture of an air bag in Switzerland, despite second thoughts from an engineer, according to an internal report detailing exploding safety devices that resulted in record recalls and numerous deaths and injuries.

FULL TEXT

Japanese automotive supplier Takata Corp. failed to alert U.S. regulators to a 2003 rupture of an air bag in Switzerland, despite second thoughts from an engineer, according to an internal report detailing exploding safety devices that resulted in record recalls and numerous deaths and injuries.

The rupture occurred in a vehicle in May 2003, and Takata attributed the incident to overloading air-bag inflater propellant, according to the report from law firm Dechert LLP, which represents the parts supplier. The company made manufacturing changes the same year to address the problem.

The Dechert report was released on Friday by U.S. authorities.

In a February 2010 response to queries from federal highway safety regulators about certain air-bag recalls, Takata failed to mention the Switzerland rupture, according to the report.

A Takata spokesman on Friday said the company extends "sincerest apologies to those who have been affected by the inflater failures" and has "previously acknowledged and deeply regrets" misleading testing reports. The spokesman declined to comment on the Swiss rupture. Takata air-bag ruptures have been linked to 14 deaths and more than 100 injuries globally.

Credit: By Mike Spector

DETAILS

Subject:	Traffic accidents & safety; Defective products; Air bags; Product recalls
Business indexing term:	Subject: Product recalls
Location:	United States--US; Switzerland
Company / organization:	Name: Takata Corp; NAICS: 313210, 336390
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822932515
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-takata-didnt-tell-u-s-about/docview/1822932515/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 5 of 500

Business News: GM to Add More Diesel Engines --- Option to be offered in wider U.S. car lineup even as VW scandal hits category's outlook

Colias, Mike . Colias, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

General Motors Co. plans to expand the U.S. availability of diesel engines in its Chevrolet cars and light trucks despite a diminished outlook for diesel vehicles overall after Volkswagen AG's emissions-cheating scandal.

FULL TEXT

General Motors Co. plans to expand the U.S. availability of diesel engines in its Chevrolet cars and light trucks despite a diminished outlook for diesel vehicles overall after Volkswagen AG's emissions-cheating scandal.

GM said it would offer a diesel option with the 2018 model Chevrolet Equinox, its best-selling small sport-utility vehicle that is being overhauled amid booming demand for SUVs. The new Equinox will compete with Ford Motor Co.'s Escape and Honda Motor Co.'s CRV, and will be available at dealers early next year.

The No. 1 U.S. auto maker in terms of sales also plans to offer diesel engines on its Chevrolet Cruze small car next year. Prices for the new vehicles will be disclosed closer to first deliveries, the company said.

Likely to only represent a modest percentage of total Equinox or Cruze sales in the U.S., GM's bet on diesel comes after Volkswagen tried for years to get Americans to buy into the technology, which is more fuel-efficient than gasoline. Volkswagen's effort collapsed, however, when the company admitted its diesel vehicles emitted as much as 40 times their allowed pollution and that the company lied to regulators about emissions.

Most auto makers offer hybrid-electric technology or turbocharging as a fuel-efficient alternative to conventional gasoline engines.

Diesel engines are popular for brawny pickups and big commercial trucks because of fuel savings, but the category is a niche among U.S. car buyers. Diesels accounted for less than 1% of the nation's car and SUV sales before Volkswagen pulled diesels from the market last September, according to data provider WardsAuto.com.

Volkswagen accounted for the bulk of diesel-vehicle sales for the passenger-car market, amassing a loyal fan base because of peppy acceleration and good fuel economy. But diesels cost more to buy upfront, and a lack of diesel pumps at many filling stations has kept a lid on demand.

GM hopes to fill a niche in the U.S. vacated by its German rival's pullback. And Chevrolet last year added a diesel-engine option to its Colorado midsize pickup that has drawn favorable reviews from car critics, emboldening GM to expand its diesel offerings.

"It's only been since the VW challenges that people have been sort of scratching their heads a little bit" about diesels, GM North America President Alan Batey said in an interview. "But we've been absolutely thrilled with how they've taken off for us."

GM sells diesels in Europe in higher volume, helping pave the way for American executives to offer them as an option in the U.S.

Even in Europe where diesels account for about half of car sales, however, analysts expect the technology to eventually decline. A June study by AlixPartners LLP, a consulting firm, predicts diesel car sales will fall to 9% by 2030 as electric vehicles and hybrids become more affordable. Gasoline models will also decline, but not as sharply, the firm predicts.

GM will rely on several technologies to meet toughening fuel-economy regulations, including plug-in hybrid Chevrolet Volt and the long-range and relatively cheap electric car, the Bolt.

Still, the diesel Equinox should offer a valuable marketing claim: expected 40 miles-a-gallon in highway driving. And it signals that GM has several solutions on the fuel economy front, an important message for company that was nudged into bankruptcy in 2009 partly because spiking gas prices hurt demand for its truck-heavy lineup.

"Nobody will be able to say GM doesn't have its bases covered if fuel prices go up again," said Dave Sullivan, an analyst at research firm AutoPacific Inc. "It's a good story to tell."

Credit: By Mike Colias

DETAILS

Subject:	Energy efficiency; Diesel engines; Sport utility vehicles; Gasoline prices; Automobile industry; Electric vehicles; Engines; Automobile sales
Business indexing term:	Subject: Gasoline prices Automobile industry Automobile sales; Corporation: Volkswagen AG General Motors Corp; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing 33361 : Engine, Turbine, and Power Transmission Equipment Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Ford Motor Co; NAICS: 333924, 336110, 336390; Name: Volkswagen AG; NAICS: 336110, 336390; Name: Honda Motor Co Ltd; NAICS: 336110, 336390, 336991; Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing; 33361: Engine, Turbine, and Power Transmission Equipment Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822932478

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-add-more-diesel-engines-option/docview/1822932478/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 6 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Joe Barrett --- OHIO Surge of Overdose Deaths Is Reported Authorities were trying Sunday to discover the types of drugs involved in a number of overdoses that killed seven people in the Cleveland area a day earlier.

FULL TEXT

IOWA

Evacuations Planned

As Floodwaters Rise

Residents of Cedar Rapids, Iowa's second-largest city, were beginning evacuations even as sandbagging continued in preparation for the biggest flood in the city since a devastating deluge in 2008. The city called for voluntary evacuations and a curfew Sunday night in areas covering about 6,000 parcels.

The Cedar River is expected to crest at around 23 feet Tuesday morning -- 2 feet lower than earlier projections.

-- Joe Barrett

OHIO

Surge of Overdose

Deaths Is Reported

Authorities were trying Sunday to discover the types of drugs involved in a number of overdoses that killed seven people in the Cleveland area a day earlier.

The deaths on Saturday were the latest outbreak of drug overdose deaths in Ohio.

Tests were being conducted to figure out which drugs were involved, Cuyahoga County Medical Examiner Thomas Gilson said. Officials suspect they were either heroin or fentanyl.

"This cluster of deaths is deeply concerning," Mr. Gilson said in a statement. "Although there is no clear link between the individuals, this number clearly raises the possibility of a very deadly drug in our community."

The outbreak comes after 52 people died from heroin or fentanyl during August in the Cleveland area. The opioid deaths last month were the most in the county's history, the medical examiner's office said.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Drug overdose; Medical examiners; Heroin; Fentanyl
Location:	Ohio; Cleveland Ohio; Cedar River; United States--US
People:	Gilson, Thomas
Company / organization:	Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A. 2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917872
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822917872/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 7 of 500

World News: Mexico Grapples With a Rise in Killings -- - Surging homicide levels put heat on president, as early success fades; calm spots now at risk

Tameez, Hanaa'. Tameez, Hanaa'.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

At the start of the Pena Nieto administration, the government temporarily reduced the deployment of armed forces against criminal gangs and focused public attention on economic overhauls.

FULL TEXT

MEXICO CITY -- Criminal violence in Mexico is rebounding after a three-year decline, reaching levels not seen since 2011, when the country's murderous war between drug cartels was at its worst.

The government's tally of murders, the vast majority of which it links to organized crime, rose to 14,549 for the first eight months of the year, an 18% increase over the same period a year earlier. In August alone, there were 2,147 homicides, the highest toll for any month since President Enrique Peña Nieto took office at the end of 2012.

Last week, two Catholic priests were killed in the Gulf coast state of Veracruz, which has been ravaged by drug-gang violence. Last Tuesday, Spanish authorities said the niece of the president of the Spanish Football Federation was found dead near a highway in the State of Mexico after being kidnapped in the upscale Mexico City district of Santa Fe.

The violence has spread to previously calmer spots like Guanajuato, a central state known as a growing hub for automotive production. Suspected cartel members have executed high-ranking state-police officers therein recent weeks, and grenade attacks are growing common against shops that refuse to pay extortion fees. Two such attacks took place recently in the tourist town of San Miguel de Allende, home to many U.S. retirees.

"The change [in violence] we are observing is most likely not a spike, but a clear-cut change in trend," said Dwight Dyer, a former head of analysis at Cisen, the Mexican national intelligence agency.

The rebound in violence is likely to further limit economic growth in parts of the country, and poses a major challenge to Mr. Peña Nieto, some analysts said.

The Mexican leader took office vowing to reduce violence after some 100,000 people died in drug-related murders during the six-year term of his predecessor Felipe Calderon. When Mr. Calderon took office in late 2006, he quickly deployed troops and federal police to tackle the country's rising criminal gangs.

Mr. Peña Nieto recently acknowledged the increase in homicides and said his government would seek solutions.

"Certainly one of the things that worries us and keeps all authorities occupied is the rise of some high-impact crimes," Mr. Peña Nieto said. "And for this, it is fundamental to undertake joint actions and assume all responsibility in this task."

At the start of the Peña Nieto administration, the government temporarily reduced the deployment of armed forces against criminal gangs and focused public attention on economic overhauls. The changes appeared to work, as murders fell to 17 per 100,000 inhabitants in 2014 from a peak of 24 in 2011.

But the decline may have had more to do with factors other than the federal government's strategy, security experts said.

Violence had begun to decline in the final months of the Calderon administration, after the government dismantled several prominent cartels. Some of the raging turf wars in cities such as Ciudad Juarez -- where 10,000 people were killed in three years of fighting -- flamed out as one side simply won or rival cartels reached peace agreements.

At the same time, some northern states hardest hit by the violence folded local police forces that were easily bought off by drug cartels into unified state entities that were vetted and trained.

"In some states, they reformed their state-level police forces efficiently so they could help contain the violence," said Mr. Dyer. "In other parts of the country there was no police reform to the same extent, so violence moved geographically to those areas."

The strategy of attacking cartels has also led many groups to splinter, prompting more local gangs to branch out from drug trafficking into prostitution, kidnapping and extortion, said Alejandro Hope, a security analyst who once worked for Cisen.

New gangs have also emerged along major trafficking routes, like the so-called Jalisco Cartel-New Generation, a Guadalajara-based gang now seen as the country's strongest.

With just 2% of violent crimes solved, according to government estimates, widespread impunity prompts more violence, said Mr. Hope.

"'Getting away with murder' is a meaningless expression in Mexico, because everyone who tries it literally gets away with murder," Mr. Hope said.

Credit: By Hanaa' Tameez

DETAILS

Subject:	Gangs; Violent crime; Murders & murder attempts; Organized crime; Cartels; Extortion
Business indexing term:	Subject: Cartels
Location:	Mexico
People:	Pena Nieto, Enrique
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.16
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1822917853
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-mexico-grapples-with-rise-killings/docview/1822917853/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 8 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Fed proposed rules that could drive banks out of commodities trading by making it too expensive. ---

FULL TEXT

S&P 500 companies are set to report a sixth-straight quarter of falling profits, raising questions about how far stocks can rise without earnings growth.

OPEC is increasingly counting on private oil refiners in China, known as "teapots," to boost exports.

Banks are struggling to upgrade their back-office technology to meet new reporting regulations.

The Fed proposed rules that could drive banks out of commodities trading by making it too expensive.

CBOE is in talks to buy Bats, a deal that would let the options exchange diversify into stocks.

Goldman plans to lay off over a quarter of its investment bankers in Asia as deal activity slows.

West Elm plans to launch a chain of boutique hotels as the furniture retailer seeks to sustain its robust growth.

Apple is battling the EU over taxes with a European lobbying force a fraction the size of its tech peers.

GM plans to offer more diesel options in the U.S. despite the VW scandal.

Canadian auto workers approved a new four-year union contract with GM.

Takata failed to alert U.S. regulators to a 2003 air bag rupture in Switzerland.

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile industry; Commodities trading
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Commodities trading; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US; China; Asia
Company / organization:	Name: West Elm; NAICS: 423220, 454110
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917842
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1822917842/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 9 of 500

Business News: Hearing Junior Lawyers Would Please Some Courts

Randazzo, Sara . Randazzo, Sara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A day before Judge Garaufis dressed down Kirkland, U.S. District Judge James Donato in San Francisco expressed annoyance at law firm Morrison & Foerster LLP for wanting to send too senior of a lawyer to an argument in a class action against Fitbit Inc., a wearable-fitness-tracker startup.

FULL TEXT

Opportunities are scarce these days for young lawyers to ever see the inside of a courtroom, even for those earning upward of $180,000 a year at top law firms.

That is why a federal judge's recent comments chastising a prestigious law firm for sending a junior lawyer to represent Facebook Inc. at a routine hearing are rankling those who say newly minted lawyers need every possible chance to gain experience outside the office.

Last Thursday, U.S. District Judge Nicholas Garaufis called it "outrageous and irresponsible" that Kirkland & Ellis LLP didn't send a senior lawyer to his Brooklyn courtroom to discuss a pair of cases alleging Facebook facilitates communication among terrorists. "Next time, they send a partner," Judge Garaufis said. Judge Garaufis, Kirkland and Facebook declined to comment on the courtroom incident.

The comments cut a contrast to a growing movement among judges around the country to push younger lawyers into court, in recognition of a diminishing number of jury trials and changing economics of law firms that often make it difficult for young lawyers to get out from under mountains of office work.

In most large law firms, lawyers in their first few years of practice are tasked with researching and writing client memos and helping senior lawyers prepare for litigation.

"People become trial lawyers because they want to be in court -- not sit at desks," said Kathi Vidal, a principal at Fish & Richardson in Silicon Valley who is leading a movement to get younger lawyers to speak more often in court.

That effort centers on encouraging judges to make it clear that it isn't only all right to send junior lawyers to court, but it is welcomed. So far, a couple dozen judges in California, Massachusetts and Texas have issued court orders to that effect.

A day before Judge Garaufis dressed down Kirkland, U.S. District Judge James Donato in San Francisco expressed annoyance at law firm Morrison & Foerster LLP for wanting to send too senior of a lawyer to an argument in a class action against Fitbit Inc., a wearable-fitness-tracker startup.

The judge had asked both sides to find lawyers within their first six years of practice, which the plaintiffs' side said it could do, but Morrison & Foerster said only someone with eight years of experience could handle the assignment. Judge Donato said in a court order last week that he would still go ahead with the arguments, but might "adjust the time allocated to each side to account for any disparity caused by defendant's selection of attorneys outside the Court's specifications."

A spokesman for Morrison & Foerster said the firm supports the judge's position to develop young attorneys and feels it is doing that by sending the eighth-year associate "who has worked on this matter from the beginning."

Ms. Vidal and others say there are multiple reasons younger lawyers rarely get courtroom opportunities.

When companies face "bet the company" cases, they often don't want to risk sending anyone but the most senior partner to court. And as demand for law firms' services remains tepid, partners are also eager to keep work for themselves.

This creates a cycle, says Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Gregg Costa in Texas, where only the most veteran lawyers handle the diminishing number of trials. "If the veteran lawyers of tomorrow get no trial experience, there will be even fewer trials in the future," he said.

Judge Costa said that before being elevated to the appellate court, he encouraged younger lawyers to speak in his district courtroom, and that often they were more familiar with the facts of the case than the senior partner.

Credit: By Sara Randazzo

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys; Federal court decisions; Trials; Court hearings & proceedings; Law firms; State court decisions; Judges & magistrates
Business indexing term:	Subject: Law firms; Industry: 54111 : Offices of Lawyers
Location:	United States--US; California
Company / organization:	Name: Kirkland & Ellis; NAICS: 541110; Name: Facebook Inc; NAICS: 516210, 518210; Name: Fish & Richardson; NAICS: 541110; Name: Morrison & Foerster LLP; NAICS: 541110; Name: Fitbit LLC; NAICS: 334419
Classification:	54111: Offices of Lawyers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917838
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-hearing-junior-lawyers-would-please/docview/1822917838/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 10 of 500

U.S. News: Economic Calendar

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

This week brings speeches by the heads of central banks in the U.S. and Europe, while trade, inflation and other data releases will shed light on the health of a number of large economies.

MONDAY: European Central Bank President Mario Draghi delivers his quarterly testimony to the European Parliament's economic and monetary affairs committee. The ECB's policies have come under increasing fire in Germany since the central bank announced a boost to its stimulus in March.

TUESDAY: The Bank of Japan releases minutes of its July meeting (release time is Monday evening in the U.S.), and on Friday (Thursday night in the U.S.) it will release a summary of board members' views for the Sept. 21 meeting, when it decided to target 10-year rates.

WEDNESDAY: The U.S. government releases August figures on durable goods orders, a key gauge of the health of the manufacturing sector.

Federal Reserve Chairwoman Janet Yellen testifies before the House Financial Services Committee. Though the hearing will focus on the Fed's supervision of big banks, Ms. Yellen could be asked about the central bank's outlook for interest rates.

THURSDAY: The U.S. gives an advance look at the trade deficit for August.

FRIDAY: Japan releases figures on consumer-price inflation, unemployment, household spending and industrial production (Thursday night in the U.S.).

The European Union will release an early estimate of the eurozone's annual rate of inflation for September.

DETAILS

Subject:	Interest rates; Central banks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Interest rates Central banks; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917822

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1822917822/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 11 of 500

U.S. News: Wrong-Patient Errors Called Common

Beck, Melinda . Beck, Melinda.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The cases were submitted voluntarily, under a federal law that lets providers share safety data without fear of liability, and probably represent only a fraction of the mix-ups that occurred, ECRI officials said.

FULL TEXT

A patient in cardiac arrest was mistakenly not resuscitated because clinicians confused him with a patient who had a do-not-resuscitate order on file.

Another patient was given an OK to undergo surgery based on a different patient's records and was found dead in his hospital room the next day.

Such patient-identification mix-ups are common and can have deadly consequences, according to a report from the ECRI Institute, a nonprofit research group that studies patient safety.

The report analyzed 7,613 cases of so-called wrong-patient errors at 181 health-care organizations from January 2013 to July 2015. The cases were submitted voluntarily, under a federal law that lets providers share safety data without fear of liability, and probably represent only a fraction of the mix-ups that occurred, ECRI officials said.

"This is a huge problem that the general public isn't aware of," said William Marella, executive director for operations and analytics at the ECRI Institute's Patient Safety Organization. "Pretty much every clinician involved in your health care is at risk of making this kind of error."

Safety initiatives have led to many improvements in recent years, but the opportunities for ID mix-ups are increasing. "We're doing many more labs tests, more imaging tests, more procedures and more transitions through the system," said Hardeep Singh, a patient-safety researcher at the Michael E. DeBakey VA Medical Center and Baylor College of Medicine, who advised on the report.

Of the mix-ups studied, 91% were caught before patients were harmed. Two were fatal and others might have been. One patient was given another's hypertension medication, at 10 times the usual dose. A patient who wasn't supposed to eat or drink was given the wrong meal tray and nearly choked.

The report found that about 13% of identification errors occurred during registration, when a duplicate record might be created for the same patient or information from two patients co-mingled in one record. That is in part because some systems aren't finely tuned to recognize minor variations in name spellings, Mr. Marella said.

More than one-third of the mix-ups studied involved diagnostic tests such as X-rays and lab work; 22% involved treatments and procedures. In some cases, a patient's wristband was wrong, missing, illegible or simply not checked.

The report urged all health-care facilities to adopt a standardized protocol to verify patient identities, emphasize its importance to all staff members and discuss errors openly to learn from them.

It also suggested standardizing how patients' names are displayed in electronic records and including patient photos.

Clinicians were urged to always ask patients to state their name, not just confirm it. And it warned staffers not to identify patients by room or bed number, which could change easily.

Credit: By Melinda Beck

DETAILS

Subject:	Patients; Patient safety; Medical errors
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN: 00999660

Source type: Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1822917807

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-wrong-patient-errors-called-common/docview/1822917807/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 12 of 500

City News -- Urban Gardner: A Throne That's Worth the Weight

Gardner, Ralph, Jr . Gardner, Ralph, Jr.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]Mr. Zall said the attention to detail that Mr. Cattelan and his team lavished on the fixture didn't extend to other aspects of the bathroom-going experience, such as toilet paper. Though I don't think the bathroom-going experience ever suffers from a little intelligent graffiti -- reading material, as it were -- that one sometimes finds in the typical New York City saloon restroom.

FULL TEXT

My understanding is that Maurizio Cattelan's 18-karat gold toilet, currently on display at the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum, is meant as something of a spoof on the growing wealth disparity between the 1% and the rest of us.

It is titled "America," after all.

But as far as I'm concerned a toilet, gold or otherwise, is no laughing matter.

I spend some of my most rewarding hours in the bathroom and a gold toilet seems an appropriately august way to honor that commitment of time and effort.

My only question when I visited the museum last week was whether it focused, or perhaps distracted, from the experience?

The porcelain bowl with a wooden or plastic seat has done the trick for generations, though I can certainly appreciate the thought and execution behind a version made of precious metals. But the beauty of responding to nature's call is that, in the solitude of the moment, it brings you back to basics; it helps order one's priorities; it serves as a form of meditation.

Might a seat of gold obfuscate the issue, unnecessarily complicate a refreshingly elemental act?

There was a lot of time to contemplate such existential questions because on the afternoon of my visit the wait to use the gilded contraption was almost one hour. If going was a matter of urgency, the museumgoer would have been better served using a nearby toilet, identical in every way except for its composition.

"We sent the porcelain toilets from the museum they wanted to copy" to Mr. Cattelan's studio in Italy, explained Michael Zall, the Guggenheim's associate director of facilities operations.

He was referring to a Kohler low flow toilet. "Same toilet, same look," he added.

It seemed to me that a solid gold toilet deserved similarly effete toilet paper. But Mr. Zall said the attention to detail that Mr. Cattelan and his team lavished on the fixture didn't extend to other aspects of the bathroom-going experience, such as toilet paper. There were no incense, flowers or candles either.

The tissue was solid white. "I'm going to say two-ply," Mr. Zall guessed. "You can peel it apart."

However, great care has been showered on sanitizing the device. The toilet is cleaned every 15 minutes using something like the wipes employed on a baby's bottom. The associate facilities operations director described them as "medical grade."

No Ajax or Comet, please.

"There was discussion about the mineral content," of the water, Mr. Zall added. "Would it have some adverse effect on the gold? We ran a water analysis. But we have very good water here in New York City."

I felt the excitement mounting as my moment approached.

There has been no vandalism either, Mr. Zall reported. Though I don't think the bathroom-going experience ever suffers from a little intelligent graffiti -- reading material, as it were -- that one sometimes finds in the typical New York City saloon restroom.

Jade Solomon, a contract worker who slipped in ahead of me to clean the toilet, said she has quickly grown fond of it. "I think she's beautiful," she said. However, Ms. Solomon confessed that her own bathroom comes as something of a letdown at the end of the day.

She's giving consideration to bedazzling it. "I really thought of putting glitter" on the toilet, she said.

I finally got the lavatory to myself. Locked the door behind me. Even though there was a museum employee standing outside to protect my privacy. "If somebody is there after five minutes I'd probably give a knock," said Evan Eitapence, the gallery guide who had the honor.

The toilet was indeed a thing of almost blinding beauty. While the bathroom boasted a sanitary paper toilet seat dispenser, laying down a sheet would have felt a travesty.

However, a paper covering might have mitigated one not entirely appealing effect. Turns out that a gold seat conducts cold a lot better than wood does.

Also, I discovered one unconscionable flaw that Mr. Cattelan -- the humor in whose work I've always admired -- should be ashamed of.

The seat doesn't lift more than a few inches.

I don't know whether this is intentional or an oversight. But for those of us who consider lifting the seat a matter of common courtesy, the pressure of knowing there's an hour-long line of people waiting for you to finish up is compounded by the fact that your aim better be unerring.

ralph.gardner@wsj.com

Credit: By Ralph Gardner Jr.

DETAILS

Subject:	Museums; Toilet facilities; Gold
Business indexing term:	Industry: 56299 : All Other Waste Management Services 71211 : Museums
Classification:	56299: All Other Waste Management Services; 71211: Museums
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917797
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-urban-gardner-throne-thats-worth-weight/docview/1822917797/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 13 of 500

Election 2016: Campaign Wire

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN Ryan Praises Trump Minority Outreach House Speaker Paul Ryan praised Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump's efforts to win over African-American voters who have long backed Democrats.

FULL TEXT

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN

Ryan Praises Trump

Minority Outreach

House Speaker Paul Ryan praised Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump's efforts to win over African-American voters who have long backed Democrats.

"Half of it is just showing up, showing up and trying and learning and listening," the Wisconsin Republican said in a CBS interview that aired Sunday.

Polling suggests Mr. Trump, who alienated many African-Americans by pushing for years the falsehood that President Barack Obama wasn't born in the U.S., could draw historically low numbers of black votes in November. The most recent WSJ/NBC News poll has only 5% of African-American registered voters backing Mr. Trump, with 76% supporting Democratic rival Hillary Clinton.

Mr. Trump spoke recently at a black church in Detroit and appeared alongside boxing promoter Don King at a black church in Cleveland. Still, for much of the campaign he spurned invitations to speak directly with black audiences. He turned down an invitation this year from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

When CBS's John Dickerson noted that Mr. Trump's effort comes in the "fourth quarter" of the election, Mr. Ryan said, "But he's brand-new at this. You know, he never ran for office before."

-- Andrew Ackerman

ENVIRONMENT

Johnson Calls for

Settling Other Planets

Candidates often discuss their plans for their first day in office, but rarely the future of the human race billions of years after their presidency.

"We do have to inhabit other planets," Gary Johnson, the Libertarian Party presidential candidate said in an interview Sunday on ABC. "The future of the human race is space exploration."

Mr. Johnson was questioned on the topic because he had once said he opposed certain programs to mitigate climate change because "the long-term view is that in billions of years, the sun is going to actually grow and encompass the earth."

He now says the 2011 remarks were humorous, and he supports both space exploration and environmental regulations.

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Space exploration; Candidates; Political campaigns; Black churches
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92711 : Space Research and Technology 81311 : Religious Organizations
Location:	United States--US; Detroit Michigan
People:	Obama, Barack; Ryan, Paul; Trump, Donald J; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Company / organization:	Name: Libertarian Party-US; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92711: Space Research and Technology; 81311: Religious Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917786
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-campaign-wire/docview/1822917786/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-06-24
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 14 of 500

U.S. News: Police Videos Fail to Quiet Protests

Bauerlein, Valerie . Bauerlein, Valerie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

CHARLOTTE, N.C. -- Prayer vigils and protests continued here Sunday, as civil-rights advocates expressed unease with recently released police videos that they said gave no clear justification for last week's fatal shooting of Keith Scott.

FULL TEXT

CHARLOTTE, N.C. -- Prayer vigils and protests continued here Sunday, as civil-rights advocates expressed unease with recently released police videos that they said gave no clear justification for last week's fatal shooting of Keith Scott.

The city has been in turmoil since Tuesday, when a Charlotte-Mecklenburg police officer fatally shot Mr. Scott, a 43-year-old black man, in the parking lot of his apartment complex. Law-enforcement officials maintained a significant presence in downtown Charlotte on Sunday, though the city's website said Sunday evening that a midnight-to-6 a.m. curfew had been lifted.

About 60 people have been arrested during protests for looting, failure to disperse and other charges, police said. One person was fatally shot during a Wednesday protest and a man has been charged in his death, police said.

Security for Sunday's Carolina Panthers home football game was tight. The downtown stadium is a few blocks from the epicenter of protests, and alongside the interstate where demonstrators have occasionally blocked traffic. There were protests outside the stadium, but no major incidents or arrests were reported in connection with the game, which the Panthers lost to the Minnesota Vikings.

After days of pressure, Police Chief Kerr Putney on late Saturday released body-cam and dash-cam video footage of the fatal encounter with Mr. Scott, as well as official photographs of a gun, an ankle holster and a marijuana cigarette that police said belonged to him.

The videos were inconclusive on their own, but alongside witness statements and the photographs give "indisputable evidence" that police acted appropriately, the chief said. Mr. Scott posed a threat to public safety as he was holding marijuana and a gun, and repeatedly ignoring commands to drop his weapon, the chief said.

But the Scott family said the police videos didn't show Mr. Scott posing a threat. Many people who watched the police videos, and a cellphone video taken by Mr. Scott's wife, said they didn't know what to think because they didn't see a gun in Mr. Scott's hand.

"The videos don't really show what we would like, evidence one way or the other," said Shomari White, pastor of Charlotte's nondenominational Have Life Church.

Mr. White was among several pastors hosting a prayer meeting at a downtown park Sunday night.

The investigation into the fatal police shooting of Mr. Scott is in the hands of the State Bureau of Investigation. Chief Putney said he has no plans to recommend charges against any of his officers, based on his department's own investigation.

Credit: By Valerie Bauerlein

DETAILS

Subject:	Professional football; Video recordings; Deadly force; Police brutality; Demonstrations & protests
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71121 : Spectator Sports
Location:	Charlotte North Carolina; United States--US
People:	Scott, Keith
Company / organization:	Name: Carolina Panthers; NAICS: 711211
Classification:	71121: Spectator Sports
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	Engl ish
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917726
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-police-videos-fail-quiet-protests/docview/1822917726/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 15 of 500

U.S. News: Gun-Seizure Plan Sees Wide Support

Elinson, Zusha . Elinson, Zusha.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A ballot measure that would allow authorities to temporarily seize guns from those considered a danger to themselves or others in Washington state is getting strong support from Democrats and Republicans, according to an independent poll.

FULL TEXT

A ballot measure that would allow authorities to temporarily seize guns from those considered a danger to themselves or others in Washington state is getting strong support from Democrats and Republicans, according to an independent poll.

Three-quarters of Democrats and 55% of Republicans are in favor of the measure, which is aimed at stopping shootings and suicides before they happen, according to last month's Elway Poll, a long-running independent poll in Washington.

The poll came before the Friday night mall attack in Burlington, Wash., that left five dead. "Gun violence and tragedy has once again struck Washington and shattered a community," the Alliance for Gun Responsibility, which backs the measure, tweeted after the attack.

If the measure passes in November, Washington would become the second state after California to allow family members and police to petition a judge to take guns from a person considered a danger. Connecticut, Indiana and Texas have similar laws, but in those states only police can ask a judge to do so.

The California law was passed after 22-year-old Elliot Rodger shot and stabbed six people to death in Isla Vista, Calif., near the University of California, Santa Barbara in 2014 before taking his own life. Police had visited Rodger before the shooting, after his parents had expressed concerns over his behavior and disturbing videos he posted on the internet, but determined he wasn't a danger.

Republicans in Washington and across the country traditionally haven't been in favor of gun restrictions.

Susan Hutchison, chairman of the Washington State Republican Party, said most voters aren't familiar with all the details of the initiative. But she said she could understand why some might be in favor of what she termed a "human-being control" measure rather than a "gun-control" measure.

"We're all looking for answers where law-abiding people can have their constitutional rights to bear arms," Ms. Hutchison said.

The state Republican Party has yet to take a position on the initiative, and Ms. Hutchison said she doesn't know if it is a solution.

The state's gun-rights groups oppose the measure. "That's something that sounds very good on the surface," said Joe Waldron, legislative chairman for the Washington State Rifle and Pistol Association. "It's just an excuse to go after guns."

Under the measure, authorities would be able to seize the guns and the gun owner would be able to fight the order at a hearing. A judge would be able to ban the person from having guns for up to a year.

Stephanie Ervin, campaign manager for the Alliance for Gun Responsibility in Washington, said protections for gun owners were written into the measure, including making it a crime for people to make false petitions.

Credit: By Zusha Elinson

DETAILS

Subject:	State laws; Political parties; Referendums; Mass murders; Firearm laws & regulations; Candidates
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	California; Washington (state); United States--US
People:	Rodger, Elliot
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917719
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-gun-seizure-plan-sees-wide-support/docview/1822917719/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

World News: Saudis Press King Over Women's Rights --- Hundreds of telegrams in grass-roots campaign call for end to system of male guardianship Stancati, Margherita . Stancati, Margherita.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]she said, a supervisor sent her message.

FULL TEXT

Saudis sent telegrams to the king on Sunday pressing the monarchy to end male guardianship rules for women, the culmination of an unprecedented monthslong effort to abolish the system.

By Sunday evening, activists estimated hundreds of people had sent a copy of the same message to the royal court asking King Salman to cancel regulations that give men the final say on many important decisions in the lives of female relatives.

It is a change for which women's rights activists in the ultraconservative kingdom have long campaigned. The telegrams are one of several grass-roots initiatives that have sprung up since July, when an Arabic hashtag that translated to "Saudi women want to abolish the guardianship system" first went viral on Twitter in the oil-rich Gulf nation.

Saudi Arabia's ban on women driving has been criticized world-wide. But many women see male guardianship as a bigger barrier to exercising full citizenship rights. Legally, Saudi women need permission from a male guardian -- typically a father, husband or son -- to marry, travel outside the kingdom or study abroad, among other things.

Saudi Arabia twice told the United Nations it would abolish the guardianship system, most recently in 2013, according to Human Rights Watch.

Saudi officials on Sunday didn't respond to requests for comment.

Saudi Arabia's monarchy has long resisted pressure to lift the restrictions because of the influence of a powerful religious establishment and the deeply conservative culture.

Saudi Arabia's most senior cleric, Grand Mufti Abdulaziz Al Sheikh, recently said calls to repeal the guardianship system are "a crime against the religion of Islam" and posed "an existential threat to Saudi society."

Sheik Abdullah al-Manea, a member of the Council of Senior Scholars, the country's top religious body, disagreed, saying Islam doesn't require women to have male guardians except when they marry.

Campaigners opted to deliver their message via an old-school system, the telegram, because it can be tracked until delivery and is traceable to senders, who participants want to show are Saudis.

Aziza al-Yousef, a leading women's rights advocate, plans to deliver, in person to the royal court on Monday, a petition signed by about 14,700 Saudis that asks the monarch to end guardianship.

"The message is: women have to be full citizens, like men," said Ms. Yousef, a retired professor of computer science at Riyadh's King Saud University. "I am very hopeful."

The words "I Am My Own Guardian" -- borrowed from the work of a Saudi artist who calls herself Ms. Saffaa -- have become the movement's unofficial slogan, and has been featured on stickers and rubber bracelets.

Ramyah, a Saudi woman who asked to be identified by her first name only, said three different operators from Saudi Telecom Co. failed to send her telegram, one of them bluntly saying he objected to its content. Finally, she said, a supervisor sent her message.

"It is a legal way to contact our king and they are trying to scare us," said Ramyah. "It made me really, really angry."

The guardianship system is made up of a series of regulations and practices, not all required by law.

Some hospitals, for instance, want the approval of male relatives before performing medical procedures on women. Potential employers can ask women to demonstrate their guardian approves of them working. The Saudi government generously hands out scholarships for study abroad -- but for women, they are conditional on a male relative accompanying them.

The lot of Saudi women has improved in recent years. They make up a majority of university students. They have risen to senior positions in business and recently participated in municipal elections for the first time. But for many Saudi women, the progress has only deepened their frustration by making the imbalance the more glaring.

Many hope the changing economic reality, the result of low oil prices, has created a climate conducive to social change. Bringing more women into the workforce is a goal of the government's new long-term economic plan, Vision 2030.

"We are linking our demands to the 2030 vision. How can it succeed if half of society is paralyzed?" asked Saher Nasief, a retired professor of languages who has nine granddaughters. "We are doing it for the next generation."

Ramyah, 37, who led the telegram initiative, feels strongly about ending guardianship because of personal experience. A college-educated nurse, for years she was her family's main breadwinner, supporting her unemployed husband. Even then, her husband refused to let her travel.

When she obtained a divorce and moved back with her parents, her guardianship -- she calls it "ownership" -- returned to her father.

"At work, I am very respected," said Ramyah. "But when I come home I have another personality: I am a child again."

Alaa Mohamed contributed to this article.

Credit: By Margherita Stancati

DETAILS

Subject:	Guardians; Royalty; Islamic life & ethics; Activism; Study abroad; Womens rights; Local elections; Womens rights movements
Location:	Saudi Arabia
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publicationyear:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917710
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-saudis-press-king-over-womens-rights/docview/1822917710/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 17 of 500

World News: Spending on Warplanes Fuels Arms Race --- Russian and Chinese programs become U.S. Air Force's 'most pressing challenge'

Wall, Robert . Wall, Robert.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Pentagon is still defining exactly what it wants in a new plane, but such plane makers as Boeing Co., Lockheed Martin Corp. and Northrop Grumman Corp. have all started circulating futuristic drawings of what such a plane might look like.

FULL TEXT

For more than two decades, combat aircraft flown by the U.S. and its European allies have pretty much owned the sky. Now, Russia and China are spending lavishly on new weapons that could challenge that superiority, spurring a new arms race.

Some new planes and antiaircraft capabilities are expected to roll out in the next few years. The upgrades come as Moscow flexes its muscles in hot spots such as Eastern Europe and the Middle East and Beijing does so in the South China Sea -- heightening urgency among Western military brass to push for their own, next-generation combat planes.

"The most pressing challenge for the United States Air Force is the rise of peer competitors with advanced military capabilities rivaling our own," Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. David Goldfein told lawmakers in June.

Two months later, the U.S. Air Force certified its new F-35 Joint Strike Fighter. Designed to be hard to detect, the plane is built for the sort of limited, precision strikes that have become a hallmark of Western military action.

What is considered the Ferrari of combat jets, the F-22, is still relatively new, first fielded in 2005. Designed to shoot down enemy aircraft while flying as fast as twice the speed of sound, it has more recently evolved into a bomber, too, and can soak up intelligence over enemy territory.

More than three-fourths of the U.S. fleet of jet fighters, however, can be traced back to the 1970s. The Air Force has flown its F-15 since 1975. The widely used F-16 has been operational since 1979, and the U.S. Navy's F/A-18 was first deployed in 1978.

Those older planes are also the backbone of the air forces of many Asian and European allies, along with newer jets like France's Rafale and the Eurofighter.

Russia plans to start fielding its first stealth fighter, the T-50, in 2018. The twin-engine plane is designed to be highly maneuverable and equipped with sophisticated electronics to spot enemy aircraft from miles away. Meanwhile, it has deployed some of its latest combat planes, such as the Su-34 bomber and Su-35 fighter, to Syria. Russia's Defense Ministry couldn't be reached for comment.

China has historically relied on Russian designs, many older and some built domestically under license. That is starting to change with the new projects. The country's air force "is rapidly closing the gap with Western air forces across a broad spectrum of capabilities," the Pentagon said this year in its annual assessment of the Chinese military.

China's J-20, which resembles the U.S. F-22, started flying in 2011, though it hasn't yet entered military service. A year later, Beijing began flight trials of the FC-31, a look-alike of the U.S. F-35.

China's Defense Ministry referred to its response in May to the Pentagon's report when it expressed "strong dissatisfaction and resolute opposition" and accused the U.S. of "improper comment" on issues including China's weapons development.

To counter new threats, the U.S. Air Force, in a recent assessment of combat needs, recommended introducing long-range missiles or other weapons that would allow current planes to strike targets while remaining outside the range of an adversary's defenses.

It is also already pushing new planes, targeting 2030 for an upgraded model, U.S. Air Force Gen. Herbert J. Carlisle, head of the service's Air Combat Command, said in July.

The Pentagon is still defining exactly what it wants in a new plane, but such plane makers as Boeing Co., Lockheed Martin Corp. and Northrop Grumman Corp. have all started circulating futuristic drawings of what such a plane might look like.

European defense ministries, including the U.K.'s, have also recently begun to consider new combat aircraft, said Douglas Barrie, military aerospace senior fellow at the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies. He cited "Russia's assertiveness in Eastern Europe and its procurement of increasingly capable combat aircraft."

Credit: By Robert Wall

DETAILS

Subject:	Defense spending; Foreign policy; Military aircraft; Defense industry; Military sales; Military strategy
Business indexing term:	Subject: Defense industry
Location:	United States--US; Russia; China
Company / organization:	Name: Navy-US; NAICS: 928110; Name: Air Force-US; NAICS: 928110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917708
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-spending-on-warplanes-fuels-arms-race/docview/1822917708/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: In Washington, Calls Rise for Syria Sanctions

Peterson, Kristina; Lee, Carol E . Peterson, Kristina; Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the White House pressed House Democrats to withhold their support for the bill to protect the cease-fire in Syria, brokered this month by the U.S. and Russia, and allow for talks at the United Nations General Assembly meeting, according to House aides from both parties.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Momentum is growing on Capitol Hill for new sanctions against supporters of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's regime, as many lawmakers' patience with the Obama administration's approach wears thin after the collapse of the latest cease-fire agreement.

President Barack Obama has opposed stepping up sanctions. House Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.) urged the White House last week to lift behind-the-scenes pressure that has prevented House Democrats from backing sanctions legislation headed to the chamber's floor.

White House press secretary Josh Earnest said Mr. Obama opposes the Syria sanctions bill because he believes applying unilateral sanctions isn't as effective as coordinating sanctions with U.S. allies.

It isn't clear when either chamber might take action. Both congressional chambers are expected to leave Washington at the end of the week until after the election.

Republican leaders hoped to pass the sanctions bill last week under expedited procedures that require the support of two-thirds of voting lawmakers. But the White House pressed House Democrats to withhold their support for the bill to protect the cease-fire in Syria, brokered this month by the U.S. and Russia, and allow for talks at the United Nations General Assembly meeting, according to House aides from both parties.

The legislation is designed to raise pressure on the military supply chain by sanctioning Syria's energy industry and penalizing anyone doing business with its telecommunication or transportation sectors, a Democratic congressional aide said.

Credit: By Kristina Peterson and Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Bills; Sanctions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sanctions
Location:	United States--US; Syria
People:	Obama, Barack; Earnest, Josh; Ryan, Paul; Assad, Bashar Al
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 26, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822917701
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-washington-calls-rise-syria-sanctions/docview/1822917701/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Marketers are questioning their digital-advertising investments amid revelations that Facebook overestimated video-viewing time and Dentsu overcharged firms. ---

FULL TEXT

Marketers are questioning their digital-advertising investments amid revelations that Facebook overestimated video-viewing time and Dentsu overcharged firms.

Salesforce is weighing a takeover of Twitter as the social-media firm struggles to spur growth. Twitter shares surged 21% on the news.

Yahoo detected hackers in its computer systems in fall 2014 who they believed were linked to Russia.

Electronic payments are set to move faster under an upgrade to banks' ACH money-routing system.

Investment bankers and traders are likely to see pay fall this year as salaries for banks' tech employees rise.

Hanjin will likely sell some of its most valuable ships as the container firm heads toward liquidation.

GM is offering buyouts to 400 Cadillac dealers as it reshapes the brand's image to better compete with rivals.

U.S. stock indexes fell Friday but notched weekly gains. The Dow closed down 131.01 points at 18261.45.

Saudi Arabia and Iran clashed over oil-output limits ahead of OPEC talks.

DETAILS

Subject:	Competition; Social networks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Social networks
Location:	Iran; Russia; United States--US; Saudi Arabia
Company / organization:	Name: Yahoo Inc; NAICS: 516210, 519290
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822603287
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1822603287/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 20 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Congress is likely to override the veto. ---

FULL TEXT

No CEO at the nation's largest 100 companies had donated to Trump's campaign through August, while 11 backed Clinton.

Cruz, in a reversal, said he plans to vote for Trump, citing a pledge to back whoever won the GOP nomination.

Trump received numerous loans from his father early in his real estate career, documents show.

Two of Clinton's attorneys were granted immunity as part of a now-closed FBI email probe, lawmakers said.

The U.S. and Russia were deadlocked over how to revive a Syria truce as full-scale combat returned.

Syrian and Russian warplanes again bombarded the rebel-held side of the divided city of Aleppo.

The family of a black man fatally shot by Charlotte police released a video that his wife said she made of the encounter.

Obama rejected a bill that would let Americans sue foreign governments over terror attacks. Congress is likely to override the veto.

U.S.-EU trade talks likely won't be finished during Obama's presidency, European officials concluded.

DETAILS

Subject:	Veto;es; Alliances
Location:	Syria; United States--US; Russia
Company / organization:	Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120; Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822603281
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1822603281/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 21 of 500

Business News: GM Culls Cadillac Dealers

Colias, Mike; Stoll, John D . Colias, Mike; Stoll, John D.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Cadillac sales volumes have fallen far behind German auto makers and Toyota Motor Corp.'s Lexus brand in the U.S. despite substantial investment in the product line.

FULL TEXT

General Motors Co. is moving to cull the ranks of Cadillac dealers, offering buyouts to the 400 owners of the brand's smallest sales outlets as it reshapes the luxury vehicle's image to better compete with rivals.

The Detroit auto maker will provide as much as $180,000 in "transition assistance" to U.S. Cadillac dealers unwilling to invest in a set of new standards introduced by brand chief Johan de Nysschen. Cadillac has 925 dealers.

Dealers were informed of the buyout plan on Friday.

A spokesman said the buyouts are optional and available until Nov. 21. Many of the affected dealers have stores coupled with other GM brands, such as GMC or Chevrolet.

Cadillac sales volumes have fallen far behind German auto makers and Toyota Motor Corp.'s Lexus brand in the U.S. despite substantial investment in the product line.

Mr. de Nysschen has said changes need to be made, and earlier this year rolled out a plan called Project Pinnacle to address staffing, service and other operational details.

BMW AG, Daimler AG's Mercedes-Benz, Audi AG and Lexus each has about a third the dealers in the U.S. that Cadillac has.

While lower dealer counts mean these brands have less geographical reach, the stores have higher sales throughput that typically leads to richer dealer margins and more willingness by store owners to invest in upgrades.

Cadillac's U.S. sales this year through August totaled 103,000, down 6% from the year-earlier period. Lexus, BMW and Mercedes-Benz all have sold more than double the volume over that period. Cadillac once only battled Ford Motor Co.'s Lincoln for dominance in the U.S. luxury brand, and is now dependent on sales in China for growth.

Project Pinnacle is designed to organize dealers in tiers, a strategy that has been met by some disapproval by dealers accusing the executive of unfairly targeting smaller stores. Before the buyout offers, low-volume dealers were given the option of having inventory-free virtual showrooms.

Credit: By Mike Colias and John D. Stoll

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile dealers; Automobile shows; Competition
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile dealers; Corporation: Toyota Motor Corp Mercedes-Benz Group AG; Industry: 44111 : New Car Dealers 44112 : Used Car Dealers
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: General Motors Corp; NAICS: 333415, 336110, 336390
Classification:	44111: New Car Dealers; 44112: Used Car Dealers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822603252
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-gm-culls-cadillac-dealers/docview/1822603252/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 22 of 500

REVIEW --- Word on the Street: Captain Boycott and His Legacy

Zimmer, Ben . Zimmer, Ben.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In the autumn of 1880, Boycott faced a rebellion from his employees after the Irish Land League launched a campaign to ostracize him for unfair labor practices.

FULL TEXT

Lately, North Carolina has been the target of a series of boycotts. During the unrest in Charlotte this week, some community leaders were calling for an economic boycott of the city to express anger over the fatal shooting of a black man by a police officer.

Earlier this month, in protests over the state's law requiring transgender people to use public bathrooms according to their gender at birth, both the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Atlantic Coast Conference announced they will move championship games to other states.

Boycotts have long served as potent expressions of outrage for those wishing to object to certain individuals or practices. The roots of the term "boycott" lie in rural Ireland's Land War of the late 19th century, when local activists sought to protect the rights of poor tenant farmers.

"Boycott" started off as an eponym -- that is, a word derived from a name, like "shrapnel" (from the British Army officer Henry Shrapnel) or "guillotine" (from the French physician Joseph Guillotin), to take two gory examples.

In this case, the eponymous source was Capt. Charles Boycott, an English land agent who managed the Irish estate of the earl of Erne, an absentee landowner. The Boycott family name was originally "Boycatt," from French Huguenots who fled religious persecution in the 17th century.

In the autumn of 1880, Boycott faced a rebellion from his employees after the Irish Land League launched a campaign to ostracize him for unfair labor practices. When Boycott wrote to the Times of London, complaining that he had been targeted, his plight turned into a media sensation.

Just a few weeks later, it became clear just how important the name of Boycott had become on both sides of the dispute. On Nov. 1, 1880, the Irish Times wrote of a meeting in a small County Mayo town: "There was also, on this occasion, an ingenious use made of the name of the gentleman whose 'isolation' has awakened so much sympathy. Another speaker advised the people to 'Boycott' any man who betrayed them by taking land."

The "boycotting" of Irish landlords soon became international news, and the name-turned-verb spread far and wide. "Any other name would have done just as well," observed the Irish-Canadian writer Grant Allen in an 1894 essay on the evolution of language. "Captain Boycott had merely the sinister honor of being the first recipient of this delicate attention, and he has gained thereby linguistic immortality."

"Boycott" also spawned creative variations on the theme, like "girlcott," a boycott by women. An 1884 anecdote in the Boston Post described how the young women of Groton, Mass., had "resolved to girlcott any young man that smokes or goes out of the theatre between the acts."

Another twist is "buycott," for a countermeasure to a boycott, supporting a company by purchasing its products. North Carolina has buycotts too: Furniture manufacturer Mitchell Gold, which opposes the state's bathroom law, has urged consumers not to boycott his company but to buycott it.

Credit: By Ben Zimmer

DETAILS

Subject:	Boycotts; Religious persecution
Location:	North Carolina; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Irish Times; NAICS: 513110; Name: Times of London; NAICS: 513110; Name: National Collegiate Athletic Association--NCAA; NAICS: 813990
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.4

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602444
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-word-on-street-captain-boycott-his-legacy/docview/1822602444/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 23 of 500

REVIEW --- Space Mission: Christians Ask if Alien Souls Need Saving

Lovett, Ian . Lovett, Ian.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

For astronomers, Proxima b is a dream planet. Discovered last month orbiting the star nearest to our own solar system, it is thought to reside squarely in what scientists call the "Goldilocks zone" -- where the temperature for life is just right.

The news prompted excited questions among scientists: Is there really water on Proxima b? Could a rocket make it there one day? Could there be life on the planet? But it started a very different discussion among Christians: Would alien souls need saving? And if so, do missionaries have a responsibility to rocket into space with a trunk full of Bibles?

"At a minimum, a Christian would have an obligation to at least tell the Gospel story to other life-forms found outside of Earth," said Bill Nettles, the chair of the physics department at Union University, an evangelical college in Jackson, Tenn.

But to other Christians, the idea that an extraterrestrial, no matter how intelligent, could have a spiritual relationship with God is unthinkable.

"It's just planet Earth that has spiritual beings in need of redemption," said Hugh Ross, an astrophysicist who founded Reasons to Believe, a ministry that seeks to show that science supports Christian scripture. "That doesn't rule out dolphins or grass or bacteria on another planet," he said, but he doesn't expect to find life anywhere else in the universe. He added, "It's not Jesus Christ dying on 1,000 planets."

Discussion of alien spirituality has long been the stuff of science fiction. But as humans have peered further into space with telescopes and unmanned probes, religious groups have been forced to grapple -- sometimes uncomfortably -- with what the existence of intelligent extraterrestrial life would mean for their faith.

In 2014, two Jesuit astronomers at the Vatican published a book with the title, "Would You Baptize an Extraterrestrial?" That year, Pope Francis himself -- during a hypothetical section of a weekly homily -- said that he would baptize a green Martian with a "long nose and big ears," although only if the alien ambled into St. Peter's Basilica and asked. "Who are we to close doors?" the pontiff asked.

Evangelical Christians, who believe in spreading the Gospel, are starting to openly debate whether that duty extends beyond Earth's atmosphere.

As for Mormons, they may have an edge: They are already in space -- proudly counting several astronauts in their fold -- and are used to evangelizing in far-flung places. Utah has stood in for Mars in at least one movie and is home to a research station for the Mars Society.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints declined to comment, but a church official pointed to the "Encyclopedia of Mormonism," which accepts "the existence of other worlds created by God for a divine purpose that is the same as the purpose of earth life."

"For most denominations of Christianity," said David Weintraub, an astronomy professor at Vanderbilt University and the author of "Religions and Extraterrestrial Life," the possibility of life elsewhere presents "serious theological problems." "Until now, questions about who created us and are we alone were purely theological," he said. But now, astronomers are saying, "'We're taking over some turf that used to belong to you.'"

Christians have long argued about the cosmos -- at least since Galileo insisted in 1633 that the Earth revolved around the sun, a heresy that won him house arrest for the rest of his life. Nearly 200 years later, the philosopher Thomas Paine asked whether life on other planets would mean that Jesus was constantly incarnating and dying on various worlds -- a concept that few Christians found appealing.

On a recent morning outside St. Mark's Catholic Church in Los Angeles, parishioners were at ease with the possibility of sentient life on other planets -- and with spreading the Gospel there. "The Bible should be preached all over," Chutti Vanderwall, 64, said after mass. "The Bible teaches love -- not just here. It teaches us to be good people."

Some theologians argue that Ms. Vanderwall's observation -- that the Bible "teaches us to be good people" -- is precisely why Christians shouldn't plan to baptize alien life-forms. The Gospel tells of the fall and salvation of humanity, they say, not of other beings on some far-off world. Other theologians posit that intelligent extraterrestrials would have their own relationships with God.

Beyond the theological questions lie serious practical obstacles. "Communication would take a long time, obviously," said Deborah Haarsma, president of BioLogos, a group that promotes the idea that Christianity and science are in harmony. Even if communication were possible, she added, "Can we communicate about something as profound as God?"

Christians have plenty of time to decide all this. Proxima b is 4.2 light years away -- so a space probe using current technology would take thousands of years to get there.

Credit: By Ian Lovett

DETAILS

Subject:	Bible; Astronomers; Theology; Christians; Christianity; Extraterrestrial life; Theologians; Spirituality; Earth; Mormonism
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602360
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-space-mission-christians-ask-if-alien/docview/1822602360/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 24 of 500

U.S. News: Police Diverge on Camera Usage --- Some departments release video shortly after shootings, others keep it from the public Elinson, Zusha; Mahtani, Shibani; Bauerlein, Valerie . Elinson, Zusha; Mahtani, Shibani; Bauerlein, Valerie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

State laws can also impact whether video is released: 19 states have passed laws governing the use of body-camera footage; eight exclude video from open-records requests, though some include exceptions for police shootings, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

FULL TEXT

CHARLOTTE, N.C. -- As protests raged this week over the police shooting of a black man, Charlotte police have refused to show the public footage of the incident that was captured on a police body camera. The family of 43-year-old Keith Scott, who was killed Sept. 20, has called for the video's release, but Charlotte police Chief Kerr Putney has declined, saying it would imperil the investigation and further inflame the city.

Around 1,000 miles away in Tulsa, Okla., police on Monday released footage from a helicopter and dashboard camera of a Tulsa officer shooting and killing 40-year-old Terence Crutcher last Friday. The video shows Mr. Crutcher walking toward his car with his hands raised and then placing his hands on the top of the car before the view from both videos is blocked and shots ring out.

The two approaches illustrate a widening divide over whether to show video footage to the public from body cameras and other sources, technology embraced by police officials as a way to increase transparency and accountability after police killings of black men sparked protests around the country.

Departments invested tens of millions in the new technology, but there is no universally accepted standard for handling the video. Some departments have decided to publicly release video early in the hopes of heading off violent protests and building trust with minority communities; others are holding back, arguing releases could harm investigations.

"You certainly have competing views," said Michael White, a criminology professor at Arizona State University who studies body cameras. "One of the primary rationales that was discussed from the start was that departments could be transparent. Now there's a bit of backlash."

Just two of the 20 largest police departments in the country -- Las Vegas and Chicago -- have made it standard practice to release body camera videos after police shootings, according to a Wall Street Journal survey last month. Chicago police are required to release such footage within 60 days. Las Vegas typically releases it within 72 hours.

On the other side of the spectrum, two departments, Los Angeles and San Antonio, don't release such footage as a matter of practice. Eight departments have already or plan to release video after shootings on a case-by-case basis, four don't have cameras, two don't have a policy or practice, and two -- Detroit and Memphis -- didn't respond to requests for comment.

State laws can also impact whether video is released: 19 states have passed laws governing the use of body-camera footage; eight exclude video from open-records requests, though some include exceptions for police shootings, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

The Charlotte shooting highlights a North Carolina law taking effect Oct. 1 requiring a judge to decide whether to publicly release any body camera footage.

"If it's going to be used in evidence, the right people will see it and it doesn't need to be out there in the general public," said Pat Hurley, a Republican state representative who co-sponsored the bill.

The American Civil Liberties Union fought the bill, arguing that restricting access would defeat the purpose of the cameras.

The primary reason police and prosecutors give for not releasing video after a shooting is that it could harm investigations or trials by tainting witnesses or jurors. Los Angeles doesn't share body-cam video for this reason. "It's more about accountability than transparency," said Arif Alikhan, director of the LAPD's Office of Constitutional Policing & Policy.

In Chicago, where a new policy on releasing videos was adopted this year, the reaction has been mixed. Footage released in August, eight days after the police shooting of 18-year-old Paul O'Neal, left activists unimpressed, because video from the officer who fired the fatal shot is missing. Police said the camera of the officer who fired the fatal shot wasn't recording and it is investigating why.

Meanwhile, Chicago police have objected to the amount of detail seen in the videos. They show the faces of officers who weren't involved in the shooting, discussions over whether the suspect was armed -- and officers high-fiving and hugging.

Credit: By Zusha Elinson, Shibani Mahtani and Valerie Bauerlein

DETAILS

Subject:	Accountability; Police; Video recordings; Transparency; Body cameras; Camcorders; Police shootings
Business indexing term:	Subject: Transparency; Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Classification:	92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602344
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-police-diverge-on-camera-usage-some/docview/1822602344/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 25 of 500

Election 2016: Cruz, in Reversal, Endorses GOP Nominee

Epstein, Reid J . Epstein, Reid J.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Texas Sen. Ted Cruz said Friday that he plans to vote for Donald Trump in November, citing his earlier pledge to back whoever won the Republican Party's nomination and his deep concerns about a Hillary Clinton presidency.

FULL TEXT

Texas Sen. Ted Cruz said Friday that he plans to vote for Donald Trump in November, citing his earlier pledge to back whoever won the Republican Party's nomination and his deep concerns about a Hillary Clinton presidency.

The endorsement marks a sharp reversal for Mr. Cruz, who had called Mr. Trump a "pathological liar" on the closing day of his campaign run and later declined to endorse Mr. Trump at the Republican National Convention.

Mr. Cruz delivered his support and asked others to vote for Mr. Trump in a statement on Facebook. It came after a weekslong campaign from Trump allies led by Mr. Trump's running mate, Indiana Gov. Mike Pence. Messrs. Pence and Cruz spoke by phone and then met in Washington last week.

"After many months of careful consideration, of prayer and searching my own conscience, I have decided that on Election Day, I will vote for the Republican nominee, Donald Trump," Mr. Cruz wrote.

In a statement released by his campaign, Mr. Trump said: "I am greatly honored by the endorsement of Senator Cruz." He added: "We have fought the battle, and he was a tough and brilliant opponent. I look forward to working with him for many years to come in order to make America great again."

Mr. Cruz's endorsement comes at a moment when the Republican Party has begun to coalesce behind Mr. Trump. This week's Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll found 85% of Republicans said they would vote for Mr. Trump, a 4-percentage-point increase from last month. Also, major GOP donors recently announced plans to spend millions of dollars to back Mr. Trump.

Mr. Cruz made his case for Mr. Trump largely by arguing against Mrs. Clinton. He asked supporters who agree with his critique of the Democrat to vote for the GOP nominee.

"A year ago, I pledged to endorse the Republican nominee, and I am honoring that commitment," he said.

Mr. Cruz didn't address his past disputes with Mr. Trump, who among other insults dubbed the Texas senator "Lyn' Ted" and suggested he was ineligible to be president due to his birthplace.

The question of whether to back Mr. Trump has divided Mr. Cruz's top aides for months. As late as Friday morning, one person who served a senior role on Mr. Cruz's campaign said that Mr. Cruz would "destroy his brand" by backing Mr. Trump and would take himself out of contention for the party's 2020 nomination should Mr. Trump lose the White House to Mrs. Clinton.

Signs of a potential detente came earlier this week, for example when Mr. Trump announced his support for an "internet freedom" bill that Mr. Cruz has championed.

Rebecca Ballhaus contributed to this article.

Credit: By Reid J. Epstein

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidential elections; Endorsements; Political conventions; Political campaigns; Nominations; Political parties
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	United States--US
People:	Cruz, Ted; Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602342
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-cruz-reversal-endorses-gop-nominee/docview/1822602342/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 26 of 500

Open House Saturday: Putting Down Roots in Bronxville --- Westchester village, once home to artists' colony, combines urban sophistication with suburban comfort

Cary, Bill . Cary, Bill.

ABSTRACT

The intangibles are amazing." Because of its excellent school system, proximity to New York City and its rich mix of historic housing stock, Bronxville has a strong real-estate market, even in lean times, said Sheila Stoltz, an agent with Houlihan Lawrence who has lived in the village for 15 years. For the first half of this year, the median price for a single-family home was $2.3 million, with 22 closed sales, compared with $2.7 million, with 19 closings, for the same period last year, according to the Hudson Gateway Multiple Listing Service.

FULL TEXT

With their three children in their 20s and a new condominium complex going up in downtown Bronxville, Richard and Marcella Dresdale decided it was the perfect time to downsize.

They put their five-bedroom Tudor on the market and bought a two-bedroom apartment in the complex, called VillaBXV. Their move, planned for next summer, will bring them into the heart of this well-to-do, tightknit Westchester County community of 6,500 that they have grown to love in the 25 years since they came from Manhattan.

"For us, it's a great opportunity -- to be a block, two blocks from everything," said Mr. Dresdale, a private-equity investor who still commutes the 15 miles into Midtown a few times a week.

"What's great about Bronxville is that you can come here, even for people from other countries, and immediately be welcomed into the community and have a network in place," he said.

The roots of Bronxville itself are deep. A prosperous farming community in the 18th century, it was incorporated as a village within the town of Eastchester in 1898.

Many of Bronxville's grand homes, on winding streets with stately trees, were built roughly a century ago when the village was home to an artists' colony.

Today, Bronxville has several sites on the National Register of Historic Places, including the post office, the Bronxville Women's Club and the Lawrence Park Historic District.

"The village is having a really nice resurgence," said Mayor Mary Marvin, noting that there are few empty storefronts. "It's a really special place. The intangibles are amazing."

Because of its excellent school system, proximity to New York City and its rich mix of historic housing stock, Bronxville has a strong real-estate market, even in lean times, said Sheila Stoltz, an agent with Houlihan Lawrence who has lived in the village for 15 years.

"Remarkably, it always does well," said Ms. Stoltz. "Even in 2008 and '09, we were down, but we were so much better than Connecticut and elsewhere."

The square-mile vibrant downtown business district and easy walkability add to its allure, Ms. Stoltz said.

"Everyone who comes from the city wants to walk and be close to everything," she said.

Most Bronxville residents live in either single-family homes or cooperatives. The village also has a small number of townhouses.

Like demand, housing prices have stayed high. For the first half of this year, the median price for a single-family home was $2.3 million, with 22 closed sales, compared with $2.7 million, with 19 closings, for the same period last year, according to the Hudson Gateway Multiple Listing Service.

"But 2015 was an outlier because we had two houses that sold for $8.5 million," Ms. Stoltz said of the higher median price.

The median price for a townhouse was $940,000, compared with $990,000, according to Hudson Gateway. For co-ops, the median price for the same six-month periods was $465,000 for 2016 and $550,000 for 2015.

VillaBXV is the first new housing development in many years, said the mayor, Ms. Marvin.

"It's keeping some wonderful people in Bronxville, longtime involved residents who didn't want to leave," she said.

The condo complex is also drawing residents from New York City and other Westchester communities, including Dru Richards, a resident of Manhattan's Upper East Side for more than 20 years.

"I think of Bronxville as urban-suburban -- there's a sophistication about it," Ms. Richards said. "I'm thinking of it as another neighborhood of New York City."

Transportation: The commute to Grand Central Terminal takes about a half-hour on Metro-North's Harlem line.

Schools: All public-school students, from kindergartners to seniors, attend classes in what is known as the Bronxville School, a brick building on Pondfield Road. The participation rate in Advanced Placement courses at Bronxville High School is 80%; math proficiency is 81% and English proficiency is 98%, according to U.S. News & World Report.

Dining: The Bronxville Diner, which opened in August, serves classic American fare. Underhills Crossing dishes up new American cuisine with a French flair. Sammy's Downtown Bistro & Bar focuses on continental and American fare. Slave to the Grind is a retro coffeehouse. For international flavors: Blue Moon Mexican Cafe and Rosie's Bistro Italiano.

Entertainment: The three-screen Bow Tie Bronxville Theater shows first-run films. Both Concordia College, which is in the village, and Sarah Lawrence College, just over the border in Yonkers, have theater, music and lecture series.

IF YOU'RE

BROWSING FOR

A HOME . . .

$1.2 million

37 Sagamore Rd.

This four-bedroom, two-bathroom townhome in the 10-residence Oak Court complex was designed by William Bates, a renowned Bronxville architect. It has new windows and bathrooms, a new kitchen, central air and a large garden. The living room has a fireplace.

Year Built: 1919

Square Footage: 1,853

Lot Size: 1,742 square feet

Property Plus: Original architectural features and wood floors

Property Minus: No bathroom on the first floor

Listing Date: March 7

Listing Agent: Kathleen Collins of Julia B. Fee Sotheby's International Realty

Open House: By appointment

$2.5 million

159 White Plains Rd.

This Colonial has four bedrooms, three bathrooms and a half bathroom. The first floor has a formal dining room, a large living room with a fireplace and a family room with a fireplace. A double-wide staircase at the entry leads to a windowed landing overlooking the backyard. Other features include an updated eat-in kitchen, a master suite and a finished lower level.

Year Built: 1920

Square Footage: 3,817

Lot Size: 0.47 acres

Property Plus: A private suite on the third floor with a full bathroom

Property Minus: It is located on a busy corner.

Listing Date: April 8

Listing Agents: Jane Vergari and Happy French-Zingaro of Houlihan Lawrence

Open House: By appointment

$240,000

45 Pondfield Rd. West, Apt. 5D

This renovated two-bedroom, one-bathroom co-op is within walking distance of downtown and the train station. The complex has an elevator, storage and a laundry room.

Year Built: 1978

Square Footage: 1,000

Property Plus: It has large windows with both southern and northern exposures.

Property Minus: The kitchen needs updating.

Listing Date: June 19

Listing Agent: Valon Nikci of Link NY Realty

Open House: By appointment

Credit: By Bill Cary

DETAILS

Subject:	Real estate sales; Housing; Condominiums; Historic buildings & sites; Median; Multiple listing services; Architecture; Housing prices; Houses; Site planning
Business indexing term:	Subject: Architecture Housing prices; Industry: 71212 : Historical Sites
Location:	New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Sarah Lawrence College; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	71212: Historical Sites
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.16
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602334
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/open-house-saturday-putting-down-roots-bronxville/docview/1822602334/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 27 of 500

Business News: UPS Makes a Delivery by Drone

Stevens, Laura; Wells, Georgia . Stevens, Laura; Wells, Georgia.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

United Parcel Service Inc. said Friday it successfully used a drone to deliver medicine to an island near Boston, jumping into a race with competitors such as Amazon.com Inc. to test drone delivery in the U.S. The delivery of an inhaler on Thursday was conducted in partnership with CyPhy Works Inc., a drone maker in which UPS holds a stake.

FULL TEXT

United Parcel Service Inc. said Friday it successfully used a drone to deliver medicine to an island near Boston, jumping into a race with competitors such as Amazon.com Inc. to test drone delivery in the U.S.

The delivery of an inhaler on Thursday was conducted in partnership with CyPhy Works Inc., a drone maker in which UPS holds a stake. The delivery kicks off a wider test by UPS of using drones for commercial deliveries to remote or difficult-to-access areas.

"UPS has a history of trying to take a look at new technologies as they evolve," said Chuck Holland, a vice president of industrial engineering at the company. "We're looking at this in steps," he added, declining to say whether UPS may someday use drones more broadly.

The move by UPS marks the first time a major company has made a drone delivery publicly in the U.S. since the Federal Aviation Administration implemented long-awaited rules in late August authorizing businesses to start using small drones. The company previously tested drone use for indoor warehouses and humanitarian relief, which aren't subject to the same regulations. UPS is on the FAA's drone advisory committee.

"Now we can conduct commercial operations without having to go through the rigmarole of getting an exemption from the FAA," said Helen Greiner, co-founder and chief technologist of CyPhy Works, the Boston-area drone startup that operated the drone. UPS invested an undisclosed sum in CyPhy last year via its strategic enterprise fund.

UPS joins a crowded field of companies including Amazon and Google parent Alphabet Inc. eager to deploy drone technology. Amazon unveiled its plans to deliver via drone in late 2013 and has lobbied for faster action from regulators. It made a deal with British authorities in July to begin testing deliveries in the U.K., where drone regulations are considered less stringent than in the U.S.

Alphabet, meanwhile, said this month that it plans to use drones to deliver burritos at Virginia Tech in a test of its technology. Deutsche Post AG's DHL also has tested delivery by drones, including medicine to a German island in the North Sea.

Traditional delivery companies generally have expressed more skepticism about the likelihood of package delivery via drones. "There are two enormous transportation networks that are built around moving light packages and freight, and they are FedEx and UPS," FedEx Corp. Chief Executive Fred Smith said after Amazon's 2013 announcement.

UPS's brown-and-white drone flew 3 miles over water within line of sight to a nearby island, touching down in a patch of grass. The drone flew autonomously, without a human pilot, simulating an urgent medical delivery.

Credit: By Laura Stevens and Georgia Wells

DETAILS

Subject:	Postal & delivery services; Drones
Business indexing term:	Corporation: FedEx Corp; Industry: 49111 : Postal Service 49211 : Couriers and Express Delivery Services

Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: United Parcel Service of America; NAICS: 484110, 492110
Classification:	49111: Postal Service; 49211: Couriers and Express Delivery Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602312
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-ups-makes-delivery-drone/docview/1822602312/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

REVIEW --- Play: News Quiz

Akst, Daniel . Akst, Daniel.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

What office does he hold? A. Prime minister of Finland B. Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service C. Governor of Kansas D. Chief justice of the Illinois Supreme Court --- 8.

FULL TEXT

1. The singer Jewel grew up in Alaska. What's her full name?

A. Jewel Kilcher

B. Jewel Case

C. Jewel Setting

D. Jewel Osco

2. From 2005 to 2015, the Federal Reserve handed $700 billion in profits to the U.S. government. How did it get such gains?

A. Betting on the direction of interest rates

B. Selling calendars featuring scantily clad Fed governors

C. Lending out money

D. Fees from banks

3. Wal-Mart rebranded misshapen russet potatoes -- as what?

A. Twee Potatoes

B. Spuglies

C. Cutie Carbs

D. Beauty in the Beast

4. Emma Walmsley was named the next CEO of GlaxoSmithKline. Where had she spent much of her career before that?

A. Pfizer

B. L'Oreal

C. Burberry

D. The Food and Drug Administration

5. What new technology are cowboys using to track cattle movements and feeding?

A. Methane detectors

B. Cyborg shelties

C. Robotic cattle egrets

D. Ear tags and algorithms

6. Keith Lamont Scott is one of several African-American men killed by police in controversial shootings in recent months. In which city was he shot?

A. Tulsa

B. Baltimore

C. Charlotte

D. Sacramento

7. John Koskinen is facing an impeachment attempt. What office does he hold?

A. Prime minister of Finland

B. Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service

C. Governor of Kansas

D. Chief justice of the Illinois Supreme Court

8. A new study mentions thigmotaxis. What is it?

A. The movement of certain plants when touched

B. The tendency of animals to cling to edges, only later to explore the center

C. A form of necrosis that afflicts the thigh bone

D. A parasitic disease, often picked up from cat feces

9. A big new diamond mine opened at Gahcho Kue -- which is where?

A. Namibia

B. Russia

C. Canada

D. New Jersey

ANSWERS

1. A

2. C

3. B

4. B

5. D

6. C

7. B

8. B

9. C

Credit: By Daniel Akst

DETAILS

Location:	United States--US; Alaska
People:	Walmsley, Emma
Company / organization:	Name: GlaxoSmithKline PLC; NAICS: 325412; Name: Supreme Court-Illinois; NAICS: 922110; Name: Internal Revenue Service--IRS; NAICS: 921130; Name: Walmart Inc; NAICS: 454110, 455110, 455211
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602311
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-play-news-quiz/docview/1822602311/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 29 of 500

World News: Prospects Dim for Landmark Trade Pact

Dendrinou, Viktoria . Dendrinou, Viktoria.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On Sept. 17, hundreds of thousands of people marched through seven German cities to protest against the EU's planned trade pacts with the U.S. and Canada, highlighting a strengthening public backlash against the bloc's trans-Atlantic trade policies.

FULL TEXT

Negotiations over a far-reaching trade pact between the U.S. and the European Union will almost certainly not be finished during President Barack Obama's presidency, European trade ministers concluded during a meeting Friday.

The world's two biggest economic blocs have been negotiating the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership, or TTIP, since 2013, and have repeatedly said they hope to conclude negotiations before the end of the Obama administration in January.

"The debate showed that a conclusion of the TTIP negotiations by the end of the year is unrealistic," said Peter Ziga, Slovakia's trade minister who presided over the ministers' meeting in the Slovak capital, Bratislava.

During Friday's meeting, "all ministers expressed their doubts about being able to conclude this before the end of the Obama presidency, and indeed it looks increasingly unlikely," said Cecilia Malmstrom, the EU's trade commissioner.

Prospects for completing the deal have suffered from weakening political support in Europe as well as growing public criticism, as antiglobalization sentiment has risen on both sides of the Atlantic.

On Sept. 17, hundreds of thousands of people marched through seven German cities to protest against the EU's planned trade pacts with the U.S. and Canada, highlighting a strengthening public backlash against the bloc's trans-Atlantic trade policies.

The trans-Atlantic talks have generated more widespread disapproval in Europe than in Washington, where the Obama administration is struggling to get a major Pacific deal through Congress but would also like to finish the lower-profile talks with Europe.

"If the EU and its member states are prepared and have the necessary political will, we can complete an agreement this year," said Matt McAlvanah, a spokesman for U.S. Trade Representative Michael Froman.

If negotiations aren't concluded by the end of Mr. Obama's administration, then a natural pause will ensue while the new president decides on the priorities, Ms. Malmstrom said, but she added that it is difficult to tell how long it would be.

Credit: By Viktoria Dendrinou

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Trade negotiation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Trade negotiation
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602309

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-prospects-dim-landmark-trade-pact/docview/1822602309/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 30 of 500

City News: N.J. Casino Measure Doomed, Say Backers --- Advocates cite polls as they stand down on $35 million campaign to push referendum

King, Kate . King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Roger Gros, publisher of Global Gaming Business Magazine, said the political compromises that were made to get the referendum on the ballot doomed its chances of passage.

FULL TEXT

The abrupt decision by two wealthy casino advocates to abandon a $35 million campaign backing a Nov. 8 referendum to extend gambling to northern New Jersey signaled that even the ballot proposal's strongest supporters expect it to be defeated.

Real-estate magnate Jeff Gural, who wants to build a $1 billion casino at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, said recent polling showed the measure would fail.

"There's just nothing we can do," Mr. Gural said Friday. "The pollsters told us that we couldn't win, no matter what argument we made."

The referendum, if approved, would permit two casinos to open more than 72 miles north of Atlantic City. New Jersey's constitution now restricts casinos to the seaside resort.

A Rutgers-Eagleton poll conducted earlier this month found that 40% of respondents thought casinos should be allowed outside Atlantic City. That was a decrease of 4 percentage points from a March poll by the same group.

Roger Gros, publisher of Global Gaming Business Magazine, said the political compromises that were made to get the referendum on the ballot doomed its chances of passage. The legislation failed to address key issues, such as the tax rate for the new casinos' revenues; where the facilities would be located; how much revenue the state would see; and how that money would be spent, he said.

The inability of pro-expansion interests to form a united front and effectively convey their message indicates gambling expansion will remain an uphill battle in the future, Mr. Gros said.

"I'm skeptical that anything can get passed now at any point," he said.

Mr. Gural said that he and Paul Fireman, a billionaire investor seeking to build a $4 billion casino on the Jersey City waterfront, spent about $10 million to date for the "Our Turn NJ" campaign. The group began airing television ads in early August, but it couldn't overcome the opposition campaign's "brilliant strategy," Mr. Gural said.

"Their ads were well funded, you saw them all the time, and all they were saying was, 'you can't trust Trenton,'" Mr. Gural said.

The "Trenton's Bad Bet," campaign, which opposes the ballot question, is running television spots that argue state politicians can't be trusted to properly manage casino expansion. The coalition, whose financial backers include Resorts World Casino New York City, has spent $4 million on television advertising already and plans to spend $2 million to air more ads by Oct. 3, said spokesman Bill Cortese.

Opposition groups said they would continue to push their message until Election Day.

"We have to remember that the question is still on the ballot and we are going to remain vigilant in educating voters and making sure they turn out to vote 'no,'" said Assemblyman Chris Brown, a Republican who represents Atlantic County.

Patrick Murray, director of the Monmouth University Polling Institute, said poll respondents routinely express distrust of Trenton politicians, regardless of the issue being discussed, and the opposition to gambling expansion more likely stems from Atlantic City's well-chronicled financial troubles.

For casino expansion to pass, "the mood of the public would have to change dramatically and that would require a change in the fortunes of Atlantic City," Mr. Murray said.

Assemblyman Ralph Caputo, a Democrat from Essex County who supports gambling expansion, pointed out that the referendum to allow casinos in New Jersey failed when it first appeared on the 1974 ballot. A revised measure, which limited gambling to Atlantic City, passed two years later.

Mr. Gural said he would continue to push for casinos in northern New Jersey. He said he believed a referendum could pass in a future attempt.

Mr. Fireman couldn't be reached for comment Friday.

DETAILS

Subject:	Referendums; Political advertising; Legalized gambling; Casinos
Business indexing term:	Subject: Casinos; Industry: 71321 : Casinos (except Casino Hotels) 71329 : Other Gambling Industries
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Classification:	71321: Casinos (except Casino Hotels); 71329: Other Gambling Industries
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602306
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-n-j-casino-measure-doomed-say-backers/docview/1822602306/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 31 of 500

Business News: Competition Grows in On-Demand Music --- Radio broadcaster IHeartMedia to enter packed market for subscription services

Karp, Hannah . Karp, Hannah.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

For record companies, the planned services are a potential new source of revenue from terrestrial radio, which isn't required by federal law to pay royalties to labels or performing artists when it plays their music on the airwaves.

FULL TEXT

IHeartMedia Inc., the biggest U.S. radio broadcaster, is starting its own on-demand subscription music services, heightening the competition in an already jam-packed market.

Like Spotify AB, Apple Inc.'s Apple Music, Alphabet Inc.'s Google Play Music and rap star Jay Z's Tidal, the broadcaster's iHeartRadio All Access service will offer subscribers unlimited on-demand listening to about 30 million songs. A cheaper option called iHeartRadio Plus will give listeners the ability to instantly replay songs they hear on the radio through the company's 8-year-old iHeartRadio app, and to save those songs so they can listen to them offline.

Both services, slated for launch by January, will be integrated with the streaming of the company's live radio broadcasts -- a combination that will set them apart from the pack. IHeartMedia, formerly known as Clear Channel Communications, has 858 stations that collectively reach 269 million people a month. Its digital iHeartRadio service counts 90 million registered users, who can use an app or website to listen to what is being broadcast on the company's own radio stations and more than 1,000 others.

Most people in the U.S. still rely on FM radio to discover new music, according to research firm MusicWatch Inc., even those who pay for on-demand services that feature celebrity curators and algorithms aimed at catering to users' individual tastes.

IHeartRadio's president, Darren Davis, said his team hasn't determined how it will price its new offerings, but added that the subscription plans are aimed primarily at "keeping people listening to our stations."

IHeartMedia earns most of its revenue from advertising, and paying for the subscription services won't erase the ads that air on the 2,000 stations streamed on iHeartRadio. However, iHeartRadio's custom stations, which users can create based on an artist, genre or mood -- similar to Pandora Media Inc.'s popular service -- will remain ad-free.

The broadcaster's jump into the subscription game follows a similar move by Pandora, which counts nearly 80 million active monthly listeners for its free service and competes with iHeartMedia for advertising. Pandora this month launched an enhanced version of its $5-a-month ad-free service and plans to roll out a $10-a-month unlimited on-demand tier by the end of the year.

Mr. Davis said his team had been considering its next move ever since launching iHeartRadio in 2008, and has been conducting surveys for the past two years to gauge its listeners' interest in subscription music.

For record companies, the planned services are a potential new source of revenue from terrestrial radio, which isn't required by federal law to pay royalties to labels or performing artists when it plays their music on the airwaves. Broadcasters do pay digital performance royalties to labels and artists to stream their music online, and the subscription offerings could help labels wring more out of radio listeners.

Credit: By Hannah Karp

DETAILS

Subject:	Digital music; Subscriptions; Music; Royalties
Business indexing term:	Corporation: Apple Inc
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: iHeartMedia Inc; NAICS: 516110, 516120, 516210, 541850
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602305
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-competition-grows-on-demand-music/docview/1822602305/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 32 of 500

A Bench Player Takes a Star Turn

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the 54-year-old Connecticut Superior Court Judge issued a decision earlier this month declaring large portions of the state's education system to be unconstitutional. The state Attorney General's Office appealed it, and the state Supreme Court agreed to take it up.

FULL TEXT

Thomas Moukawsher had pursued most of his decadeslong career in law outside of the public eye.

Then the 54-year-old Connecticut Superior Court Judge issued a decision earlier this month declaring large portions of the state's education system to be unconstitutional. Suddenly, Judge Moukawsher, who drew notice for reading his ruling from the bench over the course of almost three hours, was front-page news.

"This is really his first grand experience on the judicial stage," said Daniel Klau, an attorney in Connecticut who blogs about law. "And it certainly was a grand appearance. Very theatrical."

The ruling followed a 2005 lawsuit filed against the state to address funding disparities between well-off and low-income school districts. Among other things, Judge Moukawsher ordered the state to devise a new funding formula for public schools and overhaul evaluations for public-school teachers.

The ruling was divisive. Many in the state who want to see drastic changes in education applauded the decision. Its sweeping nature, however, drew criticism from some state legislators who said Judge Moukawsher overstepped his authority.

"I think he brings up points that are worth discussing," said Len Fasano, the Republican Minority Leader in the state Senate. "I just don't think he had the right to order it."

Elissa Wright, a former member of the state House of Representatives who has known Judge Moukawsher for decades, said he made the right call.

"I think it's fair to say that it was in the overall charge of this case to address inequities and inadequacies in the educational opportunities provided for every student" in Connecticut's schools, said Ms. Wright, who once worked at the judge's former law firm.

Judge Moukawsher, who declined to comment, is a lifelong resident of Groton, Conn. His father, Joseph, was an attorney. Judge Moukawsher founded a law firm in 1996 with his father and Michael Walsh, a classmate from the University of Connecticut School of Law.

"His dad probably was an inspiration to him and probably one of the reasons he went into the practice of law and ultimately took the bench," Mr. Walsh said.

Judge Moukawsher was also drawn to politics. He served on Groton's town council in the late 1980s and one term in the state House of Representatives as a Democrat from 1991 to 1993. He was a committee member for the state Democratic Party for nearly 20 years, and also worked as its counsel for a time.

Over the years, he has become known for his formal demeanor and appearance.

"At casual cocktail parties, he's dressed to the nines," said Jay Levin, a former state legislator who has known the judge since the late 1970s.

Judge Moukawsher built a reputation as one of the top attorneys in the U.S. representing plaintiffs in employee-benefits cases.

"He owned this issue," said Mark DeBofsky, an attorney from Chicago who knows Judge Moukawsher through the American Bar Association.

One of his first big cases was in the 1990s, against Pfizer Inc. A retired employee had sued, alleging he had been wrongfully deprived a buyout which the company never told him it would be offering to workers, according to court documents. Judge Moukawsher won the case.

Judge Moukawsher's attitude was always, "Hell, I'm not going to accept the status quo. If there is an unfairness here, I'm going to fix it," said Mr. DeBofsky.

Then in 2013, Democratic Gov. Dannel Malloy appointed him to be a Superior Court Judge.

"He was really in the prime of his career when he took the bench," Mr. Walsh said. "He's not one of these people who took the bench kind of as an exit strategy. He took the bench wanting to work."

He had only been judge a short time before he was assigned the education case. After a complex trial stretching over several months, he announced the date he would issue his ruling and that he would read it from the bench, unusual actions that raised eyebrows in Connecticut's legal community, Mr. Klau said. "That is virtually unheard of," he added.

Tim Shearin, an attorney who attended the University of Connecticut School of Law with Judge Moukawsher, said he wasn't the type to use the case to boost his profile.

"He, like most every other judge I know, does the best they can with the cases that are assigned to them and call it like they see it and aren't really concerned about what the fallout might be," Mr. Shearin said.

What effect, if any, Judge Moukawsher's ruling ultimately will have on Connecticut's public-education system remains uncertain. The state Attorney General's Office appealed it, and the state Supreme Court agreed to take it up. The court has yet to say when it will hear oral arguments or accept briefs from the parties on the case.

Weekend Profile / Thomas Moukawsher

- Connecticut Superior Court judge since 2013
- Former member, state House of Representatives
- Law degree, University of Connecticut, School of Law
- B.A. in English, the Citadel, the Military College of South Carolina

(See related letters: "Feedback Friday: Readers' Turn / Museum Expansion, Education Ruling and Manning's Miss" -- WSJ Sept. 30, 2016)

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys; State court decisions; Colleges & universities; Education; Litigation; Funding; Law firms; Judges & magistrates
Business indexing term:	Subject: Law firms; Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools 54111 : Offices of Lawyers
Location:	Connecticut; United States--US

People:	Levin, Jay
Company / organization:	Name: House of Representatives; NAICS: 921120; Name: University of Connecticut; NAICS: 611310; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools; 54111: Offices of Lawyers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Bu siness And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602298
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/bench-player-takes-star-turn/docview/1822602298/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Christie Used Port as 'Goody Bag' --- Witness says governor doled out perks to help secure endorsements of Democratic officials

Ramey, Corinne . Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

At the instruction of Chris Christie, the Port Authority systematically allocated grants, vehicles and steel from the Twin Towers to Democratic elected officials from whom New Jersey's Republican governor sought endorsements for his 2013 campaign, a former Port Authority official testified Friday.

FULL TEXT

At the instruction of Chris Christie, the Port Authority systematically allocated grants, vehicles and steel from the Twin Towers to Democratic elected officials from whom New Jersey's Republican governor sought endorsements for his 2013 campaign, a former Port Authority official testified Friday.

David Wildstein, a cooperating witness in the trial of two ex-Christie aides accused of creating a traffic jam as political payback, said he had received instruction from the governor's office to use the "Port Authority goody bag" in this way.

"The Port Authority was asked to play a role in helping the governor's office secure certain endorsements," Mr. Wildstein said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Lee Cortes asked who gave this instruction.

"Asked initially by Mr. Stepien," Mr. Wildstein said, referring to Christie aide Bill Stepien. There were others, he added.

"What others?" Mr. Cortes asked.

"Gov. Christie," Mr. Wildstein replied.

A spokesman for Mr. Christie didn't respond to a request for comment. An attorney for Mr. Stepien declined to comment.

Friday marked the beginning of the testimony of Mr. Wildstein in the trial of former Port Authority of New York and New Jersey Deputy Executive Director Bill Baroni and Bridget Kelly, a former deputy chief of staff to the governor. Federal prosecutors say Mr. Wildstein and the two defendants created traffic jams in Fort Lee, N.J., to punish the borough's Democratic mayor for not endorsing Mr. Christie. They allegedly did this by closing local-access lanes at the George Washington Bridge.

Mr. Wildstein, who has pleaded guilty to charges related to the alleged scheme, is the government's star witness.

While Friday was the first day Mr. Wildstein appeared in court, his presence has loomed throughout the first week of the trial. Defense attorneys, quoting witness interviews, have called Mr. Wildstein "maniacal," "a miserable prick" and an "asshole," among other labels. During opening statements, one defense attorney suggested the government had "made a deal with the devil."

Federal prosecutors have noted that while Mr. Wildstein has lied before, his incentive to tell the truth is strong because prosecutors will write a letter to the judge with a sentencing recommendation.

Mr. Wildstein faces up to 15 years in prison.

In court on Friday, Mr. Wildstein outlined a systematic and organized plan to use Port Authority resources to support Mr. Christie's re-election bid. The Port Authority provided valuable resources that the governor "wanted to get credit for," he said.

These resources included steel from the former Twin Towers, flags flown at Ground Zero, World Trade Center tours, vehicles, patronage positions and grants, according to Mr. Wildstein. "The governor's office was always to be the deliverer of good news," he added.

In a May 2011 email shown in court, Mr. Wildstein wrote to Ms. Kelly, mentioning the "Port Authority goody bag."

"I like goody bags!" Ms. Kelly replied. "I appreciate it."

In his testimony Friday, Mr. Wildstein also discussed his relationship with Mr. Baroni, whom he described as "one of the closest friends I've ever had."

At the Port Authority, Mr. Wildstein, whose title was director of interstate capital projects, functioned as Mr. Baroni's chief of staff, he said. But because Mr. Baroni liked to be "the good cop," Mr. Wildstein acted as the bad cop -- "being very aggressive, making sure that things got done," he said.

The two men primarily represented the interests of New Jersey and Mr. Christie, operating according to what they called "the one constituent rule," he said. They first discussed this rule in 2010, he said, at a Starbucks in New York City.

"The only person who mattered was Gov. Christie," Mr. Wildstein said on Friday. "He was the one constituent. If it was good for Gov. Christie it was good for us. If it was not good for Gov. Christie, then it was not good for us."

Mr. Wildstein's testimony also offered a window into business practices at the governor's office and the Port Authority. Mr. Wildstein said numerous people in the governor's office told him to use his personal email address because such communications were considered "not discoverable" to public-records requests, he said.

In correspondence shown thus far, the three alleged co-conspirators are never on the same email chain. In an example shown in court, Mr. Baroni asked Mr. Wildstein how to handle a request from a local official, and Mr. Wildstein asked Ms. Kelly, to see how the governor's office viewed the official.

Mr. Wildstein said he had had bad experiences with the "reply all" function.

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Endorsements; Public prosecutors; Governors; Traffic congestion; Testimony; Legal arguments; Ports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Ports; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Christie, Christopher J
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602296
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/christie-used-port-as-goody-bag-witness-says/docview/1822602296/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2025-01-29
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 34 of 500

U.S. News: Obama Vetoes Bill On Terror Lawsuits

Lee, Carol E; Peterson, Kristina . Lee, Carol E; Peterson, Kristina.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the White House and a small group of lawmakers concerned about the legislation's ramifications on national security and U.S.-Saudi ties were continuing their long-shot effort to craft a compromise.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- President Barack Obama rejected legislation on Friday that would allow Americans to sue foreign governments over terrorist attacks, setting up what would be the first congressional override of a veto by Mr. Obama.

The bill, which was driven by the families of victims of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, would permit survivors or surviving relatives to sue countries they believe played a role in an attack in the U.S. The families have long sought the right to sue Saudi Arabia for any alleged role.

Mr. Obama has said allowing foreign governments to be sued over terrorist attacks would be detrimental to U.S. national security, because it would open up American service members, diplomats and companies to lawsuits overseas.

"I have deep sympathy for the families of the victims of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001," Mr. Obama wrote in his veto statement. But, he said, the legislation "would neither protect Americans from terrorist attacks nor improve the effectiveness of our response to such attacks."

Mr. Obama's decision touched off a scramble by the bill's proponents to override the veto. Meanwhile, the White House and a small group of lawmakers concerned about the legislation's ramifications on national security and U.S.-Saudi ties were continuing their long-shot effort to craft a compromise.

Congress is expected to amass the two-thirds majority in both chambers required to override a presidential veto. If lawmakers are successful, their first veto override during Mr. Obama's presidency would come four months before he concludes two terms in office.

Saudi Arabia strongly opposes the bill and has lobbied Congress to shift course.

The White House has put forward a proposal that would allow the president to issue a waiver to exempt some countries from the law's provisions. The proposal was rejected by the families of the Sept. 11 victims, who believe Mr. Obama would use it to shield Saudi Arabia.

Surviving relatives have accused Saudi Arabia of providing some type of support for the hijackers who carried out the attacks, 15 out of 19 of whom were Saudi. Riyadh has denied any role in the attacks and its position has been backed by U.S. officials.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee and Kristina Peterson

DETAILS

Subject:	Litigation; Victims of crime; Vetoes; Federal legislation; Terrorism; Legislation; National security
Location:	United States--US; Saudi Arabia
People:	Obama, Barack
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602290

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-obama-vetoes-bill-on-terror-lawsuits/docview/1822602290/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 35 of 500

World News: Diplomats Feud Over Syria's Busted Truce --- Top U.S. and Russian negotiators trade blame as others give voice to recriminations

Schwartz, Felicia . Schwartz, Felicia.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"Because of what the Russians are doing, there is a clear danger now that the political process could be derailed forever," said Anas Abdah, president of Syria's main political opposition group.\n

FULL TEXT

UNITED NATIONS -- After a cease-fire deal for Syria crumbled into full-scale warfare before the eyes of world leaders assembled at the United Nations this week, top U.S. and Russian officials on Friday remained at an impasse over how to revive it.

In a flurry of one-on-one talks and at broader meetings this week, Secretary of State John Kerry and his Russian counterpart, Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov, traded blame over who is responsible for the cease-fire's failure and who must act first to save it.

Meanwhile, Washington and Moscow both drew criticism from other quarters for their role in the resurgence of violence, as the U.N.'s envoy for Syria called its plight "the worst humanitarian tragedy since the Second World War."

Despite the return of large-scale military combat, Messrs. Kerry and Lavrov both indicated a willingness to pursue diplomacy, but announced no plans for another meeting. Mr. Lavrov said Friday that Russia agreed with the U.S. that there is "no military solution" to the five-year conflict, while Mr. Kerry said they had made "a little bit of progress" in brief talks. Neither offered specifics.

But the path back to calm in Syria seemed even murkier than when the officials arrived in New York earlier this week. The cease-fire took effect on Sept. 12, holding for several days before falling apart. One setback came Sept. 17, when the U.S. accidentally struck a Syrian military position, and escalated when an airstrike two days later hit a humanitarian convoy destined for Aleppo. U.S. officials have blamed Russia for the attack.

Obstacles have continued to appear ever since. On Thursday, as international powers with interests in the Syria conflict convened in New York to get the cease-fire back on track, the Assad regime announced the start of a fresh offensive in Aleppo.

On Friday, Mr. Lavrov appeared to reject a proposal by Mr. Kerry to ground all Syrian and Russian aircraft in Northern Syria as a show of good faith to get the cease-fire deal back on track.

Instead, Mr. Lavrov countered that the U.S. must do more to separate Islamist militant fighters from Syrian opposition forces backed by Washington. He said the U.S. had been unable to separate opposition fighters from terrorist groups, including the Syrian Conquest Front, formerly known as al Qaeda-affiliated Nusra Front.

On Thursday, Mr. Kerry said that without grounding combat aircraft, "we don't believe there is a point in making more promises or issuing more plans or announcing something that simply can't be enforced or reached."

Both Mr. Kerry and Mr. Lavrov have publicly questioned how much influence the other country has with its allies in the conflict, and tensions between the two big powers have increasingly spilled out into the open.

The U.S. and Russia are also facing heightening scrutiny from other countries eager to see the violence in Syria reduced. French Foreign Minister Jean-Marc Ayrault on Friday criticized the U.S. government's approach to the cease-fire deal.

"The Americans, who negotiated the deal with the Russians, have a special responsibility. Faced with the gravity of the situation, this responsibility takes a historic turn. We are asking them to rise to the occasion," Mr. Ayrault said during a news conference.

As the cease-fire broke down, U.S.-backed Syrian opposition members expressed frustration with U.S. efforts and said the resumption of fighting could have grave long-term consequences.

"Because of what the Russians are doing, there is a clear danger now that the political process could be derailed forever," said Anas Abdah, president of Syria's main political opposition group.

He also said the Obama administration wasn't doing enough to stand up to Russia and help enforce the cease-fire. "At this moment in time the current administration is very close to the election and it does not have a Plan B when it comes to Syria," he said.

Analysts said the deal reached in Geneva has faltered in part because the U.S. and Russia don't agree on what Syria should look like after a political transition.

"The Russians don't want [President Bashar al-]Assad to go; we are deluding ourselves in thinking they do," said

Andrew Tabler, a Syria expert at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy. "For them, Assad is the basis for a settlement in Syria."

Credit: By Felicia Schwartz

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Aircraft; Humanitarianism
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Syria
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602269
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-diplomats-feud-over-syrias-busted/docview/1822602269/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 36 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

OKLAHOMA Officer Charged in Shooting Is Booked The police officer charged with manslaughter in the shooting of an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla., surrendered to authorities Friday.

FULL TEXT

OKLAHOMA

Officer Charged in

Shooting Is Booked

The police officer charged with manslaughter in the shooting of an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla., surrendered to authorities Friday. Betty Shelby, 42 years old, was booked and released about 20 minutes later after posting $50,000 bond.

Ms. Shelby was charged with first-degree manslaughter on Thursday, less than a week after the fatal shooting of Terence Crutcher, 40, last Friday, which was caught on two widely circulated police videos.

A lawyer for Ms. Shelby has said she believed Mr. Crutcher posed a threat and was ignoring commands to stop moving and get on his knees, and that Ms. Shelby opened fire when he began to reach into his car window.

The police department said he wasn't armed and didn't have a weapon in his car.

-- Shibani Mahtani

MIDWEST

Heavy Rains Bring

Deaths, Mudslides

Flooding from heavy rains in some parts of the Upper Midwest over the past several days left two dead in Wisconsin and caused mudslides and evacuations in parts of northern Iowa and southern Minnesota.

The heavy rainfall caused smaller rivers to overflow their banks in the region, flooding homes and washing out roads. Mudslides were blamed for several highway accidents and one death when a home was washed from its foundation.

In Vernon County, Wis., Sheriff John B. Spears said a 53-year-old man was killed when a mudslide in Wheatland pushed his home down a hill onto a highway while he was inside.

The sheriff also said a 79-year-old man was killed in the town of Viroqua after trying to drive through floodwaters. The man was on his way to pick up cattle when his trailer jackknifed and water rose into the cabin.

Officials in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, were preparing for flooding on the Cedar River, local media reported, with Mayor Ron Corbett vowing the city wouldn't be caught unprepared, as it was in a devastating flood in 2008.

-- Kris Maher

DETAILS

Subject:	Shootings; Floods; Landslides & mudslides; Manslaughter; Roads & highways; Rain
Location:	Wisconsin; Iowa; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602268
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822602268/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 37 of 500

City News: City Comptroller Trades Sharp Jabs With de Blasio

Dawsey, Josh . Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

While the mayor's poll numbers have fallen amid investigations into his campaign-finance activities, they remain strong among likely Democratic voters and black voters, who overwhelmingly favor him.

FULL TEXT

New York City Comptroller Scott Stringer has privately unleashed fierce attacks on Mayor Bill de Blasio, a fellow Democrat, and told allies at parties and fundraisers that he would like to challenge the mayor in next year's election.

On Friday, after a 24-hour spat between the two men on a range of issues -- including homelessness and economic development -- Mr. Stringer delivered one of his sharpest public criticisms of the mayor, heightening speculation he may run against Mr. de Blasio in the September 2017 Democratic primary.

"What's breathtaking is the mayor's haplessness in solving major problems," Mr. Stringer said in an interview.

"Perhaps we'd be further along in the homelessness crisis if he paid attention to detail and he wouldn't have to rely on personal attacks."

Mr. de Blasio said earlier this week it was "breathtaking" how little Mr. Stringer, the city's chief financial officer, understood about affordable housing. On Friday, the mayor said Mr. Stringer was "grandstanding" for political gain.

"Stringer has never managed anything. That's why he never has any idea what he's talking about," said Eric Phillips, a spokesman for the mayor.

Asked about the possibility of a Stringer bid for mayor, Mr. Phillips said, "I can promise you that we aren't that lucky."

A spokesman for Mr. Stringer, Tyrone Stevens, said: "The words 'Bill de Blasio' and 'sound management' are not usually used in the same sentence."

In 2013, when Mr. de Blasio ran for mayor, he faced questions about his own management experience, but he argued that he had the credentials to run the nation's largest city.

Mr. Stringer oversees an office of about 700 employees as comptroller. When Mr. de Blasio was public advocate, his position before becoming mayor, he oversaw an office of 20 to 30 workers.

In a speech Thursday, Mr. Stringer criticized Mr. de Blasio for not moving quickly enough to reduce homelessness, not building enough affordable housing and taking too long to implement computer-science classes for all city public-school students, an initiative the mayor proposed last year.

Mr. de Blasio has promised to bring computer science to all classrooms but says it won't happen until 2025. Homelessness has risen during Mr. de Blasio's watch, with almost 60,000 people in shelters this week.

Running for mayor would be an uphill battle for Mr. Stringer, according to political observers. Mr. de Blasio has deep support among the city's labor unions.

While the mayor's poll numbers have fallen amid investigations into his campaign-finance activities, they remain strong among likely Democratic voters and black voters, who overwhelmingly favor him. The mayor hasn't been charged with any wrongdoing and has said he and his aides have followed all laws.

Mr. Stringer is known as a cautious, risk-averse politician, pulling out of the 2013 mayor's race when polls suggested he would lose.

The comptroller's aides have previously said Mr. Stringer plans to run for re-election next year, but in recent months Mr. Stringer has more seriously entertained the possibility of a 2017 mayoral bid.

Credit: By Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Mayors; Political campaigns; Comptrollers; Affordable housing
Business indexing term:	Subject: Comptrollers Affordable housing; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices

Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	de Blasio, Bill
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602267
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-comptroller-trades-sharp-jobs-with-de/docview/1822602267/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Phil Jackson 'Not Concerned' About Rose Rape Case

Herring, Chris . Herring, Chris.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

GREENBURGH, N.Y. -- Knicks president Phil Jackson on Friday declined to delve too deeply into Derrick Rose's pending civil trial for an alleged gang rape, saying he didn't expect the former NBA MVP to miss training camp or any regular-season games as a result of the lawsuit.

FULL TEXT

GREENBURGH, N.Y. -- Knicks president Phil Jackson on Friday declined to delve too deeply into Derrick Rose's pending civil trial for an alleged gang rape, saying he didn't expect the former NBA MVP to miss training camp or any regular-season games as a result of the lawsuit.

"We're going to let the process play out. We're not concerned," Jackson said.

Speaking at a news conference alongside Knicks coach Jeff Hornacek and general manager Steve Mills, Jackson also suggested that the point guard, who was acquired in a June trade, wasn't very worried about the lawsuit and a looming trial.

"We understand this is a serious subject we're talking about, but this has to be done outside our control. It's something we can't control, so Derrick has expressed that he's not concerned about it, and we're going to leave it at that. He's quite aware of it, but it's not keeping him up at night, so we're going to leave it at that."

On Tuesday, a federal judge in California ruled that the plaintiff accusing Rose and two other men of raping her would not be able to remain anonymous should the civil lawsuit go to trial next month. That trial is slated to begin Oct. 4, the same day the Knicks open their preseason schedule in Houston.

The woman, publicly identified as Jane Doe to this point, alleges in her suit that Rose and two of his friends sexually assaulted her in 2013 after forcing their way into her home while she was intoxicated. Rose and his representatives have countered that the woman let the men in, and that the sex was consensual.

"We're going to let the due process of the justice system work its way through here in the next week and a half or so," Jackson said Friday. "We want to put this to rest. There doesn't need to be a lot of talk about this."

Asked how much he looked into Rose's legal case before acquiring him from the Chicago Bulls after last season, Jackson declined to comment.

The Knicks will hold their first training-camp practice this coming Tuesday. They're scheduled to open the 2016-17 regular season Oct. 25 in Cleveland against the Cavaliers.

Credit: By Chris Herring

DETAILS

Subject:	Court decisions; Professional basketball; Sex crimes; Rape
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71121 : Spectator Sports
Location:	California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Chicago Bulls; NAICS: 711211
Classification:	71121: Spectator Sports
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Section:	Sports
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602265
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/phil-jackson-not-concerned-about-rose-rape-case/docview/1822602265/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 39 of 500

U.S. News -- The Numbers: Fiscal Year Change No Fix for Funding Feuds

Jo Craven McGinty . Jo Craven McGinty.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Once upon a time, Congress thought that if it had a few extra months to work on the federal budget, it would have sufficient time to iron out political differences and agree on a timely budget resolution. Changing the calendar would require a company to alter accounting systems, among other things, and if it is publicly traded, it would have to record the modification with regulators and ensure there were no gaps in its financial reports.

FULL TEXT

Once upon a time, Congress thought that if it had a few extra months to work on the federal budget, it would have sufficient time to iron out political differences and agree on a timely budget resolution.

To that end, the legislators moved the start of the government fiscal year from July 1 to Oct. 1, but since 1976 when the change took effect, failures to pass new spending bills have caused all or part of the government to shut down at least a dozen times.

Right now, Congress looks like it may again miss the deadline to reach a new spending agreement before current funding expires at midnight on Sept. 30.

The deadline used to be December. From the beginning of the Republic until 1843, the federal government's fiscal year aligned with the calendar year.

"They tried to get home as much as possible for the beginning of the planting season," said Richard Kogan, an expert at the Center for Budget and Policy Priorities, referring to the nation's earliest elected officials. "If they missed the spring planting, they wanted to be home for fall harvest. That still left enough time to get appropriations enacted and have the government up and running by Jan. 1."

Mr. Kogan noted that travel was more laborious at the time; nonetheless, Congress decided in 1843 it could get things done more quickly and moved the start of the fiscal year up to July 1.

"As long as Congress was capable of doing its job in an orderly fashion, the question was why wait to receive money until January?" Mr. Kogan said. "Agencies could take their appropriations and dive in. Policy changes could be implemented more quickly without any apparent cost."

That schedule worked fine until around the middle of the last century when the government had grown increasingly complex.

"There were more things to consider, more things to argue about, more things to cause problems," Mr. Kogan said. "More and more appropriations bills, one or two or three, or potentially all of them, were not done by July 1."

At the time, the president was required to submit his budget proposal by the first Monday in January, having six months of data from the current fiscal year to review. Members of Congress, many of whom were now full-time policy makers, decided that if they pushed the start of the fiscal year to Oct. 1, they would have three additional months to forge a deal.

"The president could make do with three months of information instead of six," Mr. Kogan said. "It would give Congress more time to deal with a more complex world, and yet it would give the president enough time to prepare a budget. It seemed like a net gain for Congress without being a problem for the president."

The administration negotiated an extra month, so the cushion turned out to be two extra months, with legislators having from the first Monday in February, the president's new deadline, until Oct. 1 to broker a budget.

Congress's strategy of adopting an off-calendar fiscal year isn't unique. About 27% of the publicly traded companies registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission do the same thing, according to data assembled by Audit Analytics.

Private-sector fiscal years originally emerged around seasonal patterns. Historically, for example, agriculture's fiscal year followed the planting and harvest cycle, which provided a clear beginning and end to a farmer's financial year. Similarly, retailers often end their fiscal year in January or February to capture holiday sales in their end-of-year tallies.

That long of a delay may no longer be necessary, given the speed and transparency with which financial statements are now published.

"A lot of companies close their books within a week of the end of the year," said Adam Weissenberg, the clients and industry audit leader for Deloitte. "You don't need the lag. As long as everyone in your sector is doing the same thing, you're fine."

It's useful for competing companies to follow the same fiscal calendar for the sake of comparison, and most of the 75 members of the Retail Industry Leaders Association, including Wal-Mart Stores Inc., Target Corp. and Sears Holdings Corp., end their fiscal years in January or February, according to Brian A. Dodge, a spokesman for the trade group.

"There's not a compelling reason to move away from it," Mr. Dodge said.

Changing the calendar would require a company to alter accounting systems, among other things, and if it is publicly traded, it would have to record the modification with regulators and ensure there were no gaps in its financial reports. Few publicly traded companies go to the trouble.

As for the government, although its deadline is a week away, Congress hasn't yet agreed on a budget.

Makes you wonder what they've been doing with all that extra time.

Credit: By Jo Craven McGinty

DETAILS

Subject:	Appropriations; Federal budget; Fiscal years; Budgets; Presidents; Calendars
Business indexing term:	Subject: Appropriations Federal budget Fiscal years Budgets; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Company / organization:	Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602263
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-numbers-fiscal-year-change-no-fix/docview/1822602263/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 40 of 500

World News: Criminal Link in Pyongyang Probe

Chun Han Wong . Chun Han Wong.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A Chinese businesswoman under U.S. scrutiny for her alleged role in aiding North Korea's nuclear program is also a suspect in a Chinese criminal investigation into her trading business, a corporate filing shows.

FULL TEXT

BEIJING -- A Chinese businesswoman under U.S. scrutiny for her alleged role in aiding North Korea's nuclear program is also a suspect in a Chinese criminal investigation into her trading business, a corporate filing shows.

Friday's disclosure about Ma Xiaohong is the first to tie her to a criminal investigation. Police in the northeastern Chinese province of Liaoning said this month that they were investigating the trading firm that Ms. Ma founded, Hongxiang Industrial Development Co., for alleged "serious economic crimes," without naming her.

In a stock-exchange filing, Liaoning Darong Technology Co. said it hadn't been able to reach Ms. Ma, who chairs its supervisory board, since the company learned of the criminal probe. It didn't specify when it found out.

Ms. Ma is the second-largest shareholder in Darong, an information-technology firm. In Friday's filing with a Beijing-based exchange for mostly smaller companies, Darong said Ms. Ma's situation hasn't yet affected its operations but could have a "negative impact" on the firm.

The investigation into Ms. Ma and her company appears to mark a new effort by U.S. and Chinese authorities to pursue Chinese businesses that are suspected of supporting North Korea's nuclear-weapons program. The U.S. and China have often sparred over how best to rein in North Korea.

Liaoning police announced their investigation after prosecutors from the U.S. Department of Justice made two trips to Beijing last month to alert Chinese officials about alleged activities by Ms. Ma and Hongxiang Industrial, The Wall Street Journal reported this week.

The Justice Department cited alleged evidence that the businesswoman and her company had aided Pyongyang's nuclear program and its efforts to evade United Nations and Western sanctions, according to U.S. officials.

In a report released this week, researchers from nonprofit groups in the U.S. and South Korea say Hongxiang Industrial's trade with North Korea includes goods that have both civilian and military purposes, including applications in nuclear-weapons development.

Chinese authorities in recent weeks have frozen certain assets held by Hongxiang and Ms. Ma, including her and her family's holdings in Darong, which offers mapping and other geographic data services.

It isn't known if the Liaoning police probe is related to the U.S. allegations.

Ms. Ma, a Communist Party member, founded Hongxiang Industrial in 2000 to trade commercial goods with North Korea. She grew her business into a conglomerate, Liaoning Hongxiang Industrial Group, with some 680 employees covering interests in cross-border trade, hotels and tourism.

Attempts to reach Ms. Ma were unsuccessful. Yao Jizhou, a Hongxiang Industrial official and assistant to Ms. Ma, declined to comment.

Darong has commercial dealings and overlapping personnel with Hongxiang Industrial, according to corporate filings. This year, Darong borrowed 9.75 million yuan ($1.5 million) from Hongxiang Industrial, those filings show.

Junya Qian in Shanghai contributed to this article.

Credit: By Chun Han Wong

DETAILS

Subject:	Nuclear weapons; Criminal investigations
Location:	United States--US; North Korea
People:	Ma Xiaohong
Company / organization:	Name: Xiaohong Industrial Development Co; NAICS: 423810; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602262
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-criminal-link-pyongyang-probe/docview/1822602262/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 41 of 500

REVIEW --- My Week: On the Road Again

Offerman, Nick . Offerman, Nick.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A recent summer Sunday finds me in Kentucky, on the Trimble County farm of my friends Mary Berry and Steve Smith, discussing, among other topics, their fearsome free-range chickens, their efforts to rescue American agriculture, and dishwashing etiquette then and now.

FULL TEXT

The good news is that my wife (comedy legend and astonishing beauty Megan Mullally) and I are lucky enough to be getting work in show business. The bad news is that our jobs tend to occur in places like London and Calgary and Atlanta and Austin. All splendid cities, sure, lousy with barbecue and delicious craft-brewed beer joints, but they all share one glaring deficit: Our house isn't there.

We spend too many nights on the road. We miss our pillows (her) and our table saw (me), and I pine for my grill like a faraway high-school sweetheart. We're never in any given place long enough even to consider one of the greatest joys in a successful marriage: starting a jigsaw puzzle. The fact that we often stay in very nice hotels doesn't end the sense of dislocation; it only upgrades it from "hardship" to "champagne problem."

A recent summer Sunday finds me in Kentucky, on the Trimble County farm of my friends Mary Berry and Steve Smith, discussing, among other topics, their fearsome free-range chickens, their efforts to rescue American agriculture, and dishwashing etiquette then and now. (I have long felt that the mechanized dishwasher has eradicated one of the best opportunities for conversation in the domestic arena -- historically the chance for the washer to tell the dryer all of the day's news.) As the sun begins to set, we head to Louisville for a screening of "Look and See," Laura Dunn's excellent forthcoming documentary about my favorite writer and Mary's dad, Wendell Berry, which I co-produced. It goes over like fresh sweet corn, buttered and salted, fresh from the pot.

On Monday, I fly early to Minneapolis, where I'm due out in the woods at the set of an indie film called "The House of Tomorrow." I have already shot most of my role, but they need me back for the big finale, which is scheduled to take all night. This low-budget film, by writer-director Peter Livolsi, is made on a scale that I adore: It reminds me of the small Chicago theater companies where I cut my teeth, particularly the much-missed Defiant Theatre.

They're shooting a punk-rock show sequence first, and as so often happens with these things, it takes too long, despite the effortless talents of youngster actors Asa Butterfield, Maude Apatow and Alex Wolff -- so it's around 4 a.m. before they need me and the breathtaking Ellen Burstyn to do our bit. This isn't Ellen's first rodeo, and the rest of us turn in terrible performances as we gape at the master class she's conducting. She is a goddess of American drama for good reason, and a gripping scene with her is reason enough to hie ourselves to the deep woods of Minnesota and get paid in Kind bars.

We finish up in a rush, and I hustle to the airport to fly to D.C. Having caught a solid 90 minutes of sleep, I am reunited with Megan at the White House, and boy howdy, if you think she looks good usually, you oughta see her when you are sleep-deprived. Angelic don't begin to do her justice.

We're in Washington to shoot a comedy video with none other than Michelle Obama. Oh, and it requires a procession of period exercise outfits, including Olivia Newton-John's exact get-up from her 1981 "Let's Get Physical" video. On me. I meet the first lady for the first time in that very leotard and legwarmers. She appears to Megan and myself like a superhero, in black spandex workout gear. We are all giggling like schoolchildren at the fun we're having in support of Let's Move!, her signature exercise initiative. It's all a little surreal; Megan and I feel like a couple of very lucky kids to share some of the first lady's valuable time and Gatorade.

Not every week is this goofy, but enough of them are crammed to the point that we've promised each other to slow down our roll. Once I finish my book tour this fall, my calendar has several weeks that contain only the words "puzzle" and "grill."

Mr. Offerman played Ron Swanson on NBC's "Parks and Recreation." His new book, "Good Clean Fun: Misadventures in Sawdust at Offerman Woodshop," will be published Oct. 18 by Dutton.

Credit: By Nick Offerman

DETAILS

Subject:	Motion pictures; Etiquette; First ladies
Location:	Atlanta Georgia; Calgary Alberta Canada; United States--US; Canada
People:	Butterfield, Asa; Berry, Wendell (1934-)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Busin ess And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602257
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-my-week-on-road-again/docview/1822602257/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 42 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

NEW YORK CITY De Blasio to Stump For Hillary Clinton Mayor Bill de Blasio is heading to Wisconsin on Saturday to campaign for Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, according to a person familiar with the matter.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK CITY

De Blasio to Stump

For Hillary Clinton

Mayor Bill de Blasio is heading to Wisconsin on Saturday to campaign for Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, according to a person familiar with the matter.

Mr. de Blasio, a Democrat, plans to visit two predominantly black churches in Milwaukee and make media appearances for Mrs. Clinton before returning to New York late Sunday, this person said.

He is expected to criticize Republican nominee Donald Trump for his recent comments on the stop-and-frisk police tactic, which Mr. Trump said should be implemented across the country.

Mr. de Blasio will be accompanied by his wife, Chirlane McCray, and the Clinton campaign is paying for the trip. A spokesman for Mrs. Clinton said the campaign was "extremely grateful" for Mr. de Blasio's visit.

-- Josh Dawsey

NEW YORK

Officials: 25 Indicted

In Record Drug Bust

Authorities have made a record drug bust, seizing 33 kilograms of heroin and 2 kilograms of fentanyl, Attorney General Eric Schneiderman and the New York State Police said Friday.

Mr. Schneiderman's office said the seizure is the largest ever in the 46-year history of New York's Organized Crime Task Force. The investigation was called "Operation Dirty Dope" and led to the disruption of what Mr. Schneiderman's office called an alleged national heroin smuggling ring.

Twenty-five individuals living in New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Arizona and New Jersey have been indicted in connection with the case.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Smuggling; Nominations; Candidates; Political campaigns; Heroin
Location:	Wisconsin; United States--US
People:	McCray, Chirlane; Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: State Police-New York; NAICS: 922120; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602256
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1822602256/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-12-31
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 43 of 500

City News -- Metro Money: Rockaways Block Has Seen Better Days

Kadet, Anne . Kadet, Anne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Come rain and high tide, he said, water rushes up from the storm sewer, trapping residents in their homes. Lisa Wilson, a security guard who receives Section 8 housing assistance and moved there last year, said the real-estate broker who steered her to the apartment never mentioned the flooding.

FULL TEXT

I got my first look at Beach 84th Street in the Rockaways entirely by happenstance. Wandering the area for fun last fall, I turned the corner and -- whoa.

Between the torn-up road, trashy vacant lots and boarded-up homes, I'd never seen a block in such rough shape. I couldn't believe I was in New York City.

A few weeks ago, I returned to check my recollection. Surely, my memory was exaggerated.

Nope. The empty lots are still filled with 4-foot weeds, rubble and busted machinery.

Elsewhere on the block, the sidewalk had crumbled and caved into the sewer below. A shadowy haunted house loomed over a mass of fallen power lines unspooling over the roadbed.

When I tripped over a fence pole blocking the sidewalk, several stoop-sitters called out to see if I was OK. We got to chatting about the block.

"You should see it when it floods," said a young man in a ball cap, who declined to give his name. Come rain and high tide, he said, water rushes up from the storm sewer, trapping residents in their homes.

"I'm the one who opens the drains," he said, noting a gaping manhole. "If I didn't, we'd be stuck upstairs for hours."

I continued my little journey. The shipyards on the bay end, still choked with superstorm Sandy debris, look more like junkyards.

The block's surprise ending: a picturesque pier topped by 18 bungalows, mostly boarded up.

Another local saw me taking notes and waved me over. Craig Marinucci told me his family has lived on the block since the 1920s, when it was lined by gracious houses with big front porches.

The flooding started in the 1950s, he said, when the city installed a new storm sewer. It's been downhill ever since.

"They call this the block that time forgot," Mr. Marinucci said.

The street, it turns out, is a neighborhood legend.

"It's like you're in Haiti," said Claudia Steinberg, a community volunteer who owns a bungalow around the corner. "You see the kids playing in the puddles, the half-paved road, it's so desolate."

"It's kind of a weird situation," said Jonathan Gaska, district manager of Queens Community Board 14, which encompasses the area.

The problem, he said, is that unlike the surrounding streets, Beach 84th is several feet below grade. It would cost a fortune to raise the roadbed, and he believes the city is reluctant to invest in a block that's already half-abandoned.

A spokesman for the mayor's office said the city has no immediate plans to raise the roadbed.

Over the years, investors and developers saw opportunity in the block's declining property values, Mr. Marinucci said. They bragged about a special contact with the mayor's office who would fix the flooding problem. Eventually they gave up and sold, he said.

No surprise, every lot has a story behind it. A 20-unit townhouse complex is being sold in an online auction. An apartment building completed in 2007 has yet to welcome its first tenant. Half the block's lots are vacant, including five owned by the city.

Why would anyone live on this street? Lisa Wilson, a security guard who receives Section 8 housing assistance and moved there last year, said the real-estate broker who steered her to the apartment never mentioned the flooding.

"This is where they put the poor people," she said. "They know what time it is. They know how this block is."

Some renters are working to improve things. Rhuanda "Wanda" McDowell and her husband, Joseph Logan, both carpenters, spent days clearing trash from two city-owned lots.

They spent two years rallying community support, including waging a campaign to have the lots designated a community garden where children have a safe place to play. The city, however, would only say that it "looks forward to working with the community to determine how the parcels will be utilized."

Mr. Marinucci said that at this point, he just wants the holes in the road filled. In response to his request, however, the transportation department wrote that a repaving job was "beyond their scope of maintenance."

It's hard to imagine this state of affairs in Manhattan or brownstone Brooklyn. But this is just a dead-end street in the Rockaways.

Brett Scudder, a community activist who left the area after Sandy but still has family on what he refers to as "that crazy little block," says his best hope now is to find a new home for his loved ones.

"It doesn't sound to me," he says, "like there's going to be a fix."

Credit: By Anne Kadet

DETAILS

Subject:	Stormwater; Community support
Location:	New York; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602255
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-metro-money-rockaways-block-has-seen/docview/1822602255/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 44 of 500

U.S. News: Corruption Case Deals N.Y. Governor a Blow

Orden, Erica; Dawsey, Josh . Orden, Erica; Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

For Mr. Cuomo, a second-term Democrat, the episode is the biggest crisis since he took office in 2011, both because it involves loyalists whom he entrusted with great authority and because it is directly tied to a signature economic-development program.

FULL TEXT

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo suffered a serious political setback this week when federal prosecutors charged his former top aide and eight others connected to him with participating in a bribery scheme that exploited his administration for personal gain.

For Mr. Cuomo, a second-term Democrat, the episode is the biggest crisis since he took office in 2011, both because it involves loyalists whom he entrusted with great authority and because it is directly tied to a signature economic-development program.

"There's clearly damage to him personally and politically," said Richard Brodsky, a Democrat and a former New York state assemblyman.

Preet Bharara, the U.S. attorney in Manhattan who brought the case, has described Albany as a "cauldron of corruption," and his office has brought corruption charges against a dozen state lawmakers since 2009. The majority of those cases, including last year's prosecutions of the leaders of both chambers of the Legislature, ended in convictions.

The charges this week mark the first time Mr. Bharara's office has alleged criminal activity within Mr. Cuomo's administration. The governor, who took office vowing to clean up Albany, wasn't named in the case.

The charges center on one of Mr. Cuomo's closest friends, Joseph Percoco, who for years served as a senior aide in the governor's administration and was his two-time campaign manager.

Mr. Percoco is accused of accepting more than $315,000 in bribes. His attorney described the case as an "overreach of classic proportions" and said Mr. Percoco will plead not guilty.

On Friday, Mr. Cuomo said that "the allegations are truly, truly disappointing." But he insisted the case would have no effect on his plans to run for re-election in 2018.

George Arzt, a New York-based political consultant, said the case will be a factor if Mr. Cuomo runs, but he suggested the governor could fend it off by committing himself to ethics changes. "He has two years to become a strong champion of ethics reform," he said.

In recent years, Mr. Cuomo, once believed to have White House ambitions, has made few gestures in that direction and has kept his sights on his home state, including limiting his participation on the 2016 campaign trail.

Mike Vilensky contributed to this article.

Credit: By Erica Orden and Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Governors; Bribery; Corruption; State elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Cuomo, Andrew M
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602253
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-corruption-case-deals-n-y-governor-blow/docview/1822602253/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government ins titutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Family of Man Shot by Officer Releases Video

Bauerlein, Valerie . Bauerlein, Valerie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Police Chief Kerr Putney said there are no immediate plans to release officer body-cam and dash-cam video footage of the shooting, which has sparked violent protests in the city.

FULL TEXT

CHARLOTTE, N.C. -- The family of Keith Lamont Scott, a black man who was fatally shot by police Tuesday, released a cellphone camera video his wife said she made during the encounter with police.

The video, released to MSNBC Friday, shows an officer repeatedly commanding Mr. Scott to "Drop the gun," with his wife, Rakeyia, shouting, "He has no weapon."

She also can be heard saying "he has a T.B.I.," or traumatic brain injury, and that "he just took his medicine." The video doesn't answer the question of whether Mr. Scott was armed, however.

The Charlotte Police Department didn't immediately respond to a request for comment. Police Chief Kerr Putney said there are no immediate plans to release officer body-cam and dash-cam video footage of the shooting, which has sparked violent protests in the city.

Chief Putney acknowledged public demands for the footage. But he said it is only one piece of evidence -- adding that it doesn't provide definitive proof that Mr. Scott was wielding a gun in a threatening manner, as police had previously said.

The city has been in turmoil since Tuesday afternoon, when Mr. Scott was shot and killed by a Charlotte-Mecklenburg police officer in the parking lot of his apartment complex.

Speaking of the footage at a Friday news conference, Chief Putney said, "The intent is to get it out and released in a package so it could be consumed and fully understood."

"If I were to put it out indiscriminately, and it doesn't give you good context, it can inflame the situation and make it even worse," he said. The chief also noted that decisions on releasing police video are no longer his, as the State Bureau of Investigation took over the case late Thursday.

The Scott family has called for release of the police video for "the greater good and transparency." But family lawyer Justin Bamberg, who watched the video late Thursday, also said the footage doesn't definitively bolster the Scott family's contention that Mr. Scott was holding a book, not a gun. He added it does raise "more questions than answers."

Credit: By Valerie Bauerlein

DETAILS

Subject:	Deadly force; Video recordings
People:	Scott, Keith Lamont
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 24, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822602234
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-family-man-shot-officer-releases-video/docview/1822602234/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 46 of 500

World News: France Raps Belgians for Moving Migrants Across Border

Dalton, Matthew; Steinhauser, Gabriele . Dalton, Matthew; Steinhauser, Gabriele.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"The aim is to force the Belgian interior minister to come and explain to us what he has agreed with his French counterpart," said Vincent Gilles, president of one of Belgium's main police unions, "so we can make sure our officers aren't breaking the law."

FULL TEXT

France summoned Belgium's ambassador in Paris on Thursday, after detaining two Belgian police officers on French territory for allegedly depositing migrants across the countries' border.

The incident has raised concerns in Paris about Belgian police operations to close the border to migrants coming from France.

Disputes over handling migrant applications have become a persistent source of tension across Europe, as the region processes huge numbers of people arriving from the Middle East and Africa.

"We will have an explanation," said Stephane Le Foll, spokesman for the French government. "It will surely be frank and clear."

In Belgium, police complained about the treatment of the Belgian officers, who were interrogated for four hours without an attorney.

They also threatened to go on strike unless the Belgian government explains whether its border enforcement procedures are legal.

"The aim is to force the Belgian interior minister to come and explain to us what he has agreed with his French counterpart," said Vincent Gilles, president of one of Belgium's main police unions, "so we can make sure our officers aren't breaking the law."

Mr. Gilles said the police were carrying out Operation Medusa, a year-old effort by Belgium to close its border to migrants coming from France. Over the past year, Belgian police have detained 2,500 migrants and taken them to the French border.

"Out of humanity, we always ask them where they want to go," he said.

This time, the police accidentally went some 50 yards into French territory, where they were stopped by an unmarked French police car.

Credit: Matthew Dalton, Gabriele Steinhauser

DETAILS

Subject:	Refugees; Territorial issues
Location:	France; Belgium
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822358973
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-france-raps-belgians-moving-migrants/docview/1822358973/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 47 of 500

Ex-Cuomo Associates Charged --- U.S. attorney details alleged plots involving economic programs; shows Albany's graft

Erica Orden; Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Orden, Erica; Rebecca Davis O'Brien . Erica Orden; Rebecca Davis O'Brien; Orden, Erica; Rebecca Davis O'Brien.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to the allegations in the complaint, Messrs. Kaloyeros and Howe conspired with executives at two companies --

FULL TEXT

Corrections & Amplifications

Joseph Percoco, a former aide to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo, is charged with soliciting and accepting more than a combined $315,000 in bribes from two different companies. An article Friday incorrectly said federal prosecutors had accused Mr. Percoco of taking $315,000 in bribes from one company and $35,000 from a second company.

(WSJ Sept. 27, 2016)

A former top aide to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo and the president of a state university were among nine people charged by federal prosecutors Thursday in two wide-ranging bribery, bid-rigging and extortion schemes involving some of the governor's signature economic-development programs.

The sweeping scope of the charges and the details of the allegations contained in the 80-page complaint filed by U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara's office represent a vigorous censure of the culture of state government that has long been derided as corrupt.

They also laid bare -- in intimate detail -- the mechanics of power among some in Mr. Cuomo's orbit. "Ziti" was code for cash. "Herb" was an affectionate nickname. And "Fat Man" was the preferred moniker for a businessman seeking access to state resources.

"Today's complaint shines a light on yet another sordid side of the show-me-the-money culture that has so plagued government in Albany," Mr. Bharara said at a news conference.

At the heart of the charges was the former aide, Joseph Percoco, once one of the most powerful officials in state government who for decades was also Mr. Cuomo's closest friend. Prosecutors allege Mr. Percoco accepted more than $315,000 in bribes and other perks, including a Hamptons fishing trip, in exchange for using his official position to perform valuable favors for an energy company, and $35,000 more in bribes from a Syracuse-based developer.

An attorney for Mr. Percoco, Barry Bohrer, said his client would plead not guilty, calling the charges "based on information provided by someone of utterly unreliable credibility" and describing the case as an "overreach of classic proportions."

"Mr. Percoco performed services honestly and within the bounds of the law at all times," Mr. Bohrer said.

The charges were based in part on the account of Todd Howe, a lobbyist and former associate of the Cuomo administration, who pleaded guilty earlier this week in a cooperation agreement to eight counts including extortion, conspiracy and wire fraud. A lawyer for Mr. Howe said: "Mr. Howe has accepted responsibility for his actions and will testify truthfully if called upon."

Both Messrs. Percoco and Howe were known as trusted hands in Mr. Cuomo's administration, and on Thursday the governor said in a statement that he was "saddened and profoundly disappointed" by the allegations.

"If anything, a friend should be held to an even higher standard," said Mr. Cuomo, a Democrat. "Like my father before me, I believe public integrity is paramount. This sort of breach, if true, should be and will be punished."

In all, the complaint represented a devastating political blow for the governor, who took office in 2011 vowing to clean up Albany and now, according to the allegations, appears to have surrounded himself with allies who were exploiting his administration for their own personal gain.

Also among those charged Thursday was Alain Kaloyeros, president of the State University of New York Polytechnic Institute, who through his position in state government has overseen hundreds of millions of dollars in state contracts and funding for projects in upstate New York.

Mr. Kaloyeros, who was suspended Thursday from his position without pay, is at the center of the other alleged scheme. He appeared in court Thursday to face a count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud but like the others didn't have to enter a plea.

According to the allegations in the complaint, Messrs. Kaloyeros and Howe conspired with executives at two companies -- Syracuse-based COR Development Co. LLC and Buffalo-based construction firm LPCiminelli -- to rig the bidding process for a massive state-financed redevelopment project known as the Buffalo Billion.

Both firms paid bribes to Mr. Howe disguised as consultancy payments, according to the complaint. In exchange, Messrs. Howe and Kaloyeros secretly doctored bid solicitations to force a SUNY-related entity into awarding lucrative contracts to the firms, prosecutors alleged.

In emails to Mr. Kaloyeris, Mr. Howe described both firms as "friends" of the governor because of their generous campaign contributions, some of which, prosecutors said, came at Mr. Howe's direction.

"Dr. Kaloyeris is innocent of the charges filed against him, and very much looks forward to being exonerated," said Michael Miller, a lawyer for Mr. Kaloyeris.

Three executives at LPCiminelli -- Louis Ciminelli, Michael Laipple and Kevin Schuler -- were among those charged Thursday. Two COR executives -- the company's president, Steven Aiello, and its general counsel, Joseph Gerardi -- were also charged.

Lawyers for Messrs. Ciminelli, Laipple and Schuler couldn't be reached for comment, and a lawyer for LPCiminelli didn't respond to a request for comment. Lawyers for Messrs. Aiello and Gerardi couldn't be reached for comment; a spokeswoman for COR didn't respond to a request for comment.

In the complaint, prosecutors allege that Mr. Percoco and his wife, Lisa Toscano-Percoco, accepted bribes from COR and another company, both clients of Mr. Howe, in exchange for using Mr. Percoco's official position to influence state actions in their favor. Ms. Toscano-Percoco declined to comment.

Mr. Percoco served as executive deputy secretary to the governor but left state service for a period in 2014, when he worked as Mr. Cuomo's re-election campaign manager. During that time, however, he effectively continued to function as a state employee, the complaint alleges.

Prosecutors allege that COR paid Mr. Percoco $35,000 in bribes, concealed by routing them through Mr. Howe's consulting firm, although Mr. Percoco later listed those payments as coming from COR on his state financial disclosure form.

In exchange for these payments, according to the complaint, Mr. Percoco used his position and influence to help COR, including helping to reverse a state agency ruling that might have required the company to enter into a costly labor agreement on a multimillion-dollar project in Syracuse.

Mr. Percoco also helped secure a pay raise for COR president's son, who at the time worked in the governor's office for Mr. Percoco, the complaint alleges. That came after Mr. Aiello texted Mr. Howe saying his son "bust his ass, loyal as the day is long," according to an exchanged excerpted in the complaint, and Mr. Howe forwarded the text to Mr. Percoco, who subsequently pressured a state agency to execute the raise.

Also at Mr. Percoco's encouragement, an energy company executive arranged for Ms. Toscano-Percoco to receive more than $287,000 in payments, disguised as a salary for a teaching job that required her to do little work, prosecutors alleged. That job was further disguised on Mr. Percoco's state financial disclosure forms as coming from an untraceable LLC in the name of a consultant who had worked for the company.

In exchange, Mr. Percoco helped secure a state contract to help finance a $900 million power plant that the company, Competitive Power Ventures, was building in Wawayanda, N.Y., among other official acts, prosecutors alleged.

The CPV executive, Peter Galbraith Kelly Jr., was charged with conspiracy to commit honest services wire fraud and payment of bribes and gratuities. Mr. Kelly's attorney couldn't be reached for comment.

The charges against Messrs. Percoco, Kaloyeros, Howe and others marked the first time Mr. Bharara's office has alleged criminal activity within the Cuomo administration, although the charges don't include the governor himself.

Since 2009, Mr. Bharara's office has brought public-corruption cases against a dozen state lawmakers, including last year's prosecution of the former leaders of the Senate and Assembly. The vast majority of those cases, including the ones against the legislative leaders, ended in conviction.

"It turns out the state Legislature does not have any kind of monopoly on crass corruption in New York," Mr. Bharara said.

Mike Vilensky contributed to this article.

Credit: By Erica Orden and Rebecca Davis O'Brien

DETAILS

Subject:	Wire fraud; Colleges & universities; Bids; Extortion; Conspiracy; Public prosecutors; State government; Governors; Labor contracts; Financial disclosure; Government agencies; Attorneys; Power; Corruption; Campaign contributions; Presidents; State elections
Business indexing term:	Subject: Labor contracts Financial disclosure; Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools 92111 : Executive Offices 54111 : Offices of Lawyers 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Bharara, Preet
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools; 92111: Executive Offices; 54111: Offices of Lawyers; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822328154
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/ex-cuomo-associates-charged-u-s-attorney-details/docview/1822328154/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 48 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Wall Street banks' fees from equity deals have fallen to their lowest level in more than 20 years, as firms opt for cheap private funding. ---

FULL TEXT

Yahoo said "state sponsored" hackers penetrated its network in late 2014 and stole personal data on over 500 million users.

Wall Street banks' fees from equity deals have fallen to their lowest level in more than 20 years, as firms opt for cheap private funding.

Big ad buyers and marketers are upset with Facebook after learning the firm vastly overestimated average viewing time for video ads.

Bonds rallied for a second day as renewed central-bank commitments to easy policies curtailed investors' fear of a "taper tantrum."

U.S. stocks extended gains, with the Dow industrials climbing 98.76 points, or 0.5%, to 18392.46.

Airbnb brought on Google Capital as a backer in a funding round that values the company at $30 billion.

Maersk said it would split its operations into two separate divisions focused on transport and energy.

The WTO ruled that European governments had failed to end unfair state subsidies to Airbus.

Harvard's endowment posted a 2% loss for fiscal 2016 and warned future returns could be "muted."

Stock picker Marsico has bailed out his investment firm, buying "substantially all" of its debt.

DETAILS

Subject:	Funding; Investment bankers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Investment bankers; Industry: 52315 : Investment Banking and Securities Intermediation
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Yahoo Inc; NAICS: 516210, 519290; Name: World Trade Organization; NAICS: 928120

Classification:	52315: Investment Banking and Securities Intermediation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822328152
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1822328152/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Thomas MacMillan --- ATLANTIC CITY Ads Pulled for N.J. Casino Expansion The two main backers of a campaign to allow casinos in northern New Jersey said Thursday they had suspended their paid media advertisements, citing internal and external polling that showed little appetite among the state's voters for gambling expansion outside Atlantic City.

FULL TEXT

RIKERS ISLAND

New Prosecution

Bureau at Rikers

The Bronx district attorney's office on Thursday unveiled a new prosecution bureau on Rikers Island, a move officials said would cut crime and violence inside the New York City jail complex.

The bureau, housed in a trailer next to a facility for juvenile offenders at Rikers, will start with a staff of 14 including investigators and assistant district attorneys, Bronx District Attorney Darcel Clark said. It will handle the investigation and processing of all inmate-on-inmate, inmate-on-staff and visitor crimes, such as contraband smuggling, that happen at the jail complex, Ms. Clark said.

The goal, she said, is "to transform Rikers Island from a notorious symbol of violence and corruption to a place where people are treated humanely and where people can work and visit safely."

The new bureau is funded by $1.8 million of the $11.5 million allocated for the Bronx district attorney's office in the city budget, Ms. Clark said.

-- Thomas MacMillan

ATLANTIC CITY

Ads Pulled for N.J.

Casino Expansion

The two main backers of a campaign to allow casinos in northern New Jersey said Thursday they had suspended their paid media advertisements, citing internal and external polling that showed little appetite among the state's voters for gambling expansion outside Atlantic City.

Billionaire investor Paul Fireman and real estate tycoon Jeff Gural had promised to invest billions in building two casinos on the Jersey City waterfront and at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford. The two men issued their announcement in a joint written statement.

After years of debate on the issue and months of political wrangling, the New Jersey legislature voted in January to hold a Nov. 8 ballot referendum asking voters if gambling parlors should be allowed outside Atlantic City.

-- Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	District attorneys; Juvenile offenders; Legalized gambling; Prisons; Casinos
Business indexing term:	Subject: Casinos; Industry: 71321 : Casinos (except Casino Hotels) 71329 : Other Gambling Industries 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New York; New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Rikers Island (prison complex); NAICS: 922140
Classification:	71321: Casinos (except Casino Hotels); 71329: Other Gambling Industries; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822324368
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1822324368/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 50 of 500

U.S. News: Riots Upend Charlotte's Civic Identity --- A beacon of the New South wrestles with tensions; 'Charlotte Way' falls short Bauerlein, Valerie; McWhirter, Cameron . Bauerlein, Valerie; McWhirter, Cameron.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The economy has rapidly diversified after the 2008 housing bust and financial crisis that contributed to the sale of hometown stalwart Wachovia Corp. to San Francisco-based Wells Fargo, and turmoil at Bank of America.

FULL TEXT

CHARLOTTE, N.C. -- This week's riots literally smashed the facade of some of the city's defining civic institutions, including the convention center that hosted the 2012 Democratic National Convention, the home arena of Michael Jordan's Charlotte Hornets basketball team and the Nascar Hall of Fame.

Charlotte until recently had boomed as a beacon of the New South, with a pragmatic approach to civic problems that said what was good for all was good for business. Locals credited the city's businesslike approach with everything from luring professional sports to the city to avoiding the type of violence that racked other cities during school desegregation.

But now the vaunted "Charlotte way" isn't working.

Bank of America Corp. and Wells Fargo & Co., the banks that built Charlotte into a global powerhouse, kept thousands of employees home from downtown offices Thursday.

"This is not who we are," said civic activist Lisa Crawford, leader of Mothers of Murdered Offspring. "We are a family. Hugh McColl would've never told his people to stay home," she said, of the former BofA chief executive who helped build modern Charlotte.

The banks said they were trying to protect employee safety.

It had already been a strange year here. Wells Fargo, the city's biggest corporate employer, is under congressional scrutiny for bilking customers. The bank said it fired the employees who improperly opened unwanted customer accounts and has agreed to pay a $185 million federal fine.

The city has lost more than $100 million in business from the fallout of a controversial state bathroom law that started as a way to quash a Charlotte gay-rights ordinance. Last week, the Atlantic Coast Conference yanked its football championship from Charlotte because of the law, known as House Bill 2.

A monthslong behind-the-scenes effort to repeal HB2 collapsed last weekend.

Then came Tuesday's fatal shooting of Keith Lamont Scott by a Charlotte-Mecklenburg police officer. Police say Mr. Scott, who was black, was holding a gun in a threatening manner; his family says he was holding a book while waiting to pick up a child from the bus stop.

On Tuesday night, rioters blocked Interstate 85 near Mr. Scott's apartment complex in northern Charlotte. The next night, protesters threw water bottles and rocks at police in riot gear, who sought to clear the scene downtown with bean bags and tear gas. North Carolina Gov. Pat McCrory dispatched National Guard troops to Charlotte on Thursday, after declaring a state of emergency the previous day.

By Thursday night, protests downtown appeared to be peaceful as of about 9:30 p.m., and a curfew was set for midnight. Some chanted, "Justice for Justin," in reference to Justin Carr, the 26-year-old man shot during Wednesday night's protests. Mr. Carr died Thursday. Police said his death was caused by another civilian.

Charlotte remains one of the nation's fastest-growing cities. It had a population of about 827,000 in 2015, up 12.4% from 2010, according to estimates by the Census Bureau. About half the population is white, and about 35% is African-American, according to census data.

The economy has rapidly diversified after the 2008 housing bust and financial crisis that contributed to the sale of hometown stalwart Wachovia Corp. to San Francisco-based Wells Fargo, and turmoil at Bank of America.

But the Charlotte area has a stubbornly high rate of poverty in certain neighborhoods, especially among African-Americans, according to a report released earlier this year by the North Carolina Poverty Research Fund.

As for Mr. McColl, now 81 years old, he went to work downtown Thursday at his private-equity investment firm. He said he wanted to work on his speech for a Friday community meeting at the Blumenthal Performing Arts center, alongside pastors and other civic leaders.

"I don't think we're on our heels," Mr. McColl said. "We're shocked, but maybe every now and then you need a shock.

"I think you can become complacent with your own image, and think you don't have a problem, when in fact, you do."

Credit: By Valerie Bauerlein and Cameron McWhirter

DETAILS

Subject:	Riots; Historic buildings & sites; Employees; Political conventions; State laws; Cities
Business indexing term:	Subject: Employees; Corporation: Bank of America Corp Wells Fargo & Co; Industry: 71212 : Historical Sites
Location:	Charlotte North Carolina; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Bank of America Corp; NAICS: 522110, 551111; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Classification:	71212: Historical Sites
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822324199
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-riots-upend-charlottes-civic-identity/docview/1822324199/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 51 of 500

U.S. News: Zika Funding Deal Advances, But Flint Aid Fight Remains

Peterson, Kristina . Peterson, Kristina.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) introduced legislation Thursday that would keep the government funded through Dec. 9, but Democrats said they weren't ready to sign on to a bill that included flood relief for certain states but doesn't address the drinking water crisis in Flint.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Republicans and Democrats in the Senate have agreed on $1.1 billion in funding to combat the Zika virus as part of a stopgap spending bill needed to keep the government running beyond next Friday, but they remain divided over whether to include assistance for Flint, Mich., as part of that deal.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) introduced legislation Thursday that would keep the government funded through Dec. 9, but Democrats said they weren't ready to sign on to a bill that included flood relief for certain states but doesn't address the drinking water crisis in Flint.

Lawmakers have been bitterly divided for months over how to allocate funding for Zika. The dispute has become central to some battleground Senate races, most prominently in Florida, where GOP Sen. Marco Rubio is running for re-election.

The short-term spending bill includes $1.1 billion to research a Zika vaccine and provide for health care in hard-hit U.S. states and territories, including Puerto Rico.

The new deal removes restrictions on earlier legislation that would have prevented ProFamilias clinics in Puerto Rico, which work with Planned Parenthood, from accessing the funding.

"We think we're pretty much there" on Zika funding, said Sen. Barbara Mikulski of Maryland, the top Democrat on the Senate Appropriations Committee. But Ms. Mikulski said Democrats didn't support the overall spending bill.

The Senate last week passed legislation that would authorize a range of water projects across the U.S. and included assistance for Flint, whose drinking water became contaminated in 2014.

Under the Senate water bill, Flint would be eligible for what amounts to a $100 million grant for water-infrastructure projects. The package also includes money to support at least $700 million in low-interest loans to allow municipalities to finance water-infrastructure projects.

However, the House water bill, which Speaker Paul Ryan (R., Wis.) said the chamber will consider next week, doesn't include funding to address Flint's drinking water.

The Senate spending bill includes $500 million for disaster recovery in Louisiana and other states.

The legislation wouldn't halt an Oct. 1 transition of U.S. oversight of the internet to a California nonprofit, which Sen. Ted Cruz (R., Texas) had hoped to block. GOP presidential nominee Donald Trump had backed Mr. Cruz's effort on Wednesday.

The Senate is expected to take its next procedural vote on the spending bill on Tuesday. The House is expected to consider the spending bill once it has passed the Senate.

Credit: By Kristina Peterson

DETAILS

Subject:	Zika virus; Drinking water; Legislation; Funding; Government spending
Business indexing term:	Subject: Government spending
Location:	United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822324129
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-zika-funding-deal-advances-flint-aid/docview/1822324129/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 52 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The police officer who fatally shot an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla., was charged with first-degree manslaughter.

FULL TEXT

Clinton proposed a 65% tax on the largest estates, an expansion of the tax increases she would impose on the wealthiest Americans.

Trump promised sweeping deregulation of natural-gas, oil and coal production as part of an "America-first" energy plan.

Syria rebels began evacuating the opposition's last redoubt in the city of Homs, as regime and Russian warplanes pummeled Aleppo.

Riots in Charlotte have upended the city's civic identity. North Carolina's governor dispatched National Guard troops to the city.

The police officer who fatally shot an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla., was charged with first-degree manslaughter.

Rahami's wife returned to the U.S. as investigators pressed to figure out who, if anyone, knew about the bombing suspect's plan.

Brazilian police arrested Rousseff's ex-finance chief on allegations that he solicited a $2.35 million bribe from billionaire Eike Batista.

Immigration to the U.S. has helped the economy and has had little impact on native-born Americans' jobs or wages, a study found.

Iran's leader railed at the U.S. and Saudi Arabia in a U.N. speech for what he called divisive policies.

DETAILS

Subject:	Police brutality; Manslaughter
Location:	Syria; United States--US; Iran; North Carolina; Saudi Arabia
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016

column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822324095
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1822324095/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 53 of 500

Dos Toros Is Bullish on Expansion

Passy, Charles . Passy, Charles.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The New York-based company, which operates 11 fast-casual Mexican restaurants in the city, expects to open four to six new locations annually in the coming years, both locally and in markets such as Boston, Philadelphia, Houston and Washington, D.C. The planned expansion comes on the heels of $10 million in funding that Dos Toros received from GrowthPoint Partners, an investment group headed by Nick Marsh, chief executive of another New York chain, Chopt Creative Salad Co. Dos Toros, which is slated to open a 12th location in New York next month and one in Chicago next year, is attempting to make inroads on rival chain Chipotle Mexican Grill Inc., whose sales fell after food-safety problems last year.

FULL TEXT

In the battle of the burrito chains, Dos Toros Taqueria is aiming to become a grande-sized player.

The New York-based company, which operates 11 fast-casual Mexican restaurants in the city, expects to open four to six new locations annually in the coming years, both locally and in markets such as Boston, Philadelphia, Houston and Washington, D.C.

The planned expansion comes on the heels of $10 million in funding that Dos Toros received from GrowthPoint Partners, an investment group headed by Nick Marsh, chief executive of another New York chain, Chopt Creative Salad Co.

Dos Toros, which is slated to open a 12th location in New York next month and one in Chicago next year, is attempting to make inroads on rival chain Chipotle Mexican Grill Inc., whose sales fell after food-safety problems last year.

"We want to strike while the iron is hot," said Dos Toros co-founder Oliver Kremer.

Mr. Marsh said his firm was impressed by Dos Toros and sees potential for it to grow.

"They have demonstrated a massive commitment to ensure they have the best possible product," he said.

Mr. Kremer started the company with his brother, Leo, a former bassist with the rock group Third Eye Blind, in 2009, with a single location in Manhattan's Union Square. They intended to offer New Yorkers a taste of California-inspired Mexican cuisine, with customizable and overstuffed burritos among the offerings.

Dos Toros expects its 2016 sales to reach $30 million, an increase of 50% from last year, Oliver Kremer said.

Bret Thorn, a senior editor with Nation's Restaurant News, an industry publication, gave the company high marks for its food and said it is in a good position to grow, especially given the competition's troubles.

"The bloom is off the rose when it comes to Chipotle," he said.

Some analysts disagreed, saying the Denver-based burrito chain has moved on since its 2015 E. coli outbreaks.

"In the long run, our expectation is that Chipotle will recover from a lot of its self-inflicted woes," said Mark Kalinowski, an analyst with Nomura.

Chipotle kicked off a new marketing campaign this week that highlights its food-safety improvements, and a spokesman pointed out that it is opening more than 200 restaurants this year.

"We very much believe in the long-term prospects for Chipotle and know that if we run our restaurants the way we are capable of . . . our business will continue to perform well," he said.

Credit: By Charles Passy

DETAILS

Subject:	Food safety; Restaurants; Fast food industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Restaurants Fast food industry; Industry: 72251 : Restaurants and Other Eating Places
Location:	California; Chicago Illinois; Washington DC; New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Chipotle Mexican Grill; NAICS: 722513; Name: Third Eye Blind; NAICS: 711130
Classification:	72251: Restaurants and Other Eating Places
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822324023
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/dos-toros-is-bullish-on-expansion/docview/1822324023/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 54 of 500

Business News: Aircraft Subsidy War Escalates --- WTO's Airbus ruling brings the EU closer to punitive U.S. tariffs; Boeing at risk, too

Wall, Robert; Cameron, Doug . Wall, Robert; Cameron, Doug.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The long-running battle over billions of dollars in state subsidies to Airbus Group SE and Boeing Co. intensified on Thursday when the World Trade Organization ruled that European governments had failed to end unfair funding to the European plane maker.

FULL TEXT

The long-running battle over billions of dollars in state subsidies to Airbus Group SE and Boeing Co. intensified on Thursday when the World Trade Organization ruled that European governments had failed to end unfair funding to the European plane maker.

The ruling moves the U.S. one step closer to being able to impose more than $5 billion in annual tariffs against goods and services from the European Union as soon as next year, according to U.S. trade officials. The WTO said in a 574-page report that the EU and some of its member states "failed to comply" with an earlier ruling to remove the subsidies or void their effect to Airbus. EU compliance efforts fell short, the WTO said.

The trade body in a future ruling is expected to find that the U.S., similarly, didn't sufficiently address concerns about subsidies benefiting Boeing.

It could lead to the EU being allowed to impose similar sanctions on U.S. exporters.

Airbus, the world's No. 2 plane maker, and its larger rival Boeing are locked in a fierce battle for market share. After airlines went on a multiyear plane buying binge, the value of their combined backlogs of commercial airplanes has risen to almost $1.4 trillion. Still, both makers argue they have lost deals to the other. The Geneva-based trade adjudicator said that Airbus received subsidies for its new A350 XWB long-range plane, though it rejected the U.S. claim these were "prohibited subsidies" that have to be remedied expeditiously.

The WTO hadn't previously passed judgment on support to the A350 because the program in its current form was launched only after the U.S. initially raised its subsidy concerns with the trade body in 2004. Airbus only formally began the A350 XWB program in 2006 to challenge rival Boeing's 787 Dreamliner.

U.S. Trade Representative Michael Froman called the ruling "a sweeping victory" and urged the EU to halt subsidies to Airbus "immediately."

An Airbus spokesman said the U.S. was mischaracterizing the WTO findings.

The European Commission, the EU's executive arm, defended its actions. "An important win for the EU is that the panel rejected new U.S. claims that repayable support for the Airbus models A350XWB and A380 are 'prohibited subsidies,'" the commission said.

Plane subsidies are an increasingly hot topic. Canadian plane maker Bombardier Inc. got a capital injection from the Quebec government in exchange for a stake in the CSeries single-aisle program. The move has been criticized by rivals.

China and Russia also are developing new single-aisle planes, raising concerns that they will aim to sell them with large government backing.

Boeing Chief Executive Dennis Muilenburg called the latest WTO ruling "a victory for fair trade world-wide and for U.S. aerospace workers, in particular."

The Airbus spokesman said Boeing "remains in denial that billions of grants for the 787 and 777 have been declared completely illegal by the WTO." The commission signaled it might appeal.

William Mauldin contributed to this article.

Credit: By Robert Wall and Doug Cameron

DETAILS

Subject:	Aircraft industry; Subsidies; Tariffs; Government subsidies
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft industry Subsidies Tariffs Government subsidies; Corporation: Airbus SAS Boeing Co; Industry: 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing

Location:	Europe
Company / organization:	Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414; Name: World Trade Organization; NAICS: 928120; Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120; Name: Airbus Group NV; NAICS: 336411, 336412, 336413
Classification:	33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822324005
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-aircraft-subsidy-war-escalates-wtos/docview/1822324005/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Josh Mitchell --- DEFAMATION SUIT Judge: Rolling Stone Case Can Go to Trial A defamation suit against Rolling Stone magazine over its discredited story about an alleged gang rape at a fraternity party can go to trial, a federal judge ruled.

FULL TEXT

ECONOMY

Home Sales Dipped

Again in August

Americans reduced home purchases for the second straight month in August, suggesting the housing market is stumbling due to high prices and a shortage of homes for sale.

Sales of previously owned homes fell 0.9% from a month earlier to an annual rate of 5.33 million, the National Association of Realtors said. Sales of existing homes represent about 90% of all sales and are a key gauge of the housing market's health.

The market remains steady over a broader period, with existing-home sales up 0.8% in August from a year earlier.

-- Josh Mitchell

DEFAMATION SUIT

Judge: Rolling Stone

Case Can Go to Trial

A defamation suit against Rolling Stone magazine over its discredited story about an alleged gang rape at a fraternity party can go to trial, a federal judge ruled.

The case centers on a November 2014 article that described an alleged assault of a female student at University of Virginia and depicted school officials as indifferent to her plight.

The article made headlines first as an example of campus sexual violence and then as a journalism scandal when its central claims unraveled and Rolling Stone retracted it.

Then-UVA associate dean of students Nicole Eramo alleged the article cast her as the villain and falsely asserted she discouraged the student from taking her allegations to the police.

Rolling Stone denies the claim, saying the magazine was confident about the facts in the story when it published it.

"We now look forward to the jury's decision in this case," a Rolling Stone representative said.

-- Jacob Gershman

DETAILS

Subject:	Real estate sales; Defamation; Property values
Business indexing term:	Subject: Property values
People:	Eramo, Nicole
Company / organization:	Name: University of Virginia; NAICS: 611310; Name: National Association of Realtors; NAICS: 813910
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323984

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822323984/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 56 of 500

U.S. News: Immigration Study Sees More Pros Than Cons

Sparshott, Jeffrey . Sparshott, Jeffrey.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

During the same period, the number of unauthorized immigrants roughly doubled, reaching 11.1 million in 2014, according to the study's findings. Since 2009, about 300,000 to 400,000 new unauthorized immigrants have arrived each year and about the same number have left.

FULL TEXT

Waves of immigrants coming into the U.S. in recent decades have helped the economy over the long haul and had little lasting impact on the wages or employment levels of native-born Americans, according to one of the most comprehensive studies yet on the topic.

The National Academies of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine report on immigration assesses the economic and fiscal impacts of immigration, offering a broad look at a phenomenon that has moved to the forefront of the presidential race, with both candidates debating the downsides and merits of immigration.

The conclusion runs counter to a popular narrative suggesting that immigrants take the jobs of U.S. citizens, though it does acknowledge some costs for segments of the population. It highlights research showing an influx of lower-skilled workers can lead to lower wages for earlier waves of immigrants and native-born high-school dropouts. And the study found immigration can burden government finances, especially education budgets at the state and local levels.

The report, citing a lack of data, doesn't distinguish between the impacts of documented and undocumented immigrants.

The distillation of research and previously unavailable data offer a big-picture view that highlights the overarching benefits of immigration without discounting the dislocation and the fiscal costs associated with illegal and legal arrivals into the U.S.

"Immigration enlarges the economy while leaving the native population slightly better off on average, but the greatest beneficiaries of immigration are the immigrants themselves as they avail themselves of opportunities not available to them in their home countries," the report said.

Immigration also can lead to more innovation, entrepreneurship and technological change across the economy, the report found. About 53% of immigrants had at least some college, including 16% with a graduate education, as of 2012.

"The prospects for long run economic growth in the United States would be considerably dimmed without the contributions of high-skilled immigrants," the report said.

The study also found that "over a long time horizon (75 years in our estimates)," the fiscal impacts of immigrants "are generally positive at the federal level and negative at the state and local levels."

Much of the focus on immigration follows a significant jump in the foreign-born population and worries about illegal entry into the U.S.

The number of immigrants living in the country has risen to 42.3 million, or about 13% of the population in 2014, from 24.5 million, or 9% of the population in 1995. During the same period, the number of unauthorized immigrants roughly doubled, reaching 11.1 million in 2014, according to the study's findings. Since 2009, about 300,000 to 400,000 new unauthorized immigrants have arrived each year and about the same number have left.

The study, featuring more than 20 leading academics, is the first such broad look at immigration in nearly 20 years. Its timing coincides with a particularly heated discussion of the topic during the presidential race.

Republican candidate Donald Trump has made construction of a wall along the Mexican border his signature issue. He also has said he would step up deportation of illegal immigrants "arrested for any crime whatsoever."

Democrat Hillary Clinton is calling for an immigration overhaul that includes a pathway to citizenship for those already in the country.

Credit: By Jeffrey Sparshott

DETAILS

Subject:	Population; Immigration policy; Refugees; Noncitizens; Presidential elections; Immigrants
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323565
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-immigration-study-sees-more-pros-than/docview/1822323565/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Port Head Says Bridge Figure Was 'Protected'

Ramey, Corinne . Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Bill Baroni, former deputy executive director of the Port Authority, and Bridget Kelly, a former deputy chief of staff to Mr. Christie, are on trial for what prosecutors say was their role in a scheme to create traffic jams in Fort Lee to punish the borough's Democratic mayor for not endorsing the Republican governor.

FULL TEXT

When the head of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey conducted an internal probe of lane closures on the George Washington Bridge, he didn't interview the man he believed orchestrated the closures because he thought that official was "protected" by New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie.

In his second day of testimony in the trial involving the 2013 lane closures, Port Authority Executive Director Patrick Foye was asked why the internal review didn't include interviewing David Wildstein, then the agency's director of interstate capital projects.

Mr. Foye said Mr. Wildstein was abusive and untrustworthy, adding, "I had no reason to believe I'd get the truth."

"He was protected by Chris Christie, correct?" asked Michael Critchley, an attorney for one of the two people on trial for their role in the closures.

Mr. Foye paused, then shook his head. "Yes," he said.

Mr. Foye was one of three witnesses who testified Thursday at the trial of two former associates of Mr. Christie. All three witnesses were Port Authority officials who knew of the lane closures in Fort Lee, N.J., before they were ultimately reversed.

Bill Baroni, former deputy executive director of the Port Authority, and Bridget Kelly, a former deputy chief of staff to Mr. Christie, are on trial for what prosecutors say was their role in a scheme to create traffic jams in Fort Lee to punish the borough's Democratic mayor for not endorsing the Republican governor. Mr. Christie hasn't been charged with wrongdoing.

In U.S. District Court in Newark on Thursday, federal prosecutors sought to lay out the Port Authority's typical procedures for informing local communities of construction or changing traffic patterns, and to show that the five days in question was a sharp deviation from the norm.

Defense attorneys portrayed the authority as a politically fractured entity struggling to contain the increasing scrutiny it faced in the months after the September 2013 closures.

Much of Mr. Foye's testimony revolved around internal conversations at the Port Authority and the role of Mr. Wildstein in the lane closures. Mr. Wildstein has pleaded guilty to charges related to the closures and is cooperating with federal prosecutors, for whom he is expected to be a key witness.

On Thursday, Mr. Critchley, who represents Ms. Kelly, portrayed Mr. Wildstein as a political operative who exerted outside control and was "hated" within the agency. The defense attorney noted that Mr. Foye had previously testified that he believed Mr. Wildstein was the culprit in the scandal.

Mr. Critchley also characterized Mr. Foye's internal review as a "charade." That review included interviews with only three people -- the bridge manager, the director of the authority's Tunnels, Bridges and Terminals Department and a chief engineer -- and two of those took place at a Hyatt hotel, Mr. Critchley said during his questioning.

The attorney said that as media attention intensified, particularly after Mr. Christie launched a presidential bid, the review allowed the agency to tell reporters it was investigating the matter.

Ted Mann contributed to this article.

Credit: By Corinne Ramey

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Attorneys; Public prosecutors; Traffic congestion; Scandals; Ports
Business indexing term:	Subject: Ports; Industry: 54111 : Offices of Lawyers 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: District Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Classification:	54111: Offices of Lawyers; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323502
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-port-head-says-bridge-figure-was/docview/1822323502/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 58 of 500

U.S. News: Iraqi Catholic Church in U.S. Torn by Relocation Efforts

Lovett, Ian . Lovett, Ian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Since the U.S. invaded Iraq in 2003, the Chaldean population has been steadily shifting away from its homeland.

FULL TEXT

EL CAJON, Calif. -- The backyard gathering was part Catholic Mass, part rebellion.

The priest, an Iraqi immigrant, had been kicked out of the local church. Parishioners had been warned by local church leaders not to worship with him. Yet 50 people sat in makeshift pews behind a home east of San Diego in a show of opposition to church officials urging Christians to stay in Iraq, where their numbers are dwindling.

"There is no future for Christians in Iraq," said Bahaa Gandor, a 31-year-old who fled the country in 2010. "We have to bring them here."

The Chaldean Catholic Church, a nearly 2,000-year-old branch of Christianity based in Iraq, is at war with itself over how to ensure its survival. And the dispute is threatening to fracture this ancient faith.

Some Chaldeans in the U.S. have been scrambling to help Christians escape Iraq, where they are being targeted and killed by Islamic State. But that work has put them in conflict with top church officials in Baghdad who say Chaldeans must stay and help preserve Christianity in the Middle East.

Tensions between Baghdad and the Chaldean diaspora have reached a breaking point in El Cajon, where many Chaldeans have settled.

Father Noel Gorgis, a priest who has spent much of the past two years lobbying the U.S. to accept more Iraqi Christian refugees, was expelled from his post at the church here in July. A longtime bishop, another advocate for Iraqi refugees, has also been forced to retire.

The changes have rocked the large Chaldean community in El Cajon, and some here have entered a quiet revolt against church hierarchy.

They have begun holding what they call "underground masses" with Father Gorgis at homes in the area. Some are even floating the possibility of starting their own church.

"What's our relationship with Iraq? We're American," said Father Gorgis, who fled Iraq in the early 1990s during the Gulf War. "We can have our own church here."

He quickly added: "That's not our goal. We want to keep our heritage."

Since the U.S. invaded Iraq in 2003, the Chaldean population has been steadily shifting away from its homeland. There are now around 400,000 Christians in Iraq, down from 1.4 million in before the invasion, according to church officials.

Meanwhile, the population in the U.S. has ballooned to more than 250,000, mostly around Detroit and San Diego.

The exodus has been a growing concern for Patriarch Louis Raphael I Sako, the leader of the Chaldean church, an Eastern Rite Catholic Church that answers to the Pope in Rome.

"This is our land," he said in an email to The Wall Street Journal from Iraq. "If we leave, everything will leave with us, and little by little will be dissolved [by] assimilation in new societies."

He said via email that Father Gorgis has been removed because he criticized his superiors and the church itself.

Father Gorgis's supporters said the real reason he was dismissed is clear.

"It was about the refugees," said Mark Arabo, an activist in the Chaldean community here who worked with Father Gorgis on obtaining visas for Iraqi Christians. "It was because of his help for the most vulnerable in Iraq."

Credit: By Ian Lovett

DETAILS

Subject:	Relocation; Catholic churches; Noncitizens; Christians; Christianity
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81311 : Religious Organizations
Location:	El Cajon California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Chaldean Catholic Church; NAICS: 813110
Classification:	81311: Religious Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323435
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-iraqi-catholic-church-torn-relocation/docview/1822323435/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 59 of 500

City News: Weiner Investigated Over Texts With Teenager

Vilensky, Mike; Shallwani, Pervaiz . Vilensky, Mike; Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

At least four separate law-enforcement agencies were looking into the reports, including the New York Police Department, the Manhattan district attorney's office, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Manhattan U.S. attorney's office, law-enforcement officials said.

FULL TEXT

Former U.S. Rep. Anthony Weiner is being investigated by federal and local law-enforcement agencies following reports that he exchanged sexually explicit text messages and suggestive photos with a 15-year-old girl, officials said Thursday.

The Daily Mail reported Wednesday that Mr. Weiner had exchanged the messages and photos with the girl. In a statement emailed to media agencies, Mr. Weiner apologized but also said he may be the victim of a hoax.

At least four separate law-enforcement agencies were looking into the reports, including the New York Police Department, the Manhattan district attorney's office, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Manhattan U.S. attorney's office, law-enforcement officials said.

Among other issues, the agencies were determining the appropriate jurisdiction for potential charges, the officials said.

"The police department is reviewing what, if any, crime may have been committed in New York," a senior NYPD official said.

Mr. Weiner, 52 years old, didn't respond to requests for comment Thursday.

The probes mark a new chapter in Mr. Weiner's spectacular downfall.

A Democrat, he represented a swath of Brooklyn and Queens in the House of Representatives, but resigned in 2011 after admitting he exchanged lewd messages and photos online with multiple women.

Mr. Weiner sought a political comeback in 2013, running for New York City mayor, but that effort failed when he admitted that he had continued to engage in the same online behavior.

Last month, his wife, Huma Abedin, a top aide to Hillary Clinton, announced she was separating from Mr. Weiner after reports emerged that he had been engaging in new sexually explicit communications with women.

One photo Mr. Weiner allegedly sent to a woman over the internet showed him in his underwear with the couple's young son.

Mara Gay contributed to this article.

Credit: By Mike Vilensky and Pervaiz Shallwani

DETAILS

Subject:	Enforcement; Investigations
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Abedin, Huma; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120; Name: House of Representatives; NAICS: 921120; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323294
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-weiner-investigated-over-texts-with/docview/1822323294/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 60 of 500

U.S. News: Leaning Condo Tower Raises Alarm

Lazo, Alejandro . Lazo, Alejandro.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Millennium is sinking into the ground, and has fallen at least 16 inches since completion, according to a lawsuit filed by homeowners in August, in state Superior Court in San Francisco, that is seeking class-action status.

FULL TEXT

SAN FRANCISCO -- The luxury condo tower rises above one of the city's trendiest downtown neighborhoods for 58 stories, minus about 16 inches of its original height and tilting slightly.

The Millennium Tower, opened in 2009 as the city's tallest residential structure, has a new nickname: "the leaning tower of San Francisco."

The Millennium is sinking into the ground, and has fallen at least 16 inches since completion, according to a lawsuit filed by homeowners in August, in state Superior Court in San Francisco, that is seeking class-action status. It is tilting as much as 6 inches due in part to a "defective foundation," the suit says. Residents can inhabit the building but the value of units is sinking with the building, it alleges.

Developers say the building is safe and its descent is caused by a construction and excavation project nearby.

The high rise -- in the city's South of Market, or SoMa, neighborhood -- is built on landfill, and has become an emblem of overheated development in a housing-starved city prone to earthquakes.

On Thursday, current and former city officials with the Department of Building Inspection submitted to more than two hours of questioning at a city audit and oversight committee headed by San Francisco Supervisor Aaron Peskin. The developer of the building, Millennium Partners, didn't testify.

"There are some profound public-policy issues that go far and beyond the building," Mr. Peskin said in a recent interview. "We have an obligation to make sure that it is safe, and we need to understand what went wrong in this particular instance."

The hearing followed news Monday that City Attorney Dennis Herrera subpoenaed Millennium Partners as part of an investigation into whether the company adhered to state law about properly disclosing the sinking to homeowners. The company says it has complied with state law.

The building will sink another 8 to 15 inches, according to the suit. What's more, the "tilt at the base of the building translated into a 15-inch tilt at the top of the building," the suit says.

Mr. Peskin is focused on the city's role, and has pointed to a February 2009 letter written by a building-department official as evidence the city knew about the sinking before it issued a certificate of occupancy in August that year. In the letter, the official raised concern about "larger than expected settlements" of the building.

Ronald Tom, an assistant director at the Department of Building Inspection, said at the hearing that the Millennium was the first of such large, tall buildings San Francisco had seen, and his department was undergoing a review of procedures.

"We are going to develop a method of checks and balances that go beyond our own department expertise," he said.

Millennium Partners has said the building was designed and constructed to meet city standards and all of its permits were properly obtained. The group has said the building is safe, and that it has sunk because of work done nearby by the Transbay Joint Powers Authority, which is building a multibillion-dollar transportation and housing hub.

The suit by the homeowners also names the authority as a defendant.

The authority has said the sinking began before it started construction on its project.

Credit: By Alejandro Lazo

DETAILS

Subject:	Condominiums; High rise buildings
Location:	San Francisco California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Millennium Partners; NAICS: 531210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23 , 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323246
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-leaning-condo-tower-raises-alarm/docview/1822323246/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Corruption Crackdown: Cuomo Sees Reputation Put on the Line --- Governor isn't accused of any wrongdoing, but ex-allies face charges; honesty is 'paramount'

Vilensky, Mike . Vilensky, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to the complaint, SUNY Polytechnic Institute President Alain Kaloyeros and lobbyist Todd Howe, another Cuomo ally, "preselected" developers for two of Mr. Cuomo's signature development projects "after . . . each made sizable contributions to the Governor and had begun paying Howe for Howe's access to the Governor."

FULL TEXT

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo isn't a defendant, but his reputation is on trial.

The federal complaint against nine people close to Mr. Cuomo's administration, including a former top aide and close friend, describes a pay-to-play culture in which closeness to the governor was leveraged for personal profit. And it describes how Mr. Cuomo's ex-allies strategically rewarded his generous campaign donors with state contracts for signature Cuomo development projects in lieu of a democratic process.

The allegations involve the Cuomo administration in one of the biggest corruption cases to touch Albany in the past several years -- after the Democratic governor spent nearly six years vowing to clean up the capital and usher in a new era of ethics.

Rather than a more ethical political culture in Albany under Mr. Cuomo's watch, "it's gotten worse," said Seymour Lachman, a former state senator who coined the phrase "three men in a room" to describe Albany's insular culture. "Officials in Albany have not done all that they could do to prevent this from happening," he said.

U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara said Thursday he hopes for a trial "so all New Yorkers can see in gory detail what their state government has been up to."

In response to Thursday's events, Mr. Cuomo said: "I believe public integrity is paramount." Spokespeople for Mr. Cuomo also pointed to comments by Mr. Bharara saying the references to Cuomo campaign contributions are included as background information but aren't the crux of the crimes alleged against Mr. Cuomo's ex-allies.

At a news conference, Mr. Bharara said Mr. Cuomo hasn't been accused of any wrongdoing, but the 80-page federal complaint alleges the governor's campaigns for office also benefited from his ex-allies' relationships with others involved in the schemes.

According to the complaint, SUNY Polytechnic Institute President Alain Kaloyeros and lobbyist Todd Howe, another

Cuomo ally, "preselected" developers for two of Mr. Cuomo's signature development projects "after . . . each made sizable contributions to the Governor and had begun paying Howe for Howe's access to the Governor."

The developers made contributions "intended at least in part to develop a relationship with the Office of the Governor," the complaint states. In another instance described by the complaint, former Cuomo aide Joseph Percoco arranged for a company involved in the alleged scheme to donate a private jet to fly the governor and his staff to campaign events in 2010.

Mr. Percoco's lawyer, Barry Bohrer, called the allegations "an overreach of classic proportions" and said his client wasn't guilty.

Mr. Cuomo said on Thursday he is "profoundly disappointed" in Mr. Percoco if the allegations are true, and that Mr. Kaloyeros was "rightly suspended without pay."

Also on Thursday, Mr. Kaloyeros was charged by the state attorney general with rigging a bid to favor a development company that was a big donor to Mr. Cuomo's campaign.

Michael Miller, a lawyer for Mr. Kaloyeros, said his client "is innocent . . . and very much looks forward to being exonerated."

Hank Sheinkopf, a Democratic strategist and former adviser to Mr. Cuomo, said he expects Mr. Cuomo to "take a few days to hold his head. Then he needs to come up with an anticorruption plan. He can't afford have a vacuum where people can say things about him."

Josh Dawsey contributed to this article.

Credit: By Mike Vilensky

DETAILS

Subject:	Campaign contributions; Governors; Politicians
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York; United States--US
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323237
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/corruption-crackdown-cuomo-sees-reputation-put-on/docview/1822323237/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 62 of 500

Business News: U.S. Steelmakers Ready China Complaints

Miller, John W . Miller, John W.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Under pressure from American steelmakers, the U.S. in the past year has imposed tariffs as high as 266% on at least four new categories of steel from China. Those tariffs "helped to restore balance to U.S. steel markets," said Bill Steers, a spokesman for Luxembourg-based ArcelorMittal, the world's biggest steelmaker, which operates large mills in Indiana and Alabama.

FULL TEXT

Steel producers in the U.S. plan to file complaints with the Commerce Department on Friday and Monday alleging Chinese steelmakers have been routing metal shipments through Vietnam to avoid U.S. import tariffs, according to a lawyer for the steelmakers.

The petitions are backed by U.S. Steel Corp., Nucor Corp., AK Steel Holding Corp. and ArcelorMittal.

The complaints represent a new front in the campaign by American industry to stem a flood of Chinese metal onto markets, which has caused factories, mills and smelters in the U.S. and Europe to lose money, lay off workers and sometimes close.

The complaints allege the Chinese have shipped steel to Vietnam, modified it, for example adding zinc to make it corrosion-resistant, and then sent it to the U.S., while paying Vietnam's U.S. tariff rate, which is much lower than China's.

The names of the Chinese steelmakers allegedly undertaking that practice will be kept confidential as part of the complaints, Paul Rosenthal of Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, a lawyer for ArcelorMittal USA., said.

Under pressure from American steelmakers, the U.S. in the past year has imposed tariffs as high as 266% on at least four new categories of steel from China. Those tariffs "helped to restore balance to U.S. steel markets," said Bill Steers, a spokesman for Luxembourg-based ArcelorMittal, the world's biggest steelmaker, which operates large mills in Indiana and Alabama.

The Chinese embassy in Washington didn't respond to a request for comment.

The Commerce Department will have 45 days to decide whether to open an investigation. Under rules designed to prevent such a tariff-evading practice, known as circumvention, the department could expand tariffs on metal that originates in China and comes into the U.S. from Vietnam.

The Commerce Department said it couldn't comment on cases yet to be filed.

Lawyers for the steel producers in the U.S. began hearing reports of Chinese competitors routing metal shipments through Vietnam "soon after" they filed a request for tariffs on corrosion-resistant steel, Mr. Rosenthal said.

"With all the new tariffs, you're going to see more attempts at circumvention," he said. "And we're going to be very vigilant about addressing them." China, he added, is "not the only country attempting to circumvent."

Independent trade data appear to lend credence to the steelmaker claims. In the first six months of 2016, shipments of steel from Vietnam to the U.S. increased to 312,329 tons, from 25,756 tons. Over the same period, Chinese exports of steel to Vietnam rose 46% to 6.3 million tons from 4.3 million tons, according to data firm Global Trade Information Services.

The fight to contain the market glut of metals from China doesn't just concern the steel industry. The Commerce Department also is investigating claims that China Zhongwang Holdings Ltd., one of that nation's biggest aluminum producers, improperly shipped aluminum through Mexico and transformed the metal at a plant in New Jersey to avoid U.S. import tariffs.

China Zhongwang has denied any improper activity.

China aggressively has built up its metal-making capacity under its industrialization push. It now produces and consumes roughly half the world's key industrial commodities: steel, aluminum, copper and zinc.

As the pace of its economic growth has slowed of late, China has found itself with excess capacity and has exported more to keep its plants going. In the first six months of 2016, Chinese steel exports rose 11% to 51.6 million tons, according to GTIS.

Despite promises to curb output, Chinese steelmakers appear to be increasing production. Chinese steel output rose 3% to 68.6 million tons in August from the same month a year earlier, according to the World Steel Association.

Credit: By John W. Miller

DETAILS

Subject:	Steel industry; Exports; Tariffs; Aluminum; Shipments
Business indexing term:	Subject: Steel industry Exports Tariffs; Corporation: ArcelorMittal
Location:	China
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323122
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-steelmakers-ready-china/docview/1822323122/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 63 of 500

U.S. News: Wife of Bombing Suspect Returns From the Mideast

Devlin, Barrett; Shallwani, Pervaiz . Devlin, Barrett; Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The wife of Ahmad Khan Rahami, the man charged with planting bombs in New York and New Jersey, has returned to the U.S., law-enforcement officials said Thursday, as investigators continued pressing to figure out who, if anyone, knew about the bomb plan.

FULL TEXT

The wife of Ahmad Khan Rahami, the man charged with planting bombs in New York and New Jersey, has returned to the U.S., law-enforcement officials said Thursday, as investigators continued pressing to figure out who, if anyone, knew about the bomb plan.

Asia Bibi Rahami arrived in New York late Wednesday night, officials said. She had left the U.S. in June, traveling to Pakistan. As the bomb plot unfolded this weekend, she was en route back to the U.S., according to officials.

As part of the bomb investigation, officials said, U.S. investigators had placed her name on a no-fly list, so she was stopped in the U.A.E., a transit point for her journey back to the U.S. Officials said Mrs. Rahami sought out Federal Bureau of Investigation agents based in U.A.E. and gave them a statement. The officials described her as cooperative and helpful.

The investigation began Saturday night when one of the bombs Mr. Rahami allegedly built exploded on a street in the Manhattan neighborhood of Chelsea, wounding 31 people. An unexploded bomb was found four blocks away. Earlier that day, a pipe bomb exploded near a 5 kilometer race in Seaside Park, N.J., and on Sunday night a set of pipe bombs was discovered in a backpack outside the Elizabeth, N.J., train station.

Fingerprint, cellphone, and other evidence tie the bombs to Mr. Rahami, officials said.

What Mrs. Rahami knew about her husband's activities in the period leading up to the attacks is a key area of interest for counterterrorism investigators, who are also intensely focused on what his family and close friends in New Jersey saw or heard him doing in the weeks and days before the attacks, according to officials.

Mr. Rahami's father has said he had "no idea" what his son was planning, though in 2014 he called his son a "terrorist" and told investigators he was concerned he was hanging out with a dangerous crowd.

Mr. Rahami has been mostly unconscious since a Monday morning gunfight with police officers who found him sleeping in a doorway in Linden, N.J. Officials said Thursday he had suffered more injuries than previously disclosed -- he was shot seven times and has been intubated for much of his hospital treatment, unable to speak with investigators.

That shootout with police began when officers approached Mr. Rahami sleeping in the doorway of a bar. As they neared, he pulled out a gun and began firing. The officers returned fire, with Mr. Rahami firing back as he walked away, officials said. One officer was struck in his bullet-resistant vest.

Officials said Thursday Mr. Rahami bought his handgun at a gun store near Roanoke, Va., using an identification with an address in that area, where he has relatives. He passed a background check to get that weapon, officials said.

Officials have said they have found no evidence so far of any other conspirators in the bomb plot, but that the investigation is fluid.

Credit: By Devlin Barrett and Pervaiz Shallwani

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Bombings; Investigations
Location:	United States--US
People:	Rahami, Ahmad Khan
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323063
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-wife-bombing-suspect-returns-mideast/docview/1822323063/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 64 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Urged Not To Settle Health Insurers' Suits

Armour, Stephanie . Armour, Stephanie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Highmark Inc., Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina, and a health cooperative sued the federal government over the program.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Congressional Republicans are warning the Obama administration not to settle with insurers that have sued the government over an Affordable Care Act program to compensate them for losses under the law, saying such a move would bypass spending limits set by Congress.

Forty-six House Republicans signed a letter sent Thursday to Health and Human Services Secretary Sylvia Mathews Burwell saying they oppose any settlements and could sue the administration to block them.

Earlier this week, Republicans on the House Energy and Commerce Committee also sent a letter to Ms. Burwell saying they are concerned the agency is looking for a backdoor way to pay insurers over shortfalls in the ACA program known as "risk corridors."

The program was designed to help insurers that suffer losses on the ACA exchanges by giving them payments from other insurers that did well on the new business. Insurers say in some lawsuits that federal officials initially said the payments for losses would be made in full but later decided it would be "budget neutral," meaning it would only pay out as much as it collected. Language in congressional spending bills reinforced this stance.

The Republicans' concerns about settlements were prompted by a Sept. 9 memo on 2015 risk-corridor payments in which HHS said it was open to discussing resolution of the lawsuits. Such settlements could potentially help relations with an industry that has been worried about the viability of ACA business, with some companies abandoning the marketplace altogether.

An HHS official said Thursday that "as in all cases where there is litigation risk, we are open to discussing resolution of those claims."

The amount owed to insurers in 2014 wound up being much more than the sum collected. So HHS announced last fall that insurers initially would get only 12.6% of the money they claimed under the program for 2014, its first year of operation.

In its memo, HHS said it recognizes the health law requires full payment to insurers. It also said it expects all collections from 2015 into the risk-corridor program will have to be used toward 2014 payments owed. It said it would explore other funding sources, including working with Congress.

But lawmakers said they are concerned the memo is an invitation to other insurers to sue and use litigation as a vehicle to get money that the Obama administration was unable to pay out through the program. They say they believe settlement money would come from a Justice fund established to pay court judgments.

Rep. Robert Pittenger (R., N.C.), who organized the Thursday letter said HHS is "trying to make the system work on the backs of taxpayers."

Highmark Inc., Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina, and a health cooperative sued the federal government over the program. Insurers say the federal government has failed to meet its obligation to make full payments.

Highmark and Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina say they are owed a total of about $350 million. Health Republic Insurance Co., which also filed a lawsuit over the program, is seeking class-action status.

Highmark and Blue Cross Blue Shield have both reported losses on ACA products.

Credit: By Stephanie Armour

DETAILS

Subject:	Settlements & damages; Losses; Insurance companies; Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US; Litigation
Business indexing term:	Subject: Insurance companies Patient Protection & Affordable Care Act 2010-US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323048
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-urged-not-settle-health-insurers-suits/docview/1822323048/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 65 of 500

U.S. News: Officer Charged In Tulsa Shooting

Mahtani, Shibani . Mahtani, Shibani.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Video footage released earlier this week -- recorded by a police helicopter and a dashboard camera and released by the Tulsa Police Department -- show Mr. Crutcher walking toward his car with his arms raised and then placing his hands on the top of the car.

FULL TEXT

The police officer who fatally shot an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla., was charged with first-degree manslaughter on Thursday, less than a week after the incident, which was caught on two widely circulated police videos.

Tulsa County District Attorney Steve Kunzweiler said his office had determined the charge was warranted in the fatal shooting of Terence Crutcher, 40 years old, by Tulsa police officer Betty Shelby last Friday. He said a warrant has been issued for her arrest.

Video footage released earlier this week -- recorded by a police helicopter and a dashboard camera and released by the Tulsa Police Department -- show Mr. Crutcher walking toward his car with his arms raised and then placing his hands on the top of the car. Just after the view of the man is blocked in two separate videos, shots ring out and he falls to the ground.

The police department said that he wasn't armed and didn't have a weapon in his vehicle.

Attorneys for Ms. Shelby and Mr. Crutcher's family couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

An attorney for Ms. Shelby, a police officer since 2011, has said that she believed Mr. Crutcher posed a threat, was ignoring multiple commands to stop moving and get down on his knees, and that Ms. Shelby opened fire when he began to reach into his SUV window. He added that Ms. Shelby was on her way to a domestic violence call when she came across his abandoned vehicle blocking the street.

An attorney for Mr. Crutcher's family disputes the officer's account, saying the car window was rolled up and that Mr. Crutcher was putting his hands on top of the car. His family describes him as a good man who was enrolled in a community college and was working to do them proud.

DETAILS

Subject:	Manslaughter; Deadly force; Police
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	Tulsa Oklahoma; United States--US
People:	Shelby, Betty
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-Tulsa OK; NAICS: 922120
Classification:	92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323036
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-officer-charged-tulsa-shooting/docview/1822323036/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 66 of 500

Business News: Tesla Sues Michigan on Dealer Law

Higgins, Tim . Higgins, Tim.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Tesla Motors Inc. filed suit Thursday after Michigan denied it a license to open a store to sell directly to customers, saying a state law violates its constitutional rights and protects hometown rivals such as General Motors Co. The suit, filed in U.S. District Court for the Western District of Michigan, names three state officials:

FULL TEXT

Tesla Motors Inc. filed suit Thursday after Michigan denied it a license to open a store to sell directly to customers, saying a state law violates its constitutional rights and protects hometown rivals such as General Motors Co.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court for the Western District of Michigan, names three state officials: Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder, Attorney General Bill Schuette and Secretary of State Ruth Johnson. The latter's department rejected Tesla's application for a dealership license last week.

"We are currently reviewing the suit," said a spokeswoman for the attorney general's office.

Tesla's bid to open its own dealerships has faced fierce resistance around the country from independent franchise dealers and traditional auto makers. In some states, Tesla has had to fight to open stores while in others it has defended against dealers and auto makers looking to shut Tesla stores down. Independent automotive dealers traditionally have held sway in states where they have successfully urged legislators to create laws protecting them from being closed by manufacturers.

In 2014, Mr. Snyder enacted legislation that shut down Tesla's direct-to-customer sales in the state -- a bill GM had urged the governor to sign.

Tesla's suit seeks a permanent injunction to keep Michigan from enforcing the law. The Palo Alto, Calif., auto maker argues the state doesn't have a legitimate reason to bar a nonfranchise auto maker from selling in the state.

"These irrational classifications do not further any legitimate government interest and exist solely for the purpose of protecting two discrete Michigan-based interest groups -- Michigan's franchised auto dealers and Michigan-based manufacturers -- from economic competition," Tesla said in the suit.

Tesla lawyers hope a 2013 federal appeals court ruling in New Orleans could bolster their case against such state franchise laws. That case involved an abbey trying to sell coffins during a casket shortage, only to find state law restricted sales to those licensed by the Louisiana Board of Funeral Directors.

The court ruled in the abbey's favor. Such "economic liberty" arguments have found favor among some circuit courts, Northwestern University law professor John McGinnis said.

Tesla is also arguing that Michigan is impeding the free flow of commerce among the states.

Credit: By Tim Higgins

DETAILS

Subject:	Litigation; Licenses; Automobile dealers; Attorneys general; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile dealers; Corporation: Tesla Inc; Industry: 44111 : New Car Dealers 44112 : Used Car Dealers 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	Michigan; United States--US
People:	Snyder, Rick
Company / organization:	Name: Tesla Motors Inc; NAICS: 336999; Name: Tesla Inc; NAICS: 336110, 336999
Classification:	44111: New Car Dealers; 44112: Used Car Dealers; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822323014
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-tesla-sues-michigan-on-dealer-law/docview/1822323014/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 67 of 500

Corruption Crackdown: SUNY Poly President Faces State Charges

Dawsey, Josh . Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Alain Kaloyeros, the 60-year-old president of State University of New York Polytechnic Institute, crafted bids for multimillion-dollar projects that were designed for specific developers or favored corporations, according to the felony complaint filed by Attorney General Eric Schneiderman's office.

FULL TEXT

A university president with close ties to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo was charged with bid rigging by the state's attorney general Thursday, hours after he was accused of similar allegations in a federal case.

Alain Kaloyeros, the 60-year-old president of State University of New York Polytechnic Institute, crafted bids for multimillion-dollar projects that were designed for specific developers or favored corporations, according to the felony complaint filed by Attorney General Eric Schneiderman's office.

In exchange, Mr. Kaloyeros sometimes secured benefits that enhanced his salary or gave contracts to large contributors to Mr. Cuomo, the complaint alleges.

"He fixed the bidding process to ensure his cronies won lucrative contracts, funded in part by the state of New York," Mr. Schneiderman, a Democrat, said at a news conference in Manhattan. The alleged scheme, he said, was "stupid."

A lawyer for Mr. Kaloyeros said his client is innocent and "very much looks forward to being exonerated." Mr. Kaloyeros was suspended Thursday from his post, according to the university. He is expected to appear in court Friday on the charges.

In one instance, Mr. Schneiderman said, a bid for an upstate dormitory project was designed specifically for Columbia Development Cos., an upstate firm headed by Joseph Nicolla, who allegedly received advance notice of the terms. Mr. Nicolla gave $145,000 to Mr. Cuomo's re-election account near the time of the bid, records show.

The complaint alleges Mr. Kaloyeros was closely involved in the writing of bids, sometimes changing specific words so only one bidder could win. In the Columbia Development case, the attorney general produced emails that were sent to Columbia Development outlining the terms before other developers received word.

Mr. Nicolla, 59, was also charged. He didn't respond to a request for comment.

Mr. Kaloyeros is also accused of giving another builder a contract while asking for a loan for a nonprofit he controlled and an additional $3 million grant. His salary was partially based on how many grants he was able to secure, the complaint said.

Mr. Schneiderman said the governor's office wasn't involved in the alleged scheme.

Mr. Kaloyeros, a nanotech engineer, earns more than $1 million a year and is one of the state's highest paid employees. He was intimately involved in the economic-development effort known as Buffalo Billion.

Mr. Schneiderman's case was made public hours after the U.S. attorney's office in Manhattan filed a complaint against nine people, including Mr. Kaloyeros. In that case, Mr. Kaloyeros was charged with a count of wire-fraud conspiracy in connection with alleged bid-rigging of other state-backed contracts, including the Buffalo Billion.

Credit: By Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys general; Indictments; Bids
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New York; United States--US

Company / organization:	Name: State University of New York Polytechnic Institute; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822322994
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/corruption-crackdown-suny-poly-president-faces/docview/1822322994/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: State-Sponsored Cyberattacks Prompt Debate

Paletta, Damian . Paletta, Damian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Chinese hackers have posed a major challenge to the U.S. government, though senior U.S. officials believe China has ratcheted back its use of cyberattacks since President Barack Obama and Chinese leaders agreed last year that the countries wouldn't use information stolen by hackers to benefit domestic companies.

FULL TEXT

The rapid rise of state-sponsored computer attacks has caught the U.S. government and many businesses off-guard, escalating a debate about whether more should be done to deter countries like Russia from penetrating sensitive networks.

The latest breach, reported Thursday by Yahoo Inc., affected roughly 500 million accounts and is considered one of the largest ever perpetrated.

U.S. officials wouldn't immediately confirm that the company's hack was a state-sponsored breach.

A number of countries are believed to have carried out cyberattacks against the U.S. government or companies, including North Korea, Iran, Russia and China. All have denied perpetrating any attacks.

U.S. officials consider Russia and China to have the most sophisticated hackers, but there are also criminal elements working within each country that are capable of carrying out large-scale breaches without government involvement.

The White House is wrestling with how to respond to a large-scale cyberattack earlier this year that stole records from the Democratic National Committee, its affiliates, and others.

The DNC breach was first reported in June, but it wasn't until Tuesday that U.S. Director of National Intelligence suggested publicly that Russia was likely behind the operation. Russian officials have denied involvement.

Chinese hackers have posed a major challenge to the U.S. government, though senior U.S. officials believe China has ratcheted back its use of cyberattacks since President Barack Obama and Chinese leaders agreed last year that the countries wouldn't use information stolen by hackers to benefit domestic companies.

Credit: By Damian Paletta

DETAILS

Subject:	Hackers; Cybercrime
Location:	United States--US; Russia
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822322969
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-state-sponsored-cyberattacks-prompt/docview/1822322969/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-01-02
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Finance Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In response, Rep. Patrick McHenry (R., N.C.) introduced a bill that would mirror the U.K. sandbox, requiring many federal agencies, including the Federal Reserve Board, Treasury Department and Securities and Exchange Commission, to develop an internal "Financial Services Innovation Office" where companies can seek help in testing a product. --

FULL TEXT

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

China Capital

Outflows Ease

Pressure to move money out of China eased in recent months, helping to steady the yuan, the country's foreign-exchange regulator said, as she vowed to go after companies trying to circumvent controls and take funds offshore.

Speaking at a news conference, Wang Chunying, a senior official at the State Administration of Foreign Exchange, pointed to the recent decline in banks' net sales of foreign currencies, as well as the country's relatively stable foreign-exchange reserves, as evidence that "capital-outflow pressure has eased."

Ms. Wang, director of the agency's balance-of-payments department, also noted a "continued rebound" in Chinese companies borrowing overseas and then bringing money home.

Those factors combined have helped reduce pressure driving down the yuan, she said.

A surprise devaluation a year ago and poorly communicated exchange-rate policies rocked global markets and caused a flood of capital to leave China late last year and early this year, as Chinese worried their money would continue to lose value.

-- Lingling Wei

FINANCIAL TECHNOLOGY

Bill Aims to Set Up

Innovation 'Sandbox'

A House bill intended to keep the U.S. from losing financial innovators to the U.K.'s budding "sandbox" regulatory program was introduced Thursday.

The financial-technology industry, from digital currencies to peer-to-peer online lending, has raised concerns that U.S. regulation isn't keeping pace, potentially causing businesses to consider moving operations to the U.K. The sandbox program, kicked off in May, lets companies work alongside a regulator when testing a fintech product or service.

That gives the firms the ability to test a new product or business model with a limited launch, without going through the full regulatory process. Hong Kong also announced a sandbox initiative earlier this month.

In response, Rep. Patrick McHenry (R., N.C.) introduced a bill that would mirror the U.K. sandbox, requiring many federal agencies, including the Federal Reserve Board, Treasury Department and Securities and Exchange Commission, to develop an internal "Financial Services Innovation Office" where companies can seek help in testing a product.

-- Rachel Witkowski

EUROPEAN BANKING

Draghi: Overcrowding

Cuts Into Profits

European Central Bank President Mario Draghi said overcrowding in Europe's banking sector is hurting profitability, pushing back somewhat against critics who blame the central bank.

He noted long-term real rates have been falling for two decades and listed technological changes, demographics and inequality as "just a few of the factors exerting downward pressure" on long-term rates.

Mr. Draghi said that accommodative policy from his and other major central banks have helped push down rates, which, in turn, squeezes net interest income. "But overbanking is also a factor in the current low level of bank profitability," he said. "Overcapacity in some national banking sectors, and the ensuing intensity of competition, exacerbates this squeeze on margins."

European banks have complained that the ECB's highly accommodative monetary policy weighs on their earnings.

-- Todd Buell

DETAILS

Subject:	Innovations; Banking industry; Central banks; Profitability; Bank technology
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Subject: Banking industry Central banks Profitability Bank technology; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank 52211 : Commercial Banking
Location:	United Kingdom--UK; United States--US; China
People:	McHenry, Patrick
Company / organization:	Name: Securities & Exchange Commission; NAICS: 926150; Name: Federal Reserve Board; NAICS: 921130
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank; 52211: Commercial Banking
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822322953
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/finance-watch/docview/1822322953/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 70 of 500

World News: Iran's Leader Chides U.S., Saudi Arabia

Fassihi, Farnaz . Fassihi, Farnaz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"If the Saudi government is serious about its vision for development and regional security, it must cease and desist from divisive policies, spread of hate ideology and trampling upon the rights of neighbors," Mr. Rouhani said.

FULL TEXT

UNITED NATIONS -- Iranian President Hassan Rouhani railed at the U.S. and Saudi Arabia for policies he said have created division and chaos from Syria to North Africa in a Thursday address to the U.N. General Assembly.

"If the Saudi government is serious about its vision for development and regional security, it must cease and desist from divisive policies, spread of hate ideology and trampling upon the rights of neighbors," Mr. Rouhani said.

In a General Assembly address Wednesday, Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Nayef condemned Iran for backing "terrorist militias" across the Middle East. The two countries are on opposite sides of wars in Syria and Yemen, with tensions between them rising.

Mr. Rouhani praised his country's nuclear deal with the West as a diplomatic feat that serves as an example for how global disputes should be settled. But he also accused the U.S. of not upholding its end of the deal in good faith. He mentioned a U.S. Supreme Court decision this year upholding a ruling allowing victims of terrorist attacks to seek compensation from Iran's frozen funds.

"The lack of compliance with the deal on the part of the United States in the past several months represents a flawed approach that should be rectified forthwith," he said.

Credit: By Farnaz Fassihi

DETAILS

Subject:	Foreign policy
Location:	Iran; Saudi Arabia
People:	Rouhani, Hassan

Company / organization:	Name: Supreme Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822322952
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-irans-leader-chides-u-s-saudi-arabia/docview/1822322952/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 71 of 500

ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment: Working-Class Wonder

Teachout, Terry . Teachout, Terry.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]it's high praise to say that Ms. Brockman is worthy of her predecessors, giving an earthy performance that feels less like acting than living.

FULL TEXT

A Taste of Honey

Pearl Theatre Company,

555 W. 42nd St., New York ($59-$99),

212-563-9261,

extended through Oct. 30

New York -- Shelagh Delaney wrote her first play, "A Taste of Honey," a snapshot of life in working-class England, when she was just 18 years old. Amazingly, it had successful runs in the West End in 1959 and on Broadway the following year, was turned into a hit movie (which has just been reissued on home video by the Criterion Collection) in 1961 and was revived no less successfully on Broadway in 1981. That, alas, was the end of Delaney, who died in 2011 without writing anything else that did remotely as well. It was as if she'd made a deal with the devil: You get to hit the jackpot the first time you pull the lever, but never again.

"A Taste of Honey" continues to be staged with fair regularity in England, but it's rarely seen in America anymore, though I reviewed a very fine production by Chicago's Shattered Globe Theater in 2008. The Pearl Theatre Company's new revival is the first time that it has been performed in New York since 1981. That surprises me, for it is a marvelous piece of work, at once devastatingly blunt and uncommonly poignant. No matter: Austin Pendleton, the director, and his five-person cast have done right by Delaney's play, and now that the news is full of the hopes and fears of America's own working class, it couldn't be more timely.

"A Taste of Honey" is the story of Jo (Rebekah Brockman), a 17-year-old girl-woman from Manchester who lives with Helen (Rachel Botchan), her sluttish, self-dramatizing mother, in a dingy flat with "a lovely view of the gasworks." Jo has longings far beyond her station, but she is knocked off the track when she falls in love with and is impregnated by a black sailor (Ade Otukoya) who ships out without knowing that he's going to be a father. Unwilling to live with Helen and her latest lover (Bradford Cover) and determined to bear her child instead of aborting it, Jo invites her only friend, a homeless gay art student named Geof (John Evans Reese), to move in with her.

That's pretty much all there is to "A Taste of Honey," which ends inconclusively, albeit purposefully so. Bright and talented but devoid of prospects, Jo has learned too young that (in her own stoic words) "we don't ask for life, we have it thrust upon us." What, then, will she make of hers? Will she claw her way out of poverty? Will she try to make a home with Geof, who has domestic urges and longs to be a father to her unborn child? "I'm an extraordinary person," she tells him, and we know it's nothing more than the truth -- but can that possibly be enough to save her?

Not only is "A Taste of Honey" set in a milieu that Delaney knew well, having grown up in an industrial town not far from Manchester, but it is the work of a writer with the sharpest of ears. Every line has the bright, crisp ring of near-phonographic authenticity ("I'm not just talented, I'm geniused"). Imagine "Awake and Sing!" acted in the thickest of Lancashire accents and you'll get the idea.

For the record, Joan Plowright and Amanda Plummer played Jo on Broadway, Rita Tushingham starred in the film version, and Helen Sadler was heart-tuggingly good in the 2008 Chicago revival. Hence it's high praise to say that Ms. Brockman is worthy of her predecessors, giving an earthy performance that feels less like acting than living. Ms. Botchan has the showier role and makes the most of it, and Messrs. Cover, Otukoya and Reese offer impeccable support. Harry Feiner's grubby furnished-room set is dead on the mark, in particular the backdrop, a charcoal sketch of Manchester that recalls a line from Philip Larkin's "Talking in Bed": "Dark towns heap up on the horizon."

Mr. Pendleton has given "A Taste of Honey" a staging that serves the play with scrupulous, self-effacing care. The incidental music is played by an onstage trio of jazz instrumentalists, Max Boiko, Phil Faconti and Walter Stinson, whom Mr. Pendleton has integrated into the action in a manner reminiscent of what Joan Littlewood, the director of the original production, is reported to have done. The characters behave as though they're aware of the musicians' presence, an anti-realistic touch that leavens the play's straightforward naturalism. (Barbara A. Bell, the costume designer, has given them downtown-hipster hats to wear, another nice touch.)

At a moment when Broadway has next to nothing to offer in the way of straight plays, Mr. Pendleton now has two shows running on 42nd Street, the other one being the Mint Theater Company's superlative revival of N.C. Hunter's "A Day by the Sea." They're both so excellent as to put this heretical question in the minds of every New Yorker who loves theater: Who needs Broadway?

Mr. Teachout, the Journal's drama critic, is the author of "Satchmo at the Waldorf," which runs through Oct. 2 at Mosaic Theatre in Washington. Write to him at tteachout@wsj.com.

Credit: By Terry Teachout

DETAILS

Subject:	Honey; Theater; Set design; Working class; Restaurants; Dance music
Business indexing term:	Subject: Working class Restaurants; Industry: 72251 : Restaurants and Other Eating Places
Location:	England; New York; United States--US; United Kingdom--UK
Company / organization:	Name: Criterion Collection; NAICS: 512120
Classification:	72251: Restaurants and Other Eating Places

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	D.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822321994
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-working-class-wonder/docview/1822321994/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 72 of 500

ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment: As the World Streams
 --- Viewers in the U.S. are obsessed with Nordic thrillers, Korean dramas and a British baking show;
 Their choices are transforming the once-fragmented

TV market into a global one

Gamerman, Ellen . Gamerman, Ellen.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Last week, the executive body for the European Union proposed plans that could make content on video-on-demand services from national broadcasters and a variety of streaming platforms available to all member countries, potentially enabling a hit show to debut around the continent at once. "Release schedules for programs have been set in stone for decades," said Michael Goodman, director of digital media strategies at the market research firm Strategy Analytics.

FULL TEXT

Elisabeth Born, a clerical worker from suburban Boston, watches so much British TV she sometimes catches herself thinking in a Cockney accent. With a special DVD player for foreign discs and a variety of streaming services -- not all of them legal -- she can binge on U.K. series whenever she wants.

"I get in my car and I feel like the steering wheel should be on the right," said Ms. Born, 59, who keeps adding new foreign shows to her lineup, from a Nordic crime series to a Maori sitcom. She plays them on her computer about six hours a day, sometimes as background noise, keeping roughly 10 foreign programs in rotation at any one time.

Ms. Born is one of a growing number of Americans globalizing their TV habits. Streaming services -- from major players like Netflix to niche foreign-entertainment outlets like Acorn TV -- are ramping up efforts to license international hits and produce their own original series abroad. Video-on-demand sites are booming, like DramaFever and Viki for Korean series and Crunchyroll for Japanese anime. And pirated shows continue to populate the internet, often of higher quality than rough online videos of the past.

Obsessed fans track every development of a show even if it won't come to the U.S. for months. On Thursday, American followers of "The Great British Bake Off" reacted with horror when the BBC announced the impending departure of beloved judge Mary Berry. The show's current season is gripping the U.K. right now, but in the U.S. its debut date still has not been announced.

That fervent followers of a series face delays for episodes while others watch freely highlights the TV industry's archaic practice of making shows available only in certain regions at set times. While movies and music often are released globally the same day, foreign TV tends to make a slow march to the U.S., even as international interest soars and spoilers race across social media.

TV veterans call this system a relic of a bygone time before the internet. "The networks are not going to be able to cling onto the material with the same tenacity that they have," said Richard Roxburgh, co-creator and star of Australia's critically acclaimed bad-boy barrister series "Rake." "It's an absurd kind of attempt at intervening in something that's almost impossible to intervene in."

While the delayed export of American TV to the rest of the world has vexed foreign viewers for years, the reverse now is also true. Overseas networks block out periods in which a show remains their exclusive property, betting that the series will be easier to sell internationally once people start seeing it and word spreads. More hold-ups occur when a star is unavailable to promote a show in the U.S. or an American network times a series launch to coincide with a lull in its schedule.

Streaming services are taking steps to reverse this pattern. In recent years Netflix has ramped up its original productions abroad in large part to allow for simultaneous global releases, said Jonathan Friedland, communications chief for Netflix, which currently is producing TV shows in 13 countries including Brazil, India and Japan. By serving as a co-producer, Netflix also was able to shorten the wait time between the U.K. and U.S. debuts of shows like British crime series "Happy Valley" and "The Fall." The aim "is that people no longer feel the frustration of having to wait," said Mr. Friedland, adding that Netflix's longtime practice of releasing entire seasons at once is part of the same effort to satisfy the on-demand generation.

Outside the U.S., some governments are pushing for faster access. Last week, the executive body for the European Union proposed plans that could make content on video-on-demand services from national broadcasters and a variety of streaming platforms available to all member countries, potentially enabling a hit show to debut around the continent at once.

"Release schedules for programs have been set in stone for decades," said Michael Goodman, director of digital media strategies at the market research firm Strategy Analytics. "For the first time, it is actually in flux. The windows [for international releases] that have been in operation for the last 50 or 60 years in TV are not going to be the same windows we will see in 10 years."

For now, compelling foreign shows can pop up one minute and disappear the next. "Rake," a hit with Australians, recently ended its fourth season. Want to see it? As the Aussies say, you're stitched. Netflix won't stream it until next year. It's on iTunes -- in Australia. The DVD box set is sold online, but in a format that won't play on most U.S. machines.

"There's so much money being left on the table," said Richard Greenfield, a media and tech analyst with BTIG Research. "Leveraging it while the buzz is around the show really speaks to a global release."

If the big screen is any indication, the losses add up: A study of staggered global film releases found that delaying an international DVD release after the domestic debut reduces foreign sales by two to three percent for every 10 days the overseas consumer has to wait to buy the disc legally, said Michael D. Smith, co-author of a book about piracy published this month, "Streaming, Sharing, Stealing: Big Data and the Future of Entertainment."

Americans are drawn to international fare for a host of reasons, from the lure of new hunks (Aidan Turner's rippling abs won fans for the BBC drama "Poldark") to the perception that foreign shows are high quality (Alistair Cooke bestowed gravitas on this realm for decades as host of PBS's "Masterpiece Theatre"). Audiences are directed toward these series, too; Netflix customers may see foreign shows recommended right alongside American hits, depending on their past preferences.

For years the prevailing wisdom held that Americans wouldn't read subtitles. But with the current onslaught of scripted TV series, the demand for shows featuring complex characters often overrides such concerns. "It was extremely difficult to sell foreign-language content five years ago, but recently there's been a greater acceptance in English-speaking markets to engage," said Tim King, executive vice president of production for the Swedish entertainment company SF Studios.

Piracy remains a problem in the U.S. and abroad. A few years ago, a dubbed version of the season finale of the Swedish detective series "Beck" premiered in Germany, followed by a one-time screening at a movie theater in Stockholm. Shortly after that, the drama debuted on TV in Sweden, but it was already too late. Someone had synced the sound from the Stockholm screening to the German TV stream and released the patchworked version online. "It was a disaster -- it had thousands of downloads in one day," said "Beck" producer Lars Blomgren. Now Mr. Blomgren tries to release his series throughout Europe at the same time. "We will try to air it the same day, even the same hour," he said.

In the U.S., "Beck" is available through the roughly $8-a-month streaming service MHz Choice, which licenses the shows it offers. Another crime series Mr. Blomgren produces, "The Bridge," can be seen on sites including Netflix. (In a sign of how complex the foreign and domestic TV landscape has become, Hulu now streams the American version of "The Bridge," a thriller set on the U.S.-Mexico border that originally aired on FX. "The Tunnel," a British-French adaptation, aired this summer on PBS.)

Across the internet, operators of illegal sites violate copyright law by presenting shows without paying licensing fees. CouchTuner.com, a streaming site that lists foreign and domestic titles, features a legal disclaimer saying it doesn't host such shows but merely links to sites that do. Some viewers try other methods, like using a computer address to make it appear digitally as if they are residents of a foreign country, thereby allowing them access to local TV sites. In the U.S., some viewers sidestep the industry's attempt to impose regional DVD and Blu-Ray restrictions by purchasing players that work with discs from around the world.

Many fans of foreign shows are passionate about their long-distance relationships. "Doc Martin," a U.K. series available through outlets including the British-focused streaming service Acorn TV, has become a major preoccupation for Karen Gilleland, a grandmother from Boulder, Colo. She started a blog for "insanely addicted fans" that has racked up more than 500,000 hits. She also wrote 29 works of fan fiction based on the series, which follows the travails of a socially awkward doctor in a seaside village.

As a prize in a charity auction, Ms. Gilleland got to appear as an extra in an episode of the show last year. Dressed in a long denim skirt and crocheted blue top -- she bought it with the program's Aunt Joan in mind -- she spent several cold and rainy hours sitting on a curb, trying to act natural. In early takes, the camera caught her staring at star Martin Clunes. An assistant director finally asked her to stop, but she holds herself blameless. "He has such a magnetic quality about him," she said.

Foreign shows offer an easy way to fill airtime -- relatively inexpensive to license and capable of attracting a small but devoted fan base -- and more networks are entering the arena. "Probably five, ten years ago BBC America and PBS were the only games in town," said Lisa Holme, vice president of acquisitions for Hulu, noting heightened interest from outlets like Sundance and Ovation.

The race to present series in real time is particularly intense for Korean dramas, or K-dramas, the romantic comedies and melodramas that are a hit with young and often non-Asian viewers in the U.S. The subtitled shows appeal both as earnest escapism and guilty-pleasure kitsch. When earlier this year the streaming service Viki put the same day's episodes from Korea behind a paywall, subscriptions jumped 200 percent, with most of that growth coming from the U.S., said Viki CEO Tammy Nam.

The Korean video-on-demand service DramaFever (slogan: "TV's next big hit won't be in English") was acquired this year by Warner Bros. The site uses dozens of translators to subtitle shows within hours of their Asian debuts. "Imagine we lag a day in the release of an episode -- our fans are very loyal, and the ones who are very addicted will go to the illegal sites," said Suk Park, president and cofounder of DramaFever.

One of the fiercest battles over TV bootlegging came in 2012 when Americans tracked down pirated versions of "Downton Abbey" as the drama's new season aired in the U.K. The show wasn't due in the U.S. for months. In an interview with series star Hugh Bonneville, a reporter for New York magazine's culture site mentioned having already seen the season finale online. The actor, who plays the program's stuffy patriarch, chided, "Shame on you. Be ashamed."

BATTER UP

Why 'The Great British Bake Off' is Being Eaten Up in the U.S.

No. Not Mary Berry.

On Thursday, the BBC said that Ms. Berry, a judge who is a fan favorite on the U.K. sensation "The Great British Bake Off," would leave the show when it moves from the public broadcaster to Channel 4. In the series, called "The Great British Baking Show" in the U.S., amateur bakers politely compete for a cake stand. The program, which PBS began airing two years ago, has emerged as a cult hit in the U.S.

In a statement, Ms. Berry explained the move as a gesture of loyalty to the BBC. "I am just sad for the audience who may not be ready for change," she said. "I hope they understand my decision."

News roiled fans here as it did abroad. "Mary Berry is out, goodbye cruel world," Silvia Killingsworth, editor of the Awl and the Hairpin, wrote on Twitter in all capital letters.

The 81-year-old cookbook author, who called scrumptious desserts "scrummy" and used bake as a noun (as in, "nice bake"), helped make the competition Britain's most-watched show last year.

"Clad in her trademark floral blazers and natty neck scarves, chuckling indulgently at innuendos and giving a cheeky wink of approval at boozy bakes, Mary Berry CBE has become the nation's surrogate grandmother," the Telegraph wrote, anointing her the "doyenne of dough."

Ms. Berry's departure follows last week's announcement that cohosts Mel Giedroyc and Sue Perkins won't return next season, also in protest of the move. Remaining judge Paul Hollywood will stay on.

In recent weeks, the British have been in full froth over the latest season of the show as it airs in the U.K. It doesn't yet have an American premiere date. PBS will present additional seasons of the show over the next two years, with exact scheduling to be announced.

Impatient American fans have started searching for pirated videos to get their fix in U.K. time. Some justify the activity by arguing that the show airs on public TV in England, so it's basically free anyway. Most copyright lawyers would disagree.

When a YouTube user recently posted episode 4 -- Batter Week -- it got more than 32,000 hits in two days. That episode is no longer on the platform, typical for pirated streams that the TV industry chases in a game of internet whack-a-mole. YouTube uses a proprietary system to help content owners identify copyrighted material on the site.

-- Ellen Gamerman

Credit: By Ellen Gamerman

DETAILS

Subject:	Television programs; Internet; DVD; Streaming media; Seasons; Streaming services
Business indexing term:	Subject: Streaming services; Corporation: Netflix Inc; Industry: 51621 : Media Streaming Distribution Services, Social Networks, and Other Media Networks and Content Providers
Location:	United States--US; United Kingdom--UK
Company / organization:	Name: Netflix Inc; NAICS: 512120, 518210, 532282
Product name:	Apple iTunes
Classification:	51621: Media Streaming Distribution Services, Social Networks, and Other Media Networks and Content Providers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	D.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822321972

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-as-world-streams/docview/1822321972/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-10-01
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 73 of 500

ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment -- Books: How to Lose Friends And Influence People

Maloney, Jennifer . Maloney, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"Reputations," published in the U.S. this week by Riverhead Books, in a translation by Anne McLean, is the latest English-language release from Mr. Vasquez, a Colombian author described by the Nobel laureate Mario Vargas Llosa as "one of the most original new voices of Latin American literature." A couple of months later, news broke that the Colombian government was engaged in peace talks with Marxist rebels to end a half-century of conflict that has left more than 200,000 people dead and millions displaced.

FULL TEXT

['REPUTATIONS' BY JUAN GABRIEL VASQUEZ]

In 2012, Juan Gabriel Vasquez was struggling with the demands of his dual role as a novelist and weekly columnist for a Bogota newspaper. The book he was working on had him stumped. So he set it aside and, over four months, wrote a short novel about a political cartoonist. The story echoed the moral and personal dilemmas he had been facing in his own life: fights with friends who disagreed with his positions, and the risks inherent in having the power to influence people.

"Reputations," published in the U.S. this week by Riverhead Books, in a translation by Anne McLean, is the latest English-language release from Mr. Vasquez, a Colombian author described by the Nobel laureate Mario Vargas Llosa as "one of the most original new voices of Latin American literature."

Mr. Vasquez vaulted to international stardom in 2013 with the release of his fifth novel, "The Sound of Things Falling," about a young Bogota lawyer digging into the past of a dead friend with links to the drug trade. That book has sold at least 250,000 copies world-wide, according to Riverhead.

In "Reputations," the protagonist crosses an ethical line, drawing a cartoon that implicates a politician in a terrible act that may or may not have happened. Mr. Vasquez, 43 years old, said he began the book as an exploration of the vulnerability of our public image -- and "this strange relationship that opinion-makers have with that."

"That vanity, that feeling of power that you have, or you think you have, when you're followed as a political commentator -- this, I think, doesn't lead to anything good," he said in an interview from his home in Bogota. "That vanity has to be kept in check. And when you don't do that, when you don't realize that vanity and ego are part of the game . . . it can make you feel that you're allowed to say things with a sort of impunity, and that can take you to dangerous places."

Mr. Vasquez was born in Bogota in 1973 and grew up during the reign of terror of Pablo Escobar's Medellin drug cartel in the 1980s and '90s. As a child, he pored over books he found in his house by Ricardo Rendon, a Colombian political cartoonist in the 1920s "who could shape the life of a politician with a series of cartoons." After graduating with a degree in law from Rosario University, Mr. Vasquez moved to Europe in 1996. He published his first book, a novel titled "Persona," a year later.

While abroad, he began contributing a weekly column to the Bogota newspaper El Espectador in 2007, during the second term of then-President Alvaro Uribe Velez. Mr. Vasquez became one of the Colombian president's most vocal critics, a contrarian view in the author's circle of friends.

"I said this government was the most corrupt in recent history," he recalled. "That caused me a lot of trouble . . . Some friends stopped talking to me. Family members just used to leave the room" when talk turned to politics.

In 2012, after living in Europe for 16 years, Mr. Vasquez moved back to Bogota with his wife and twin daughters, then 6. A couple of months later, news broke that the Colombian government was engaged in peace talks with Marxist rebels to end a half-century of conflict that has left more than 200,000 people dead and millions displaced.

His columns took on new weight. "This is probably the most important thing to happen in our hemisphere for the last 50 years," said Mr. Vasquez, who supports the peace accord reached last month. Colombians will vote on the deal with the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, or FARC, in a referendum on Oct. 2.

The author had been making notes for three years about his experiences as a columnist before he started writing "Reputations" in 2012. "All my neuroses, all my tensions with the job, all the moments I thought I'm going to quit tomorrow," he said. "Getting insulted and losing friends and family, but staying true to your message in this fundamental way." He added that he has mended most of those relationships.

The book was published in Spanish in 2013, winning accolades including the Royal Spanish Academy Prize. He then turned back to his previous project, a longer novel called "The Shape of the Ruins," about a man consumed by conspiracy theories involving the assassinations of Colombian politician Jorge Eliecer Gaitan and John F. Kennedy.

The novel was demanding more and more of his time. In 2014, he ended his column to focus on finishing "The Shape of the Ruins." The book, now out in Spanish, is to be published in the U.S. in 2018.

"I write novels because I don't know things," Mr. Vasquez said. "Writing novels for me comes from uncertainties and doubts and questions. On the other hand, writing columns comes from certainties. I absolutely believe in something, and I want to convince you . . . To behave like a novelist for maybe five days a week and then two days a week behave like a columnist is very, very difficult. It leads to a lot of exhaustion -- emotional and intellectual exhaustion."

Since the FARC peace agreement, Mr. Vasquez has dived back into opinion writing. He has contributed op-eds to the Guardian, Spain's El Pais and Colombian newspapers, arguing in favor of the accord.

He's also working on a nonfiction book. In it, he argues that the novel as a genre made us the humans we are today.

Credit: By Jennifer Maloney

DETAILS

Subject:	Paramilitary groups; Peace negotiations; Books; Politics; Novels; Reputations; Writing; Latin American literature; Journalists; Guerrilla forces
Location:	United States--US
People:	Escobar, Pablo; Vargas Llosa, Mario (1936-2025)
Company / organization:	Name: Riverhead Books; NAICS: 513130; Name: El Espectador; NAICS: 513110; Name: Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	D.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1822321817
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-books-how-lose/docview/1822321817/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-04-14
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 74 of 500

ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment -- Review: The Candidates Revealed

Rabinowitz, Dorothy . Rabinowitz, Dorothy.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In this narrative, she was radioactive -- considered so serious a threat to her husband's re-election that the Clintons agreed to the direction of the super-duper political operative Dick Morris -- such was his reputation at the time -- that she withdraw from any active public role in the administration and re-create herself as a conventional first lady.

FULL TEXT

The Choice

Tuesday, 9 p.m., PBS

Days before Monday's debate, exhausted Americans can be forgiven a belief that they by now know everything worth knowing about the lives and dispositions of the presidential candidates. Still, it shouldn't take long for this "Frontline" documentary's intense scrutiny of those lives -- portraits awash in facts, revelations and reminders of half-forgotten events -- to shake that confidence. The film provides more than mere references to well-known, not to mention sensational, moments in the careers of the Clintons and Donald Trump. It delivers details and context. It brings us back unobtrusively, unnervingly, to the moments themselves -- to the impact of the news, for instance, about the navy-blue dress, stained with the president's DNA, that Monica Lewinsky had so thoughtfully saved.

The film is as evenhanded as a documentary of this sort can be -- one, that is, packed with commentators, with witnesses giving scathing testimony, and with, not least, the indisputable facts of each history. For all that's been written on the subject, no commentary more effectively captures the atmosphere surrounding Mr. Trump's breakup with his first wife, Ivana, with whom he had three children, than the one delivered by the much loved newspaper columnist Liz Smith. Ivana, Smith reports, had thrown herself into her arms, crying and saying that Donald didn't want her anymore. "He has told me," Ivana said, "he can't be sexually attracted to a woman who has had children."

But for all the headlines and scandals, commentators note, Mr. Trump was apparently undisturbed -- having absorbed the teaching of his mentor, Roy Cohn, whose first claim to fame was as assistant to Sen. Joseph McCarthy, that even the most negative publicity is good publicity in the end. He had learned a number of other things from Cohn as well, according to one of the film's Trump historians: to use lawsuits like bullets, to take no prisoners when it came to anyone who might get in his way -- advice to which he was by nature receptive.

The effectiveness of this technique is exemplified by the case of former Wall Street analyst Marvin Roffman, who lost his job for saying publicly -- to The Wall Street Journal -- that Mr. Trump's Taj Mahal casino would be unable to meet its expenses and would likely fail. Mr. Trump responded with a letter to the analyst's employers, telling them people in the industry considered Mr. Roffman unstable, and threatening a lawsuit unless he made a major public apology or was dismissed. Mr. Roffman, who had worked at his brokerage firm for 16 years, refused to back down. He was, he reports, fired on the spot.

The darker aspects of the Hillary Clinton portrait focus, not by accident, on a theme of special relevance today, namely her penchant for secretiveness. Recalling her role in the Clinton administration, and the way she created her doomed health-reform agenda, Carl Bernstein -- hardly an adversary of hers, especially in the current election -- recalls: "She's shutting down dissent. She is operating in secret. She's throwing her weight around in a way that people in the United States Congress are absolutely appalled by."

There is more of the kind about her career as first lady. In this narrative, she was radioactive -- considered so serious a threat to her husband's re-election that the Clintons agreed to the direction of the super-duper political operative Dick Morris -- such was his reputation at the time -- that she withdraw from any active public role in the administration and re-create herself as a conventional first lady. There are pictures of Mrs. Clinton gamely welcoming visitors who had come to see the White House Christmas tree -- altogether a grim sight.

Their unsparing observations notwithstanding, these two hours (produced and written by Michael Kirk and Mike Wiser) provide a richly detailed, instructive and, not least, humanizing view of the early lives of both these contenders. Welcome aids for the tortured weeks still ahead in this most terrifying of presidential contests.

Designated Survivor

Wednesdays, 10 p.m., ABC

It was hard to resist the captivating premise of "Designated Survivor," in which Kiefer Sutherland plays Tom Kirkman, a cabinet member of relatively modest status who finds himself head of the nation after a bomb attack on the Capitol during the State of the Union that kills the president and virtually every other significant member of the government. Among those still alive, there is powerful resistance to a colorless and inexperienced nobody like Kirkman in the role of president. But it's clear that this Clark Kent will soon be soaring aloft, defiant in his own mild way -- he's determined to lead the country.

The problem comes in the second episode, along with a suddenly increased capacity to resist everything about "Designated Survivor." Here we come up against the show's message, or more precisely its gross political tendentiousness: its vision of a vicious American nation, in the aftermath of the attack, hunting down its Muslim citizens; its pictures of police racing around Dearborn, Mich., dragging Muslims out of their homes, beating a teenager to death, all at the behest of the Michigan governor.

Not surprisingly, President Kirkman stands firmly against this brown-shirt brutality, a product of fevered writerly imaginations particularly loathsome to behold given the facts of history -- in particular the actual terror attacks of 9/11, after which, through all their fear and rage, Americans comported themselves with the utmost dignity.

It's now probably irrelevant to note that for all his splendid talents, Mr. Sutherland may not have been the best choice for the role of a virtuous milquetoast concealing a heart of steel -- the milquetoast part dominates even when the steel is flashed. Something inside may be alerting him to the nature of this enterprise -- possibly the Jack Bauer in him.

Credit: By Dorothy Rabinowitz

DETAILS

Subject:	First ladies; State elections
People:	Bernstein, Carl; Lewinsky, Monica
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	D.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1822321745
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-review-candidates/docview/1822321745/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 75 of 500

Business News: SolarCity Is Cutting Costs --- Solar-panel company drops TV advertising, switches to cheaper marketing tactics

Sweet, Cassandra . Sweet, Cassandra.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Big solar companies such as SolarCity and Vivint Solar Inc.have been engaged in a fierce battle to amass market share, analysts say, and have spent heavily on old-fashioned advertising, telephone and door-to-door canvassing, and booths at retail outlets to acquire new customers.

FULL TEXT

Cash-strapped SolarCity Corp. is trying to cut marketing costs amid competition from smaller upstarts using cheaper sales tactics -- such as paying Uber drivers to pitch solar panels to passengers.

Big solar companies such as SolarCity and Vivint Solar Inc.have been engaged in a fierce battle to amass market share, analysts say, and have spent heavily on old-fashioned advertising, telephone and door-to-door canvassing, and booths at retail outlets to acquire new customers. But the companies are spending more than they are taking in, and the costs are proving hard to sustain.

SolarCity spent $751 million in 2015 on sales, administrative and research costs, 88% more than its annual revenue of $400 million and the $399 million it spent the previous year. Through June, it had spent $438 million this year, 42% more than its revenue of $308 million. Its cash declined to $146 million on June 30 from $421 million a year earlier.

Seeking to survive as a stand-alone company until its proposed merger with Tesla Motors Inc., SolarCity has begun selling more solar panels to homeowners for cash, rather than its traditional business of leasing the panels and retaining ownership. It is also planning to sell outside investors more shares in the panels that it owns.

Earlier this month, SolarCity raised $305 million through one such cash equity transaction with Quantum Strategic Partners Ltd., the hedge fund of billionaire investor George Soros.

Last month, it sold $100 million of bonds to its chairman, Elon Musk, who also is Tesla's chief executive, and SolarCity's two top executives.

Cutting costs also is a crucial part of its plan. SolarCity has stopped buying television ads but is still advertising on the internet, selling door to door and setting up booths at Home Depot Inc. and Best Buy Co. stores.

Its sales and marketing costs should drop further after its planned merger with Tesla Motors, when the combined company would sell panels at Tesla's auto showrooms, said Chief Executive Lyndon Rive.

"We had a lot of headwinds that hit us" this year, Mr. Rive said, noting that Nevada regulators last December terminated lucrative state incentives for rooftop solar, dealing a blow to home solar companies.

Another challenge: Competition from smaller solar installers, who are using lower-cost methods to reach people. Online marketplaces such as Project Sunroof, a unit of Alphabet Inc.'s Google, connect homeowners with installers and other online networks, such as Pick My Solar and PowerScout, which solicit bids from local installers to help consumers get the best local deal.

One such online network, Geostellar, is testing an unusual sales tactic: using Uber and Lyft drivers to sell panels to riders.

The privately held company has enlisted about 50 drivers in New York, Boston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Washington, Dallas and Miami, who can snag commissions that start at about $1,000 per sale of solar systems.

Geostellar Chief Executive David Levine said the method is showing promise: drivers have generated about 220 sales since June.

Uber and Lyft declined to comment.

Credit: By Cassandra Sweet

DETAILS

Subject:	Solar energy; Marketing; Sales; Advertising; Costs; Cost reduction; Market strategy; Photovoltaic cells
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Marketing Sales Advertising Costs Cost reduction Market strategy; Corporation: Tesla Inc
Company / organization:	Name: Tesla Inc; NAICS: 336110, 336999
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822321633
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-solarcity-is-cutting-costs-solar/docview/1822321633/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Include Relevant Autopsies In Drug and Therapy Trials

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Neither he nor his clinical trial would know whether the targeted therapy did, in fact, fail, or if it succeeded in destroying the tumor, but the patient died of a therapy-related side effect.

FULL TEXT

I applaud the article "Clinical-Trial Rules Take Aim at Transparency" (U.S. News, Sept. 17) on the need to publicize bad side effects. I suggest one additional question: What did the autopsy reveal? The autopsy is a credible outcome measure; nothing else can attest as convincingly to the accuracy of a diagnosis or the efficacy of a particular therapy.

My personal experience is pertinent. I was recently diagnosed with stage IV lung cancer and was referred to an oncologist who touted the value of some new targeted and immunotherapy trials. I asked how many of his patients' autopsies he had seen and how many autopsies he had requested. The answer: None. Neither he nor his clinical trial would know whether the targeted therapy did, in fact, fail, or if it succeeded in destroying the tumor, but the patient died of a therapy-related side effect.

Richard E. Horowitz, M.D.

Los Angeles

DETAILS

Location:	Los Angeles California; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 23, 2016
Section:	Letters to the Editor
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822317597
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/include-relevant-autopsies-drug-therapy-trials/docview/1822317597/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-13
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 77 of 500

U.S. News: Protests Grip Charlotte, N.C. --- Demonstrations over a fatal police shooting turn violent for a second night

Bauerlein, Valerie . Bauerlein, Valerie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Others approached the officers' face masks, saying, "Why do you keep killing us?" Shortly thereafter, protesters confronted police downtown and appeared to throw water bottles and chase police cars.

FULL TEXT

CHARLOTTE, N.C. -- A person was shot and an officer was injured during a second night of protests Wednesday following the fatal police shooting of a black man the day before.

The protester was shot by a civilian downtown just after 8 p.m., according to the city of Charlotte, and was on life support as of late Wednesday. The Charlotte-Mecklenburg Police Department "did not fire the shot," the city said in a tweet.

The evening began peacefully with a vigil at a 6-acre downtown park. But as some protesters left the park and marched through the streets, they faced off with police in riot gear, holding their hands in the air, chanting, "Hands up, don't shoot." Others approached the officers' face masks, saying, "Why do you keep killing us?"

Shortly thereafter, protesters confronted police downtown and appeared to throw water bottles and chase police cars. Police responded with tear gas. When a man fell in the street, it was initially unclear whether he had been shot by police or someone in the crowd.

Violent protests continued toward midnight Wednesday in the central business district. Windows at restaurants and major hotels were smashed, and police in riot gear sought to regain control of the streets.

Gov. Pat McCrory, a former Charlotte mayor, condemned violent protests in a statement. He later declared a state of emergency.

The violent protests began Tuesday night, after Keith Lamont Scott was shot by a police officer in a north Charlotte apartment complex parking lot.

Police officers on Wednesday repeated their account that Mr. Scott was armed with a gun and ignored their commands to drop his weapon.

But some family members and civil-rights leaders said they remained skeptical of the police account. Mr. Scott's family members have said on social media that police accosted him while he read a book in his car and waited to pick up one of his children from school.

On Wednesday morning, Charlotte-Mecklenburg Police Chief Kerr Putney said Mr. Scott was "posing a threat" to officers who approached him in a parking lot.

Officers were seeking to serve a warrant on another man on Tuesday afternoon when they approached Mr. Scott, who got out of his car with a gun, got back in the car and then out again, police said. Mr. Scott was shot by Officer Brentley Vinson, a black officer with two years' experience on the force, the chief said.

Chief Putney said the initial investigation shed doubt on the version of events described by Mr. Scott's family.

Cameron McWhirter contributed to this article.

Credit: By Valerie Bauerlein

DETAILS

Subject:	Shootings; Demonstrations & protests; Riots; Deadly force; Central business districts; Police shootings
Business indexing term:	Subject: Central business districts
Location:	Charlotte North Carolina; United States--US
People:	Scott, Keith Lamont
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822061358
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-protests-grip-charlotte-n-c/docview/1822061358/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 78 of 500

U.S. News: Rahami Allegedly Built Bombs in Open --- Investigators say suspect ordered parts on eBay and tested explosives in backyard

Shallwani, Pervaiz; Devlin, Barrett . Shallwani, Pervaiz; Devlin, Barrett.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The materials included a five-pound pack of food-grade Citric Acid USP, which can be used in improvised explosive devices; a printed circuit board; and a package of 100 electric igniters for a fireworks firing system, which can serve as a "critical component" in detonating a bomb.

FULL TEXT

New York terror suspect Ahmad Rahami assembled much of his bomb-making material in plain view -- ordering components on Ebay, having them delivered to a New Jersey business where he worked, and even testing some of the material in his family's backyard, according to authorities.

Based on the evidence collected to date, a top priority for investigators is understanding whether Mr. Rahami's immediate relatives knew about his alleged plotting, law-enforcement officials said.

"It's pretty hard to imagine he built all these bombs and nobody noticed anything," said one senior official.

Mr. Rahami's father, Mohammed Rahami, has said he had "no idea" his son was allegedly planning attacks. Other members of his family have declined to speak to reporters, though they are talking to investigators.

A criminal complaint filed against Mr. Rahami on Tuesday night said investigators had recovered a video from a relative's cellphone showing him testing incendiary material in the backyard of his family's home, just two days before he placed a series of bombs in New York and New Jersey. One of the devices exploded in the Manhattan neighborhood of Chelsea, injuring 31 people.

Officials say the video was recovered from the phone of one of Mr. Rahami's sisters. It captures a fuse being lit on a black container partially buried in the ground, a loud noise and flames -- immediately followed by billowing smoke and laughter. Mr. Rahami can then be seen entering the frame and picking up the container, according to the complaint.

Terrorism investigators often take a hard look at a suspect's family members to determine what, if anything, they knew about the plot, though initial suspicions may not ultimately result in charges against the relatives.

In the case of the 2013 Boston Marathon bombing, investigators focused intensely on the wife of one of the killers, but she denied knowledge of the plot and was never charged. In the Orlando, Fla., nightclub shooting this year, investigators have yet to reach a final conclusion about the gunman's wife, officials said.

In the current probe, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has interviewed Mr. Rahami's wife, Asia Bibi Rahami, who left the country in June. She was cooperative and helpful, officials said.

For now, officials said, the investigation is focused more on Mr. Rahami's family in New Jersey than on his spouse overseas, though they caution that the case remains very fluid as they conduct interviews and gather evidence.

In all, authorities have recovered 10 explosive devices -- eight pipe bombs and two pressure-cooker bombs -- that they believe were planted by Mr. Rahami.

Authorities on Wednesday released an image of two men who may have inadvertently defused one of the Chelsea bombs. The men were caught on a surveillance video removing the bomb from a rolling backpack and then leaving with the bag. Officials emphasized the men aren't suspects, but say they want to talk to them as part of the inquiry.

Investigators determined that Mr. Rahami ordered many of the components used in the bombs through eBay between June 20 and Aug. 10, using the registration name "Ahmad Rahimi" and having the packages shipped to a business in Perth Amboy, N.J., where he worked until recently.

The materials included a five-pound pack of food-grade Citric Acid USP, which can be used in improvised explosive devices; a printed circuit board; and a package of 100 electric igniters for a fireworks firing system, which can serve as a "critical component" in detonating a bomb.

The FBI operates many "tripwire"" programs involving private companies and retailers. These are systems designed to alert investigators when suspicious purchases are made of materials that could be used for bomb-making.

A eBay spokesman said it has "dedicated in-house teams around the globe that work both proactively and reactively with law-enforcement agencies," using software filters to flag suspicious buying activity. Neither the company nor law-enforcement officials would say if those filters flagged Mr. Rahami's purchases.

Asked about the suspect's online purchases, U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara, whose office will prosecute the case, said, "It becomes difficult to figure out when people are buying things that are not illicit in and of themselves. I think we have gotten a lot better at making sure there are tripwires when people are buying things that might be suspect."

Credit: By Pervaiz Shallwani and Devlin Barrett

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Bombings; Enforcement
Business indexing term:	Corporation: eBay Inc

Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Rahami, Ahmad Khan
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822061338
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-rahami-allegedly-built-bombs-open/docview/1822061338/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

U.S. News: Winners Of 'Genius Grants' Unveiled

Mahtani, Shibani . Mahtani, Shibani.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The gadget helped propel Mr. Prakash, along with 22 others, into the ranks of the MacArthur "genius" grant recipients, who are awarded a no-strings-attached $625,000 grant by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation for showing exemplary creativity in their fields.

FULL TEXT

Manu Prakash grew up folding origami paper frogs and cranes in his hometown in northern India.

So it seemed natural for the 36-year-old Stanford University biologist to build an inexpensive microscope for the developing world that can be put together from a piece of paper.

His Foldscope, which costs less than $1 to produce and includes built-in lenses, is now used in 130 countries to help identify infectious diseases, among other things.

The gadget helped propel Mr. Prakash, along with 22 others, into the ranks of the MacArthur "genius" grant recipients, who are awarded a no-strings-attached $625,000 grant by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation for showing exemplary creativity in their fields.

He is joined by Dianne Newman, a 44-year-old microbiologist investigating the role that bacteria has played in shaping the Earth; Josh Kun, a 45-year-old cultural historian, who has linked Los Angeles menus of the 1900s to cultural trends of today; and Gene Luen Yang, a 43-year-old comic-book artist who is working on the first Asian Superman.

Mr. Yang is among a number of grant recipients bringing unique perspectives to their mediums, amid a national conversation over race and identity. Branden Jacob-Jenkins, a 31-year-old African-American playwright, explores issues of identity, family, class and race. Joyce J. Scott, 67, uses beadwork to depict problems like domestic violence and the sacrifices of African-American domestic servants during the era of slavery and beyond. Linguist and scholar Daryl Baldwin, 53, is working to revive the intellectual heritage of Miami, or Myaamia, Indians.

Credit: By Shibani Mahtani

DETAILS

Subject:	Grants
Company / organization:	Name: John D & Catherine T MacArthur Foundation; NAICS: 813211

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822061162
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-winners-genius-grants-unveiled/docview/1822061162/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 80 of 500

Business News: Oil Industry, Investors React to SEC's Exxon Climate-Change Probe

Olson, Bradley; Rapoport, Michael . Olson, Bradley; Rapoport, Michael.

ABSTRACT

The federal investigation of how Exxon Mobil Corp values assets in a world of increasing climate-change regulations elicited sharp reactions on Wednesday, with some investors seeing it as a tipping point in a campaign to get companies to disclose climate risks, and some oil industry leaders calling it a politically motivated attack.

FULL TEXT

The federal investigation of how Exxon Mobil Corp values assets in a world of increasing climate-change regulations elicited sharp reactions on Wednesday, with some investors seeing it as a tipping point in a campaign to get companies to disclose climate risks, and some oil industry leaders calling it a politically motivated attack.

But many agreed on one thing: It was a potentially transformative moment for U.S. companies, which now have to worry about regulators' scrutiny of future climate change impacts more seriously than before.

The probe by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission is focused on how Exxon calculates the impact to its business from climate change, including what figures the company uses to evaluate the viability of future projects.

The SEC hasn't publicly disclosed it is investigating Exxon, but the probe was confirmed by an Exxon spokesman on Tuesday.

Defenders of Exxon saw the probe as an indication that the SEC has moved into partisan politics, taking up a cause championed by some Democratic state attorneys general, who have led probes into the company's response to climate change.

"It seems like to me it's a witch hunt," Scott Sheffield, chief executive of oil producer Pioneer Natural Resources Co., said during an industry conference Wednesday.

Some investors and activists, meanwhile, cited what they saw as Exxon's insularity as a potential rationale for the SEC.

The company's pushback amid pressure from some shareholders on the issue is emblematic of the response of many U.S. oil and gas companies, a strategy that is likely to change in the face of new SEC scrutiny, said Anne Simpson, the investment director for sustainability at the California Public Employees' Retirement System.

Exxon and the SEC declined to comment on Wednesday.

Erin Ailworth contributed to this article.

Credit: By Bradley Olson and Michael Rapoport

DETAILS

Subject:	Climate change; Disclosure; Petroleum industry; Natural gas utilities
Business indexing term:	Subject: Disclosure Petroleum industry Natural gas utilities
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Securities & Exchange Commission; NAICS: 926150; Name: Exxon Mobil Corp; NAICS: 211120, 457110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822061117
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-oil-industry-investors-react-secs/docview/1822061117/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: Early Text Uncovered in Burned Scroll

Robert Lee Hotz . Robert Lee Hotz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In research published Wednesday in Science Advances, computer analysts at the University of Kentucky in Lexington detailed the technology they used to uncover text within a roll of parchment reduced to charcoal in a burning synagogue 1,500 years ago, "virtually unwrapping" the scroll without ever touching it.

FULL TEXT

From a charred Hebrew scroll, researchers resurrected one of the earliest known versions of the Old Testament using a new digital reconstruction technique that may prove invaluable in revealing words from other previously unreadable finds, said scientists.

In research published Wednesday in Science Advances, computer analysts at the University of Kentucky in Lexington detailed the technology they used to uncover text within a roll of parchment reduced to charcoal in a burning synagogue 1,500 years ago, "virtually unwrapping" the scroll without ever touching it.

While important to archaeologists, the technique may prove useful for forensic experts to recover words from more modern texts damaged by fire or shredding, they said. The recovery software can be used in conjunction with almost any digital scanning technique.

The words recovered from the En-Gedi scroll, first made public by the Israel Antiquities Authority last year, are verses from the Book of Leviticus, making it the most ancient scroll from the five books of the Hebrew Torah to be found since the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Archaeologists unearthed the parchment scroll in 1970 at the site of a Jewish village in Israel called En-Gedi. The entire town and its synagogue burned to the ground sometime around the year 600.

Credit: By Robert Lee Hotz

DETAILS

Subject:	Old Testament; Sacred texts; Synagogues
Company / organization:	Name: Israel Antiquities Authority; NAICS: 926120

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822061106
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-early-text-uncovered-burned-scroll/docview/1822061106/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 82 of 500

City News: Blast Damage Aid Planned

Vilensky, Mike . Vilensky, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The state Department of Financial Services will help those affected coordinate with state and federal programs that assist businesses hurt by disasters and crises, including a federal emergency-loan program for small businesses and a state office for crisis victims, Mr. Cuomo said.

FULL TEXT

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said on Wednesday that he reached an agreement with legislative leaders to help businesses and residents affected by Saturday's bombing in Manhattan cover damages and injuries with insurance.

The state Department of Financial Services will help those affected coordinate with state and federal programs that assist businesses hurt by disasters and crises, including a federal emergency-loan program for small businesses and a state office for crisis victims, Mr. Cuomo said.

For those not covered by private or public insurance programs or left with uninsured claims, officials are developing a grant program to cover costs related to the bombing, the governor said.

Mr. Cuomo, a Democrat, said the state money would come from an emergency fund, though he doesn't have an estimated figure yet. The state plans to set up a mobile office in Chelsea, the Manhattan neighborhood where the bombing occurred, to help those in need submit insurance claims and work to have them expedited, he said.

"We have been working very hard post-bombing. . .to make sure anyone who was hurt directly or indirectly from the explosion, property damage, etcetera, is compensated and gets up and running as quickly as possible," Mr. Cuomo said.

The effort comes as area business owners began expressing concerns about costs associated with the bombing. U.S. Rep. Nydia Velazquez, a Democrat who represents portions of Brooklyn, Queens and Manhattan, called on Mr. Cuomo to certify that small businesses in the area are eligible for federal emergency loans.

The bomb that went off in Chelsea on Saturday injured 31 people and caused damage to some local businesses.

Credit: By Mike Vilensky

DETAILS

Subject:	Small business
Business indexing term:	Subject: Small business
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Velazquez, Nydia M
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.22
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822061081
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-blast-damage-aid-planned/docview/1822061081/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 83 of 500

Election 2016: Trump Questions Police Shooting

Bender, Michael C; Hackman, Michelle . Bender, Michael C; Hackman, Michelle.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump, who often expresses solidarity with law enforcement, said he was troubled by the shooting death last week of an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla., and said the police may be at fault.

FULL TEXT

Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump, who often expresses solidarity with law enforcement, said he was troubled by the shooting death last week of an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla., and said the police may be at fault.

"That man went to the car, hands-up, put his hand on the car -- to me it looked like he did everything you're supposed to," Mr. Trump said Wednesday in Cleveland, referring to 40-year-old Terence Crutcher.

The Tulsa police department and the U.S. Justice Department are investigating the shooting.

In Orlando, Fla., Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton, who has met with families of African-Americans killed by police officers, invoked the shooting death of Mr. Crutcher as well as the separate shooting of Keith Lamont Scott in Charlotte, N.C., saying the two deaths were "very upsetting."

"It's unbearable," she said on Wednesday. "And it needs to become intolerable."

Mr. Trump has aimed to align himself with law enforcement as a racially charged debate has unfolded following police shootings and protests around the country.

The GOP nominee has called for allowing police more latitude in profiling suspects and expressed support Wednesday in a town hall organized by Fox News for "stop-and-frisk" police tactics as a way to reduce violence. He won the endorsement of the Fraternal Order of Police earlier this month.

But in recent weeks, Mr. Trump has been trying to repair his standing among minority voters. He had support from 5% of registered black voters in a new Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll taken Sept. 16-19.

Credit: By Michael C. Bender and Michelle Hackman

DETAILS

Subject:	Deadly force; Nominations; Shootings; Law enforcement; Police shootings
Location:	Cleveland Ohio; United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822060955
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-questions-police-shooting/docview/1822060955/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 84 of 500

Business News: Zuckerberg Fund to Invest $3 Billion - -- The family aims to create technology that could hasten research on disease in the next decade

Seetharaman, Deepa . Seetharaman, Deepa.

ABSTRACT

"Because if we can develop the new tools that allow us to see these categories of disease in new ways, we could empower scientists all over the world to make much faster progress."

FULL TEXT

Facebook Inc. Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg and his wife Priscilla Chan on Wednesday committed to invest more than $3 billion during the next decade to build technology that can speed up research on disease.

The first investment by the couple's for-profit philanthropic arm, the Chan Zuckerberg Initiative LLC, will be $600 million to create a research lab of engineers and scientists based in San Francisco, Dr. Chan said.

At the lab, called Biohub, engineers and researchers from the University of California, San Francisco, Stanford University and the University of California, Berkeley, will create tools for researchers.

"This focus on building on tools suggests a road map for how we might go about curing, preventing and managing all diseases this century," Mr. Zuckerberg said. "Because if we can develop the new tools that allow us to see these categories of disease in new ways, we could empower scientists all over the world to make much faster progress."

One such tool is a "cell atlas" or a map of all the different cell types in the human body and their different states.

Dr. Chan announced the $3 billion investment during an event in San Francisco attended by many of Silicon Valley's elite, including Facebook Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg and CEO of Alphabet Inc.'s Google unit Sundar Pichai. Microsoft Inc. founder Bill Gates, whom Mr. Zuckerberg described as a mentor for decades, also spoke.

Said philanthropist Melinda Gates: "I admire Priscilla and Mark for choosing to focus their new philanthropic initiative on basic scientific research. Now, more than ever, we need this kind of leadership. Whether in the tech sector or in government, it is exciting to see people investing their resources to improve global health and development."

The pledge is among the first investments the couple will make through the Chan Zuckerberg Initiative, which they created last year. Mr. Zuckerberg and Dr. Chan have promised to give away 99% of their wealth over their lifetimes through the entity in areas such as education and health care. Currently valued at $46 billion, it is one of the world's largest philanthropic initiatives.

Mr. Zuckerberg mentioned a few potential tools that could be built, such as using machine learning to analyze large databases of cancer genomes or making a chip to diagnose any infectious disease. He and others on the stage also referenced developing a map "of all the different kinds of cell types in our body and the different states" that could be a quick reference for people who are designing drugs.

In his remarks, Mr. Zuckerberg noted that scientific breakthroughs were often preceded by new tools, such as the telescope and microscope.

The couple is creating Chan Zuckerberg Science, which will be led by Cornelia Bargmann, a neuroscientist at Rockefeller University who was among the first recipients of the Breakthrough Prize, a $3 million annual prize created by Mr. Zuckerberg alongside Russian tech investor Yuri Milner and Google co-founder Sergey Brin.

Both Dr. Chan and her husband noted that they spoke to dozens of top scientists who think it is possible to cure, prevent or manage diseases by the end of the century.

Dr. Chan referenced her work as a pediatrician and treating children with illnesses that can't be cured. "In those moments and many others, we are at the limit of what we understand," Dr. Chan said. "We want to push back that boundary."

Credit: By Deepa Seetharaman

DETAILS

Subject:	Disease; Medical research; Philanthropy; Initiatives
Location:	San Francisco California; United States--US
People:	Zuckerberg, Mark; Chan, Priscilla
Company / organization:	Name: Chan Zuckerberg Initiative; NAICS: 523910, 813211; Name: Facebook Inc; NAICS: 516210, 518210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822060928

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-zuckerberg-fund-invest-3-billion/docview/1822060928/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 85 of 500

Business Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Univision Communications, which in August won the digital media company at a court-administered bankruptcy auction for $135 million, has named News Corp executive Raju Narisetti as chief executive officer.

FULL TEXT

AVIATION

Boeing, Airbus Win

Right to Sell to Iran

The U.S. government has given plane makers Boeing Co. and Airbus Group SE the all-clear to deliver jetliners to Iran Air in one of the highest-profile trade breakthroughs since nuclear sanctions were lifted on the Islamic Republic in January.

Western powers removed sanctions on Iran in return for the country agreeing to constrain its nuclear program. Business has been slow to materialize amid concern of running afoul of U.S. restrictions.

Iran Air announced in January it planned to buy Airbus planes, but the transaction stalled amid a lack of approvals from the U.S. Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control rules. OFAC had to approve the license because a portion of Airbus planes are made in the U.S.

Boeing aims to sell 80 jets directly to Iran Air as part of a proposed deal valued at up to $17.6 billion. The Airbus deal had a list price value of $27 billion.

-- Robert Wall and Doug Cameron

GENERAL MILLS

Yogurt Business

Declines in U.S.

General Mills Inc.'s sales fell 7% to $3.9 billion in the latest quarter as its yogurt business plunged in the U.S., where shoppers are trading Yoplait for Greek-style brands.

Minneapolis-based General Mills has struggled to keep up with changing eating habits.

General Mills reported a profit of $409 million, or 67 cents a share, down from $426.6 million, or 69 cents a share, a year earlier. Adjusted for certain restructuring costs and other one-time items, per-share earnings fell to 78 cents from 79 cents. Analysts expected 75 cents a share, according to Thomson Reuters.

-- Annie Gasparro

GAWKER MEDIA

Univision Unit Gets

New Name and Chief

The entity formerly known as Gawker Media has a new name and chief executive.

Univision Communications, which in August won the digital media company at a court-administered bankruptcy auction for $135 million, has named News Corp executive Raju Narisetti as chief executive officer.

Mr. Narisetti, who effectively is filling the shoes of Gawker founder and former CEO Nick Denton, will oversee the business and editorial operations of the newly named Gizmodo Media Group, which houses Gizmodo, Jalopnik, Jezebel, Deadspin, Lifehacker and Kotaku.

Mr. Narisetti is the senior vice president of strategy at News Corp, which owns The Wall Street Journal, where he began his journalism career as a reporter and editor. He served as managing editor of the Washington Post from 2009 to 2012 and was founder and editor of Indian business newspaper Mint.

-- Steven Perlberg

DETAILS

Subject:	Financial performance; Chief executive officers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Financial performance Chief executive officers; Corporation: News Corp General Mills Inc Airbus SAS
Location:	United States--US; Iran
People:	Denton, Nick
Company / organization:	Name: Thomson Reuters; NAICS: 513110, 513140; Name: Iran Air; NAICS: 481111; Name: General Mills Inc; NAICS: 311230, 311511, 311824, 311991; Name: News Corp; NAICS: 513110, 516120, 551112; Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414; Name: Department of the Treasury; NAICS: 921130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055117
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1822055117/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2025-01-29
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 86 of 500

Business News: U.S. Beef Producers Cautious on China Plan

Gee, Kelsey; Craymer, Lucy; Blumenstein, Rebecca . Gee, Kelsey; Craymer, Lucy; Blumenstein, Rebecca.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

China has had a ban in place on most U.S. beef imports since 2003, partly due to concerns about the spread of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or "mad cow" disease, after a cow with the disease was found in Washington state.

FULL TEXT

U.S. beef producers on Wednesday reacted cautiously to a pledge by China's premier to lift a ban on U.S. beef imports that has restricted access to the market for more than a decade.

Industry officials said the lack of a clear timeline for lifting the de facto import ban in place since 2003 limited the potential upside for an industry reeling from rising supplies and a sharp drop in prices.

Chinese Premier Li Keqiang said in a speech in New York on Tuesday that the country would "soon" allow imports of U.S. beef, fueling optimism among trade groups who had hoped the ban would be lifted by the end of the year.

The remarks that Chinese consumers should no longer be denied the "choice" on dining U.S. beef, were enough to spark an early rally in U.S. cattle futures, but that later fizzled to close less than 1% higher at $1.0855 a pound at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Cattle futures skidded to six-year lows earlier this month, as supplies have swelled in the U.S., piling up in cold storage warehouses across the country.

"The question I'm left with is, 'What is the meaning of 'soon' here?'" said Brett Stuart, president of Global AgriTrends LLC. "Meetings [between the two countries' agricultural officials] have been off and on for 13 years."

Big U.S. meatpackers were just as cautious.

"We are encouraged by Premier Li's comments and are interested in seeing any proposed next steps for potential future implementation," said Mike Martin, director of communications for Cargill Inc.

A spokeswoman for Tyson Foods Inc., the largest U.S. meat processor, said she "would rather not speculate at this time" about the fate of the U.S.-China meat trade. Tyson shares closed up 1.5% at $75.69.

China has had a ban in place on most U.S. beef imports since 2003, partly due to concerns about the spread of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or "mad cow" disease, after a cow with the disease was found in Washington state.

With U.S. freezers heaving with beef as the domestic herd expands, China offers a potential outlet. The country consumes around 13% of the world's beef, with Brazil and Australia the top overseas suppliers.

"The cost of being absent [for the U.S.] from this market continues to mount," said Michael Underhill, chief investment officer at Wisconsin-based Capital Innovations, which has nearly $1 billion of assets under management.

China was expected to import 825,000 metric tons of beef in 2016, up 24% on the prior year, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

U.S. beef accounted for 70% of the 11,000 tons imported into China in 2002, and with the growth of the market there were significant opportunities for producers, said Angus Gidley-Baird, an analyst at Rabobank.

U.S. beef has been making its way into China through gray channels -- either being smuggled in over the border from Hong Kong or Vietnam. This means that the opening of official channels will likely reduce exports to other countries.

Credit: By Kelsey Gee, Lucy Craymer and Rebecca Blumenstein

DETAILS

Subject:	Beef; International trade; Cattle industry; Trade restrictions; Bans; Bovine spongiform encephalopathy
Business indexing term:	Subject: International trade Cattle industry Trade restrictions; Corporation: Cargill Inc; Industry: 11211 : Beef Cattle Ranchin g and Farming, including Feedlots
Location:	United States--US; China
Company / organization:	Name: Cargill Inc; NAICS: 111110, 111199, 311211, 325312, 424510, 424590, 493130; Name: Chicago Mercantile Exchange Inc; NAICS: 523210; Name: Tyson Foods Inc; NAICS: 311612, 311615; Name: Department of Agriculture; NAICS: 926140
Classification:	11211: Beef Cattle Ranching and Farming, including Feedlots
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055052
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-u-s-beef-producers-cautious-on/docview/1822055052/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-09-28
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 87 of 500

City News: Connecticut to Pay Sikorsky for Hires

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The plan has solid backing with the Democratic leaders of the state House of Representatives and state Senate, along with the state representatives for Stratford, Conn., home to Sikorsky.

FULL TEXT

Connecticut Gov. Dannel Malloy announced details Wednesday of a $220 million deal with Lockheed Martin Corp. that would guarantee the company continues to produce helicopters in the state through June 2032.

The agreement ensures that Sikorsky Aircraft, which Lockheed bought for $9 billion in 2015, will keep its headquarters in Connecticut. Sikorsky employs more than 7,500 people in the state, and the deal provides a variety of incentives for the company to boost its hiring with a target of 8,032 positions by 2032.

Sikorsky would get up $120 million in grants from the state if it hits targets for the number of workers it employs, how much its payroll totals for those employees, how much it spends with Connecticut suppliers and how much it spends on capital expenditures in the state.

The company could also get up to $80 million in sales-and-use tax exemptions. It could also get up to $20 million in performance incentives, if the spending and hiring targets are exceeded

Dan Schultz, president of Sikorsky, said at a news conference Wednesday that the company had been giving serious thought about moving out of state even before it was bought by Lockheed.

Mr. Malloy, a Democrat, began meeting with Sikorsky executives to reach a deal in June. Without the agreement, "thousands of jobs at this facility and thousands of jobs at the broader supply chain would be lost," Mr. Malloy said at the news conference.

Earlier this year, Mr. Malloy was forced to defend his economic-development policies after General Electric Co. announced it would leave the state for Boston.

The Democratic-controlled state Legislature still must approve the deal, during a special session scheduled for Sept. 28. The plan has solid backing with the Democratic leaders of the state House of Representatives and state Senate, along with the state representatives for Stratford, Conn., home to Sikorsky.

The company also needs to reach an agreement with Teamsters Local 1150, which represents its employees. Mr. Schultz said Sikorsky made a proposal to the union's leadership that would be subject to approval by rank-and-file members. He declined to disclose what was in that agreement. Officials with Teamsters Local 1150 didn't return a request for comment.

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

Subject:	Agreements; Press conferences; Bills; Military helicopters; Political leadership
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	Connecticut; United States--US

Company / organization:	Name: Sikorsky Aircraft Corp; NAICS: 336411; Name: General Electric Co; NAICS: 332510, 334290, 334512, 334519; Name: House of Representatives; NAICS: 921120; Name: Lockheed Martin Corp; NAICS: 212319, 334290, 336411, 336413, 336414
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.22
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055048
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-connecticut-pay-sikorsky-hires/docview/1822055048/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]party candidates have shown durable support in polls, complicating the electoral math. ---

FULL TEXT

The U.S. and Russia wrangled over who killed aid workers in Syria as Washington pressed Moscow on a new plan to halt resurgent violence.

Investigators are trying to learn if Rahami's family knew about the bombing suspect's alleged plotting after a video showed him testing incendiary material in their backyard.

Clinton is maintaining a lead over Trump but the race continues to tighten, a new Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll found.

Third-party candidates have shown durable support in polls, complicating the electoral math.

The Pentagon is asking for as many as 500 more troops for Iraq ahead of a campaign to retake Mosul from Islamic State.

One person was shot and a police officer was injured in a second night of Charlotte, N.C., unrest after the fatal police shooting of a black man.

A meeting between Obama and Netanyahu was overshadowed by a new spate of Israeli-Palestinian violence.

Facebook's Zuckerberg and his wife committed to invest more than $3 billion to build technology that can speed up disease research.

Old Testament text was resurrected with a new digital technique.

DETAILS

Subject:	Shootings
Location:	Iraq; United States--US; Syria; Russia
Company / organization:	Name: NBC News Channel; NAICS: 516120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055046
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1822055046/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 89 of 500

City News -- Urban Gardner: Explosion Left City Wary but Uncowed

Gardner, Ralph, Jr . Gardner, Ralph, Jr.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]I've spent a lot of time over the years hanging out with cops and poring through "61s," the NYPD's shorthand for crime reports, at my local station house.

FULL TEXT

In the wake of Saturday's bombing in Chelsea, my daughter Gracie asked whether I'm vigilant about my surroundings and how often I think about the possibility of terrorism.

The answer: always. As a matter of sad fact, I don't linger in places such as Grand Central Terminal, magnificent as it is, because I fear it would make an inviting target. I suspect that says more about me than about the possibility of catastrophe in New York City.

Some of the blame goes to my father, who believed that anything that can go wrong will go wrong. I fight that curdled view of the universe, though it's hard to shake your genetic inheritance.

I also grew up at a time of ultimate fear. It was called the Cold War. If you think things are sketchy now, you're unfamiliar with the concept of "mutually assured destruction."

Finally, I've spent a lot of time over the years hanging out with cops and poring through "61s," the NYPD's shorthand for crime reports, at my local station house.

From the police I learned that the best way to avoid becoming a victim is to try always to be aware who's around you. Having said that, I can't help but feel that one of the takeaways from the weekend's incident isn't that New York suffered a blow but that it knows how to take a punch.

The area where the blast occurred and where another device was discovered may have been cordoned off and its residents understandably traumatized, but the rest of the city seemed hardly to miss a beat.

I watched that loop of security-camera videos that played on the news, and the panicked pedestrians in the seconds after the explosion.

To the extent one could tell from the grainy footage, those people are much of what's hopeful about the city. Most were young. At least one woman ran awkwardly in heels.

New York has a special talent for being simultaneously innocent and blase. It may be the only place in the world where 100 world leaders and their motorcades can descend on the United Nations, as they're doing this week, and the only interest among most New Yorkers is whether their commutes will be affected.

Gracie, who is 23 years old, had been on West 23rd Street the night before the bombing, taking her boyfriend for his birthday to El Quijote for the $24.95 lobster special.

Her older sister, Lucy, 27, was at a garden party in Brooklyn. "I'm trying not to say anything indelicate," she said, referring to Chelsea, "but it's not where someone of my age and interest goes for a good time. It's more the place you end up by mistake for someone's birthday party."

You never feel a place is home as much as when it's under attack. Unassuming 23rd Street, home to the Chelsea Hotel, Doughnut Plant and Home Depot, suddenly felt like the latest battlefield in the war on terror.

But it's another denizen of that block that resonated with me most. It's Selis Manor, residential housing for the blind and visually impaired, located behind the dumpster where the bomb went off.

A few months back, I met Sharon Lash, one of the building's tenants. She was having dinner at the Malibu, a diner also on 23rd Street that caters to her and her handicapped neighbors.

I remember her smile as waiter Damian Hejmo cut up her eggplant Parmesan, her sense of humor in the face of her disability, her full life.

One of the Malibu's employees told me that Ms. Lash is fine. In fact, she'd been in for dinner since the incident.

It takes a lot more than a homemade bomb to keep a New Yorker from going out.

ralph.gardner@wsj.com

Credit: By Ralph Gardner Jr.

DETAILS

Subject:

Bombings

Location:	New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120; Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.22
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055043
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-urban-gardner-explosion-left-wary/docview/1822055043/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Pair Who Stumbled Across Bomb Sought

Shallwani, Pervaiz . Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Police combing the area for evidence found the bomb a few hours later on the sidewalk, setting off a delicate operation to remove it.

FULL TEXT

To the two men casually strolling through a Manhattan side street Saturday night, the rolling bag appeared to be nothing more than a perfectly good piece of abandoned luggage.

For authorities, the unidentified men on a surveillance video may have inadvertently defused a second pressure-cooker bomb that was discovered shortly after an explosion injured 31 people in the Chelsea neighborhood.

On Wednesday, authorities, who had been unable to identify the men, released a poster with a screenshot from the video showing the two men walking together down West 27th Street, asking the public for help in identifying them. Investigators believe the men could be key witnesses, and also want the bag, which they consider to be evidence in the case.

"We have no reason to believe that they are connected," said New York Police Department Chief of Counterterrorism James Water. "I can't stress enough, they are witnesses at this point."

The plea comes as investigators continue to gather evidence in the case against Ahmad Rahami, the 28-year-old New Jersey man who has been charged with planting bombs in New York and New Jersey over the weekend.

The surveillance video captured Mr. Rahami rolling what appears to be a travel bag along West 27th Street and then leaving it there some time after 8:30 p.m., authorities said.

Officials said the video shows the two men walking down the street soon after. One of them stops. The second man keeps walking until he realizes his friend is no longer with him.

The men can then be seen removing a plastic bag, which contained the bomb, from a rolling backpack outside 131 West 27th St. and then leaving with the backpack, authorities said.

From the video it isn't clear that the men knew what they were removing, Chief Waters said.

"I think they were more interested, quite frankly, in the bag, not what they were taking out," he said. "We really look forward to talking to them and asking them what they thought as they were doing it."

Police may not know for sure if the men defused the bomb, but believe they may have tugged at a wire attached to the explosives.

Chief Waters said the bomb was a "very shock-sensitive device" and called the men "very, very lucky" that they didn't set it off while removing it.

Police combing the area for evidence found the bomb a few hours later on the sidewalk, setting off a delicate operation to remove it.

Responding bomb units were able to use a robot to remove a cellphone that was designed to be a timer, Chief Waters said.

The bomb was removed about 2:30 a.m. to a secure facility in the Bronx where authorities were able to render it safe before having it sent to a Federal Bureau of Investigation facility for further testing.

The bomb was found to be packed with ball bearings and slingshot pellets.

Authorities were also able to lift several fingerprints from the device Sunday evening that were matched to Mr. Rahami, putting authorities on a path to his arrest less than 24 hours later.

Credit: By Pervaiz Shallwani

DETAILS

Subject:	Surveillance; Bombings; Investigations
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.23
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055037
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-pair-who-stumbled-across-bomb-sought/docview/1822055037/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 91 of 500

City News: Ex-Officers Charged In Beating

Ramey, Corinne . Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Five former prison officers were charged with federal crimes for allegedly beating an inmate, leaving him with five fractured ribs, a collapsed lung and broken facial bones, officials said Wednesday.

FULL TEXT

Five former prison officers were charged with federal crimes for allegedly beating an inmate, leaving him with five fractured ribs, a collapsed lung and broken facial bones, officials said Wednesday.

They struck the inmate, Kevin Moore, using their boots and batons, then ripped dreadlocks from his head, "which one of the officers took as a 'trophy' following the beating," according to a complaint filed in U.S. District Court in Manhattan.

The charges against the former correction officers are the latest intervention by Manhattan U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara into the treatment of inmates at jails or prisons in New York.

Last year, New York City's Department of Correction entered into a settlement with Mr. Bharara's office to install a monitor to oversee changes at the Rikers Island jail complex.

Federal prosecutors on Wednesday indicted Kathy Scott, a former sergeant, and former officers George Santiago Jr. and Carson Morris, with charges including depriving the inmate of his constitutional rights and obstructing justice.

Two former correction officers, Donald Cosman and Andrew Lowery, have pleaded guilty to charges related to the beating. An attorney representing Mr. Cosman said his client had accepted full responsibility and was tremendously remorseful.

An attorney for Ms. Scott said she pleaded not guilty and would vigorously defend herself. Other defendants' attorneys didn't respond to requests for comment or couldn't be reached.

Prosecutors said that on Nov. 12, 2013, Mr. Moore, 54 years old, was taken to a prison unit for inmates with mental-health issues at Downstate Correctional Facility in Fishkill, N.Y. The beating occurred after he objected, they said.

Credit: By Corinne Ramey

DETAILS

Subject:	Prisoners; Public prosecutors; Indictments
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92214 : Correctional Institutions 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
People:	Bharara, Preet
Company / organization:	Name: Rikers Island (prison complex); NAICS: 922140; Name: District Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Classification:	92214: Correctional Institutions; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.23
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055026
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-ex-officers-charged-beating/docview/1822055026/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 92 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Shibani Mahtani --- HIGHER EDUCATION More Scrutiny on Graduation Rates The gatekeepers who determine whether nearly 3,000 colleges and universities should be able to access the roughly $130 billion federal student-loan program, said they would begin taking a harder look at any school that has a four-year graduation rate below 25%.

FULL TEXT

ILLINOIS

Chicago to Expand

Its Police Force

Chicago police officials on Wednesday said they would expand the force by nearly 1,000 in two years as the city grapples with a soaring pace of murders not seen in more than a decade.

Superintendent Eddie Johnson said the department will add 970 sworn officers, bringing the size of the force to an estimated 13,500 by the end of 2018. That level of officers hasn't been seen since the drug wars of the 1980s, according to estimates from the police union.

"The shootings and gang violence hasn't been this intense in a long time," said Mr. Johnson. The new hiring initiative will provide the department with "the staffing levels we need to execute our crime strategy and protect the people," he added.

Budget officials in the cash-strapped city promised to find money to fund the program, and Mayor Rahm Emanuel pledged his support.

More than 510 people have been killed in Chicago this year -- a 50% increase compared with the same period last year.

-- Shibani Mahtani

HIGHER EDUCATION

More Scrutiny on

Graduation Rates

The gatekeepers who determine whether nearly 3,000 colleges and universities should be able to access the roughly $130 billion federal student-loan program, said they would begin taking a harder look at any school that has a four-year graduation rate below 25%.

The move is a reaction to growing criticism that accreditors do little to weed out weak schools. A Wall Street Journal investigation last year determined that the U.S. government sent $16 billion in aid to students at four-year colleges that graduated less than one-third of their students within six years.

Barbara Brittingham, chairwoman of the Council of Regional Accrediting Commissions, which oversees the quality of more than 2,800 institutions across the country, said the move is an effort to rebuild trust in the accreditation process.

Her group, made up of seven regional accreditors, chose 25% because it is about half of the four-year graduation rate at schools they oversee, and because it has been suggested by lawmakers.

"When we're in Washington we do hear suggestions from time to time that that number alone should cause a strong and harsh action," Ms. Brittingham said.

-- Douglas Belkin

PUERTO RICO

Power Plant Fire

Causes Blackouts

A fire erupted on Wednesday at an electricity plant that powers most of Puerto Rico, and a blackout swept across the U.S. territory that is home to 3.5 million people.

Two transmission lines of 230,000 volts each failed for reasons still being investigated, the Electric Power Authority said. Spokeswoman Yohari Molina said it was unclear when power would be restored.

The island's fire department said it extinguished the blaze at the power plant in southern Puerto Rico. Heavy storms were affecting the area where the plant is located.

The outage caused 15 fires across Puerto Rico as a result of malfunctioning generators, including at the upscale Vanderbilt hotel in the popular tourist area of Condado and at the mayor's office in the northern coastal town of Catano, according to authorities. All those fires were put out and no one was injured, officials said.

The blackout snarled road traffic across the island. The government canceled train service in the capital of San Juan and closed a busy traffic tunnel in the island's southern region.

Businesses, universities and government offices closed early, creating even more chaos on roads.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Colleges & universities; Student loans; Fires; Gangs; Violent crime; Electricity distribution; Power plants; Graduation rate
Business indexing term:	Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Location:	United States--US
People:	Emanuel, Rahm
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055017
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1822055017/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 93 of 500

City News: Port Executive Was Told To Reopen Closed Lanes

Ramey, Corinne . Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]I advised you that I was never asked to either support or endorse the governor."

FULL TEXT

On the day Port Authority Executive Director Patrick Fove ordered access lanes to the George Washington Bridge reopened to local traffic he got two visits from his New Jersey counterpart at the agency.

The counterpart, Bill Baroni, told him the lanes should be closed again even though they had caused huge traffic jams in Fort Lee, N.J., because this was "important to Trenton," Mr. Foye testified in court Wednesday.

Mr. Foye, the top New York appointee to the agency, said he took that reference to mean that the direction to close the lanes came from the highest levels of New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie's administration. When Mr. Foye refused to rescind his order to end the closures, Mr. Baroni warned that "Trenton may call" Albany, he testified.

"I took it to be the governor's office in New Jersey might call or would call the governor's office in New York," Mr. Foye said.

Mr. Foye's testimony dominated the third day of the trial of Mr. Baroni, the former deputy executive director of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, and Bridget Kelly, a former deputy chief of staff to Mr. Christie. Prosecutors say they were part of a conspiracy to create a traffic jam in Fort Lee to punish the borough's Democratic mayor for not endorsing the Republican governor.

The exchanges between Mr. Foye and Mr. Baroni help explain why some top officials within the authority quickly concluded that the lane closures, and the intense traffic they had triggered without warning in Fort Lee, had little to do with a "traffic study," the explanation later given to the press and the public.

Instead, Mr. Baroni's insistence that Mr. Foye back off because of Trenton's wishes suggested that the closures had more to do with politics.

Mr. Christie hasn't been accused of wrongdoing and has denied knowledge of the closures.

Defense attorneys have argued that Mr. Baroni "acted in good faith," and that Ms. Kelly was a bit player in a scheme that extended to the highest levels of New Jersey state government.

On the early morning of Sept. 13, 2013, the fifth day of gridlock traffic in the New Jersey borough, Mr. Foye sent an email instructing the closures be reversed, saying they were an "abusive decision which violates everything this agency stands for."

Later that day, Mr. Foye and Mr. Baroni met twice. During the first meeting, at the former Port Authority office, Mr. Foye said he had requested that his chief of staff be present.

"I thought something weird and terribly problematic had happened," Mr. Foye said, so he wanted a witness. During that meeting, he said, Mr. Baroni asked the lanes be closed and Mr. Foye denied the request. It was during the second meeting that day that Mr. Baroni said the closures were "important to Trenton," Mr. Foye said.

Defense attorneys for Mr. Baroni and Ms. Kelly portrayed a fractured agency riddled with political alliances and infighting. David Wildstein, the agency's director of interstate capital projects who has pleaded guilty to charges related to the lane-closures, bought websites in the names of his enemies in the agency, said Michael Baldassare, Mr. Baroni's attorney.

They also questioned Mr. Foye's timeline of when he learned of the closures. Mr. Baldassare suggested Mr. Foye had learned of the closures at or just after a luncheon hosted by a transportation research association the day before he made the call to reopen the lanes.

"Isn't it simply true that you knew about the lane closures, you knew about the problems, you knew everything well before you testified here and elsewhere that you knew it, and you let it continue so that it could start up Friday so you could swoop in and look like the hero?" Mr. Baldassare said.

Mr. Foye said, "No."

Defense attorneys also noted Mr. Foye allowed statements to go out to the media saying the closures were due to a traffic study, even though he knew that wasn't the case.

Also on Wednesday, defense attorneys questioned Fort Lee Mayor Mark Sokolich, who on Tuesday had described the gridlock the closed lanes had caused in his borough.

Michael Critchley, who represents Ms. Kelly, read from a letter the mayor had written to the Star-Ledger newspaper.

"I have consistently and without deviation stated on the record that in no way do I believe that these lane closures are a result of my refusal to support the governor," Mr. Sokolich wrote. "In fact, I advised you that I was never asked to either support or endorse the governor."

In court on Tuesday, Mr. Sokolich had suggested the closures were punitive.

Mr. Critchley asked, "Which was a lie?"

Mr. Sokolich later said he wrote the letter because he was petrified of further retribution.

"I didn't even know what things could happen and I certainly didn't want to find out," the mayor added.

Ted Mann contributed to this article.

Credit: By Corinne Ramey

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys; Government agencies; Governors; Traffic congestion
Business indexing term:	Industry: 54111 : Offices of Lawyers 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New Jersey; New York; United States--US
Classification:	54111: Offices of Lawyers; 92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.23
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822055006
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-port-executive-was-told-reopen-closed/docview/1822055006/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 94 of 500

World News: Paris Climate Deal Gains Momentum

Pop, Valentina . Pop, Valentina.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]it can enter into force only once 55 countries representing 55% of the world's greenhouse-gas emissions -- widely thought to be the main cause for a steady rise in global temperatures -- have ratified it.

FULL TEXT

UNITED NATIONS -- A global climate agreement moved closer toward taking effect by the end of the year, as 30 more nations ratified it at a special meeting on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly on Wednesday.

The deal, championed by the Obama administration and struck last year in Paris among 195 countries, sets out a global plan to take steps aimed at limiting climate change. But it can enter into force only once 55 countries representing 55% of the world's greenhouse-gas emissions -- widely thought to be the main cause for a steady rise in global temperatures -- have ratified it.

As of Wednesday, one of the two conditions -- the number of countries -- was met, as 60 countries have now ratified it, representing 47.7% of global greenhouse-gas emissions. The world's biggest greenhouse-gas emitters -- the U.S. and China -- ratified the deal this month. An additional 13 countries committed to ratifying the deal by the end of 2016.

"I'm evermore confident that the Paris agreement will enter into force this year," U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, said during the event on Wednesday.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry thanked the "warriors for the planet" for taking action, noting that the months of July and August were "the hottest months ever recorded on the planet," and expressed hope that the Paris deal would come into force before the next U.N. meeting on climate change in Marrakesh, Morocco, in November.

If the deal goes into effect this year, the U.S. would be prevented from pulling out for four years, potentially binding the hands of the next president -- even if he or she was intent on reversing course. "I expect the U.S. to remain. The EU would not like a scenario similar to the Kyoto Protocol, when there was a withdrawal," the European Union's climate chief Miguel Arias Canete told The Wall Street Journal, in reference to the Bush administration's 2001 move to withdraw from the precursor to the Paris deal.

Mr. Canete said he was confident the EU would complete the ratification of the Paris agreement in October, with an agreement among the bloc's 28 environment ministers expected next week in Brussels.

As international talks on an emission-reducing deal for the aviation industry kick off next week in Montreal, Mr. Canete said that even if the final deal turned out to be less ambitious than EU's own aviation emission rules, the bloc would continue to implement its rules for its domestic flights.

Business leaders welcomed the prospect of the Paris deal coming into force. "With this clear direction of travel from political leaders, companies can now accelerate efforts to achieve a zero carbon future," said Paul Polman, chief executive of Unilever PLC.

Gabriele Steinhäuser contributed to this article.

Credit: By Valentina Pop

DETAILS

Subject:	Greenhouse effect; Climate change; Paris Agreement; Aviation; Emissions
Location:	United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822027088
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-paris-climate-deal-gains-momentum/docview/1822027088/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: Obama, Netanyahu Discuss Strife

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Obama doesn't plan to try to restart the Israeli-Palestinian peace process, which broke down in 2014, but is considering outlining a framework for talks before leaving office in January, White House officials have said.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK -- President Barack Obama and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu capped years of frayed ties with a meeting on Wednesday that was intended to highlight a $38 billion military aid agreement between the two allies.

Both leaders on Wednesday described the bond between the U.S. and Israel as unbreakable, but the talks on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly were overshadowed by a new spate of Israeli-Palestinian violence.

Mr. Obama addressed the recent strife at the start of the meeting, saying "our hearts go out to those who have been injured, both Israeli and Palestinian." He also raised U.S. concerns about Israeli settlements, a sore spot between the two leaders.

A senior administration official said after the private, 30-minute meeting that Mr. Obama addressed the settlement issue by raising "profound U.S. concerns about the corrosive effect that that is having on the prospects of two states," and that Mr. Netanyahu pushed back.

"They've never papered over their differences," another senior administration official said.

Before the meeting, Mr. Obama said he would determine from Mr. Netanyahu whether there is any chance to make progress on the Middle East peace process in coming months.

"Obviously I'm only going to be president for another few months. The prime minister will be there quite a bit longer, and our hope will be that in these conversations, we can get a sense of how Israel sees the next few years, what the opportunities are and what the challenges are," Mr. Obama said.

Mr. Netanyahu said "the greatest opportunity" in U.S.-Israeli relations "is to advance the goal of peace," adding, "That's a goal that I and the people of Israel will never give up on."

Mr. Obama doesn't plan to try to restart the Israeli-Palestinian peace process, which broke down in 2014, but is considering outlining a framework for talks before leaving office in January, White House officials have said.

Part of the goal of Wednesday's meeting was to assess the dynamic with Mr. Netanyahu to determine what approach, if any, might work.

Senior U.S. officials said the idea of Mr. Obama putting forward a framework wasn't discussed in depth by the two leaders. They discussed current developments in the conflict in Syria, officials said.

The Israeli leader, who has long been cool to Mr. Obama, thanked him for working to secure the new U.S. military aid package for Israel.

The two leaders have sparred over Israeli-Palestinian peace talks and, most publicly, over Mr. Obama's pursuit of a deal with Iran that curtails its nuclear program in exchange for lifting economic sanctions.

Rory Jones in Tel Aviv contributed to this article.

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Peace negotiations; Military aid; International relations-US; Prime ministers
Location:	United States--US; Israel
People:	Obama, Barack; Netanyahu, Benjamin
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1822026096

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-netanyahu-discuss-strife/docview/1822026096/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 96 of 500

U.S. News: Suspect Not Well Known at Mosque

Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Mann, Ted . Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Mann, Ted.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Neighbors and members of the elder Mr. Rahami's mosque, the Muslim Community Center of Union County, described him as a friendly man, willing to extend a greeting but not delve into deep conversation.

FULL TEXT

ELIZABETH, N.J. -- Mohammed Rahami is known as a leader in the Muslim community here and serves on the board of a local mosque. But few in the Muslim community recall his son, Ahmad, who faces charges linked to a blast in Manhattan's Chelsea neighborhood.

Neighbors and members of the elder Mr. Rahami's mosque, the Muslim Community Center of Union County, described him as a friendly man, willing to extend a greeting but not delve into deep conversation. No members interviewed at the Muslim Community Center this week said they remember Ahmad Rahami as ever attending the mosque.

As a board member of the mosque, Mr. Rahami voted on administrative questions, said another member.

"He is very friendly," said Muhammad Arshad, a 72-year-old board member who came to the mosque on Wednesday for a noon prayer. He said when the board came together to vote, the elder Rahami had a "very logical opinion."

Mr. Arshad said Mr. Rahami never spoke of Ahmad, and he only saw him come with a younger son. He said Mr. Rahami seldom socialized, but this isn't uncommon. "Prayer is about 10 minutes at most," he said. "Ten or 15 minutes and everyone is busy and leaves."

Imam Fakhruddin Alvi said he only remembered Mohammed Rahami as someone who would regularly pray at the mosque. He said he never had a one-on-one conversation with him. "All I can say is he used to come and perform his prayer and leave," he said.

Mike Hilts and Rich Hart, both of Magie Auto Repair, which sits directly across the street from the mosque, said they saw Ahmad Rahami attend the mosque from time to time with his father and brothers for years, including within the past three months.

Ahmad Rahami sometimes attended the Muslim Community of New Jersey mosque in nearby Fords, N.J., according to some worshipers. Imam Asif Hirani, who led the mosque from 2012 to 2015, said he doesn't remember him and couldn't believe he was part of the mosque's community.

The mosque, about 14 miles away from Elizabeth, never hosts "radical speakers," Mr. Hirani said in a phone call from Pakistan, where he was visiting. He said it has "kept a very calm environment."

Those who do remember Ahmad Rahami said he didn't stand out among the hundreds of congregants, worshipers said, sliding in for prayers and slipping out afterward without sticking around.

Javid Barakzai, who grew up with Mr. Rahami, said he saw him at the mosque in Fords more than a week ago, and he looked like "a normal human just going to pray."

Credit: By Zolan Kanno-Youngs and Ted Mann

DETAILS

Subject:	Fathers; Prayer; Community centers; Mosques & temples
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81311 : Religious Organizations 62411 : Child and Youth Services
People:	Rahami, Ahmad Khan
Classification:	81311: Religious Organizations; 62411: Child and Youth Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822026033
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-suspect-not-well-known-at-mosque/docview/1822026033/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 97 of 500

World News: Congress Poised to Let 9/11 Families Sue Saudi Arabia

Peterson, Kristina; Lee, Carol E . Peterson, Kristina; Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the one White House proposal so far -- giving the president a waiver to use at his discretion -- wasn't acceptable to the families of the victims, said Sen. Bob Corker (R., Tenn.), Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- U.S. lawmakers, cooling to a long alliance with Saudi Arabia, are preparing to override a presidential veto and push through legislation allowing families of Sept. 11 victims to sue Saudi Arabia for any role in the terrorist attacks.

Riyadh strongly opposes the bill and President Barack Obama is expected to veto it on Friday. But lawmakers are poised to override his veto for the first time since he took office.

Separately on Wednesday, some in the Senate mounted an effort to effectively stop a $1.15 billion U.S. arms sale to Saudi Arabia. It failed on a 71-27 vote.

"This is clearly a moment where Congress is reconsidering the foundations of our relationship with Saudi Arabia," said Sen. Chris Murphy (D., Conn.), who pushed for the arms-sales vote with Sen. Rand Paul (R., Ky.). "The relationship will continue to be a very important one, but the Saudis are getting a pretty clear message right now that there's some concerns."

Congressional support was overwhelming for legislation establishing an exception to U.S. laws barring lawsuits against foreign governments, allowing court action by victims of terrorist attacks. The bill passed both the House this month and the Senate in May with no opposition and leaders have said there is enough support in both chambers to override the expected veto from Mr. Obama.

Family members of those killed in the Sept. 11 attacks have pursued efforts to sue the Saudi government, alleging it provided some manner of support for the men who hijacked the aircraft used to carry out the strikes. Fifteen of the 19 hijackers were Saudi, but the kingdom's government has denied any role in the 2001 terrorist attacks, a denial backed by U.S. officials. The Saudi Embassy didn't respond to a request to comment.

Concern over the bill's possible ramifications for U.S.-Saudi ties has sparked last-minute efforts from a small group of GOP lawmakers to work with the White House to alter the law.

But the one White House proposal so far -- giving the president a waiver to use at his discretion -- wasn't acceptable to the families of the victims, said Sen. Bob Corker (R., Tenn.), Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman.

Credit: By Kristina Peterson and Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Victims of crime; Terrorism; International relations-US; International relations; Military sales; Legislators
Business indexing term:	Subject: International relations; Industry: 92112 : Legislative Bodies
Location:	United States--US; Saudi Arabia
Classification:	92112: Legislative Bodies
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822026004
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-congress-poised-let-9-11-families-sue/docview/1822026004/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Re produced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 98 of 500

Business News: Machine-Tool Makers Cut Prices to Lift Sales

Tita, Bob; Tangel, Andrew . Tita, Bob; Tangel, Andrew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Orders in the U.S. for computer-guided cutting machines used in factories and machine shops were down 16% during the first half of the year compared with 2015, according the Association for Manufacturing Technology, a Virginia-based trade association for the machine tools industry. "Because the market is down all the builders are offering incentives," said Scott Camloh, North America sales manager for Hurco Companies Inc., an Indianapolis-based maker of precision cutting machines.

FULL TEXT

Manufacturers of metal-cutting machines are shearing prices to generate sales amid a global slump in machinery demand brought on by lower energy prices and reduced investment in high-tech equipment.

Orders in the U.S. for computer-guided cutting machines used in factories and machine shops were down 16% during the first half of the year compared with 2015, according the Association for Manufacturing Technology, a Virginia-based trade association for the machine tools industry.

"Because the market is down all the builders are offering incentives," said Scott Camloh, North America sales manager for Hurco Companies Inc., an Indianapolis-based maker of precision cutting machines. In addition to discounts, manufacturers offered extended warranties and other incentives to ring up sales during the industry's biennial trade show in Chicago last week. Discounts and other incentives varied based on the size of orders. Some savvy customers pitted one sales-hungry machine maker against another to secure even more concessions.

"We had to follow suit just to get in the door," Mr. Camloh said, adding that Hurco set a sales record during the first half of the show.

Jerry McCarty, Americas chief operating officer for SMTCL, a Chinese manufacturer of metal-cutting equipment, said the show also helped line up customers who might be willing to commit to a purchase a few months from now.

Ben Smeding, the owner of Smeding Performance, which produces custom-built engine components near San Antonio, Texas, said he senses a greater willingness by companies to cut deals this year. "The oil industry in the U.S. is basically collapsing," he said, which means he sees machine makers hunting for new customers.

Machining businesses with exposure to the energy industry have sharply curtailed their equipment purchases in the past two years because of lower prices for oil and natural gas. Markets for construction, mining and farm machinery also have been under pressure because of slumping prices for grain and mined commodities.

Still, the aerospace industry, medical equipment manufacturing and car makers remain pockets of strength for machinery builders.

Factory shipments of new metal-cutting machines this year are expected to be down about 14% from 2015 to $7.2 billion with machine orders expected to fall about 12%.

The manufacturing technology association expects shipments to be flat to slight down next year, but predicts orders will climb about 10% in response to the auto industry's pursuit of more fuel-efficient vehicles.

DETAILS

Subject:	Manufacturers; Metalworking industry; Energy industry; Factory orders; Machinery; Manufacturing; Machine shops; Factories
Business indexing term:	Subject: Manufacturers Metalworking industry Energy industry Factory orders Manufacturing Machine shops Factories; Industry: 33351 : Metalworking Machinery Manufacturing 33271 : Machine Shops 32721 : Glass and Glass Product Manufacturing 33312 : Construction Machinery Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Hurco Cos Inc; NAICS: 333517
Classification:	33351: Metalworking Machinery Manufacturing; 33271: Machine Shops; 32721: Glass and Glass Product Manufacturing; 33312: Construction Machinery Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822025887
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-machine-tool-makers-cut-prices-lift/docview/1822025887/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 99 of 500

U.S. News: Texas Warns on Refugee Program

Jordan, Miriam . Jordan, Miriam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Office of Refugee Resettlement said services are provided "only after an individual successfully completes stringent security screenings, is granted refugee status by the Department of Homeland Security and is brought to the U.S. for resettlement by the State Department.

FULL TEXT

Texas, which has absorbed the most refugees of any state, has threatened to stop facilitating their resettlement because of what it deems inadequate security checks.

The move comes a week after the Obama administration said the U.S. will take more displaced people in the next year, and months after the state's unsuccessful challenge in federal court to the administration's resettlement plans.

In a letter Wednesday to the director of the federal Office of Refugee Resettlement, Texas said it would exit the program by Sept. 30 unless Washington meets its demand that national-security officials "ensure refugees do not pose a security threat."

Texas manages about $96 million in federal funds for services to refugees, who are resettled there with the help of nonprofits like the International Rescue Committee.

If Texas cedes this role, the U.S. government likely will partner with a resettlement agency that would disburse the money -- an arrangement exists in other states. Texas, which received over 7,000 refugees in the past year, is among several states seeking to halt resettlement. A federal court ruled in June that Texas couldn't stop the government sending Syrians there.

The Office of Refugee Resettlement said services are provided "only after an individual successfully completes stringent security screenings, is granted refugee status by the Department of Homeland Security and is brought to the U.S. for resettlement by the State Department. This model for refugee resettlement will continue in Texas."

Credit: By Miriam Jordan

DETAILS

Subject:	Displaced persons; Humanitarian aid; Refugees
Location:	Texas; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822025881
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-texas-warns-on-refugee-program/docview/1822025881/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 100 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Loses Top School Ranking to U.K.'s Oxford

Strum, Beckie . Strum, Beckie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Besides the Oxford-Caltech flip flop, the top of the list remained mostly the same as last year.

FULL TEXT

The U.S. has many of the best universities in the world, but according to a new global list, it doesn't have the best.

The University of Oxford, the oldest in the English-speaking world, took the top spot in the latest World University Rankings, released annually by Times Higher Education. The English university dating to 1096 dethroned the California Institute of Technology, a small, private school in Pasadena that had ranked No. 1 for five-straight years, according to Times Higher Education, a London magazine that tracks higher education.

This is the first time a university outside the U.S. is No. 1 in the list's 13-year history. This year's list also underscores strengthening university systems in Asia as schools in China and Hong Kong have risen up the ranks, some by double digits.

Besides the Oxford-Caltech flip flop, the top of the list remained mostly the same as last year. Stanford University came in third, then the University of Cambridge, another U.K. institution founded in medieval times. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology came in fifth, just ahead of its Cambridge, Mass., neighbor, Harvard University, the top Ivy League school on the list.

WUR tends to focus on research, counting metrics like the number of citations and publications by a university's scholars and the amount of research funding attained in a given year. The list also takes reputation into account by surveying some 20,000 leading scholars to identify top schools, said Phil Baty, rankings editor at Times Higher Education.

"The single biggest individual indicator is research impact," Mr. Baty said.

To a lesser extent, WUR also emphasizes global scholarship. Unlike popular American rankings, like those produced by U.S. News & World Report, the list has a global reach and includes only universities. WUR excludes popular metrics used by U.S. ranking systems like acceptance rate, test scores and postgraduation salary, Mr. Baty said.

Oxford's boost came from an exceptionally strong research income and global collaboration. "Industry, charities, health organizations and many other funders are all keen to invest in Oxford research," said Louise Richardson, vice chancellor.

The number of Chinese universities in the top 200 doubled to four this year. China's top school, Peking University (No. 29), a public school in Beijing with about 30,000 students, ranked above New York University (No. 32).

American schools account for about one-third of the top 200 schools, same as last year.

Schools that rose into the top 200 include the University of Illinois at Chicago, ranked 200, and Northeastern University in Boston, ranked 182.

Credit: By Beckie Strum

DETAILS

Subject:	Higher education; Ratings & rankings; Colleges & universities; Schools; Medieval period
Business indexing term:	Industry: 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Company / organization:	Name: Oxford University; NAICS: 611310
Classification:	61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1822025866

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-loses-top-school-ranking-k-oxford/docview/1822025866/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 101 of 500

World News: U.S. Military Seeks More Troops for Iraq -- Up to 500 would help prepare campaign to retake city of Mosul from Islamic State

Lubold, Gordon; Sonne, Paul . Lubold, Gordon; Sonne, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The same base was the target this week of what U.S. officials said was a rocket or mortar fired by Islamic State fighters, and containing a mustard agent, into the perimeter of the base where U.S. service members are deployed, senior defense officials confirmed Wednesday.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The U.S. military is requesting authority to send up to 500 new troops to Iraq ahead of a much-anticipated campaign to take back Mosul from Islamic State, according to U.S. officials, adding to an expanding American presence in the country.

The new deployment, if approved by the White House, would assist Iraqi and coalition forces in preparing for the battle to capture the northern city, the extremist group's last major stronghold in Iraq. That fight is expected to begin as early as mid-October, U.S. officials have said.

The U.S. move would come in the wake of an operation that began Tuesday by Iraqi forces in Shirqat, a town north of Baghdad, to further degrade Islamic State supply lines into Mosul. That operation, which was announced by Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi in New York, where he is participating in U.N. General Assembly meetings, is a further indication that the Iraqi forces are preparing for the larger fight in Mosul, a city of about one million people.

The new U.S. forces would increase the number of American personnel officially deployed to Iraq from 4,400 to about 4,900. The Pentagon also maintains up to 1,500 additional U.S. forces that it doesn't acknowledge as part of its Iraq force, most at the U.S. Embassy in Baghdad or on temporary assignments. The new deployment would bring the overall U.S. presence to as high as 6,400. The 500 would be in addition to roughly 400 new personnel the U.S. sent to Iraq in early September to prepare for the Mosul offensive.

President Barack Obama hasn't yet been presented with the military plan, according to U.S. officials.

The White House maintains that the troops the Pentagon sends to Iraq aren't heading into direct combat. Rather, U.S. officials have said, those troops are there in an advise-and-assist mission. While they are armed and always have the authority to defend themselves on the battlefield, they aren't performing direct action missions, officials have said repeatedly.

Most of the new troops would be assigned to an area the U.S. military has established south of Mosul at a logistics hub known as "Q-West" near the city of Qayara. Hundreds of U.S. and coalition forces have massed there in the past several months in anticipation of the Mosul fight.

The same base was the target this week of what U.S. officials said was a rocket or mortar fired by Islamic State fighters, and containing a mustard agent, into the perimeter of the base where U.S. service members are deployed, senior defense officials confirmed Wednesday. The weapon was described as "crude" and ineffective.

No U.S. personnel were injured in the Tuesday attack. But the incident marked the first time Islamic State had deployed a weapon containing a mustard agent against U.S. forces, defense officials said.

The fight for Mosul -- seen as the biggest battle yet against Islamic State -- has been delayed for more than a year. Mr. Abadi recently has signaled he wants the city taken by the end of the year.

In recent months, U.S. officials also have said that the Iraqi military appears ready to take the lead in the fight and as recently as two weeks ago said they expected Iraqi and coalition forces to enter the city sometime in October.

U.S. military officials have said it is unclear what kind of fight they will find once inside Mosul. Gen. Joe Votel, who heads U.S. Central Command, said last month there may be areas Islamic State decides to cede to coalition forces immediately, and others in which it decides to fight to the death.

Separately, the White House is considering steps in Syria to more directly arm the Kurdish forces it has been supporting there. That decision would help to focus the so-called YPG, which may be the primary force behind retaking the Islamic State stronghold of Raqqa, the de facto capital of the militant group's caliphate.

U.S. officials have been discussing ways to help prepare the YPG for that fight, and the YPG has sought more direct assistance from Washington in the form of more small arms and ammunition.

Credit: By Gordon Lubold and Paul Sonne

DETAILS

Subject:	Armed forces; Military deployment
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	United States--US; Iraq
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822025860
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-military-seeks-more-troops-iraq-up/docview/1822025860/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 102 of 500

Robert Gates Is Mistaken About Donald Trump

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Peter Skurkiss Stow, Ohio --- As Peggy Noonan observes in her same-day "Travel Back to an Early Clinton Scandal," the quarter-century Clinton scandal ritual is to lie, deny, revise, claim not to remember specifics, stall for time and, after enough time passes, say it is "old news."

FULL TEXT

Regarding Robert M. Gates's "Sizing Up the Next Commander-in-Chief" (op-ed, Sept. 17): I have a simple question. If Mr. Gates truly believes the importance of the strategic challenges to our security he cites, why put them in a public forum for all -- including adversaries -- to see? As a former intelligence officer, he certainly knows better if he wants to productively shape policy. While his criticism of Hillary Clinton is a restatement of a record that is public, his criticism of Donald Trump is ad hominem conjecture.

As an adviser to Mr. Trump, I can say with complete confidence that if Mr. Gates had attempted to bring his thoughtful views to Mr. Trump, he would have had a thoughtful audience. Mr. Trump would generally accept Mr. Gates's description of the sad state of the world. The fundamental difference is that Mr. Trump sees strategy for what it should be: how to think about the actual execution of our power to fix it, and definitely not something to be publicized and used for objectives unrelated to our security.

Maj. Gen. Bert Mizusawa (Ret.)

Hampton, Va.

Robert Gates fails to mention the most significant reason why Donald Trump is unfit to be president, namely Mr. Trump's oft-stated desire to return to a world in which "to the victor go the spoils." He has suggested, for example, that the U.S. should have taken Iraq's oil, however nonsensical (and illegal) that might have been.

As president, would Mr. Trump emulate Vladimir Putin and launch wars of conquest? Republicans have shown little willingness or ability to stand up to Mr. Trump, and he has threatened to replace our senior military leadership with his handpicked loyalists. Who would stop him? Only the voters can prevent him from turning our country into the kind of rogue state we used to think of as our enemy.

Chad DeChant

New York

How can Hillary Clinton assuage people's concerns about her dishonesty between now and election day? That train left the station years ago. Polls show about 66% of Americans believe Mrs. Clinton is untrustworthy and dishonest. The only way for her to turn this around is, well, to confess her misdeeds. That would be good for Mrs. Clinton's soul, but it would end her candidacy and perhaps even her freedom for a while. Mr. Gates should not hold his breath for that to happen nor expect us to.

Peter Skurkiss

Stow, Ohio

As Peggy Noonan observes in her same-day "Travel Back to an Early Clinton Scandal," the quarter-century Clinton scandal ritual is to lie, deny, revise, claim not to remember specifics, stall for time and, after enough time passes, say it is "old news." If the Clinton ritual qualifies Mrs. Clinton to be commander-in-chief in Mr. Gates's mind, so be it. The 50 days before Election Day represent roughly 0.05% of the time that Mrs. Clinton has been on the national stage. There is nothing that she can say in that time to offset the other 99.95% of public statements, actions and behavior that preceded her final two months of campaigning.

Ray Gordon

Durham, N.C.

Are we to believe that from the outset the Obama-Clinton-Kerry team possessed sufficient knowledge, wisdom and judgment to successfully guide our nation through foreign affairs? Look at the past seven and a half years. Will electing Mrs. Clinton in November assure continuance of these successes?

The world is on fire. Terrorism is rampant even on our own streets. Potentially dangerous hordes flood into our country, our national prestige has vanished, our military is diminished and demoralized, rogue nations no longer fear us and our government is hopelessly in debt. For these reasons, I'll skip the chance of picking up all that "expertise" via a "Clinton II" presidency and try the new guy.

Charles F. Falk

Schaumburg, Ill.

Secretary Gates notes that Mrs. Clinton has: switched positions on a trade agreement she had a hand in crafting; lacked professional courage to step down when she disagreed with the president; contradicted her own judgment -- a "mistake" by her own admission on Iraq; demonstrated incompetence in dealing with Russia and Libya; uttered an ill-considered declaration ruling out U.S. ground troops in Iraq for political reasons; proved careless in handling the nation's most sensitive intelligence while making demonstrably false statements regarding the same and ignored "much-discussed credibility issues" apart from national security, such as participating in the appearance of wrongdoing regarding the Clinton Foundation which further undermine "reliability and trust."

In contrast, Mr. Trump's deficiency is rather a litany of misstatements that essentially amount to being uninformed.

With all due respect and emotion aside, Secretary Gates has made a case for Mr. Trump as the better choice on national security.

Yvette Wooley

Key Biscayne, Fla.

DETAILS

Subject:	Scandals; Presidents; Risk management; Political campaigns; National security
Business indexing term:	Subject: Risk management; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
People:	Noonan, Peggy; Putin, Vladimir; Trump, Donald J
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 22, 2016
Section:	Letters to the Editor
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1822025768
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/robert-gates-is-mistaken-about-donald-trump/docview/1822025768/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 103 of 500

U.S. News: Civil-Rights Probe Opened in Police Shooting

Mahtani, Shibani . Mahtani, Shibani.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Widely shared videos of the fatal shooting recorded by a helicopter and dashboard camera, released Monday by the Tulsa Police Department, show Mr. Crutcher walking toward his car with his arms raised and placing his hands on top of the car.

FULL TEXT

The Justice Department has opened an investigation into the police shooting of an unarmed black man in Tulsa, Okla.

Terence Crutcher, 40 years old, was shot Friday evening by Tulsa Police Officer Betty Shelby, who was responding to a 911 call of an abandoned vehicle blocking a road.

Widely shared videos of the fatal shooting recorded by a helicopter and dashboard camera, released Monday by the Tulsa Police Department, show Mr. Crutcher walking toward his car with his arms raised and placing his hands on top of the car. Just after a view of the man was blocked in two separate videos, shots rang out and he fell to the ground.

The police department has opened a criminal investigation into the shooting.

A lawyer for Officer Shelby couldn't be reached Tuesday.

Credit: By Shibani Mahtani

DETAILS

Subject:	Police brutality; Criminal investigations; Police shootings
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-Tulsa OK; NAICS: 922120; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821710556
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-civil-rights-probe-opened-police/docview/1821710556/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 104 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Wells Fargo's CEO was attacked by senators, who called for more top-level accountability for a sales-practices scandal and a return of executives' pay. ---

FULL TEXT

Wells Fargo's CEO was attacked by senators, who called for more top-level accountability for a sales-practices scandal and a return of executives' pay.

The SEC is investigating how Exxon values its assets in a world of increasing climate-change regulations.

Glaxo named its consumer unit's chief to be its next CEO, punctuating a growing emphasis on drugstore staples.

Central banks have been swelling government coffers with their efforts to stimulate economies.

The Dow edged up 9.79 to 18129.96 as investors awaited policy decisions by the Fed and the Bank of Japan.

Record firms reported their strongest sales growth since the late 1990s, as music streaming jumped.

Samsung said replacements for only half of the phones recalled in the U.S. will be available by Wednesday, falling short of expectations.

FedEx said revenue and operating margins rose at its key express and ground units in its latest quarter.

Comcast is aiming to launch a wireless service by mid-2017 as it seeks to better retain cable customers.

Harvard is considering at least two candidates to run its endowment, which has seen tepid returns.

DETAILS

Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Comcast Corp; NAICS: 517111, 517112, 517810; Name: FedEx Corp; NAICS: 484110, 492110, 551114; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111; Name: Bank of Japan; NAICS: 521110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821710388
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1821710388/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 105 of 500

World News: Beijing to End Ban on U.S. Beef

Blumenstein, Rebecca . Blumenstein, Rebecca.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

China has had a ban in place on most U.S. beef imports since 2003, partly due to concerns over the spread of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or "mad cow" disease.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK -- China's premier promised to resume Chinese imports of U.S. beef soon, calling it a sign of Beijing's sincerity to improve commercial ties with the U.S.

Speaking to U.S. business groups in New York on Tuesday night, Premier Li Keqiang said China would soon allow imports of U.S. beef.

"We also recognize that the United States has very good beef, so why should we deny Chinese customers this choice?" Mr. Li said.

Though the premier didn't give a specific timetable, trade groups have previously said imports may resume before the end of the year. China has had a ban in place on most U.S. beef imports since 2003, partly due to concerns over the spread of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or "mad cow" disease.

U.S. cattle producers this year have urged agriculture officials to make reopening export markets a top priority, as prices have tumbled to the lowest levels in six years because of rising domestic meat supplies.

Separately, Mr. Li noted that a Chinese bank in New York had been authorized to serve as a clearinghouse for transactions in the yuan. China's central bank designated Bank of China as the clearing bank.

The service is intended to promote the use of the yuan internationally.

Liyan Qi and Kelsey Gee contributed to this article.

Credit: By Rebecca Blumenstein

DETAILS

Subject:	Beef; Cattle industry; Clearing banks; Bovine spongiform encephalopathy
Business indexing term:	Subject: Cattle industry Clearing banks; Industry: 11211 : Beef Cattle Ranching and Farming, including Feedlots 52232 : Financial Transactions Processing, Reserve, and Clearinghouse Activities
Location:	Beijing China; China; United States--US
Classification:	11211: Beef Cattle Ranching and Farming, including Feedlots; 52232: Financial Transactions Processing, Reserve, and Clearinghouse Activities
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821710329
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-beijing-end-ban-on-u-s-beef/docview/1821710329/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-09-28
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 106 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Justice Department filed charges against bombing suspect Rahami, saying that he ordered many of his explosive components online and raged in a journal against what he called U.S. attacks on Muslims. ---

FULL TEXT

The Justice Department filed charges against bombing suspect Rahami, saying that he ordered many of his explosive components online and raged in a journal against what he called U.S. attacks on Muslims.

U.S. spy agencies believe Russian aircraft conducted the strike that targeted an aid convoy in Syria, challenging Moscow's denial.

The number of immigrants in the U.S. illegally has held steady at 11 million since 2009, while the undocumented Mexican population continues to shrink.

A new GOP super PAC largely funded by two billionaire donors plans to run ads attacking Clinton in battleground states.

Obama called in his U.N. address for a new approach to globalization that doesn't ignore its inequities.

Brazil's ex-leader da Silva was indicted on charges of corruption and money laundering amid a graft probe.

Unrest in Congo continued, with protests sparked by fears that Kabila plans to extend his 15-year rule.

Iraq forces launched an attack on an Islamic State-held town considered a gateway to Mosul.

China's premier promised to resume Chinese imports of U.S. beef soon.

DETAILS

Subject:	Indictments
Location:	Brazil; Iraq; United States--US; China; Syria
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821710064
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1821710064/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 107 of 500

World News: U.S. Says Russia Bombed Syria Aid Convoy --- Kerry, U.N. declare cease-fire isn't over despite Monday strike that killed at least 12

ABSTRACT

U.S. intelligence agencies believe that Russian aircraft conducted the strike that targeted a humanitarian aid convoy in northern Syria on Monday, according to U.S. officials, challenging Russia's assertion it wasn't behind the attack.

FULL TEXT

U.S. intelligence agencies believe that Russian aircraft conducted the strike that targeted a humanitarian aid convoy in northern Syria on Monday, according to U.S. officials, challenging Russia's assertion it wasn't behind the attack.

The attack stoked doubts within the Obama administration that it can trust Moscow to meet its obligations under the two countries' cease-fire deal, U.S. officials said, though Secretary of State John Kerry and U.N. officials said Tuesday the truce isn't dead.

Mr. Kerry initially said Syrian forces were "evidently" responsible for the convoy attack, which killed at least 12 people. The U.S. officials said new intelligence indicates that Russian forces, rather than the Syrians, conducted the strike.

U.S. officials said the Russian and Syrian governments had been notified in advance about the 31-truck convoy to ensure it wouldn't be bombed by their forces in the area. "There was coordination ahead of time with the Russians," a U.S. official said.

The spokeswoman for Russia's foreign ministry referred a request to comment on the U.S. allegation to the Russian military. Representatives of Russia's defense ministry couldn't be reached to comment.

Separately, on Tuesday evening, the Russian military released what it said was drone footage of a pickup truck carrying a heavy mortar and driving past the convoy.

Earlier Tuesday, the Russian military said, "No airstrikes on the United Nations humanitarian convoy in the southwestern outskirts of Aleppo were carried out by Russian or Syrian aviation." Syria's official state news agency, citing an unnamed military source, also called the allegation untrue.

Monday's attack hit the rebel-held town of Urem al-Kubra, according to U.N. officials, hours after the Syrian army declared the cease-fire over. The truce began Sept. 12.

U.S. surveillance tracked the movement of two Russian SU-24 jets from a base in Latakia, Syria, directly to the site where the convoy was struck, according to U.S. officials.

The Aleppo director of a Syrian civil defense group known as the White Helmets, Ammar Ahmad Alselmo, said he went to the scene. He said the attacks continued for hours as group members tried to rescue people and extinguish the fire. "There was destruction, fire and holes in the ground," Mr. Alselmo said. "We had to hide under a truck carrying flour to protect ourselves from the strikes."

In its earlier statement Tuesday, the Russian military said the convoy was observed by unmanned aircraft passing over territory controlled by rebels. After the aid was safely delivered, the Russian center monitoring the warring sides in Syria stopped tracking the convoy, the military added.

"Any further information on the whereabouts of the convoy was known only to the militants controlling these areas," it said.

Russia's military said it observed "no signs" the convoy had been struck by munitions and said surrounding vehicles and buildings didn't show the blast effects from an airstrike.

After a meeting with senior officials from countries with interests in the Syria conflict, Mr. Kerry said "The cease-fire is not dead."

The U.N.'s envoy for Syria, Staffan de Mistura, said after the meeting that the U.S. and Russia would determine the fate of the truce. "The cease-fire is in danger. The cease-fire has been seriously affected. But the only ones who can announce the cease-fire is dead are the two co-chairs and they have today not done so. They want to give it another chance," Mr. de Mistura said.

Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said Tuesday the chances of restoring the cease-fire were "very slim."

The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, a U.K.-based opposition monitoring group, said 12 people were killed in the assault on the aid convoy. The International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Federation of Red Cross Red Crescent Societies and the Syrian Arab Red Crescent said in a joint statement that a Syrian Arab Red Crescent staffer, Omar Barakat, and about 20 civilians were killed.

Gordon Lubold and Noam Raydan contributed to this article.

Credit: Adam Entous, Felicia Schwartz, Thomas Grove

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Fatalities; Humanitarian aid; Military air strikes; Aircraft; Humanitarianism
Location:	Russia; United States--US; Syria
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821710035
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-says-russia-bombed-syria-aid/docview/1821710035/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 108 of 500

U.S. News: Two Men In Terror Plots Are Sentenced

Connors, Will . Connors, Will.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Jonas Edmonds pleaded guilty to "conspiracy to provide material support to a designated foreign terrorist organization" and making a false statement to police in relation to international terrorism, according to a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office in the Northern District of Illinois.

FULL TEXT

CHICAGO -- A former Army National Guard soldier and his cousin were sentenced on Tuesday to lengthy prison terms for plotting to join Islamic State and to attack an Illinois military base.

The two men, who were arrested early last year, reached plea agreements with the U.S. attorney's office in December 2015 after initially pleading not guilty.

Jonas Edmonds pleaded guilty to "conspiracy to provide material support to a designated foreign terrorist organization" and making a false statement to police in relation to international terrorism, according to a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office in the Northern District of Illinois. He was sentenced to 21 years.

His cousin Hasan Edmonds pleaded guilty to one count of "conspiring to provide material support to the Islamic State of Iraq," and one count of attempting to provide material support to a foreign terrorist organization. He was sentenced to 30 years.

Hasan Edmonds was arrested in March 2015 as he attempted to board a plane bound for Cairo, where authorities say he intended to join Islamic State. He had been a supply specialist in the Illinois National Guard, though he was never deployed abroad.

Jonas Edmonds was arrested last year at his home in the Chicago suburb of Aurora, Ill. He had been planning to attack Hasan's National Guard base using his cousin's uniform. Lawyers for the two men couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

The FBI had been tracking the pair for months on social media, and an undercover FBI agent posing as an ISIS agent corresponded online and met in person with the two men.

Hasan Edmonds said his National Guard training and experience with weapons would be an asset to Islamic State, according to prosecutors.

During the sentencing hearing on Tuesday, the U.S. attorney's office showed a video of Hasan Edmonds telling an undercover FBI agent how best to attack his National Guard base.

In its sentencing memorandum ahead of the hearing, the U.S. attorney's office had requested a 30-year prison sentence for Hasan Edmonds.

Credit: By Will Connors

DETAILS

Subject:	Military reserves; Criminal sentences; Public prosecutors; Criminal pleas; Indictments
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution 92811 : National Security
--------------------------------	---

Location:	United States--US; Illinois; Iraq
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120; Name: National Guard-Illinois; NAICS: 928110
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution; 92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821709391
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-two-men-terror-plots-are-sentenced/docview/1821709391/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Comcast Plans Wireless Service To Start in 2017

Ramachandran, Shalini; Knutson, Ryan . Ramachandran, Shalini; Knutson, Ryan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Speaking at a Goldman Sachs investor conference, Mr. Roberts said the product would take advantage of Comcast's 15 million Wi-Fi hot spots and use airwaves leased from Verizon Communications Inc. Comcast has a deal with Verizon dating back to 2011 that allows the cable company to sell wireless service using the telecom carrier's network at set terms and pricing.

FULL TEXT

Comcast Corp. Chief Executive Brian Roberts said Tuesday the cable giant is aiming to launch a wireless service by mid-2017, creating a new line of business that could help the company better retain cable customers in a fiercely competitive pay-TV market.

Speaking at a Goldman Sachs investor conference, Mr. Roberts said the product would take advantage of Comcast's 15 million Wi-Fi hot spots and use airwaves leased from Verizon Communications Inc. Comcast has a deal with Verizon dating back to 2011 that allows the cable company to sell wireless service using the telecom carrier's network at set terms and pricing.

Mr. Roberts said because Comcast essentially is renting Verizon's network, "we won't have to make the kind of investment" needed otherwise, such as cell towers and other infrastructure. "We believe there will be a big payback with reduced churn, more stickiness and better satisfaction," he said.

Comcast will market the wireless service inside its footprint, to existing and potential Comcast cable customers, as opposed to nationwide. The company is interested in up-selling customers to a bigger bundle of services, Mr. Roberts said. Comcast declined to offer further details about the service, including pricing and which phones would be supported.

Comcast, like all U.S. cable companies, increasingly is leaning on its broadband business as the overall pay-TV business stagnates and consumers cut the cord or trade down to discounted packages. In search of new revenue streams, the cable giant seriously has been weighing its wireless options for at least a year, engaging in discussions with Verizon and testing potential services.

It will be stepping into a competitive U.S. wireless market, which has four national players who already have more than 100% penetration in the U.S. -- meaning there are more active cellphones in use than people in the U.S. As a result, wireless revenue growth is slowing and carriers are locked in a price war over a finite amount of existing subscribers.

Comcast could reduce its infrastructure costs by integrating its Wi-Fi network so that calls and data could be routed through its Wi-Fi hot spots instead of cell towers, whenever possible. New Street Research analyst Jonathan Chaplin said a cable company could "easily steer more than 75% of data traffic to Wi-Fi."

"We believe this will mark a turning point for the U.S. communications landscape," said Mr. Chaplin, who is bullish on cable's prospects to steal some market share from wireless incumbents. He estimated that the wireless business could be worth at least $6 a share of upside for Comcast's stock, translating into more than $14 billion of market value.

Comcast's ability to bundle wireless service with cable TV and home broadband also would give it other advantages not easily matched by wireless carriers.

T-Mobile and Sprint Corp. don't have home broadband or TV offers. Verizon has Fios high-speed internet service, but its footprint is relatively small and the carrier has avoided aggressively bundling Fios with wireless.

AT&T Inc. acquired DirecTV last year, giving it a huge foothold in video, but AT&T's home internet speeds are relatively slow in much of its footprint because of a continued reliance on copper wires.

Also at the Tuesday conference, Mr. Roberts introduced Comcast's newly integrated Netflix experience on its next-generation X1 set-top box and guide. He said that working through that deal brought the two companies, who often have fought bitterly, "a lot closer." Comcast is in discussions with several other video-streaming providers to integrate their services into the X1 box, Mr. Roberts said.

Credit: By Shalini Ramachandran and Ryan Knutson

DETAILS

Subject:	Wireless carriers; Wireless communications; Customer services; Strategic planning; Wireless networks; Service introduction; Telecommunications towers; Wireless access points; Cable TV
Business indexing term:	Subject: Customer services Strategic planning Cable TV; Corporation: AT & T Inc Comcast Corp Verizon Communications Inc; Industry: 51711 : Wired and Wireless Telecommunications Carriers (except Satellite)
Location:	United States--US
People:	Roberts, Brian L
Company / organization:	Name: Verizon Communications Inc; NAICS: 513210, 517111, 517112; Name: Comcast Corp; NAICS: 517111, 517112, 517810
Classification:	51711: Wired and Wireless Telecommunications Carriers (except Satellite)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821709357
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-comcast-plans-wireless-service/docview/1821709357/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 110 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

CONNECTICUT Court to Hear Appeal Of Education Ruling The Connecticut Supreme Court agreed Tuesday to hear an appeal of a lower-court ruling that ordered the state to overhaul how it funds public-school education.

FULL TEXT

CONNECTICUT

Court to Hear Appeal

Of Education Ruling

The Connecticut Supreme Court agreed Tuesday to hear an appeal of a lower-court ruling that ordered the state to overhaul how it funds public-school education.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Moukawsher's ruling earlier this month found that the state's funding program for public schools violated the state constitution. The state attorney general's office asked the high court last week to review the ruling.

The judge also ordered the state to change its teacher evaluation system, establish mandatory standards to graduate high school, define what children should learn to finish elementary school and rework its special-education system.

-- Joseph De Avila

NEW YORK

Student Debt Doubled

In the Past Decade

New York state residents owe a combined $82 billion in student loan debt, a figure that has more than doubled in the past decade.

The numbers released Tuesday by state Comptroller Thomas DiNapoli show the number of borrowers and the amount they owe increased sharply as the cost of higher education went up. The state now has 2.8 million borrowers, who each owe an average of $32,200.

The average in-state cost of tuition, fees and room and board at a public college was $20,549 last year, up from $13,275 in 2005.

-- Associated Press

NEW JERSEY

Seaside Runners

Join Towers Race

Some runners from a New Jersey race canceled after a pipe bomb explosion will participate in a New York City charity event.

Organizers said runners from New Jersey's Seaside Semper Five Marine Corps fundraiser have accepted their invitation to take part in the annual Stephen Siller Tunnel to Towers race.

The race will be run Sunday from the Hugh L. Carey tunnel to the World Trade Center site.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK STATE

New Area Code 838

Added to 518 Region

New York regulators say the new telephone area code that will be added to eastern New York's 518 region will be 838.

The Public Service Commission last week approved the "overlay" in the 17-county region to meet demand for new phone numbers. Existing numbers will keep the 518 area code and new ones will begin with 838.

-- Associated Press

NEW JERSEY

Former Letter Carrier

Gets a Year in Prison

A former letter carrier involved in a scheme to steal hundreds of blank postal service money orders was sentenced Tuesday to a year in prison.

Prosecutors said Jonel Normil, 26, who was a letter carrier in Cape May Courthouse, gave the money orders to other conspirators who made them look legitimate and imprinted them with values of $900 or $1,000.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Area codes; State court decisions; Education; Criminal sentences; Money orders
Business indexing term:	Subject: Money orders
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	DiNapoli, Thomas P
Company / organization:	Name: World Trade Center-New York City NY; NAICS: 813910; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647912
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1821647912/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 111 of 500

Business News: Appeals Court Tosses Verdict, Says China Can Set Vitamin C Pricing

Kendall, Brent . Kendall, Brent.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In a historic move, China's Ministry of Commerce participated in the case as a friend of the court and urged U.S. judges to dismiss the case against the Chinese firms, Hebei Welcome Pharmaceutical Co. and affiliated company North China Pharmaceutical Group Corp. The New York-based Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which issued Tuesday's decision, said it was the first time any entity of the Chinese government has participated in such a fashion in any U.S. court.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- A federal appeals court on Tuesday threw out a $147 million civil price fixing judgment against Chinese manufacturers of vitamin C, ruling the companies weren't liable in U.S. courts because they were acting under the direction of Chinese authorities.

The case raised thorny questions of how courts should treat foreign companies accused of violating U.S. antitrust law when they are following mandates of a foreign government.

In a historic move, China's Ministry of Commerce participated in the case as a friend of the court and urged U.S. judges to dismiss the case against the Chinese firms, Hebei Welcome Pharmaceutical Co. and affiliated company North China Pharmaceutical Group Corp.

The New York-based Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which issued Tuesday's decision, said it was the first time any entity of the Chinese government has participated in such a fashion in any U.S. court.

The Chinese vitamin makers "were required by Chinese law to set prices and reduce quantities of vitamin C sold abroad and doing so posed a true conflict between China's regulatory scheme and U.S. antitrust laws such that this conflict in defendants' legal obligations, balanced with other factors, mandates dismissal of plaintiffs' suit on international comity grounds," the appeals court said in a 45-page opinion.

The case, dating to 2005, was brought by vitamin C purchasers, including a Texas animal feed company and a New Jersey vitamin distributor. They alleged the Chinese vitamin C makers conspired to fix prices and supplies in the U.S. and imposed tens of millions of dollars in damages on U.S. consumers since late 2001.

Instead of denying the allegations, the vitamin makers said their actions were required under Chinese regulations on vitamin C export pricing.

A trial took place in 2013, with jurors in Brooklyn finding the foreign companies liable for fixing prices. A judge then awarded $147 million in damages. The trial court didn't believe Chinese law compelled the companies to engage in anticompetitive conduct.

The Second Circuit thought differently in Tuesday's decision, saying it would defer to the Chinese government's proclamation in the court proceedings that its regulations required the companies to fix the price and quantity of vitamin C sold abroad.

"Not extending deference in these circumstances disregards and unravels the tradition of according respect to a foreign government's explication of its own laws, the same respect and treatment that we would expect our government to receive in comparable matters before a foreign court," the appeals court said.

Joel Mitnick, a Sidley Austin LLP lawyer who represented the Chinese government, said the litigation was time-consuming and expensive and should have been dismissed a decade ago. "We don't understand a foreign government's laws better than they do," he said.

Jonathan Jacobson of Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, a lawyer for the vitamin makers, said the ruling "is a very important decision on international comity."

A lawyer for the plaintiffs didn't immediately respond to requests for comment.

Credit: By Brent Kendall

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; Trials; Vitamin C; Antitrust; Pricing policies; Prices; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Antitrust Pricing policies
Location:	China; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: North China Pharmaceutical Group Corp; NAICS: 325412
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647905
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-appeals-court-tosses-verdict-says/docview/1821647905/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 112 of 500

City News: Terrorism-Insurance Picture Is Uncertain in Chelsea

Scism, Leslie; Gay, Mara . Scism, Leslie; Gay, Mara.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Congress passed the law, originally known as the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act, following the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks to help insurers pay claims stemming from possibly catastrophic damage from future attacks.

FULL TEXT

While many Americans consider the bomb that went off Saturday in New York City to be terrorism, some property owners who sustained damage have reason to shy away from that term when it comes to insurance.

So far, it appears that the damage from the blast was contained to a limited area near where the device detonated in Manhattan's Chelsea neighborhood.

That means property owners will have less to repair, and they may have less reason to worry about the potentially costly complexities of a federal terrorism-insurance law.

Congress passed the law, originally known as the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act, following the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks to help insurers pay claims stemming from possibly catastrophic damage from future attacks. It now is called the Terrorism Risk Insurance Program Reauthorization Act.

The law encourages businesses to buy specialized terrorism insurance coverage. In reality, about a fifth of New York state businesses -- and more than that nationally -- lack the coverage, according to industry estimates.

Under the law, businesses' ordinary property-insurance policies will generally cover claims for small-scale damage from terrorism.

The terrorism insurance program is triggered only when aggregate damage tops $5 million -- the threshold for the federal government to certify an event as terrorism.

If the certification occurs, businesses lacking the specialized policies could find themselves paying out of pocket for repairs.

On Tuesday, business owners in Chelsea were still figuring out what to do. At the King David Gallery on West 23rd Street, near the blast site, owner Daniel Peretz, 63 years old, said he was in Israel when he learned of the attacks, and rushed to get a flight home.

When he arrived, he found the storefront's windows blown out, and mirrors and art damaged.

"It was a mess," he said. "I don't even know the extent of it yet."

Mr. Peretz said he had called an insurance adjuster. He doesn't have terrorism insurance.

Across the neighborhood, the bombing doesn't appear to be "of the magnitude that would trigger the terrorism insurance program," said Loretta Worters, a spokeswoman for New York-based trade group Insurance Information Institute.

The Sept. 11 attacks left the insurance industry with about $25 billion in property damage, measured in today's dollars. Since then, policies sold to business customers typically have excluded property losses stemming from terrorism unless the customer pays extra for the coverage.

The law's nuances surfaced in 2013 after the Boston marathon bombings.

The terrorism insurance program wasn't invoked then because the $5 million threshold wasn't reached, said Robert Hartwig, a professor at the Darla Moore School of Business at the University of South Carolina who specializes in insurance.

The percentage of policyholders purchasing the specialized terrorism coverage in New York state is 78% compared with 61% nationally, Mr. Hartwig said. The figure for New York City "is likely to be higher still given the well-known and obvious threat to the city, not to mention the actual historical experience of 9/11 itself," he said.

Credit: By Leslie Scism and Mara Gay

DETAILS

Subject:	Terrorism; Group insurance; Terrorism Risk Insurance Act 2002-US; Insurance policies; Risk management; Property & casualty insurance; Insurance coverage; Insurance industry; Bombings
Business indexing term:	Subject: Group insurance Terrorism Risk Insurance Act 2002-US Insurance policies Risk management Property & casualty insurance Insurance coverage Insurance industry; Industry: 52412 : Direct Insurance (except Life, Health, and Medical) Carriers
Location:	New York; India; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Congress; NAICS: 921120; Name: Insurance Information Institute; NAICS: 519290, 541690
Classification:	52412: Direct Insurance (except Life, Health, and Medical) Carriers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647846
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-terrorism-insurance-picture-is/docview/1821647846/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-08-06
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 113 of 500

Business News: Allergan To Acquire Biotechs

Stynes, Tess . Stynes, Tess.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Allergan PLC said it agreed to acquire Tobira Therapeutics Inc., a biopharmaceutical company that develops therapies for liver diseases, in a deal valued at as much as $1.7 billion, or 19 times Tobira's previous market value.

FULL TEXT

Allergan PLC said it agreed to acquire Tobira Therapeutics Inc., a biopharmaceutical company that develops therapies for liver diseases, in a deal valued at as much as $1.7 billion, or 19 times Tobira's previous market value.

Shares of Tobira surged 721% to $38.91 in Tuesday trading, while Allergan shares fell 2.7% to $238.67. Tobira now has a market value of about $725 million, up from $89.2 million on Monday.

Tobira focuses on products that treat nonalcoholic steatohepatitis, or NASH, a common liver disease associated with obesity and type-2 diabetes.

NASH occurs when the accumulation of liver fat is accompanied by inflammation and cellular damage, and it can lead to scarring of the liver and progress to cirrhosis, liver cancer and eventual liver failure. NASH has no approved treatments available, the company said, and affects 5% of the U.S. population.

Separately, Allergan said it further bolstered its NASH pipeline by purchasing biopharmaceutical firm Akarna Therapeutics for $50 million, plus potential milestone payments that weren't disclosed.

Credit: By Tess Stynes

DETAILS

Subject:	Liver; Pharmaceutical industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Pharmaceutical industry; Corporation: Allergan PLC; Industry: 32541 : Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Tobira Therapeutics Inc; NAICS: 541714; Name: Allergan PLC; NAICS: 325412, 339113
Classification:	32541: Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647814
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-allergan-acquire-biotechs/docview/1821647814/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without per mission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-08-26

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 114 of 500

Business News: Seed Companies Defend Mergers in Washington

Bunge, Jacob . Bunge, Jacob.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In February Swiss pesticide and seed maker Syngenta AG agreed to sell itself to China National Chemical Corp., or ChemChina, for $43 billion, while Dow Chemical Co. and DuPont Co. in December announced a merger that would lead to the spinoff of three independent companies, including one focused on seeds and agricultural chemicals.

FULL TEXT

U.S. Senators on Tuesday challenged executives from the world's largest seed companies to justify a wave of mergers, which some lawmakers said could lead to higher prices for farmers and consumers alike.

Senior officials from Monsanto Co., Bayer AG, DuPont Co. and Dow Chemical Co. said their combinations would yield higher-performing crops and more effective chemical sprays by integrating research and sharing regulatory costs.

If successful, the mergers would shrink the seed and pesticide industry's top six global players to four companies.

The tie-ups were catalyzed by a deep slump in the U.S. farm economy, which was hurt by four consecutive bumper crops that sent commodity crop prices plunging.

The deal-making boom could reorder the $100 billion global market in seeds, pesticides and plant genes that enable crops to survive herbicides and repel bugs. Net farm income in the U.S. is projected to drop 11.5% this year, a third straight annual decline, and some farmers are skeptical their bottom lines will benefit from the cost savings and improved products envisioned by merging seed makers.

The merger splurge crested last week when German pharmaceutical conglomerate Bayer agreed to acquire Monsanto, the world's largest seed company by sales, for $57 billion. In February Swiss pesticide and seed maker Syngenta AG agreed to sell itself to China National Chemical Corp., or ChemChina, for $43 billion, while Dow Chemical Co. and DuPont Co. in December announced a merger that would lead to the spinoff of three independent companies, including one focused on seeds and agricultural chemicals.

"To me, it looks like this consolidation wave has become a tsunami," said Sen. Charles Grassley (R., Iowa), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who convened the hearing. "I'm concerned that further concentration in the industry will reduce choice and raise the price of chemicals and seed for farmers, which ultimately will affect choice and costs for consumers."

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D., Minn.) warned that fusing companies with different specialties -- such as Bayer's focus on pesticides and Monsanto's deep portfolio of seed genetics and biotechnology capabilities -- could leave few avenues for upstarts to penetrate the research-intensive business.

Seed and pesticide executives defended the deals as necessary to speed the development of new crops and chemicals that can take around a decade and hundreds of millions of dollars to bring to market.

"This is an industry that desperately needs to invest more," said Robert Fraley, Monsanto's chief technology officer, who estimated that Monsanto spends about $1.5 billion annually developing new products.

Asked what would happen if the mergers weren't permitted to advance, Mr. Fraley said it was unlikely Monsanto and its rivals would be able to release new products as swiftly.

Credit: By Jacob Bunge

DETAILS

Subject:	Agricultural biotechnology; Pesticides; Transgenic plants; Acquisitions & mergers; Chemical industry; Cost control; Product development; Seeds; Crops; Chemicals
Business indexing term:	Subject: Acquisitions & mergers Chemical industry Cost control Product development; Corporation: E I DuPont De Nemours & Co Dow Chemical Co China National Chemical Corp; Industry: 32532 : Pesticide and Other Agricultural Chemical Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Dow Chemical Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199, 325211; Name: E I DuPont De Nemours & Co; NAICS: 211120, 324110, 325180, 424720; Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Bayer AG; NAICS: 325180, 325412
Classification:	32532: Pesticide and Other Agricultural Chemical Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647802
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-seed-companies-defend-mergers/docview/1821647802/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 115 of 500

World News: Obama Urges Course Shift for World in Conflict

Lee, Carol E . Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]he presented a broad look at the global landscape and his foreign-policy legacy, touting the Iran nuclear deal and restoration of U.S. relations with Cuba, and offered a four-pronged prescription for world leaders to confront global challenges after he leaves office in January.

FULL TEXT

UNITED NATIONS -- President Barack Obama, in his final address to the United Nations General Assembly, called on world leaders to eliminate a paradox that he says has taken shape during his terms in office: a world more prosperous than at any time in recent history, yet rife with political and security crises.

That dynamic, he said Tuesday, has fueled the conflict in Syria and the spread of Islamic State, two major security challenges that emerged during his tenure and will be handed over to his successor. It has created a Middle East where "basic order has broken down," he said, and is reflected in Russia's "attempting to recover lost glory through force."

To reverse the trend, Mr. Obama said, world leaders need to make a "course correction" in which nations address an approach to globalization that has ignored the inequities it has generated and exposed "deep fault-lines in the existing international order."

"A quarter-century after the end of the Cold War, the world is by many measures less violent and more prosperous than ever before, and yet our societies are filled with uncertainty and unease and strife," he said. "As people lose trust in institutions, governing becomes more difficult and tensions between nations become more quick to surface."

Mr. Obama's speech comes as his foreign-policy approach is being tested by the latest breakdown of a cease-fire agreement on Syria and by a series of terrorism incidents over the weekend in New York, New Jersey and Minnesota.

The president didn't mention either news development in his remarks. Instead, he presented a broad look at the global landscape and his foreign-policy legacy, touting the Iran nuclear deal and restoration of U.S. relations with Cuba, and offered a four-pronged prescription for world leaders to confront global challenges after he leaves office in January.

The "areas where I believe we must do better together," he said, are creating a fairer global economy, enhancing democratic governance, rejecting fundamentalism and racism, and increasing international cooperation.

Mr. Obama took a veiled political swipe at Republican presidential contender Donald Trump. People in some countries -- even in the U.S. -- react to globalization by resorting to ethnic politics, "aggressive nationalism" and religious fundamentalism. "We cannot dismiss these visions. They are powerful. They reflect dissatisfaction among too many of our citizens," he said, but added: "Today, a nation ringed by walls would only imprison itself."

He did so again at a refugee summit later in the day, warning against allowing pressures of the global refugee crisis to provoke tensions or political demagoguery.

Turning away refugees who are Muslim would reinforce terrorist propaganda that countries like the U.S. oppose Islam, he said, "which is an ugly lie that must be rejected in all of our countries by upholding the values of pluralism and diversity."

Mr. Trump has proposed a temporary halt to allowing refugees from certain conflict zones.

Refugees pose a "crisis of epic proportions," Mr. Obama said, noting more than 65 million people have been driven from their homes, more than any time since World War II.

He held up international cooperation as an approach he said led to some of his top foreign-policy achievements, such as addressing the economic crisis.

Yet, some of the major policy initiatives he outlined as top priorities during his first U.N. General Assembly address in 2009 got scant mention.

Mr. Obama then spotlighted a peace agreement between the Israelis and Palestinians as critical. On Tuesday, he said simply that "surely, Israelis and Palestinians will be better off if Palestinians reject incitement and recognize the legitimacy of Israel, but Israel recognizes that it cannot permanently occupy and settle Palestinian land."

Credit: By Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Refugees; International cooperation; Terrorism; Foreign policy; Globalization; Truces & cease fires; Palestinian people
Business indexing term:	Subject: Globalization
Location:	Russia; United States--US; Syria
People:	Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647713
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-urges-course-shift-conflict/docview/1821647713/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 116 of 500

Business News: States Sue U.S. Over New Pay Rule

Trottman, Melanie . Trottman, Melanie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The coalition of more than 50 business groups led by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce made similar allegations in their suit, which includes trade group plaintiffs from a host of sectors including manufacturing, construction, auto, franchising, retail, lodging and insurance.

FULL TEXT

Twenty-one states and a coalition of more than 50 business groups filed separate lawsuits Tuesday seeking to overturn a sweeping federal regulation designed to qualify millions more Americans for overtime pay starting in December, a step the Obama administration considers one of its signature workplace achievements.

Attorneys general in Texas and Nevada filed their lawsuit on behalf of their states and 19 others, arguing the Labor Department rule violates the U.S. Constitution and exceeds congressional authority. The coalition of more than 50 business groups led by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce made similar allegations in their suit, which includes trade group plaintiffs from a host of sectors including manufacturing, construction, auto, franchising, retail, lodging and insurance.

The rule, ordered by the White House in an effort to shore up workers' wages, will increase the salary threshold that generally determines who qualifies for overtime pay, doubling it to $47,476 a year from the $23,660 level last updated in 2004. It also will ensure the threshold is updated every three years by indexing it to salary growth in the lowest income region of the country -- an unprecedented step.

The rule is expected to have broad effect on employers, workers and sectors including fast-food, retail, colleges and nonprofits. Many employers have complained it will drive up their costs and cause them to cut workers' hours, slow hiring of full-time staff and turn salaried workers into hourly employees. The lawsuits filed Tuesday echoed those claims.

Both suits were filed in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Texas, Sherman Division.

"Once again, President Obama is trying to unilaterally rewrite the law," Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton said in a statement. "And this time, it may lead to disastrous consequences for our economy."

Labor Secretary Thomas Perez defended the regulation Tuesday and called the lawsuits partisan "obstructionist tactics" that will prevent the Obama administration from ensuring Americans are fairly paid when they work extra hours.

Credit: By Melanie Trottman

DETAILS

Subject:	Litigation; Attorneys general; Federal regulation; Overtime pay
Business indexing term:	Subject: Overtime pay; Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	Nevada; Texas; United States--US
People:	Paxton, Ken
Company / organization:	Name: US Chamber of Commerce; NAICS: 813910; Name: District Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647623
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-states-sue-u-s-over-new-pay-rule/docview/1821647623/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 117 of 500

U.S. News -- 5 Things On.... Fed Officials' Latest Policy Meeting

Harrison, David . Harrison, David.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Federal Reserve isn't likely to raise short-term interest rates at its policy meeting this week, but could send signals Wednesday about where borrowing costs are headed in the months and years ahead.

FULL TEXT

The Federal Reserve isn't likely to raise short-term interest rates at its policy meeting this week, but could send signals Wednesday about where borrowing costs are headed in the months and years ahead. Here's what to watch for:

1. A December Signal?

Fed officials have been split in recent weeks, with some such as Boston's Eric Rosengren and San Francisco's John Williams arguing another increase is appropriate, while others such as governor Lael Brainard have cited sluggish inflation as a reason to hold off. Fed Chairwoman Janet Yellen could forge a compromise by holding rates steady this week but using the Fed's policy statement or her news conference to raise expectations for a move later this year, likely in December.

2. The Path Forward?

In December 2015, Fed officials' median projection anticipated raising interest rates by a percentage point in 2016, likely in four moves. By March that projection was cut to a half-point increase, likely in two moves. Wednesday's release is likely to pare expectations further, perhaps to a single quarter-point increase this year.

3. What's the Risk?

Worries on the U.S. and global economy in the first half of the year seem to have eased as both America and the world now seem on more stable footing. That could lead the Fed to say the risks to its outlook are balanced. A balanced outlook may suggest the bank is more comfortable with the state of the economy and more willing to consider a rate increase soon.

4. Where's Full Employment?

At 4.9%, the jobless rate is within the Fed's estimated range of 4.7%-5% for full employment, the rate below which inflation should start to rise. That means the labor market is near full strength and a further drop in unemployment could overheat the economy and push inflation too high. So why has inflation been so elusive? Look at unemployment projections for signs of a shift in the Fed's thinking.

5. Dissents?

Fed officials like to appear united on rate decisions, but recent statements suggest a range of views that could make it hard for Ms. Yellen to keep everybody on board. A statement too willing to raise rates soon could lose "doves" support. One that makes increases less likely could mean "hawks" vote against it.

Credit: By David Harrison

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal Reserve monetary policy; Inflation; Interest rates; Full employment; Unemployment
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Federal Reserve monetary policy Inflation Interest rates Full employment Unemployment; Industry: 92113 : Public Finance Activities 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
People:	Rosengren, Eric; Williams, John C
Classification:	92113: Public Finance Activities; 52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647544
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-5-things-on-fed-officials-latest-policy/docview/1821647544/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: South Sudan Violence Engulfs Aid Workers --- Rapes, looting by soldiers rattle global community as nation moves toward brink

Stavis, Matina . Stavis, Matina.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The government has most recently confiscated aid workers' passports, halted humanitarian aid flights and banned access to organizations like Doctors Without Borders to parts of the country where fighting has left thousands of civilians in need of medical attention.

FULL TEXT

JUBA, South Sudan -- Over a single week this summer, government soldiers gang-raped U.S. and other aid workers, shot at U.S. diplomats and ransacked and looted a U.S.-funded aid-agency base, people who were there said, as the nation moved closer to becoming a failed state.

The attacks came as the capital Juba was plunged into violence in July, with government and rebel forces -- fighting a civil war that erupted in late 2013 -- killing dozens of civilians and raping hundreds of local women.

The international community here is nearing an hour of reckoning: how to aid a nation it helped create without calling out those responsible for sending it toward its demise. Aid agencies fear that speaking out will further undermine staff security and could get them kicked out, leaving millions without aid.

At the forefront of that debate is the U.S., which has poured $1.6 billion into the country since the civil war started.

The civil war has pitted President Salva Kiir and his Dinka tribesmen and state army against ethnic Nuer then-Vice President Riek Machar and his rebels.

A peace agreement this year put the two archenemies back together in government, but fighting resumed in July. Juba has been calm in recent weeks, but violence has racked most of the rest of the country.

The government has most recently confiscated aid workers' passports, halted humanitarian aid flights and banned access to organizations like Doctors Without Borders to parts of the country where fighting has left thousands of civilians in need of medical attention.

"[U.N. Security] Council members came away feeling as if the situation was much worse than even we went in expecting," Samantha Power, the U.S. ambassador to the U.N., told the council last week after visiting Juba recently. She said the government restricts movement for U.N. agencies "in a way that we've not seen anywhere else in the world."

South Sudan's vice president, Taban Deng Gai, told The Wall Street Journal in an interview in New York on Tuesday that the country was making progress in addressing its issues and expressed optimism about reconciliation among warring parties.

The account of July's events and their aftermath is based on interviews with more than a dozen United Nations and other aid-organization workers directly affected, as well as senior Western diplomats in Juba and elsewhere.

On July 11, nearly 100 soldiers entered the Terrain compound. They beat foreign aid workers, raped at least five of them, and killed one local staff member of a nongovernmental organization. When one of the Western aid workers texted her employer's security officer to alert him to the raid and ask for advice, he told her to stay calm. "You are not targeted," he texted back.

For the next 12 hours, she was gang-raped by five soldiers and watched some of her friends get brutally abused too. Several victims said U.S. citizens were singled out, one being told to tell her embassy what they had done to her.

That same day, more than 100 South Sudanese soldiers started looting the compound of the World Food Program. For more than a week, they ransacked the relief agency's warehouse and logistics base, seizing 4,500 tons of food and around 20,000 gallons of diesel.

"It was an unprecedented attack, especially as it happened in the capital and by uniformed armed men," said Joyce Kanyangwa Luma, the WFP's country director.

Four days before the WFP and Terrain attacks, South Sudanese soldiers fired on two U.S. Embassy vehicles carrying diplomats in Juba. When the U.S. ambassador to South Sudan complained she was told her colleagues hadn't been targeted.

Mr. Gai on Tuesday said the attacks weren't government policy and that an investigation in Juba had led to some arrests of culprits.

"The Americans are our friends. South Sudan has been alive because of the help of the Americans," he said, dismissing the idea that U.S. citizens were being targeted specifically.

The U.S. and U.N. have expressed outrage but continue to cooperate with the government.

Some in the aid community are advocating leaving the country entirely. "The best thing we can do in my opinion, and it's harsh and hard, is to leave," said Mukesh Kapila, a former U.N. director who in 2004 was removed as resident representative in Sudan after he pulled out his staff and called what was happening in Darfur a genocide.

Victims of the Terrain attack said they believe the muted response of the international community has a direct negative effect on the local population.

"If we tell the [South Sudanese army] 'you can rape Americans and Europeans and no one will come after you,' what do you think that makes them do to the locals? A million times worse than what they did to us," said one Western aid worker who was raped there.

Credit: By Matina Stevis

DETAILS

Subject:	Violence; Humanitarian aid; Civil war; Workers; Rape; Diplomatic & consular services; Looting; Public officials; Foreign aid
Business indexing term:	Subject: Workers; Industry: 92812 : International Affairs
Location:	South Sudan; Sudan
People:	Machar, Riek; Kiir Mayardit, Salva
Company / organization:	Name: Doctors Without Borders; NAICS: 813212; Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120; Name: Dinka Tribe; NAICS: 921150; Name: Nuer Tribe; NAICS: 921150
Classification:	92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647471
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-south-sudan-violence-engulfs-aid/docview/1821647471/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 119 of 500

Business News: Enbridge Won't Appeal Ruling

Vieira, Paul . Vieira, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Returning Gateway to the consultation phase is latest setback for the Canadian energy industry, which is struggling with lower commodity prices and a lack of pipelines to move oil and gas reserves to the coasts and on to faster-growing markets overseas.

FULL TEXT

OTTAWA -- Enbridge Inc.'s plans to build a pipeline that connects the landlocked Alberta oil sands with the Pacific Coast are headed back to the drawing board after both the company and the Canadian government on Tuesday said neither would appeal a high-court ruling quashing the Northern Gateway project.

Returning Gateway to the consultation phase is latest setback for the Canadian energy industry, which is struggling with lower commodity prices and a lack of pipelines to move oil and gas reserves to the coasts and on to faster-growing markets overseas. Without new energy corridors, Canada will remain entirely dependent on U.S. demand, and energy analysts warn that prices for Canadian oil and gas will continue to trade at a discount to the U.S. benchmark price.

For Enbridge, the delay highlights pressure on the company to find other ways to grow. It agreed earlier this month to acquire Spectra Energy Corp. for $28 billion. Enbridge's Canadian rival, TransCanada Corp., also agreed to acquire Columbia Pipeline Group Inc. after the White House rejected the Keystone XL project.

Calgary-based Enbridge said it remains committed to the Gateway project, valued at 7.9 billion Canadian dollars ($6 billion) and first approved by the former Conservative government in 2014. In June, Canada's Federal Court of Appeal overturned the government approval, saying it didn't fulfill its duty to properly consult aboriginals.

"We believe that meaningful consultation and collaboration, and not litigation, is the best path forward for everyone involved," John Carruthers, president of Enbridge's Northern Gateway unit, said Tuesday.

Enbridge's struggles with Gateway highlight the clout that aboriginals are gaining in the construction of North American energy infrastructure. Aboriginals in British Columbia, Canada's westernmost province, have been among the most vociferous opponents of the Gateway pipeline, arguing that its construction poses an environmental risk to their communities.

In the U.S., the Obama administration earlier this month halted construction of the Dakota Access Pipeline amid escalating opposition by Native American and environmental groups, led by the Standing Rock Sioux tribe.

Canada's Resources Minister Jim Carr on Tuesday said he was reviewing government options on how to proceed. "The court was not critical of Enbridge or the [energy] regulator, but critical of the [Conservative] government because it didn't do its job. So we are not going to contradict the court's judgment in this case," Mr. Carr told reporters in Ottawa.

Judy McKinnon contributed to this article.

Credit: By Paul Vieira

DETAILS

Subject:	Court decisions; Natural gas reserves; Oil reserves; Pipelines; Energy industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Energy industry
Location:	United States--US; Canada
Company / organization:	Name: Spectra Energy; NAICS: 486210; Name: Enbridge Inc; NAICS: 486110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Fi nance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647438
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-enbridge-wont-appeal-ruling/docview/1821647438/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 120 of 500

World News: Illegal Immigrant Mix Shifts --- Number of people in the U.S. illegally levels off as total entering from Mexico falls

Jordan, Miriam . Jordan, Miriam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The multiyear trend marks a reversal of the migratory tide that for decades provided workers for key sectors of the U.S. economy.

FULL TEXT

The number of immigrants unlawfully in the U.S. has been steady at 11 million since the end of the Great Recession, while the undocumented Mexican population continues to shrink, according to a study released Tuesday.

The multivear trend marks a reversal of the migratory tide that for decades provided workers for key sectors of the U.S. economy. It's a turning point that is affecting employers in agriculture and construction, which are reporting labor shortages as those businesses added jobs amid the economy's recovery.

The Pew Research Center, which analyzed census data, concluded that the leveling off of the illegal population since 2009 is a direct consequence of the decline in the number of Mexicans who are undocumented. The trend was offset only by a rise in undocumented immigrants from Central America, Asia and Africa.

Illegal immigration, a central issue in the presidential campaign, peaked at 12.2 million in 2007. It was 11.1 million in 2014 and 11.3 million in 2009, according to the report.

In 2007, there were 6.9 million undocumented Mexicans in the U.S. In 2014, Mexicans still represented the majority of the nation's illegal immigrants, but their number had dropped to 5.8 million.

In the states where the overall undocumented population slipped in the past five years, including California, Georgia and Illinois, the decline in undocumented Mexicans was the main factor.

"We see a continued drop in the Mexican unauthorized immigrant population," said Jeff Passel, the center's senior demographer. "That's in contrast to the late '90s and early 2000s, when their numbers" were growing at the rate of several hundred thousand a year.

Meanwhile, the number of undocumented immigrants from other parts of the world has grown by 325,000 since 2009, to 5.3 million in 2014. For example, the number of illegal immigrants from India reached 500,000 in 2014, up 130,000 in five years.

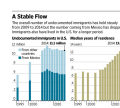

The Border Patrol reports an increase in illegal entries by people from places other than Mexico. Poverty and violence in El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala continue to drive people north.

In Mexico, economic pressures that pushed people to seek a future in the U.S. have subsided. Chief among them is the advent of smaller families, which means fewer mouths to feed. Drug cartels operating on migratory routes, beefed-up border patrols and the steep price charged by human smugglers also discourage migration.

Immigrant workers who returned willingly or were deported to their home countries during the recession aren't being replaced by new arrivals or young Americans.

The Pew report said the recession reduced employment in construction and other sectors where Mexican immigrants overall are especially likely to work. But as the economy has recovered, those sectors have begun to feel the impact of the decline in Mexican workers.

"I don't think there is a farming company in Ventura County that is not very short of labor," said Guillermo Magdaleno, who supplies workers to citrus and avocado growers in Southern California.

Enlarge this image.

DETAILS

Subject:	Population decline; Agriculture; Immigration; Construction industry; Recessions; Noncitizens; Population; Border patrol; Hispanic people; Immigrants; Labor shortages
Business indexing term:	Subject: Construction industry Recessions Labor shortages
Location:	United States--US; Mexico
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647422
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-illegal-immigrant-mix-shifts-number/docview/1821647422/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29

LINKS

Document 121 of 500

U.S. News: No Single Profile for 'Lone Wolf' Attacker

Cullison, Alan . Cullison, Alan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]it's been shown there is an opposite correlation, and that people who are more educated are more likely to become terrorists," he said.

FULL TEXT

Amid the anxiety prompted by last weekend's terror attacks, security experts are vexed by a recurring question: How can latent mass murderers with no formal connection to faraway terror groups be caught before they act?

Hints may surface as investigators splice together the biographies of Ahmad Khan Rahami, who sowed homemade bombs in New York City and New Jersey, and Dahir Adan, who went on a stabbing spree in a Minnesota shopping mall before he was shot dead by an off-duty police officer.

But experts are concluding that for attacks committed by such sole assailants, known as "lone wolves," there is no all-encompassing explanation.

"Fundamentally, the quest for a single answer for the reason for terror is pretty doomed -- it's like trying to answer the question of why there is crime," said J.M. Berger, a fellow with George Washington University's Program on Extremism.

Lone wolf attackers in the U.S. have usually been young people with violent predilections and contradictory motives. Researchers seeking singular causes have seen their theories debunked or qualified.

Poverty has been advanced as one explanation -- yet some of the most prominent attackers have been from middle-class backgrounds, said Mr. Berger. Lack of education also doesn't appear to be a cause, he said. "In fact, it's been shown there is an opposite correlation, and that people who are more educated are more likely to become terrorists," he said.

With motives murky, some experts say attention should focus on symptoms rather than ideology when trying to anticipate the next attack.

Mia Bloom, who researches suicide terrorism at Georgia State, said one study suggested 80% of lone wolf attackers had hinted to others about their plans, and 60% had told others of specific schemes.

But relatives and friends often don't report suspected attacks because they hope the plans aren't serious, she said. Others fear they could make problems worse by contacting police, she said.

Credit: By Alan Cullison

DETAILS

Subject:	Psychological aspects; Terrorism; Criminal investigations
Location:	New York City New York; Minnesota; United States--US
People:	Berger, J M; Rahami, Ahmad Khan; Adan, Dahir; Bloom, Mia
Company / organization:	Name: George Washington University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Georgia State University; NAICS: 611310
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647327
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-no-single-profile-lone-wolf-attacker/docview/1821647327/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 122 of 500

U.S. News: Suspect's Ex-Girlfriend Seeks Custody of Child

Gershman, Jacob . Gershman, Jacob.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Maria J. Mena, who met Ahmad Khan Rahami in high school, filed papers in New Jersey Superior Court one day after the 28-year-old father of the child was captured in a gunfight with police in Linden, N.J. Mr. Rahami is accused of setting off bombs in New York and New Jersey that injured 29 people.

FULL TEXT

The former girlfriend of the suspect in the New York and New Jersey bombings filed an emergency application Tuesday for full custody of their only child.

Maria J. Mena, who met Ahmad Khan Rahami in high school, filed papers in New Jersey Superior Court one day after the 28-year-old father of the child was captured in a gunfight with police in Linden, N.J.

Mr. Rahami is accused of setting off bombs in New York and New Jersey that injured 29 people.

"Requesting full custody. Defendant has been charged with police attempted murder, and is currently under protective services after possible terrorist related activity in NYC," Ms. Mena, a 26-year-old resident of Edison, N.J., hand-wrote in her application.

She also sought a restraining order preventing Mr. Rahami from removing the child from her home.

In her application, Ms. Mena checked off a box indicating that her child would suffer substantial and irreparable harm unless she is granted sole parental rights.

She said in the filing that she last spoke with Mr. Rahami in January. She didn't specify when she last saw him in person, but said she watched him on television Monday, the day police captured him.

Ms. Mena couldn't be reached for comment.

Her filing doesn't mention Mr. Rahami's previous brushes with the law.

In February 2012, he pleaded guilty to violating a domestic-violence restraining order. In 2014, he was charged with attempting to stab a brother in the leg during a family fight. The grand jury declined to indict Mr. Rahami, citing insufficient evidence.

Credit: By Jacob Gershman

DETAILS

Subject:	Parental rights; Terrorism; Restraining orders; Litigation; Child custody; State court decisions
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Rahami, Ahmad Khan; Mena, Maria
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 21, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821647053
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-suspects-ex-girlfriend-seeks-custody/docview/1821647053/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 123 of 500

World News: Syria Aid Convoy Struck as Truce Falter --- Trucks were delivering assistance on the day the regime said the cease-fire was over Fassihi, Farnaz; Raydan, Noam; Schwartz, Felicia . Fassihi, Farnaz; Raydan, Noam; Schwartz, Felicia.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mosaab Khalaf, a member of the opposition Aleppo local council, said the skies were calm all day but that changed abruptly in the evening. "Since around 7 p.m. and up until now, the bombing has been very, very violent," he said.

FULL TEXT

At least 18 trucks delivering aid to Syrians for the first time since the start of a week-old cease-fire were hit by an airstrike on Monday, according to U.S. and humanitarian officials, as the regime declared the truce effort over.

The trucks were part of a convoy delivering assistance to a rebel-held town, Urem al-Kubra, west of the divided city of Aleppo, according to officials at the United Nations, which helped organize it.

It wasn't clear who launched the attack, though Secretary of State John Kerry said Syrian forces were "evidently" responsible. U.S. officials said Syria and its ally, Russia, both knew where the convoy started and where it was going, and said the Obama administration considers Russia responsible for the Assad regime's actions.

Russia's defense ministry said late Monday that Russia and Syria weren't conducting strikes against opposition forces, in keeping with the cease-fire brokered by the U.S. and Russia. There was no comment from Syria.

Local activists said the head of the Syrian Arab Red Crescent, Omar Barakat, was killed in the attack. A warehouse run by the group, which took part in the convoy, was also attacked.

"The situation on the spot is very chaotic and we are deeply shocked that humanitarian workers and missions have yet again suffered from the brutality of this conflict," said the International Committee of the Red Cross, which is active in Syria.

U.N. Emergency Relief Coordinator Stephen O'Brien said he was "disgusted and horrified by the news" and called for an independent investigation into the attack. Initial reports indicated many people were killed or seriously injured, Mr. O'Brien said.

"Notification of the convoy -- which planned to reach some 78,000 people -- had been provided to all parties to the conflict and the convoy was clearly marked as humanitarian," he said.

The attack came on a pivotal day for the already fragile cease-fire, which began Sept. 12 with the aim of reducing violence for seven consecutive days and allowing humanitarian aid to flow.

On Monday, a week after the cease-fire began, the Syrian army said the truce had expired, in a statement carried by state news agency SANA. The Syrian statement accused rebel groups of committing more than 300 cease-fire violations of the truce. Both sides had repeatedly blamed each other for breaching the truce.

The State Department said Washington was prepared to extend the truce, and urged Moscow to exercise its influence with Damascus. "While we have seen comments attributed to the Syrian military, our arrangement is with Russia, which is responsible for the Syrian regime's compliance, so we expect Russia to clarify their position," State Department spokesman John Kirby said.

His comments came before news of the convoy attack was public. U.S. officials said it was too soon to say how Washington might respond to the convoy attacks.

Earlier Monday, Russia had warned Monday that the fragile cease-fire was imperiled but stopped short of declaring the deal dead. The spokeswoman for the Russian foreign ministry couldn't be reached to comment on the statements by Syria and the State Department.

France's foreign minister, Jean-Marc Ayrault, criticized Russia and the U.S. for their handling of the Syria cease-fire deal, saying there were "too many hidden agendas."

"We can't limit dialogue to two countries, we must all be mobilized and join force," Mr. Ayrault said. "We can see clearly the limits of how much good will there is."

Mr. Ayrault's statement reflected the sentiments of other diplomats at the U.N. Security Council who have questioned whether the peace talks should continue to be dominated by Russia and the U.S. after producing so few results.

A group of world powers with interests in the Syria conflict, including Russia, Iran and Saudi Arabia, will meet on the sidelines of the U.N. General Assembly on Tuesday morning. Mr. Kerry was planning to meet with his Russian counterpart Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov either Monday night or Tuesday morning, a senior administration official said.

Shortly after the Syrian military announcement, heavy airstrikes hit the rebel-held side of the divided city of Aleppo, according to residents and antigovernment activists there.

Mosaab Khalaf, a member of the opposition Aleppo local council, said the skies were calm all day but that changed abruptly in the evening. "Since around 7 p.m. and up until now, the bombing has been very, very violent," he said.

Before the airstrike on the aid shipment, David Swanson, a spokesman for the U.N. Officer for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs for Syria, said two convoys of assistance were sent Monday to rebel-held areas -- one in Homs province and the other in Aleppo province, the one hit Monday.

Mr. Swanson said the convoys were the first to deliver aid since the start of the cease-fire. The convoys, which originated in another part of Syria, were approved by the regime, he said. He also said 40 trucks of aid that have been stalled on the Turkish border haven't moved yet, as the U.N. tries to negotiate safe passage.

Adam Entous, Nathan Hodge, Raja Abdulrahim and Nicholas Winning contributed to this article.

Credit: Farnaz Fassihi, Noam Raydan, Felicia Schwartz

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Trucks; Humanitarian aid; Military air strikes; Humanitarianism
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Syria
People:	Kerry, John F
Company / organization:	Name: International Committee of the Red Cross; NAICS: 621991, 813212
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821060902
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syria-aid-convoy-struck-as-truce/docview/1821060902/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 124 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The U.S. and China are targeting a Chinese firm whose head is believed to have had a role in aiding North Korea's nuclear program.

FULL TEXT

Authorities arrested a man suspected of setting off homemade bombs in New York and New Jersey that injured 29 people.

Clinton and Trump tangled in the aftermath of the bombings as national security returned to the forefront of the campaign.

Police said they had no evidence so far of ties between the Minnesota mall attacker and Islamic State.

The U.S. and China are targeting a Chinese firm whose head is believed to have had a role in aiding North Korea's nuclear program.

North Korea said it had successfully tested a high-powered rocket engine.

A convoy delivering aid to a rebel-held town in Syria was hit by an airstrike, as the regime declared a week-old cease-fire over.

World leaders gathered at a U.N. summit delayed negotiations on a global refugee pact until 2018.

Prosecutors said New Jersey's Christie was told about bridge-scandal traffic jams as they were occurring.

Saudi Arabia arrested 17 people suspected of links to Islamic State and of planning four attacks.

Use of powerful antibiotics in hospitals is rising, the CDC said, increasing the risk of drug-resistant bacteria.

DETAILS

Subject:	Nuclear weapons
Location:	Minnesota; United States--US; China; Syria; New Jersey; North Korea; New York; Saudi Arabia
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820991238
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1820991238/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 125 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The FDA gave accelerated approval to Sarepta's drug for Duchenne muscular dystrophy, after sharp disagreements within the agency. ---

FULL TEXT

While Fed officials have been grappling with whether to tighten policy, markets may have already done much of the work for them.

U.S. stocks were nearly flat ahead of Fed and Bank of Japan meetings. The Dow eased 3.63 to 18120.17.

Wells Fargo's Stumpf is set to testify at a Senate hearing that could stoke momentum for new rules on pay practices at big banks.

Tesla said its proposed $2.3 billion merger with SolarCity could be delayed by shareholder lawsuits.

The Obama administration is rolling out recommended guidelines for companies developing driverless cars.

Hanjin was ordered by a South Korean court to send chartered vessels back to their owners and to sell as many of its own ships as possible.

Gasoline prices have surged across the Southeast after the partial closure of a major pipeline.

The FDA gave accelerated approval to Sarepta's drug for Duchenne muscular dystrophy, after sharp disagreements within the agency.

Big-name hedge funds have been badly lagging behind their smaller, lesser-known rivals this year.

Samsung said faulty batteries weren't the cause of a fire that damaged a Galaxy Note 7 phone in China.

DETAILS

Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Food & Drug Administration--FDA; NAICS: 922190; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest documentID:	1820990518
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1820990518/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-14
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Trump, Clinton Clash on Security

Hook, Janet; Bender, Michael C . Hook, Janet; Bender, Michael C.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

(WSJ Sept. 27, 2016) National-security concerns lurched back to the forefront of the 2016 presidential race Monday as Democrat Hillary Clinton and Republican Donald Trump battled over policy and fitness to lead after the series of weekend bombings in the New York City area.

FULL TEXT

Corrections & Amplifications

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump criticized people who were reluctant to profile in a Sept. 19 interview about terrorism on the morning news show Fox & Friends. A Page One article on Sept. 20 about national-security concerns and the presidential race didn't make clear that Mr. Trump's comments came on the show. It also incorrectly said that Mr. Trump used the word race when he spoke about profiling.

(WSJ Sept. 27, 2016)

National-security concerns lurched back to the forefront of the 2016 presidential race Monday as Democrat Hillary Clinton and Republican Donald Trump battled over policy and fitness to lead after the series of weekend bombings in the New York City area.

Their responses put a new edge on the deep divisions between the two candidates' approaches to how best to weed out terror threats: Mrs. Clinton emphasized intelligence and police work and stressed her experience, while Mr. Trump renewed his call for imposing stricter limits on immigration. The suspect in the incidents is a naturalized American citizen whose family came to the U.S. from Afghanistan when he was a child.

"These attacks and many others were made possible because of our extremely open immigration system, which fails to properly vet and screen the individuals coming into our country," Mr. Trump said at a rally in Estero, Fla.

Mrs. Clinton, earlier in the day, called on Americans to be "vigilant but not afraid."

"We have faced threats before, she said. "I know we will meet this new danger with the same courage and vigilance."

The attacks come at a time when voters' concern about terrorism is running higher as a priority than in any other presidential election over the last generation, an analysis of Wall Street Journal/NBC News polling shows.

Asked this past June what is the most important issue for the federal government to address, the issue picked by more than any other as first choice was national security and terrorism, ranked at the top by 28% of the respondents. That survey was conducted just after the mass shooting in Orlando, Fla., by a New York-born man whose parents came to the U.S. from Afghanistan.

The candidates' responses and next week's first debate, which will touch on security issues, are among the final opportunities for both candidates to try to woo the roughly 11% of voters who are undecided or leaning toward third-party candidates.

Two political scientists who have studied terrorism and politics -- Elizabeth Zechmeister of Vanderbilt University and Jennifer Merolla of the University of California, Riverside -- have found that traditionally Republicans enjoy a political advantage at times of high perceived terrorist threats. However, they have concluded that this year Mrs. Clinton's experience neutralizes Mr. Trump's edge.

Ms. Merolla said their research suggests that terrorist attacks may have another effect on the election: making voters more attentive to candidates' character rather than focusing on their policy positions.

"Even if leadership evaluations do not shift at all for either candidate, if terrorism remains in the news, we should expect to see voters placing more weight on leadership qualities in deciding which candidate to cast a ballot for," she said.

The campaigns were shadowed Monday by the developments of the weekend, when a powerful blast rocked New York City on Saturday evening, after a homemade pipe bomb had earlier in the day detonated in New Jersey. No one was killed, although more than two dozen were injured in the New York blast.

Investigators later found a second explosive device in New York City, and five more pipe bombs near a train station in Elizabeth, N.J. They hadn't detonated, although one blew up when police were trying to defuse it using a robot.

On Monday morning, authorities detained Ahmad Khan Rahami, a 28-year-old from New Jersey, as a suspect in the bombing incidents after a shootout with police near his home in Elizabeth.

Separately, a man in St. Cloud, Minn., late Saturday injured nine people in knife attacks at a shopping mall, a rampage being investigated as a possible terrorist incident.

Mrs. Clinton is emphasizing her experience in the White House as secretary of state and said at a Philadelphia campaign stop that such times are a "sobering reminder that we need steady leadership."

"I am prepared to, ready to actually take on those challenges," Mrs. Clinton said, "not engage in a lot of irresponsible, reckless rhetoric."

She mocked Mr. Trump's assertion that he could be more effective in combating Islamic State and other terrorist groups. "You don't hear a plan from him. He keeps saying he has a secret plan," she said, referring to Mr. Trump. "The secret is he has no plan."

And she quoted former Central Intelligence Agency director Michael Hayden, who said this year that Mr. Trump was being used as a "recruiting sergeant" for Islamic State, also known as ISIS. "A lot of the rhetoric we've heard from Donald Trump has been seized on by terrorists, in particular ISIS, because they are looking to make this into a war against Islam," Mrs. Clinton said.

Mr. Trump delivered an equally sharp personal rebuke of his opponent. He called for allowing police more latitude in profiling suspects, including by race, and tougher immigrant screenings.

He also criticized Mrs. Clinton's support for increased admissions of refugees from the Middle East.

Speaking of Mr. Rahami, who was detained and being treated in a New Jersey hospital, Mr. Trump said: "The bad part now, we will give him amazing hospitalization . . . He will be represented by an outstanding lawyer."

The GOP nominee also said Congress should pass a measure to ensure that "foreign enemy combatants are treated as such."

Byron Tau and Reid J. Epstein contributed to this article.

Credit: By Janet Hook and Michael C. Bender

DETAILS

Subject:	Terrorism; Presidential elections; Immigration policy; Political campaigns; National security; Bombings; Criminal investigations; Mass murders; Candidates; Immigration
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US; New York City New York
People:	Trump, Donald J; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	009996 60
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990448
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-clinton-clash-on-security/docview/1820990448/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 127 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Associated Press --- CONNECTICUT Jobless Rate Fell To 5.6% in August The state unemployment rate declined slightly in August, to 5.6% from 5.7%, preliminary figures released Monday showed.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK STATE

Suit Over Funding

For Schools Tossed

A judge on Monday threw out a lawsuit that claimed the state was shortchanging students in eight small city school districts and denying their constitutional right to a "sound basic education."

While calling the students' performance "undeniably inadequate," state Supreme Court Justice Kimberly O'Connor said the plaintiffs didn't prove the state hasn't met its obligation to them. The state's largest teachers union called the decision "a blow to some of New York's most vulnerable students."

The suit over funding was filed in 2008 on behalf of students in Jamestown, Kingston, Mount Vernon, Newburgh, Niagara Falls, Port Jervis, Poughkeepsie and Utica.

-- Associated Press

CONNECTICUT

Jobless Rate Fell

To 5.6% in August

The state unemployment rate declined slightly in August, to 5.6% from 5.7%, preliminary figures released Monday showed.

Connecticut added 300 jobs during the month, according to a business survey administered by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

However, the unemployment rate was three-tenths of a percentage point higher than it was a year ago.

-- Associated Press

LONG ISLAND

Woman Found Dead

After a House Fire

An elderly woman died in a house fire Monday in Selden, police said.

Suffolk County police said 85-year-old Eufemia Smith was found dead in her home on Ferndale Avenue around 6:30 a.m. after a neighbor called to report a fire.

She was the only resident of the home, police said, and the fire appeared to be accidental.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Students; Funding; Unemployment; Economic conditions; State court decisions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Unemployment Economic conditions
Location:	Connecticut; Niagara Falls; New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990442
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1820990442/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: U.N. Delays Negotiations on Refugee Pact Until 2018

Pop, Valentina; Fassihi, Farnaz . Pop, Valentina; Fassihi, Farnaz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

While Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton has backed a higher intake of Syrian refugees, Republican Donald Trump has called for a temporary ban on Muslims entering the U.S. In Europe, which has received one million refugees in less than a year, officials have warned that they are now focusing on protecting their borders and on giving more financial aid to African countries to stem Europe-bound migration.

FULL TEXT

UNITED NATIONS -- World leaders gathering here for a United Nations summit on refugees agreed to negotiate a global pact to share the burden of housing and educating refugees -- but not before 2018.

At the first of two summits being held to help the biggest population of refugees since World War II, leaders signed a declaration expressing their political will to improve the lives of refugees and migrants and share resources and responsibilities.

President Barack Obama will host a second summit on Tuesday that will aim to commit countries to donate more money and aid and increase the number of refugees admitted across their borders.

But human-rights groups and some of those on the front lines of the crisis on Monday expressed their dismay at the lack of immediate relief for the more than 65 million refugees and displaced people.

Amnesty International called the U.N. summit an "abject failure" and a missed opportunity to commit to resettle refugees.

"Faced with the worst refugee crisis in 70 years, world leaders have shown a shocking disregard for the human rights of people who have been forced to leave their homes due to conflict or persecution," said Salil Shetty, secretary-general of Amnesty International.

The special summit, held on the margins of the U.N. General Assembly, was the first such forum to address the issue of people fleeing war and poverty, and U.N. leaders said it began the process of focusing collective action on the crisis.

U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, who is nearing the end of his term, had sought to push for a deal to be negotiated this year, but that plan had to be pushed back until 2018, amid coming elections -- including in the U.S., France and Germany. He recently acknowledged that the U.N. has fallen short in resolving the war in Syria and refugee crisis.

"The inability to resolve several protracted conflicts has been a source of tremendous pain," Mr. Ban said last week in his last press conference of the year.

Another complicating factor behind the delay was that it remains unclear which countries are willing to take in refugees. Many remain reluctant to host migrants amid a surge in anti-immigrant sentiment, as well as security fears after a series of terror attacks in Europe in which some of the perpetrators posed as refugees when entering the continent.

The Obama administration is planning to raise the number of refugees the U.S. takes in by nearly 30% to 110,000 in the 2017 fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

The issue has proved divisive in the presidential campaign. While Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton has backed a higher intake of Syrian refugees, Republican Donald Trump has called for a temporary ban on Muslims entering the U.S.

In Europe, which has received one million refugees in less than a year, officials have warned that they are now focusing on protecting their borders and on giving more financial aid to African countries to stem Europe-bound migration.

A central focus of the summits is to create jobs and education in countries that first host fleeing refugees in order to prevent them from repeated displacement and to curb the flow of migration to Europe.

Lebanese Prime Minister Tammam Salam presented a dire situation facing his country, which hosts 1.5 million Syrian refugees compared with its population of 4 million, and called for a massive resettlement program by the end of the year.

"The situation is becoming more dramatic by the day, which does not bode well for the future of our country," he said.

Credit: By Valentina Pop and Farnaz Fassihi

DETAILS

Subject:	Human rights; Summit conferences; Relocation; Refugees; Humanitarian aid; Displaced persons; Political campaigns; Presidential elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US; Europe; Lebanon
People:	Ban Ki Moon
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990420
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-n-delays-negotiations-on-refugee/docview/1820990420/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 129 of 500

Business Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The French drugmaker's diabetes business is under siege as a flurry of pharmaceutical companies seek to sell knockoffs of its blockbuster insulin Lantus in the U.S. The expected launch of lower-cost copies of Lantus, as well as pricing pressure on diabetes drugs in the U.S., is rapidly eroding earnings at Sanofi's diabetes division. --

FULL TEXT

KMART

Chain to Close

More Locations

Kmart is closing an additional 64 locations, according to a person familiar with the matter, as the struggling department-store chain continues to shrink its footprint.

The latest closures, which were announced to employees, are in addition to a decision in April by parent Sears Holdings Corp. to close about 68 Kmart stores this year. The chain had 941 locations as of Jan. 30, meaning it has now announced plans to close about 14% of its locations.

A Sears spokesman said the company will provide an updated store count when it releases its next quarterly earnings report. News of the closures was earlier reported by Business Insider.

-- Suzanne Kapner

SANOFI

Drugmaker Sues

Merck Over Patents

Sanofi SA said it filed a lawsuit against Merck & Co. for alleged patent infringements to prevent the U.S. drugmaker from launching a rival version of the French pharmaceutical giant's best-selling diabetes treatment Lantus.

In the filing in the U.S. District Court of Delaware, Sanofi said Monday it claims that Merck Sharp & Dohme Corp., Merck & Co.'s international division, violated as many as 10 patents held by the French company, including ones for its insulin Lantus and its insulin-delivery device soloSTAR.

The Paris-based drug company said it started the legal proceedings against Merck after the U.S. company's filing for new-drug applications with the U.S. Food & Drug Administration.

A spokeswoman for Merck said the company's product "doesn't infringe Sanofi's patents."

The French drugmaker's diabetes business is under siege as a flurry of pharmaceutical companies seek to sell knockoffs of its blockbuster insulin Lantus in the U.S. The expected launch of lower-cost copies of Lantus, as well as pricing pressure on diabetes drugs in the U.S., is rapidly eroding earnings at Sanofi's diabetes division.

-- Noemie Bisserbe and Inti Landauro

NJOY

E-Cigarette Company

Seeks Chapter 11

E-cigarette manufacturer NJOY Inc. filed for bankruptcy protection after struggles with a new product coupled with litigation and regulatory expenses took a toll on the company's bottom line.

The chapter 11 filing in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Wilmington, Del., is designed to spur interest in NJOY as the Scottsdale, Ariz., company looks to sell its business and deal with debts exceeding $32 million.

NJOY said it began exploring a sale earlier this year but didn't receive any offers. A second attempt at finding a buyer in June sparked some interest, and court papers indicate the company plans to sell itself through an auction process overseen by the court.

-- Sarah Chaney

TERRAFORM

Sister Firms Weigh

Selling Themselves

TerraForm Global Inc. and TerraForm Power Inc. said Monday they are considering selling themselves, as the sister companies face trouble due to the bankruptcy of parent company SunEdison Inc.

The two companies own major wind and solar power projects developed by SunEdison, which filed for chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in April. SunEdison launched the sister companies into the public stock market in 2014 and 2015, respectively, and is considering selling its controlling stakes.

The TerraForm companies were a central element of the financial engineering that fueled SunEdison's fast growth.

But SunEdison's market capitalization plummeted in 2015 and 2016 as investors and business partners lost confidence amid mounting debt, incomplete deals and doubts about finances.

TerraForm Global and TerraForm Power said they were open to finding a new sponsor to replace SunEdison but were also preparing to operate as independent companies.

-- Austen Hufford

DETAILS

Subject:	Litigation; Diabetes; Insulin; Electronic cigarettes; Bankruptcy; Pharmaceutical industry; Business closings; Bankruptcy reorganization
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bankruptcy Pharmaceutical industry Business closings Bankruptcy reorganization; Corporation: Merck & Co Inc; Industry: 32541 : Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: SunEdison; NAICS: 221114, 221118; Name: Merck Sharp & Dohme; NAICS: 325412; Name: TerraForm Power Inc; NAICS: 221114, 221115; Name: Business Insider; NAICS: 516210; Name: Merck & Co Inc; NAICS: 325411, 325412; Name: Bankruptcy Court-US; NAICS: 922110; Name: District Court-US; NAICS: 922110
Classification:	32541: Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990334

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1820990334/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-08-26

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 130 of 500

Region Is Wary but Remains Resolute --- After weekend blast, commuters remove their earphones, but tourists are unfazed Hollander, Sophia . Hollander, Sophia.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In Nassau County, police were on heightened alert and patrolling malls and train stations, said Brian Nevin, a spokesman for the county. Elisheva Adler, 20, said she made sure she was in a train car with a conductor when she came in on the Long Island Rail Road to Touro College in Manhattan.

FULL TEXT

With no one killed in the bombings in Chelsea and New Jersey over the weekend, people who live in the region along with visitors were spared the wrenching sight of grieving families and raw tears.

Instead, they spent Monday contemplating a near escape and forging ahead with a hint of defiance and a dose of caution.

That meant commuters still took public transit to work, but some removed their earphones to stay more alert. Pedestrians hurried through the rain but scanned sidewalks for unattended packages. Tourists avoided traffic snarls around the bombing site but continued shopping and buying Broadway tickets.

Brianne O'Brien, 27 years old, said she was frightened but still took the train from her home in Parlin, N.J., to Elizabeth, N.J., where she works as a waitress at IHOP. After train delays and street closures by the police, she was 45 minutes late, she said.

"You don't know what's to come," she said. "That's the scariest part."

Law enforcement massed across the region, their presence simultaneously sobering and comforting.

In Nassau County, police were on heightened alert and patrolling malls and train stations, said Brian Nevin, a spokesman for the county.

"We have guys out in their tactical gear," he said. "That includes long guns and vests, something most Long Islanders are not used to seeing."

In New York City, where such sights have become more common, people pressed on.

On trains, commuters paused just after 9 a.m. as a collective siren blared from every cellphone, alerting them that the suspect, Ahmad Khan Rahami, was on the loose. Another alert in the afternoon signaled he had been captured.

"Everyone saw it, then went back to Twitter or playing their Candy Crush," said Christian Grim, 32, who was on the Q train when the news broke that Mr. Rahami had been taken into custody.

"The rest of the country is more paralyzed by the fear of terrorism," said Mr. Grim, an attorney from Brooklyn. "People in New York understand there is risk."

Elisheva Adler, 20, said she made sure she was in a train car with a conductor when she came in on the Long Island Rail Road to Touro College in Manhattan. "I didn't want to be in an empty car by myself," said Ms. Adler, who said she wasn't listening to music so she could stay aware of what is happening around her. "I think it's important to be more alert."

Tourists, many from cities accustomed to the threat of terror and the security that comes with it, took the attack in stride.

Marcus Shah, 31, and Fahim Ishtaq, 29, were taking photos of each other on a boulder in Central Park with the Manhattan skyline as the backdrop. They had just arrived from London. Although they heard about the explosion before boarding their flight, they said they never thought about canceling their trip.

"You can either hide from all of this or you can live your life," added Mr. Ishtaq, who said he was impressed by the police presence in Manhattan.

One of the consequences of the bombings is that it could lead to more profiling, Mr. Shah said.

"It makes things harder for people like us," said Mr. Shah who, like Mr. Ishtaq, is a Muslim. He said he was pulled aside for additional questioning at the airport.

Carla Draper had traveled from Prescott, Ariz., with her daughter, who was celebrating her master's degree. They were staying at a hostel not far from where the bomb went off in Chelsea.

But there they were on Monday, visiting Grand Central Terminal and wandering through the soaring concourse snapping pictures.

"I paid my money and I'll probably never be in New York City again," Ms. Draper said. "I had certain things I wanted to do and see so I am going to soldier on."

Farther south, visitors to the 9/11 Memorial were largely unfazed.

Troels Rasmussen, 66, visiting from Denmark, said he didn't feel scared. "There's probably not an interesting city in the world where you can be completely safe."

Ben Chaitrakulthong, 27, from London, said he wasn't nervous, though he had received a lot of messages from friends at home, concerned for his safety.

"This has happened in London as well," he said of the explosion. "It's not a good thing. But you've just got to live life. . . . You can't be looking over your shoulder all the time."

In Chelsea, several blocks remained a crime scene, providing an unsettling reminder of Saturday evening's explosion even as people sought to move on.

Elena Alayeto, 66, paused at Seventh Avenue and West 23rd Street to take a photo of the crime scene. She was on her way to Trader Joe's.

"We were just horrified about this," said Ms. Alayeto, a social work supervisor who lives nearby. "I'm so glad that it wasn't worse."

Thomas MacMillan, Imani Moise, Kate King and Joseph De Avila contributed to this article.

(See related article: "Word 'terrorism' puts Cuomo and de Blasio on opposite ends again, but both are criticized" -- WSJ September 20, 2016)

Credit: By Sophia Hollander

DETAILS

Subject:	Bombings; Law enforcement; Commuting; Tourism; Crime scenes; Explosions
Location:	New York City New York; New Jersey; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990294
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/region-is-wary-remains-resolute-after-weekend/docview/1820990294/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 131 of 500

Region Is Wary but Remains Resolute --- Word 'terrorism' puts Cuomo and de Blasio on opposite ends again, but both are criticized

Orden, Erica . Orden, Erica.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]both Democrats faced criticism over their descriptions:

FULL TEXT

Amid the commotion of the Chelsea bombing, political foes New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo and New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio found a fresh fault line: how to define the chaos that erupted across a few blocks in Manhattan on Saturday night.

For each, the focus centered on a singular, emotionally charged term -- "terrorism" -- and its permutations.

Nearly from the start, Mr. Cuomo cast the events as "obviously an act of terrorism" but said they were "not linked to international terrorism."

By Monday morning, after authorities had already begun searching for suspect Ahmad Khan Rahami, Mr. Cuomo reversed course on the latter characterization, saying "there may very well be a foreign link, and then it would be foreign terrorism."

Mr. de Blasio, by contrast, on Saturday evening and throughout Sunday deliberately sidestepped any reference to terrorism, saying instead the bombing "was intentional -- it was a violent act."

And while Mr. Cuomo on Sunday suggested Mr. de Blasio had misspoken, saying he thought the mayor had intended to say the bombing wasn't connected to "international terrorism," the mayor held firm to his description.

On Monday morning, when asked about his reluctance to use the term terrorism, Mr. de Blasio said it is "definitely leaning in that direction the more we know." By afternoon, after Mr. Rahami had been apprehended, Mr. de Blasio amended his analysis.

"Based on the information we have now," he said, "we have every reason to believe this was an act of terror."

In the end, both Democrats faced criticism over their descriptions: Mr. de Blasio, for seemingly hesitating to deem as terrorism what appeared to many New Yorkers to bear the obvious trappings of such an event; Mr. Cuomo, for rushing to rule out an international link.

"There's a couple of different ways to approach this. There's the legalistic way, parsing the statutes, and then there's the instinctual way," said Nathan Sales, an associate professor at Syracuse University School of Law and a former deputy assistant secretary at the U.S. Department of Homeland Security.

"If a bomb goes off in New York City from a pressure cooker, it's terrorism no matter how you slice it."

But while that may be true colloquially, the federal legal standard requires an offense that "is calculated to influence or affect the conduct of government by intimidation or coercion, or to retaliate against government conduct."

"A bomb going off on a crowded street in New York City is a terrifying act," said John Miller, deputy commissioner for intelligence and counterterrorism at the New York Police Department, at a Monday news conference alongside Mr. de Blasio.

"Whether that's an act of terrorism requires that you find out who did it, which is something we didn't know at the early stages of yesterday. And then, why they did it, in order to meet the statutory requirements."

Frank Cilluffo, director of the Center for Cyber & Homeland Security at George Washington University, said the events likely could have been characterized as terrorism from the start. "Hindsight is always 20/20, but this one you didn't have to be an expert to realize," he said.

But, he added: "Communicating terrorism in the midst of a crisis is both an art and a science. And you also had trial by fire with a new police commissioner.

A spokesman for Mr. de Blasio said, "You can be first to call it terror and be wrong while creating unnecessary panic, or you can be second and be right while following the facts and staying calm."

Messrs. de Blasio and Cuomo have had a tense relationship for years, with the governor questioning the mayor's competence and the mayor accusing the governor of being vindictive.

Though the pair surveyed the scene of the bombing on Sunday, that has been their sole joint appearance. On Monday afternoon, when Mr. de Blasio hosted a news conference, Mr. Cuomo was one of the few major New York public officials absent from the dais.

While a Cuomo official said the governor hadn't received an invitation to participate until 40 minutes beforehand, a spokesman for the mayor said the governor had been invited 90 minutes in advance. Mr. Cuomo's office said discrepancy was due to the news conference's delay.

In response to a question about why Mr. Cuomo didn't attend, a spokeswoman for the governor, Dani Lever, said it was "a stretch to create something negative and political on a day of great success."

(See related article: "After weekend blast, commuters remove their earphones, but tourists are unfazed" -- WSJ September 20, 2016)

Credit: By Erica Orden

DETAILS

Subject:	Terrorism; Bombings; Press conferences; Governors; National security
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Cuomo, Andrew M; de Blasio, Bill
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990229
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/region-is-wary-remains-resolute-word-terrorism/docview/1820990229/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 132 of 500

World News: North Korea Says It Tested a Rocket Engine

Gale, Alastair . Gale, Alastair.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

North Korea says its space program is for peaceful purposes, but its ballistic rocket launches, including carriers for satellites, are banned by the United Nations because the technology can also be used to make missiles.

FULL TEXT

SEOUL -- North Korea said it had successfully tested a high-powered rocket engine for launching satellites, elevating concerns it is making progress in developing a long-range ballistic missile.

The description of the new engine matched that of a rocket booster the U.S. has alleged Pyongyang was collaborating on with Iran, experts said, indicating the North Korean technology might be shared with Tehran.

Dictator Kim Jong Un guided the ground test of an engine with 80 tons of thrust at the main space research center in North Korea's far northwest, according to a Korean Central News Agency report Tuesday. The date of the test wasn't given but North Korean state media typically report on Mr. Kim's activities the following day.

North Korea says its space program is for peaceful purposes, but its ballistic rocket launches, including carriers for satellites, are banned by the United Nations because the technology can also be used to make missiles. North Korea has ignored the bans, stepping up rocket, missile and nuclear weapons testing this year.

In recent months Pyongyang has repeated threats to attack the U.S. with nuclear-tipped long-range missiles. Some experts say it is likely about two or three years away from showing it can threaten the U.S. homeland with missiles.

A major concern is a long-range missile known as the KN-08, which experts estimate has a range far enough to reach the continental U.S. The missile has been displayed frequently by North Korea but not test-launched.

Credit: By Alastair Gale

DETAILS

Subject:	Missiles; Missile defense; Nuclear weapons; Rocket launches
Location:	Iran; United States--US; North Korea
People:	Kim Jong Un
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120; Name: Korean Central News Agency; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990070
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-north-korea-says-tested-rocket-engine/docview/1820990070/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 133 of 500

U.S. News: No Ties Found Between Mall Attacker and Islamic State

Barrett, Joe . Barrett, Joe.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Though St. Cloud police didn't release the name of the suspect, members of the Somali community recorded a video statement posted on the St. Cloud Times website.

FULL TEXT

ST. CLOUD, Minn. -- St. Cloud Police Chief Blair Anderson said investigators had found no evidence so far that the man who stabbed 10 people in a mall here on Saturday had any ties to the Islamic State terror group or to the recent bombing attacks in the New York area.

"As of this moment, we have not uncovered anything other than that he was a lone attacker," he told a news conference.

Though St. Cloud police didn't release the name of the suspect, members of the Somali community recorded a video statement posted on the St. Cloud Times website. In it, Abdul Kulane, described as a spokesman for the Somali community of central Minnesota, said the suspect's name was Dahir Adan.

Mr. Kulane said Mr. Adan was a student at St. Cloud State University and worked part time as a private security guard. "He was helpful to his family and as far as we know, he never had a violent history," Mr. Kulane said.

A woman who answered the door at the apartment of Mr. Adan's father said the family had no comment.

Minnesota Gov. Mark Dayton, who met with Mayor Dave Kleis and other officials, said he had spoken with President Barack Obama on Monday. The president offered federal help for the investigation and hailed the off-duty officer who took down the alleged attacker. Jason Falconer is a part-time officer in the Avon, Minn., police department and onetime chief of the Albany, Minn., police department.

Mr. Falconer, who owns a firing range and training facility, confronted the assailant, who was dressed as a security guard. He fired multiple times as the man repeatedly tried to get up and lunge at him, Mr. Kleis said. After reviewing a video, the mayor said "there is no question that he saved people's lives."

Mr. Falconer has told the St. Cloud police spokesman and his own department that he doesn't want to speak publicly about the incident.

Chief Anderson said he is still waiting for a medical examiner's report before releasing the attacker's name.

Meanwhile, businesses were reopening and shoppers were returning to Crossroads Center Mall.

Shibani Mahtani and Arian Campo-Flores contributed to this article.

Credit: By Joe Barrett

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Shopping centers; Law enforcement; Stabbings; Self defense; Guards
Business indexing term:	Industry: 56161 : Investigation, Guard, and Armored Car Services
Location:	St Cloud Minnesota; United States--US
People:	Adan, Dahir
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	56161: Investigation, Guard, and Armored Car Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990046
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-no-ties-found-between-mall-attacker/docview/1820990046/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19

LINKS

Document 134 of 500

City News: Park Advocates Name New Head

Smith, Jennifer . Smith, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Lynn B. Kelly, the chief executive and president of Snug Harbor Cultural Center & Botanical Garden on Staten Island.

FULL TEXT

New Yorkers for Parks, the advocacy group known for its reports on New York City parks and open space, is getting a new leader: Lynn B. Kelly, the chief executive and president of Snug Harbor Cultural Center & Botanical Garden on Staten Island.

Ms. Kelly, 44 years old, will join the parks group as its executive director in December, the organization is set to announce Tuesday.

She has led Snug Harbor since 2010, steering it through fiscal challenges that at one point threatened the future of the regional arts center. An affiliate of the Smithsonian Institution, it includes a number of historic buildings and is located on 83 acres of city-owned land.

Ms. Kelly previously served as a senior vice president at the New York City Economic Development Corp.

At New Yorkers for Parks, she will succeed Tupper Thomas, who came out of retirement in 2014 to lead the group. Ms. Thomas, the former president of the Prospect Park Alliance, announced earlier this year that she planned to retire once more after helping to find a new leader.

New Yorkers for Parks traces its roots to 1908, though its name and mission have evolved. The group tussled in the 1930s with Robert Moses, the famously strong-willed city parks commissioner.

In 2001 the group lobbied against budget cuts on parks spending. Soon after, it began issuing reports on maintenance at city parks and beaches, and later undertook analyses of open space.

Ms. Kelly's appointment comes as the group is looking to broaden its base of support and affirm the importance of green space as a vital element of city infrastructure. Those efforts are complicated by the current pressure on density and affordability, said Joel Steinhaus, the organization's chairman.

"Parks are our town halls, our storm mitigation tools, our gyms, our family reunion sites," Mr. Steinhaus said.

Open space and economic development don't have to be at odds, said Ms. Kelly, who led redevelopment efforts at Coney Island during her last three years at the economic-development corporation.

"I am not anti-development by any means, but I am pro-open space," she said. "Now is the time to make sure all New Yorkers have that experience of knowing green space."

Credit: By Jennifer Smith

DETAILS

Subject:	Parks & recreation areas; Advocacy; Leadership; Economic development; Site planning
Business indexing term:	Subject: Leadership Economic development
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Kelly, Lynn B
Company / organization:	Name: New Yorkers for Parks; NAICS: 813312
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Documenttype:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820990004
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-park-advocates-name-new-head/docview/1820990004/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 135 of 500

City News: Danny Meyer Puts His Next Spot in Bryant Park

Passy, Charles . Passy, Charles.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Union Square Hospitality executives said they see the Bryant Park area as an ideal Midtown locale that is drawing a growing number of food and dining destinations, from Gabriel Kreuther's self-titled restaurant that opened last year to a yet-to-open Whole Foods Market.

FULL TEXT

Danny Meyer's culinary empire is now extending to Bryant Park.

The New York restaurateur's Union Square Hospitality Group has signed a four-year deal to run a restaurant and catering venue connected to the park's seasonal ice-skating rink, which is open from late October to early March.

Dubbed Public Fare, the casual restaurant, which will seat up to 210, will serve breakfast, lunch and dinner, plus wine, cocktails and to-go offerings. Union Square Hospitality said the menu was still being finalized but that it expected soups, salads, sandwiches and pastries to figure into the mix; prices are expected to be under $20 for lunch and under $30 for dinner.

The goal, said John Karangis, an executive chef with Union Square Hospitality, is to offer "simple, straightforward" food that appeals to the wide range of Bryant Park wintertime visitors, from tourists to local office workers.

Bryant Park Corp., a nonprofit group that manages the park, has previously tapped a single company to handle its seasonal "winter village," including the skating rink, a holiday market and a restaurant. This year, the park's management team decided it would work better to bring in specialists for each aspect.

Mr. Meyer and Union Square Hospitality proved the logical choice to head the culinary component, said Dan Biederman, executive director of Bryant Park Corp.

"They're terrific in coming up with ways to serve the public better," said Mr. Biederman.

The deal is essentially a lease arrangement, although Mr. Biederman and Union Square declined to say how much rent Union Square was paying for the seasonal space.

Although Mr. Meyer initially made his mark in New York's fine-dining scene, particularly with his restaurant Union Square Cafe, he has since branched out, operating casual-dining businesses at venues ranging from Citi Field to Central Park's Delacorte Theater. He also founded Shake Shack, the burger chain, in 2004.

Union Square Hospitality executives said they see the Bryant Park area as an ideal Midtown locale that is drawing a growing number of food and dining destinations, from Gabriel Kreuther's self-titled restaurant that opened last year to a yet-to-open Whole Foods Market.

The executives considered a Bryant Park restaurant a few years ago, but the deal fell through, so when the opportunity for a winter project arose, it was particularly enticing, they said.

"It's a magical location during the holidays," said Ron Parker, Union Square Hospitality's chief growth officer.

Credit: By Charles Passy

DETAILS

Subject:	Parks & recreation areas; Restaurants; Executives; Kiosks; Food service
Business indexing term:	Subject: Restaurants Executives; Industry: 72251 : Restaurants and Other Eating Places 72231 : Food Service Contractors
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
People:	Meyer, Danny
Company / organization:	Name: Union Square Hospitality Group; NAICS: 722511
Classification:	72251: Restaurants and Other Eating Places; 72231: Food Service Contractors
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989998
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-danny-meyer-puts-his-next-spot-bryant/docview/1820989998/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In th ose cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 136 of 500

U.S. News: Alerts, Now Basic, May Expand

Knutson, Ryan . Knutson, Ryan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

While increasingly sophisticated phone networks allow Americans to stream all sorts of media to smartphones -- from virtual reality to live video -- the U.S. alert system is limited to just 90 characters of text.

FULL TEXT

The promise and limitations of the government's emergency-alert system were on display Monday when millions of New Yorkers received an alert about a bombing suspect that said "See media for pic."

While increasingly sophisticated phone networks allow Americans to stream all sorts of media to smartphones -- from virtual reality to live video -- the U.S. alert system is limited to just 90 characters of text.

More than 21,000 alerts have been sent since the Wireless Emergency Alert system was first implemented in 2012, according to FEMA, mostly to warn people of critical weather or missing children.

On Monday morning, an alert was sent seeking help locating Ahmad Khan Rahami, a suspect in the New York City bombing.

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio said the alert was "extremely helpful" in tracking the suspect down in Linden, N.J. It was the first time the city agency sent an alert for a dangerous suspect.

The Federal Communications Commission plans to vote later this month on rules adding more features to alerts, potentially including longer messages and web links to photos.

The wireless industry supports expanding the message length, but has resisted other changes, fearing they will overwhelm networks.

Credit: By Ryan Knutson

DETAILS

Subject:	Bombs; Terrorism; Instant messaging
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Communications Commission--FCC; NAICS: 926130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989932
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-alerts-now-basic-may-expand/docview/1820989932/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 137 of 500

U.S. News: Police Seek More Help in Terror Fight --- Attacks on random, low-profile targets raise concern about other 'soft' locales

Elinson, Zusha; Hong, Nicole . Elinson, Zusha; Hong, Nicole.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The San Francisco Bay Area's main commuter rail line, Bay Area Rapid Transit, "increased the frequency of the 'see something, say something' message on platform signs and the PA system," said Alicia Trost, a BART spokeswoman.

FULL TEXT

Law-enforcement officials boosted their appeals to the public to be their eyes and ears as they heighten their focus on random assaults on less likely targets, prompted by the weekend attacks in New York City, New Jersey and Minnesota.

The San Francisco Bay Area's main commuter rail line, Bay Area Rapid Transit, "increased the frequency of the 'see something, say something' message on platform signs and the PA system," said Alicia Trost, a BART spokeswoman.

Police in Los Angeles urged the public to download a smartphone app that allows them to report suspicious activity. "We ask everyone to stay vigilant," Police Chief Charlie Beck said.

In Chicago, the Office of Emergency Management and Communications said people should dial 911 if they saw something unusual.

Police agencies also deployed more officers at transit stations for the Monday commute and at events expected to draw crowds, including a technology conference in San Francisco.

For years, law-enforcement officials worried about large-scale terrorism at marquee events like championship football games and high-traffic tourism sites. Unlike terrorist groups like al Qaeda, which targeted major landmarks, Islamic State tells its followers to travel to Syria or, if they can't, to kill people wherever they are.

That has led to greater concerns about attacks in scattered locations across the U.S., such as the mass shooting at a county employee gathering in San Bernardino, Calif., last December that killed 14, and a gunman's assault at an Orlando, Fla., nightclub in June that left 49 dead.

"You're talking about so-called soft targets, but there's a randomness to it that's got to be concerning for law enforcement," said Seamus Hughes, deputy director of the Program on Extremism at George Washington University.

Attacks "moving away from critical infrastructure targets or targets that had lots of security" to other less obvious targets with less security "has always been worrisome," said Los Angeles Deputy Chief Michael Downing, commanding officer for the department's counterterrorism and special operations bureau. "It's very difficult and that's why you really need the police to be switched on to any sort of suspicious behavior."

Authorities on Monday captured Ahmad Khan Rahami, who was sought in Saturday's bombing on a New York street that injured 29 people. Mr. Rahami also was wanted for questioning in connection with a pipe bomb that detonated before a charity run in Seaside Park, N.J., which didn't injure anyone.

Meanwhile, in St. Cloud, Minn., a man dressed as a security guard stabbed 10 people at a shopping mall late Saturday.

Chicago police said there is "no nexus to Chicago" from the weekend's attacks. But the department planned to have extra deployments at Monday's football game between the Chicago Bears and the Philadelphia Eagles at Soldier Field, said spokesman Anthony Guglielmi.

In San Francisco, police are boosting their presence at Oracle OpenWorld, an annual tech conference, said Giselle Talkoff, a police spokeswoman. Meantime, Philadelphia Police Department officers will make "periodic checks on vulnerable locations," or those deemed possible targets, said a spokesman, who declined to elaborate.

A spokeswoman for the police in Washington, D.C., said extra teams were deployed for special events in the city on Sunday. Los Angeles police also took extra measures Sunday with the Emmy Awards at the Staples Center and the return of the Rams to the city "to ensure a secure environment," Chief Beck said.

Credit: By Zusha Elinson and Nicole Hong

DETAILS

Subject:	Mass murders; Stabbings; Bombs; Counterterrorism; Law enforcement; Assaults
Location:	Minnesota; New Jersey; New York City New York; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Ba nking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989922
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-police-seek-more-help-terror-fight/docview/1820989922/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Burberry CEO Delivers Swan Song --- Christopher Bailey will step down amid drop in sales and failure to expand in the U.S.

Chaudhuri, Saabira . Chaudhuri, Saabira.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Christopher Bailey rolled out on Monday night one of his highest-profile initiatives as chief executive of Burberry Group PLC -- allowing shoppers to buy his latest collection immediately after the models sashay down the runway.

FULL TEXT

LONDON -- Christopher Bailey rolled out on Monday night one of his highest-profile initiatives as chief executive of Burberry Group PLC -- allowing shoppers to buy his latest collection immediately after the models sashay down the runway.

It also will be the last time Mr. Bailey presides as head of the fashion house during London's fall fashion week. Burberry said in July that he would step down as CEO of the 160-year-old British house amid crashing sales in Hong Kong, a sharp slowdown in China and a failure in the U.S. to push its brand upmarket.

Mr. Bailey and Burberry say the decision was his. He will continue to report directly to the board as creative chief, a role he has held since 2001, with the added title of president. In a recent interview with The Wall Street Journal, he acknowledged he had reservations about taking on the top role in the first place.

"I'd always been involved," said Mr. Bailey, 45 years old. "But there's a difference being involved and suddenly being responsible."

Investors, all along, viewed his elevation skeptically. Burberry shares fell almost 8% on the day of his nomination in 2013 when the board announced the departure of his predecessor, Angela Ahrendts, and its decision to replace her with Mr. Bailey. Shares have fallen 11% since then, while those at rivals LVMH Moet Hennessy Louis Vuitton SE and Kering SA have climbed 17% and 12%, respectively.

Burberry isn't the only luxury maker buffeted by headwinds. But the company's footprint, engineered by Mr. Bailey and Ms. Ahrendts, has left it more exposed to Asia's slowdown while lacking the cachet in the U.S. that rivals enjoy.

Despite the changing of the guard, it will still fall to Mr. Bailey to manage the company in the near term. His replacement, Marco Gobetti, chief executive of LVMH brand Celine, isn't slated to join until next summer. Meanwhile, several of Burberry's key senior executives have one foot out the door: Chief Financial Officer Carol Fairweather steps down in January and Chief Operating Officer John Smith will depart next summer. Andrew Maag, Burberry's head of Europe, the Middle East, India and Africa, left recently.

Still, handing the reins over eventually to Mr. Gobbetti allows Mr. Bailey to return his full focus to Burberry's brand.

"The detail of customer experiences, and stores and running stores, is very complex," Mr. Bailey said. "We need that global consistency, and [Mr. Gobbetti] will help us do that."

One of the biggest challenges facing Mr. Bailey and Burberry is Hong Kong, where it has a bigger presence than many of its rivals. It was one of the company's highest-margin markets, but sales slowed dramatically in 2015 following pro-democracy protests that dried up tourism from China.

Mr. Bailey said he "immediately looked at what we could do to drive traffic into the stores."

He tailored services to high-net-worth customers and shifted marketing and the product assortment away from runway collections that appealed mainly to higher-spending tourists. Those efforts have yet to bear fruit. Burberry is continuing to work through a turnaround plan it announced in May, when an 8% fall in full-year profit spurred a pledge to cut costs by GBP 100 million ($130 million) a year by fiscal 2019.

Any newer initiatives will have to wait for Mr. Gobbetti's arrival next year.

The post-Brexit fall of the pound against the dollar has bought the company a bit of breathing room, with input costs dropping and a bump in revenue that comes from overseas sales looking inflated when converted into pounds.

Tattered Tartan

Burberry trails many of its luxury-retail peers in sales per square meter.

Sales per square meter, in thousands

Hermès	€61
Louis Vuitton	59
Chanel	59
Prada	26
Bottega Veneta	26
Gucci	22
Yves Saint Laurent	21
Céline	20
Miu Miu	20
Fendi	18
Burberry	17
Balenciaga	17
Michael Kors	13
Coach	12

$1 = €1.12

Source: Bernstein

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Saabira Chaudhuri

DETAILS

Subject:	Retail sales; Fashion; Appointments & personnel changes; Chief executive officers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Appointments & personnel changes Chief executive officers; Corporation: Burberry Group PLC
Location:	United Kingdom--UK; China; Hong Kong China
People:	Gobbetti, Marco; Bailey, Christopher
Company / organization:	Name: Burberry Group PLC; NAICS: 315210, 458110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989813
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-burberry-ceo-delivers-swan-song/docview/1820989813/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2023-11-30

LINKS

Document 139 of 500

U.S. News: Businesses Step Up to Aid Refugees

Jordan, Miriam . Jordan, Miriam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., Goldman Sachs Group Inc. and Western Union Co. are among firms in the financial sector that have donated millions for medical care, food and other essentials for refugees.\n

FULL TEXT

Major U.S. companies have begun to offer money, technology and training to address the global refugee crisis, saying the enormity of the problem requires more than government action.

TripAdvisor Inc. will announce Tuesday that its charitable arm will commit at least $5 million over three years to the cause. It is among more than 15 businesses, including HP Inc., Google Inc. and others, that will make their commitments public at a United Nations refugee summit.

The companies have partnered with nonprofits, such as the International Rescue Committee, that are working in countries like Syria and refugee camps in the Middle East, Africa and Europe. About half of Syria's population has been displaced since war erupted there in 2011.

In an emergency, "our private partners can work faster than governments," said Amanda Sellers, a senior vice president at New York-based IRC, one of nine agencies resettling refugees in the U.S.

In the U.S., where refugees get government assistance for eight months, businesses can be key in promoting economic integration, she said.

The summit comes as the issue of what to do with the world's estimated 65 million refugees has become a divisive issue in the U.S. and elsewhere in the West. Security around this week's annual U.N. General Assembly is also extra tight after a string of bombings in the New York-New Jersey area. A suspect in the attacks, an Afghan-born U.S. citizen, was captured Monday.

Last week, the U.S. said it would increase to 110,000 the number of refugees it will resettle in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, up from 85,000 last year and 70,000 each of the previous two years. President Barack Obama, who is hosting Tuesday's refugee summit, is expected to rally other countries and large companies to help tackle the crisis.

Images of Syrians fleeing for their lives spurred TripAdvisor to launch a campaign last year that raised $1.4 million for emergency aid. As part of its new $5 million commitment, TripAdvisor will help fund job training for refugees in the U.S. It will fund youth education in Greece, where thousands of families are waiting in camps for their asylum cases to be adjudicated. The company is also paying to expand a project that Google launched last year, RefugeeInfo.eu, which provides information to refugees on the move.

"We are obligated as leaders in the private sector to do everything we can," said Steve Kaufer, TripAdvisor chief executive officer.

In an online campaign, Airbnb has committed to match every donation made, up to $1 million, to the U.N.'s refugee agency through year-end.

HP is committing more than $1 million in technology and training for refugees in the coming year. With fellow tech giants Microsoft Corp. and Intel Corp., it is establishing centers in Jordan and Lebanon that will offer business and computer courses.

J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., Goldman Sachs Group Inc. and Western Union Co. are among firms in the financial sector that have donated millions for medical care, food and other essentials for refugees.

Credit: By Miriam Jordan

DETAILS

Subject:	Refugees; Humanitarian aid
Business indexing term:	Corporation: TripAdvisor
Location:	Syria; Africa; Europe
Company / organization:	Name: TripAdvisor; NAICS: 519290; Name: Google Inc; NAICS: 334310, 519290; Name: International Rescue Committee; NAICS: 624190, 813410; Name: HP Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334118; Name: Airbnb; NAICS: 561599
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989802
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-businesses-step-up-aid-refugees/docview/1820989802/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 140 of 500

World News: Southeast Asia Fires Tied to Deaths --- U.S. study says smoke from blazes set to clear land for crops killed more than 100,000

Schonhardt, Sara . Schonhardt, Sara.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

JAKARTA, Indonesia -- A study by two U.S. universities estimated that more than 100,000 people in parts of Southeast Asia died prematurely last year from breathing the noxious haze related to fires set to clear land for agriculture.

Researchers from Harvard and Columbia universities compared the likely health impact of the smoke that spread across much of the region a year ago to 2006, another exceptionally bad year for fires.

Using a complex modeling system, they put the number of smoke-related "excess deaths" from July 2015 through October at 100,300 -- mostly in Indonesia, the main source of the fires, but also Singapore and Malaysia. That was more than twice the estimate for the same four-month period in 2006.

The study, published Monday in the journal Environmental Research Letters, attributed much of the worsening haze to more fires set to clear peatland -- swampy soil that stores carbon and becomes highly combustible when drained to develop lucrative palm-oil and wood-pulp plantations.

In both years, the study found Indonesia's South Sumatra region contributed more than half of the regionwide haze. Last year, 72% of the fire activity on the island was on peatlands, up from 44% in 2006, it said.

Indonesia's official death toll from last year's haze was 19.

An estimated half a million people sought medical care for respiratory illnesses on Sumatra and neighboring Kalimantan island alone, out of more than 40 million there exposed to the toxic haze.

Shannon Koplitz, lead author of the study from Harvard's department of earth and planetary sciences, said the goal of the research was to influence strategies for managing fires and land use to reduce smoke exposure.

"The study tells Indonesia where to focus their efforts to prevent illegal clearing by fires, in order to save lives," said Joel Schwartz, a researcher from Harvard's T.H. Chan School of Public Health who was involved in the study.

Indonesia has been under domestic and international pressure to tackle the illegal fires and resulting haze, which last year resulted in billions of dollars in economic losses and made it one of the world's biggest greenhouse-gas emitters.

President Joko Widodo has formed an agency to restore degraded peat and put a moratorium on new peatland development, said Hadi Daryanto, director-general of social forestry at the Ministry of Environment and Forestry.

The government has also launched integrated patrols and deployed thousands of firefighters to put out blazes. It has vowed to prosecute those responsible.

"Efforts to handle the forest fires show a decreasing number of hot spots nationally," Mr. Daryanto said.

The research doesn't include official data on mortality or actual deaths. It estimated premature death in adults attributed to breathing high levels of carbon-based particulate matter, but didn't include other hazardous particles, such as cyanide, nitrogen dioxide or other toxic gases.

It also didn't include children, who doctors say are more vulnerable to the effects of haze, or the long-term impact of repeated exposure.

Credit: By Sara Schonhardt

DETAILS

Subject:	Health risk assessment; Respiratory diseases; Mortality; Studies; Forest & brush fires; Air pollution; Peatlands; Nitrogen dioxide
-----------------	--

Location:	Indonesia
Company / organization:	Name: Harvard University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Columbia University; NAICS: 611310
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989726
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-southeast-asia-fires-tied-deaths-u-s/docview/1820989726/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Unilever Buys Seventh Generation

Chaudhuri, Saabira; Terlep, Sharon . Chaudhuri, Saabira; Terlep, Sharon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The deal gives Unilever a foothold in the U.S. market for diapers and tampons in addition to detergents and hand soap, traditionally strongholds of rival Procter & Gamble Co. The Wall Street Journal recently reported that Unilever was in early-stage talks to buy Honest Co., the consumer-products retailer co-founded by actress Jessica Alba that claims to avoid using harsh chemicals.

FULL TEXT

LONDON -- Unilever PLC is getting into the market for "natural" cleaning products with a deal to buy Seventh Generation Inc., a maker of plant-based detergents and household cleaners.

The European consumer-products giant behind Dove soaps agreed to pay roughly $700 million for Seventh Generation, a person familiar with the terms said.

The deal gives Unilever a foothold in the U.S. market for diapers and tampons in addition to detergents and hand soap, traditionally strongholds of rival Procter & Gamble Co.

The Wall Street Journal recently reported that Unilever was in early-stage talks to buy Honest Co., the consumer-products retailer co-founded by actress Jessica Alba that claims to avoid using harsh chemicals. That deal, which would have set Unilever back by more than $1 billion, according to people familiar with the talks, is now unlikely.

Seventh Generation had sales of over $200 million last year, according to Unilever. The Vermont-based company's valuation has soared in the past decade.

"We look at this as having a multiplier effect for our business," said Seventh Generation Chief Executive John Replogle, who will stay to run the company. "We see this as a springboard as opposed to throwing in the towel."

Seventh Generation shareholders include its management, private-investment funds as well as Catamount Ventures, a San Francisco venture-capital firm, and Generation Investment Management LLP, a London-based fund founded by former Vice President Al Gore.

Serena Ng contributed to this article.

Credit: By Saabira Chaudhuri and Sharon Terlep

DETAILS

Subject:	Detergents; Chemical industry; Acquisitions & mergers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Chemical industry Acquisitions & mergers; Corporation: Unilever PLC; Industry: 32561 : Soap and Cleaning Compound Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Unilever PLC; NAICS: 311421, 311512, 311520, 311941, 325611, 325620; Name: Seventh Generation; NAICS: 325611
Classification:	32561: Soap and Cleaning Compound Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989685
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-unilever-buys-seventh-generation/docview/1820989685/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 142 of 500

World News: U.S. Strikes Said to Hit Afghan Police

Amiri, Ehsanullah; Donati, Jessica . Amiri, Ehsanullah; Donati, Jessica.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

U.S. airstrikes killed eight Afghan policemen in a southern province where the U.S.-led coalition has carried out sorties in support of local troops fighting the Taliban, local officials said Monday.

The airstrikes were carried out Sunday on a highway on the outskirts of Tarin Kot, the capital of Uruzgan province, the officials said.

The U.S.-led coalition in Afghanistan confirmed that two coalition airstrikes had been carried out in support of Afghan forces, but it didn't comment on allegations that the strikes had killed policemen.

An officer who survived told local reporters the second strike hit individuals who were sent to help colleagues who were hit in the first attack.

Credit: By Ehsanullah Amiri and Jessica Donati

DETAILS

Subject: Military air strikes; Military strategy

Publication title: Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages: A.8

Publication year: 2016

Publication date: Sep 20, 2016

Publisher: Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989663
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-strikes-said-hit-afghan-police/docview/1820989663/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 143 of 500

U.S. News: Zika Fears Abate In Part of Miami

Kamp, Jon . Kamp, Jon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Joseph Furst, chairman of the Wynwood Business Improvement District, which represents more than 400 property owners in the area, estimated restaurant and retail sales in Wynwood have tumbled 50% year-over-year since the Zika-transmission news first erupted.He expects the Zika stigma to ease over time, but calledMonday"a big moment and opportunity to get people back here."

FULL TEXT

Florida authorities said Monday they no longer believe mosquitoes are spreading the Zika virus in Miami's Wynwood neighborhood, despite the expanded potential transmission zone in nearby Miami Beach.

Federal authorities said aerial spraying in Wynwood had drastically reduced populations of mosquitoes that can carry Zika, but they advised pregnant women and their partners to continue to be cautious about travel to Miami-Dade County.

On Friday, state authorities tripled to 4.5 square miles the Miami Beach zone where they believe there is still active Zika transmission.

The state in late July had identified a roughly one-square-mile Wynwood area as the first place in the continental U.S. where authorities believed the virus was spreading through mosquito bites, and not just arriving with infected people on international flights. Florida Gov. Rick Scott said the state hadn't seen any evidence of mosquito-transmitted Zika in Wynwood in 45 days.

Speaking at a news conference Monday, Mr. Scott credited mosquito-control efforts, and urged visitors to return to the neighborhood. "Everybody should be coming back here and enjoying themselves," Mr. Scott said.

Joseph Furst, chairman of the Wynwood Business Improvement District, which represents more than 400 property owners in the area, estimated restaurant and retail sales in Wynwood have tumbled 50% year-over-year since the Zika-transmission news first erupted.He expects the Zika stigma to ease over time, but calledMonday"a big moment and opportunity to get people back here."

In the nearby tourist hot spot Miami Beach, officials are dealing with a significantly larger area where authorities believe there is Zika transmission.On Friday, Mr. Scott said the impacted zone in Miami Beach now stretches between 8th Street and 63rd Street.

There have been more than 93 cases of locally acquired Zika in Florida, the governor said. Zika can cause birth defects in fetuses, including a condition known as microcephaly that involves an abnormally small head and potentially severe brain damage.

Melanie Evans and Betsy McKay contributed to this article.

Credit: By Jon Kamp

DETAILS

Subject:	Mosquitoes; Insect control; Public health; Zika virus
Business indexing term:	Industry: 56171 : Exterminating and Pest Control Services
Location:	Miami-Dade County Florida; United States--US

Classification:	56171: Exterminating and Pest Control Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989617
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-zika-fears-abate-part-miami/docview/1820989617/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases rec ords will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 144 of 500

World News: Merkel Admits Errors on Migrants

ABSTRACT

[...]Ms. Merkel -- whose steadfast refusal to close the German border to asylum seekers has become a focal point in the global debate over how to treat refugees -- said she would stick to her current policy.

FULL TEXT

BERLIN -- German Chancellor Angela Merkel reacted to her party's latest electoral loss by saying she would stick to her migration policy but acknowledging, more explicitly than before, that she had made mistakes along the way.

Ms. Merkel on Monday described her center-right Christian Democratic Union's second-place performance in Sunday's election in the city-state of Berlin as a "very unsatisfactory, disappointing" result. She acknowledged widespread public discomfort with the influx of more than a million asylum applicants to Germany this year and last, saying she heard voters' concerns.

"If I could, I would turn back time many, many years to be able to better prepare myself and the whole government and all those in positions of responsibility for the situation that met us rather unprepared in late summer 2015," Ms. Merkel said at a news conference at her party's headquarters in the German capital.

Nevertheless, Ms. Merkel -- whose steadfast refusal to close the German border to asylum seekers has become a focal point in the global debate over how to treat refugees -- said she would stick to her current policy. She said she was guided both by a conviction that Germany has a duty to take in people in need and a recognition that the sort of chaotic, mass influx of people the country experienced last year had to be prevented.

Faster processing of asylum requests and deportation of those rejected was necessary, she said, while conditions in Africa, Syria, and elsewhere needed to be improved to reduce the numbers of refugees.

"No one wants this to be repeated, and I don't either," Ms. Merkel said of last year's refugee influx into Germany.

The Alternative for Germany, the upstart anti-immigrant party that took 14.2% in Sunday's Berlin vote, has called for the country to turn away asylum seekers at the border and to limit immigration by Muslims.

Ms. Merkel rejected those calls in her remarks on Monday. Blocking all refugees or all Muslims, she said, would contradict not only "the German constitution and our country's duties under international law, but also above all the ethical foundations of the Christian Democratic Union of Germany and my personal convictions."

The center-left Social Democrats won Sunday's election in the city-state of Berlin with just 21.6% of the vote -- the worst result for any winner in a state election in German postwar history. Both the Social Democrats and the Christian Democrats, who came in second with 17.6%, lost more than 5 percentage points compared with Berlin's 2011 vote.

They were followed closely by the Left Party -- the successors to the East German Communists -- and the environmentalist Greens. Those two parties are expected to replace the Christian Democrats in a new governing coalition under the leadership of Mayor Michael Muller of the Social Democrats, pushing the politics of Berlin to the left.

But likely the biggest change will come as the Alternative for Germany, or AfD, enters the Berlin parliament. The three-year-old party came in fifth on Sunday, securing its 10th set of seats in Germany's 16 state parliaments.

"Whoever tries to carry on the status quo here in Berlin will have a problem with us," said Georg Pazderski, the AfD's lead candidate here. "We will put our finger in the wound and we won't allow anything to be swept under the rug."

Credit: By Anton Troianovski

DETAILS

Subject:	Coalition governments; Political asylum; Refugees; Elections; State elections
Location:	Germany
People:	Merkel, Angela
Company / organization:	Name: Alternative for Germany; NAICS: 813940; Name: Christian Democratic Union-Germany; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989478

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-merkel-admits-errors-on-migrants/docview/1820989478/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 145 of 500

U.S. News: Antibiotics Use In Hospitals Grows

Evans, Melanie . Evans, Melanie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A new study by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found more widespread use by U.S. hospitals of powerful antibiotics, a "worrisome" development as bacteria grow increasingly immune to treatment, researchers said.

FULL TEXT

A new study by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found more widespread use by U.S. hospitals of powerful antibiotics, a "worrisome" development as bacteria grow increasingly immune to treatment, researchers said.

Medical experts said the study, which examined prescribing between 2006 and 2012, appeared to be the first national, multiyear estimate of U.S. hospital antibiotic use. The results underscore other studies that point to the rising use of antibiotics once considered a last resort, even as calls for cautious prescribing grow more urgent. Antibiotic overuse gives evolving bacteria more opportunities to develop drug resistance.

The study, published in JAMA Internal Medicine, found hospitals increasingly bypassed drugs considered the first line of defense against bacteria in favor of more potent antibiotics. Over the six-year period, the researchers found a 37% rise in the use of carbapenems, a type of drug considered a last resort against multiple bacteria that cause bloodstream and urinary-tract infections and pneumonia.

The estimates were based on data reported to the Truven Health MarketScan Hospital Drug Database by roughly 300

U.S. hospitals. The data excluded federal hospitals and lacked a large number of children's hospitals.

The study didn't examine what drove rising use of powerful antibiotics, but some of the increase may be necessary as bacteria develop more drug resistance, said Arjun Srinivasan, associate director of the health-care associated infection prevention program at the CDC and an author of the study. Bacteria have developed widespread resistance to fluoroquinolone antibiotics, which the study found declined in use at hospitals 20% during the period.

But overuse is also likely behind the more prolific use of powerful antibiotics, some experts said.

Credit: By Melanie Evans

DETAILS

Subject:	Bacteria; Studies; Drug resistance; Antibiotics; Hospitals
Business indexing term:	Subject: Hospitals; Industry: 62211 : General Medical and Surgical Hospitals
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Centers for Disease Control & Prevention--CDC; NAICS: 923120
Classification:	62211: General Medical and Surgical Hospitals
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989463

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-antibiotics-use-hospitals-grows/docview/1820989463/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 146 of 500

U.S. News: Prosecutors Say Christie Was Told of Traffic Jams

Mann, Ted; Ramey, Corinne . Mann, Ted; Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Ms. Kelly, a former deputy chief of staff to the governor, and Mr. Baroni, a former executive at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, are on trial for an alleged plan to create traffic jams in Fort Lee, N.J., to punish the borough's Democratic mayor for not endorsing Mr. Christie, a Republican.

FULL TEXT

Federal prosecutors said New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie was told about traffic jams caused by lane closures at the George Washington Bridge as they were occurring, casting doubt on the governor's version of events.

Alleged co-conspirators in the 2013 scandal bragged to the governor about the havoc they had created and about their refusal to respond to requests for help from local officials, according to prosecutors.

Mr. Christie has said he didn't know about the closures beforehand and that if the traffic problems were mentioned to him while they were taking place, it wouldn't have occurred to him that anything unusual was afoot.

In opening arguments Monday in Newark, N.J., at the trial of two of Mr. Christie's former associates, Bridget Kelly and Bill Baroni, much of the spotlight was on the role of the governor himself in the scandal.

Ms. Kelly, a former deputy chief of staff to the governor, and Mr. Baroni, a former executive at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, are on trial for an alleged plan to create traffic jams in Fort Lee, N.J., to punish the borough's Democratic mayor for not endorsing Mr. Christie, a Republican. David Wildstein, a former Port Authority executive who admitted to orchestrating the closures, has pleaded guilty and is expected to be a key government witness.

While Mr. Christie hasn't been charged with wrongdoing, the trial is expected to shed light on the inner workings of his administration at a time when he was seeking to parlay a re-election landslide into a presidential bid.

The bridge scandal stymied Mr. Christie's efforts to build a national political campaign. He exited the presidential contest after the New Hampshire primary in February and has since become an adviser to GOP nominee Donald Trump.

A spokesman for Mr. Christie pointed to remarks he made in 2014, when he said he didn't authorize the closures or know about them before they happened. The governor has said he first learned of the closures through news reports, and that the trial will show he wasn't involved.

In court Monday, prosecutor Vikas Khanna said Messrs. Baroni and Wildstein "bragged" to the governor at the World Trade Center memorial during the lane closures "about the fact that there were traffic problems in Fort Lee and [the Fort Lee mayor] was not getting his calls returned."

Attorneys for the defendants focused many of their opening statements on Mr. Wildstein, a former Port Authority official who is cooperating with prosecutors. They presented him as a political operative who used Port Authority assets to further the governor's political ambitions.

"When David Wildstein spoke, Gov. Christie's voice came out and everybody knew it," said Michael Baldassare, representing Mr. Baroni.

An attorney for Mr. Wildstein declined to comment.

Federal prosecutors said Mr. Wildstein has lied and engaged in "a lot of dirty tricks." But he will be under oath when he testifies, they said.

Prosecutors portrayed the defendants as high-ranking public servants who abused power for political gain at the expense of ordinary citizens.

Michael Critchley, representing Ms. Kelly, described his client as a newly hired, relatively low-level employee who had no control over Port Authority resources. Mr. Baroni's attorney portrayed Mr. Wildstein as the closer of the two men to Mr. Christie.

Credit: By Ted Mann and Corinne Ramey

DETAILS

Subject:	Trials; Public prosecutors; Bridges; Conspiracy; Traffic congestion; Politics; Governors; Scandals; Legal arguments
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Kelly, Bridget Anne; Baroni, Bill; Christie, Christopher J
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 20, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820989442
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-prosecutors-say-christie-was-told/docview/1820989442/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

American Airstrike Threatens Syrian Cease-Fire

Abi-Habib, Maria; Lubold, Gordon; Hodge, Nathan . Abi-Habib, Maria; Lubold, Gordon; Hodge, Nathan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry said Sunday that until there are seven days of calm and more humanitarian aid for areas such as Aleppo, as envisioned in the cease-fire deal, the U.S. won't begin coordinating military operations with the Russians. [...]truckloads of humanitarian aid destined for the besieged rebel-held side of the divided city of Aleppo remained stuck on the Turkish border, with the U.N. saying it was waiting for guarantees from both Syrian rebels and government forces for safe passage.

FULL TEXT

The cease-fire in Syria was in jeopardy on Sunday as clashes escalated the day after the U.S.-led coalition targeting Islamic State mistakenly killed dozens of Syrian government forces in an airstrike.

Both the Syrian government and rebels accused each other of violating the truce. Rebels said the regime and its Russian allies restarted airstrikes on opposition fighters in the northern city of Aleppo, the epicenter of the war in recent months.

The Russian defense ministry said Sunday the situation in Aleppo was "especially tense," but added Syrian government forces hadn't broken the cease-fire or responded to fire from opposition forces.

The airstrike added to the tension and led to charges and countercharges between Washington and Moscow, which back opposite sides in the conflict and brokered the cease-fire.

The cease-fire began last Monday with the aim of reducing the level of violence and getting increased access for humanitarian aid.

But violence is flaring and aid remains stalled in Turkey. Opposition leaders said they expected full-fledged fighting to resume and said hopes had been dashed for a broader political settlement to the war.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry said Sunday that until there are seven days of calm and more humanitarian aid for areas such as Aleppo, as envisioned in the cease-fire deal, the U.S. won't begin coordinating military operations with the Russians.

"Russia signed up to a cessation of hostilities, [Syrian President Bashar al-]Assad said he would live by it," Mr. Kerry said in an interview on CNN. Mr. Kerry said the Syrian air force continues to strike opposition positions under the guise of attacking the Syrian Conquest Front, formerly known as Nusra Front and formerly affiliated with al Qaeda.

The United Nations Security Council met late Saturday after Moscow called for an emergency meeting to discuss the attack on Syrian military positions in eastern Deir Ezzour province. The countries' two U.N. envoys were each sharply critical of the other side.

The U.S.-led coalition said its aircraft accidentally struck the Syrian military that day. A Syrian official said 83 soldiers were killed and more than 100 wounded.

Russia's foreign ministry said Moscow was "deeply concerned" over the airstrike.

"The actions of the coalition pilots -- if they were not, as we hope, taken on the instructions from Washington -- border on criminal negligence and directly abetting ISIS terrorists," the ministry said, using an acronym for Islamic State.

The ministry reiterated Russia's allegation that U.S.-backed opposition groups haven't observed the U.S.-Russia brokered cease-fire. It said failure to rein them in "may threaten implementation of the entire range of Russian-American agreements reached in Geneva."

U.S. officials said the military had contacted the Russians about half an hour before the order to strike in Deir Ezzour, to alert them of the plan, and that Russian officials said nothing about Syrian regime soldiers there. The Russian defense ministry couldn't be reached for comment Sunday.

Syrian presidential adviser Bouthaina Shaaban said in a television interview Sunday that the airstrike by the U.S.-led coalition "was not a mistake."

U.S. officials said the notion that the coalition targeted Syrian forces on purpose was preposterous. One official called it "flatly untrue" and added, "Let's think about this: we bombed the wrong guys in order to blow up an agreement? That's crazy talk."

Mrs. Shaaban said cease-fire violations had been committed by the rebels and their backers. She rebuffed opposition claims the regime violated the truce.

On Sunday, Islamic State said it downed a Syrian warplane over Deir Ezzour. Syrian state media confirmed the strike killed an air force pilot.

Meanwhile, truckloads of humanitarian aid destined for the besieged rebel-held side of the divided city of Aleppo remained stuck on the Turkish border, with the U.N. saying it was waiting for guarantees from both Syrian rebels and government forces for safe passage.

"Sadly, there has been no progress in getting the assurances we need to commence" aid delivery, said David Swanson, the spokesman for the U.N. Officer for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs for Syria. "We are extremely frustrated," he added, citing sporadic fighting and dangerous road conditions for the delay.

Civilians and activists in rebel-held Aleppo said food was increasingly scarce due to the government siege of opposition-held parts of the city. A kilogram of rice has shot up from about 50 cents to $2.50 since spring, while sugar rose from 50 cents to $5. Flour is no longer available and many are living off leaves and grass.

"The whole world watched while our children died and no one cared. The international community only called for a U.N. emergency meeting when some soldiers carrying weapons were killed," said Mojahed Abo Aljoud, an antigovernment media activist living in rebel-held Aleppo, referring to the strike on the Syrian military in Deir Ezzour province on Saturday.

Mrs. Shaaban, the Syrian presidential adviser, said the government is willing to allow aid trucks to enter rebel-held areas and that "technicalities are being addressed" to allow safe passage.

In southwest Aleppo, fighting escalated between rebels and government forces with antigovernment activists reporting Russian warplanes circling the skies above the city.

The U.K.-based monitoring group Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said fighting began around Damascus on Saturday night, and continued into Sunday. In southern Daraa province, both sides shelled each other Sunday morning, although no casualties were reported.

Syrian government media said rebels broke the cease-fire in and around western Homs city, but didn't report any casualties.

A senior rebel representative for one of the largest rebel groups active in Aleppo said he wasn't optimistic about the prospects for the cease-fire to stick.

Noam Raydan, Felicia Schwartz and Kejal Vyas contributed to this article.

(See related article: "World News: U.S. Alerted Russia Before Strike" -- WSJ September 19, 2016)

Credit: Maria Abi-Habib, Gordon Lubold, Nathan Hodge

DETAILS

Subject:	Humanitarian aid; Truces & cease fires; Military air strikes; Humanitarianism; Military personnel
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Syria
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820570209
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/american-airstrike-threatens-syrian-cease-fire/docview/1820570209/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 148 of 500

Business News: Bayer Seeks to Offset Rules --- Europe bans many GMOs, but Monsanto acquisition offers foothold in U.S. market

Alessi, Christopher . Alessi, Christopher.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Bayer's planned tie-up with Monsanto, valued at $66 billion including debt, comes as rivals Dow Chemical Co. and DuPont Co. are pursuing a merger, and after Swiss pesticide group Syngenta AG agreed earlier this year to be acquired by China National Chemical Corp. "Consolidation has been a topic around for a while because productivity and R&D was going down [and] new technologies require investment," Mr. Condon said.

FULL TEXT

FRANKFURT -- Bayer AG's big push into the U.S. agrochemical market with its planned acquisition of Monsanto Co. could help it offset a growing problem on its home turf: increasingly stringent European regulation.

The oversight has been driven by fierce public resistance in the European Union to pesticides and other crop-protection chemicals. Most genetically modified crops are banned throughout Europe, and EU officials are debating whether to do the same with next generation genetic technologies.

"The single biggest challenge [in the EU] is regulation on the crop protection side," said Liam Condon, the head of Bayer's crop-science division, in a recent interview. "It's taking longer and longer to bring products to market."

The regulatory environment, along with low crop prices in North America, has helped drive a wave of consolidation in the agrochemicals industry.

Bayer's planned tie-up with Monsanto, valued at $66 billion including debt, comes as rivals Dow Chemical Co. and DuPont Co. are pursuing a merger, and after Swiss pesticide group Syngenta AG agreed earlier this year to be acquired by China National Chemical Corp.

"Consolidation has been a topic around for a while because productivity and R&D was going down [and] new technologies require investment," Mr. Condon said.

The one major player in the agriculture sector that so far has remained on the sidelines is German competitor BASF SE, the world's largest chemicals company by sales.

The head of BASF's crop division, Markus Heldt, said earlier this month that BASF potentially would be interested in acquiring smaller business units that Bayer and Monsanto may need to divest themselves of in response to competition concerns. But BASF's agriculture division likely would still be significantly smaller than Bayer's after the planned merger, experts say.

The Bayer-Monsanto deal would allow the two companies to pool resources to increase research and development and investment in technology, with the prospect of bringing new seed and crop products more quickly to market, said David Zaruk, a professor at Universite Saint-Louis in Brussels.

Mr. Zaruk said smaller seed and crop companies in Europe mostly have been priced out of the market and must team up with multinationals to get their products out because of the hundreds of millions of euros it can cost to comply with regulatory standards.

Even Bayer and Monsanto separately "were ultimately too small" to innovate and succeed in the European market, he said.

Graeme Taylor, public affairs officer at industry-lobbying group European Crop Protection Association, said, "There's a huge challenge for the industry in terms of innovation. It costs the best part of 200 million euros ($223.1 million) and 11 years to successfully bring a new product to market."

Mr. Taylor said the process for getting pesticides and herbicides approved for use in the EU had been "hijacked by politics," in lieu of science. He cited the example of glyphosate, a weed killer.

Activists and others opposed to crop chemicals have lobbied Brussels to restrict glyphosate because they argue it is carcinogenic. The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization and the World Health Organization concluded in a report in May that glyphosate is "unlikely to pose a carcinogenic risk to humans from exposure through diet."

Leading the Pack

Sales of the world's major agrochemical companies in 2015

Dow Chemical Agricultural Sciences

 $6.38 billion

DuPont Agriculture

 $9.8

Monsanto

 $15

Syngenta

 $13.4

Bayer Crop Science

 $10.4

BASF Agricultural Solutions

 $5.8

Note: China National Chemical Corp. is also a major manufacturer of agricultural chemicals. It doesn't make divisional sales figures for the company's agro business available; its total sale for 2015 is $45 billion.

Source: the companies
THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Christopher Alessi

DETAILS

Subject:	Regulation; Chemical industry; Acquisitions & mergers; Carcinogens; Chemicals; Pesticides
----------	---

Business indexing term:	Subject: Chemical industry Acquisitions & mergers; Industry: 32532 : Pesticide and Other Agricultural Chemical Manufacturing
-------------------------	--

Location:	Europe
-----------	--------

Company / organization:	Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Bayer AG; NAICS: 325180, 325412
-------------------------	---

Classification:	32532: Pesticide and Other Agricultural Chemical Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820569506
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-bayer-seeks-offset-rules-europe/docview/1820569506/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 149 of 500

Business News: As Satellites Multiply, Officials Seek Ways to Avoid Collisions

ABSTRACT

Air Force and National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials told an international aerospace conference here last week that they envision a combination of broad federal rules and voluntary industry standards to keep relatively small satellites safely separated in increasingly popular low-Earth orbits.

FULL TEXT

LONG BEACH, Calif. -- With space entrepreneurs proposing to launch unprecedented numbers of satellites in coming years, U.S. officials are seeking ways to cooperate with industry on tighter manufacturing, operating and disposal standards.

The goal is to take early steps to prevent collisions and other mishaps in orbit.

Air Force and National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials told an international aerospace conference here last week that they envision a combination of broad federal rules and voluntary industry standards to keep relatively small satellites safely separated in increasingly popular low-Earth orbits.

The goal also includes ensuring that such spacecraft -- potentially ranging from barely a couple of pounds to hundreds of pounds -- won't interfere with fleets of larger satellites at higher altitudes.

Formal accords are years away, and it isn't clear which agency will take the lead. Some long-term moves would require international cooperation. Meanwhile, the Federal Aviation Administration is pushing to head civilian efforts to analyze and disseminate real-time data about potential collision threats.

But the topic has captured the attention of both U.S. military and civilian space experts.

"Multiple companies are planning constellations of hundreds, or even thousands, of small satellites," said Winston Beauchamp, the Air Force's top space-policy official. The U.S. and its allies must look at rules of the road for production, and then track and share in-orbit information, so everyone can "operate safely," he said.

The surge in small-satellite projects reflects an array of launch providers -- including startups such as Rocket Lab USA Inc. and Firefly Space Systems Inc., along with established players such as Space Exploration Technologies Corp., or SpaceX -- offering dramatically reduced costs to reach orbit. The trend also is fueled by advances in miniaturization of components, and by steadily growing demand for internet connections and imagery world-wide.

With backers ranging from Silicon Valley powerhouse Facebook Inc. to scores of tech startups to European jet maker Airbus Group SE, overall investment in commercial-space ventures is reaching billions of dollars annually.

At low altitudes, there tend to be more satellites in closer proximity. Smaller spacecraft also tend to have shorter lifespans. Unlike larger satellites, some smaller ones may not have the ability to move from their orbit when they finally go out of service.

Some projects may fail, and experts don't see an imminent risk of orbital traffic jams, in any case. But the Pentagon already track tens of thousands of pieces of space debris.

With lots more objects expected in space, Steve Jurczyk, NASA's associate administrator for technology, said it is critical to develop robust production and operating policies aimed reducing creation of more space debris. "I do see some initial activity," he said, "but we need to get moving."

The ultimate answer, says the NASA official, is bound to entail general guidelines from the government on disposal of satellites that "allow industry to figure out how to implement those approaches."

Credit: By Andy Pasztor

DETAILS

Subject:	Satellites; Federal regulation; Startups; Cooperation; Moon
Business indexing term:	Subject: Startups; Industry: 92711 : Space Research and Technology
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: National Aeronautics & Space Administration--NASA; NAICS: 927110; Name: Air Force-US; NAICS: 928110
Classification:	92711: Space Research and Technology
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820567417
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-as-satellites-multiply-officials/docview/1820567417/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 150 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

An election in Berlin was won by the Social Democrats, but an anti-immigrant party posted gains. ---

FULL TEXT

The Syria cease-fire was in jeopardy as clashes escalated after the U.S.-led coalition mistakenly killed dozens of regime forces.

U.S. military personnel alerted Russian counterparts before launching the airstrike, the U.S. said.

Attacks in New York, New Jersey and Minnesota injured almost 40 people and stoked fears of "lone wolf" terror assaults.

Trump backers said Clinton first suggested Obama was born overseas after the GOP candidate dropped "birther" allegations.

Putin declared victory after Russians voted in a new parliament that maintains his ruling party's dominance.

NATO said a new force aimed at deterring Russian aggression in the Baltic area will be in place by May.

India said four militants stormed an army base near the Pakistani border, killing at least 17 soldiers.

The first Iraqi families returned to Fallujah nearly three months after Islamic State was driven out.

An election in Berlin was won by the Social Democrats, but an anti-immigrant party posted gains.

A Norwegian freed by Philippine terrorists said two captives were killed and he faced execution threats.

DETAILS

Location:	Syria; India; Al Fallujah Iraq; United States--US; Minnesota; New Jersey; New York; Iraq
Company / organization:	Name: North Atlantic Treaty Organization--NATO; NAICS: 928120; Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820567033
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1820567033/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 151 of 500

U.S. News: Minnesota City Grapples With Stabbings at Mall

Barrett, Joe; Mahtani, Shibani; Campo-Flores, Arian . Barrett, Joe; Mahtani, Shibani; Campo-Flores, Arian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Residents of this central Minnesota city on the Mississippi River on Sunday were struggling to come to terms with Saturday night's vicious attack inside the normally safe confines of a shopping mall.

FULL TEXT

ST. CLOUD, Minn. -- Residents of this central Minnesota city on the Mississippi River on Sunday were struggling to come to terms with Saturday night's vicious attack inside the normally safe confines of a shopping mall.

"Our little corner of the world feels a lot less safe now," said Julie Mertz, a 56-year-old mother of three and part-time worker in the food industry.

On Saturday night, a man dressed as a security guard began attacking people with a knife, making references to Allah and asking at least one victim if he was Muslim, authorities said. Nine people were injured. All are expected to survive. The man was eventually killed by an off-duty police officer from another community, who had to fire several shots as the assailant repeatedly tried to get up and lunge at him.

"We are currently investigating this as a potential act of terrorism," Richard Thornton, special agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Minneapolis division, said at a news conference Sunday. "We do not at this point in time know whether the subject was in contact with, had connections with, was inspired by, a foreign terrorist organization."

The mayor hailed the actions of the off-duty officer -- Jason Falconer, a part-time officer in the Avon, Minn., police department and onetime chief of the Albany, Minn., police department. "He clearly prevented additional injuries and potentially loss of life," said Dave Kleis, the mayor of St. Cloud.

The alleged attacker was identified as Somali-American, and a media outlet aligned with Islamic State claimed him as a "soldier" who was inspired by the group's message.

Last year, the U.S. granted entrance to nearly 9,000 Somalis, with many joining the already sizable population in Minnesota. Somalis have migrated to Minnesota both voluntarily since the 1980s, and later as refugees as civil war intensified in the 1990s in Somalia.

Mohayadin Mohamed, president of Islamic Center of St. Cloud, said Somalis are saddened and outraged by the incident, but concerned that because of the identity of the attacker they could receive some of the blame.

"We have been working hard to bridge the gap of misunderstanding," he said. "This kind of event dismisses what we have been trying to do. This is not Islam. This does not represent us."

St. Cloud is a city of about 66,000 people, with many college students, a stretch of the Mississippi River and a pretty lake near downtown.

Police presence was minimal Sunday afternoon at Crossroads Center Mall, where the stabbing took place. One officer stood outside the entrance of the Macy's where the assailant was killed.

A sign on every door of the mall said mall management was "devastated" by the attack and that the mall would be closed Sunday "out of respect to the victims, their families and the ongoing investigation." A woman who works at the mall said she couldn't comment.

"It's disturbing that this stuff happens this close," said Mike Conzet, a 34-year-old truck driver who was buying dog food across from the mall with his wife and two boys.

Nearby, Mrs. Mertz was having coffee with two friends at an outdoor table of a local coffee chain on a warm, partly cloudy day.

"We were just at church and were impressed that our pastor said we should respond to this with more love," she said. "We have a lot of Somali people in St. Cloud and this could lead to more tension. But we shouldn't retaliate or anything but be more loving."

Devlin Barrett contributed to this article.

Credit: By Joe Barrett, Shibani Mahtani and Arian Campo-Flores

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Stabbings; Murders & murder attempts
Location:	Minnesota; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820567030
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-minnesota-city-grapples-with-stabbings/docview/1820567030/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 152 of 500

Election 2016: Trump Backers Try to Pin Birtherism On Clinton

Viswanatha, Aruna . Viswanatha, Aruna.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Added Mr. Trump's running mate, Mike Pence, on ABC: "Other than many in the national media, and certainly in Hillary Clinton's campaign . . . the American people aren't focused on the debates of the past."

FULL TEXT

Defenders of Republican nominee Donald Trump, who took five years to concede President Barack Obama was born in the U.S., tried on Sunday to shift the focus to the campaign of Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton.

On Friday, Mr. Trump stood down from years of false accusations that made him a central figure in the discredited "birther" movement. But he blamed Mrs. Clinton for suggesting in the 2008 Democratic primary campaign that Mr. Obama, a Hawaii native, was born overseas -- an allegation the Clinton campaign said is false.

"Associates of the Clinton campaign started this birtherism question in 2007," said Trump campaign manager Kellyanne Conway on NBC. Added Mr. Trump's running mate, Mike Pence, on ABC: "Other than many in the national media, and certainly in Hillary Clinton's campaign . . . the American people aren't focused on the debates of the past."

A former Washington bureau chief of McClatchy said Sidney Blumenthal, a confidant of Mrs. Clinton, had shared the claims during Mr. Obama's first campaign for president, prompting McClatchy to assign a reporter to investigate. But Mr. Blumenthal told the Boston Globe Friday: "This is false. Period."

On Sunday, Mrs. Clinton's running mate, Virginia Senator Tim Kaine, said on CNN he had no reason to believe the Blumenthal story was true. And on Fox News, he asked Mr. Trump: "Why were you trying to whip up the darkest emotions connected to the most painful chapter in American life?"

Credit: By Aruna Viswanatha

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; Presidential elections; Nominations; Candidates; Hierarchies
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Obama, Barack; Trump, Donald J; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820567029
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-backers-try-pin-birtherism-on/docview/1820567029/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 153 of 500

U.S. News: New York Officials Seek Motive

Shallwani, Pervaiz; Devlin, Barrett . Shallwani, Pervaiz; Devlin, Barrett.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Investigators in New York determined that both bombs were made using pressure cookers that were filled with explosives and shrapnel, including ball bearings or metal BBs, and could be detonated using flip phones and Christmas lights, a law enforcement official said.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK -- Counterterrorism agents were combing through surveillance videos as they hunted for a bomb maker who set off an explosion in New York Saturday night that injured 29 people, putting the city on high alert.

Officials said they were trying to determine if the explosion in Manhattan, an unexploded device that was found four blocks away and a blast earlier in the day about 80 miles away in New Jersey were the work of the same individual or group.

Authorities on Sunday said they see similarities between the bombs -- cellphones were used in all three devices -- but that they hadn't made a clear connection.

The main focus remains on the Manhattan blast. "I'm concerned," said New York Police Commissioner James O'Neill. "We did have a bomb that was detonated . . . and we have no one apprehended, so of course I'm concerned."

The explosion occurred around 8:30 p.m. Saturday on West 23rd Street near Sixth Avenue in the Chelsea neighborhood, shaking buildings, shattering windows and sending people scrambling for cover, authorities said.

A sweep of the area led to a second device about four blocks away. That device was left in plain sight in the middle of a residential block, officials said.

Investigators in New York determined that both bombs were made using pressure cookers that were filled with explosives and shrapnel, including ball bearings or metal BBs, and could be detonated using flip phones and Christmas lights, a law enforcement official said. The devices are similar to those used in the Boston Marathon bombings.

The second device was considered to be the best lead, federal and local officials said. Authorities moved the device to a secure NYPD facility in the Bronx around 2:30 a.m. Sunday and authorities were able to successfully open it Sunday evening. Investigators have turned it over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for further testing, authorities said.

Doctors found that many of those injured "showed signs of having been hit by such shrapnel," one official said. All 29 of the people injured had been released from hospitals as of Sunday, authorities said.

The bomb on West 23rd Street was filled with small bearings or metal BBs, and the second bomb that remained intact four blocks away on West 27th Street had similar materials, the official said.

Authorities have identified a person of interest in the incident, someone they would like to speak with but were not treating as a suspect, a senior law enforcement official said. The man appears to be the same person who is in the "vicinity" in videos recovered from the scene of the explosion and four blocks away where police recovered the second bomb, the official said.

Investigators are treating the explosion as an "intentional act," and while they hadn't ruled out terrorism, they weren't willing to label the explosion as a terrorist act until authorities had a better idea of a motive, Mayor Bill de Blasio said.

"We know there was a bombing. We know it's a very serious incident. But we have a lot more work to do to say what kind of motivation was behind this," he said.

Investigators have recovered video, including footage that showed a large explosion, and were feverishly working to gather more video and field tips.

Officials late Sunday night were investigating a suspicious package found near an Elizabeth, N.J., train station, which led to significant delays in train service through the area.

Also Sunday night, FBI and NYPD investigators stopped a vehicle of interest being sought in the bombing investigation, an FBI spokeswoman said. Investigators were questioning the five occupants of the vehicle, officials said.

The explosion came as the city prepared to host the United Nations General Assembly, an annual gathering of top leaders from around the world that historically has authorities in the city on high alert.

"You will see a very substantial NYPD presence this week, bigger than ever," Mr. de Blasio said.

In the New Jersey blast, one of three pipe bombs exploded Saturday morning in a plastic garbage can in Seaside Park, shortly before thousands of runners were to participate in a 5K charity race. No one was injured.

Mark Morales contributed to this article.

Credit: By Pervaiz Shallwani and Devlin Barrett

DETAILS

Subject:	Law enforcement; Explosions; Criminal investigations; Bombings; Marathons
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820567026
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-york-officials-seek-motive/docview/1820567026/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, in cluding corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

GM workers at two Canadian plants will strike if the auto maker and union miss a Monday contract deadline, the union's head said, possibly disrupting supplies of SUV engines. ---

FULL TEXT

GM workers at two Canadian plants will strike if the auto maker and union miss a Monday contract deadline, the union's head said, possibly disrupting supplies of SUV engines.

The S&P 500 is splitting off REITs from the financial sector to create an 11th stock category.

Koch is launching a carpet-cleaner line, its first foray into the U.S. household-cleaning market.

The FAA is poised to take responsibility for warning commercial-satellite firms about collision hazards.

The Boston Fed chief warned that very low rates could be fueling a commercial real-estate bubble.

OPEC members cooled expectations for an agreement this month to limit crude-oil output.

Samsung is selling stakes in other tech firms to raise cash as it grapples with a phone recall estimated to cost over $1 billion.

Bayer's push into the U.S. agrochemical market with its Monsanto deal could help offset strict EU rules.

Warner Bros.' "Sully" remained in first place in the weekend box office, collecting about $22 million.

Prepaid cards face oversight as regulators plan a new rule this fall.

DETAILS

Subject:	Automobile industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry; Industry: 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries--OPEC; NAICS: 813910; Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Federal Aviation Administration--FAA; NAICS: 926120; Name: Warner Bros Entertainment Inc; NAICS: 512110
Classification:	33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820567024
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1820567024/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 155 of 500

U.S. News: Economic Calendar

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

FULL TEXT

The U.S. Federal Reserve and the Bank of Japan will make monetary-policy announcements this week that are likely to ripple through global financial markets. Also, data are due on the U.S. housing sector and economic activity in the eurozone.

TUESDAY: Canada's central bank this month flagged continuing softness in exports despite a weak currency, which could suggest a downgrade to the bank's economic growth forecast at its rate announcement in October. Bank of Canada Gov. Stephen Poloz could offer hints on the outlook in a speech in Quebec City on "living with lower for longer."

WEDNESDAY: The Federal Reserve's policy committee will conclude a two-day meeting with a vote on whether to raise short-term interest rates. Officials appeared split in recent weeks, but financial-market participants see an imminent rate increase as unlikely.

Chairwoman Janet Yellen will hold her quarterly news conference, and policy makers will release updated projections for U.S. inflation, unemployment, economic growth and interest rates.

Earlier in the day, the Bank of Japan will wrap up its own two-day policy meeting and issue a report card on its 3 1/2-year deflation-fighting campaign. Economic growth remains weak, and policy makers are split on the optimal mix of stimulus programs.

A focus will be on whether the BOJ reduces its main interest rate further into negative territory -- which would be unpopular among commercial banks -- or tweaks its easing program in other ways, perhaps by dropping its March 2018 target date for reaching 2% inflation.

THURSDAY: Is the U.S. housing market regaining momentum? The National Association of Realtors will release data on existing-home sales, which fell 3.2% in July as inventory remained tight and prices stayed high. Economists expect sales partially rebounded in August, rising 1.7%.

FRIDAY: Europe's third-quarter growth picture will come into focus when IHS Markit releases its flash eurozone composite purchasing managers index, an economic-activity gauge, for September. The European Central Bank may take note if it shows a slowdown from the already weak second quarter. Forecasters are looking for a slight fall to 52.8 from August's final reading of 52.9, leaving the third-quarter average down from the previous three-month period.

DETAILS

Subject:	Purchasing managers index; Federal Reserve monetary policy; Central banks; Interest rates; Eurozone; Economic growth
Business indexing term:	Subject: Purchasing managers index Federal Reserve monetary policy Central banks Interest rates Eurozone Economic growth; Industry: 92113 : Public Finance Activities 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Classification:	92113: Public Finance Activities; 52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1820567018

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-economic-calendar/docview/1820567018/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 156 of 500

Business News: Taking Aim at Craigslist --- Africa's biggest company pushes into the U.S. and wants to dethrone online-classified leader

Wexler, Alexandra . Wexler, Alexandra.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]the media company is pushing into the U.S. and hoping to topple a household name, Craigslist Inc. In May, Naspers opened a venture-capital outfit in San Francisco to be closer to the tech-innovation hub of Silicon Valley and get early access to technology and internet companies it can help to scale on a global basis.

FULL TEXT

CAPE TOWN, South Africa -- Africa's biggest company is also one of its least well-known outside the continent, and it owes its fortune to one great investment: China.

Naspers Ltd., which has transformed itself from a local publisher to a media juggernaut valued at $76.5 billion, invested $34 million in 2001 to take a stake in Tencent Holdings Ltd., now China's largest internet-service portal with nearly a billion instant-messenger active users every month and a market capitalization of $256.7 billion. Naspers's 34% stake is currently worth more than Naspers itself.

Now, the media company is pushing into the U.S. and hoping to topple a household name, Craigslist Inc.

In May, Naspers opened a venture-capital outfit in San Francisco to be closer to the tech-innovation hub of Silicon Valley and get early access to technology and internet companies it can help to scale on a global basis. That followed a $100 million investment last year in a mobile classifieds app called Letgo.

The company wants to replicate successes in online classified platforms in Russia as well as with OLX, the biggest classifieds site in India and Brazil, by dethroning Craigslist, which remains the industry's most recognizable brand.

"The U.S. as a market is obviously extremely interesting; it's also very crowded," Naspers Chief Executive Bob van Dijk said.

"[Craigslist] is actually executed in quite a suboptimal way," said the 43-year-old, who took over as CEO in April 2014 after working on the group's e-commerce side and previously heading up eBay Inc.'s German operations. "A mobile-oriented generation doesn't really want to interact with a clunky '90s website. . . That market I think is ripe for disruption."

Craigslist didn't respond to a request for comment.

Analysts say Naspers is undervalued, given that its market capitalization is less than the value of its Tencent stake, despite having additional profitable businesses.

Naspers -- which oversees more than 40 businesses, including pay television and online retail, spread across more than 130 countries -- also has a 29% stake in Mail.ru Group, a Russian internet company that runs two of the country's three-largest social-networking sites.

In December, Naspers raised $2.5 billion to allow flexibility to invest in attractive growth opportunities.

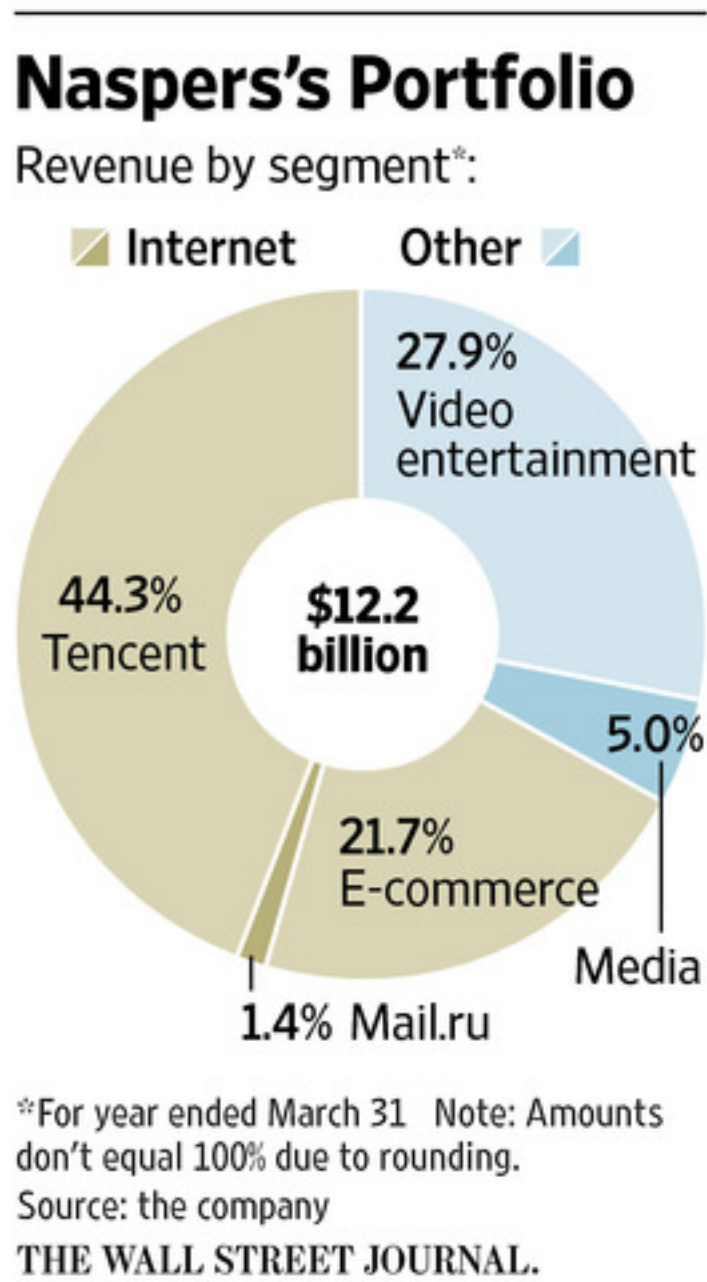

Founded in South Africa in 1915, Naspers was established as De Nationale Pers Beperkt, or the National Press Ltd., to produce a Dutch-language newspaper for the country's Afrikaner population. The company and its publications became mouthpieces for the National Party, which came into power in 1948 and instituted the system of racial segregation known as apartheid.

But Naspers has moved far beyond its roots as a publisher in apartheid-era South Africa. Although the company is still domiciled here, 77% of its revenue now comes from abroad and its media segment, which includes the print business, is by far its smallest. The emerging-markets-focused company has also set its sights on a lucrative new target: the U.S.

"Even though they were focused on emerging markets, ultimately they needed to be where the birth of ideas and home of tech really is," said Philip Short, an analyst at Old Mutual Equities in Cape Town.

Naspers's U.S. play is the latest in a series of bold moves for a company trying to prove that its success goes beyond one landmark investment. But Naspers's e-commerce division, which includes classifieds and online retail, operates at a loss.

In June, Naspers said its net profit for the year ended March 31 fell 21% to $994 million. Still, core headline earnings, which are adjusted for nonrecurring and nonoperational items and are the company's preferred measure of performance, rose 17% to $2.98 a share, driven by growth from the internet and classifieds businesses.

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Alexandra Wexler

DETAILS

Subject:	Internet; Equity stake; Apartheid
Business indexing term:	Subject: Equity stake; Corporation: Naspers

Location:	Africa
Company / organization:	Name: Naspers; NAICS: 513110, 513130, 516210; Name: Tencent Holdings Ltd; NAICS: 517112
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546474
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-taking-aim-at-craigslist-africas/docview/1820546474/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQue st Central

LINKS

World News: U.S. Alerted Russia Before Strike

Lubold, Gordon; Hodge, Nathan . Lubold, Gordon; Hodge, Nathan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.S. military personnel stationed at al-Udeid Air Base in Qatar told the Russians about half an hour in advance about the plan to attack targets in Syria's Deir Ezzour province, U.S. officials said.

FULL TEXT

U.S. officials said the military contacted Russian counterparts before launching a Saturday airstrike that mistakenly hit Moscow's Syrian government allies, using a communication channel set up to avoid just such errors.

Representatives of the Russian defense ministry couldn't be reached for comment Sunday. On Saturday, Vitaly Churkin, the Russian U.N. envoy, suggested the strike wasn't an accident and said the U.S. hadn't coordinated the strike with Russian military officials.

U.S. military personnel stationed at al-Udeid Air Base in Qatar told the Russians about half an hour in advance about the plan to attack targets in Syria's Deir Ezzour province, U.S. officials said.

Russia said nothing to indicate there were Syrian soldiers there, U.S. officials said. Within minutes after the strike began, the Russians called to say the target was actually Syrian soldiers and that the U.S. should avoid it, according to the officials. The U.S. immediately suspended the operation, they said.

(See related article: "American Airstrike Threatens Syrian Cease-Fire" -- WSJ September 19, 2016)

Credit: By Gordon Lubold and Nathan Hodge

DETAILS

Subject:	Military air strikes; Armed forces
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	United States--US; Syria; Russia
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546417
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-alerted-russia-before-strike/docview/1820546417/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 158 of 500

City News -- Urban Gardner: Dogs Sprung After Good Behavior Help Veterans Cope

Gardner, Ralph, Jr . Gardner, Ralph, Jr.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The answer appears to be "yes" based on the experience of Puppies Behind Bars, a program that pairs service dogs, trained by prison inmates, with military veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder.

FULL TEXT

With the exception of cat people who believe their kitties are the most sublime creatures on Earth, I think the rest of us can agree that dogs are man's, and more than a few women's, best friends.

The question is whether that friendship and loyalty are easily transferable?

The answer appears to be "yes" based on the experience of Puppies Behind Bars, a program that pairs service dogs, trained by prison inmates, with military veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder.

The transfer of allegiance to the veterans from the inmates, who have typically spent at least two years with the dogs, occurs over a 16-day period when the groups work together.

"It is instantaneous," said Gloria Gilbert Stoga, the founder and president of Puppies Behind Bars. "The dogs know who they are supposed to attach themselves to."

It may have something to do with the breed -- all are Labrador retrievers -- and the fact the dogs know that every executed command comes with a treat. "Ronald, you have to kibble her every time," Ms. Stoga chided a participant who forgot to reward his dog when it used a cord to open a door.

This feat and many others occurred during a training session I attended last month at Otisville Correctional Facility, a medium-security prison in Orange County.

While the dogs may not suffer much as they transfer their affections from one handler to the next, the same can't always be said for the prisoners, who have raised them since they were 8 weeks old.

"We definitely miss the dogs a lot. A lot," said Frank Conte, one of the prisoner trainers. "When we go back into the dorm at 4 p.m., all we talk about is the dogs and the vets. The guys who live with us, they love the dogs, too. A lot of guys have been in jail 30 years. They haven't seen a dog."

Fifteen inmates participate in the program at Otisville, one of five prison facilities in New York and New Jersey participating in Puppies Behind Bars. A sixth one is expected to start in October.

Inmates are selected based on their disciplinary records, nature of their crimes and prison sentence. Inmates with long sentences are preferred, Ms. Stoga said, so that they have time to learn the ropes and train the dogs.

Ms. Stoga's "classes" typically produce six dogs that are ready to be service animals. She refers to them as "geniuses," and she should know -- she owns two that failed the program. Ones that don't make the grade are held for further training or released for adoption.

Successful graduates learn over 90 commands and acquire astonishing skills, from pulling off their owner's socks and placing them in a laundry basket to waking them from post-traumatic-stress-related nightmares by turning on a closet light or pulling the sheets off their bed.

"After six to eight months, she'd be able to wake me up just by staring at me," said Ashley Crandall, a veteran with PTSD, referring to a previous service dog she owned named Jasmine.

The session I attended also included a rehearsal for the graduation ceremony and a crisp military salute from veteran and canine companion alike. Yes, the dog raises its paw to its brow.

"It takes a while," said Ibrahim Amasha, one of the inmate trainers. "Some of them it takes months."

As well trained as the dogs are, their most important quality may be companionship, something that goes beyond snuggling up next to their owners on the couch.

"She has stopped me from becoming a statistic," said Richie Bourgeois, a retired Marine Corps major who fought in Fallujah, Iraq. He was referring to his new service dog Lucy, with whom he'd developed a quick bond. Lucy sat placidly at his feet in the recreation yard, after a swim in a baby pool used as a reward for the morning's training.

Mr. Bourgeois explained that on visits to local restaurants and stores over the previous week -- that's part of the training -- he remained focused on Lucy, rather than on the perceived threats that make some people with PTSD uneasy in public places.

"Their emotions are so in tune with our emotions," he said. "If you're sad, they'll nudge you with their head."

The training also includes teaching dogs to sit behind veterans, in case they are concerned about somebody approaching from behind. The dog stands and wags its tail as a warning.

"My daughter was crying on the phone," Mr. Bourgeois said . "She knows what a change it's going to be in the whole family structure. Rather than dad being a couch potato, I have a mission now every day."

ralph.gardner@wsj.com

Credit: By Ralph Gardner Jr.

DETAILS

Subject:	Dogs; Criminal sentences; Animal training; Prisoners; Prisons; Post traumatic stress disorder; Assistance animals; Guide dogs
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92214 : Correctional Institutions
Company / organization:	Name: Puppies Behind Bars; NAICS: 812910
Classification:	92214: Correctional Institutions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.16
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546408
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-urban-gardner-dogs-sprung-after-good/docview/1820546408/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 159 of 500

World News: Putin Uses Vote to Bolster Mandate --- Russian president shrugs off steep drop in turnout; 'What is important is the result'

Ferris-Rotman, Amie . Ferris-Rotman, Amie.

ABSTRACT

Mr. Putin, who faces re-election in two years, tweaked the parliamentary election process ahead of the vote, adjustments that international observers said were designed to maintain the current order, including introducing a paramilitary force for stamping out demonstrations.

FULL TEXT

MOSCOW -- President Vladimir Putin declared victory on Sunday after Russians voted in a new parliament that maintains his ruling party's dominance, despite a sharp drop in election turnout.

Four registered parties, all broadly pro-Kremlin, were set to win places in the 450-seat Duma, or lower house of parliament, and no new parties won seats, according to preliminary results. The latest exit poll showed the ruling party, United Russia, poised to win 50.3% of the vote -- slightly more than it received in 2011 elections despite surveys showing a sharp drop in support since Russia fell into recession nearly two years ago. Election officials said final results were expected Monday.

Turnout hovered around 40% -- down from 60% in 2011 and the lowest since Russia became an independent country a quarter of a century ago -- showing palpable voter apathy, particularly in the country's biggest cities, Moscow and St. Petersburg.

"For United Russia, what is important is the result," Mr. Putin said at the party's Moscow headquarters late Sunday.

Authorities had gone to great lengths to portray a clean and transparent vote, after parliamentary elections five years ago were marred by allegations of widespread fraud and tens of thousands of people took to Moscow's streets. For Sunday's vote, hundreds of international observers were invited and the Kremlin's former human-rights ombudsman, Ella Pamfilova, was appointed to oversee it.

In remarks on state television Sunday, Ms. Pamfilova said the elections had taken place "legitimately."

Some observers and opposition groups claimed some violations such as ballot-stuffing. Ms. Pamfilova, who had pledged to step down from the Central Electoral Commission if the vote was perceived as a failure, said she was looking into allegations of fraud in the Altai region, which is sandwiched between Kazakhstan and Mongolia. The mountainous region's tally could be canceled as a result, she said.

Mr. Putin, who faces re-election in two years, tweaked the parliamentary election process ahead of the vote, adjustments that international observers said were designed to maintain the current order, including introducing a paramilitary force for stamping out demonstrations. The Kremlin also brought the vote forward from December, when urban residents more inclined to vote for opposition parties would more likely be at home and able to go to the polls instead of vacationing.

Voting also took place in Crimea, which Russia annexed from Ukraine in March 2014. International observers refused to monitor that vote: Many countries, including the U.S. and the members of the European Union, refuse to acknowledge the peninsula as part of Russia.

Voter turnout in the capital was around 20% at 3 p.m. local time, and in the St. Petersburg area, 24%. At a school in central Moscow, Antonina Akinina, a 79-year-old former doctor, complained the government's pension increase this year hardly made up for last year's 12.9% inflation rate.

"I voted for United Russia, but unfortunately everything stays the same," Ms. Akinina said. "I hope that they will wake up and they will somehow take pity on pensioners and poor people, and let us live, because everything is bad, everything is expensive."

Laura Mills contributed to this article.

Credit: By Amie Ferris-Rotman

DETAILS

Subject:	Voter behavior; Elections
Location:	Russia
People:	Putin, Vladimir
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546393

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-putin-uses-vote-bolster-mandate/docview/1820546393/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 160 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Associated Press --- BRIDGEPORT Police Misconduct Is Alleged in Suit The trial of a federal lawsuit filed by a Guatemalan man alleging police brutality and prosecutorial misconduct is scheduled to begin Wednesday in Bridgeport, Conn.

FULL TEXT

QUEENS

Off-Duty Court Officer

Shoots His Assailant

An off-duty New York state court officer shot a man trying to rob him in Queens on Sunday night, a law-enforcement official said.

The officer was working as a security guard near Merrick Boulevard and South Road when a man in his 20s displayed a weapon and tried to rob him around 8:45 p.m., the official said.

The officer fired his own gun, the official said, striking the suspect in the chest. The suspect was taken to Jamaica Hospital Medical Center and is in critical condition.

-- Zolan Kanno-Youngs

NEWARK

Separate Incidents

Leave Three Dead

Authorities say a man shot in Newark has died from his wounds, the third fatal shooting to occur in New Jersey's largest city in as many days.

Essex County prosecutors say Adam Sismour was shot early Sunday in the area of South Orange and Maybaum avenues. The 34-year-old Madison man was taken to a hospital but died there shortly before 2 a.m.

Prosecutors declined to provide further details, including what type of weapon was used. They said no arrests have been made and a motive remains under investigation.

Two Newark men were killed in the two other recent shootings. Travis Swepson, 25, was found dead Friday in a car near Concord Street and Frelinghuysen Avenue. Wyneair Grandville, 32, was killed on Mount Pleasant Avenue around 4 a.m. Saturday.

-- Associated Press

NEW YORK

Durst to Be Moved

To Indiana Prison

Real-estate heir Robert Durst, 72 years old, has been assigned to an Indiana prison with a medical unit, rather than the California prison requested because he faces a murder trial in Los Angeles, attorney Dick DeGuerin said Sunday.

Mr. Durst, serving seven years and one month after pleading guilty in New Orleans to a federal weapons charge, has been held in a jail about 25 miles from that city since April 2015. The Bureau of Prisons has assigned Mr. Durst to the federal prison in Terre Haute, Mr. DeGuerin said.

Mr. Durst is charged in California with killing Susan Berman in 2000 to keep her from talking to New York prosecutors about the disappearance of his first wife in 1982. In April, Kathleen Durst's family asked a judge in New York to declare her legally dead -- a step needed to file a wrongful-death suit against him.

When Mr. Durst was sentenced on the weapons charge in April, he denied killing the murder charge.

-- Associated Press

BRIDGEPORT

Police Misconduct

Is Alleged in Suit

The trial of a federal lawsuit filed by a Guatemalan man alleging police brutality and prosecutorial misconduct is scheduled to begin Wednesday in Bridgeport, Conn.

Santos Morales says two police officers and two state prosecutors violated his civil rights in 2008 case when he was arrested on a charge of unlawful possession of a firearm related to an incident at a Stamford restaurant. The defendants -- Officers Richard Phelan and Andrew Czubyti and prosecutors Steven Weiss and Mitchell Rubin -- deny the allegations. The officers say Mr. Morales resisted arrest.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Murders & murder attempts; Trials; Criminal sentences; Firearms; Official misconduct; Prisons; Self defense
Location:	California; New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Bureau of Prisons; NAICS: 922140; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546391
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1820546391/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 161 of 500

U.S. News: D.C. Gun Law Faces Challenges in Court

Palazzolo, Joe . Palazzolo, Joe.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The federal appeals court in the nation's capital, regarded by many as second only to the U.S. Supreme Court in stature, is slated to hear arguments in two cases Tuesday that examine the Second Amendment's reach.

FULL TEXT

The federal appeals court in the nation's capital, regarded by many as second only to the U.S. Supreme Court in stature, is slated to hear arguments in two cases Tuesday that examine the Second Amendment's reach.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit is weighing a Washington, D.C., law that requires anyone seeking a license to carry a concealed gun to show "good reason to fear injury."

Living in a high-crime neighborhood isn't reason enough, according to rules put out by D.C.'s chief of police. Applicants have to show "a special need for self-protection distinguishable from the general community," under the 2014 law.

Four federal regional appeals courts have upheld similar requirements in California, Maryland, New Jersey and New York. But they offered varying views of the Second Amendment's strength in public.

The Supreme Court has yet to review a concealed-carry case since its landmark 2008 ruling in District of Columbia v. Heller that recognized an individual's right to possess a gun for self-defense.

The D.C. cases are steered by two factions of the gun-rights movement. Alan Gura, best-known for taking the Heller case to the Supreme Court, represents the Second Amendment Foundation, a gun-rights group whose members sued the D.C. government in February 2015 to challenge its requirement that applicants for concealed-carry licenses show "good reason."

Charles Cooper, the National Rifle Association's go-to lawyer, is representing the Pink Pistols, an organization that advocates for concealed firearms for the self-defense of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community. The group filed a similar challenge in December 2015.

Members of both the Pink Pistols and the Second Amendment Foundation applied for licenses to carry concealed guns and were denied for failing to show good reason to fear injury.

Mr. Cooper called the demand "categorically irreconcilable with the Second Amendment" in an August brief filed in the D.C. Circuit.

D.C. Attorney General Karl A. Racine has defended the law as "reasonable and necessary to ensure public safety in a dense urban area."

The lawsuits met separate fates. U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly ruled against the Second Amendment Foundation in March, prompting Mr. Gura's appeal to the D.C. Circuit.

In a separate court, U.S. District Judge Richard Leon ruled in favor of Pink Pistols, suspending the concealed-carry law in a May order and forcing the D.C. government to appeal.

Credit: By Joe Palazzolo

DETAILS

Subject:	Firearm laws & regulations; Self defense; Firearms; Litigation; State court decisions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546352
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-d-c-gun-law-faces-challenges-court/docview/1820546352/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 162 of 500

U.S. News: Rampage Probed In Philadelphia

Calvert, Scott; Campo-Flores, Arian . Calvert, Scott; Campo-Flores, Arian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In a "rambling" letter marked "Doomed People" found by police on Glenn, the shooter indicated "his hatred for police officers and probation officers," said Philadelphia Police Commissioner Richard Ross, who added that there was no sign that religious beliefs played a role. Because the letter consisted of a "a bunch of rantings," Commissioner Ross said police may never know what truly motivated the shootings.

FULL TEXT

Police searched for clues over the weekend on the possible motivations of the shooter who attacked police officers and others in Philadelphia on Friday, killing one woman and wounding five.

The assailant, identified as Nicholas Glenn, 25 years old, was fatally shot by police. His rampage left five people hospitalized, including one man in critical condition and four others, including two officers, in stable condition. The woman who was killed, a 25-year-old civilian, was shot multiple times in the torso while sitting in a car, police said.

In a "rambling" letter marked "Doomed People" found by police on Glenn, the shooter indicated "his hatred for police officers and probation officers," said Philadelphia Police Commissioner Richard Ross, who added that there was no sign that religious beliefs played a role. Because the letter consisted of a "a bunch of rantings," Commissioner Ross said police may never know what truly motivated the shootings.

After the episode, Commissioner Ross ordered all Philadelphia police officers to work in pairs. The department made the same change temporarily after the ambush of Officer Jesse Hartnett in January.

The commissioner said he thinks Glenn acted alone and added that the shooter was "well known" to police, but he didn't elaborate further.

"Obviously he was hellbent on hurting a lot of people," Commissioner Ross said. He said the shooter fired a 9mm Ruger dozens of times over a roughly four-block stretch of West Philadelphia, starting with 18 rounds directed at the marked patrol car of Sgt. Sylvia Young of the Philadelphia Police Department.

"She was struck quite a few times," Commissioner Ross said. "Fortunately at least one or two were lodged in her ballistic vest. She took some rounds to the arm."

The gunman was killed after being confronted in an alley by law enforcement, including Officer Eddie Miller of the University of Pennsylvania police department. The incident began about a dozen blocks west of the Penn campus, and Officer Miller was responding to a request for assistance when he was shot.

The attack in Philadelphia comes after deadly assaults on police in Dallas and Baton Rouge, La., this summer. In Phoenix on Tuesday, three officers were targeted by a driver who ran them down in front of a convenience store, officials said. The officers survived.

In West Philadelphia in January, Officer Hartnett survived after being shot multiple times while in his police car. Edward Archer, who faces attempted murder and other charges, told detectives he was inspired by the terror group Islamic State, according to police.

On Friday night, police said, Sgt. Young, 46, was sitting in a marked police cruiser at 52nd and Sansom streets around 11:20 p.m. when Glenn walked up and began shooting at the driver's side without saying a word.

"It is absolutely miraculous that she's alive," Commissioner Ross said.

After wounding Sgt. Young in the left shoulder, arm and torso, Glenn ran, pursued by officers who heard the gunfire. He fired about five rounds into the doorway of a bar, striking the bar's manager and an employee, according to police.

Glenn continued to flee and then opened fire on a man and woman in a Nissan Altima, striking the man in his arm and chest and the woman multiple times in her chest, police said. The woman was pronounced dead early Saturday.

Credit: By Scott Calvert and Arian Campo-Flores

DETAILS

Subject:	Criminal investigations; Shootings; Murders & murder attempts; Police; Deadly force
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	Philadelphia Pennsylvania; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-Philadelphia PA; NAICS: 922120
Product name:	Nissan Altima
Classification:	92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546333
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-rampage-probed-philadelphia/docview/1820546333/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 163 of 500

U.S. News: Baltimore Struggles to Oust Monuments to Confederates

Calvert, Scott . Calvert, Scott.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The commission recommends offering the Lee and Jackson monument to the National Park Service for the Chancellorsville, Va., Civil War battlefield historic site.

FULL TEXT

BALTIMORE -- Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake, facing a city commission recommendation to move a prominent Confederate monument from a public park, is having trouble finding a taker.

The issue centers on an equestrian statue of generals Robert E. Lee and Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson -- as well a second statue pegged for removal, of Roger Brooke Taney, a Supreme Court chief justice who, while not a Confederate himself, wrote the pro-slavery Dred Scott decision in 1857.

"She wants to find an appropriate place for those monuments, if she decides to go ahead and remove them," said her spokesman, Anthony McCarthy. "It hasn't been as easy, to be honest, as we thought."

The seven-person Special Commission to Review Baltimore's Public Confederate Monuments, which was created by the mayor after a shooting at a historically African-American church in South Carolina and includes academics and members of the city's public art commission, examined four sculptures. In January, it recommended keeping two, the Confederate Soldiers and Sailors Monument and the Confederate Women's Monument, while adding new signage for historical context, and removing the other two. The city released its full report Wednesday.

Though Ms. Rawlings-Blake says she hasn't made a final decision, for now she wants the commission to develop new signs for all four pieces that explain the historical backdrop. "We certainly should work to interpret it for today's context," she said.

Opposing any change is the Maryland Division of the Sons of Confederate Veterans. "We believe that's part of our history and it should remain," said its leader, Commander Terry Klima.

Fitz Brundage, chairman of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill history department, noted that the U.S. has a plethora of Confederate monuments. North Carolina has more than 175, he said, while, in contrast, fewer than 25 statues stand in honor of African-Americans. The idea that removing the two Baltimore monuments would erase history is a "grotesque exaggeration of what's going on," he said.

The 1887 Taney statue is in a park in the Mount Vernon neighborhood, feet from the city's soaring Washington Monument.

The Lee and Jackson monument is a relative newcomer, dedicated in 1948 on parkland near Johns Hopkins University. The statue was financed by a banker who saw the men as childhood heroes, according to the commission. "Why would you have monuments to Lee and Jackson in Baltimore?" Mr. Brundage asked, calling the two men traitors to the U.S.

Mr. McCarthy said city officials have approached Confederate groups, but said they either can't afford to take the monuments or don't want them to leave their present locations. He declined to name them; Mr. Klima said his organization hasn't been approached.

The commission recommends offering the Lee and Jackson monument to the National Park Service for the Chancellorsville, Va., Civil War battlefield historic site. The monument depicts the generals on horseback before the 1863 battle.

Baltimore has yet to offer it, and such a transfer to a Civil War battlefield hasn't happened in at least 20 years, said John Hennessy, chief historian at the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park in Virginia, about 10 miles east of Chancellorsville.

Nor do park service policies appear to allow it. The service won't acquire historic structures for relocation to parks "unless those structures were removed from the park and are necessary to achieve the park purpose or authorized legislation," its rules state.

Ms. Rawlings-Blake's spokesman said she expects to resolve the issue before she leaves office Dec. 6.

In Taney's home state of Maryland, which remained in the Union despite many residents supporting the Confederacy during the Civil War, elected officials have targeted two other statues of the oft-maligned jurist.

In Frederick, Md., this week, the historic preservation commission is scheduled to consider a request by city officials to relocate the Taney statue now standing outside City Hall.

Cities around the U.S., primarily in the South, are wrestling with whether to keep Confederate monuments that many view as racist symbols but others consider part of history.

In the Northern Virginia city of Alexandria, the City Council voted unanimously Saturday to rename Jefferson Davis Highway. Councilwoman Redella Pepper said it is "offensive" to honor the president of the Confederacy. A replacement wasn't chosen, but one possibility under consideration is to name it for American Revolution-era leader Patrick Henry.

The council also voted to ask the Virginia legislature for permission to move a Confederate statue from the center of a busy intersection.

(See related letters: "Letters to the Editor: Removing Monuments and American History" -- WSJ Oct. 4, 2016)

Credit: By Scott Calvert

DETAILS

Subject:	National parks; American Civil War; Memorials & monuments; History; Battlefields; Parks & recreation areas; Sculpture
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71212 : Historical Sites 71219 : Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions
Location:	Baltimore Maryland; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Sons of Confederate Veterans Inc; NAICS: 813410
Classification:	71212: Historical Sites; 71219: Nature Parks and Other Similar Institutions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546306
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-baltimore-struggles-oust-monuments/docview/1820546306/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-09-30

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 164 of 500

City News: Republican Club At Cornell Causes Rift With Pick

Vilensky, Mike . Vilensky, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On the heels of endorsing a libertarian candidate over Donald Trump, the Cornell University College Republican Club is fighting its expulsion from its parent organization, the New York Federation of College Republicans.

FULL TEXT

On the heels of endorsing a libertarian candidate over Donald Trump, the Cornell University College Republican Club is fighting its expulsion from its parent organization, the New York Federation of College Republicans.

The Cornell club issued an appeal last week to the College Republican National Committee, a national conservative organization that oversees the New York Federation, to have its credentials reinstated, and threatened legal action.

The appeal marks the latest twist in a heated intraparty battle that began when the 70-member Cornell club endorsed Libertarian Party presidential candidate and former New Mexico Gov. Gary Johnson in a Facebook post earlier this month. It was subsequently booted from the New York Federation, a political-action committee that organizes and helps fund conservative campus groups in the Empire State.

"Our free-speech rights were trampled on," said Olivia Corn, the 19-year old Cornell sophomore who leads the Cornell Republicans.

In its own Facebook post on the matter, the New York Federation said it is "unacceptable. . .to use a party-affiliated organization as a tool to support another party's candidate."

Hope Hicks, a spokeswoman for the Trump campaign, said she is "not aware of any of this."

In its appeal to be reinstated, the Cornell club notes the federation president at the time of its expulsion, New York University student Eli Nachmany, works for the Trump campaign.

A spokeswoman for the New York Federation, State University of New York student Maria Gershuni, said Friday that Mr. Nachmany has stepped down from the group to focus on electing Mr. Trump.

She declined to say if the appeal sparked his departure.

Mr. Nachmany confirmed he is no longer the president.

Ms. Gershuni said the New York Federation will consider reinstating the Cornell club in the coming weeks, but she added that "no reasonable judge would ever hear" the case the Cornell club is threatening.

In response to Cornell's appeal, Alexandra Smith, chair of the College Republican National Committee, said the state federations "are responsible for recognizing and governing over their constituent chapters."

Ms. Corn of the Cornell GOP club said the decision to go with Mr. Johnson was made by the club's student board after an informal Facebook poll showed more of its members supported no candidate running over anyone else. Another poll they conducted after that one, Ms. Corn said, showed Mr. Johnson had more support than Mr. Trump or Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton among likely voters in their club.

The group wrote in its endorsement that Mr. Johnson's demeanor, fiscal policies and stance toward the military are more conservative than Mr. Trump's.

"Mr. Trump should not be the face of American conservatism," the group wrote of the New York businessman who has riven the Republican establishment with his unorthodox campaign.

Joe Hunter, the communications director for the Johnson campaign, said the campaign was "proud of these young people."

"[They] have taken a courageous stand, and should be commended, not persecuted, for thinking for themselves and acting on principle," Mr. Hunter said. "We need more of that in politics."

Credit: By Mike Vilensky

DETAILS

Subject:	Endorsements; Presidential elections; Political campaigns; Candidates; Colleges & universities
-----------------	--

Business indexing term:	Subject: Colleges & universities; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 61131 : Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
--------------------------------	--

People:	Hicks, Hope; Trump, Donald J; Clinton, Hillary Rodham
Company / organization:	Name: Facebook Inc; NAICS: 516210, 518210; Name: College Republican National Committee; NAICS: 813940; Name: State University of New York; NAICS: 611310; Name: New York University; NAICS: 611310; Name: Libertarian Party-US; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 61131: Colleges, Universities, and Professional Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546300
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-republican-club-at-cornell-causes-rift/docview/1820546300/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-06-24
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Leaders Struggle to Unite After Blast

Vilensky, Mike; Dawsey, Josh . Vilensky, Mike; Dawsey, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Matthew Miller, a spokesman for the Justice Department under former Attorney General Eric Holder, said city and state officials have appeared together in New York before, on incidents like the Times Square bomb plot in 2010, with some tensions "on what to say, and when to say it."

FULL TEXT

After a bomb exploded in Manhattan on Saturday night, Gov. Andrew Cuomo and Mayor Bill de Blasio held separate press events and described the blast in terms that appeared at odds.

The two Democrats also tried to present a united front on Sunday, apparently worried about the political damage of letting a personal feud spill over into a public crisis.

"When New Yorkers' safety and lives are at stake, public officials need to stand together as one," said Karen Hinton, a consultant who recently served as Mr. de Blasio's press secretary and once worked for Mr. Cuomo. "New Yorkers want to see them working together, not separately. It makes a frightening event even more so."

Aides to both men, who have long worried about their quarrels damaging their public standing, played down any tensions. Spokesmen for the mayor and the governor said there was consistent communication.

But there were differences. Mr. de Blasio held a Saturday night news conference without the governor and said the explosion didn't appear connected to terrorism.

On Sunday morning, Mr. Cuomo said at his own news conference, without the mayor, that "a bomb exploding in New York is obviously an act of terrorism." A Cuomo spokesman said Mr. de Blasio was invited to the event.

Mr. Cuomo said he believed Mr. de Blasio had intended to say the explosion didn't appear connected to "international terrorism." But Mr. de Blasio didn't seem to agree with the governor on this.

"To understand if there were any specific motivations, political motivations, any connections to an organization, that's what we don't know," Mr. de Blasio said later.

Mr. Cuomo said he would send 1,000 new state troopers and members of the National Guard into the city. City Hall aides have previously grown testy when Mr. Cuomo moved to send additional officers into the city, with the NYPD having 35,000 already.

Mr. Cuomo has big-footed the mayor in past times of crisis. He closed the city's subways during a snowstorm last year, giving City Hall a 15-minute warning. The two men sparred over an outbreak of Legionnaire's Disease in the Bronx last year, holding simultaneous news conferences, and Mr. Cuomo promised to take charge of the problem, angering City Hall aides.

Matthew Miller, a spokesman for the Justice Department under former Attorney General Eric Holder, said city and state officials have appeared together in New York before, on incidents like the Times Square bomb plot in 2010, with some tensions "on what to say, and when to say it." But the briefings had eventually been joint ones.

"You get on the same page and you go out there together," Mr. Miller said. "When you're doing things separately to serve your own interests, it puts everything at risk, particularly when a suspect is still on the loose."

Messrs. de Blasio and Cuomo announced their separate events Sunday morning but added a joint neighborhood tour after receiving criticism on social media and from advisers.

They briefly hugged before walking around the site in Chelsea. Councilman Corey Johnson, who joined them, said they were joking and laughing with residents.

"I think they were trying to put politics aside," he said.

Credit: By Mike Vilensky and Josh Dawsey

DETAILS

Subject:	Mayors; Governors; Press conferences; Legionnaires' disease
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Holder, Eric H Jr
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.17
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546238
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-leaders-struggle-unite-after-blast/docview/1820546238/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-12-13
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 166 of 500

U.S. News: New Mexico Police Shooting Trial to Start

Frosch, Dan; Elinson, Zusha . Frosch, Dan; Elinson, Zusha.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to Ms. McGinn, the case represents the first time in more than 50 years that an Albuquerque police officer has been tried for a shooting while on the job.

FULL TEXT

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. -- In a case that shook this city, two former Albuquerque police officers are scheduled to stand trial this week for the 2014 shooting death of a mentally ill homeless man.

The case is the latest example of officers being prosecuted for excessive force as police across the nation face growing scrutiny, especially regarding the treatment of minorities. Protests over the issue roiled American cities this summer, and police officers were attacked and killed in Dallas and Baton Rouge, La.

The New Mexico case didn't stoke racial tension, but the killing spurred widespread protests here, and was one of the first use-of-force incidents to capture national attention in recent years. Soon after, police killings in Ferguson, Mo.; Chicago and elsewhere launched an era of discontent with law enforcement that swept the U.S.

In the Albuquerque case, former detective Keith Sandy and Special Weapons and Tactics officer Dominique Perez face second-degree murder charges in the fatal shooting of James Boyd, who had been illegally camping in the foothills around Albuquerque when he was confronted by police.

If convicted, both men face up to 15 years in prison.

The shooting was captured on Mr. Perez's helmet camera and appeared to show Mr. Boyd, 38 years old, walking away when police fired at him. Mr. Boyd brandished two knives during the standoff, but prosecutors allege he wasn't a threat to the officers when he was shot and was attempting to heed their orders.

Messrs. Sandy and Perez have plead not guilty. Their lawyers have said the two officers were protecting a K-9 officer who was near Mr. Boyd and in danger during the encounter.

"Because of the threat that Mr. Boyd posed to the dog handler, Keith Sandy not only had the right, but the duty to shoot Mr. Boyd," said Sam Bregman, Mr. Sandy's lawyer.

Mr. Boyd's death prompted protests in the spring of 2014 in Albuquerque, and came as the city's police department faced criticism over a flurry of other police shootings.

Kari Brandenburg, the district attorney for Bernalillo County, opted to pursue charges against Mr. Sandy and Mr. Perez without taking the case to a grand jury, saying the evidence should be aired in open court. In August 2015, a state judge ruled there was enough probable cause to move forward with a trial.

In a recent court filing, Randi McGinn, the special prosecutor handling the case, said that because the officers were the aggressors, "neither defendant is entitled to claim they acted in defense of another officer when they shot Mr. Boyd as he turned to lie on the ground."

Luis Robles, a lawyer for Mr. Perez, countered in court filings that because the two officers essentially fired simultaneously, it shows "that both were firing in response to the perceived threat by Mr. Boyd."

According to Ms. McGinn, the case represents the first time in more than 50 years that an Albuquerque police officer has been tried for a shooting while on the job.

The number of police being charged by prosecutors has been on the rise, data shows.

Eighteen officers were charged with murder or manslaughter in fatal on-duty shootings in 2015 -- the most in any year going back a decade, according to research by Philip Stinson, an associate professor of criminal justice at Bowling Green State University in Ohio. The cases still represent a tiny fraction of all police shootings.

In the previous decade, an average of about five officers were charged each year in such cases, according to Dr. Stinson. Nine have been charged in such cases so far in 2016.

In 2015, the city also reached a $5 million settlement with the family of Mr. Boyd. Mr. Perez was fired last year after the judge ruled the case should go to trial, and Mr. Sandy retired from the force in 2014. Both men also face voluntary manslaughter charges in the case. Mr. Sandy is also charged with aggravated battery.

Credit: By Dan Frosch and Zusha Elinson

DETAILS

Subject:	Manslaughter; Trials; Murders & murder attempts; Deadly force; Police shootings
Location:	New Mexico; United States--US
People:	Perez, Dominique; Sandy, Keith
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820546231
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-new-mexico-police-shooting-trial-start/docview/1820546231/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2022-11-19
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 167 of 500

Trends (A Special Report) --- The New Fashion Mantra for Office Attire: Comfort: As the line blurs between our professional and personal lives, so have the clothes we wear

Binkley, Christina . Binkley, Christina.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Milan and Paris runways in recent seasons have featured pajamas as evening wear, track pants made of fine silk and Adidas-style athletic slides with fur. Improvements in textile manufacturing have turned poly into a luxury fabric, useful in everything from haute-couture dresses to breathable, moisture-wicking running clothes.

FULL TEXT

Corrections & Amplifications

Christina Binkley, who wrote an article about office attire in Monday's Trends report, is a news editor for The Wall Street Journal in Los Angeles. She was incorrectly described as being based in New York in contact information accompanying the article.

(WSJ Sept. 20, 2016)

Debra Bar is head of marketing at Bank Leumi in New York, but her office wear these days doesn't scream "bank executive." She has purged her closet of business suits, replacing them with colorful dresses that she enjoys wearing more. Her heels are gathering dust in a desk drawer while she dons flat shoes, and even sneakers, since injuring her knee.

"No one really notices that I'm not wearing heels every day," she says. "As long as you look nice, no one cares anymore. There's no dress code."

So what are you wearing today? Chances are, you are feeling more relaxed in your clothing than you were just five years ago. Sneakers are chic and are being worn under everything from pinstriped suits to bridal gowns. Women's evening-wear labels such as Sachin & Babi are revamping their collections to include separates, slacks and flat shoes. Remember the button-down news anchor? NBC's Matt Lauer didn't even bother wearing socks on set to interview Ryan Lochte in August.

Styles and fabrics have taken so sharp a turn toward comfort that fashions may never entirely turn back again.

"People expect comfort," says Caroline Belhumeur, creative director for the apparel label Club Monaco. "It's not like in the '80s when people were stuffing themselves into blazers and stilettos and hobbling around."

Athleisure seemed to be just a fad when athletically styled fashions were introduced as daywear a few years ago. It quickly zoomed from wearing Lululemon to the supermarket to wearing a Gucci sweatshirt to the office. The styles began eating into the denim market, formerly the bastion of casual. Milan and Paris runways in recent seasons have featured pajamas as evening wear, track pants made of fine silk and Adidas-style athletic slides with fur.

This shift has moved beyond athletically inspired looks. Added stretch is making some men's suiting more forgiving.

"When you move your arm, you want your blazer to move with you," says Ms. Belhumeur.

The men's luxury label Berluti, owned by France's LVMH, recently named a new creative director, Haider Ackermann, and charged him with making the label more casual. The brand's chief executive, Antoine Arnault, noted that casual clothing is outselling "sartorial" tailored clothing across the board.

All this highlights fundamental changes in our culture. People who are never disconnected from work thanks to modern technology are melding their professional and personal lives in many ways -- and what they wear is a reflection of that. It is impacting how people dress for places and events where dressy, uncomfortable apparel was once the norm -- like the office. Or the opera.

There's less separation between weekday and weekend clothing these days, says Roopal Patel, fashion director of Saks Fifth Avenue. "We've started to see a shift in how our customers are getting dressed every single day."

These changes wouldn't be happening without vast improvements in polyester, a fabric whose name was once synonymous with "ick." Improvements in textile manufacturing have turned poly into a luxury fabric, useful in everything from haute-couture dresses to breathable, moisture-wicking running clothes.

People in their 20s and 30s are particularly adamant about comfortable clothing. Eunice Cho, 31 years old, founded Los Angeles-based Aella after attending UCLA's business school and interviewing for jobs.

"All the business options out there were really uncomfortable and so expensive," Ms. Cho says. "I was like, why wouldn't people want to wear comfortable clothes when they're at work?"

Aella makes suiting and other office-ready looks from fabrics that feel like yoga wear but look more polished. Launched in 2014, the label is carried at stores including Bloomingdales and sold online.

Ministry -- which recently changed its name from Ministry of Supply and launched a womenswear line -- was created five years ago by three former MIT students who asked: "Why can't the clothes we wear every day be as comfortable as the clothes we work out in?"

A Kickstarter campaign to make a men's dress shirt with moisture-wicking, four-way stretch four years ago aimed to raise $30,000. It raised $430,000, selling 8,000 shirts the first month. The brand now makes shirts, suits and other apparel that look like traditional office fare, but could be worn for yoga, calling its category "performance professional clothes." Co-founder Gihan Amarasiriwardena last December ran a half-marathon in Boston wearing a Ministry suit -- a buttoned jacket, shirt and tie.

Clothing's symbolism has shifted, too, as people don hoodies and track jackets rather than suit jackets. Sport coats, once an essential part of a professional man's daily wardrobe, now carry a new significance in some circles.

Derek Guy, a 37-year-old graduate student in political science at the University of California, Berkeley, says he wore sport coats routinely when he was in his 20s as a way to signal his cool style. These days, very few young men wear sport coats in the classes he teaches. The few who do, he says, "come off as slightly dorky" and "pretentious."

Ms. Binkley is a news editor for The Wall Street Journal in New York. Email her at christina.binkley@wsj.com.

Credit: By Christina Binkley

DETAILS

Subject:	Clothing; Athletic shoes; Series & special reports; Trends
Business indexing term:	Industry: 31621 : Footwear Manufacturing 31525 : Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
Location:	New York; Los Angeles California; United States--US
People:	Lochte, Ryan; Arnault, Antoine; Belhumeur, Caroline; Lauer, Matt
Company / organization:	Name: Adidas AG; NAICS: 315250, 316210, 339920; Name: Club Monaco; NAICS: 458110
Classification:	31621: Footwear Manufacturing; 31525: Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	R.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 19, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820545500
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trends-special-report-new-fashion-mantra-office/docview/1820545500/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 168 of 500

U.S. News: Clinical-Trial Rules Take Aim At Transparency

Burton, Thomas M . Burton, Thomas M.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A rule published Friday from the Department of Health and Human Services will expand the requirements for clinical trials' publication to include most studies of products not yet licensed by the Food and Drug Administration.

FULL TEXT

Federal health officials will soon require scientists and companies to make public more details of a broader range of medical research studies, even if the results are disappointing to the researchers or to companies sponsoring the research.

A rule published Friday from the Department of Health and Human Services will expand the requirements for clinical trials' publication to include most studies of products not yet licensed by the Food and Drug Administration.

Bolstered by a companion policy announced Friday by the National Institutes of Health, the government beginning next year will require more types of bad side effects to be reported and will set out legal penalties for scientists or companies that don't comply.

The NIH will now plan to cut off future research funding to institutions that don't comply.

Francis S. Collins, NIH director, said that while there are more than 224,000 clinical studies listed on the website ClinicalTrials.gov, researchers have "a disappointing track record" in making the results of studies available when the results are unfavorable. He called this situation "simply not acceptable."

The NIH's complementary policy will apply to all NIH-funded studies. The NIH will generally require that results of such research be posted on ClinicalTrials.gov, and Dr. Collins said failure to do so "may jeopardize future grant funding" for the university or institution, not just the individual researcher. The idea, he said, is to "maximize the value of clinical trials."

Dr. Collins said one of the factors leading to Friday's announcement was Vice President Joe Biden's Cancer Moonshot effort to encourage faster cures for cancer.

Mr. Biden has spoken extensively, and passionately, about the need for scientists to make their research findings broadly and quickly available to other researchers and patients.

Jerry Avorn, a Harvard University medical professor and chief of pharmacoepidemiology at Brigham and Women's Hospital, called the steps "an important and much-needed development."

He added, "most people don't realize that if a company runs a clinical study of a drug and finds that it doesn't work, or that it has dangerous side effects, until now it's been possible for them to bury those findings and never let them see the light of day."

The Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, an industry group, didn't immediately respond to calls for comment.

FDA Commissioner Robert M. Califf said researchers generally will need to post the original protocols for their research, a move that could discourage redefining the goals if answers are deemed unfavorable.

The clinical studies at issue in the HHS rule will generally include research that evaluates drugs, medical devices or biological products that will be regulated by the FDA.

(See related letter: "Letters to the Editor: Include Relevant Autopsies In Drug and Therapy Trials" -- WSJ Sept. 23, 2016)

DETAILS

Subject:	Medical research; Clinical trials; Pharmaceutical industry; Alliances
Business indexing term:	Subject: Pharmaceutical industry; Industry: 32541 : Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
People:	Biden, Joseph R Jr
Classification:	32541: Pharmaceutical and Medicine Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821720502
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-clinical-trial-rules-take-aim-at/docview/1821720502/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2024-08-26

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 169 of 500

City News: State Tells EPA GE's Cleanup Isn't Finished

Mann, Ted . Mann, Ted.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman asked the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to postpone the formal completion of General Electric Co.'s $1.6 billion cleanup of the upper Hudson River, saying the agency has yet to prove whether dredging the river is working.

FULL TEXT

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman asked the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to postpone the formal completion of General Electric Co.'s $1.6 billion cleanup of the upper Hudson River, saying the agency has yet to prove whether dredging the river is working.

In a letter sent Friday to Judith Enck, regional administrator of the EPA, attorneys from Mr. Schneiderman's office said the agency should delay awarding a "certificate of completion" to GE for the dredging work. Instead, they argued, the EPA should conduct new studies of fish in the Hudson to determine how much of GE's pollution remains in the river and how long it will be before humans can safely eat fish from the river again.

Mr. Schneiderman's letter is the second unanticipated missive in the past month from New York's state government to the EPA suggesting that GE should do more to clean up the carcinogenic polychlorinated biphenyls, or PCBs, that it dumped into the river for decades, ending in the late 1970s. In August, Basil Seggos, head of the state Department of Environmental Conservation, wrote to the EPA that GE's "work is not done" removing PCBs from the riverbed.

Both GE and the EPA say the company has completed one of the most complex environmental cleanups in U.S. history, encompassing six seasons of dredging over seven years, after years of contentious negotiations between the company and the government.

In a statement, a GE spokesman said New York officials had approved and overseen "every major decision about the dredging project," and said that tests for PCBs in the upper Hudson River have shown "significant declines" since dredging ended last October.

"We're confident that the assessment will show the dredging project achieved the agency's goals of protecting public health and the environment," the statement read. "When we have completed our decommissioning obligations later this year, we expect the project to be declared complete."

The attorney general's letter comes as the EPA is preparing to issue the certificate of completion. That step is important, said Ned Sullivan, president of Scenic Hudson, a group that advocates greater cleanup of the river, because issuing the certificate would mean that the EPA relinquishes its ability to require GE to conduct more cleanup work in the river.

Mr. Sullivan said he met in July with Bill Mulrow, Mr. Cuomo's secretary, and Mr. Seggos to press the case for state action before the certificate of completion is granted.

"They're leaving much more extensive contamination than was expected," Mr. Sullivan said.

An EPA spokeswoman didn't immediately respond to a request for comment. The agency has called the project a success, though it says it will be decades before PCB levels decline in the Hudson River's fish.

The EPA contests a set of findings issued last year by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration that found that PCBs would linger for decades longer than previously suspected in the Hudson and its fish.

Credit: By Ted Mann

DETAILS

Subject:	Polychlorinated biphenyls--PCB; Government agencies; Environmental protection; Attorneys general; Dredging
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92411 : Administration of Air and Water Resource and Solid Waste Management Programs 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	Hudson River; New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Scenic Hudson; NAICS: 813410; Name: Environmental Protection Agency--EPA; NAICS: 924110
Classification:	92411: Administration of Air and Water Resource and Solid Waste Management Programs; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821720305
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-state-tells-epa-ges-cleanup-isnt/docview/1821720305/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, I nc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 170 of 500

City News: Greater New York Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Library officials said the Mid-Manhattan branch's primary functions, such as circulating collections and computer stations, would be relocated to the library's flagship, the Stephen A. Schwarzman building.

FULL TEXT

NEW YORK

Renovations to Close

Library Next Fall

The New York Public Library's Mid-Manhattan branch on East 40th Street and Fifth Avenue will temporarily close next fall as the library prepares for a planned renovation.

Construction on the shopworn circulating branch is scheduled to begin in 2018; schematic designs are expected later this year. The building is set to reopen in 2019. New York City has allocated $150 million to renovate the circulating library.

Library officials said the Mid-Manhattan branch's primary functions, such as circulating collections and computer stations, would be relocated to the library's flagship, the Stephen A. Schwarzman building. Other services, including IDNYC, will be moved to nearby branches around Midtown.

-- Jennifer Smith

EDISON, N.J.

Officers Plead Guilty

In Retaliation Scheme

Four New Jersey police officers have pleaded guilty to scheming to retaliate against an officer from another department because he arrested one of their relatives for drunken driving.

The four Edison officers face probation after pleading guilty Friday as jury selection was underway in their trial. They had to forfeit their jobs and promptly resigned. They won't be allowed to hold public jobs in the state.

-- Associated Press

MONTCLAIR

N.J. School Renamed

For Astronaut

A New Jersey school was renamed after a famous astronaut.

Montclair's Mt. Hebron Middle School on Friday became the Buzz Aldrin Middle School.

The alumnus, also a West Point and MIT graduate, reminisced as he credited his experience at the school with fueling his interest in science and math.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Middle schools; Libraries; Astronauts; Criminal pleas
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92711 : Space Research and Technology 51921 : Libraries and Archives 61111 : Elementary and Secondary Schools
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Aldrin, Buzz; Schwarzman, Stephen A
Company / organization:	Name: Massachusetts Institute of Technology; NAICS: 611310; Name: Public Library-New York City NY; NAICS: 519210; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	92711: Space Research and Technology; 51921: Libraries and Archives; 61111: Elementary and Secondary Schools
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821719879
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-greater-new-york-watch/docview/1821719879/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2023-01-20
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 171 of 500

U.S. News: Household Net Worth Rises to Record

Zumbrun, Josh . Zumbrun, Josh.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The latest snapshot of American wealth, released Friday by the Federal Reserve, marked the third straight quarter in which household wealth reached a new high, generally driven by a strong stock market and rising home values. Since the first quarter of this year, wealth in stocks and real-estate equity increased half a trillion dollars each, according to the central bank's quarterly report measuring the aggregate wealth of U.S. households and nonprofit organizations.

FULL TEXT

U.S. households collectively reached a record net worth of $89.1 trillion in the second quarter, but behind that improvement were a wide range of outcomes for households digging out of an economic downturn over the past decade.

The latest snapshot of American wealth, released Friday by the Federal Reserve, marked the third straight quarter in which household wealth reached a new high, generally driven by a strong stock market and rising home values. Since the first quarter of this year, wealth in stocks and real-estate equity increased half a trillion dollars each, according to the central bank's quarterly report measuring the aggregate wealth of U.S. households and nonprofit organizations.

The data underscore the U.S. economy's round trip over the past decade, from a housing bubble to a deep recession to a long and slow recovery that, while impressive in aggregate, has left many households behind.

"The winners in recent years aren't the same people who lost out in the crash," said Ian Shepherdson, chief economist at Pantheon Macroeconomics.

Home prices peaked in 2006 and stocks peaked in 2007. Both plunged sharply as the U.S. collapsed into recession at the end of 2007.

But for those who held on through the crisis, prices have gradually rebounded in recent years. Stocks began to climb sharply in 2009 and by 2013 household wealth in stocks had reached a new peak.

Household net worth is the sum of all assets, such as homes, stocks, bonds, vehicles and cash, minus all debts like mortgages, credit cards, student loans and auto loans.

The Fed's report provides no information about how assets are distributed among households, but a relatively modest share of the stock market is owned by middle-income households. Edward Wolff, an economist at New York University, has estimated that as of 2013, about 90% of stocks and mutual funds were owned by the wealthiest 10% of households.

Much of the middle-class stock wealth that does exist is tied up in retirement accounts, which are considered indirect holdings and may be largely off limits for years or decades.

Home equity, however, is a different story. Mr. Wolff estimates 60% of the wealth in principal residences is held by those outside the top 10%. While the homeownership rate has declined in recent years, about 63% of homes still are owner-occupied.

Those homeowners "benefit from a broad increase in home values -- homes are much more broadly owned by the middle class than stocks," said Frank Nothaft, chief economist of real-estate-data provider CoreLogic.

Yet even among homeowners, not everyone has benefited evenly from the recovery.

More than three million homeowners remain underwater on their mortgages, according to CoreLogic data. At the worst part of the housing bust, nearly 12 million were underwater, meaning they owed more on their mortgages than their homes were worth.

Some families have seen price increases and mortgage payments push them back into positive territory. CoreLogic estimates that about 548,000 homeowners regained equity in the second quarter. Other families, however, lost their homes to foreclosures. RealtyTrac estimates that in 2009, a record 2.1 million foreclosures were initiated.

In many of the cities that experienced the largest housing bubble, home prices remain far below levels once seen. Home prices in Las Vegas are down 36% from their record, according to the Case-Shiller home-price index, for example. In Phoenix, prices are nearly 30% below their peaks. Home prices in Miami remain nearly 25% lower. Cities with home prices that have fully recovered from the crisis and gone on to set new records include Dallas; Denver; Charlotte, N.C.; and San Francisco.

Also contributing to household net worth is an increase in the deposits U.S. households keep at banks. Deposits, such as checking and savings accounts, were a record $10.9 trillion in the second quarter.

Credit: By Josh Zumbrun

DETAILS

Subject:	Family income; Stock exchanges; Economists; Equity; Securities markets; Housing prices; Recessions; Foreclosure; Households
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Economists Equity Securities markets Housing prices Recessions Foreclosure; Corporation : CoreLogic; Industry: 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Co mpany Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821719716
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-household-net-worth-rises-record/docview/1821719716/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

City News: N.J. Lawmaker Has Plan to End Road Impasse

King, Kate . King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Christie has said he won't sign off on a gas tax increase without a significant tax reduction elsewhere, and supports an Assembly-approved bill that would lower the state sales tax to 6% from 7%.

FULL TEXT

With a shutdown of transportation work in New Jersey stretching into its third month, a state legislator has proposed borrowing $3.2 billion to pay for road-and-bridge repair for the next two years.

Gov. Chris Christie ordered a stop to $3.5 billion of nonessential transit projects after the state's transportation trust fund authorization expired on June 30. Mr. Christie, a Republican, and the Democratic-controlled Legislature have been unable to reach an agreement to pay for state transportation projects. The stalemate has angered out-of-work construction workers, contractors and local officials who want road work to resume.

On Friday, Assemblyman John Wisniewski said he had introduced a bill to allow the state to borrow $1.6 billion a year until Mr. Christie, who is barred by term limits from seeking a third term, leaves office in January 2018.

New Jersey has spent $1.6 billion annually on its transportation capital program since 2007.

"Hopefully we'll have a more rational occupant of the governor's office beginning in January of 2018 and we can put together a long-term transportation trust fund program then," said Mr. Wisniewski, a Democrat and chairman of the Assembly's Transportation and Independent Authorities Committee. "This saves everyone, including the governor, from having to debate or discuss raising a tax."

A spokesman for Mr. Christie declined to comment on pending legislation. A spokesman for Assembly Speaker Vincent Prieto, a Democrat, said he would prefer an immediate long-term funding solution. A spokesman for Senate President Steve Sweeney, also a Democrat, declined to comment.

Messrs. Christie, Sweeney and Prieto have said they would support a 23-cent per-gallon gas-tax increase to pay for transportation work. The governor and Mr. Sweeney, however, disagree on how deep of a corresponding tax cut the state can afford.

Mr. Christie has said he won't sign off on a gas tax increase without a significant tax reduction elsewhere, and supports an Assembly-approved bill that would lower the state sales tax to 6% from 7%. Mr. Sweeney has refused to allow a vote in his chamber on the sales tax cut, saying it would be too costly.

Greg Lavee, business manager for International Union of Operating Engineers Local 825, said nearly 1,000 of its members had been laid off since July because of the shutdown.

"This is going from bad to worse," said Mr. Lavee, who added he preferred a long-term solution to Mr. Wisniewski's proposal. "Our members are not getting the work hours that they need to support their families, the businesses that we work for are watching just an absolute revenue drop-off."

Mr. Wisniewski, who supports raising the gas tax without a corresponding tax cut and is considering a run for governor next year, said borrowing $1.6 billion would cost $100 million a year for 30 years in interest and principal payments. He said his proposal is the "least-worst alternative" to the continuing impasse in Trenton.

Credit: By Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	Tax cuts; Sales taxes; Gasoline taxes; Trust funds; Tax increases; Governors
Business indexing term:	Subject: Tax cuts Sales taxes Gasoline taxes Trust funds Tax increases; Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: International Union of Operating Engineers; NAICS: 813930
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1821709053

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-n-j-lawmaker-has-plan-end-road-impasse/docview/1821709053/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 173 of 500

Business News: Tech Sector Gets Boost From Apple

Kuriloff, Aaron . Kuriloff, Aaron.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Apple's 6.7% climb between the new phone's unveiling and Thursday's close is the stock's best performance over the past five years in the gap between the announcement and the launch, according to data from Bespoke Investment Group. Since the iPhone first was unveiled in 2007, shares have gained a median of 4.3% in that window, climbing seven times and falling three, Bespoke says.

FULL TEXT

Technology stocks have been soaring lately, getting a big lift from Apple Inc.

Tech stocks in the S&P 500 have risen 10% in the past three months, more than twice the gains of any other group. It is also a change from earlier in the year, when a slide in tech highlighted investor concerns about slowing U.S. growth.

Apple has been a driver of those recent gains. Excluding Apple would cut the tech sector's September gain through Thursday from 1.5% to 0.2%, according to S&P Dow Jones Indices, which notes Apple remains the biggest company in the index by market capitalization.

Even as it fell 0.6% to $114.92 on Friday, Apple's stock was up 11% on the week, adding around $63 billion to its market value.

Tech shares rose 3% this week, compared with the S&P 500's 0.5% weekly gain. It is also the only one of the index's 10 sectors that has gained over the past month. The tech-heavy Nasdaq Composite Index rose 2.3% for the week.

Apple said it already had sold out of some versions of its new iPhone 7 line since preorders started last week. T-Mobile US Inc. and Sprint Corp. earlier this week suggested demand was strong, without giving numbers. Shoppers lined up to buy the new phones Friday. Meanwhile, Samsung Electronics Co. is recalling its Galaxy Note 7 smartphone because of potential battery fires.

Several investors and analysts said hints of strong iPhone sales were reassuring after sales fell for two consecutive quarters.

"This shows that the user base is loyal and wants to upgrade either when new tech comes along or when their new phones wear out," said Jim Tierney, chief investment officer for concentrated U.S. growth at AllianceBernstein Holding LP, which holds Apple shares.

Apple didn't respond to a request for comment.

Apple's 6.7% climb between the new phone's unveiling and Thursday's close is the stock's best performance over the past five years in the gap between the announcement and the launch, according to data from Bespoke Investment Group. Since the iPhone first was unveiled in 2007, shares have gained a median of 4.3% in that window, climbing seven times and falling three, Bespoke says.

The data also shows the stock sometimes cools off in the weeks after, falling five times and rising four, posting a median decline of 1.7%, according to Bespoke.

Some investors and analysts said the Cupertino, Calif., company's stock still has room to run. Apple traded at about 14 times its past 12 months of earnings as of Thursday's close, compared with almost 20 for the S&P 500, looking like a relative bargain at a time when many investors are concerned about stretched valuations.

RBC Capital Markets analysts, led by Amit Daryanani, adjusted their target price for the company upward to $120 from $117 a share Thursday, maintaining a rating of "outperform." They said that the current price still offers a good entry point for investors and that Apple has been a relative oasis in recent market volatility.

RBC analysts said worries remain that innovation is declining at Apple, with new sales driven more by existing owners replacing phones than new customers buying in.

But it has attractive valuations, gross margins that are at least stable, and a consumer friendly ecosystem of hardware and software integrated across multiple devices that would be difficult for competitors to replicate, they said.

Credit: By Aaron Kuriloff

DETAILS

Subject:	Investments; Stock exchanges; Smartphones; Technology stocks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Smartphones Technology stocks; Corporation: Apple Inc; Industry: 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: RBC Capital Markets; NAICS: 523150; Name: Apple Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334220, 513210
Classification:	52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821709020
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-tech-sector-gets-boost-apple/docview/1821709020/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 174 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to the complaint, Mr. Stewart sent emails and videos beginning last month threatening to shoot people at the Princess Jonah Federal building in Honolulu.

FULL TEXT

ILLINOIS

Officer Charged

In 2013 Shooting

A Chicago police officer was indicted on federal civil-rights charges on Friday over a 2013 incident in which he fired at two black teenagers inside a car.

U.S. Attorney Zachary Fardon said the officer, 41-year old Marco Proano, was charged with two counts of "deprivation of rights" for excessive use of force while on duty. Each count is punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

The incident refers to Mr. Proano's December 2013 shooting into a car, wounding two teenagers, police said. The car had been pulled over for speeding.

The Independent Police Review Authority, the agency that investigates police use-of-force allegations, recommended in December 2015 that Mr. Proano be stripped of his police powers. He had been on administrative duty since the shooting, and was fired after IPRA's recommendation.

"The charges announced today are serious and the Chicago Police Department will have zero tolerance for proven misconduct," a spokesman for the police department said. "Mr. Proano was relieved of his police powers last year during the course of IPRA's investigation and CPD is fully cooperating with the U.S. attorney's office."

A lawyer for Mr. Proano couldn't be reached Friday.

-- Shibani Mahtani

FLORIDA

Fertilizer Plant Leaks

Contaminated Water

More than 200 million gallons of contaminated wastewater from a fertilizer plant in central Florida leaked into one of the state's main underground sources of drinking water after a massive sinkhole opened up beneath a storage pond, a phosphate company said Friday.

Mosaic, the world's largest supplier of phosphate, said the hole opened up beneath a pile of waste material called a "gypsum stack." The 215-million gallon storage pond sat atop the waste mineral pile. The company said the sinkhole is about 45 feet in diameter. Mosaic said it is monitoring groundwater and has found no off-site impacts.

The sinkhole, discovered by a worker on Aug. 27, is believed to reach down to the Floridan aquifer, Mosaic said. The aquifer is a major source of drinking water in the state.

Dee Ann Miller, spokeswoman for the state's Department of Environmental Protection, said the firm was updating state and federal agencies on the situation.

-- Associated Press

TENNESSEE

Arrest Over Threats

To Lawmakers

The Federal Bureau of Investigation and U.S. Capitol Police arrested a man in Tennessee on charges of threatening to kill members of Hawaii's congressional delegation.

Keahiokahouna Stewart was taken into custody at his Murfreesboro home on Friday. According to the complaint, Mr. Stewart sent emails and videos beginning last month threatening to shoot people at the Princess Jonah Federal building in Honolulu.

Prosecutors allege the targets of the threats were U.S. Sen. Mazie Hirono and U.S. Rep. Tulsi Gabbard. Both are Democrats.

The complaint said beginning in 2013 Mr. Stewart began sending a series of "grievances" to federal officials claiming that his Social Security number had been issued to a fellow soldier while they were stationed in Korea.

The federal public defender's office had no immediate comment.

-- Associated Press

DETAILS

Subject:	Indictments; Aquifers; Federal court decisions; Drinking water; Sinkholes; Public prosecutors; Police departments
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92212 : Police Protection 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	United States--US
People:	Fardon, Zachary
Company / organization:	Name: US Capitol Police; NAICS: 922120; Name: Federal Bureau of Investigation--FBI; NAICS: 922120; Name: Associated Press-NYC; NAICS: 516210
Classification:	92212: Police Protection; 92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821708949
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1821708949/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 175 of 500

U.S. News: Inflation Gained Steam in August

Leubsdorf, Ben . Leubsdorf, Ben.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The consumer-price index, which measures what Americans pay for everything from ice cream to college textbooks, increased a seasonally adjusted 0.2% in August from the prior month, the Labor Department said Friday.

FULL TEXT

Consumer prices moved higher in August, offering fresh evidence that U.S. inflation may be firming after years of sluggish price growth.

The consumer-price index, which measures what Americans pay for everything from ice cream to college textbooks, increased a seasonally adjusted 0.2% in August from the prior month, the Labor Department said Friday. Excluding the often-volatile categories of food and energy, so-called core prices rose 0.3%, the largest increase since February.

The strong gains reflected a sharp increase in medical-care prices -- up 1%, the largest one-month jump in the category since February 1984.

Signs of stronger inflation would be welcome news at the Federal Reserve, which has seen U.S. price growth undershoot its 2% annual target for more than four years. Still, investors expect the Fed to hold short-term interest rates unchanged at its policy meeting next week.

One reason for Fed caution came from the University of Michigan, which reported Friday that U.S. consumer expectations for future inflation softened this month. The survey showed Americans expected inflation to register at 2.3% over the next year, the weakest reading in six years, and expectations for inflation five to 10 years out remained at a record low of 2.5%.

The Labor Department report showed that price changes were uneven last month. Shelter, medical and apparel costs rose, but prices for both food and energy were unchanged from July, and used-car prices fell for the sixth consecutive month.

Compared with a year earlier, overall prices rose 1.1% in August and core prices were up 2.3%.

The Fed's 2% inflation target is based on the Commerce Department's personal-consumption-expenditures price index. That gauge rose 0.8% in July from a year earlier, and prices excluding food and energy were up 1.6% on the year for the fifth consecutive month.

Growth in core prices tracked by the Labor Department gauge has been higher than growth in core PCE prices, in part because fast-growing housing costs make up a larger share of the basket of goods and services tracked by the CPI.

Another divergence: prices in the health-care sector. The CPI's gauge of medical-care costs has surged in recent months, building to annual growth of 4.9% in August from 4% in July, 3.6% in June and 3.2% in May. Annual growth in prices for health-care services as tracked by the PCE index has been lower and more stable, hovering around 1% so far this year through July; August data are due out at the end of the month.

There is "a pretty big difference in terms of what they're trying to measure," said J.P. Morgan Chase economist Michael Feroli. The CPI tracks consumers' out-of-pocket expenses, while the PCE index is heavily influenced by payments from government programs and employer-provided health insurance.

Data can be volatile from month to month. The actual trends, and implications, should come into better focus over the coming months. In any case, Mr. Feroli said, "there are reasons to expect health-care inflation to firm" over time.

Jeffrey Sparshott contributed to this article.

Credit: By Ben Leubsdorf

DETAILS

Subject:	Inflation; Consumer Price Index; Economic conditions
Business indexing term:	Subject: Inflation Consumer Price Index Economic conditions
Location:	United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821708794
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-inflation-gained-steam-august/docview/1821708794/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 176 of 500

Stocks Fall but End Week Higher --- Financial shares follow Deutsche Bank down; energy sector sinks as oil hits one-month low

Gold, Riva; Huang, Daniel . Gold, Riva; Huang, Daniel.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Investors have been reassessing global central-bank policies since the European Central Bank held off on ramping up its stimulus measures a week ago, triggering a selloff in long-dated government bonds that has rippled through equity and currency markets.

FULL TEXT

U.S. stocks fell at the end of a choppy week across markets.

Investors have been reassessing global central-bank policies since the European Central Bank held off on ramping up its stimulus measures a week ago, triggering a selloff in long-dated government bonds that has rippled through equity and currency markets. The Federal Reserve and the Bank of Japan are both scheduled to meet in the coming week.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 88.68 points, or 0.5%, to 18123.80 on Friday. The S&P 500 slipped 8.10 points, or 0.4%, to 2139.16. The Nasdaq Composite declined 5.12 points, or 0.1%, to 5244.57.

But all three indexes posted weekly gains, led by the Nasdaq, which rose 2.3% as shares of technology and biotech companies rallied. It was the index's biggest jump since the week ended July 1.

The Dow industrials added 0.2% for the week and the S&P 500 rose 0.5%.

On Friday, financial and energy companies dragged down U.S. stocks.

Bank shares fell after The Wall Street Journal reported Thursday that the U.S. Justice Department proposed that Deutsche Bank pay $14 billion to settle a set of mortgage-securities probes stemming from the financial crisis.

"When one bank is affected, it weighs heavily on the shoulder of all financials," said Larry Weiss, head of trading at brokerage firm Instinet.

Financial firms in the S&P 500 fell 0.9%.

Shares of the German lender dropped 8.5% in Frankfurt, as the settlement figure exceeded what investors had expected.

The Stoxx Europe 600 lost 0.7% and ended the week 2.2% lower -- for the biggest decline since the week ended June 10.

In U.S. corporate news, shares of Intel rose $1.11, or 3%, to $37.67 after the chip maker raised its outlook for the third quarter.

Oracle fell 1.94, or 4.7%, to 38.92 after the company said Thursday that growing sales in its cloud-computing business were offset by a drop in its software-licensing division in the latest quarter.

Adding to the downbeat tone, U.S. crude oil fell 2% to $43.03 a barrel -- a one-month low and a 6.2% decline for the week. The S&P 500 energy sector fell 0.9% Friday. Oversupply concerns have plagued oil markets all summer.

The Wall Street Journal Dollar Index, which measures the U.S. currency against a basket of 16 others, rose 0.7% Friday after the Labor Department said consumer prices increased in August, a sign that inflation could be firming after years of sluggish growth.

Even accounting for the stronger-than-expected rise in consumer prices, "by and large U.S. economic data has come in a little bit weaker than anticipated," said Thomas Wilson, senior investment manager at Brinker Capital.

On Thursday, data showed retail sales declined in August, while industrial output dropped last month.

Friday's consumer-prices report is among the last major points of economic data Fed officials will see before meeting Sept. 20-21. Most investors expect the central bank to hold short-term interest rates unchanged.

"Next week is so important," said Jason Pride, director of investment strategy at Glenmede. Investors care more about the communication of a bigger-picture plan than a rate increase, he said.

Japan's Nikkei Stock Average rose 0.7% Friday but shed 2.6% for the week. Markets in China, Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea and Malaysia were closed for a holiday.

Credit: By Riva Gold and Daniel Huang

DETAILS

Subject:	Dow Jones averages; Daily markets (wsj); Stock exchanges; Stock prices; Central banks; Consumer Price Index; Energy industry; Investments
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices Central banks Consumer Price Index Energy industry; Corporation: Deutsche Bank AG; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank; 52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
column:	Friday's Markets
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821708280
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-fall-end-week-higher-financial-shares/docview/1821708280/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 177 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

U.S. health officials will soon require scientists and firms to make public more details of a broader range of medical research studies. ---

FULL TEXT

The U.S. has sent about 40 special-operations troops to work with Turkish forces on clearing out a stretch of the border region in northern Syria still occupied by Islamic State.

Clinton's lead among young voters has nearly collapsed, contributing to the tightening of the race and prompting her campaign to move to keep them in the fold.

Trump conceded that Obama was born in the U.S., standing down from years of false accusations that made the businessman a key figure in the "birther" movement.

EU leaders pledged to step up cooperation on protecting borders and improving the economy, but signs of deep divisions remained.

Duterte's drive to upend the Philippines' security alliance with the U.S. is prompting concerns within his nation's military.

U.S. health officials will soon require scientists and firms to make public more details of a broader range of medical research studies.

Died: Edward Albee, 88, three-time Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright.

DETAILS

Location:	Philippines; United States--US
People:	Albee, Edward (1928-2016)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821708248
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1821708248/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-13
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 178 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

New York's attorney general is examining accounting practices at Exxon, scrutinizing the value of its oil and gas reserves two years into an energy slump. ---

FULL TEXT

New York's attorney general is examining accounting practices at Exxon, scrutinizing the value of its oil and gas reserves two years into an energy slump.

Deutsche Bank's already thin capital cushion could be strained by a settlement with the Justice Department over mortgage securities.

Beechwood Re didn't inform investment clients of its ties to Platinum, which is now under fraud investigation, when it put them in Platinum-related investments.

Apple shares had their best week in nearly five years, helped by the release of the new iPhone.

U.S. stocks fell at the end of a choppy week across markets, with the Dow losing 88.68 points to 18123.80.

Consumer prices moved higher in August, offering fresh evidence that U.S. inflation may be firming.

U.S. households collectively reached a record net worth of $89.1 trillion in the second quarter.

Hanjin is working on a restructuring plan that would slash its owned fleet and return most chartered ships.

DETAILS

Location:	United States--US; New York
Company / organization:	Name: Deutsche Bank AG; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1821708172
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1821708172/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 179 of 500

Business News: Jet-Engine Maker Falls Short of Goal

Mann, Ted . Mann, Ted.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Pratt & Whitney will likely ship about 150 of its newest family of commercial jet engines, known as the "geared turbofan," down from a previous target of 200, Gregory Hayes, CEO of Pratt parent United Technologies, told investors at a conference Friday.

FULL TEXT

United Technologies Corp. warned it will miss its 2016 goal for deliveries of a new jet engine by roughly 25%, the latest setback in one of the most important programs for the manufacturing conglomerate.

Pratt & Whitney will likely ship about 150 of its newest family of commercial jet engines, known as the "geared turbofan," down from a previous target of 200, Gregory Hayes, CEO of Pratt parent United Technologies, told investors at a conference Friday.

There had been warning signs, especially the announcement from plane-maker Bombardier Inc. earlier this month that it was cutting its own delivery schedule, and blaming that on delays from Pratt.

Mr. Hayes's announcement was still a disappointment to investors in United Technologies, which has staked a decade and $10 billion in research and development on the new family of engines. The company's shares fell 2.5% to $100.10 on Friday.

"Suffice it to say the airlines aren't happy they're not getting the engines," Mr. Hayes said. "We're not happy we're not delivering."

Pratt & Whitney executives previously warned the introduction of the new engine would put pressure on its supply chain. Pratt still hopes to deliver 400 of the new engines next year. The company says it will churn out more than 1,000 of the engines by 2020, as it attacks a backlog that now includes some 8,200 engine orders and options.

But problems have bedeviled the ramp-up. A new logistics center in New Hampshire experienced delays last year. The center is run by United Parcel Service Inc. under contract with Pratt to organize the delivery of the more than 800 parts that make up an engine. The jet-engine maker says the kinks have been worked out and that it is helping speed up production.

Pratt also angered some airline customers when the first geared turbofans it delivered had a flaw that required longer-than-expected cool-down times between some flights to avoid engine damage, a problem the company says it has addressed.

On Friday, Mr. Hayes said there are "five parts that are causing us pain this year" because suppliers haven't been able to deliver them in sufficient numbers and quality to keep pace with engine assembly. A particular problem has been the newly designed aluminum-titanium fan blades, he said.

"We've just struggled because of the technology involved in these blades," Mr. Hayes said, adding that he had visited the shop where blades are produced last week. "Today it takes us about 60 days to build the blades through the shop and [that] needs to get to 30 days."

The blade problems aren't an indicator of deeper manufacturing issues, Mr. Hayes said. The blades are mounted to engines at the end of assembly, he noted, and other than delays in getting the parts Pratt believes it is assembling the engines quickly enough that it will be back on its timetable by the end of 2017.

Credit: By Ted Mann

DETAILS

Subject:	Engines; Aircraft industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft industry; Industry: 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing 33361 : Engine, Turbine, and Power Transmission Equipment Manufacturing
Company / organization:	Name: Pratt & Whitney; NAICS: 333515, 333517, 333611, 336412, 541330; Name: United Technologies Corp; NAICS: 333310, 333611, 333921, 336411, 336415
Classification:	33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing; 33361: Engine, Turbine, and Power Transmission Equipment Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820252600
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-jet-engine-maker-falls-short-goal/docview/1820252600/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-10-01

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 180 of 500

Election 2016: Trump Backs Off A 'Birther' Claim

Epstein, Reid J; Bender, Michael C . Epstein, Reid J; Bender, Michael C.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Trump's statement forces into the 2016 presidential campaign a conspiracy theory he fanned for years, though he has largely avoided discussing the issue of late.

FULL TEXT

Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump on Friday conceded that President Barack Obama was born in the U.S., standing down from years of false accusations that made the businessman a central figure in the discredited "birther" movement.

"President Barack Obama was born in the United States, period," Mr. Trump said at an event with the news media.

He then falsely assigned blame to Democratic rival Hillary Clinton for igniting the suggestion, back in the 2008 Democratic primary campaign, that Mr. Obama, a Hawaii native, was born overseas. There is no evidence to support that claim; Mr. Trump didn't take questions from reporters before leaving a hotel ballroom.

Mr. Trump's statement forces into the 2016 presidential campaign a conspiracy theory he fanned for years, though he has largely avoided discussing the issue of late. In early 2011, Mr. Trump galvanized some support among Republicans by repeatedly advocating the claim that Mr. Obama was born in Kenya, as his father was. That campaign to cast doubt on Mr. Obama's citizenship, and thus his legitimacy to be president, got enough traction that the White House that spring released Mr. Obama's long-form birth certificate.

Mrs. Clinton and her surrogates have cast Mr. Trump's questions about Mr. Obama's birth as racist. Speaking at a forum for black women Friday in Washington, Mrs. Clinton sought to emphasize the stakes in the election by saying Mr. Trump's flirtation with a conspiracy theory underscores that he is unfit for office.

"For five years, he has led the birther movement to delegitimize our first black president," Mrs. Clinton. "His campaign was founded on this outrageous lie. There is no erasing it in history."

She continued: "Barack Obama was born in America plain and simple. And Donald Trump owes him and the American people an apology," she said.

Injecting the issue of the president's birthplace into the campaign comes after Mr. Trump has made efforts to win support from African-American voters. The businessman on Wednesday visited a black church in Flint, Mich., and he has made appeals to black citizens by asking, "What do you have to lose?"

Members of the Congressional Black Caucus on Friday criticized him for not apologizing for questioning the president's birthplace.

Rep. Barbara Lee (D., Calif.) said the birthplace question from Mr. Trump "catapulted" his Republican presidential bid by aiming to "de-legitimize" the nation's first black president. "This is a defining moment for all of those who want to denounce bigotry and racism," she said.

Orly Taitz, a California dentist and attorney who was among the leading advocates of the birther cause, said in an interview Friday that "I still have questions" about the president's citizenship but said she doesn't hold Mr. Trump's change of position on the subject against him.

"He is correct on concentrating on Hillary Clinton instead," said Dr. Taitz, who is a Trump supporter.

For his part Mr. Obama said the focus on where he was born is a sideshow at a time when the country faces serious challenges.

"I was pretty confident about where I was born. I think most people were as well," Mr. Obama said after meeting with business leaders in the Oval Office.

Byron Tau and Carol E. Lee contributed to this article.

Credit: By Reid J. Epstein and Michael C. Bender

DETAILS

Subject:	Primaries & caucuses; Presidential elections; Citizenship; Political campaigns; Conspiracy
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	United States--US
People:	Trump, Donald J; Obama, Barack
Company / organization:	Name: Congressional Black Caucus; NAICS: 921120

Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251815
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/election-2016-trump-backs-off-birther-claim/docview/1820251815/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 181 of 500

U.S. News: After a Disaster, Speed Matters

ABSTRACT

Congress in 2008 authorized two federal programs to provide small businesses with quick infusions of cash in response to complaints after Hurricane Katrina about delays with disaster-recovery lending.

FULL TEXT

Congress in 2008 authorized two federal programs to provide small businesses with quick infusions of cash in response to complaints after Hurricane Katrina about delays with disaster-recovery lending.

One Small Business Administration program promised to provide small firms with quick government-backed "bridge loans" of up to $25,000 and a 36-hour decision.

But eight years after the law was enacted, not a single loan has been made under the program. A 2015 report by the U.S. Government Accountability Office criticized the SBA for dragging its feet.

"Lenders have not been interested because of the cost of participation, loan terms and conditions contrary to conventional lending practices," an SBA spokeswoman said, noting that the loans have 10-year terms. SBA loan processing times "have fallen dramatically" since the law was passed, she added.

In Louisiana, the Baton Rouge Area Chamber is using private donations to fund $350,000 in grants to 57 small local businesses. But because of funding limitations, less than 10% of the initial 630 applicants have received money, leaving out at least 200 other firms that would have otherwise qualified. Another 155 businesses have since submitted funding requests.

(See related article: "Flood-Hit Firms Battle To Rebuild --- Many companies in the stricken area face steep recovery costs, even with insurance" -- WSJ Sept. 17, 2016)

Credit: By Ruth Simon

DETAILS

Subject:	Funding; Disaster relief; Small business loans
Business indexing term:	Subject: Small business loans; Industry: 62423 : Emergency and Other Relief Services
Company / organization:	Name: Small Business Administration; NAICS: 921130
Classification:	62423: Emergency and Other Relief Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251810
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-after-disaster-speed-matters/docview/1820251810/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 182 of 500

OFF DUTY --- The Off Duty 50: Fifty Reasons Fall Is the Best Season --- From sweater weather to fondue, hammock camping and suddenly empty beaches, here's why we're glad summer is history

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

STYLE & FASHION 1. Because . . . fashion is elevating the L.L. Bean look. --- [...]many of the fashion versions, like Michael Kors's windproof and nearly waterproof parkas, are technically sound as well.) And as fashion trends go, "it's just so wearable for any guy," said stylist Ashley Weston, who has dressed actors Paul Dano and "The Night Of" star Riz Ahmed. [...]the L.L. Bean aesthetic captures a spirit to which many men still aspire.

FULL TEXT

STYLE & FASHION

1. Because . . .

fashion is elevating

the L.L.

Bean look.

Want to upgrade your hiking boots and flannel shirts?

Designers are cooperating

By Jason Chen

It has been more than four decades since Georgia-Pacific introduced the plaid-flannel-clad Brawny man, enough time for us to witness the birth (and eventual death) of the square-shouldered and suited-up Master of the Universe, the gelled metrosexual and the khaki-sporting normcore acolyte. And yet.

Somehow the idea of the rugged outdoorsman -- in his checked shirt, woolen trousers and hiking boots -- still holds cultural sway. A number of designers this season, from Michael Kors to Bottega Veneta creative director Tomas Maier to prince of street wear Alexander Wang, showed clothes that wouldn't look out of place in an L.L. Bean catalog.

Currently, on high-end menswear e-commerce site Mr Porter, you can find a subtly avant-garde loden-hued parka

($2,295) and a sweater that cleverly splices together cable and waffle textures ($730) from Japanese label Sacai. Bottega Veneta offers a supersoft, refined henley ($390) that would pair beautifully with its slim-cut, elastic-waist trousers ($590) that are garment-dyed to achieve a kind of dappled indigo effect. Need a shirt? Add in New York brand Battenwear's patch-pocketed cotton flannel button-up ($205), woven rather stylishly from a mix of navy and black thread.

Of course, parkas, henleys and flannels are already familiar to the average American man. But these more refined iterations are targeted at particularly style-conscious gents. "Everything that we wear now as men is sort of elevated from what it was," said Dan Rookwood, U.S. editor for Mr Porter. "For example, 10 years ago if a guy was working out, he'd be wearing an old Metallica T-shirt and shorts with holes. Now it's got to be designer. That's sort of translated into every part of his wardrobe."

Some might find the woodsy weekend-kit upgrade a bit excessive, but there are advantages. While the clothes you might score at Bean, Lands' End or Eddie Bauer have great technical functionality, they may not feel as good (cashmere is nicer against the skin than scratchy wool), and these versions can go from hanging out in the country to drinks in the city without missing a beat. (Plus, many of the fashion versions, like Michael Kors's windproof and nearly waterproof parkas, are technically sound as well.)

And as fashion trends go, "it's just so wearable for any guy," said stylist Ashley Weston, who has dressed actors Paul Dano and "The Night Of" star Riz Ahmed. "No one will feel alienated by this look." Moreover, the L.L. Bean aesthetic captures a spirit to which many men still aspire. "It's rugged and masculine," said Mr Porter's Mr. Rookwood, "which is just easier for guys to get into than something more challenging and high-fashion."

2. . . . it's officially sweater

weather.

But this isn't just any pilly cardigan the moths have been at. Belgian designer Dries Van Noten has reimagined the classic shawl-collar knit by crossbreeding it with a swinging smoking jacket. Unlike your grandpa's itchy knits, this belted sweater is as plush as the hotel robe you nearly swiped during your summer vacation. Pair it with dark trousers to complement its urbane paisley-like motif. $990, mrporter.com

-- Jacob Gallagher

3. . . . brown is of the moment.

Once upon a time, men's watch faces were as predictable as clockwork: white, black, maybe blue if you were an unhinged risk-taker. This fall, though, watch-makers are working on their tans. These brown-faced tickers are a subtly sophisticated finishing touch on everything from a navy suit to flannel-and-jeans. Overseas Watch, $19,900, Vacheron

Constantin, 212-317-8964; Bulgari Bulgari Carbon Gold Watch, $2,800, bulgari.com; Seamaster Planet Ocean, $21,000, Omega, 212-207-3333

-- J.G.

4. . . . this mutant has really arrived.

For years now, "to sock or not to sock?" has been a pressing summertime style conundrum. Mercifully, the drop in temperature makes getting dressed less fraught. But here's a new dilemma: To sock-shoe or not? Nike and Adidas have rolled out some cooler-weather shoes with ankle-huggers built in. Whether you call them sneaker-socks, or sock-sneakers, they are intriguing many stylish, cutting-edge guys as a comfortable alternative to high-tops or boots. Tubular Doom Sneakers, $160, adidas.com

-- J.G.

5. Because . . . boots offer room for expression.

A showy shoe can woo lovers of maximalism -- a key fall trend -- but these patterned ankle boots are a more practical way to embrace it

By Nancy MacDonnell

Come late September, one of the joys of summer -- artfully cut sandals that reveal polished toenails -- disappears. Fall calls for more somber leather footwear. But this season, designers are offering a cold-weather corollary to bright nail lacquer that's just as decorative: playfully patterned ankle boots, a riposte to what Jessie Randall, co-founder and creative director of New York-based shoe label Loeffler Randall, described as "a sea of black booties."

As Ms. Randall suggested, black ankle boots, particularly ones with chunky heels, have become a fashion mainstay over the past few seasons. No surprise there -- they're stylish in a low-key, go-with-everything way that all but guarantees mass appeal. Women's reliance on them, however, is giving way to restlessness, thus the swing toward embellishment. The sidewalk-friendly heel remains, but the fun factor has gone way up.

Loeffler Randall's new collection includes boots made from suede embroidered with Ukrainian folk-inspired motifs, while Brian Atwood begat a pair crafted from velvet printed with a peacock-feather motif that's rather art deco. Saint Laurent is offering a rich botanical brocade, Altuzarra has embroidered flowering vines and Marc Jacobs, a pixelated floral leather.

"I think what's going on at Gucci, with the mixed prints, the bohemian feeling, feels fresh," said Mr. Atwood. "It makes people a little less afraid of having fun." Fittingly, the inspiration for his statement-making boots was David Bowie.

After failing to nab a pair of brocade Valentino ankle boots last year, Amanda Ross, a New York stylist, designer and founder of editorial and e-commerce website A Ross Girl, now has her eye on the Altuzarra booties. For her, printed boots are analogous to jewelry, an easy add-on that can give an outfit depth and whimsy. "Instead of buying jewelry and getting decorative around the face, you can get decorative around your feet," she said. "I like things that add a bit of joie de vivre."

Davinia Wang, founder of the Manhattan luxury accessories shop Edon Manor, credits the exclusive nature of designer prints for part of the trend's success. Unlike a logo, she said, prints like the metallic medallion on the Dries Van Noten boots she's stocking for fall are recognized only by those in the know. Moreover, she added, "It's more difficult for high-street brands to copy. You can't do a pattern on the cheap."

In fashion's current maximalist climate -- color! texture! pattern! all together now! -- these ankle boots are an easy way to appear au courant without feeling like a fashion victim. Better yet, these boots are actually made for walking.

Ms. Ross said she plans to wear her booties with Celine's khaki separates. Ms. Randall has primarily been sporting her designs with a mid-length skirt ("very chic") or jeans, which will likely be the choice of most ankle-boot devotees. "Everyone in my office wears jeans," she said. "We have a kind of uniform -- jeans and something simple on top -- and then we're more expressive with our accessories. These are not a dress that you're only going to wear once a month. You can wear them a few times a week. They're a good sturdy bootie."

6. . . . an interesting

coat is a one-step update.

The fashion stakes go up when fall arrives and we all experience pressure to look polished and au courant. The easiest way to accomplish that is a coat -- hidden for months and now ready, like a capricious actress, for its star turn. Valentino's generously appliqued and embroidered camel duster might gobble your entire clothing budget (plus your impulse-travel budget and your useless knickknack budget), but its ability to get you "dressed" and on-trend with fall's over-the-top decorated look in one fell swoop is priceless. $22,000, Valentino, 212-355-5811

7. . . . you can wear perfume that doesn't disappear

by lunch.

Light, green scents are ideal for July days. The only problem: an hour after the initial spritz, your perfume has pulled a Houdini act. One advantage of autumn is that stronger scents with real staying power feel apropos. One of the best is Byredo's new offering, created for the Swedish company's 10th anniversary. It's not cloyingly heavy, but notes of spicy pink pepper and balsam fir give it a pleasing presence. A fun twist: The bottle is Byredo's signature design, but you can customize its label with any name you choose thanks to the included pack of rub-on letters. Unnamed Perfume, $230, byredo.com

8. Because . . . you get to haul out that (not so) old jean jacket.

Round about now, colors are changing, both on the molting oaks and -- in a way less likely to inspire moody 8th-grade poets -- on denim jackets. Unexpected versions, like Saint Laurent's murdered-out black trucker or Nudie's cream variety, are stretching the style well beyond classic cornflower blue.

"When you make [a denim jacket] with a darker fabric or tonal stitching, it is something that can be easily dressed up," said Andrew Chen, co-owner of 3sixteen, a New York-based denim company that produces a jacket so profoundly navy it's practically black. The inky jacket is also notably sleek, so much so that Mr. Chen has seen some customers wear it with dress slacks. Marlboro-Man musty, it is not.

At the other end of the color spectrum are lighter denim riffs from labels like Battenwear, which lend themselves to many denim-on-denim combos. "I see [our cream jacket] with blue jeans or black jeans or gray jeans," said Morgan Sundberg, design director of Nudie Jeans.

These days, even when a brand does cut a jacket in the traditional indigo hue, it tends to design it for maximum distinction. Gucci's Led-Zeppeinish entry comes riveted and embroidered. Meanwhile, more subtle details, like A.P.C.'s "hidden" on-seam pockets or Levi's burnished seams and slightly frayed collar, give a design character that makes it stand out quietly from the crowd, said Jonny Ribeiro, 29, a Brooklyn-based interior designer and denim jacket aficionado. "I love things that have wear and show proof of life," said Mr. Ribeiro, who describes his well-loved jean jacket as his "second skin." Find your own this fall -- just don't settle for pedestrian old blue.

-- Jacob Gallagher

9. Because

... sleeves

aren't skimpy.

Chillier days are welcome opportunities to cover

one's arms. And this season,

the humble sleeve is a canvas for creativity

By Kari Molvar

After months of baring one's imperfectly toned arms in steamy weather, it's a relief to put on clothing with actual sleeves. Still, however skilled they are at hiding flaws, sleeves are usually uneventful -- pragmatic tubes of fabric that run from shoulder to wrist.

That changed this season. On many runways, in fact, sleeves were the stars. At Gucci, "leg o' mutton" styles, puffed at the shoulders, slimmed fastidiously at the elbow. Marni's versions ballooned beautifully. At Lemaire, equally muttonous sleeves were rendered in an Aran knit, while Proenza Schouler's ultralong and lean ones elegantly obscured models' hands. The more expressive your sleeves, it seemed, the better.

Upping the style ante around your arms is a playfully peacockish move. "I think women want drama in their wardrobes," said Australian designer Kym Ellery, who has made interesting sleeves a signature of her namesake label. "I'm noticing through street-style [photographs], people wanting to wear a silhouette that's a bit more fun."

That's not to say that all intriguing sleeves shout: "Take my picture!" The drama can be subtle. "I think sculptural clothing is a way of expressing yourself without patterns and logos," said Claire Distenfeld, owner of Fivestory, a New York boutique.

And unlike trends that require a targeted workout routine (a killer crop top needs abs to match) or reveal more skin than you care to show (cutouts can be cruel), the sleeve movement is forgiving. Statement-making sleeves "hold no judgment," said New York-based stylist Micaela Erlanger, who dresses actress Lupita Nyong'o. "They look great on all body types, and there's something incredibly elegant about being covered up."

There are two schools of thought on how to wear these dramatic silhouettes. You can go all out, complementing the volume on top with volume on the bottom, in the form of wide-leg pants or flaring skirts -- albeit ones with particularly defined waists. Fivestory's Ms. Distenfeld favors that approach. "I find it flattering and feminine," she said. Or you can try the opposite tack: contrasting the supersize effect by scaling down the rest of your outfit. Ms. Ellery suggested slim pants or a midi-length pencil skirt: "It's nice to balance the sleeves with something quiet."

Advanced fashion practitioners can experiment with layering. Ms. Distenfeld, for instance, suggested pulling a camisole on over a lavishly sleeved blouse for a sophisticated work look. Alternatively, wearing a knit top with extra-long sleeves under a slip dress makes an otherwise minimalist frock "a bit edgier and of-the-moment," said Ms. Ellery.

If you're pursuing a more-is-more strategy in silhouette or styling, stick to neutral, refined tones to avoid looking clownish. Your pants should probably not have sparkles, advised Ms. Distenfeld, adding that it's best to let the statement sleeve do the talking. "Every outfit should have some element that takes a stand," she explained, "and then everything else should follow that."

With any avant-garde garment, there are practical matters to keep in mind. Cascading ruffles, elongated hand-obscuring cuffs and poufy sleeves can pose a risk at dinner where you might unwittingly "scoop up half your meal," said Ms. Distenfeld. Helpfully, Marni's XL sleeves for fall can be removed (though we're not sure where you'd stash them during the entree). Ms. Ellery often designs her sleeves with a means to rein them in, buttons or a drawstring. You can always slide on a cuff bracelet, said Ms. Erlanger, to "hold up the sleeve a bit."

Or just wear your balloon-sleeve blouse repeatedly to become accustomed to it. "It depends on the skill of the wearer," said Ms. Ellery, "if she's used to having something complex on her body." Until then? Skip the soup -- and stick with champagne.

10. . . . cozy can have cachet.

Comfort and glamour are more often than not mutually exclusive. But with the right sweater, what's extremely stylish can also be quite snuggly. That is certainly the case with Brunello Cucinelli's lipstick-red topper -- knit by hand in Mr. Cucinelli's storied factory in Solomeo, Italy. It's petal-meets-chevron motif is meant to be a refined and ladylike take on the classic fisherman sweater. Wear it to a party over a white shirt and a pair of cropped navy trousers. Just don't let anyone in on the fact that you sometimes accessorize it with Netflix and a couch. $3,845, Brunello Cucinelli, 212-334-1010

11. . . . even if you're not re-enrolling in college,

you deserve a new bag.

And if you're going to buy a new one, why not swing for the fences and buy the bag? That would be Balenciaga's brightly striped leather shopper, which slings easily over your arm and confidently hauls whatever you might need in the months to come -- a sack of apples, enough Halloween candy to satiate the neighborhood children, an overflow of your kids' schoolbooks. At a time when the proportions of handbags are becoming smaller and smaller, this one is refreshingly capacious but still guaranteed to turn heads. Bazar Tote, $1,645, Balenciaga, 212-206-0872

12. . . . woolly tights

are surprisingly splendid now.

Leave it to Miuccia Prada to make you wholeheartedly covet something you may have not thought about since high school: patterned wool tights. But the Italian designer's proposal of argyle- and diamond-motif tights -- shown on the runway with lush mink-trimmed coats and wasp-waisted brocade dresses -- was rather convincing. They're an ideal complement to a solid silk or knit dress. Stow the basic black for next year. $515, Prada, 212-334-8888

FALL WOULDN'T BE

FALL WITHOUT . . .

". . . a trip to Bailey Island, Maine, about 40 minutes east of Portland, with my owner Marc Jacobs. There's such an abundance of new smells -- of wood stoves, the ocean breeze, the seaweed, the pine. To me, it's delicious. I don't like to walk, but I love to sniff the wind. I can stand for an hour in one place and parse all of the smells from the air. And I get to go off the leash whenever I want and poop in nature. I've done the Hamptons thing. I've been to St. Barts. But Maine is such a magical place."

Neville Jacobs

Subject of "Neville Jacobs: I'm Marc's Dog" (Rizzoli, Sept. 27), as told to author Nicholas Newbold

EATING & DRINKING

13. Because . . . it's crunch time.

Nuts are fall's great underrated ingredient. These recipes show what wonders even a squirrel-size portion will do for a dish

By Kitty Greenwald

Shaved Kohlrabi With Radishes, Walnut Oil and Walnut-Mint Pesto

TOTAL TIME: 15 minutes

SERVES: 4

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Spread 1 cup walnuts out in a small roasting dish. Toast in oven until aromatic and deeply browned, about 5 minutes. Remove from oven and set aside to cool. // In a blender or food processor, pulse half the toasted walnuts, 1 cup mint leaves, 3/4 cup grated Pecorino Romano, 1 cup parsley leaves and 1 clove garlic, until finely chopped and well combined. With motor running, drizzle in 1/2 cup walnut oil and 1/2 cup olive oil until oil is fully incorporated and pesto is smooth, 10-20 seconds. Season pesto with salt and fresh lemon juice to taste. Set aside. // Use a mandolin or sharp knife to slice 2 small, peeled kohlrabi into thin rounds. Season with a generous drizzle of walnut oil and a sprinkle of salt. Lay kohlrabi slices flat on a serving platter, overlapping them slightly. In a bowl, toss 10 radishes, trimmed and quartered, with a generous drizzle of olive oil, squeeze of fresh lemon juice and sprinkle of salt. Scatter dressed radishes over kohlrabi. Dole out teaspoons of pesto all over the salad, peeling back layers of overlapping vegetables to dot with pesto as needed. Roughly chop remaining walnuts. Garnish vegetables with remaining walnuts and a pinch of salt. Serve with good bread, if desired.

-- Adapted from Renee Erickson of the Walrus and the Carpenter, Seattle

Trout Amandine With Almond and Broccolini Puree

TOTAL TIME: 30 minutes

SERVES: 4

Bring a medium pot of salted water to a boil. Take 1 bunch broccolini, trim away dry ends and separate florets from stems. Set stems aside for later use. Blanch florets until crisp-tender and bright green, about 2 minutes. Transfer florets to a colander and rinse under cold water to cool. Pat dry and set aside. // Discard boiling water, wipe pan clean and set pot back over medium heat. Add 1 tablespoon butter and broccolini stems and their leaves, if attached, to pot. Saute until stems turn bright green, about 4 minutes. Add 2 tablespoons sliced almonds, 1 cup whole milk, and a pinch each of salt and freshly ground white pepper. Bring to a simmer and cook stems until very tender, 15-20 minutes. Add extra splashes of milk or water if pot looks dry. Transfer everything to a blender and puree until smooth. If puree is too thick, blend in extra splashes of milk until desired consistency is attained. Season with salt to taste. // Cook trout: set a large, non-stick pan over medium-high heat. Add 1 tablespoon butter to pan, swirling to coat. Season 4 skin-on trout fillets (about 1 1/2 pounds total) on both sides with salt. Lay trout, skin-side-down, into pan. Cook until skins are seared, about 3 minutes. Add 2 tablespoons butter to pan. Once butter froths, spoon it over fillets, basting until meat firms up and flakes when pressed, 3 minutes. Transfer fillets to a plate and set non-stick pan back over low heat. // Add reserved blanched florets, 2 tablespoons sliced almonds, 2 tablespoons capers, drained, rinsed and roughly chopped, 1/2 lemon, supremed, and juice of 1/2 lemon to non-stick pan. Saute, using a wooden spoon to break up supremes, until aromatic, 1 minute. // To serve, lay each fillet on a plate, skin-side down. Scoop broccolini florets, almonds, capers and lemons, along with remaining sauce from pan, over fish. Serve with a good dollop of the broccolini puree under or alongside fish. Serve immediately.

-- Adapted from Daniel Boulud of Bar Boulud, New York

Fresh Tagliatelle With Lemon, Hazelnuts and Brown Butter

TOTAL TIME: 20 minutes

SERVES: 4

Set a large pot of salted water over high heat and bring to a boil. Meanwhile, in a large saute pan over medium-high heat, toast 1/3 cup hazelnuts, shaking pan often, until aromatic, about 2 minutes. Transfer nuts to a kitchen towel. Wrap nuts in towel and rub until skins flake off. Roughly chop nuts and set aside. // Wipe saute pan clean and set over medium heat. Add 1 pound fresh tagliatelle to boiling water and cook until noodles start to whiten and are just shy of al dente. Strain pasta, reserving 2 cups pasta water. Add 1 cup reserved pasta water, pasta and 6 tablespoons butter, cut into 1-inch cubes, to saute pan. Toss until butter melts and emulsifies with water, about 30 seconds. Add finely grated zest of 1 lemon, a squeeze of lemon juice, toasted hazelnuts, 2 sprigs thyme, freshly ground black pepper and 1 ounce grated pecorino. Cook, tossing, until lemon aroma intensifies and cheese melts, 1 minute. Adjust seasoning and add splashes of reserved pasta water as needed to stretch sauce until it coats all the pasta. // Meanwhile, in a separate small pan, melt 3 tablespoons butter over medium-high heat until it smells nutty and turns golden brown, about 1 minute. // To serve, distribute pasta among plates and top with dollops of fresh ricotta (about 6 tablespoons total). Season lightly with salt, then drizzle with browned butter. Serve immediately.

-- Adapted from Hillary Sterling of Vic's, New York

14. . . . you can get this olive oil

(if you act fast).

In Abruzzo, Italy, the first olives are ready to pluck in October, and they yield robust, fruit-forward oils labeled olio fresco. Ursini, a family-run operation in the heart of the region, produces a version so prized, so delightfully peppery on the finish, that last year's shipment sold out en route to the U.S. Harvested, milled, crushed, bottled and delivered to Marcelli Formaggi, the New Jersey-based importer, in under a week, it doesn't get any fresher than this. $35 for 500 ml, preorder at marcelliformaggi.com

-- Kelly Michele Guerotto

15. . . . fondue needn't be fussy.

What says cozy after a long day of leaf-ogling like a cheesy fondue? This fall, swap the specialized pot and forks -- not to mention the arm-numbing work of grating cheese -- for something so much simpler. St. Albans, a full-flavored aged cow's milk cheese from Vermont Creamery, comes in a ceramic crock you can pop right into the oven (toaster or standard). Ten minutes at 375 degrees melts the cheese to the right degree of ooziiness for dipping in hunks of crusty bread, roast potatoes or whatever you fancy. $9, available October at Whole Foods Market, Wegmans and other specialty stores; call 800-884-6287 for retail locations

-- K.M.G.

16. . . . brisk weather

calls for wood-fired cooking.

If you believe only professional pizzaiolos and heirs to rambling estates in the Italian countryside can have their own wood-fired ovens, it's time to think outside the pizza box. Not only is the Uuni 2S wood-fired oven capable of reaching 930 degrees in 10 minutes and baking Neapolitan-style pies in just 60 seconds, it also sits comfortably atop a picnic table, runs on wood pellets widely available at home and garden stores, and is even portable. Imagine how one of these would heat up tailgating season. $299, uuni.net

17. Because . . . holiday baking can yield unexpected rewards.

From Rosh Hashanah to Thanksgiving, this is a season of excuses to bake. A cast-iron skillet can deliver all kinds of festive sweets -- and ingenious solutions for putting the leftovers to tasty use, too

If you follow the news, you're probably aware that we waste a lot of food in the U.S. (an estimated 133 billion pounds each year). It wasn't until I started working on my new cookbook, "Stir, Sizzle, Bake" (Clarkson Potter, Sept. 27), about baking in cast-iron skillets, that the issue hit home -- literally. Developing the recipes left me with an ever mounting surplus of loaves and batches. My pragmatic resolution: Use the leftovers in other cast-iron-baked treats. I called the experiment -- and the ensuing chapter -- Baking It Forward.

One highly adaptable example: the challah d'epices, which is the kind of thing you might dream up if you're a Jew who celebrates Christmas. Pain d'epices is a sweet, spiced loaf -- gingerbread's French cousin. I created a yeasty challah version and upped the spice factor with a fragrant glaze.

The glossy, mahogany outcome tastes like late December, but the honey within signals the approach of the Rosh Hashanah holiday in October, ensuring, per Jewish tradition, a sweet future. I recommend you turn the stale remnants into bostock, an almond-enhanced, frangipane-topped vehicle for stale bread that makes breakfast a special occasion and sanctifies the afternoon tea ritual.

-- Charlotte Druckman

Challah d'Epices

ACTIVE TIME: 1 1/4 hours

TOTAL TIME: 5 hours

MAKES: 1 challah loaf

For the dough:

3 1/4 cups unbleached bread flour, plus more for dusting

1/4 cup rye flour

1 1/4 teaspoons ground cinnamon

1 1/4 teaspoons ground ginger

1/4 teaspoon ground cardamom

1/4 teaspoon ground white pepper

2 star anise pods, ground

1/8 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg

1/8 teaspoon ground cloves

3 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon butter, plus softened butter for greasing

3/4 cup warm water (110 degrees)

1/3 cup buckwheat honey

2 large eggs, plus 3 egg yolks

1 tablespoon finely grated orange zest

2 teaspoons active dry yeast

2 teaspoons coarse salt

For the glaze:

4 tablespoons unsalted butter

1/4 cup buckwheat honey

2 tablespoons plus 2 teaspoons fresh orange juice

1 star anise pod

1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon

1/4 teaspoon ground ginger

1. Make dough: In a large bowl, whisk together flours, cinnamon, ginger, cardamom, white pepper, star anise, nutmeg and cloves.

2. Grease a separate large bowl with butter. In a small saucepan, melt 2 tablespoons butter and let it cool a few minutes. Pour melted butter into greased bowl. Add flour mixture, warm water, honey, eggs, yolks, orange zest, yeast and salt. Using a rubber spatula or wooden spoon, mix ingredients until they come together into a dough. (As it gets harder to stir, you may want to work with your hands.)

3. Turn dough out onto a floured surface and set greased bowl aside for use in next step. Knead dough until smooth and pliant, 10 minutes. Dough will be sticky when you start kneading, so dust more flour onto work surface as needed. Once dough stops sticking to surface, it's ready.

4. In a small saucepan, melt 1 tablespoon butter over low heat and let it cool a few minutes. Place kneaded dough back in greased bowl and brush with melted butter. Cover bowl with a kitchen towel or plastic wrap, set in a warm place and let dough rise until it doubles in volume, 90 minutes.

5. Punch down dough, cover again and let rise until it doubles in size again, at least another 45 minutes. Meanwhile, in a 10-inch cast-iron skillet, melt remaining butter over low heat. Remove from heat and brush melted butter over bottom and sides of pan to coat.

6. Turn dough out onto a lightly floured surface and, using a bench scraper or sharp knife, split it evenly into halves. With your hands, roll one half into a thick, footlong rope. Do the same with the second half. Coil first rope into a circle and place in center of buttered skillet. Then wrap second rope around first, tucking edges of outer rope under inner coil to connect the 2 ropes.

7. Butter a piece of plastic wrap and cover dough pan. Let dough rise once more for 45 minutes.

8. Place a rack in lower third of oven and preheat to 375 degrees. Make glaze: In a small saucepan, combine butter, honey, orange juice and star anise pod. Bring to a simmer over medium-low heat. Remove from heat and stir in cinnamon and ginger. Let glaze cool in saucepan a few minutes, leaving star anise to steep. Brush dough liberally with glaze (about 2 tablespoons), reserving the rest.

9. Bake bread until it is golden brown and sounds hollow when you knock on it, about 35 minutes. As soon as challah comes out of oven, brush it with another liberal coating of the glaze (about 2 tablespoons). Leave challah in skillet for a couple of minutes to set before transferring to a wire rack to cool for about 30 minutes. You should be able to lift the challah out of the pan quite easily with a spatula. Reserve leftover glaze and any leftover challah for making bostock.

Find a recipe for gingerbread challah bostock at wsj.com/food.

18. . . . stews can be chic, too.

If the idea of a gray pot sounds cold or severe, you've yet to lay your eyes on Cashmere, the new color from Le Creuset. This warm, dove-like shade endears itself to any decor. By the hearth, a Dutch oven looks like an heirloom; in a high-tech kitchen, it's the most modern of pots. The low-shine exterior transitions elegantly from oven to table, while the interior enamel glaze and cast-iron core provide the non-reactive surface and ace heat distribution cooks find indispensable in all Le Creuset cookware. $320 for 5 1/2 -quart Dutch oven, lecreuset.com

-- Aleksandra Crapanzano

19. . . . these beers

reap the whole harvest.

Barley reigns in brewing these days, but creative brewers are rediscovering what they can get from other grains more commonly seen at the bakery than at the bar. Consider the snappy, fruity pop of rice in Samurai Rice Ale (5.1% ABV) from Great Divide Brewing Co.; the earthy chew of spelt in Jester King Brewery's Das Uberkind Vieille Saison (6.0% ABV); or the sweetly smoky tang of heirloom corn and mesquite seeds in Dogfish Head's Tiswin (5.25% ABV). Try them before winter slithers in.

-- William Bostwick

20. Because . . . vintners toil so we can tipple.

Harvest winery visits are a classic fall excursion -- but they don't reveal what really goes into making that glass of Merlot

By Lettie Teague

Harvest season is here, the time of year when oenophiles everywhere pile into cars and head to wine country for an up-close and personal look at their favorite wineries. While visitors may sample recent vintages, tour the vineyards and perhaps even indulge in a little ceremonial grape stomping, they aren't likely to see much of the real action. Nor are they likely to know about the problems winemakers often face as they work to get that great glass of wine into consumers' hands.

Broken sorting tables, rain, hail, the flock of birds that ate half the year's grapes are just a few of the possible harvest mishaps. Things can go remarkably well or catastrophically wrong, and winemakers don't always know which one it will be. With harvest, uncertainty is a given.

One of the few certainties is that the grapes will be picked. Choosing the harvest date is the most important decision a vintner makes every year, once he or she has determined that the fruit is ripe, with an ideal balance between sugar and acidity. Everything follows from this single decision. If the grapes are underripe, the wine might have a green note; if they're too ripe, it might be too high in alcohol. So critical is the call that assistant winemakers have told me it's the biggest difference between their position and the head winemaker's job.

Once a date has been selected, speed is critical. The actual harvest, which can last days or weeks, is a full-court press to get the fruit off the vine and into bins as quickly and efficiently -- and with as much care -- as possible. Just-picked grapes are in a fragile state, and their juice can easily oxidize if the fruit is bruised or damaged.

Although harvesting grapes with machines is faster and more efficient, many producers still choose to harvest by hand, either because their vineyards are too small, too steep or too narrow, or because they believe a human being, though slower, can do a better job of picking the best grapes.

Time of day is also key; grapes are often harvested late at night or very early in the morning to avoid high daytime temperatures. In Napa, where harvest can begin as early as August, days can reach 100 degrees. Picking grapes during the less-sweltering hours benefits not only the workers but also the grapes, as cooler temperatures preserve acidity and help sugar levels stay stable.

Even in the best conditions, though, harvest is an "endurance test and the ultimate cross-fit program," said Morgan Clendenen, winemaker and owner of Cold Heaven Cellars in Buellton, Calif. She marked her 20th harvest this year. This may sound substantial, but in an irony that winemakers sometimes joke about, being in the business for decades like Ms. Clendenen translates to actually producing wine only a couple dozen times.

Of course, winemakers are making critical decisions long before harvest, such as when and how to prune vines, whether to irrigate and whether to perform a bit of canopy management, removing the green leaves that cover the fruit to ensure that it gets sun or that air circulates through the vines to prevent rot.

It's not just the vines that are cleaned up; wineries require rigorous maintenance as well, especially at harvest time. Carlo DeVito, co-owner of Hudson-Chatham Winery in Ghent, N.Y., said he devotes hours to "cleaning equipment, cleaning containers and cleaning the crush pad" before harvest. Winemakers often say it takes a lot of water to make wine. They like to say it takes a lot of beer, too.

Of course, all these preparations may be for naught if Mother Nature doesn't cooperate. "One cannot control the weather on any level. One can only react to it," noted winemaker Rich Olsen-Harbich, of Bedell Cellars on the North Fork of Long Island, N.Y. Another North Fork vintner, Charles Massoud, of Paumanok Vineyards, put it this way: "We are in a partnership with Mother Nature, but she is the senior partner."

The next time you open a bottle of wine this fall you might want to raise a glass to all the people behind the scenes who helped bring it to your table. Here's to a happy, healthy, hail-free harvest season!

OENOFILE // THREE FALL-FRIENDLY WINES FROM CHALLENGING VINTAGES

2011 Shafer Napa Valley Merlot $50

Though the 2011 vintage in Napa Valley was one of the worst of the past decades, the Shafer team turned out a fine Merlot. Bolstered by some Cabernet and Malbec, this lush, mouthfilling wine has notes of cedar, spice and red fruit.

2012 Marc Deschamps Pouilly-Fume Les Champs de Cri $30

"Complicated" is never a good word when it comes to vintage descriptors, but that's exactly what 2012 proved to be in the Loire Valley. Yet this Pouilly-Fume is a star, marked by a lively acidity and a penetrating mineral finish.

2013 Soter Vineyards North Valley Chardonnay $32

This vintage is "a good example of the skill, challenges and sacrifices necessary to make good wines in difficult years," said winemaker Tony Soter. Aged in new and neutral oak, it's a lithe wine, judiciously balanced between fruit and acid.

21. . . . football season means

muchos nachos.

Gina Hamadey's cookbook "Buenos Nachos!" (Dovetail, September) will keep you crunching all the way to Super Bowl Sunday. It includes this recipe for a spicy, ranch-dressing-dolloped paper-bag version contributed by Kristen Kish, winner of Season 10 of Bravo's "Top Chef." Take it along whether you're headed to a stadium or a 50-yard-line seat in front of the TV.

Nachos in a Bag

TOTAL TIME: 20 minutes

SERVES: 4

Heat a large skillet over medium-high heat. Add 1 pound ground beef to pan. Cook, stirring and breaking up meat with a spoon, until well browned, 8-10 minutes. Add 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon chili powder, 1 teaspoon ground cumin, 1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper, 1/2 teaspoon smoked paprika, 1/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper, 1/4 teaspoon ground coriander and 1/4 cup tomato paste. Cook, stirring, another minute. Add 1/2 cup water, bring to a simmer and cook until meat has absorbed liquid, about 5 minutes more. Off heat, stir in juice of 1 lime. Set aside. // Divide 10 ounces tortilla chips (from 1 medium bag) among 4 brown-paper lunch bags then top with equal portions meat mixture, 1 cup grated sharp cheddar cheese, 1/4 cup chopped red onions, 1/4 cup pickled jalapeno slices, 1/2 cup cooked corn kernels, 1/2 cup sliced black olives, 1 large tomato, cored and diced, 1/2 cup sour cream and 1/4 cup bottled ranch dressing. // Close and shake bags well to distribute ingredients.

-- Adapted from "Buenos Nachos!" by Gina Hamadey (Dovetail)

22. . . . pumpkin

spice doesn't have to be banal.

If the annual wave of pumpkin-spice products has you turning up your nose, consider a new delivery system for that fallish flavor. For her latest cookbook, "Dorie's Cookies" (Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, October), baking maven Dorie Greenspan developed an outstanding pumpkin-spice whoopie pie with a creamy dulce de leche filling. Tart cranberries provide pop, and a dash of cardamom introduces a can't-quite-put-your-finger-on-it complexity. Find the recipe at wsj.com/food.

-- K.M.G.

FALL WOULDN'T BE

FALL WITHOUT . . .

". . . hard cider. As autumn arrives with heartier fare, I start to think about sidra, the bone-dry, funky and tart cider produced in northern Spain. It pairs perfectly with the roasts, stews and braises that combat the slight chill in the air.

Fortunately, the U.S. is in the midst of a cider revival, so if you can't find the Spanish stuff, there's plenty of serious American cider to pair with dinner."

Jonah Miller,

executive chef-owner of Huertas in New York and the subject of "Generation Chef" by Karen Stabiner (Avery, September)

ADVENTURE & TRAVEL

23. Because . . . you can go back to school minus the homework.

An Oxford alum finds her pedigreed university even more inviting sans the angst of exams

By Kate Maxwell

It was exam season in Oxford, and cadres of students patrolled the High Street, a few still cramming notes, and consequently dodging lampposts, as they neared the Examination Schools. Their attire was identical: Every student wore full academic dress, or subfusc, as it is known here -- black suits and white bow ties on the men; black skirts and velvet bows for women; everyone in gowns, mortarboards and a carnation buttonhole.

I was once an 11th-hour note-crammer, and as I surveyed them through the window of the Old Bank Hotel, between mouthfuls of breakfast kipper, I felt a mixture of deep-seated dread and relief that I'd never have to wear a white carnation again. I'd started at Oxford University in the fall of 1996, when the wisteria was turning gold as if determined to match the stone buildings. Twenty years later, I'd returned to take a nostalgic tour, because you don't have to be a student to access the university's quadrangles and cloisters (check ox.ac.uk for details). Had the digital age eradicated the old traditions, I wondered? Would there be an artisanal coffee shop on every corner?

Oxford, 60 miles northwest of London, is the oldest English-speaking university in the world, a center for teaching since the 11th century whose domes and spires have starred in everything from "The Italian Job" to the Harry Potter franchise. The university is divided into 39 colleges, all of which are ranked on the Norrington Table system according to the classes of degree their students achieve. My own Oxford history began when, as a high-school student, I visited Norrington-topper Magdalen College, where Oscar Wilde and C.S. Lewis studied, so it was there that I started my return tour. I remember sprawling, illegally, on Magdalen's cloister-framed striped grass quad and imagining three glorious years of punting and high jinks, with a little studying thrown in, not unlike the pursuits of the characters in Evelyn Waugh's "Brideshead Revisited." Two decades after that first visit, Magdalen's 15th-century cloisters, decorated with coats of arms and gargoyles, looked every bit as inspiring as I remembered, though deserted, the scholars no doubt scribing upstairs. Still, I found a boisterous game of croquet unfurling on the lawn in front of the noble New Building (completed in 1740s), while a trio on a punt drifted down Holywell Mill Stream, which runs alongside the college.

In the end, I'd taken the less challenging option, and, rather than Magdalen, applied to read English Literature at St Edmund Hall, which has mostly languished near the foot of the Norrington Table. Best known for its rugby teams and drinking games, "Teddy Hall" was the alma mater of my Scottish grandfather, Hamish, who studied forestry here in the late 1920s. When I told him, with great pride, that I'd been accepted to his college, he recommended I go to Edinburgh University instead.

Soon after arriving this time around, I did something I'd never have dreamed of as a student: I went to the daily Choral Evensong service at Christ Church Cathedral. Our modest congregation was ushered to pews beneath a stone fan-vaulted ceiling. The all-male choir, in red gowns, gave an invigorating performance, as they have most days for the last 500 years. Once they'd bellowed their last note, I went to sniff out more familiar ground, starting on St. Giles at the Eagle & Child pub. The literary group The Inklings, who included C.S. Lewis and J.R.R. Tolkien, had dubbed it the "Bird and Baby" and gathered there to discuss their fantastical tales of wizards, hobbits and talking lions. The pub seemed to be keener on marketing than in my student days, offering questionable Lewis- and Tolkien-inspired art for sale. I ordered a half-pint of Black Sheep beer and discovered, via some casual eavesdropping, that the chat hadn't changed much in 20 years: A group of students was discussing their night out at Park End nightclub and the best place to buy cheap groceries. If these were the literary giants of the 21st century, they were keeping it to themselves.

I walked further north, through Jericho, a fashionable suburb of Victorian terraced cottages bordered by the Oxford Canal. Should the international craft beer and coffee movements and associated hipster industries have made their mark anywhere in Oxford, it would, I thought, be here. Indeed, Walton Street's shop fronts had been gussied up, but the residents were the same. Even Raoul's cocktail bar, the kind of place you went when the check for your student loan had cleared, had survived, albeit with a newly extensive drinks list that would rival the early English catalog of the Bodleian, Oxford's gargantuan research library.

My student diet at Oxford had consisted mainly of just-add-water noodles and doner kebabs from Ahmed's van on the High (Oxonians drop the "Street"). Things always looked up when my parents were in town, however. They'd book a table at Brasserie Blanc, Brown's or Gee's, all of which remain. My corner table for one in Gee's olive-tree-and-twinkly-light-filled conservatory that evening felt most indulgent, and the food -- local asparagus and chargrilled guinea fowl -- tasted even better than I remembered. That's one thing that has changed in Oxford. England's cuisine has ratcheted up in the last two decades, and what's cooked between the dreaming spires has also improved no end -- even if the places it is served are the same.

The next day, I walked back through Jericho, across Port Meadow -- the grassy expanse sprinkled with daisies and buttercups, where cows graze and from which you can spy the university church's spire -- to the Perch pub. This 17th-century coaching inn across the Isis (the name given to this stretch of River Thames eons before the advent of the terror group) has had a country-casual refurb and its food, as well as its bucolic setting, is now well worth the half-hour walk from the town center.

Before I made my way back to London, I visited the gleaming new Weston Library, opened by Prince William, where a copy of the Gutenberg Bible and Oscar Wilde's court summons are displayed, then took a last nostalgic turn around the Radcliffe Camera, a science library and a strong contender for world's best-looking building for books. As I raised my phone to snap a picture of the amber stone columns radiant in the evening light, a cyclist in subfusc screeched and swerved to avoid me, yelling "Tourist!" Rather than lament my outsider status I decided to celebrate it. Keep your carnation buttonhole and your mortarboard, I thought. The Oxford I left is as well preserved as the Mummies in the Ashmolean Museum (which, incidentally, also has decent food and views at its new rooftop restaurant), but the city has become a much better place to visit.

24. . . . the great migration is greater later.

The pesky thing about so-called wonders of the world is that people want to see them; crowds are inevitable. Case in point: the Great Wildlife Migration, when more than a million wildebeest and zebra make their annual round-trip from Tanzania's Serengeti to the grasslands of Kenya's Masai Mara, across the crocodile-infested Mara River. As far as bloody spectacles go, "Game of Thrones" has nothing on the animal kingdom. Though the timing varies year to year, the migration typically kicks off in May, which allows a stampede of summer vacationers to descend with their telephoto lenses. Nina Wennersten, of the travel company Hippo Creek Safaris (hippocreeksafaris.com), counsels patience: "Wait until late September or October. That's when the herds head back to the Serengeti, and there are fewer people around to spoil the views." As for where to bunk down close to the action, the new luxe mobile camp Roving Bushtops, now in the central Serengeti, does its own migrating. Come January or February, during the wildebeest birthing season, it will follow the herds to the southern Serengeti. bushtopscamps.com

25. . . . election distraction

is available in D.C.

The National Museum of African American History & Culture, which opens Sept. 24 on Washington, D.C.'s National Mall, has been in the works even longer than Boston's Big Dig. The original idea came up in the early 1900s, and in the last decade the institution has been on a kind of multicontinent antiquing spree to furnish its new home. A filigreed bronzed exterior, designed by architect David Adjaye, recalls the work of enslaved New Orleans ironsmiths, and within, the nearly 40,000-piece-strong collection includes the Mothership stage set for the Parliament-Funkadelic music collective, shards of a sunken slave ship and handmade hats by early Philadelphia milliner Mae Reeves (reproductions are for sale in the shop). It's an expansive story; if it weren't in the nation's tower-adverse capital, it would easily fill a skyscraper. nmaahc.si.edu

-- Ryan Haase

26. . . . this cruise

offers new views.

When sophisticates dream of the ultimate scenic-cruise destination, they instantly think of Dubuque, Iowa. OK, that's debatable. But the French America Line, a boutique river cruise scheduled to launch this fall and call on dozens of port cities, including Dubuque, makes a compelling claim on a traveler's imagination. The Big Easy -- New Orleans -- is the home dock for the 150-passenger Louisiane. And "easy" seems to be the guiding spirit for its five- to 10-day nearly all-inclusive sailings on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. While the lower Mississippi owns bragging rights to culture -- the blues belong to Memphis; jazz to New Orleans -- it's the upper river that holds a monopoly on the bluffs and the beauty. "The river below St. Louis has been described time and again, and it is the least interesting part." That observer, of course, was Mark Twain, and surely there is no more stylish way to visit his Hannibal, Mo., home than onboard a white-frosted riverboat. frenchamericaline.com

-- Michael Tortorello

27. Because . . . New Orleans takes

Halloween dead seriously.

If you want a haunting autumn getaway, this city buries all others

By Steve Garbarino

Few cities revel in the macabre and dearly departed as New Orleans does. A slew of haunted houses, vampire tours and ghost-themed excursions run year-round, and a popular bumper sticker boasts a rare skill: "New Orleans: We Put the FUN in Funeral." So it's no surprise that locals excel at Halloween-specific festivities, which begin soon after September's lethargy-inducing humidity lifts; by mid-October, the city is back in party mode. And this year, thanks to new restaurant and hotel openings, New Orleans is even more equipped to bring weary visitors back from the dead.

The two biggest annual Halloween events are the Krewe of Boo parade (Oct. 22) and Voodoo Music + Arts Experience festival (Oct. 28-30). Warning: Both are maddeningly popular. Find a spot early. At the parade, which rolls through the French Quarter, with all its hidden gardens and Anne Rice-inspiring alleyways, participants with skeleton face-paint and monster-themed floats rival Mexico City's Day of the Dead for eerie eye-candy.

A week later, in New Orleans's City Park, multiple stages will draw 100,000 or more concertgoers to the three-night Voodoo fest. Set amid stone bridges and 600-year-old live oaks, the concert attracts marquee names like this year's headliners, Arcade Fire, the Weeknd and Tool. After the show, cross a bayou footbridge and peek inside Esplanade Ridge's St. Louis Cemetery No. 3, one of the creepiest in the city.

Even the tony Garden District rises to the All Hallows occasion, when the stately antebellum and Greek Revival manors on St. Charles Avenue are spookily transformed -- their facades and wrought-iron work swathed with cobwebs and giant spider props almost the size of the "Alien" that inconvenienced Sigourney Weaver in the 1979 film. Ambitiously landscaped grounds are dotted with tombstones, crawling with skeletons and lurching mechanical zombies. Witches on brooms swing from oaks, magnolias and banana palms.

Daylight hours can prove gleefully menacing too. Gussy up to enter the turreted Victorian sprawl that is the Commander's Palace restaurant for its boisterous Haute Creole jazz brunch and 25-cent Martinis, then walk it off in the decrepit Lafayette Cemetery No. 1 across the street, peeking into crumbling mausoleums and getting lost in its labyrinthine maze of tombs.

When night falls, visitors have a dizzying array of dining options. Since Hurricane Katrina, in 2005, nearly 700 restaurants have opened in the city. Many ushered in an adventurous foodie renaissance and established themselves in once-blighted or storm-ravaged corridors where tourists previously seldom ventured.

Nearly 60 restaurants debuted this past year alone, including standouts such as Shaya, an Israeli restaurant in the city's Uptown section, that nabbed this year's "Best New Restaurant" award from the James Beard Foundation. Others worth seeking out: Seaworthy, an airy oyster and seafood bar situated in a historic townhouse in the Warehouse District; Cavan, a seafood spot nestled in an old Victorian on Magazine Street; and Primitivo, a smoking-and-grilling meat-lover's fantasy. Celebrated chefs such as Emeril Lagasse and Bayona chef Susan Spicer are debuting new gustatory outposts too. All these newcomers are keeping the iconic white-tablecloth French-Creole mainstays -- now dusted off -- on their toes, including power-lunch and party-palace stronghold Galatoire's, the handsomely renovated Brennan's, and Tujague's, which turns 160 this year and houses one of the country's most colorful stand-up bars.

Speaking of watering holes, the walking dead can now find Corpse Reviver cocktails in hopping nightlife neighborhoods like Mid-City, Broadmoor, St. Roch, Carrollton and the Central City district's Oretha Castle Haley Boulevard.

The tipsy, the spooked or the lazy will soon find it easier to get from Point A to Point B with the city's new streetcar line expected to be in operation later this fall. Meanwhile, stretches of new bicycle paths, unheard of just a few years ago, now make the inaccessible a breeze. Rent a gear-free cruiser at Bicycle Michael's in the Faubourg Marigny or Uptown at Mike the Bike Guy and catch all those architectural details and hideaway bars you might miss from a car window.

And if you're feeling above it all, you can quite literally peer down on the debauchery from two romantic rooftop lounge bars at notable new hotels: The Warehouse District's Ace Hotel New Orleans and the Garden District's venerable Pontchartrain, reopened earlier this year after a massive renovation. You won't find a Corpse Reviver on the latter's cocktail menu, but you will find a Death in the LGD (Lower Garden District). A concoction of gin and sparkling wine, it's not as frightening as it sounds.

28. . . . hot springs and cool air mix nicely.

Long before the swanky ski resorts and craft breweries arrived, Colorado was a place health-conscious tourists mobbed, drawn to its dry mountain air and multitude of mineral springs. By the mid-1800s, spring-fed sanitariums had sprung up all over the Rocky Mountains, so many that this summer the state designated a 720-mile historic hot-spring loop, encompassing eight thermal regions. The springs vary in size and facilities. At the foot of Mount Princeton, in Nathrop, they're the centerpiece of a resort (with 140 rooms and a spa) where you'll want to stay awhile. Strawberry Park Hot Springs, in Steamboat, merits a brisker day visit. But if you feel like earning your salubrious soak this fall, consider one of the dozens of undeveloped, hike-in hot springs, such as Rainbow Hot Springs, with its multiple natural pools and a steaming waterfall, hidden at the end of a 5-mile trek into the Weminuche Wilderness. A much shorter but not effortless hike leads to Radium, a cliff-side thermal pool on the Colorado River. It's just a mile-long trail, but it's a steep incline and then a rocky descent to the pool.

-- Brigid Mander

29. . . . anyone can know what kind of leaf

they're peeping.

Autumn road trippers can discover there's more to spot in the wild than errant Pokemon by downloading iNaturalist. The California Academy of Sciences app encourages users to train their lenses on mysterious flora and fauna. Upload photos of an unknown species to have it reviewed by a community that includes botanists, birders and researchers. Response time varies -- a pair of birds we uploaded were identified within an hour as House Sparrows; a fallen leaf was revealed as a Silver Maple within a day. Each finding fuels the Academy's research. inaturalist.org

-- R.H.

30. Because . . . beaches are distinctly better when empty.

Many of the most scenic island destinations in the U.S. and Europe clear out in the fall. That's your cue to move in

By Chaney Kwak

Islands in summertime belong to swimmers, sun-worshippers and proponents of the #everybodyisbeautiful movement. Islands in the fall belong to the romantics. You'll probably need to wear a sweater while you're beachcombing, but the crowds have left and the waterfront hotels and restaurants are usually yours for the taking. Our fave four:

1. Block Island, R.I.

This fall, America's first offshore wind farm will retire Block Island's diesel generators, making this Atlantic isle, between Montauk and Martha's Vineyard, even more enviably pristine. Salt-pickled cottages and Adirondack chairs look out on sea vistas that have changed little over the years, save for the five windmills. In September and October, called "local summer," the 17 miles of beaches are practically devoid of visitors other than the migratory falcons and hummingbirds that recharge here. Recharge yourself at the newly renovated Hotel Manisses, steps from the ferry landing (from $299; hotelmanisses.com).

2. Orcas Island, Wash.

The largest of the San Juan Islands, Orcas may not have stoplights or chain stores but it does have serious foodie cred. Island orchards, farms and shellfish purveyors supply a number of good restaurants such as Hogstone's Wood Oven, owned by farmer-restaurantier Jay Blackinton, a James Beard Award semifinalist. The Orcas Island Farm Tour, on Oct. 2, offers guided field trips. In between eating your way around the island, you can hike through the cedar forests and even sleep in one -- a glamping outfit in Moran State Park stays open until Oct. 9 (from $99; stayleanto.com).

3. Isle of Skye, Scotland

Even in the dead of fall on this eminently hikeable Hebrides isle, the translucent water off Claigan Coral Beach brings to mind the Caribbean more than the Scottish Highlands, and the island's inlets, lochs and oddball geological formations look even more dramatic when the trees turn to gold. Best of all, when the chill sets in, find the closest Highland malt. As for accommodations, the Victorian cottages on the grounds of the 14th-century Dunvegan Castle have been spiffed up without losing their charm (from about $398; dunvegancastle.com).

4. Sardinia, Italy

Once the yachts motor away and the ritzy resorts shutter for the season, this Mediterranean showoff returns to its unassuming self. The biggest crowds you'll find are the locals weaving around the Autunno in Barbagia festival, held each weekend from September through December. That's where you can stock up on regional cheeses, liquor and other traditional foodstuffs (cuoredellasardegna.it). Fall also sees prices drop, making it an affordable time to check out Costa Smeralda, celebrity central in summer. Book a room at Cervo Hotel, overlooking the old harbor (from about $210 a night; hotelcervocostasmeralda.com).

31. . . . you can bargain-shop for cushy villas and castles.

European villa rentals with staff and rambling grounds aren't typically for the budget conscious. This time of year, however, rates dip to near plebeian levels. For example, the six-bedroom Bastide de La Pais in Provence -- which comes with a private chef, views of Luberon Regional Nature Park and a pool -- now runs about $6,322 a week, down from more than $10,000 a week in summer (redsavannah.com). Prospective castle dwellers can find a few deals, too, especially if they bring their whole posse; in Northern Ireland, the 17th-century Belle Isle Castle, a private island estate with 13 guest rooms, drops its weekly rates to around $8,400 after Oct. 27 (elegant.ie).

-- Shayla Martin

32. . . . backstage can be just as operatic.

Fall means the start of "The Season," but if you don't have a spare four hours to see an opera, you can still spend a tight 40 minutes seeing an opera house. Celebrating its 50th anniversary in Lincoln Center, New York's Metropolitan Opera offers backstage tours, starting again in October, where you can watch stagehands prep sets, then visit the spaces under the stage, from the dressing rooms to the wig-making department (metopera.org). Tours are also available at the Palais Garnier, heart of 19th-century Parisian society (operadeparis.fr/en), and Dresden's Semperoper, which like the rest of the city's firebombed Baroque center, has risen from the ashes (semperoper.de/en).

-- Nick Gallagher

FALL WOULDN'T BE FALL WITHOUT . . .

". . . camping in Joshua Tree, when it's warm enough to hike during the day but cool enough to roast marshmallows at night, and Thanksgiving dinner paired with Pinot Noir from New Zealand's Otago wine region."

Phil Keoghan,

host of "The Amazing Race"

DESIGN & DECORATING

33. Because . . . watching paint dry is dull.

And it dries much faster in the fall. Five wall-color trends to try at home

By Elizabeth Anne Hartman

It's time to address the cautious neutrality that has characterized most Americans' wall-color choices of late, not only because interior design has taken a turn for the spirited, but because fall's low humidity and coolness are ideal for working on indoor projects.

Cocooning

In his Sag Harbor home, New York designer Steven Gambrel created an enveloping den with tone-on-tone purples: walls, moldings, even doors in Benjamin Moore's Passion Plum; a purple tufted linen sofa and aubergine lampshades. "Dousing all the surfaces of a room with the same color lends quiet and calm," he said. "Accent walls are for those who can't commit," said Adam Rolston, a partner at INC Architecture and Design in New York. Allover, deeply saturated color -- from jewel tones such as Farrow & Ball's moody Inchyra Blue to high-gloss black -- create a sanctuary. Even little rooms benefit. "No small, dark room ever got bigger or better by being painted white," said Chicago designer Tom Stringer.

Overhead Shine

"Ceilings are often underutilized," said New York designer Phillip Thomas. "I turn to metallic paints to carry and reflect light through a space." Like a pair of zebra Mary Janes with a staid gray suit, "contrast makes a space interesting," added New York-based designer Kati Curtis, who recommends a shimmering ceiling next to matte walls.

Global Pinking

"The right pink has warmth and depth," said Los Angeles designer Michael Smith. "It can be empowering." The current trending version is not pale or cotton-candy pink but a gender-neutral shade dirtied with a touch of blue or gray, like Farrow & Ball's Setting Plaster. Mr. Rolston pairs pink with beige, likening the scheme to Botticelli's "Birth of Venus." "It's so perverse, so beautiful."

Fresco Fever

"Integral plaster is the new paint," said Mr. Rolston. Whether enlisting Venetian plaster, which contains marble dust, or its Moroccan cousin, Tadelakt, which has lime and soap in the mix, designers are adding depth and detail with age-old techniques. Anyone can achieve similar effects, without hiring expensive pros, with materials such as Annie Sloan's chalk paints or Ralph Lauren's Polished Patina product. Brooklyn designer Kathryn Scott turns to lime paint, such as the TransMineral USA line, "to embrace an old-world aesthetic, with a very earthy, welcoming surface."

Black Details

If colors such as oxblood and pink make you want to dive into a bucket of Decorator White and call it a day, consider black trim against white walls, another au courant strategy. New York designer Benjamin Vandiver uses the technique to create architectural interest where little exists. For a quick remodel of a New York apartment, he sprayed casement window frames with Farrow & Ball's Railings No. 31 in satin finish, and that alone "made a huge difference," he said.

Pick a rose: Contemporary pinks are a little dirty, not saccharine, said New York designer Adam Rolston. Antique Coral 1198, $70 per gallon, benjaminmoore.com

Factor in finish: Shiny black is sexy and chic, said Houston designer Katie Scott, while matte is more somber. Eurolux Gloss Black, $50 per liter, finepaintsofeurope.com

Rush for gold: "Metallics are great for reflecting light into dark spaces," said Mr. Rolston. Metallic Paint in Champagne, $45 per quart, modernmasters.com

34. . . . fabrics don't have to be so darn delicate.

In this unsticky season, you can enjoy textiles with more body to them than barely-there linen has: denim, wool, mohair. These oversize, about 2-feet-square (or larger) floor pillows from Kelly Behun Studio are hand woven from the cotton and silk remnants of sturdy, vintage Moroccan rugs into colorful topographical patterns -- bohemian, energetically earthy cushions that have all the texture August simply doesn't allow. $850, Barneys New York, 212-826-8900

-- Tim Gavan

35. . . . the new fall

makeup colors

are worth

a sit-down

trial.

Just as the latest cornucopia of smoky shadows and burgundy lipsticks arrives, so does a dressing table that would make Rita Hayworth's hair curl in envy. Italian designer Matteo Cibic looked everywhere, from the Italian Renaissance to 1940s Hollywood, for inspiration for his Woman in Paris vanity, he said, adding that the glamorous piece, made of solid wood finished to look like ivory inlay, is not only timeless but rootless. "The Indians find it very Indian, but when you show it in Italy, it looks Italian." Matteo Cibic Dressing Table by Scarlet Splendour, $8,435, 91-98-3101-0243

-- Julie Lasky

36. . . . dinner needn't be accompanied by the snaps of a bug zapper.

Your picnicking days are over -- the plastic plates recycled, the grill tools put away. Get ready to enjoy good china again and fare you don't clean up with a garden hose. Designer Jonathan Adler's mini serving-bowl set, part of his new Berlin tabletop collection, is a modern take on the Machine Age, with a trio of rosy brass bowls nesting on a sleek geometric steel base. "I'm just a big believer in mixing metals," Mr. Adler said. "Call me radical." $298, Jonathan Adler, 800-963-0891

-- J.L.

37. . . . it's nice to be in the middle of the woods.

Trees are stars now, even those that are thinly sliced. Plexwood end-grain tiles, for floors or walls, are beautifully striped with the veneers of nine different species. Choose the combinations, and arrange the tiles in whatever pattern you and your installer dream up. The surfaces are partially finished so you decide the degree of shine. And if that doesn't give you enough flexibility, know that the tiles are removable. From about $6 per square foot, Plexwood, 31-30-296-43-67

-- J.L.

38. . . . dead leaves

can live forever.

These flat, handmade resin leaf sculptures/trays from Australian company Dinosaur Designs are polished proof that dead things can be deceptively lively. Buy two or more and mix the hues (midnight blues, scientific-seeming whites) or the sizes, which range from just under a foot across -- a potential platter -- to discs half that size that could serve as wildly overqualified coasters. Either way, you can ditch the wax paper for pressing leaves and order yours pre-preserved. Cream, $300, and blue, $250, Dinosaur Designs, 212-680-3523

-- T.G.

39. Because . . . you can pick an apple tree.

While a gastronome picks apples in the fall,

a gardener dreams of planting the entire tree

By Michael Tortorello

Two desires -- to collect apples and plant a fruit tree -- coincide in fall. You sample apple varieties at the same time that catalogs and nurseries take orders for trees to deliver in spring.

For a few years, I've had designs on installing a pair of heirloom apple trees outside my apartment in St. Paul, Minn. (If I wanted to munch a Gala, I could buy it at Costco.) The Italianate mansion that houses our condo was once an archbishop's residence, and I suspect the old lawn held orchard trees -- for the fruit and the pale, perfumed blossoms in April, as well as the charismatic physiognomy of the limbs. The lower branches, with their weathered gray bark and horizontal growth habit, remind me of an elephant's trunk. And of course, an apple tree along a front walk is the ultimate vending machine, dispensing snacks every time you pass.

Modern-day critics -- that's code for my wife -- complain about apple trees: the leaf blights, the maggots, the unpicked fruit that smashes on car hoods. I offer two remedies: organic sprays and an acceptance of imperfection in the garden. If you can't embrace either, an apple tree probably isn't for you.

Selecting the right trees -- you'll probably need two varieties for successful pollination -- makes everything easier, said horticulture writer Lee Reich, who has experimented with some 20 apple varieties at home in New Paltz, N.Y. Order one- or two-year-old bare-root trees to start, he advised, basically 4-foot-long sticks with a shock of roots that cost $25 to $30.

You'd rather spray, prune and harvest "on a short ladder, or no ladder," said Mr. Reich. The solution is an apple tree on a "dwarf" or "semi-dwarf" rootstock, which grows to 6 to 9 feet.

Gidon Coll, founder of Original Sin Hard Cider, planted 100 varieties on dwarf rootstock at his family's Hudson Valley dairy farm. He suggested Rubinette, a fussy tree whose fruit's sweet-tart balance earns reviews as "maybe the finest eating apple in Europe." An easier-to-grow option is St. Edmund's Russet, Mr. Coll said. The sweet, not sugary, fruit is the yellow-brown of a 1970s cable-knit sweater, with a similarly rough skin.

I ordered the trees a couple of weeks ago. And, until spring, my work on the home orchard was done.

40. . . . learning to ride has gotten a lot safer.

You may dream of sweeping your kid's toys through a trapdoor in the floor. The Furia rocking horse -- a docile filly that won't buck -- needn't ever be put away. Designed by Front for Wiener GTV Design in bent beechwood and leather, this beauty works as sculpture when not trotting. "It's not necessary to have children" to appreciate it, said Front co-founder Anna Lindgren. $1,998, DZINEelements, 203-855-9325

-- J.L.

41. . . . summer sunshine is prosaic.

There's a well-stoked romantic notion about reading a book by the light of a robust fire on an autumn night. For those of us who lack the hearth required to pursue such Bronte-sister pastimes, the Tartufo Lamp from ANNA by RabLabs casts a comparably picturesque glow through its hand-carved amethyst shade. The weighty, 6.5-inch globe, which also comes in alabaster, sits atop a mirror-polished nickel or brass base. $2,395, barneys.com

-- T.G.

42. . . . plain hot tea is plainly tempting come fall.

You'll no longer crave iced morning pick-me-ups. But bypass that steaming paper cup of vaguely chemical, pumpkin-spiced brew, and get your hands on this simple Royal Doulton Olio Teapot from British designers Edward Barber and Jay Osgerby. Exposed stoneware gives the kettle the look of an anthropological discovery and harkens back to a time before cardboard sleeves and unpronounceable beverage names littered our consciousness. $86, royaldoulton.com

-- T.G.

FALL WOULDN'T BE FALL WITHOUT . . .

". . . the colors. They're more intense than in summer, when the sun is so bright colors get washed out. I remember lying on the ground, looking at a blue sky and the bronzy maple trees and thinking, 'What a beautiful combination.' You get creative about color."

Bunny Williams

New York designer and author of "A House by the Sea" (Abrams)

GEAR & GADGETS

43. Because . . . you can sway coolly at your campsite.

Looking to spend a weekend in the woods without the burden of a cumbersome tent? Consider the breezy ease of a camping hammock

By Brigid Mander

Autumn is, in many ways, the ideal season to go camping: Parks are no longer teeming. The bug population is in decline. Still, even with the industrious mood that fall inspires, setting up a tent can be laborious. So why not ditch it for an easier solution: a camping hammock?

If you doubt you can sleep comfortably suspended between two trees, fear not. Camping hammocks are neither constructed nor suspended like the one swaying in your backyard; these use taut, technical fabrics and are more stable, which means you're less likely to flip out of one. And to minimize your exposure to the elements, you'll most likely string a bug net and rain tarp over you. (Don't worry: still easy.)

Sales of camping hammocks have doubled between 2013 and 2015, according to market-research firm NPD Group. And with good reason: Unlike with a tent, you needn't exhaust yourself finding flat ground or clearing an area of rocks. If the earth is damp, no problem -- you're above all that. And once you get the hang of it, hammocks are straightforward to set up; no fiddly tentpoles here.

To keep the autumn chill off your back as you sleep, you can attach one of the fitted "underquilts" that most companies offer -- an insulated sling that sits under the hammock. And of course your sleeping bag and standard sleeping pad will provide extra structure and warmth.

In fact, if you're concerned about the cold, don't be. To test hammock camping in typical fall temperatures, I headed to the mountains last month with the Hennessey hammock shown above. Although the temperature dropped to a nippy 35 degrees at night, I was perfectly warm, thanks to the sleeping pad and down sleeping bag, rated for 20 degrees, that I brought along. The rain tarp that came with the hammock effectively warded off the wind.

To suspend your hammock, simply wrap "tree straps" around two appropriately spaced trunks. Because this flat webbing is wider than rope, it won't damage the bark. And tempting though it may be, don't hang your hammock more than a few feet off the ground. It will be easier to climb in and out if the hammock is lower, and in the unlikely event of a suspension failure, you won't have as far to fall.

Below, four hammocks that will comfortably swaddle you into dreamland.

THE ENTRY MODEL

Eagles Nest Outfitters Single Nest Hammock

While you could just as easily string the Single Nest on the porch (it comes in 21 different colors, making it easy to coordinate it with your outdoor furniture), it's designed to travel to less genteel environments. This hammock weighs just 1 pound and can be bunched up into a softball-size bundle, but it supports up to 400 pounds. Keep in mind that the Single Nest offers less space than the others discussed here and will only accommodate a skinny sleeping pad. $60, eaglesnestoutfittersinc.com

THE ALL-IN-ONE PACKAGE

Hennessy Ultralight Backpacker Asym Classic

Based on the design of World War II Army hammocks, this one-person swayer is all about utility. Mosquito netting is sewn right in; there's a sleeve to hold your sleeping pad in place; a Velcro-sealed doorway allows for easy entry; and an asymmetrical shape allows you to lie across the centerline for a flatter position. The included rain tarp can be rolled up along with the hammock and stowed in the stuff pouch, making setup and take-down especially fast and easy. $240, hennessyhammock.com

THE MCMANSION

Kammok Roo

Lightweight but massive (about 10 feet long by 5 1/2 feet wide), this hammock is an all-enveloping cocoon of strong ripstop fabric. Although it's intended to accommodate two people, keep it all to yourself. It's wide enough to allow solo sleepers to lie fairly flat and slightly across the centerline. Its sturdy construction made it feel very stable, even if you're moving around. $99, kammok.com

THE TENT ALTERNATIVE

Tentsile Stingray

A cross between a hammock and tent, this suspended sleeper consists of a relatively flat and firm surface that attaches to three (not two) trees. Its bug-net roof allows for stargazing, and the comparatively palatial interior is made for a restful night's sleep. While easy to set up, you will have to find three trees growing the right distance and angle from each other. Important tip: Familiarize yourself with how the ratchet straps work before heading into the woods. $650, tentsile.com

44. . . . you can wield a worldly garden tool.

If you've ever wished for a little more culture with your horticulture, look no further than these handsome snippers from Banshu Hamono. This artisan cooperative is based in the Banshu region in Japan, an area famous for its sickles, straight razors and other edged tools. Available for the first time in the U.S., each piece is forged from raw steel and hand-sharpened by a single craftsman, and comes wrapped in traditional cloth. This handsome collection includes pruning shears, bonsai scissors, two kinds of flower scissors and a sickle for clearing out the brush . . . and, maybe, frightening off trespassers. Gardening Tools, $50-$190, ameico.com

-- Keith Blanchard

45. . . . this clock makes waking up before the sun actually pleasurable.

In the age of the smartphone, a dedicated bedside alarm clock may seem antiquated. But the Braun Connected Bluetooth Alarm Clock works in tandem with your phone to lessen the pain of daybreak. Using an app for Android or iOS, you can set alarms for different days for the week, customize options like the timbre and volume of those alarms and even tweak the length of the snooze time. Perhaps most comforting, two USB ports on the back let you and a partner wake up to fully recharged phones. Available later this fall, $145, ameico.com

-- K.B.

46. Because . . . silent boating is a virtue.

Discover the quiet bliss of cruising across a lake with the help of an electric outboard motor

By Dan Neil

Ah, fall in the Ozarks, when a largemouth bass's thoughts lightly turn to eating littler fish. When the weather turns cool, these bruisers come up from deeper water to feed on baitfish. And some of the biggest, the lunkiest, live beyond the reach of gasoline.

"Around here you got a lot of little lakes where they don't allow gas-powered boats," said Dale Eberlin, owner of Eberlin Boats & Motors, in Hermann, Mo. "A lot of them are lakes in the middle of subdivisions," he said. "There's nowhere for the water to go, so you can't have a bunch of gas engines puking in the water."

This year, Mr. Eberlin, whose father began the business in 1955, became a dealer for Torqeedo, a German manufacturer of electric and hybrid drives for maritime applications. Only a handful of companies make electric outboard motors, ranging from 5 hp (more than twice the power of a typical electric trolling motor) to 80 hp, in the Torqeedo's Deep Blue 80 T.

Here it's only responsible to warn those considering buying one: Sit down first. The Deep Blue 80 T costs $21,999, roughly double the price of an equivalent gas-powered Yamaha F75. And that's before your whale-research expedition issues the PO for the high-voltage battery: $16,499.

Electric outboards get more cost-competitive as they get smaller. Elco Motor Yachts in upstate New York has been making electric boats in some form for more than 120 years. Its EP-9.9 electric outboard (brushless, water-cooled motor, 130 pounds static thrust) retails for $2,910, which is comparable to a gas-fired Yamaha F9.9.

But what about the batteries? There is still some sticker shock, but in lake country it's not as bad as it seems. For one thing, jon boats and pontoon boats can hum along at modest speeds all day on four 12-volt car batteries (48 volts), then return to the dock to charge. But just like an electric car, the faster you go the shorter the range.

A quartet of deep-cycle, absorbent-glass-mat (AGM) batteries will run about $1,500. It's like buying a lifetime supply of gas up front.

However, as a consumer proposition, electric outboard motors are not about cost-benefit and only tangentially about protecting the environment. These are about access.

Mr. Eberlin has sold a few Torqeedo units, all under 10 hp. "There's another bunch of lakes where boats are limited to 10 horsepower" to encourage compliance with no-wake policies, he said.

One such spot is nearby Innsbrook, founded in 1971, which has 103 lakes dotting its 7,500 acres, the largest of which is 236 acres. All are no-gas, no-wake. "People get tired of the hustle and bustle of Lake of the Ozarks," said Chip Wobbe, president of development for Innsbrook. Fast powerboats and jet skis erode public shoreline and leak fuel and oil into these contained bodies of water.

Strangely, World War II played its part. After the war, thousands of aluminum pontoons and empty fuel tanks (drop tanks) were scrapped. Poor but enthusiastic boat-builders -- like my people back in North Carolina -- did what seemed natural: Assemble a floating platform with a canopy overhead. Today, pontoon boats are one of the pillars of the electric-outboard boat market.

"Pontoon boats with e-drive are a big part of the silent boating culture here," said Mr. Wobbe. He also owns another example of electric, extra-leisure watercraft: a Duffy. These are purpose-built electric boats with stem-to-stern canopies. The Duffy has inboard power and uses 6V golf-cart batteries. According to inventor Marshall Duffield, they are "bay and lake cruisers."

Environmental awareness has also played a part. "Tesla made it easier to imagine," agreed Dean Heinemann, Elco director of sales. But the bigger driver was the rise of lakes restricted to electric drive only. Some of these are designated water-supply reservoirs; some are surrounded by homes; others are delicate habitat under pressure from duck hunters and fishermen. Often all three.

But they also have fish. And where there are fish, there are anglers in a hurry to catch them. The growth in electric outboards, said Mr. Heinemann, reflects these sportsmen's desire for stern units with a little more oomph than the traditional trolling motor, which is not designed for sustained, max-speed operation.

Electric-only fishing tournaments are now commonplace, and they are just like their gas-powered counterparts, except that instead of roaring away at the start, they hum.

But is it really sporting to sneak up on fish that way?

47. . . . you can bike down

a leaf-clogged trail with peace of mind.

When rough trails slowly deflate your fall bike ride, the Fabric Z250 Bike Pump, which snap-mounts to your bike's frame, can help. Although less than 16 inches long, it has a wide chamber for efficient pumping (up to 90 PSI at 6.2 bar of pressure) so you can catch up to your gloating triathlete buddy. Its clever design lets you inflate using Presta or Schrader nozzles, while the elegant turned-wood handle hides the hose and pimps your ride. $55, usa.fabric.cc

-- K.B.

48. . . . Sinatra crooning 'Autumn in New York' never sounded

so eerily crisp.

If you've never set a wireless 360-degree speaker into the middle of a room and turned a crowd onto all-around sound, get ready to be applauded. Bang & Olufsen's BeoSound 1 does an especially impressive job of balancing power and portability: A 40-watt amp and 20-watt woofer disperse audio from a steely, 13-inch-tall conical unit. The Bluetooth connection can stream music from all the usual suspects for 4 to 16 hours off the built-in battery -- or beam your tunes over AirPlay, DLNA or Google Cast for better audio quality. You can DJ the affair from afar with a dedicated smartphone app, or let guests spin the intuitive turn-top controller to adjust volume or skip ahead. And if a single BeoSound 1 isn't loud enough, you can connect up to eight wirelessly throughout the house. $1,500, bang-olufsen.com

-- K.B.

49. . . . getting back to business

needn't weigh you down.

Whether you're back at school or back at work, this zinc-alloy key ring coupled with an aluminum USB drive will keep whatever you're working on -- be it your sophomore wardrobe strategy or legal briefs -- close at hand. Together, the combo measures less than an inch and a half across and weighs about as much as a leafless twig. The drive stores 8 gigs of data, enough to hold thousands of PowerPoint presentations . . . or wistful end-of-summer songs. Lexon USB Key Fine, $40, lexonusa.com

-- K.B.

50. . . . curling up with a good e-book

just got more fun.

Most e-readers are un-bookish in size, but the Kobo Aura ONE does bibliophiles the favor of forgoing pocketability for a screen size (7.8 inches) and resolution (300 PPI) that's closer to a printed page. Other improvements: a light that dials down sleep-disrupting blue wavelengths as bedtime looms, a streamlined process for e-borrowing from libraries, and a waterproof design, so you can safely read "Lake Wobegon Days" while kayaking across a lake. $230, kobo.com

-- K.B.

FALL WOULDN'T BE FALL WITHOUT . . .

". . . the flavors of Rosh Hashanah: apples dipped in honey (I use agave because I'm vegan), my variation on 'honey' cake, and pomegranate seeds sprinkled over a nice big green salad."

Mayim Bialik,

neuroscientist and actress on "The Big Bang Theory"

DETAILS

Subject:	Clothing; Men; Ankle; Athletic shoes; Trends; Fashion designers; Seasons; Design; Jewelry
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Corporation: L L Bean Inc; Industry: 54149 : Other Specialized Design Services 31621 : Footwear Manufacturing 31525 : Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
People:	Chen, Jason
Company / organization:	Name: Georgia-Pacific Corp; NAICS: 321212, 321219, 322120; Name: Bottega Veneta; NAICS: 449129, 45 8320, 459420; Name: L L Bean Inc; NAICS: 316210, 458110, 459110
Classification:	54149: Other Specialized Design Services; 31621: Footwear Manufacturing; 31525: Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	D.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251807
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/off-duty-50-fifty-reasons-fall-is-best-season/docview/1820251807/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

City News -- Metro Money: At 100 Years Old, This Vintage VIP Ain't Misbehavin'

Kadet, Anne . Kadet, Anne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Sporting a patterned tank top, coral necklace and a smooth blond bob, she had a shopping cart stuffed with the antiques, vintage jewelry and paintings she has been selling at the Grand Bazaar NYC every Sunday for more than 30 years. There are currently about 2,100 centenarians in New York City, according to the Department of City Planning, and the city expects the number of residents 85 and older to grow at a faster rate than its younger population in the coming years.

FULL TEXT

Of all the New Yorkers I've met writing this column, Mathilde Freund might have the sweetest lifestyle.

She works one day a week manning her business. The rest of the time she's volunteering, taking classes, dining with friends and devouring culture.

If this is what New York living looks like when you hit 100, bring it on.

Last Sunday, I met Ms. Freund, who just celebrated her centennial birthday, bright and early outside her Upper West Side home. Sporting a patterned tank top, coral necklace and a smooth blond bob, she had a shopping cart stuffed with the antiques, vintage jewelry and paintings she has been selling at the Grand Bazaar NYC every Sunday for more than 30 years.

The flea market is housed at a school just around the corner. As Ms. Freund made her way through the playground, fellow vendors greeted her like royalty, offering compliments and asking about her recent visit to see her grandson. She blew them kisses.

"Everyone knows you," I remarked.

"They do," she said. "That's why I have to behave all the time."

Inside the lunchroom, she arranged her wares on a cafeteria table, describing how she'd purchased the treasures on trips around the globe. I got tired and sat down. Ms. Freund kept going.

"Everyone wants to know the secret of my longevity," she said. "But I do everything like everyone else. The only thing is, I'm not bitter. That would ruin my life."

She has every right to be bitter. Born in Vienna, Ms. Freund fled to France with her family in 1938 to escape the Nazis.

Her brother was captured and shot at the Lyon airport. Her husband died at Buchenwald.

Ms. Freund showed me a photo of 10 men taken after the liberation of Paris during World War II. "I saved them," she said. "I brought them food and medicine."

The men were hiding in the forests outside Lyon, taking shelter in stables. So did Ms. Freund, with her infant daughter.

"She still has all her teeth, even though she didn't brush for seven years," interjected Phyllis Newman, a fellow vendor who sells antique prints across the aisle.

Ms. Freund "lives the dream of every person in Manhattan," Ms. Newman said. "To be an independent person, who has a life at that age."

There are currently about 2,100 centenarians in New York City, according to the Department of City Planning, and the city expects the number of residents 85 and older to grow at a faster rate than its younger population in the coming years. May they all enjoy a retirement like Ms. Freund's.

Alas, her position is partly the byproduct of a vanishing era. Her one-bedroom apartment, where she's lived since moving to New York in 1952, is rent-controlled -- one of just 27,000 such units remaining among the city's 2.2 million rentals, the New York City Rent Guidelines Board reports.

And she has enjoyed a steady pension since retiring in 1976 from hospital work. These days, according to the Employee Benefit Research Institute in Washington, D.C., just 2% of private-sector workers receive such a benefit.

Ms. Freund didn't achieve her stability purely through circumstance, of course. Her habits are moderate and regular.

She rises at 5 a.m. for coffee, toast and the BBC. She takes a hot shower, followed by a cold shower.

Then Ms. Freund is on the M11 bus to Fordham College at Lincoln Center. She has studied literature, psychology and philosophy for 40 years, and especially appreciates the ancient philosophers.

"Socrates, Plato -- my boyfriends -- they're all dead," she said.

Ms. Freund also lectures in classrooms around the city, sharing her wartime experiences. It saddens and wears her out, she said, "but I feel it's my sacred responsibility."

Lunch might be a corned beef on pumpernickel from the sandwich shop. She'll save half to make a second meal.

Ms. Freund ascribes her frugality to long waits in food lines during the war. "At the end, I got half a carrot," she said. "So I cannot throw out food."

New York may be an ideal city for growing old. Ms. Freund lives within blocks of her bank, drugstore and Fairway, where she shops every day.

And everywhere she goes, New Yorkers offer their seats, carry her bags and help her through snow, "even the teenagers," she said.

One problem with turning 100: You outlive your loved ones. But Ms. Freund makes a point of cultivating friendships with folks in their 60s and 70s.

"I'm still curious and like to know what's going on around me," she said.

At the flea market, it's easy to see why she has so many pals. She greets shoppers in the six languages she's mastered. She's patient with hagglers. Everyone gets a compliment.

Her advice? Think of others, do your best and most of all, enjoy your life.

Even if you live to be 100, she said, "it's very precious, and it goes so fast. It's like a dream."

anne.kadet@wsj.com

Credit: By Anne Kadet

DETAILS

Subject:	Flea markets
Business indexing term:	Industry: 45951 : Used Merchandise Retailers
Location:	New York; United States--US
Classification:	45951: Used Merchandise Retailers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.14
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251795
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-metro-money-at-100-years-old-this/docview/1820251795/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 184 of 500

Business News: Battery Scare on U.S. Flight

Hufford, Austen . Hufford, Austen.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A spare electronics battery aboard a commercial flight started smoking and was extinguished by flight attendants Friday morning, Delta Air Lines Inc. said, again prompting concerns over batteries' vulnerabilities on flights.

FULL TEXT

A spare electronics battery aboard a commercial flight started smoking and was extinguished by flight attendants Friday morning, Delta Air Lines Inc. said, again prompting concerns over batteries' vulnerabilities on flights.

The incident comes amid a recall of Samsung Electronics Co. Galaxy Note 7 smartphones due to battery fires. That device doesn't have a removable battery, so it likely wasn't related to Friday's incident. A Samsung spokesperson said the company has "received no information to indicate that this is related to a Samsung device."

Friday morning, flight attendants aboard a 5:12 a.m. ET flight to Atlanta observed smoke in the rear of the aircraft and "acted quickly to immediately dissipate the smoke," Delta said. The source of the smoke was from a "spare battery not affixed to a device" and the company said it was working to determine the source and type of the battery.

Delta Flight 2557 carried 143 customers and five crew members from Norfolk, Va., to Atlanta as planned. The Virginian-Pilot first reported news of the incident Friday morning.

Lithium-ion batteries power many of today's mobile electronic devices and they have been known to catch fire or explode. The FAA said it has recorded 171 smoke, fire or explosion incidents involving batteries on aircraft from 1991 to January of this year, including those used on laptops, electronic cigarettes, smartphones and USB battery packs.

Credit: By Austen Hufford

DETAILS

Subject:	Batteries; Smartphones; Aircraft; Flight attendants; Aircraft accidents & safety
Business indexing term:	Subject: Smartphones Aircraft accidents & safety; Industry: 33591 : Battery Manufacturing
Location:	Atlanta Georgia; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Delta Air Lines Inc; NAICS: 481111
Classification:	33591: Battery Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251787
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-battery-scare-on-u-s-flight/docview/1820251787/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 185 of 500

World News: Propaganda Chief Killed by Airstrike, U.S. Says

Sonne, Paul . Sonne, Paul.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Pentagon press secretary Peter Cook said Friday that a precision airstrike on Sept. 7 near Islamic State's Syrian stronghold of Raqqa killed Wa'il Adil Hasan Salman al-Fayad, who operated as the group's minister of information and a member of its Senior Shura Council.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The U.S.-led coalition battling Islamic State killed a man the Pentagon described as the extremist group's minister of information.

Pentagon press secretary Peter Cook said Friday that a precision airstrike on Sept. 7 near Islamic State's Syrian stronghold of Raqqa killed Wa'il Adil Hasan Salman al-Fayad, who operated as the group's minister of information and a member of its Senior Shura Council.

Mr. Cook said Mr. al-Fayad oversaw the filming of Islamic State propaganda videos showing torture and executions, and was a close associate of Abu Mohammed al Adnani, the former chief Islamic State spokesman, who was killed in an Aug. 30 strike by the U.S.-led coalition near al-Bab, Syria.

"The removal of ISIL's senior leaders degrades its ability to retain territory, and its ability to plan, finance, and direct attacks inside and outside of the region," Mr. Cook said, referring to Islamic State as ISIL.

A defense official noted that the death of Mr. al-Fayad was significant because he was close to Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi.

"Now, two of these trusted agents are gone, so it makes Baghdadi significantly more isolated," the official said.

Credit: By Paul Sonne

DETAILS

Subject:	Fatalities; Military air strikes; Propaganda
Location:	Syria
Company / organization:	Name: Islamic State of Iraq & the Levant--ISIS; NAICS: 813940
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251747
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-propaganda-chief-killed-airstrike-u-s/docview/1820251747/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 186 of 500

Business News: Shoppers Click 'Buy' for iPhone 7

Olivarez-Giles, Nathan; Dou, Eva; Cherney, Mike . Olivarez-Giles, Nathan; Dou, Eva; Cherney, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Japan's three major mobile phone carriers -- NTT DoCoMo Inc., KDDI Corp. and SoftBank Group Corp.'s local unit -- said they were seeing the highest number of orders since they started selling iPhones.

FULL TEXT

A slightly unusual scene unfolded Friday at some Apple Inc. stores around the world, where the normal lines of camped-out shoppers eager to buy the latest iPhone were replaced in certain locations by smaller throngs who had preordered the largely sold-out phone.

The big question, whose answer could take time to become clear, is whether these fans' launch-day zeal will ultimately stem declining sales of the company's flagship smartphone.

Analysts and investors have long looked at opening-weekend sales as a gauge of enthusiasm for the smartphone.

At Apple's flagship store in San Francisco's Union Square, the line of a couple dozen people Friday morning paled in comparison to previous years, when hundreds of people waited for new iPhones.

Rene White stepped to the end of the line at about 6 a.m., planning to buy a rose gold iPhone 7. She expects to order online next year. "I've never waited in line for any Apple products before," the 33-year-old said. "It has looked exciting, but this really wasn't. It's just a line, really."

In New York, a security team guarded a mostly empty plaza at the Fifth Avenue store in Manhattan by 4:30 p.m. Customers like 20-year-old Alexander Klyus were in and out of the store with a new phone in 15 minutes.

At the Beijing Apple store in the Sanlitun shopping district, most of the people who had arrived Friday morning had preordered a phone online.

Wang Tianxiang, 23, said Apple's preorder website in China earlier this week was overloaded, but he managed to get his order in by refreshing repeatedly at 2 a.m. He decided to switch to an iPhone for the first time from his Chinese-designed Oneplus smartphone.

"iPhones are more reliable and the interface is better," he said.

In Japan, more than 200 people lined up Friday morning in front of Apple stores in Ginza and Omotesando, two of Tokyo's ritziest shopping districts. Japan's three major mobile phone carriers -- NTT DoCoMo Inc., KDDI Corp. and SoftBank Group Corp.'s local unit -- said they were seeing the highest number of orders since they started selling iPhones.

Initial excitement doesn't necessarily translate into bigger sales, however. Initial iPhone 6s and 6s Plus orders exceeded those from the prior year, though sales declined in the past two quarters. Apple doesn't specify sales by model.

For the first time, Apple this year isn't planning to report first-weekend sales, calling the numbers irrelevant as it knows the iPhone 7 will sell out. Apple already signaled it wouldn't be able to meet demand when customers walked through the doors Friday. It said the iPhone 7 in shiny "jet black" -- its newest finish -- and the larger iPhone 7 Plus in all colors sold out during preorders.

Adding to the prelaunch hype, T-Mobile US Inc. and Sprint Corp. earlier this week suggested strong consumer interest, though without providing specific numbers.

"Nobody does product launches better than Apple -- we know the phones will sell out. They always sell out," said Rob Handfield, a professor of supply-chain management at North Carolina State University. "What we don't know is whether or not the hype and demand will last."

Even though Apple is a consumer-product veteran run by a logistics expert, it perennially comes up short in meeting initial iPhone demand. Knowing how much supply to produce for highly coveted new products, like an iPhone with a new color, is tough, said John Haber, chief executive at the consulting firm Spend Management Experts and a former UPS executive who spent a decade working in corporate strategy and finance.

Still, Apple has been selling the iPhone for nearly 10 years. And creating buzz with the appearance of customers hungry to get their hands on an item in short supply is a tactic straight from marketing textbooks.

"They're happy not meeting demand this weekend," Mr. Haber said. "This is a common tactic for companies that want to turn selling a new product into what are essentially events -- Apple devices, Air Jordans, Harry Potter books, it's all the same tactic to generate interest."

Such temporary shortfalls generally don't hurt total sales of a new device, as Apple's supply in the past has caught up with demand by the time it really counts, in time for the winter holiday rush.

Apple declined to comment on its supply chain and launch strategy.

Megumi Fujikawa and Imani Moise contributed to this article.

Credit: By Nathan Olivarez-Giles, Eva Dou and Mike Cherney

DETAILS

Subject:	Sales; Smartphones; Product development
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sales Smartphones Product development; Corporation: Apple Inc
Location:	San Francisco California; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: App le Inc; NAICS: 334111, 334220, 513210
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251735
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-shoppers-click-buy-iphone-7/docview/1820251735/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 187 of 500

World News: Duterte Shift on U.S. Worries Army

Moss, Trefor . Moss, Trefor.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"If Duterte had been properly briefed, he wouldn't have made those statements." Since last week, Mr. Duterte has insulted President Barack Obama, announced that Manila would quit joint patrols of the South China Sea -- organized in part to protect Philippine waters from Chinese incursions -- and said Manila may start buying Chinese and Russian arms.

FULL TEXT

MANILA -- President Rodrigo Duterte's drive to upend the Philippines' decades-old security alliance with the U.S. is prompting concerns within the military, the one institution he most needs to keep on his side.

In a country prone to coups and palace intrigue, Mr. Duterte is fully aware that past presidents have crossed the military at their peril.

The populist leader has spent much of the first 11 weeks of his six-year term touring bases to muster support among the rank and file, repeating a campaign pledge to double soldiers' salaries. Mr. Duterte has explained to troops that he is crossing an "ideological border" to seek peace with onetime foes at home and abroad.

Convincing army leaders to cross it with him will be a challenge, according to people familiar with Philippine military affairs. Even some old military hands in the president's inner circle have appeared dumbfounded.

Defense Secretary Delfin Lorenzana, a former general and military attache in Washington, told a congressional committee Wednesday that Mr. Duterte was wrong to want U.S. military advisers to leave the island of Mindanao, where they are supporting counterterrorism operations against the extremist Abu Sayyaf group.

"We still need them there because they have the surveillance capabilities that our armed forces don't have," Mr. Lorenzana said.

Clarita Carlos, a former president of the Philippines' National Defense College, said Mr. Duterte should have been advised more thoroughly about the alliance's importance.

"I know how deep and wide the relationship is," she said. "If Duterte had been properly briefed, he wouldn't have made those statements."

Since last week, Mr. Duterte has insulted President Barack Obama, announced that Manila would quit joint patrols of the South China Sea -- organized in part to protect Philippine waters from Chinese incursions -- and said Manila may start buying Chinese and Russian arms.

Officers who have worked hand in glove with the U.S. military fighting communist and Islamic rebels are "aghast," said Ian Storey, a senior fellow at the ISEAS-Yusof Ishak Institute in Singapore. The officers fear Mr. Duterte is throwing away "the one card the Philippines has to play" -- the U.S. security umbrella -- in its lopsided confrontation with China, he said.

Though Mr. Duterte has faulted the U.S. for failing to halt Beijing's expansion in the South China Sea, military officers say the Philippines would have suffered far worse without American support, pointing to deliveries of U.S. equipment, regular joint exercises, and U.S. surveillance flights.

A Philippine defense expert said officers feared Mr. Duterte was trying to cause a rupture with the U.S. ahead of an anticipated backlash from Washington over his so-called war on drugs, in which more than 3,000 people have been killed by police and vigilantes.

The two countries' alliance was recently bolstered by Mr. Duterte's predecessor in response to a shared wariness of China's rise. In 2014, the two countries signed a defense pact that paved the way for American troop deployments to Philippine bases.

A U.S. Embassy official said that there had so far been no official communication from Philippine officials that would affect bilateral cooperation.

Ms. Carlos said the still-popular Mr. Duterte has time to win over the generals, advising him to keep one fundamental point in mind: "The Americans are our allies, not our enemies."

Credit: By Trefor Moss

DETAILS

Subject:	Presidents; Armed forces; Surveillance; Military strategy
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92811 : National Security
Location:	Philippines
People:	Duterte, Rodrigo R

Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251714
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-duterte-shift-on-u-s-worries-army/docview/1820251714/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Fur ther reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 188 of 500

U.S. News: Gasoline Spill Sparks Federal Probe

ABSTRACT

"PHMSA had a team of investigators on site as quickly as possible to investigate the cause of this leak, and took important safety measures to prevent additional damage to the environment and the communities impacted and to ensure the integrity of the pipeline before it returns to operation," the agency said.

FULL TEXT

Federal regulators are investigating the cause of a pipeline leak that spilled as much as 8,000 barrels of gasoline south of Birmingham, Ala.

The Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration said Friday the cause of the leak from Colonial Pipeline Co.'s Line 1 is still unknown, since the pipeline hasn't yet been excavated.

The agency said it would require Colonial to submit a restart plan and fulfill several requirements before allowing the pipeline to start up again.

"PHMSA had a team of investigators on site as quickly as possible to investigate the cause of this leak, and took important safety measures to prevent additional damage to the environment and the communities impacted and to ensure the integrity of the pipeline before it returns to operation," the agency said.

A mining inspector first alerted Colonial to the leak on Sept. 9.

Colonial previously estimated about 6,000 barrels of gasoline had spilled, but on Friday said it could be as much as 8,000 barrels. The line has been partially closed since the incident, which has choked off fuel supplies to parts of the Southeast and led to higher gasoline prices.

Colonial said Friday it expects to continue working to repair the pipeline this weekend and to restart it some time next week.

Credit: By Alison Sider

DETAILS

Subject:	Gasoline; Pipelines
Business indexing term:	Industry: 48691 : Pipeline Transportation of Refined Petroleum Products
Location:	Birmingham Alabama; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Colonial Pipeline Co; NAICS: 486910

Classification:	48691: Pipeline Transportation of Refined Petroleum Products
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251692
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-gasoline-spill-sparks-federal-probe/docview/1820251692/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 189 of 500

World News: Syrian Refugees Fear Assad Will Remain --- Opposition in Turkey worries U.S. is no longer pushing that president leave office

Abi-Habib, Maria . Abi-Habib, Maria.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to the United Nations, the aid has been held up at the Turkey-Syria border pending permission to proceed from Damascus and the conclusion of a complex security arrangement involving all main parties to the conflict.

FULL TEXT

SANLIURFA, Turkey -- The fears of many Syrian refugees in Turkey center less on whether the current cease-fire will hold than on the government of President Bashar al-Assad remaining in place.

Many here say they worry the U.S. is walking back its demands that Mr. Assad resign as part of a broader political settlement, leaving them as targets for opposing the dictator's rule if they return. Even as violence ebbed this week and humanitarian aid was poised to resume, many Syrians fear they are destined to remain refugees in Turkey unless a future political deal includes Mr. Assad's departure.

"If America backs Assad to stay, America will be my enemy," said a tearful Aziza Jaloud, a refugee in the southern Turkish city of Gaziantep near the Syrian border. "It's impossible for us to go back to Syria if Assad is still ruling."

The U.S.-Russia-sponsored cease-fire that began Monday has brought a significant reduction in violence. But talks on a political transition to resolve the conflict haven't yet begun and past truces have all unraveled over time. Both the armed and political opposition say they will reject the broader political settlement the U.S. hopes to achieve unless Mr. Assad's departure is on the table.

The U.K.-based opposition monitoring group Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said cease-fire violations by both sides were on the rise and seven civilians had been killed since the truce began.

There was no progress Friday in freeing up 40 truckloads of humanitarian aid intended for the rebel-held side of the city of Aleppo, besieged by government forces.

According to the United Nations, the aid has been held up at the Turkey-Syria border pending permission to proceed from Damascus and the conclusion of a complex security arrangement involving all main parties to the conflict. Nearly 300,000 people in besieged eastern Aleppo are in urgent need of the relief, aid groups say.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry made clear in a phone call to Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov on Friday that the U.S. wouldn't begin any military cooperation with Russia in Syria until the U.N. aid convoys reached Aleppo and other areas of Syria in need, officials said.

The aid delivery is an essential element of the current cease-fire that the U.S. hopes can be expanded into a political solution to end the war. But if Mr. Assad stays in power, hundreds of thousands of Syrians who took part in the revolt against him -- whether by posting critical comments on Facebook or by actively fighting -- may be unable to return home without repercussion. remaining instead condemned to live as refugees in Turkey, Germany or elsewhere.

The international community wants a deal to stop the flow of refugees out of Syria -- nearly five million so far by U.N. estimates. But a sticking point has been what to do with Mr. Assad, with the government and its allies -- including Moscow -- refusing to consider his departure.

The U.S. and Turkey over the past year have withdrawn their insistence that the Syrian president step aside to achieve a final political solution to end the country's war, now in its sixth year. Opposition activists and rebels say if Mr. Assad is included in a transitional interim government, as outlined in recent proposals, he may find a way to stay on permanently.

Mrs. Jaloud said she knows the government's wrath firsthand. In an account confirmed by her neighbors, she said she was detained for 11 years without trial after her husband, Ibrahim al-Youssef, defected from the Syrian military in protest in 1979. He was killed in a later standoff with the government.

When the revolution began in 2011, Mrs. Jaloud and her children, now adults, enthusiastically joined. Two went to the armed opposition.

"Everyone who left Syria knows about the injustice of this regime and even if they did the smallest protest in this revolution -- talked of Assad -- they know they can't go back," she said.

Her son, Yasser Ibrahim al-Youssef, a political representative for the rebel group Nour al-Dine al-Zinki, one of the largest in Aleppo, said he, his mother and his colleagues in the opposition have no choice.

"People went to the streets to fight for their freedom and their dignity," Mr. Youssef said in Gaziantep. "There is no dignity or freedom with Assad."

Noam Raydan and Nathan Hodge contributed to this article.

Credit: By Maria Abi-Habib

DETAILS

Subject:	Humanitarian aid; Truces & cease fires; Refugees; Political activism; Humanitarianism
Location:	Syria
People:	Assad, Bashar Al
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251685
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syrian-refugees-fear-assad-will-remain/docview/1820251685/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 190 of 500

U.S. News: Flood-Hit Firms Battle To Rebuild --- Many companies in the stricken area face steep recovery costs, even with insurance

McWhirter, Cameron; Simon, Ruth . McWhirter, Cameron; Simon, Ruth.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Don Pierson, who runs Louisiana Economic Development, said helping small business recover is "a major priority," but the $2.8 billion of federal disaster aid the state has requested is largely aimed at restoring public infrastructure, residential properties and flood control.

FULL TEXT

DENHAM SPRINGS, LA. -- One month after flooding devastated this bedroom community of roughly 10,000 people outside Baton Rouge, the cameras are gone, the water receded, but the work is just beginning for small-business owners such as Ed Hood.

Mr. Hood, 57 years old, opened a dental practice in his hometown in 1985 and was poised to launch a second location nearby when the flood hit. Twenty-eight inches of water poured into his office, rendering nearly $1.5 million in equipment useless. The same floodwaters ravaged his home and those of a half-dozen relatives, leaving his extended family devastated.

On a recent visit, much of Dr. Hood's equipment sat useless in his parking lot, while he waited for workers to hang new Sheetrock on the walls of his office building. While he waits for repairs, Dr. Hood is seeing patients in a mobile dental unit normally used by the National Guard.

Unlike many small-business owners, Dr. Hood has flood insurance, but it will cover only a portion of his losses. Dr. Hood is seeking a $2 million disaster recovery loan from the Small Business Administration to help him get back on his feet.

Seven of his 35 employees have already said they aren't coming back.

Dr. Hood's predicament highlights the challenges facing thousands of businesses in southern Louisiana that were battered by some of the worst flooding to hit the U.S. in years. The cost of rebuilding is frequently steep even for those with insurance, while the resources to help the local companies recover are scant.

The Louisiana Economic Development agency estimates more than 6,000 companies were hurt by the flooding, suffering roughly $2.3 billion in physical damage to structures, equipment and inventory and another $1.1 billion in other losses.

Small businesses tend to get less disaster assistance than homeowners, even though they are crucial to a community's recovery. "If you look at the assistance programs, we are really biased to the households," said Yu Xiao, an associate professor at Texas A&M University. "But when small businesses come back, it's more likely for the households in a nearby area to come back."

In the month since the flooding hit, the Small Business Administration has approved 339 disaster loans to Louisiana businesses totaling $29 million, while it has rejected 585, often over poor credit quality or an inability to repay.

Other efforts to help disaster-stricken small businesses are typically cobbled together on a piecemeal basis, a process that can require congressional approval for funding and take months or even a year or more to get funds into the hands of local business owners.

"There isn't a tool in place that is meeting the needs of these small businesses immediately after a disaster," said

Robin Keegan, a consultant and former head of the Louisiana Recovery Authority.

Don Pierson, who runs Louisiana Economic Development, said helping small business recover is "a major priority," but the $2.8 billion of federal disaster aid the state has requested is largely aimed at restoring public infrastructure, residential properties and flood control. The state expects to provide some direct aid to small business, he added, but the details aren't yet clear.

Already, some business owners are planning to close. A major antiques dealer in downtown Denham Springs has begun liquidating after decades in business.

Ty Bettison, 49, owner of Geeks Anywhere, a computer repair service, said he isn't sure what the future holds. Mr. Bettison said he was turned down by the SBA for loans to repair his business and home, both of which were damaged by the storm.

"I am not sure how income will work out at this point," said Mr. Bettison, adding that he had his best two quarters this year.

Some business owners are scrambling to get back on their feet as quickly as possible. Hector Barraza, 39, has already rebuilt the interior of La Carreta, his seven-year-old Mexican restaurant, and hopes to reopen next week.

Mr. Barraza is counting on insurance proceeds to cover most of the cost of the refurbishment. He has applied for an SBA loan in case his insurance proceeds don't arrive quickly. Asked if he was worried about taking on more debt, he said, "I don't have a choice."

Small businesses often have a tougher time rebounding from natural disasters than their bigger competitors, in part because they tend to have more limited cash reserves, are frequently loath to take on more debt, and often deal with damage to their homes too. Basic steps, such as debris removal, are time-consuming, difficult and costly.

(See related article: "After a Disaster, Speed Matters" -- WSJ Sept. 17, 2016)

Credit: By Cameron McWhirter and Ruth Simon

DETAILS

Subject:	Floods; Disaster recovery; Small business; Economic development; Disasters
Business indexing term:	Subject: Small business Economic development
Location:	Baton Rouge Louisiana; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251678
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-flood-hit-firms-battle-rebuild-many/docview/1820251678/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions , and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 191 of 500

U.S. News -- The Numbers: Earthquake 'Magnitude' Misses the Mark

Jo Craven McGinty . Jo Craven McGinty.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Intensity offers a more accurate account of what happened in different locations and is valuable for guiding post-earthquake response and recovery, future disaster planning and decisions about engineering and building design.

FULL TEXT

When an earthquake rocks the country, the first number circulated by the U.S. Geological Survey is its magnitude.

And so it was on Sept. 3, when a 5.8-magnitude quake shook awake residents in Pawnee, Okla., and shimmied through a dozen other states.

The tremors started at 7:02 a.m. Central Time. In 37 seconds, the USGS National Earthquake Information Center, located 600 miles away in Golden, Colo., detected the rumblings. And in less than 20 minutes, with readings from nearly 200 seismic stations, it published the quake's magnitude online, where it was viewed 2.3 million times in 24 hours.

"Our magnitudes are probably the most quoted in the world," said Paul Earle, a seismologist with the USGS.

But that familiar and widely publicized measurement reveals little about the juddering most people experience when a temblor jolts their community.

To understand how an earthquake affects people and buildings, a more meaningful measurement is a quake's intensity. Although the two are related -- higher magnitudes tend to produce higher intensities -- the measurements capture different information.

"Magnitude is a way to compare the relative size of earthquakes," said Egill Hauksson, a geophysicist with the California Institute of Technology Seismological Laboratory. "It's a number assigned to the source of an earthquake. It doesn't matter where the observer is. Intensity is different. It is a number that describes what a person feels or a building feels where they are located relative to the earthquake."

When a quake occurs, energy travels from its source to seismic stations placed by the USGS and other agencies around faults, in cities and at other points in the country to record the acceleration and velocity of moving ground.

The intensity of an earthquake at different locations depends on the amount of energy released at the fault, how far away a location is from the fault, and the condition of the site. Soil, for example, will shake more than rock, and seismic waves will travel farther through solid rock than fractured rock.

"It's a small area where people experience the worst, and it's a huge area where people experience much lower intensity," said David Wald, a seismologist with USGS.

The Pawnee earthquake, for example, is the largest magnitude quake on record in Oklahoma, but only a handful of places felt strong or very strong shaking typical of a quake of its size. Most people, even those relatively close to the epicenter, felt only light or moderate shaking.

Focusing on magnitude may lead people to believe they experienced the worst of a quake when in reality the tremors that jostled their neighborhood were muted by distance or geology. Intensity offers a more accurate account of what happened in different locations and is valuable for guiding post-earthquake response and recovery, future disaster planning and decisions about engineering and building design.

Each year, the National Earthquake Information Center detects about 30,000 earthquakes. Most are too small to be felt, but when a sizable quake occurs, the center publishes "ShakeMaps" using magnitude and measurements of the ground's acceleration and velocity to estimate intensity by location.

The color-coded documents resemble weather maps with a palette of green to red and a scale of I to X showing increasing intensity.

"The cool thing with the shaking measurements is it's accurate," Dr. Wald said. "But it doesn't tell you whether someone's chimney broke."

For that kind of detail, the earthquake center collects firsthand accounts from people who experienced the quake and then answered a series of questions about it online. The multiple-choice questions are diagnostic: How would you describe the shaking? Did objects rattle, topple over or fall off shelves? Was there any damage to the building? The responses are used to plot "Did You Feel It?" maps that use the same color code and scale as ShakeMaps.

The questionnaires are geocoded based on the person's location during the quake and matched to a map of the area divided into one-kilometer squares. The answers are weighted and averaged to reflect the consensus of the group in each square kilometer.

Nonetheless, the data are noisy. People in the same building can have different experiences, and users may make mistakes filling out the form. Statistical filters help flag questionable data, and information can be corroborated with ShakeMaps and accounts of similar quakes.

The number of responses also helps. Almost 60,000 questionnaires were submitted for the Pawnee map, a typical amount for a quake of that size.

Intensity maps won't replace magnitude, which has been around since 1935, when Charles Richter originated the precursor to the modern measurements. But they could shake up our perception of just how bad an earthquake was, location by location.

Credit: By Jo Craven McGinty

DETAILS

Subject:	Earthquakes; Maps; Questionnaires
Location:	Oklahoma; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: US Geological Survey; NAICS: 541714, 924120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251665
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-numbers-earthquake-magnitude-misses-mark/docview/1820251665/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 192 of 500

World News: Bloc Remains Split on Migration, Growth --- European leaders urge cooperation on borders, economy; warn against populist solutions

Pop, Valentina; Hinshaw, Drew . Pop, Valentina; Hinshaw, Drew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]Italian Prime Minister Matteo Renzi, who is under political pressure at home, said he wouldn't join the French and German leaders for their final press conference because he wasn't "satisfied with the conclusions on growth and migration."

FULL TEXT

BRATISLAVA, Slovakia -- European Union leaders sketched out an agenda aimed at setting a path to recovery after Britain's June vote to leave, but there were immediate signs that their deep divisions, particularly on migration, hadn't been overcome.

Leaders pledged to step up cooperation on protecting the bloc's borders, fighting terrorism and improving the region's economy, in a statement after the first extended gathering of the 27 heads of government without Britain's participation. They said this was the only way to counter the "simplistic solutions" of populist, nationalist political movements.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel said the EU must prepare for the post-Britain era. and can't afford to offer more "empty words."

"Our voters are expecting us to deliver results" on reducing migration and boosting living standards, she said. "But if we don't do this, then we stand no chance whatsoever."

European Council chief Donald Tusk said leaders agreed "never to allow for the return of uncontrolled refugee flows of last year and to ensure full control of our external border."

However, Italian Prime Minister Matteo Renzi, who is under political pressure at home, said he wouldn't join the French and German leaders for their final press conference because he wasn't "satisfied with the conclusions on growth and migration."

Mr. Renzi, who has complained about the lack of burden sharing in the migration crisis, said that describing the conclusions reached as progress required an act of "imagination."

While the summit was originally called to help EU leaders prepare for negotiations over exit terms with Britain, U.K. Prime Minister Theresa May hasn't yet triggered those talks and isn't expected to do so this year.

Mr. Tusk said he expects the two-year negotiation period to begin in January or February.

"The negotiations must lead to a result where it is clear it is worth being a member of the EU, that there are more advantages than disadvantages," said Slovak Prime Minister Robert Fico. To be "perfectly frank, unlike the U.K., we know what we want."

In their discussions, EU leaders mapped out several key areas to focus on and set themselves a six-month timeline to start delivering.

The plans included a commitment to speed up the rapid-reaction capacity of the bloc's newly formed border and coast guard agency and improve security on Bulgaria's EU border with Turkey.

Leaders pledged to improve the flow of information on who enters and exits the bloc and to take further steps to combat religious radicalization in EU countries. They also pledged to push ahead with efforts to reach new trade deals, deepen defense cooperation and keep pressure up for progress on creating a single EU digital market.

Despite Mr. Fico's confidence, the negotiations with Britain could expose a major fault line between those who want a tight relationship with the U.K. and others who are more focused on highlighting the costs of leaving the bloc.

Friday's gathering steered clear of big controversies, such as the balance of power between Brussels and the national governments or changes to the EU's founding treaties.

Margit Feher in Budapest contributed to this article.

Credit: By Valentina Pop and Drew Hinshaw

DETAILS

Subject:	Migration; International relations; Cooperation; Prime ministers; Populism
Business indexing term:	Subject: International relations
Company / organization:	Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1820251664

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-bloc-remains-split-on-migration-growth/docview/1820251664/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 193 of 500

REVIEW --- Books: The Thought That Counts --- The most important part of any argument is preparing the audience to be convinced by it

Tavris, Carol . Tavris, Carol.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]Part I consists of six chapters on key elements of attention, including "privileged moments," identifiable instants when a person is particularly susceptible to your message, and "channeled attention," about the "human tendency to assign undue levels of importance to an idea as soon as one's attention is turned to it."

FULL TEXT

Pre-Suasion

By Robert Cialdini

Simon & Schuster, 413 pages, $28

Many years ago, my husband, an actor who trained and worked in England, had an exchange with the great Ralph Richardson about audience members with colds who would invariably cough at a critical moment -- blocking out the name of the murderer, perhaps. "Dear boy," said Richardson, "there's no such thing as the flu. There's only bad acting." Readers of Robert Cialdini's "Pre-Suasion" will learn why Richardson was right. They will also learn why I'll wait to explain why he was right until the end of this review.

Mr. Cialdini is a pre-eminent social psychologist whose classic book "Influence" published in 1984, amply deserves its continued fame -- it is readable, scientifically grounded and, dare I say, persuasive. Mr. Cialdini summarized decades of research on six basic techniques (including reciprocity, liking and reliance on authority) that increase our vulnerability to "saying yes" even if we otherwise wouldn't, shouldn't or couldn't. Now he has written something of a prequel: a book that exhaustively reviews the research not on how to influence others but on how to make people ready to be influenced. "Even the finest seeds will not take root in stony soil or bear fullest fruit in poorly prepared ground," he writes. You don't just march up to people and say "believe this" or "buy that" or "listen to this great idea I have"; but if you know how to say or do the right thing immediately before you want them to believe, buy or listen, your chances of persuasion will improve dramatically. For example:

If you want someone to feel warmly toward you, "hand them a hot drink."

If you want someone to help you, "have them look at photos of individuals standing close together."

If you want them to try an untested product, "first inquire whether they consider themselves adventurous."

If you want an employee to "make careful assessments," show them a photograph of Auguste Rodin's "The Thinker."

Do you believe any of these claims? I didn't think so. But then, I haven't pre-suaded you.

This book, however, probably will, because chapter after chapter piles on the experimental evidence from the field and the lab. "The basic idea of pre-suasion," Mr. Cialdini explains, "is that by guiding preliminary attention strategically, it's possible for a communicator to move recipients into agreement with a message before they experience it." Of course, no technique is always going to work, so he cautions against any book that promises "the" answers. But research indicates how we can increase the likelihood that a technique will work. These little boosts, he shows, can increase compliance from children, give organizations an edge over their rivals, and improve workers' performance and satisfaction. Moreover, although people in every occupation think that their issues are unique when it comes to persuasion -- marketing is different from sales is different from lobbying is different from fundraising -- they are wrong. The psychological laws he presents, Mr. Cialdini argues, show that "similar procedures can produce similar results over a wide range of situations."

Accordingly, the book is organized not by problem but by procedures and processes. You can't be persuaded of something, after all, unless you are paying attention to it, and once you are, I've got you by the throat. Accordingly, Part I consists of six chapters on key elements of attention, including "privileged moments," identifiable instants when a person is particularly susceptible to your message, and "channeled attention," about the "human tendency to assign undue levels of importance to an idea as soon as one's attention is turned to it." And what gets our attention most? Sex, threatening information (plane crashes, dire health warnings, crimes of violence), and the unusual or unfamiliar. Surrounded as we are by repeated images and blather, we are drawn to anything that stands out.

The book's second part contains chapters on the mental processes of association that make us favorable to changing our minds or behavior. These mechanisms are what make us favorably disposed to a person who shares our first name or birthday or make us more likely to buy a bottle of expensive French wine if French music is playing in the background. Part 3 consists of chapters on practices that optimize pre-suasion. Donald Trump should study the chapter on "Acting Together," because the evidence is overwhelming that cooperation boosts reciprocal liking and support, whereas going it alone increases . . . going it alone. Mr. Cialdini's examples include pre-suasion techniques that encourage "greater helping among strangers, cooperation among teammates, self-sacrifice among four-year-olds, friendship among schoolchildren, love among college students, and loyalty between consumers and brands." Whew!

The strength of this book, its comprehensiveness, is also a problem, because in the course of its 14 dense chapters the author presents so many studies, methods, stories and examples that it's easy to lose sight of the forest. Here's a way to help kids do better on standardized tests; here's a way for work groups to be more productive; here's a way to up sales of your familiar product. Nonetheless, each tree in this thicket is pretty interesting. For example, political advisers have long known that if you manipulate metaphors, you can influence policy: Is a rise in crime portrayed as "a wild beast rampaging through the city that must be stopped" or as "a spreading virus infecting the city that must be stopped"? In one study in which people read one or another version of these two news accounts, the "beast" group recommended "catch-and-cage" solutions (lock 'em up), but the "virus" group recommended "remove-unhealthy-conditions" solutions (deal with poverty and joblessness).

To his credit, Mr. Cialdini repeatedly emphasizes that the tools he describes are only tools, which can be used for good purposes or nefarious ones. Organizations that use deceitful practices with customers and stockholders, he reports, will experience "a nasty set of internal consequences" that spread like malignant tumors: Unethical tactics will damage their reputations, cause poor employee performance and attract employees "who find cheating acceptable and who will ultimately cheat the organization as a consequence." Companies that put profit above ethics, he maintains, will fail at both. I'm afraid he lapses here into delusional optimism, given his admission that in two global surveys "close to half of high-ranking executives reported they would act unethically to get or retain business."

Mr. Cialdini believes that evidence-based behavioral economics and social psychology are in a Golden Age, thanks to the increased willingness of academics to write for "the public" -- once considered an unseemly activity for any scientist. But we must be careful what we wish for, because today every academic and her grandmother are eager to write a popular book, do a TED talk and make fortunes giving motivational lectures. Often the price of that success is to jettison the complications of research by oversimplifying and smoothing out the wrinkles.

This is not Mr. Cialdini's way. Readers who know that science as well as God is in the details will find them in the endnotes, where caveats and commentary accompany the comprehensive references. Scholars, teachers and researchers will find the endnotes invaluable, because here, with his usual clarity and charm, Mr. Cialdini addresses academic concerns -- such as the debate about the persistence and strength of change that can be produced in a brief lab study or field intervention -- and explains many studies in detail, with more anecdotes to illustrate them.

I was disappointed, however, that several old studies on "priming" were included, as this research remains largely unreplicated and is in serious dispute in the field. In priming, you are asked to read or listen to some information, or perhaps a stimulus is placed unobtrusively near you, and then you are tested later to see whether the information affects your performance on another type of task. Thus people eating at a cafeteria are supposedly more likely to tidy up after eating if a bucket of cleaning fluid is placed near them than if it isn't: They have been "primed" for cleanliness. Anyone who thinks that placing a bottle of Formula 409 near a group of teenagers will increase their "cleaning behavior" knows what's wrong with priming.

Nonetheless, the overall message of this book is compelling, the studies linked by a common thread. As you read, you will realize that the old aphorism is backward: You can get a horse to drink, but only if you lead him to the water.

Oh, about that coughing audience? Mr. Cialdini provides examples (as if any were needed) showing that starting your story with a mystery, and then leaving it unsolved for a while, draws attention to your topic and makes it memorable. Ralph Richardson was right: Coughing creates a contagion effect, like yawning or itching. One damned cougher in your audience can set off others, and it has nothing to do with the flu.

Ms. Tavis, a social psychologist, is the author, with Elliot Aronson, of "Mistakes Were Made (But Not by Me)."

Credit: By Carol Tavis

DETAILS

Subject:	Books; Research; Audiences; Cooperation; Book reviews; Psychologists
Business indexing term:	Industry: 62133 : Offices of Mental Health Practitioners (except Physicians)
People:	Rodin, Auguste (1840-1917)
Classification:	62133: Offices of Mental Health Practitioners (except Physicians)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251380
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-books-thought-that-counts-most-important/docview/1820251380/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 194 of 500

REVIEW --- Good & Dirty --- Our war against microbes has created serious health problems; The remedy: Get dirty, eat better and stop overusing antibiotics

B. Brett Finlay; Marie-Claire Arrieta; Finlay, B Brett; Marie-Claire Arrieta . B. Brett Finlay; Marie-Claire Arrieta; Finlay, B Brett; Marie-Claire Arrieta.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Most human communities have experienced the benefits of medical advances like antibiotics, vaccines and sterilization, which have radically reduced the number and severity of infections that we suffer throughout life. Diabetes, allergies, asthma, inflammatory bowel diseases, autoimmune diseases, autism, obesity and certain types of cancer are at an all-time high.

FULL TEXT

Our friend Julia moved to a small free-range pig and poultry farm when her first child, Jedd, was a preschooler. When her second baby was born, she would strap him on her back every morning so that she could go to the chicken coop to pick up eggs. Jedd would chase and ride the chickens -- and sometimes taste their feed and touch the fresh eggs. A couple of times, she even caught him chewing on something he had picked up from the ground.

At first, all of this caused Julia to freak out. But once she realized that Jedd wasn't getting sick from these encounters with the chickens, she relaxed a bit. Her second child, Jacob, soon followed suit and never hesitated to get dirty on the farm. She once found him knee-deep in a cesspool of pig waste. Her early worries that her children were going to contract diseases from all this messiness dissipated, and she was pleased to see that they remained healthy.

Was Julia being an irresponsible parent -- or might we all have something to learn from her example?

For most of the past century, we have considered microbes bad news, and for good reason: They cause disease, pandemics and death. Most human communities have experienced the benefits of medical advances like antibiotics, vaccines and sterilization, which have radically reduced the number and severity of infections that we suffer throughout life. Dying from a microbial infection is now a very rare event in the Western world, and, in the U.S., lifespans have increased by some 30 years since 1915 -- in large part because of success against infectious diseases.

Unfortunately, this progress has come with a price, as news reports have been telling us for some years now. Our anti-microbe mission has been accompanied, in industrialized countries, by an explosion in the prevalence of chronic noninfectious diseases and disorders. Diabetes, allergies, asthma, inflammatory bowel diseases, autoimmune diseases, autism, obesity and certain types of cancer are at an all-time high. The incidence of some of these disorders is doubling every 10 years, and they are starting to appear sooner in life, often in childhood.

All of these diseases have a genetic component, but their alarming growth cannot be explained by genetics alone. Recent studies find a direct link between the presence and absence of certain bacteria and all of the chronic diseases mentioned above. It turns out that the microbes within us are much more than quiet residents; they are an inherent part of our physiology, and altering them leads to disease.

Our own 2015 study (published in the journal Science Translational Medicine) found, for example, that 3-month-olds who had four particular microbes in their feces were much less likely to get asthma later in life. When those four microbes were introduced into mice, they protected against experimentally induced asthma, showing for the first time that alterations in gut microbes can drive the development of the disease. Lab experiments also have found that obese mice lose weight when they get a transfer of gut microbes from lean mice (and the reverse holds true as well, with lean mice growing fat after a transfer from obese mice).

The practical upshot of all this research is clear: Our health depends to a large degree on maintaining a robust and diverse community of microorganisms in our bodies -- and establishing good gut-health as children is especially important.

During the first few months of life, the microbe community in our bodies is considerably less established and stable than later in life. Any drastic changes to it have a much higher chance of permanently altering our microbiota (as specialists call this world of tiny organisms within us) and our long-term health.

From the moment we are born, we begin getting colonized by bacteria, which kick-start a series of fundamental biological processes, including the development of our immune system. Before birth, the lining of our gut is full of immature immune cells. When bacteria move in, the immune cells react to them, changing and multiplying. They even move to other parts of the body to train other cells with the information they have acquired from these intruders. If deprived of this interaction, the immune system remains sloppy and immature, unable to fight off diseases properly.

Scientists haven't figured out exactly how microbes do this at the molecular level, but we do know that most bacteria will teach these immune cells to tolerate them, whereas some bacteria -- the pathogens that cause diseases -- prompt strong resistance. The result is to make the intestine a relatively controlled and harmonious place.

Another fundamental function of microbes is to aid in the regulation of our metabolism. Like other animals, humans obtain energy from food that is digested and absorbed in the intestines. Besides helping us digest certain foods that the intestines can't handle on their own, bacteria produce compounds that help to define how we use or store energy in our bodies. New research also shows that our microbiota plays an important role in neurological development and even in the health of our blood vessels.

Such discoveries have led scientists to call our microbiota a "new organ," perhaps the last human organ to be discovered by modern medicine. Most of this knowledge is still relatively new and many pieces of the puzzle remain unsolved, but protecting the initial developmental stages of our microbiota clearly has a significant impact on our health.

Inflammatory diseases (such as asthma, allergies and inflammatory bowel disease) and metabolic diseases (such as obesity and diabetes) are characterized by alterations in our immune system and our metabolic regulation. Knowing what we do now about the role of the microbiota, it is not surprising that these diseases are being diagnosed in more children. They are, to a great extent, a consequence of relatively recent changes in our lifestyle -- modern diet, oversanitization, excessive use of antibiotics -- that have altered the specific microbes that affect our metabolism early on. We urgently need to find ways to modify our behavior so that our microbes can function properly.

Never before in human history have babies and children grown up so cleanly, and our diets have lost many of the elements most crucial to the health of our guts. We have become very bad hosts to our microbes.

What to do about it? The U.S. Food and Drug Administration took one helpful step earlier this month when it banned some chemicals used in antibacterial soap, but the most important changes need to take place in our everyday routines.

Parents can expose their children to an array of microbes by encouraging them to spend time outside, like our friend Julia on her farm (but not necessarily with chicken and pig waste). Today children spend much less time outside than they did only 20 years ago.

Babies and toddlers often aren't allowed to play in the dirt or sand, and when they are, they are wiped clean immediately. Phrases like, "Yuck! Don't play in the mud!" or "Don't touch that bug, it's dirty!" have become second nature.

We need to unlearn these habits. By preventing babies and children from following their innate impulse to get dirty, we shield them from the microbial exposure that is essential for the development of a healthy immune system.

Parents can also promote good gut-health in their kids through diet. It is well established that the Western diet -- high in fats, sugars and highly refined grains -- is very strongly associated with a number of diseases, especially obesity and the closely linked disease of type-2 diabetes.

Our ancestors grazed on a variety of foods, which ensured a variety of microbes in their intestines: Eating a range of different foods provides a hospitable environment for a range of different microbes. Today, 75% of the world's food comes from just 12 plant species and five animal species. Amazingly, just three species -- rice, corn and wheat -- account for 60% of the calories that humans obtain from plants. Except for regions where a lack of economic development has preserved older farming and dietary practices, more people are eating refined white sugar, white flour and processed fats, instead of our ancestral diet of vegetables, fiber, fruit and nuts.

A 2010 study in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences compared the microbiota of children living in rural Burkina Faso in West Africa to the microbiota of urban, city-dwelling children in Italy. The African children ate a high-fiber diet of vegetables, grains and legumes, with no processed foods, whereas the diet of the European children was full of sugars, animal fats and refined grains. The gut microbes of the children from Burkina Faso were very different from -- and much more diverse than -- those of the Italian kids.

We wouldn't want to say that children in Burkina Faso have a healthier lifestyle than Italian children. They are more likely to suffer severe infections and malnutrition, and they have a lower life expectancy than children born in Western Europe. But they also have a decreased risk of suffering from the immune diseases that are epidemic in the Western world.

In an ideal world, children would harbor a rich and diverse community of microbes without the threat of severe infectious diseases, but our current practices only address half of this equation. Given how well bacteria respond to diet, eating a variety of foods is perhaps the best way to increase microbial diversity, and there's no better time to do this than during the first few years of life.

As a practical matter, this means that we shouldn't feed a baby only rice cereal for weeks until the package is finished. We should offer a variety of grains, including oats, rice, barley and quinoa. It's also important to offer whole grains instead of refined ones. The Western diet is extremely low in fiber, and refined grains contain very little of it.

Protein-rich legumes, such as lentils, beans and peas, have an abundance of fiber and can be easily mashed for babies. Also try nontraditional starchy vegetables such as sweet potatoes, parsnips or cassava (tapioca) rather than just sticking to low-fiber veggies such as potatoes. For older children, add fermented foods, such as yogurt, kefir, sauerkraut and other pickled vegetables.

Most people in developed societies won't crave these foods the same way that they crave the texture of macaroni and cheese or the like, but infancy is the best time to introduce good dietary practices. For children, eating healthy foods becomes a habit in the same way as cleaning their room does: by doing it frequently.

Food isn't the only way that we have altered our microbiota, however. Our microbes have perhaps taken the biggest hit from one of the best things humanity has ever invented: antibiotics. These wonder drugs have saved millions of lives and will save millions more in the future.

But antibiotics aren't targeted missiles that kill only the bad bacteria causing infections; they are carpet bombs that kill good and bad bacteria indiscriminately. Research now suggests a link between the use of antibiotics in early childhood and problems such as obesity, diabetes, asthma, allergies, autism and inflammatory bowel disease.

We ought to become more restrictive with the use of antibiotics in children. Parents shouldn't assume that all infections have to be treated with these drugs. Upper respiratory tract infections and colds are often caused by viruses, so antibacterials won't cure them. Most sore throats, especially if the child also has a runny nose and cough, are caused by viruses and don't need antibiotic therapy. If a child has a mild ear infection, it's reasonable to watch and wait for a few days to see if it gets better on its own before starting antibiotic therapy. Also, parents should consider giving probiotic supplements (with live bacteria and yeasts) to a child if he or she is being given antibiotics.

With the scientific information now available, parents can make informed choices about helping their children to develop a thriving microbiota. We are still years away from learning the whole story of how microbes contribute to our physical well-being, but what we know today is pretty convincing evidence that they are crucial, especially early in life.

For much of the past century, we have ignored, and often destroyed, the microbes that keep us healthy. It's time now to correct the balance.

Dr. Finlay is a microbiologist specializing in bacterial infections and the Peter Wall Distinguished Professor at the University of British Columbia. Dr. Arrieta is an assistant professor in the Department of Physiology and Pharmacology at the University of Calgary. This essay is adapted from their new book, "Let Them Eat Dirt: Saving Your Child From an Oversanitized World," published by Algonquin Books of Chapel Hill.

(See related letters: "Letters to the Editor: Getting the Dirt on Microbes and Our Health" -- WSJ Sept. 23, 2016)

Credit: By B. Brett Finlay and Marie-Claire Arrieta

DETAILS

Subject:	Asthma; Bacteria; Diabetes; Diet; Metabolism; Disease; Poultry; Antibiotics; Immune system; Microbiota; Obesity
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251372
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-good-amp-dirty-our-war-against-microbes/docview/1820251372/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
-------------------------	---

Last updated:	2024-08-26
---------------	------------

Database:	ProQuest Central
-----------	------------------

LINKS

Document 195 of 500

REVIEW --- Books -- Children's Books: Unexpected Friends

Meghan Cox Gurdon . Meghan Cox Gurdon.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Frustrated, she tidies up, drinks a cup of tea from her samovar, packs her things in a sack and stalks out of her village with a cry of "Leave me alone!" She shouts it again when bears in the woods interfere with her knitting.

FULL TEXT

In the traditional telling of "Snow White," a magic mirror informs the evil queen that she is no longer the fairest. In Matt Phelan's ingenious graphic-novel version set in Depression-era New York City, "Snow White" (Candlewick, 216 pages, $19.99), the oracle is a ticker-tape machine.

It's an inspired choice, given the time and place: a machine that spits out all news with equal neutrality. From its clacking, the wealthy father of Samantha White (nicknamed "Snow") learns that he alone has escaped the Wall Street crash, to the sly satisfaction of his glamorous second wife. The woman has long since dispatched his daughter -- whose mother died when Samantha was very young -- to boarding school, but the child must return when her father himself dies after a "sudden illness" following a late-night cocktail administered by his wife.

Samantha comes home a lovely young woman, heiress to most of her father's fortune and thus a double threat to the primacy of her dark-hearted stepmother. With atmospheric, largely monochrome watercolors, Mr. Phelan reworks the old story with chilly elegance but also tenderness of heart: Snow White's seven small protectors are not dwarves but young street toughs, and their scenes together are affecting. A Hooverville, Macy's and the dazzling lights of Broadway all make resonant appearances in this stylish tale for readers ages 10 and older.

Anyone who has yearned for peace and quiet -- and those who enjoy pestering such a person -- will appreciate the plight of the crotchety heroine of "Leave Me Alone!" (Roaring Brook, 40 pages, $17.99), a picture book by Vera Brosgol that hilariously mingles elements both folkloric and intergalactic.

Winter is coming, and an old woman needs to start knitting. But how can she, when she's constantly beset by a mob of jolly, rollicking, yarn-tangling grandchildren? Frustrated, she tidies up, drinks a cup of tea from her samovar, packs her things in a sack and stalks out of her village with a cry of "Leave me alone!" She shouts it again when bears in the woods interfere with her knitting. Mountain goats prove just as maddening; even on the surface of the moon, the woman gets no peace.

At wit's end, the grandmother finally opens a wormhole and steps into a cosmic void. "It was PERFECT," we read. "Soon she had no more yarn and thirty little sweaters." The clean lines and bright colors of Ms. Brosgol's pictures convey good cheer throughout, despite the yelling, in this snugly knitted amusement for 4- to 8-year-olds.

Small narrative surprises await children ages 3-6 in the three stories that compose Marianne Dubuc's "Lucy & Company" (Kids Can, 56 pages, $16.95). In the first story, Lucy and her animal friends are perched in a tree nibbling hazelnuts and biscuits, when one of the hazelnuts suddenly yelps: "Don't eat me!" It is not a nut at all but a snail named Adrian -- a new friend. The second story concerns buried treasure and ends with lemonade and birthday cake. In the third, Adrian tries to brood three eggs he has found, "but something doesn't seem quite right," for, being a snail, he can drape himself over only one egg at a time. The pale hues and friendly faces in Ms. Dubuc's illustrations give a lovely, happy feeling to this gentle picture book.

The golden glory of fall seems to whoosh through the pages of "Yellow Time" (Beach Lane, 40 pages, $17.99), a seasonal picture-book celebration by Lauren Stringer for 3- to 7-year-olds. The predominant shade here is the yellow of autumnal ash-tree leaves. Years ago, Ms. Stringer marveled as the world outside her Minneapolis window was suddenly gilded with ash leaves, and she brings that sense of wonder to her impressionistic paintings of children, pets and inky-black crows, all rejoicing in "a symphony of yellow."

Credit: By Meghan Cox Gurdon

DETAILS

Subject:	Childrens picture books
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Dubuc, Marianne
Company / organization:	Name: Macys Inc; NAICS: 445110, 455110
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251323
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-books-childrens-unexpected-friends/docview/1820251323/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 196 of 500

REVIEW --- Play: News Quiz

Akst, Daniel . Akst, Daniel.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

California's new state budget includes a ban on what? A. Breeding killer whales B. Whaling in California waters C. Serving whale-meat sushi D. Any new film versions of "Moby-Dick" --- 5.

FULL TEXT

1. Median household income surged last year to $56,516, with the biggest gains in the bottom quintile. But how many Americans remained in poverty?

A. 23 million

B. 43 million

C. 63 million

D. 83 million

2. Kate Beckinsale stars in a new film that flopped in its first weekend. Name it.

A. "The Great Mistake"

B. "My Biggest Regret"

C. "The Empty Theater"

D. "The Disappointments Room"

3. Time Inc. named a new CEO. Who is he?

A. Rich Battista

B. Dave Bautista

C. Jose Bautista

D. Fulgencio Batista

4. California's new state budget includes a ban on what?

A. Breeding killer whales

B. Whaling in California waters

C. Serving whale-meat sushi

D. Any new film versions of "Moby-Dick"

5. A jury ruled that which of these places defrauded bond investors?

A. Miami

B. Detroit

C. Stockton, Calif.

D. Vatican City

6. Bayer agreed to buy Monsanto for $57 billion. Why?

A. To benefit from Monsanto's recent acquisition of Yahoo.

B. Farming involves lots of headaches.

C. Bayer's prowess in pesticides goes with Monsanto's in high-tech seeds.

D. To gain control of Monsanto's vast aspirin plantations.

7. Which of these considers itself the world's most dog-friendly city, home to one pooch per 14 residents?

A. Canine, Texas

B. Perro, La.

C. Tel Aviv-Jaffa, Israel

D. Doha, Qatar

8. Lately, lots of people mistakenly think they have found meteorites. What do scientists call what they have found?

A. Fauxite

B. Igne-ain't

C. Meteor-mades

D. Meteor-wrongs

9. Thanks in part to international sanctions, which country's wine industry is booming?

A. Iran

B. Kazakhstan

C. North Korea

D. Russia

ANSWERS

1. B

2. D

3. A

4. A

5. A

6. C

7. C

8. D

9. D

Credit: By Daniel Akst

DETAILS

Subject:	Meteors & meteorites; State budgets
Business indexing term:	Subject: State budgets
Location:	California; United States--US
People:	Beckinsale, Kate
Company / organization:	Name: Yahoo Inc; NAICS: 516210, 519290; Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Time Inc; NAICS: 513120

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 17, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1820251302
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/review-play-news-quiz/docview/1820251302/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 197 of 500

U.S. News: Internet Plan Slows Spending Accord

Peterson, Kristina; FitzGerald, Drew . Peterson, Kristina; FitzGerald, Drew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Conservatives have been working to block or delay the Oct. 1 transfer of authority for the internet's address book to a nonprofit called the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- A divide over whether to transfer much of the U.S.'s oversight of the internet to a nonprofit has complicated negotiations on Capitol Hill this week on a spending bill needed to keep the government running after month's end.

A push this week from Republicans, led by Sen. Ted Cruz (R., Texas), to stop the transition has become an issue in negotiations over legislation to fund efforts to combat the Zika virus and keep the government running after its current funding expires at midnight on Sept. 30. Although both parties expect to reach a deal and avoid a partial government shutdown, the Senate pushed a procedural vote on the spending and Zika bill to Monday evening from Thursday to give lawmakers more time to reach an agreement.

Conservatives have been working to block or delay the Oct. 1 transfer of authority for the internet's address book to a nonprofit called the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers. The California-based organization already oversees a number of technical functions that help computers locate servers and websites.

Some Republicans worry turning over authority to a group composed of Icanm and other nongovernmental organizations could allow foreign nations to censor online activities. The nonprofit has been handling the internet's technical operations, including the domain-name system, under a contract with the U.S. government that would end.

"I'm hopeful and optimistic that leadership will maintain existing federal law that prohibits the Obama administration from handing over control of the internet to foreign nations, including Russia, China and Iran," Mr. Cruz said Thursday. "The internet is working. It's not broken and there is no sensible reason to risk giving up our freedom online."

The push has aligned Mr. Cruz with many of his GOP colleagues after years in which his presidential ambitions and solitary agenda has left them at odds in a chamber that traditionally prizes compromise and congeniality.

Democrats said the transition is necessary to sustain international support for the internet and that Republicans risked bogging down the spending bill with unrelated measures.

"Every single extraneous item makes it harder to get across the finish line," said Sen. Chris Murphy (D., Conn.). "This transition needs to happen in order to maintain a free and open internet," he said.

Commerce Department official Lawrence Strickling rebuffed the idea this week that the transition would allow Russia, China or other countries to censor online content.

Many high-tech firms view the shift as essential to maintaining international support for the internet's governance, as foreign countries increasingly bridle at the U.S. role.

GOP leaders said Thursday they were still discussing with Democrats whether the internet transition would be addressed as part of the spending package.

Icann was formed in 1998 to oversee many of the internet's technical functions. The move was part of a Clinton administration push to further commercialize the internet, which began as a government-funded network.

Icann vice president Jamie Hedlund said allowing the transition to fail would give U.S. critics a pretext for demanding U.N. authority over the internet. "Russia and China would love to see the transition fail," Mr. Hedlund said. "It will be much more persuasive on the international stage with countries that have not made up their minds about the multistakeholder model."

Lawmakers said the internet dispute was one among many issues still being ironed out in the spending bill negotiations.

John D. McKinnon contributed to this article.

Credit: By Kristina Peterson and Drew FitzGerald

DETAILS

Subject:	Internet access; Federal budget; Zika virus; Political leadership; Nonprofit organizations
Business indexing term:	Subject: Federal budget; Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Internet Corp for Assigned Names & Numbers; NAICS: 926130
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660

Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678635
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-internet-plan-slows-spending-accord/docview/1819678635/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 198 of 500

U.S. News: Prospects for Economic Surge Ebb --- Retail sales, jobless claims, manufacturing data damp optimism for strong year-end

Morath, Eric . Morath, Eric.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The uptick was expected to deliver firmer wage growth and price gains, and put Federal Reserve policy makers in a position to lift the central bank's benchmark interest rate by this month.

FULL TEXT

Cautious consumers, retrenching manufacturers and scant signs of inflation are diminishing optimism about a breakout in economic growth in the final stretch of the year.

Retail sales declined last month for the first time since March and manufacturing production slipped, government data released Thursday showed. Meanwhile, prices businesses receive for their goods and services were unchanged last month, a sign of still-soft demand at home and abroad. Companies also remain cautious about building up too much inventory, new figures showed.

Recent economic gauges, including evidence of a slowdown in August hiring, suggest the economy could be constrained for the rest of the year to a growth rate only slightly above the expansion's overall 2% pace -- the weakest of any since World War II.

Forecasters long expected an acceleration in the economy starting in the summer after nine months of economic growth around a 1% rate. The uptick was expected to deliver firmer wage growth and price gains, and put Federal Reserve policy makers in a position to lift the central bank's benchmark interest rate by this month.

"Consumer spending growth is steady, but not spectacular," said HSBC Securities economist Ryan Wang. When combined with manufacturing weakness and slower labor-market improvement, overall economic growth in 2016 "will come in a little lower than the average over the past five years."

HSBC forecasts the economy to grow at a 2.5% rate in the second half of the year, and 1.8% for the full year. Barclays economists on Thursday lowered their third-quarter forecast for growth by 0.2 percentage point to a 2.6% pace. Macroeconomic Advisers reduced its third-quarter projection to a 3.2% gain from 3.4%.

With few signs of stronger momentum for consumer spending, manufacturing output or hiring emerging in recent data, and still-soft inflation, Mr. Wang and many other economists expect the Fed to hold rates steady at next week's policy meeting.

It is a familiar story for the U.S. economy since the recession ended in mid-2009. Signs of gathering strength often have failed to yield a sustained acceleration in the expansion. Some firms now see consumers growing more cautious ahead of November's election.

"We were growing like crazy," said Jason Hornung, who operates Hornung's Ace Hardware in Linglestown, Pa. "This year, not so much. It's been stagnant. That seems to happen around an election year."

Customers have pared spending on bigger-ticket items such as riding lawn mowers and high-end chain saws, he said. Those purchases can typically be postponed if consumers are uncertain about the future.

Nationally, retail sales declined a seasonally adjusted 0.3% in August from July, the Commerce Department said. Spending at auto dealerships and department stores fell last month. So did sales in the category that includes online purchases with Amazon.com Inc. and its competitors, a bright spot for spending this year.

Consumer spending had helped offset weak manufacturing output early in 2016. A stronger dollar slowed exports and a retrenching energy industry hurt business investment. With energy prices and the dollar mostly stabilizing of late, the drag was expected to ease. But in August, manufacturing output fell 0.4%, and is down by the same amount from a year earlier, according to Fed data released Thursday. The latest drop was led by lower output of consumer goods.

"We have not seen much change in the general economy in North America," Dave Farr, chief executive of Emerson Electric Co., told investors Wednesday. "On the consumer side of our businesses we've seen growth, but even the consumers are being cautious . . . On the industrial side, companies continue to cut."

The producer-price index for final demand, measuring changes in the prices that U.S. companies receive for their goods and services, was unchanged in August, both from July and a year earlier, the Labor Department said Thursday.

The Fed's preferred inflation gauge, the Commerce Department's price index for personal-consumption expenditures, has undershot the central bank's 2% annual target for more than four years.

And a separate Commerce Department report showed inventories at U.S. businesses were unchanged in July, an indication firms don't expect more robust demand in the near future. The paring back of private inventories has been a major drag on overall GDP growth for the past five quarters.

Jeffrey Sparshott contributed to this article.

Credit: By Eric Morath

DETAILS

Subject:	Consumers; Consumer spending; Central banks; Economic growth; Economic conditions; Inventory; Prices; Manufacturing
Business indexing term:	Subject: Consumers Consumer spending Central banks Economic growth Economic conditions Inventory Manufacturing; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678535
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-prospects-economic-surge-ebb-retail/docview/1819678535/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 199 of 500

U.S. News: Attempt to Impeach IRS Chief Is Delayed

Rubin, Richard . Rubin, Richard.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Members of the House Freedom Caucus, a bloc of the House's most conservative Republicans, used a rare procedural maneuver in an effort to force the full House to vote Thursday on whether to impeach Mr. Koskinen.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Conservative hard-liners in the House of Representatives backed off their call for an immediate vote on impeaching the Internal Revenue Service commissioner, a sign of growing unease among Republicans over how far to push the fight before the November election.

Instead of a Thursday vote, Commissioner John Koskinen is scheduled to testify Sept. 21 at a Judiciary Committee hearing, and the full House probably won't vote on impeachment until after the November election.

Some Republicans accuse Mr. Koskinen of impeding the investigation into the agency's treatment of conservative nonprofit groups before he arrived in 2013. They point to the destruction of records under his watch and say he didn't act quickly enough to inform Congress after he learned of the destruction.

Mr. Koskinen's defenders say the records destruction was inadvertent, that he didn't knowingly make any false statements, and that the charges aren't serious enough to make him the first official other than judges and presidents to be impeached since 1876.

Members of the House Freedom Caucus, a bloc of the House's most conservative Republicans, used a rare procedural maneuver in an effort to force the full House to vote Thursday on whether to impeach Mr. Koskinen. But many other Republicans were wary about skipping the Judiciary Committee, which hasn't voted or questioned Mr. Koskinen, and the vote wasn't held after the deal to hold the hearing was struck.

They reached a deal with Judiciary Committee Chairman Bob Goodlatte (R., Va.) late Wednesday night, leading to the scheduling of the hearing.

"This is a huge win for us because there's more information," said Rep. John Fleming (R., La.), a leader of the impeachment effort. "We want to get his explanation. We want to get him under oath and have him explain to us why he did what he did."

In a statement Thursday, the IRS said it was trying to discuss the hearing with the Judiciary Committee to understand whether it is "informational" or a "formal impeachment proceeding." In a letter Mr. Koskinen's private lawyers sent to lawmakers last week, they noted that in formal proceedings, the accused can typically call witnesses.

The anti-IRS fight is popular inside the party and among conservative activists, but other Republicans aren't eager to make this one of the key issues they highlight in their few weeks in Washington before taking their pre-election recess.

Postponing the vote spares Republicans from making a politically difficult choice, because voting to block the impeachment could be seen in a party primary as defending the IRS. It also prevented the Freedom Caucus members from a possible loss Thursday on the House floor.

The impeachment effort, even if it regains steam in the House, is unlikely to lead to Mr. Koskinen's removal from office. Bipartisan support in the Senate would be needed to reach the two-thirds threshold, and Senate Republicans aren't enthusiastic either.

Credit: By Richard Rubin

DETAILS

Subject:	Impeachment; Judiciary; Primaries & caucuses
People:	Koskinen, John
Company / organization:	Name: Internal Revenue Service--IRS; NAICS: 921130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678444
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-attempt-impeach-irs-chief-is-delayed/docview/1819678444/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 200 of 500

Business Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Italian-U.S. auto maker said on Thursday that vehicles equipped with a certain occupant restraint control module and front-impact sensor wiring with a specific design can fail to activate air bags and seat-belt restraints in some crashes.

FULL TEXT

FIAT CHRYSLER

Vehicles Are Recalled

Over Air Bags, Belts

Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV recalled 1.9 million vehicles world-wide for possible air-bag and seat-belt failures linked to at least three deaths and five injuries.

The Italian-U.S. auto maker said on Thursday that vehicles equipped with a certain occupant restraint control module and front-impact sensor wiring with a specific design can fail to activate air bags and seat-belt restraints in some crashes.

Fiat Chrysler no longer uses the affected parts, the company said. It is "aware of three fatalities and five injuries that may potentially be related to this condition."

The auto maker said it uncovered the problem analyzing crashes and collecting data from vehicles.

Fiat Chrysler is among auto makers facing unprecedented scrutiny from regulators for safety lapses.

-- Mike Spector

BARRICK GOLD

Mine Operations Halt

After Argentine Spill

Barrick Gold Corp. on Thursday said government authorities have temporarily halted operations at its Veladero gold mine in Argentina to allow for an inspection of the heap leach area after a small amount of processing solution spilled late last week.

The Toronto-based gold-mining company, the world's largest by output, said a pipe carrying solution used to extract gold was hit by a block of ice last Thursday, resulting in "a small quantity of solution" spilling off the leach pad at the mine. It said the solution didn't reach any water sources and the affected area has been cleaned up.

"The company will work with provincial authorities to confirm the integrity and safety of the heap leach facility as quickly as possible," Barrick said in a news release. It didn't specify the amount of solution spilled.

-- Judy McKinnon

AUTOS

Car Sales Rise in EU;

U.K. Mood Improves

New car sales in the European Union rose 10% in August, with the U.K. market recovering from a Brexit-vote wobble in June and July, according to data published by the European Automobile Manufacturers' Association on Thursday.

New car registrations, a mirror for sales, rose to 819,126 vehicles in the EU in August from 744,698 vehicles, the 36th consecutive month of sales growth. New EU sales in the first eight months of the year rose 8.1% to 9.8 million vehicles, the data show.

U.K. sales rose 3.3% after a near-flat reading in July and an 0.8% fall in June following the vote to quit the European Union.

Car sales in Germany, Europe's largest market, rose 8.3%, and France sales gained 6.7%. Spain was up 15%, and Italy notched 20% growth, the strongest growth in the big five countries.

Falling unemployment, negative interest rates and cheap financing are spurring the recovery, said Peter Fuss, a partner at Ernst & Young's automotive research unit. The U.K figures add to evidence U.K. consumers' moods improved in August after turning gloomy following the Brexit vote. Data from market researchers GfK U.K. Ltd show consumer confidence recovered in August after suffering its steepest decline in more than two decades after the vote.

-- William Wilkes

DETAILS

Subject:	Air bags; Automobile industry; Sales; Gold mines & mining; Automobile sales
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile industry Sales Gold mines & mining Automobile sales; Industry: 21222 : Gold Ore and Silver Ore Mining 33611 : Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Location:	United Kingdom--UK; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120
Classification:	21222: Gold Ore and Silver Ore Mining; 33611: Automobile and Light Duty Motor Vehicle Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	B.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678424
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-watch/docview/1819678424/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 201 of 500

U.S. News: President Urged Not To Pardon Snowden

Paletta, Damian . Paletta, Damian.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Every member of the House Intelligence Committee signed a letter to President Barack Obama on Thursday urging him not to pardon Edward Snowden, the former National Security Agency contractor who prompted an overhaul of government surveillance programs after he leaked stolen records about the agency in 2013.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- Every member of the House Intelligence Committee signed a letter to President Barack Obama on Thursday urging him not to pardon Edward Snowden, the former National Security Agency contractor who prompted an overhaul of government surveillance programs after he leaked stolen records about the agency in 2013.

The letter, signed by 23 members of Congress, comes as a new movie about Mr. Snowden is released.

Civil-liberties groups are pushing for the president to pardon Mr. Snowden in his final months in office, although the White House has shown no sign of agreeing to this request.

The letter from the committee members said Mr. Snowden "perpetrated the largest and most damaging public disclosure of classified information in our nation's history."

Mr. Snowden is believed to be living in Russia.

His disclosures shed light on a number of secret surveillance programs, including the government's practice of sweeping up telephone records of millions of Americans. Supporters of the program said it was necessary for national security, but critics said it amounted to a vast overreach of U.S. power. The program has been scaled back by Congress following the outcry from Mr. Snowden's disclosures.

The House Intelligence Committee on Thursday said it approved a 36-page document that finds Mr. Snowden to be a "disgruntled employee" and not a whistleblower, saying his motives weren't as patriotic as he and his supporters have described. It alleged he began downloading documents after he was reprimanded at work for engaging in a fiery email exchange and looping in a senior NSA supervisor.

Mr. Snowden seemed to scoff at that characterization in the report, saying on Twitter that, "Their report is so artlessly distorted that it would be amusing if it weren't such a serious act of bad faith."

Credit: By Damian Paletta

DETAILS

Subject:	Surveillance; National security; Pardons; Committees; Classified information
People:	Obama, Barack; Snowden, Edward Joseph
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678381
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-president-urged-not-pardon-snowden/docview/1819678381/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 202 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Jon Kamp --- E-CIGARETTES FDA Cracks Down On Underage Sales The Food and Drug Administration cracked down on online sales by the e-cigarette industry, issuing 24 letters to websites for illegal sales to minors.

FULL TEXT

VIRGINIA

Governor Wins Felon

Voting Rights Case

Virginia's top court denied state Republican leaders' effort to hold Democratic Gov. Terry McAuliffe in contempt for restoring voting rights to people with felony records.

Mr. McAuliffe's office said the Supreme Court of Virginia's order protects rights he restored in August for about 13,000 people who had served sentences.

GOP leaders say Mr. McAuliffe's move is for political gain. People affected by his voting restoration order are disproportionately black, and black voters are widely acknowledged to favor Democrats. The governor has said he is righting a wrong in a state with strict felon-disenfranchisement rules.

-- Jon Kamp

E-CIGARETTES

FDA Cracks Down

On Underage Sales

The Food and Drug Administration cracked down on online sales by the e-cigarette industry, issuing 24 letters to websites for illegal sales to minors. The letters are the first sent since the FDA banned e-cigarette sales to anyone under 18 on Aug. 8. The sites have 15 days to reply and explain how they will stop future underage sales.

-- Tripp Mickle

DETAILS

Subject:	Voting rights; State court decisions; Electronic cigarettes; Minors; Political leadership
-----------------	---

Business indexing term:	Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
--------------------------------	---

Location:	Virginia; United States--US
------------------	-----------------------------

Company / organization:	Name: Food & Drug Administration--FDA; NAICS: 922190; Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678378
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1819678378/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Business News: Michigan Denies Tesla's Request For Dealership

Higgins, Tim . Higgins, Tim.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Officials in Michigan have rejected Tesla Motors Inc.'s request to open a company-owned dealership, a move that indicates the home state for Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Co. will stick to its ban on selling new cars directly to consumers.

FULL TEXT

Officials in Michigan have rejected Tesla Motors Inc.'s request to open a company-owned dealership, a move that indicates the home state for Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Co. will stick to its ban on selling new cars directly to consumers.

The Michigan Secretary of State's office this week ruled against the Silicon Valley electric-car maker's selling vehicles in the state without using franchised dealers.

Gisgie Davila Gendreau, a spokeswoman for the office, confirmed the state's decision Thursday in an e-mail.

Tesla has been seeking an application for a new auto dealership license in Michigan, one of several states to continue banning direct sales of automobiles by manufacturers.

"The license was denied because state law explicitly requires a dealer to have a bona fide contract with an auto manufacturer to sell its vehicles," Ms. Davila Gendreau said.

"Tesla has told the department it does not have one, and cannot comply with that requirement," she added.

The Palo Alto, Calif., company filed an application last November for permission to open a dealership and service center in Michigan with the Secretary of State.

Tesla has for years been trying to steer around state franchise laws so it can set up its own retail locations, but it has faced intense resistance from franchise automobile dealerships and auto makers.

Dealership owners carry heavy sway among state lawmakers, often arguing the auto maker would unfairly cut out the middleman with a business model that involves selling directly to customers.

"At the urging of local car dealers and GM, Michigan law was changed two years ago to prevent Michigan consumers from buying cars from a Tesla store within the state," Tesla said in a prepared statement. "As part of the process of challenging the legality of that law, Tesla applied for a license in Michigan. Tesla will continue to take steps to defend the rights of Michigan consumers."

The Detroit News earlier reported the ruling, which was dated Sept. 12 and followed a hearing held Sept. 7.

Credit: By Tim Higgins

DETAILS

Subject:	State laws; Electric vehicles; Automobile dealers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Automobile dealers; Corporation: Tesla Inc; Industry: 44111 : New Car Dealers 44112 : Used Car Dealers
Location:	Michigan; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Ford Motor Co; NAICS: 333924, 336110, 336390; Name: Tesla Motors Inc; NAICS: 336999
Classification:	44111: New Car Dealers; 44112: Used Car Dealers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678363
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-michigan-denies-teslas-request/docview/1819678363/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 204 of 500

U.S. Seeks Heavy Fine for Deutsche --- Justice Department proposes $14 billion mortgage-securities probe settlement

Aruna Viswanatha; Jenny Strasburg; Eyk Henning; Viswanatha, Aruna; Strasburg, Jenny; Eyk Henning .
Aruna Viswanatha; Jenny Strasburg; Eyk Henning; Viswanatha, Aruna; Strasburg, Jenny; Eyk Henning.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The European banks that remain under investigation and could face penalties besides Deutsche Bank, include Barclays PLC, Credit Suisse Group AG, UBS Group AG and Royal Bank of Scotland Group PLC, according to bank disclosures and people familiar with the matter.

FULL TEXT

The Justice Department proposed that Deutsche Bank AG pay $14 billion to settle a set of high-profile mortgage-securities probes stemming from the financial crisis, according to people familiar with the matter, a number that would rank among the largest of what other banks have paid to resolve similar claims and is well above what investors have been expecting.

The figure is described by people close to the negotiations between Deutsche Bank and the government as preliminary, and they said it came up in discussions between the bank and government lawyers in recent days. It hasn't been previously disclosed.

It also isn't clear how much of the amount is proposed to be paid in cash, and how much could be in consumer relief, as past deals have been structured.

After The Wall Street Journal reported the proposal, Deutsche Bank confirmed in a statement that the Justice Department's opening bid is $14 billion and that the bank was invited to submit a counter proposal.

"Deutsche Bank has no intent to settle these potential civil claims anywhere near the number cited," the bank said.

"The negotiations are only just beginning. The bank expects that they will lead to an outcome similar to those of peer banks which have settled at materially lower amounts."

The Justice Department routinely opens high-stakes civil settlement talks with a tough posture, posing higher numbers than it might expect eventually to win, even from banks eager to close long-running probes, lawyers involved in current and similar negotiations say.

Deutsche Bank hasn't said what it has set aside in anticipation of a settlement. The bank held 5.5 billion euros ($6.2 billion) in total litigation reserves as of June 30, and said it expected to set aside more before the end of the year.

Privately, Deutsche Bank lawyers have suggested that the bank views between $2 billion and $3 billion as a reasonable cost to close out the Justice Department's mortgage-related probe quickly, according to people familiar with internal bank discussions and signals communicated to investors.

A hefty settlement would be bad news for a clutch of big European lenders who also face potential penalties or litigation in connection with a U.S. crackdown on the selling and packaging of residential mortgage-backed securities before 2008. Big U.S. banks have paid multibillion-dollar settlements for allegedly misleading investors about the quality of such securities.

The largest so far has been $16.65 billion paid by Bank of America Corp. in 2014. Goldman Sachs Group Inc. agreed in April to a $5 billion deal that included a $2.4 billion cash penalty plus a pledge of $1.8 billion to help struggling borrowers and communities hard hit by the 2008 collapse in home prices.

The banks have been accused of bundling poorly underwritten home loans and selling them as safer securities than they knew them to be, ultimately helping to fuel a bubble in rising home prices and exacerbating the consequences of the subsequent collapse.

Citigroup Inc., J.P. Morgan Chase & Co. and Morgan Stanley together paid more than $23 billion in penalties and consumer help to settle claims.

In all of these settlements, the banks acknowledged improper behavior. The European banks that remain under investigation and could face penalties besides Deutsche Bank, include Barclays PLC, Credit Suisse Group AG, UBS Group AG and Royal Bank of Scotland Group PLC, according to bank disclosures and people familiar with the matter.

The banks haven't commented on any potential settlements other than to say they are cooperating with the investigations.

Some have set aside money for mortgage investigations as part of their broader legal provisions, without specifying allocations, according to company filings.

Barclays CEO Jes Staley and Deutsche Bank CEO John Cryan have both said they are eager to put big-ticket legal matters behind them.

Analysts have estimated Deutsche Bank alone might pay between $2 billion and $5 billion, based on previous settlements with banks including Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley, and Deutsche Bank's relative size in the precrisis market for packaging and selling residential-mortgage-backed securities.

DETAILS

Subject:	Mortgage backed securities; Banking industry; Fines & penalties; Attorneys
Business indexing term:	Subject: Mortgage backed securities Banking industry; Corporation: Deutsche Bank AG Morgan Stanley Goldman Sachs Group Inc; Industry: 52599 : Other Financial Vehicles 54111 : Offices of Lawyers
Company / organization:	Name: Deutsche Bank AG; NAICS: 522110, 551111; Name: Department of Justice; NAICS: 922130
Classification:	52599: Other Financial Vehicles; 54111: Offices of Lawyers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678340
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-seeks-heavy-fine-deutsche-justice-department/docview/1819678340/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2025-01-29

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 205 of 500

World News: World Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

SYRIA U.N. Accuses Regime Of Delaying Aid The United Nations blamed the Syrian regime for holding up truckloads of aid for rebel-held areas of the country besieged by the government, and the U.S. said the delay represented a violation of the cease-fire it hammered out with Russia.

FULL TEXT

SYRIA

U.N. Accuses Regime

Of Delaying Aid

The United Nations blamed the Syrian regime for holding up truckloads of aid for rebel-held areas of the country besieged by the government, and the U.S. said the delay represented a violation of the cease-fire it hammered out with Russia.

U.N. Special Envoy for Syria Staffan de Mistura said the government hasn't provided authorizations needed for 40 truckloads of aid, making it impossible to take advantage of the significant lull in violence brought by the three-day-old truce.

State Department officials wouldn't specify at which point the absence of humanitarian access would constitute a failure of the cease-fire deal. The U.S. and Russia on Wednesday agreed to extend the cease-fire for another 48 hours.

-- Marjorie Olster

JAPAN

Party Elects Leader of

Mixed Ethnic Heritage

The main opposition Democratic Party chose as its new leader a lawmaker whose father was Taiwanese, making her the first person with mixed ethnic heritage to head a major political party in Japan.

The rise of Renho Murata, a 48-year-old three-term upper house lawmaker, highlights the growing presence in society of Japanese citizens with at least one foreign parent. The nation has long had a minority of Koreans, and more recently foreign workers have taken a growing role.

Marriages between one Japanese citizen and a non-Japanese accounted for 3.3% of total marriages in Japan in 2015, up from around 0.5% when Ms. Murata was born in 1967.

After she was chosen as leader, Ms. Murata said she would seek to promote diversity and coexistence.

-- Mitsuru Obe

UNITED KINGDOM

Shoppers Show No

Signs of Brexit Blues

The U.K.'s surprise vote to leave the European Union hasn't dented Britons' enthusiasm for shopping. The Office for National Statistics said retail sales climbed 6.2% in August from a year earlier, while July's sales figures were revised to show 1.9% growth in July, the strongest annual growth in over a decade.

The figures are the latest sign that the U.K. economy has remained resilient following the June 23 referendum. The run of positive data has prompted economists to tear up their gloomy prognoses for the economy in the aftermath of the vote and instead pencil in steady, if unspectacular, growth for the remainder of the year.

Still, the Bank of England, which held its benchmark interest rate steady on Thursday, signaled that it expects to cut its benchmark interest rate again this year if the economy weakens as officials forecast.

-- Wiktor Szary

ZIMBABWE

Central Bank Plans

To Issue Bond Notes

Zimbabwe's central bank said it would start issuing its own bank notes in October to alleviate a severe dollar shortage in the country, which abandoned its national currency in 2009.

The move comes amid growing protests against President Robert Mugabe and is likely to trigger fears of a return to the hyperinflation that battered the country in the first decade of the century.

In 2009, Zimbabwe moved on to a basket of foreign currencies, including the South African rand and the British pound, although most transactions are made in U.S. dollars.

John Mangudya, the governor of the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe, said he expects some $75 million in so-called bond notes, which will be on par with the U.S. dollar, to be in circulation by the end of the year. The switch to the dollar has backfired lately as the rising dollar has made Zimbabwean goods more expensive.

-- Bernard Mpfu

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Interest rates; Central banks; American dollar
Business indexing term:	Subject: Interest rates Central banks American dollar; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Japan
Company / organization:	Name: United Nations--UN; NAICS: 928120; Name: Bank of England; NAICS: 521110; Name: European Union; NAICS: 926110, 928120; Name: Democratic Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678285
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-watch/docview/1819678285/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text .
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 206 of 500

U.S. News: Fire Crews Fight Over Pay --- State firefighters in California seek wages more in line with city and local teams

Calfas, Jennifer . Calfas, Jennifer.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Pay has long been an issue for state crews, who start at minimum wage, though they can significantly boost their salaries through mandatory overtime during fire season.

FULL TEXT

LOS ANGELES -- In late August, Emily Travis, a seasonal firefighter with the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection, was working to control a wildfire in Northern California when flames jumped containment lines. Ms. Travis bolted wearing 50 pounds of gear, the fire so close she could feel its heat on her back.

She and her crew made it to an already burned section of brush -- a safe spot called the "good black" -- then returned to the front line. For her work, Ms. Travis makes $10 per hour, the state's minimum wage.

"The fact that it's so taxing and that we could go somewhere else to make the same amount . . . sometimes, you don't know if it's worth it," said Ms. Travis, 21, who hopes wages increase so she can enter the field permanently. She works on a livestock ranch the rest of the year, earning $15 an hour.

As more than 2,200 firefighters combat six large wildfires burning across this drought-ridden state, many of them also are engaged in a battle over pay.

On large, complex fires, state crews often work alongside counterparts from federal, county and city agencies. But state firefighters earn about a third less per hour than those who work for counties and cities, according to a 2014 state government study.

Pay has long been an issue for state crews, who start at minimum wage, though they can significantly boost their salaries through mandatory overtime during fire season.

Extreme fire activity in recent years has made the job more dangerous and exhausting, crews say. From Jan. 1 to Sept. 3, 2016, more than 4,450 fires burned 192,190 acres in California, according to data from Cal Fire, the state agency. The five-year average for the period is 3,638 fires covering over 101,700 acres.

State firefighters are leaving for more lucrative county and city positions with greater earning power and lower mandatory hours. That has spurred the union to make a new push for wage increases, with the backing of the rank and file after reaching a stalemate in contract talks with the state. For the first time in 40 years, firefighters rallied last month in Sacramento to seek a raise. The contract expires in 2017.

"Our skilled firefighters are on the front lines, risking their lives," said Darren Dow, a fire captain with Cal Fire. "What are their lives worth? Right now, to the state of California, it's minimum wage."

After 26 years with the department, Mr. Dow earns $19.95 an hour but makes $86,400 annually, working 72 hours a week, including time-and-a-half for some of those hours. Base pay for his position ranges from around $45,000 to $57,000.

Brian Ferguson, a spokesman for California's Department of General Services, called state firefighters "everyday heroes" and said the state "must balance the needs of many different bargaining units and the overall state budget." He couldn't comment on current wages or negotiations. The governor's office and officials from Cal Fire declined to comment.

Joe DeAnda, spokesman for the California Department of Human Resources, said no analysis has been done on the reasons for state crews' lower pay, but said that in general, when such differences exist, it is because the state can't keep pace with local wage growth, and over time the gap grows.

A coming minimum-wage increase in California will boost starting salaries of firefighters -- but the union says that compounds the problem.

Based on the current contract, salaries of entry-level firefighters have risen with minimum-wage increases, but the salaries of their supervisors -- engineers, captains and battalion chiefs -- haven't seen the same percentage jumps.

The union, Cal Fire Local 2881, which represents 6,000 of Cal Fire's 8,000 employees, wants a structure to restore hierarchy in the pay grade.

State firefighters work a 72-hour week; city crews work a 56-hour week; and federal firefighters work a 40-hour week, which may be extended during an active fire.

State and local firefighters are paid overtime if they work over 53 hours a week. For state crews, that means they get time-and-a-half for 19 hours, making their total income more comparable to other departments. Cal Fire employees earn 90% less in base pay than some county and local employees, the 2014 study found. With overtime, they make about 33% less.

Credit: By Jennifer Calfas

DETAILS

Subject:	Firefighters; Minimum wage; Labor disputes; Overtime pay; Employees; State budgets; Wages & salaries; Forest & brush fires
Business indexing term:	Subject: Minimum wage Labor disputes Overtime pay Employees State budgets Wages & salaries; Industry: 92216 : Fire Protection
Location:	California; United States--US
Classification:	92216: Fire Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economic s--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678242
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-fire-crews-fight-over-pay-state/docview/1819678242/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 207 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Solar-energy firms are being investigated by lawmakers over whether they improperly received billions of dollars in tax incentives. ---

FULL TEXT

The Bank of Japan's experiment in monetary easing is floundering, and its engineers are split over how to get it on track.

Samsung is said to have exacerbated the predicament over the Galaxy Note 7 in the way it communicated with regulators and consumers.

The Justice Department proposed that Deutsche Bank pay $14 billion to settle mortgage-securities probes.

The U.S. is investigating whether aluminum at a New Jersey factory is part of an alleged scheme by a Chinese billionaire to evade tariffs.

Retail sales declined last month for the first time since March and manufacturing output slipped.

Unilever is in talks to acquire Honest, the consumer-products retailer co-founded by actress Jessica Alba.

Solar-energy firms are being investigated by lawmakers over whether they improperly received billions of dollars in tax incentives.

The tech sector led stocks higher, with the Dow gaining 177.71. Long-term Treasurys were again hit by selling.

Oracle's cloud business posted another strong sales gain, but the company's results missed expectations.

Bayer's CEO has embarked on a challenging course with the deal for Monsanto.

DETAILS

Location:	United States--US; New Jersey
People:	Alba, Jessica Marie
Company / organization:	Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Deutsche Bank AG; NAICS: 522110, 551111; Name: Bank of Japan; NAICS: 521110; Name: Unilever PLC; NAICS: 311421, 311512, 311520, 311941, 325611, 325620
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678169
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1819678169/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2021-09-16
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 208 of 500

U.S. Chases Chinese Metals Trail

Scheck, Justin; Miller, John W; P atterson, Scott . Scheck, Justin; Miller, John W; Patterson, Scott.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A China Zhongwang spokeswoman said pallets manufactured by Zhongwang "are not under the scope of anti-dumping rules. [...]there is no such situation as circumventing tariffs."

FULL TEXT

DELAIR, N.J. -- The U.S. Commerce Department is investigating whether thousands of tons of aluminum at a factory in a Philadelphia suburb are part of an alleged scheme by a Chinese billionaire to evade tariffs by disguising the metal as pallets and then remelting them for other uses.

The probe is part of a broader Commerce Department investigation into metals magnate Liu Zhongtian and his company, China Zhongwang Holdings Ltd., among the world's largest aluminum manufacturers, according to federal documents and a department spokesman.

Mr. Liu and China Zhongwang were subjects of a Wall Street Journal article last week detailing allegations that firms linked to Mr. Liu tried to disguise the Chinese origin of large quantities of aluminum and avoid American tariffs by routing it through Mexico. Mr. Liu denied any connection to metal stockpiled in Mexico, which people familiar with the matter say once reached nearly a million metric tons, or enough to make 77 billion beer cans.

The Commerce Department is investigating whether a New Jersey company called Aluminum Shapes LLC became a separate route for Mr. Liu to evade tariffs, a spokesman confirmed.

Aluminum Shapes said it hasn't violated any trade rules. A spokesman said the company doesn't own the thousands of tons of Chinese-made aluminum pallets warehoused at its facilities and merely charged storage fees to the owner, who the spokesman says is a former Aluminum Shapes executive. A company spokesman said the metal was marketed for use as pallets, not to be remelted, though none of it has been sold.

A U.S. trade group has alleged to the Commerce Department that the pallets at Aluminum Shapes were imported as a way of circumventing tariffs on so-called extrusions, products made by heating and squeezing aluminum into shapes such as pipes and construction beams. Pallets, made by welding multiple extrusions together, aren't on the Commerce Department's list of penalized items.

The Commerce Department in 2010 punished China Zhongwang and other Chinese producers with tariffs as high as 374.15% after finding they were receiving illegal subsidies, and also dumping, or selling products below market prices.

Typical tariffs on other aluminum products, including pallets, are about 5%. Aluminum Shapes said the pallets it stored were subject to duties of 2.68%.

Importing so many pallets was unusual, aluminum-industry officials say. Aluminum pallets fill a niche in the U.S., limited to "specialized uses" like the relatively small airfreight market, says Dick Evans, the former chief executive of aluminum maker Alcan Inc. The pallets at Aluminum Shapes are also several times heavier than similar ones on the market -- a key issue because pallets are supposed to be light to save on shipping costs.

A China Zhongwang spokeswoman said pallets manufactured by Zhongwang "are not under the scope of anti-dumping rules. Therefore, there is no such situation as circumventing tariffs." She added that Zhongwang doesn't have a business relationship with Aluminum Shapes.

In an interview in China, Mr. Liu said he isn't trying to send aluminum into the U.S. and that he has no business interest in Aluminum Shapes.

An Aluminum Shapes spokesman said the owner is removing the metal from its warehouse following the Journal's coverage of China Zhongwang. The spokesman didn't say where it was going but said it would take days to move all of it.

Inexpensive metal from China has driven down prices in the U.S., slamming American producers who say some of the imports skirt trade laws. U.S. steelmakers are struggling, and Alcoa Inc., the U.S.'s biggest aluminum producer, is preparing to split in two after its raw aluminum business suffered under pressure from less-expensive imports.

Commerce began investigating the Aluminum Shapes stockpile after the Aluminum Extruders Council, a trade group, complained in 2015, according to public documents and a department spokesman.

U.S. Customs and Border Protection examined the Shapes pallets in 2015 and decided they complied with U.S. laws, according to a Customs letter Shapes provided to the Journal. Commerce subsequently opened its own probe into the pallets.

The connections between China Zhongwang and Aluminum Shapes date back to 2011. A company run by Johnson Shao, whom Mr. Liu described as China Zhongwang's U.S. retail agent, offered to sell pallets stockpiled in California to the New Jersey company to melt down, says a person involved in the talks. The New Jersey company's executives traveled to China and met Mr. Liu at his Liaoning plant, according to a photograph and news release on China Zhongwang's website. A China Zhongwang spokeswoman said many of the company's peers visit the factory each year.

About a year later, Aluminum Shapes was bought by Global Aluminum, a company run by Mr. Shao. The deal was for about $50 million, completed through wire transfers from Mr. Shao's account to Aluminum Shapes' prior owner, a private-equity firm, says a person involved in the deal.

The new owner began a renovation partially overseen by top China Zhongwang engineer Qingmei Ma, internal company documents show. A Zhongwang spokeswoman said Ms. Qingmei visited Aluminum Shapes, and declined to make her available to comment.

Thousands of tons of aluminum pallets began arriving at Aluminum Shapes in 2013 in packaging labeled "China Zhongwang," says Garry Goehring, a former Aluminum Shapes manager whose account is supported by current and former employees and shipping records.

Mr. Goehring says he believed the pallets were a way of avoiding tariffs because they were too heavy -- 150 to 250 pounds apiece -- to be of practical use for shipping. Their heavy weight, he said, seemed useful only as a way of getting a big mass of aluminum past Customs.

Aluminum Shapes says the pallets averaged around 165 pounds. AplusPallets, an Accident, Md.-based manufacturer of aluminum pallets, sells similar ones that weigh about 50 pounds, which is normal for the market, says sales manager Ken Hunt.

Aluminum Shapes later melted down some of the pallets to be used as raw aluminum to make other products to sell on the U.S. market, Mr. Goehring says.

Aluminum Shapes denied that the aluminum was used as raw material for its plant. The company, which makes a variety of products including construction beams, helicopter-pad components and boat flooring, says all of its raw material comes from North American sources.

Chuin-Wei Yap in Liaoning, China, contributed to this article.

Credit: By Justin Scheck, John W. Miller and Scott Patterson

DETAILS

Subject:	Investigations; Aluminum; Tariffs; Alliances
Business indexing term:	Subject: Tariffs
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: China Zhongwang Holdings Ltd; NAICS: 331314
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819678129

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-chases-chinese-me tals-trail/docview/1819678129/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 209 of 500

City News: Major Crimes In City Schools Hit a New Low

Brody, Leslie . Brody, Leslie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mayor Bill de Blasio's administration said the drop in crime was due largely to its push for "restorative practices," in which teachers are trained to de-escalate conflicts, peers mediate tensions among classmates, and students hold "circles" where offenders apologize to victims for the harm they caused.

FULL TEXT

Major crimes in New York City public schools fell 35% over the past five years, local officials said Thursday.

The New York Police Department said there were 532 such crimes in the last academic year, a category that includes rape, aggravated assault, burglary and other serious offenses. Police said the total was at its lowest point since records started being kept this way in 1998, and that minor crimes fell as well.

Mayor Bill de Blasio's administration said the drop in crime was due largely to its push for "restorative practices," in which teachers are trained to de-escalate conflicts, peers mediate tensions among classmates, and students hold "circles" where offenders apologize to victims for the harm they caused. The goal is to build relationships among students and staff to prevent incidents.

That effort started under the previous mayor, Michael Bloomberg.

Critics say schools remain too violent. A 15-year-old was arrested last week for bringing a loaded gun to the first day of classes.

Police said there was also a 10% drop in school-related arrests from January to June 2016, compared with the same period a year ago.

Several advocacy groups applauded the declines but said the school system must do more to stop the disproportionate arrests of black and Latino students. Advocates for Children of New York, an antidiscrimination organization, said more staff must be trained to defuse crises, and the city needs a more comprehensive plan to address racial disparities in discipline.

Police officials said 2,053 weapons were confiscated in schools last year, mostly knives and box-cutters, up from 1,673 the previous year. Police officials said the increased collection meant schools were safer because these weapons weren't circulating, but skeptics have seen such weapons discoveries as evidence of a dangerous environment overall.

Seven firearms were found in city schools last year, down from nine in 2014-15 and 10 in 2013-14, according to the police department.

Chancellor Carmen Farina said that in the coming year, she hoped schools would focus on preventing bullying and gang activity, and involving parents in combating these problems.

The School Safety Division of the police department has about 4,800 agents, which would make it one of the U.S.'s larger police forces.

Credit: By Leslie Brody

DETAILS

Subject:	Students; Schools; Firearms; Police departments; Mayors
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92212 : Police Protection
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Bloomberg, Michael
Company / organization:	Name: Advocates for Children; NAICS: 624110
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92212: Police Protection
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819621589
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-major-crimes-schools-hit-new-low/docview/1819621589/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 210 of 500

Christie Seeks Schools Shake-Up --- Governor asks court to sidestep tenure law and cap state funding for struggling districts

Brody, Leslie . Brody, Leslie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Critics expressed outrage at his attempt to tighten funding to high-poverty districts that face bigger costs for at-risk students, security and crumbling buildings.

FULL TEXT

Saying New Jersey's children in poor cities have an urgent need for better teachers, Gov. Chris Christie asked the state's Supreme Court on Thursday to set aside tenure law and teachers' contracts in low-achieving urban districts.

In seeking such changes, Mr. Christie, a Republican, is trying to bypass a law he signed four years ago. He also wants to reopen three decades of litigation over how to pay for schools in struggling cities, saying that spending nearly $100 billion on 31 districts since 1985 hasn't brought good results.

"It would be criminal to allow this situation to continue," he said in a news release, citing low test scores and graduation rates in those districts.

The move marked another flare-up between the governor and teachers unions, and a new twist in Mr. Christie's campaign to lower property taxes in wealthier communities.

Critics expressed outrage at his attempt to tighten funding to high-poverty districts that face bigger costs for at-risk students, security and crumbling buildings. New Jersey's Supreme Court has long found that the state must give urban schools enough aid to offer a "thorough and efficient" education to every child.

Mr. Christie's office said he wants state funding for poor districts held flat at their current levels while lawmakers come up with a new way of distributing aid. He also wants the court to make it easier to fire underperforming teachers, reward the best ones and extend class time in the cities at the heart of the long-running school-aid case known as Abbott v. Burke.

The Education Law Center, which litigated the Abbott case on behalf of poor children, said it would fight the governor's maneuver, calling it "a blatant end run around the Legislature."

David Sciarra, the center's director, said a Supreme Court justice rejected the governor's attempt to make the same policy changes in 2011, and that such changes must be pursued through the legislative process.

The New Jersey Education Association, the state's largest teachers union, criticized Mr. Christie's announcement, saying the governor "wants to strip funding from New Jersey's most economically challenged communities to give tax breaks to his wealthy neighbors in Mendham and other communities like it."

The union also called the legal maneuver "a transparent attempt to distract attention from the Bridgewater scandal by filing a frivolous legal challenge."

Opening arguments are scheduled to begin next week in the trial of Bridget Kelly, a former Christie aide, and Bill Baroni, a former Port Authority of New York and New Jersey executive. They are accused of planning the 2013 George Washington Bridge lane closures as a way of punishing the mayor of Fort Lee, N.J., who declined to endorse Mr. Christie in his re-election bid.

Ms. Kelly and Mr. Baroni have pleaded not guilty. Mr. Christie hasn't been accused of wrongdoing.

The governor signed a tenure law in 2012 that required teacher evaluations to be based partly on student achievement and said teachers deemed ineffective for two years in a row could be fired. At the time, he hailed the law as a bold reform, but he didn't get a change he sought: an end to the last-in, first-out provisions that protect veteran teachers during layoffs.

On Thursday he took aim at that policy, saying "we can no longer tolerate a tenure law that places seniority above effectiveness." The union contends that without it, experienced teachers would be laid off first to save money.

Assemblyman Jon Bramnick, a Republican, praised Mr. Christie's move, saying it showed his "commitment to the success of students who are being left behind by an outdated public-education system."

Mr. Christie pushed over the summer for a new "fairness formula" that would allot the same amount of state aid for every student in New Jersey. By some estimates, that would lower annual aid to Newark, for example, by hundreds of millions of dollars. Chris Cerf, the city's schools chief, has said such a cut would be catastrophic.

Education Commissioner David Hespe said two weeks ago he would step down at the end of this month, saying it was "time to move on."

Credit: By Leslie Brody

DETAILS

Subject:	Teacher evaluations; Poverty; Tenure; Funding; Labor unions; Governors; Education
Business indexing term:	Subject: Labor unions; Industry: 81393 : Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	Christie, Christopher J
Company / organization:	Name: Port Authority of New York & New Jersey; NAICS: 926120
Classification:	81393: Labor Unions and Similar Labor Organizations; 92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.13
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819621560
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/christie-seeks-schools-shake-up-governor-asks/docview/1819621560/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 211 of 500

U.S. News: Ohio Boy With BB Gun Killed by Police

Maher, Kris . Maher, Kris.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A police officer in Columbus, Ohio, fatally shot a 13-year-old African-American boy while responding to a report of a robbery Wednesday, after the boy allegedly drew a weapon that turned out to be a BB gun, the department said.

FULL TEXT

A police officer in Columbus, Ohio, fatally shot a 13-year-old African-American boy while responding to a report of a robbery Wednesday, after the boy allegedly drew a weapon that turned out to be a BB gun, the department said.

Columbus Mayor Andrew Ginther urged calm in the city as the police department and a county prosecutor investigate the shooting.

"We ought to be shocked and angry. We have a 13-year-old dead, and that's unacceptable," he said at a news conference Thursday. "It is critical that we remain calm and committed to the investigative process."

Columbus Division of Police Chief Kim Jacobs said officers responded to a 911 call from an individual who reported being robbed by multiple suspects with a gun. At the scene, police approached three males matching the descriptions given by the victim. They chased two suspects to an alley, and after one drew what appeared to be a handgun, an officer shot the suspect multiple times.

The suspect, who was transported to a hospital where he was pronounced dead, was identified as Tyre King. A member of the King family couldn't be reached to comment.

Chief Jacobs identified the officer involved in the shooting as Bryan Mason, who is white and a nine-year veteran of the division of police. Officer Mason couldn't be reached for comment.

"We are not going to be able to release a lot of evidence, but we understand the need to discuss this particular case because we are talking about a 13-year-old that we believe was involved in an armed robbery," Chief Jacobs said.

She said detectives at the shooting scene retrieved what turned out to be a BB gun with a laser sight attached to the barrel. She showed reporters a photograph of the type of BB gun police found and said it closely resembled the weapons that police in the city carry.

"Our officers carry a gun that looks practically identical to this weapon," she said. "As you can see, it looks like a firearm that can kill you."

No officers were wearing body cameras during the incident. Chief Jacobs said that a trial of such cameras has ended. The mayor said the current shooting shows the need for such technology, and that the city plans to outfit officers with cameras by early next year.

The division's Critical Incident Response Team is investigating the shooting, and Chief Jacobs said evidence will be turned over to a county prosecutor. She said it would be up to a grand jury to determine if criminal charges should be brought against Officer Mason.

Credit: By Kris Maher

DETAILS

Subject:	Teenagers; Deadly force; Cameras; Shootings; Criminal investigations; Robbery; Firearms
Location:	Ohio; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819621042
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-ohio-boy-with-bb-gun-killed-police/docview/1819621042/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 212 of 500

World News: Germany Falters in Bid to Employ Migrants --- Businesses answer call to hire but struggle to find asylum seekers with the right skills

Geiger, Friedrich . Geiger, Friedrich.

ABSTRACT

[...]one year after the tire maker began advertising an internship program designed for 50 migrant workers, only 30 of the positions have been filled as it struggles to find suitable candidates or vet their qualifications.

FULL TEXT

BERLIN -- As the flow of asylum seekers entering Germany started to break historic records last fall, Continental AG rushed to tap some of the newcomers for its workforce.

But one year after the tire maker began advertising an internship program designed for 50 migrant workers, only 30 of the positions have been filled as it struggles to find suitable candidates or vet their qualifications.

Continental isn't alone. Answering calls from Berlin to help in the country's massive integration effort, German companies big and small have scouted refugee shelters and job centers for potential employees. Yet because of administrative bottlenecks and a mismatch in needed skills, the number of migrants in jobs with benefits was only about 25,000 higher in June than a year earlier, despite more than 736,000 arrivals in that time.

"It is a huge effort," said Ariane Reinhart, Continental's executive board member for human relations.

Frustrated with the slow pace of hiring, Chancellor Angela Merkel invited senior executives from the 121 companies behind a jobs-for-refugees initiative called "Us Together" to discuss their progress and difficulties on Wednesday.

More than 80 business leaders attended. Among those questioned by Ms. Merkel were executives at Deutsche Bank AG and Lufthansa AG. "It is our common target to integrate more and more refugees into the labor market," she said beforehand. "If we succeed, it will be a benefit for all."

Afterward, an "Us Together" spokeswoman said there was "an open exchange" about existing projects.

Failure to integrate the recent arrivals into Germany's economy, the largest in Europe, could seal Ms. Merkel's political fate. The chancellor's popularity has waned, and her party lost badly in recent regional elections as more Germans doubt the wisdom of opening the country's doors, which has brought well over a million migrants into the country in the past 18 months. Ms. Merkel has until the general election next year to change their minds.

Companies blame the difficulty in hiring migrants on shortcomings in speaking German and lack of relevant skills, in part because many are young. They also say administrative and legal red tape forces many migrants to delay the job hunt until after their asylum claims are processed.

Deutsche Post AG offered internships for 1,000 refugees last year but has so far filled only 235 positions. It employs 102 refugees, it said, many of them former interns.

Deutsche Lufthansa AG, the airline, said it had yet to hire any refugees, citing security reasons. Background checks on refugees aren't "always easily doable against the backdrop of the often adventurous circumstances in the former home countries or during their flight," a spokesman said.

The government isn't faring much better: Federal agencies have hired five refugees as employees and 12 as trainees since the beginning of last year, the interior ministry told lawmakers last month.

Mohammed Fdeilati, a 22-year-old Syrian, said he fled to Germany two years ago, after finishing school, and became eligible to work after a year.

"I wanted to do an apprenticeship to become a train driver at Deutsche Bahn, but they demanded a certain language level which I couldn't meet," he said. After searching for a job for two or three months, he found one as a bartender in Berlin.

The Confederation of German Employers' Associations said the country should broaden its German language and professional training for migrants and lower legal hurdles for their employment. Adult refugees should be sent back to school, it said.

So far, only refugees whose asylum applications have been accepted are required to attend language classes. The confederations is urging that the regulation be extended to migrants whose prospects of receiving asylum are good.

The thicket of labor laws is an obstacle, too. In some regions, employers with vacancies are required to search for a German applicant before hiring a migrant. Asylum seekers can work for temporary employment agencies only after a 15-month waiting period. Many companies are also unwilling to invest in training workers whose long-term residency prospects are uncertain.

There are bright spots, however. Out of about 9,000 refugees applying for vocational training this summer, nearly 6,000 were accepted.

Ilka Kopplin contributed to this article.

Credit: By Friedrich Geiger

DETAILS

Subject:	Political asylum; Refugees; Hiring; Foreign labor; Employment; Political advertising; Elections
Business indexing term:	Subject: Hiring Foreign labor Employment; Corporation: Lufthansa Group
Location:	Germany
Company / organization:	Name: Continental AG; NAICS: 326211
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12

Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620977
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-germany-falters-bid-employ-migrants/docview/1819620977/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 213 of 500

City News: NYPD Officers Shoot Man Wielding Cleaver

Shallwani, Pervaiz; Kanno-Youngs, Zolan . Shallwani, Pervaiz; Kanno-Youngs, Zolan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A man using a meat cleaver to try to remove a parking boot from the wheel of his car was shot by New York City police Thursday near Penn Station after he slashed an officer on the face, authorities said.

FULL TEXT

A man using a meat cleaver to try to remove a parking boot from the wheel of his car was shot by New York City police Thursday near Penn Station after he slashed an officer on the face, authorities said.

The officer, an off-duty detective, and the man were both taken to NYC Health + Hospitals/Bellevue, police said. The officer was in serious condition with a 6-inch gash running from his temple to his jaw.

The suspect, identified by police as Akram Joudeh, 32 years old, was shot several times. He was in critical but stable condition. Both he and the detective were undergoing surgery Thursday night. Two other New York Police Department officers suffered non-life-threatening injuries.

Three officers fired a total of 18 shots during the incident, which took place less than a block from Penn Station during the heart of the evening rush.

Police Commissioner William Bratton commended the officers for their "bravery and performance," adding that "sufficient shots were fired to deter the attack on my officers." The incident came on Mr. Bratton's last full day in office.

It occurred just before 5 p.m. on West 32nd Street near Seventh Avenue and was caught on multiple surveillance cameras in the area, police said.

Two officers on patrol responded to a report of a crime in progress and arrived to find Mr. Joudeh using the 11-inch cleaver to try to remove the boot from his car, in which he had been living, said NYPD Chief of Department James O'Neill, who will succeed Mr. Bratton as commissioner.

Mr. Joudeh fled toward Seventh Avenue, and the officers were joined by several others, Chief O'Neill said. Video shows the man waving the cleaver at officers as he was running.

When Mr. Joudeh refused to comply with orders from officers, an NYPD sergeant used a Taser on him, police said. Chief O'Neill said the Taser had "no apparent effect" on him.

A struggle ensued, and the off-duty detective was cut, police said. The three officers then fired at Mr. Joudeh.

Credit: By Pervaiz Shallwani and Zolan Kanno-Youngs

DETAILS

Location:	New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Police Department-New York City NY; NAICS: 922120

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620960
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-nypd-officers-shoot-man-wielding/docview/1819620960/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 214 of 500

U.S. News: Sandra Bland's Family Settles Suit

Frosch, Dan . Frosch, Dan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Cannon Lambert Sr., who represents the Bland family, said that Waller County has agreed to pay $1.8 million to settle a wrongful-death lawsuit by the family, while the Texas Department of Public Safety will pay $100,000.

FULL TEXT

The family of Sandra Bland -- a black woman whose death in a Texas jail last year set off a national outcry -- has reached a $1.9 million settlement with Texas authorities, the family's lawyer said Thursday.

Cannon Lambert Sr., who represents the Bland family, said that Waller County has agreed to pay $1.8 million to settle a wrongful-death lawsuit by the family, while the Texas Department of Public Safety will pay $100,000. He said the terms of the settlement were reached late Wednesday.

Larry Simmons, a Houston lawyer representing Waller County in the case, said in a statement that the settlement still needed to be approved by county officials before being completed, and that Waller County wouldn't comment on the terms until that time.

"The Waller County defendants also emphasize they vigorously deny any fault or wrongdoing, and the potential settlement does not involve any such admissions," Mr. Simmons added. The Texas Department of Public Safety denied in a statement having settled litigation involving Ms. Bland and said it wasn't a party to any agreements reached with Waller County.

Ms. Bland, 28, was pulled over by police on July 10, 2015, about 60 miles northwest of Houston, for failing to signal while changing lanes.

The encounter, which was caught on a police dash-cam video, turned tense after Ms. Bland grew upset, and a Texas state trooper threatened to use what appeared to be a stun gun. Ms. Bland was arrested, and, three days later, she was found hanged in her jail cell.

Authorities ruled Ms. Bland's death a suicide, but her family has questioned official accounts. A grand jury declined to indict Waller County jailers or members of the sheriff's office. But it did indict the Texas state trooper who arrested Ms. Bland for perjury. The trooper, Brian Encinia, has since been fired by the Texas Department of Public Safety. Mr. Encinia has pleaded not guilty to the perjury charge, a misdemeanor.

In addition to the financial settlement, Mr. Lambert said Waller County agreed to enact reforms at the jail.

"This is monumental," said Geneva Reed-Veal, Ms. Bland's mother, following the settlement. "It's the changes that are important to me."

Credit: By Dan Frosch

DETAILS

Subject:	Settlements & damages; Wrongful death; Perjury; Public safety
Location:	Texas; United States--US
People:	Bland, Sandra
Company / organization:	Name: Department of Public Safety-Texas; NAICS: 922190
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620948
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-sandra-blands-family-settles-suit/docview/1819620948/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publica tion may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

City News: Connecticut School Ruling Appealed

De Avila, Joseph . De Avila, Joseph.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Connecticut's attorney general appealed to the state Supreme Court on Thursday to throw out a lower-court ruling last week that declared portions of the state's educational system unconstitutional.

FULL TEXT

Connecticut's attorney general appealed to the state Supreme Court on Thursday to throw out a lower-court ruling last week that declared portions of the state's educational system unconstitutional.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Moukawsher's ruling found that the state's funding program for public schools violated the state constitution and ordered the state to devise a new funding formula.

Attorney General George Jepsen said the lower court exceeded its authority and the ruling would nearly remake the state's entire public school system at the "discretion of a single, unelected judge."

"There is no reason to believe that any judge is better qualified to make these decisions than are elected officials," the state attorney general's office said in its appeal. "The fact that a judge may believe he can be above politics, which is to say, above the democratic process, does not provide license for a court to go beyond constitutional requirements to impose its vision of best practices in educational policy upon the state."

The ruling followed a lawsuit filed against the state in 2005 by a coalition of cities, local school boards, parents and their children. The plaintiffs sought to address funding disparities between well-off and low-income school districts.

Jim Finley, principal consultant to the Connecticut Coalition for Justice in Education Funding, the lead plaintiff in the case, said the group is discussing its legal options in light of the appeal.

Connecticut Gov. Dannel Malloy, a Democrat, said he accepted Mr. Jepsen's legal rationale for the appeal. Mr. Malloy also said lawmakers should take steps to address the concerns raised in the ruling even as the appeal goes forward.

"It would be prudent to address the systemic problems in our educational system, particularly fair funding, in a serious manner once and for all in the 2017 legislative session," Mr. Malloy said. "Legislative action is always preferable to a judicial decision."

Mr. Jepsen echoed Mr. Malloy's comments on problems in the educational system and said "nothing about this appeal prevents policy makers from immediately addressing those challenges."

Judge Moukawsher also ordered Connecticut to establish mandatory standards for high school graduation, define what students must learn to complete elementary school, overhaul evaluations for public-school teachers and create new standards for special education

Judge Moukawsher's ruling ordered the state to address the issues he raised within 180 days. The attorney general's office asked the state Supreme Court for a stay on that order.

Credit: By Joseph De Avila

DETAILS

Subject:	Attorneys general; State court decisions; Funding; Judges & magistrates
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92213 : Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Location:	Connecticut; United States--US
Classification:	92213: Legal Counsel and Prosecution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.15
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2 016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620875
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-connecticut-school-ruling-appealed/docview/1819620875/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability:

This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated:

2022-11-19

Database:

ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 216 of 500

World News: Philippine Diplomat Reassures on Ties, Defends President

Cullison, Alan . Cullison, Alan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]Mr. Yasay pushed back against criticism by the U.S. of the Philippine government's avowed war on drugs, in which more than 3,000 people have died, often at the hands of vigilante squads.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- The Philippines' foreign affairs secretary sought to allay worries in Washington over his country's commitment to its relationship with the U.S., saying his country's new president would pursue an independent foreign policy but would honor a military alliance that allows U.S. troops to operate there.

Philippines top diplomat Perfecto Yasay said that U.S. troops may be ordered out of the Mindanao Peninsula, but that the measure -- proposed by President Rodrigo Duterte on Monday -- is intended to last only for the duration of a government offensive against Islamist rebels there.

At the same time, Mr. Yasay pushed back against criticism by the U.S. of the Philippine government's avowed war on drugs, in which more than 3,000 people have died, often at the hands of vigilante squads.

Speaking at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington on Thursday, Mr. Yasay said Mr. Duterte is pursuing the war legally and advised the U.S. not to lecture the Philippine government on human rights, which Filipinos also value.

"We cannot forever be the little brown brothers of America," he said, referring to a term Americans sometimes used to describe Filipinos during the era of U.S. colonial rule that ended in 1946. "We also know that we are striving towards these goals."

Mr. Yasay, who was due to meet officials at the State Department later Thursday, has in the past backpedaled on some of the controversial statements of Mr. Duterte.

President Barack Obama canceled a meeting with the Philippine president this month after Mr. Duterte referred to him with a slur.

Without citing Mr. Duterte's language, Mr. Yasay said that "some people think of him as unconventional" and "that is because he hates double talk."

Credit: By Alan Cullison

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Presidents
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Philippines
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620852
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-philippine-diplomat-reassures-on-ties/docview/1819620852/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 217 of 500

City News: Housing in Newark Is Looking Up --- Two apartment towers are planned in the city, the first such projects in more than 40 years

King, Kate . King, Kate.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Brian Whitmer, senior director in capital markets at real-estate firm Cushman & Wakefield, said Newark could hold appeal to renters looking for an urban lifestyle and an easy commute to the Hudson River waterfront.

FULL TEXT

NEWARK -- As New Jersey's biggest city looks to fill out its skyline, developers and real-estate analysts say Newark may be poised for a residential revival.

Last week, Philadelphia developer Dranoff Properties closed on $116 million in financing to build a 22-story luxury apartment building in Newark's downtown. At a nearby site, a development team that includes retired basketball star Shaquille O'Neal is expected to wrap up financing for a 23-story apartment tower later this month.

The projects would be the first residential high-rises built in Newark in more than 40 years, said Baye Adofo-Wilson, the city's director of economic and housing development. He said Dranoff's project, called One Theater Square, would help Newark become a "24-hour, 7-day-a-week city" by increasing density downtown.

"It's time for Newark to go vertical and to build residency units," Mr. Adofo-Wilson said.

The city has lent the project $11.8 million to help with construction costs. Carl Dranoff, chief executive of Dranoff Properties, said he intends to deliver an "iconic, brand new, glitzy-glamorous high rise."

One Theater Square is expected to welcome its first occupants in late spring or early summer 2018, with construction done by the fall of that year, Mr. Dranoff said.

"This is my first foray into Newark," he said. "We try to select cities that we feel will be future superstars, and we feel that the stars are all aligned in Newark for a pretty prosperous future."

One Theater Square will be built on 1.2 acres across the street from the New Jersey Performing Arts Center, which had 425,000 visitors last year. The nonprofit, which owns the land, is leasing it to Dranoff Properties.

"We are in the middle of really trying to build the next great urban neighborhood," said John Schreiber, chief executive of New Jersey Performing Arts Center. "As an anchor cultural institution, we have this unique opportunity to help develop our hometown."

Mr. Schreiber said he aimed to emulate the success of another arts organization, Playhouse Square in Cleveland. That nonprofit renovated three theaters in downtown Cleveland in the mid-1980s and went on to develop an extensive real estate portfolio that now includes 1 million square feet of commercial space, said Art Falco, president and chief executive.

"We thought the surrounding real estate would develop on its own," Mr. Falco said. "What we found was that that just wasn't the case and we had to take a leadership role."

Three years have passed since Mr. O'Neal and New Brunswick, N.J., developer Boraie Development LLC announced plans for their 23-story residential tower on Rector Street. A spokesman for the developer said construction would be completed by early 2018.

Newark is still "battling a whole bunch of issues," such as poverty, a struggling school system and a sluggish economy, said Svenja Gudell, chief economist for the real estate website Zillow. But the city's abundant vacant land, its relative affordability and easy access to New York City makes it attractive to developers, she said.

Brian Whitmer, senior director in capital markets at real-estate firm Cushman & Wakefield, said Newark could hold appeal to renters looking for an urban lifestyle and an easy commute to the Hudson River waterfront.

The performing arts center first announced plans to develop apartments in 2005. Dranoff Properties was selected in 2007, but securing financing during and after the recession proved difficult.

The final financing deal incorporated funding from the state in the form of $33 million in tax credits over 10 years. The New Jersey Performing Arts Center, which has invested more than $2 million in the high-rise, will receive reimbursement for some of its costs as well as rent payments from Dranoff Properties.

New Jersey Lt. Gov. Kim Guadagno, who is an ex officio board member of the performing arts center, said she hoped the high-rise would spur other development, including ground-floor retail, in Newark's downtown.

"Newark will become and already is, quite frankly, a destination," she said.

Demolition is expected to start next month at the Center Street site, which is a short walk from a new Prudential Financial Inc. office tower and borders a recently renovated city park. A Whole Foods grocery is scheduled to open early next year on nearby Broad Street.

The high-rise will have 12,000 square feet of ground-floor retail space and 245 apartment units, 10% of which will be affordable and marketed to artists. Apartments are expected to rent at $2,000 a month for a one-bedroom and $4,500 a month for a three-bedroom.

Credit: By Kate King

DETAILS

Subject:	Site planning; Performing arts centers; Performing arts; Theater; High rise buildings; Apartments; Renovation & restoration
Business indexing term:	Industry: 71131 : Promoters of Performing Arts, Sports, and Similar Events with Facilities
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
People:	O Neal, Shaquille
Company / organization:	Name: New Jersey Performing Arts Center; NAICS: 711310
Classification:	71131: Promoters of Performing Arts, Sports, and Similar Events with Facilities
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.16
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking An d Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620761

Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-housing-newark-is-looking-up-two/docview/1819620761/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 218 of 500

Business News: Boeing Calls Foul on Jet Contract --- Plane maker says Denmark's choice of Lockheed fighter was deeply flawed

Wall, Robert; Cameron, Doug . Wall, Robert; Cameron, Doug.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Boeing Co. is challenging Denmark's decision to pick another company's aircraft in a closely watched combat jet competition highlighting the importance of export deals to U.S. fighter-plane makers.

FULL TEXT

Boeing Co. is challenging Denmark's decision to pick another company's aircraft in a closely watched combat jet competition highlighting the importance of export deals to U.S. fighter-plane makers.

Denmark this year said it would buy Lockheed Martin Co.'s F-35 Joint Strike Fighter, the Pentagon's biggest weapons program. Boeing had offered its F/A-18 Super Hornet. The Eurofighter Typhoon, built by a consortium of Airbus Group SE, BAE Systems PLC, and Leonardo-Finmeccanica SpA also lost out.

Though U.S. contractors often challenge Pentagon decisions, such action is rare overseas.

"We believe the [Danish] ministry's evaluation of the competitors was fundamentally flawed and inaccurately assessed the cost and capability of the F/A-18 Super Hornet," Debbie Rub, vice president and general manager for global strike programs at Boeing, said Thursday.

The Danish Defense Ministry in May recommended the purchase of 27 F-35 combat planes to replace the country's aging F-16 jets. Denmark has been using the F-16, also made by Lockheed Martin, in the Middle East as part of the coalition striking Islamic State targets. The decision was later endorsed by the government in June.

Denmark said it planned to take delivery of the planes between 2021 and 2026.

The decision was a setback for Boeing, which has been scrambling for export orders to keep the F/A-18 in production. U.S. orders for the plane are nearing an end. "We're taking this step because there's too much at stake for Denmark and, potentially, other countries considering the Super Hornet," Ms. Rub said.

Boeing has slowed production to just two jets a month, though the company has become more confident over the past year that it can keep the line in St. Louis open into the 2020s.

Dan Gillian, the jet's program manager, said this week Boeing was confident about securing additional orders from the U.S. Navy.

It is also trying to complete an order for as many as 28 planes from Kuwait; the deal is still awaiting final U.S. government approval after Israel raised concerns about the transaction.

Boeing also remains hopeful it can secure a share of Canada's plan to update its fighter fleet after shelving an initial plan to acquire F-35s from Lockheed Martin.

The Danish Defense Ministry published its selection criteria and said the F-35 won in all categories covering everything from military performance to industrial aspects.

The document angered both losing bidders.

Boeing said it has submitted a so-called Request for Insight to the Danish Defense Ministry, requiring it to turn over documents related to the decision.

The ministry said Boeing would be given access to the information. A spokeswoman said the process had been "transparent" and led to broad political agreement.

"It is natural that in a process like this only the company that wins ends up being satisfied," she said.

Airbus, which led the losing Eurofighter bid, said on Wednesday that it noted Boeing's move "with interest."

The Toulouse, France-based plane maker said: "We have similar concerns about the rigor of the competition and the quality of the technical assessment of the candidates."

Airbus said it remained in talks with the Danish government to have those concerns addressed.

Credit: By Robert Wall and Doug Cameron

DETAILS

Subject:	Aircraft industry
Business indexing term:	Subject: Aircraft industry; Corporation: Airbus SAS Lockheed Martin Corp Boeing Co; Industry: 33641 : Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Location:	United States--US; Denmark
Company / organization:	Name: Boeing Co; NAICS: 336411, 336413, 336414; Name: Lockheed Martin Corp; NAICS: 212319, 334290, 336411, 336413, 336414
Classification:	33641: Aerospace Product and Parts Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620708
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-boeing-calls-foul-on-jet-contract/docview/1819620708/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

Business News: New CEO at Time Inc. Selects Digital Boss as Operating Chief

Steele, Anne; Trachtenberg, Jeffrey A . Steele, Anne; Trachtenberg, Jeffrey A.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Before joining Time Inc., Ms. Wong was chief business officer at Popsugar Inc. Prior to that, she held various executive-management roles at AOL and worked with digital media and technology clients at McKinsey & Co. Ms. Wong said in an interview that she will continue to lead Time Inc.'s digital efforts, including those on the native advertising front, but that she will also become more deeply involved in consumer marketing.

FULL TEXT

Time Inc. on Thursday named Jen Wong to the newly created position of chief operating officer, the latest in a string of changes in the upper ranks of the country's largest magazine publisher as it looks to boost digital revenue and broaden its digital opportunities.

Ms. Wong, 41 years old, is Rich Battista's first appointment since he took the helm this week as the company's president and chief executive. She has been with Time Inc. since December, overseeing digital operations. The company has been racing to develop or acquire new lines of digital business to offset steady print-advertising declines.

"I want somebody at the core of the company working closely with me on overall strategy and execution who has incredible DNA in digital," said Mr. Battista, in an interview. "Nobody understands the transformation reshaping the media industry better than she does. And she shares my philosophy of being entrepreneurial and having a focus on speed."

Time Inc. is under pressure to prove that it can show revenue improvement this year. The company expects annual revenue to be between flat and 1.5% higher than a year earlier. It had previously forecast growth of 1% to 5%.

Before joining Time Inc., Ms. Wong was chief business officer at Popsugar Inc. Prior to that, she held various executive-management roles at AOL and worked with digital media and technology clients at McKinsey & Co.

Ms. Wong said in an interview that she will continue to lead Time Inc.'s digital efforts, including those on the native advertising front, but that she will also become more deeply involved in consumer marketing. Time Inc., she said, is one of the country's largest consumer marketers and intends to offer its expertise in consumer transactions and fulfillment to third parties as they seek to build direct ties to consumers for the first time.

"We've got the expertise," she said. "It's a terrific opportunity for us."

Mr. Battista took the reins Tuesday from Joe Ripp, who continues as executive chairman and who will remain with the company through September 2018. Mr. Ripp said on Tuesday that a health matter had prompted him to step down as CEO. In July, amid a companywide restructuring, Mr. Battista had been promoted to president of all U.S. brands, further centralizing the company's advertising sales team in a bid to build closer ties to key marketers.

The shake-up comes as Time Inc. faces rising competition from such digital upstarts as Vice Media, BuzzFeed and Vox Media, all of which have attracted young, digital-savvy audiences and the marketers who want to reach them. Time Inc. also competes with Facebook and Google for digital advertising revenue.

Time's magazines include Sports Illustrated, InStyle, Real Simple and celebrity publications such as People and Entertainment Weekly.

Credit: By Anne Steele and Jeffrey A. Trachtenberg

DETAILS

Subject:	Appointments & personnel changes; Advertising; Executives
Business indexing term:	Subject: Appointments & personnel changes Advertising Executives
People:	Wong, Jennifer L
Company / organization:	Name: Time Inc; NAICS: 513120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1819620636
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-new-ceo-at-time-inc-selects-digital/docview/1819620636/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 220 of 500

U.S. News: Bloomberg Bets Big on Research

Winslow, Ron . Winslow, Ron.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg is donating $300 million to the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health in Baltimore to finance an ambitious effort to target opioid addiction, gun violence and other issues that are shortening lives and disrupting communities across the U.S. The gift, one of the largest among a recent flurry of major donations to academic research institutions, will endow student scholarships, faculty posts and public-health research, with a goal of improving America's mediocre world ranking for life expectancy.

FULL TEXT

Former New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg is donating $300 million to the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health in Baltimore to finance an ambitious effort to target opioid addiction, gun violence and other issues that are shortening lives and disrupting communities across the U.S.

The gift, one of the largest among a recent flurry of major donations to academic research institutions, will endow student scholarships, faculty posts and public-health research, with a goal of improving America's mediocre world ranking for life expectancy.

The U.S. ranks 31st among the world's nations in life expectancy, says the World Health Organization, which estimates that Americans born in 2015 will live an average of 79.3 years. That is more than four years behind Japan, which boasts the longest life expectancy at 83.7 years, and trails essentially all of Western Europe. The WHO ranks the U.S. just above Cuba.

"My country should be leading in life expectancy, and we're way down in the pack," Mr. Bloomberg said in an interview. His gift is the latest by a wealthy American business figure focused on health research.

Other recent gifts include $250 million from internet entrepreneur Sean Parker to establish the Parker Institute for Cancer Immunotherapy at six major research centers; $185 million from banker Sanford Weill to the University of California, San Francisco for an institute for neurosciences; and $500 million from Nike Inc. co-founder Phil Knight to Oregon Health & Science University for cancer research.

The big donations provide what institutions say is crucial support at a time of flat or declining government funding for medical research.

They also come amid advances in science and technology that researchers say are opening doors to major progress against health problems. Some donors say they see a clear opportunity for their contributions to have a significant impact.

Mr. Bloomberg's check brings his lifetime contribution to Johns Hopkins to $1.5 billion. Hopkins believes that is the most given by one benefactor to a single academic institution. The total includes his first gift -- $5 in 1965, the year after he graduated from Hopkins -- and $684 million over time to the School of Public Health, which has carried his name since 2001.

"It's a lot cheaper to prevent than to cure, and it's certainly a lot more humane," said Mr. Bloomberg, who amassed his fortune through his Bloomberg LP financial data and media company.

As New York's mayor between 2002 and 2013, Mr. Bloomberg championed public-health initiatives, including smoking bans in bars, restaurants and public parks; food-safety improvements; and a controversial initiative prohibiting 32-ounce "big gulp" servings of soft drinks that was overturned in court.

While some of his other donations have supported global public-health projects, the new one is earmarked entirely for the U.S. One reason: A report in April from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which found that life expectancy among white Americans fell for the first time in 2014. Increases in suicides and drug overdoses were cited as a cause.

Credit: By Ron Winslow

DETAILS

Subject:	Medical research; Gifts; Donations; Public health; Life expectancy; Drug overdose
Business indexing term:	Subject: Gifts Donations
People:	Bloomberg, Michael
Company / organization:	Name: Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health; NAICS: 611310

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620630
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-bloomberg-bets-big-on-research/docview/1819620630/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 221 of 500

ARENA --- Morgenstern on Film -- Review -- 'Snowden': A Complex Life Turned to Stone

Morgenstern, Joe . Morgenstern, Joe.

ABSTRACT

A young, hitherto-unknown contractor for the National Security Agency leaks tens of thousands if not millions of classified documents, reveals the unimaginably vast scope of America's secret electronic surveillance programs, goes into hiding and ends up stateless in Russia. The dramatic core of that film, which went on to win an Oscar, was a clandestine meeting with its subject in a Hong Kong hotel room during the real-time dissemination of news stories that described the documents he had leaked and explained their import.

FULL TEXT

By all rights -- or wrongs, depending on your viewpoint -- Edward Snowden's odyssey should make for a powerful movie. A young, hitherto-unknown contractor for the National Security Agency leaks tens of thousands if not millions of classified documents, reveals the unimaginably vast scope of America's secret electronic surveillance programs, goes into hiding and ends up stateless in Russia. If there's a cogent way to dramatize the story, though, Oliver Stone hasn't found it. "Snowden" is the biopic equivalent of a data dump -- more fragments of information, scary factoids and fleeting themes than we or the filmmaker can keep track of, but no surprises or notable insights.

Mr. Stone's film isn't crazed, like his "JFK," or commandingly bizarre, like his "Nixon," which had the dual advantages of a tortured protagonist and a towering performance by Anthony Hopkins. "Snowden" is mostly flat, overlong, unfocused and didactic, with a belated infusion of passion in a would-be inspirational coda that has the real Edward Snowden briefly portraying himself. Until then the hero -- or, again depending on your perspective, the villain -- is played by Joseph Gordon-Levitt, who nails his character's look, and his mild yet forceful demeanor, in an interestingly inward performance. Outwardly, however, there's almost no suspense, which, given the narrative possibilities, is a remarkably dubious achievement.

The director and his writer -- Mr. Stone shares credit with Kieran Fitzgerald for a screenplay based on books by Anatoly Kucherena and Luke Harding -- are unambiguous in viewing Mr. Snowden as a hero. I won't argue their judgment here, apart from noting that unambiguous protagonists, good or bad, usually make for simplistic drama. This Snowden does find himself torn between what he believes as a patriot -- a principled, proudly conservative patriot at the outset -- and what he discovers his government is doing in the name of national security. But when he finally purloins those documents -- in a silly simplification, he downloads the whole lot of them to a single SD memory card -- Ed walks out into the sunlight with a blissful smile that tells us what he's feeling, and what we should feel about him. (Anthony Dod Mantle did the fluent cinematography.)

Two years ago we met Edward Snowden in "CitizenFour," the documentary feature by Laura Poitras. The dramatic core of that film, which went on to win an Oscar, was a clandestine meeting with its subject in a Hong Kong hotel room during the real-time dissemination of news stories that described the documents he had leaked and explained their import. The result was electrifying -- Mr. Snowden, dressed in an olive T-shirt and dark pants, watching his laptop as bulletins about his revelations flashed around the world.

Mr. Stone uses that same meeting for his starting point -- the tightly wound Ms. Poitras is played, with almost maternal softness, by Melissa Leo -- and keeps coming back to the hotel room at various points in the story. Yet he vitiates the drama with a narrative structure that's literally all over the map in following Snowden from his military days -- we see him drop out of a Special Forces training program because of a broken leg -- to covert intelligence assignments in Geneva (where his reluctant efforts to compromise a Middle Eastern banker feel as if they'd been ripped from the pages of a supermarket tabloid), then Japan, Maryland and Hawaii.

Along the way Snowden meets a couple of significant others whose significance differs widely, but whose presence gives him partners in the kind of dialectic discussions that the script often substitutes for action. His girlfriend, Lindsay Mills (Shailene Woodley), pops up out of cyber-nowhere; they've met on a dating website. She's a cheerful liberal who smiles a lot -- I mean a lot -- while challenging his conservative views, and she instantly intuits, in her cheerful way, that he's not a State Department functionary, as he claims, but a spy.

Snowden's CIA recruiter and mentor, Corbin O'Brian (Rhys Ifans), isn't just a spy, he's a super-spook and a fervent apostle of covert surveillance. "Most Americans don't want freedom," he says. "They want security. It's a simple bargain." It's no coincidence that this incarnation of smarmy evil has been named after the villainous O'Brien in George Orwell's "1984." In a coarsely conceived sequence toward the end of the film, Corbin makes a Big Brotherly appearance on a giant screen to warn Snowden that the latter's suspicious activities and persistent concerns about civil liberties could put an end to his flourishing career.

Lesser figures appear to less effect. Nicolas Cage is Hank Forrester, an embittered CIA computer geek. Ben Schnetzer is Gabriel Sol, a cyber-cowboy and super-nerd to Snowden's super-duper-nerd. (Ed comes off as a flat-out computer genius, which he may or may not be.) The film addresses issues of urgent interest, from drone strikes to personal privacy. (Is it true, as we are told, that the NSA is tracking every cellphone in the world?) Yet the paradox of Mr. Stone's scattershot technique is that this urgency translates to little sense of immediacy. The only time we share Snowden's sense of dread is when he realizes that he and Lindsay are under constant surveillance in the privacy of their home. That speaks to the nightmarish potential of technology, but it also evokes the paranoid thriller this movie might have been.

'The Beatles: Eight Days A Week -- The Touring Years'

Among the many marvelous images in Ron Howard's documentary about the Beatles, an ancient photo reveals three red-cheeked young boys, each looking tentative in his fashion, posing with guitars in a corner of a room that may have been a pub, to judge from a hand in the lower right corner that's holding a glass of stout-colored liquid. Later in the film, one of those long-ago boys, the bejeweled but exuberant Paul McCartney, describes how the three became four. "I still remember that moment, the first time Ringo played with us. He kicks in, and it's like, it's an omigod moment," Paul says. "We're all lookin' at each other like 'yeah, this is it.' Whew! I'm gettin' very emotional."

No way not to get emotional, if you're of a certain age, when you watch this joyous archaeology. The title is awkward - "The Beatles: Eight Days A Week -- The Touring Years" -- but the substance is enchanting. It's a melange of performance footage, backstage vignettes, fascinating crosstalk and enough of a narrative framework to track the prodigious boys from the (overly) familiar onset of Beatlemania through the punishing celebrity of endless touring to the point where, in the words of George Harrison, the tours turned into "a circus, a freak show."

Don't expect trenchant analysis or deep insights into the group's creative process (although there's a startling moment when John Lennon, noodling around on a melodica in a hotel room in 1964, plays a few phrases that presage the 1967 "Strawberry Fields Forever"). Do revel, however, in the gleeful tumult and the gorgeous music. "By the end it became quite complicated," Paul says, "but at the beginning things were really simple."

'Bridget Jones's Baby'

Not being a chick, I'm hardly the most reliable judge of a flick like "Bridget Jones's Baby." All the same, I'll venture a few observations about this third episode of the phenomenally popular series that first hit the screen 15 years ago with "Bridget Jones's Diary." (That one was directed by Sharon Maguire, who directed this one.)

Over the top has no meaning when there's no limit to the heroine's search for love, and Renee Zellweger's Bridget remains, at the age of 43, a paragon of persistence and hope. The film abounds, as its predecessors did, in sexual innuendo, though there's little sex and nothing that could be mistaken for eroticism. Bridget does get pregnant, of course. The question that drives the plot is which one of two men -- Colin Firth's Mark or Patrick Dempsey's Jack -- is the father. The answer could be obtained with an early DNA test, but then the plot would come to a screeching halt. Of all the performances in a patchy production, only one achieves perfection. We get to see it through the modern medical miracle of ultrasound.

Rewind

DVD // STREAMING // DOWNLOAD

'The Conversation' (1974)

Francis Ford Coppola's peerless paranoid thriller was decades ahead of its time in identifying -- and brilliantly dramatizing -- the precarious state of personal privacy. Gene Hackman is Harry Caul, a maestro of electronic surveillance who, convinced that he's being spied on, rips apart his apartment in a desperate effort to de-bug the place. Mr. Coppola directed from his own screenplay. The cast includes Teri Garr, Allen Garfield, Frederic Forrest, John Cazale and a very young, very intense Harrison Ford.

'Cinderella Man' (2005)

Renee Zellweger is endearing in Ron Howard's fine Depression-era celebration of James J. Braddock, a classic underdog who took the heavyweight championship from the supposedly invincible Max Baer in 1935. Russell Crowe plays Braddock and Ms. Zellweger plays Mae Braddock, his wife. Her role is seriously underwritten, even though the film finds time for a brief but telling discussion of the stereotyped roles that most women of the period were forced to play in real life.

'George Harrison: Living in the Material World' (2011)

This is the Beatles documentary against which all other Beatles documentaries must be measured, a film about the Beatle who changed the most and who was, for decades, the least understood. The director, Martin Scorsese, uses conventional documentary techniques -- concert footage, interviews and archival treasures that include home movies. But he develops his portrait over the course of 208 minutes, at the end of which you may feel that you hardly knew George Harrison at all.

Credit: By Joe Morgenstern

DETAILS

Subject:	Motion pictures; Surveillance; National security; Hotels & motels; Electronic surveillance; Screenplays; Privacy; Documentary films; Thrillers
Business indexing term:	Subject: Hotels & motels; Industry: 72111 : Hotels (except Casino Hotels) and Motels
People:	Kucherena, Anatoly; Gordon-Levitt, Joseph; Hopkins, Anthony
Classification:	72111: Hotels (except Casino Hotels) and Motels
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	D.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620618
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/news-papers/arena-morgenstern-on-film-review-snowden-complex/docview/1819620618/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

ARENA --- Arts & Entertainment -- Memoir: 'Avid Reader': A Veteran Editor Shares His War Stories

Knutsen, Chris . Knutsen, Chris.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

"Avid Reader" is peppered with asides about the pitfalls and rewards of creative entanglements with writers. Since the 1980s, Mr. Gottlieb has lectured on this topic at the Columbia Publishing Course, a six-week program for college grads aspiring to enter the field. Ms. Morrison's next book, "Song of Solomon," was among the works the Swedish Academy cited when awarding her the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1993.

FULL TEXT

Robert Gottlieb, whose publishing career began in 1955, once surmised that he has fixed more sentences than most people read in a lifetime. Generations of book buyers have felt his presence in works by Joseph Heller, Edna O'Brien, Nora Ephron, Katharine Graham and Bruno Bettelheim (among the authors he shepherded at Simon & Schuster and Knopf, the two publishing houses he ran). After leaving The New Yorker in 1992, where he had been editor, Mr. Gottlieb resisted writing a memoir. The reason? "All editors' memoirs basically come down to the same thing: 'And then I said to Leo, don't just do war, do peace, too.'"

He ultimately changed his mind, deciding to "set bits of the record straight" and "say some things about editing and publishing and even myself." The result, "Avid Reader," out Tuesday from Farrar, Straus and Giroux, is a candid account of a life devoted to reading ("words were more real to me than real life") and ultimately saved by work.

"Avid Reader" is peppered with asides about the pitfalls and rewards of creative entanglements with writers. Since the 1980s, Mr. Gottlieb has lectured on this topic at the Columbia Publishing Course, a six-week program for college grads aspiring to enter the field. (After completing the course in 1989, I became Mr. Gottlieb's assistant at The New Yorker for the remainder of his tenure.)

When holding forth at Columbia, Mr. Gottlieb -- who is 85 years old and sartorially the picture of an unmade bed -- has the air of a psychoanalyst who has spent decades treating every type of neurosis. His most memorable anecdotes shed light on the relationship between an author's temperament, ability and motivation.

Lauren Bacall needed confidence that her life story, told in her own words, would have merit. Literary agent Lynn Nesbit, interviewed about Mr. Gottlieb in the Paris Review in 1994, remarked that he has "an enormous ego" and that he "lends it to the writer." Robert Caro required no encouragement while giving birth to "The Power Broker," his biography of New York City planner Robert Moses. The original manuscript ran to more than a million words, roughly three hundred thousand of which had to come out so the book could be published in a single volume. The winnowing was "agony," Mr. Gottlieb says, for two individuals headstrong enough to quarrel over a semicolon. The goal line had been set by a Damoclean pronouncement from Mr. Gottlieb. As publisher, he told Mr. Caro, he could "get people interested in Robert Moses once, but not twice."

Toni Morrison, whom Mr. Gottlieb has edited for most of her career, credits him with a revelatory remark after "Sula," a novel of lapidary precision, came out in 1973. "You don't have to write another perfect book," he said, urging her to "loosen up." That advice, he said, along with his subsequent counsel that she quit her job as an editor at Random House to write full time, simply confirmed something that she already knew. Ms. Morrison's next book, "Song of Solomon," was among the works the Swedish Academy cited when awarding her the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1993. Ms. Morrison, in the same Paris Review interview, said that Mr. Gottlieb had given her the courage to be more "reckless in her imagination."

At one point, Mr. Gottlieb was editing two leading spy novelists, John le Carre and Len Deighton. Mr. le Carre liked to be edited and took enormous pleasure in revision. While working on "Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy," Mr. Gottlieb suggested the author "give us more of" a supporting character, Connie Sachs. Within weeks, 20-odd pages had spooled from Mr. le Carre's typewriter, which Mr. Gottlieb edited down for the book.

Mr. Deighton was less disposed to rethinking. Once he had committed a story to the page, it was done. In one manuscript, Mr. Gottlieb found a troubling kink: "Len, you have a character who, on page 37, is 'shot and killed.' But here he is again on page 118, showing up at a cocktail party." Mr. Deighton's quick fix? Change the earlier reference: "He was shot and almost killed."

Although authors' gifts and dispositions vary, Mr. Gottlieb has a few rules that are universal. Among them: "Get back to your writers right away." Once a manuscript has been delivered, he says, writers go into a state of suspended animation, and it's "cruelty to animals to keep them waiting." (He often adds a corollary: "Bad news delivered quickly is better than no news.") When, later in life, he started writing himself, he felt the weight of this insight from the other side. "It made me insane when I would deliver a commissioned piece or part of a book and wait days, sometimes weeks, to hear back from my editor," he writes. "Insane with anxiety and insane with fury. I expected others to do unto me as I did unto others."

He considers editing a "service job" and says that ego should never get the better of the process. "There's this pernicious phrase that editors use in publishing: 'My book.' But it's not your book. It's the author's." Editing, he says, is about "surrendering" to the text. Whatever a book needs is discoverable in its pages, and woe to the editor who turns elsewhere for inspiration. Mr. le Carre has likened Mr. Gottlieb to a movie director, who would never step in and play a role himself but works to get the best performance from an actor.

Of course, surrendering to the text doesn't mean being egoless in the face of an author's whims or recalcitrance. One author wanted to call Mr. Gottlieb at home every night to read him the paragraphs she had written that day. He discouraged her.

Editing is an equilibrium between being "selfless" and "strong-willed." This often means setting clear boundaries at the outset.

Another of Mr. Gottlieb's favorite expressions is "Begin as you mean to go on." At an early editorial session in Bill Clinton's Harlem office, the former president, surrounded by staff members, said to Mr. Gottlieb, "We're going to have a good time. Ask anyone here. You'll find I'm very easy to work for." Mr. Gottlieb replied, "Actually, I have to point out that in this instance I'm not working for you, you're working for me." If their relationship hadn't achieved "an equality, or at least a balance," he writes, "it was going to fail." In time, the two "reached an understanding."

Credit: By Chris Knutsen

DETAILS

Subject:	Books; Writers; Publishing; Autobiographies; Commissioned works; Editors; Manuscripts; Editing
People:	Ephron, Nora; Heller, Joseph; Bacall, Lauren
Company / organization:	Name: Avid Reader; NAICS: 451211; Name: Paris Review; NAICS: 513120; Name: New Yorker Magazine Inc; NAICS: 513120; Name: Simon & Schuster Inc; NAICS: 513130
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	D.5
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620593
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/arena-arts-amp-entertainment-memoir-avid-reader/docview/1819620593/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19

LINKS

Document 223 of 500

Business News: Maker of Instant Ramen Dials Back the Salt

Gasparro, Annie . Gasparro, Annie.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Cup Noodles, which introduced instant ramen to America 45 years ago, is reducing the sodium content and removing artificial flavors from its soups, while adding ingredients such as paprika and lime, as consumers seek out more-healthy foods.

FULL TEXT

Cup Noodles, which introduced instant ramen to America 45 years ago, is reducing the sodium content and removing artificial flavors from its soups, while adding ingredients such as paprika and lime, as consumers seek out more-healthy foods.

Nissin Foods USA, which owns Cup Noodles, said on Thursday that it took extensive research and development to come up with the new recipes without affecting the taste or raising the price.

Despite the recipe revamp, Cup Noodles Chicken Flavor still contains 45% of the sodium and more than one-third of the saturated fat an adult should eat in a day, according to U.S. health guidelines. The old Cup Noodles Chicken Flavor contained 60% of the daily recommended sodium intake.

"All food companies are reformulating the recipes of their brands in the hope of restoring consumer trust," said Rabobank analyst Nicholas Fereday.

Credit: By Annie Gasparro

DETAILS

Subject:

Sodium; Snack foods; Recipes

Business indexing term:

Industry: 31191 : Snack Food Manufacturing

Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Nissin Food Products Co Ltd; NAICS: 311423
Classification:	31191: Snack Food Manufacturing
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 16, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819620584
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-maker-instant-ramen-dials-back-salt/docview/1819620584/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

World News: Aleppo Aid Sits at Border As Cease-Fire Is Extended

Raydan, Noam; Norman, Laurence . Raydan, Noam; Norman, Laurence.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

An unidentified official in Syria's Foreign Ministry was quoted Tuesday by the state news agency as saying Damascus wouldn't allow the delivery of humanitarian aid to the rebel-controlled areas of eastern Aleppo, especially by Turkey, without coordinating the transfers with the Syrian government and the U.N. Ankara supports a number of rebel groups fighting the regime.

FULL TEXT

Truckloads of humanitarian supplies were waiting at the Turkish border on Wednesday while the United Nations sought to negotiate safe passage for the aid to the besieged half of the Syrian city of Aleppo.

Security guarantees were needed for the 20 trucks and their drivers before moving into Syria at the Bab al-Hawa crossing, U.N. officials said.

U.N. Special Envoy for Syria Staffan de Mistura said both the government and some opposition forces were to blame for the standoff over aid deliveries to the rebel-held part of the city.

"There is always in these cases attempts to politicize humanitarian aid. So the government has been putting some conditions which I will not elaborate on and the opposition -- at the receiving end in eastern Aleppo -- have been putting some conditions," he said in Brussels. He said the aid deliveries can take place only when those demands are resolved.

"The access to eastern Aleppo via the Castello Road should be unconditional and unimpeded," he said, referring to a vital route into the city.

Armed forces from several parties in the multisided war are present along the routes to Aleppo. Despite a sharp drop in violence since a nationwide cease-fire brokered by Russia and the U.S. went into effect on Monday, no aid has yet entered Syria.

The U.S. and Russia on Wednesday agreed to extend the cease-fire for another 48 hours, according to a State Department spokesman. The agreement moves the two countries toward the goal of seven consecutive days of reduced violence.

Russia said that rebels had violated the cease-fire 60 times. The State Department spokesman, Mark Toner, said both sides had violated the cease-fire but that the deal was largely holding.

Increased humanitarian access to Syria is also an important element in the first phase of the cease-fire deal before the U.S. and Russia move forward with potential military cooperation against Islamic State militants and others.

"The other component we need to see and, frankly, we haven't seen yet, is the humanitarian assistance," Mr. Toner said.

Under the aid delivery plan, the first convoy of 20 trucks was to be followed by a second convoy of the same size, said David Swanson, spokesman for the U.N. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs.

An unidentified official in Syria's Foreign Ministry was quoted Tuesday by the state news agency as saying Damascus wouldn't allow the delivery of humanitarian aid to the rebel-controlled areas of eastern Aleppo, especially by Turkey, without coordinating the transfers with the Syrian government and the U.N.

Ankara supports a number of rebel groups fighting the regime.

Mr. de Mistura said he was hopeful that the situation could be resolved in "very little time." That would open the way for aid relief for the 350,000 people in eastern Aleppo he said had not received assistance for the past 21 days. "There is a genuine urgent need by the people of eastern Aleppo," he said.

Civilians in rebel-held areas of Aleppo are running low on food, medicine and other staples because of intermittent government sieges in recent weeks. Mr. Swanson described the humanitarian situation in those areas as "very dire."

Still, some civilians in opposition-controlled neighborhoods said they didn't want help from the U.N., even if they need it. They had lost trust in the organization, they said.

"The United Nations is complicit with [Syrian President Bashar al-]Assad in killing and besieging people," said Mosaab Khalaf, a member of the Aleppo city council, an opposition body. The U.N. denies the allegation.

Mr. de Mistura, the U.N. special envoy, said late Tuesday there had been only some allegations of "sporadic and geographically isolated" cease-fire violations in the provinces of Hama, Latakia, Aleppo and Idlib.

"Sources on the ground, which do matter, including inside Aleppo city, say that the situation has dramatically improved with no airstrikes," he said.

Credit: Noam Raydan, Laurence Norman

DETAILS

Subject:	Truces & cease fires; Humanitarian aid; Humanitarianism
Location:	United States--US; Russia; Syria
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.11
Publication year:	2016

Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819406905
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-aleppo-aid-sits-at-border-as-cease/docview/1819406905/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 225 of 500

Business News: Business Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

AMERICAN ELECTRIC POWER Private Investors To Buy Power Plants American Electric Power Co. agreed to sell four Midwest power plants for $2.17 billion to a venture formed by Blackstone Group LP and ArcLight Capital Partners LLC.

FULL TEXT

AMERICAN ELECTRIC POWER

Private Investors

To Buy Power Plants

American Electric Power Co. agreed to sell four Midwest power plants for $2.17 billion to a venture formed by Blackstone Group LP and ArcLight Capital Partners LLC.

Under the deal, which was previously reported by The Wall Street Journal, the private-equity firms plan to acquire the coal-fired Gavin Power Plant in Cheshire, Ohio, and three natural-gas plants in Indiana and Ohio, the people said.

AEP is selling the plants as part of a move away from wholesale power markets and toward its regulated utilities. AEP had announced in January 2015 that the company was exploring strategic alternatives for these power plants, including a potential sale.

The sale is expected to close in the first quarter of 2017, subject to regulatory approval. AEP expects to net about $1.2 billion in cash after taxes, repayment of debt associated with these assets and transaction fees.

AEP said it is evaluating options and will provide details about its plans for the proceeds at an analyst day on Nov. 1. The company said it may use the money to reinvest in its regulated businesses, retire additional debt and buy back stock.

-- Matt Jarzemsky and Cassandra Sweet

HANJIN SHIPPING

Creditors Ask Judge

To Reconsider Ruling

Creditors of Hanjin Shipping Co., fearful of having their collateral disappear over the horizon, have asked a U.S. bankruptcy judge to reconsider a ruling preventing them from seizing several ships chartered by the South Korean carrier.

A group of creditors who have gone unpaid for services such as towing and fueling say that the judge's order shouldn't apply to vessels chartered by Hanjin because they aren't legally its property. The creditors have liens against Hanjin ships that would ordinarily allow them to foreclose on the vessels.

Unless the U.S. judge intervenes, ships that have unloaded their cargo in the U.S. are free to set sail for foreign ports that may not recognize the creditors' rights.

At least seven Hanjin vessels have been "arrested" at ports in China, Singapore, India and elsewhere, according to a carrier's vessel status report.

Hanjin filed for the equivalent of chapter 11 bankruptcy in South Korea last month and sought recognition of its bankruptcy in the U.S. days later by filing for chapter 15 protection, the section of the U.S. bankruptcy code that deals with insolvencies overseas.

-- Tom Corrigan

DETAILS

Subject:	Ships; Electric power; Bankruptcy; Regulatory approval; Electric utilities; Power plants
Business indexing term:	Subject: Bankruptcy Regulatory approval Electric utilities Power plants; Industry: 22112 : Electric Power Transmission, Control, and Distribution
Location:	Ohio; United States--US; Indiana
Company / organization:	Name: Hanjin Shipping Co; NAICS: 483111
Classification:	22112: Electric Power Transmission, Control, and Distribution
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.6
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285598
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-watch/docview/1819285598/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-08-21

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 226 of 500

Business & Finance

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Noble Midstream is testing whether master-limited partnerships are set to rebound in the IPO market. ---

FULL TEXT

Monsanto agreed to sell itself to Germany's Bayer in a $57 billion deal that would create an agricultural giant and end the independence of one of the most successful firms in the U.S.

Federal prosecutors are in the early stages of an investigation into sales practices at Wells Fargo.

Samsung plans a software update that limits charging of the Galaxy Note 7, aiming to reduce the risk of fires.

Ford promised that future tech ventures will yield lofty returns but said near-term profit will be pinched.

A federal jury found that the city of Miami and a former budget director defrauded bond investors.

The share of U.S. workers testing positive for illicit drug use reached its highest level in a decade, data show.

Stocks and bonds steadied after three days of swings. The Dow declined 31.98 points to 18034.77.

Noble Midstream is testing whether master-limited partnerships are set to rebound in the IPO market.

Mylan CEO Bresch has been summoned by a House panel to testify about price increases for EpiPen.

Time Warner's Turner has acquired commercial-TV rights to the complete library of "Star Wars" movies.

DETAILS

Subject:	Limited partnerships
Business indexing term:	Subject: Limited partnerships
Location:	Germany; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Monsanto Co; NAICS: 325180, 325199; Name: Wells Fargo & Co; NAICS: 522110, 551111
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
column:	Business & Finance
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285588
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-amp-finance/docview/1819285588/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 227 of 500

U.S. News: U.S. Watch

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

North Carolina's law, known as House Bill 2, requires individuals to use the public restroom corresponding to the sex on their birth certificates, which lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender advocates have protested. --

FULL TEXT

NORTH CAROLINA

ACC to Move Games

Over Bathroom Law

The Atlantic Coast Conference will move neutral-site championship games out of North Carolina through this spring in response to the state's bathroom law, a move that will require finding a new location for its high-profile football championship.

The decision by the Greensboro, N.C.-based conference follows a similar move by the National Collegiate Athletic Association earlier this week.

North Carolina's law, known as House Bill 2, requires individuals to use the public restroom corresponding to the sex on their birth certificates, which lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender advocates have protested.

-- Andrew Beaton

MICHIGAN

Plea Deal Reached

In Flint Lead Probe

A former Michigan state epidemiologist agreed to a plea deal in the criminal probe stemming from Flint's lead-tainted water crisis, the second such agreement reached by former officials charged with protecting the health of residents.

Corinne Miller agreed to plead no contest to a misdemeanor count of willful neglect of duty for failing to report an epidemic of Legionnaires' disease in Genesee County in 2014 to health-care providers and the public.

Ms. Miller was director of the Bureau of Disease Control, Prevention and Epidemiology with the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services from April 2014 through November 2015. She will avoid a prison sentence if she abides by the terms of the agreement, which includes providing assistance to prosecutors.

Prosecutors agreed to drop two felony counts against Ms. Miller related to misconduct in office. A lawyer for Ms. Miller couldn't be reached to comment.

-- Kris Maher

DETAILS

Subject:	Plea bargaining; Legionnaires' disease
Location:	Michigan; North Carolina; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: National Collegiate Athletic Association--NCAA; NAICS: 813990

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285539
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-watch/docview/1819285539/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-12-13
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 228 of 500

World-Wide

Anonymous . Anonymous.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Key swing states have seen below-average income growth since the 2008 election, Census figures show. ---

FULL TEXT

Clinton's campaign released additional medical information, as the two candidates' health remained a central focus of the race.

Powell's hacked emails show the former secretary of state harshly criticizing both Clinton and Trump.

Key swing states have seen below-average income growth since the 2008 election, Census figures show.

Brazilian prosecutors filed criminal charges against ex-President da Silva in connection with a graft scandal.

Obama said the U.S. will lift its sanctions program against Myanmar after nearly 20 years.

Anti-U.S. remarks by Duterte have raised doubts about his commitment to a U.S.-led military alliance. Washington is weighing how to respond to the Philippine president.

Aid for the Syrian city of Aleppo waited at the Turkish border while the U.N. sought to negotiate safe passage.

Iraqi Kurds are seizing territory from Islamic State that could be used as bargaining leverage with Baghdad.

A new study could reassure men with early prostate cancer who are wrestling with treatment options.

Israel's Peres was in stable but critical condition after suffering a stroke.

DETAILS

Subject:	Stroke; Presidential elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices
Location:	Myanmar (Burma); Baghdad Iraq; United States--US; Iraq
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
column:	World-Wide
Section:	What's News
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285507
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-wide/docview/1819285507/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

City News: GOP Leaders Pick Nominee After Race Is Won by Dead Man

Orden, Erica . Orden, Erica.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On Wednesday night, a trio of GOP leaders gathered at a Greek restaurant to decide over a family-style meal who will replace Mr. Nojay as the party's nominee in the 133rd Assembly District.

FULL TEXT

On Friday, New York state Assemblyman Bill Nojay shot and killed himself in a cemetery.

Four days later, Mr. Nojay won the Republican primary for his upstate seat.

On Wednesday night, a trio of GOP leaders gathered at a Greek restaurant to decide over a family-style meal who will replace Mr. Nojay as the party's nominee in the 133rd Assembly District.

"I'm hoping by the time we get to dessert we'll be in agreement," Bill Reilich, chairman of the Monroe County Republican Party, said Wednesday afternoon, referring to the meeting at Omega Restaurant in Geneseo. "If not, we'll have to order more."

They did decide on a new nominee: Joe Errigo, himself a former assemblyman. He will face Democratic candidate Barbara Baer in the Nov. 8 general election.

The unusual circumstances surrounding Mr. Nojay's Rochester-area seat began to unfold Friday when the assemblyman committed suicide in front of a police officer. In the weeks before Tuesday's primary, Mr. Nojay, 59 years old, expressed confidence that he would emerge victorious, friends said.

Even after his death, that proved correct. Mr. Nojay's name remained on the ballot Tuesday, and after local leaders encouraged Republicans to vote for him over Rick Milne, mayor of the village of Honeoye Falls, Mr. Nojay won.

"Had the tragedy not occurred," Mr. Reilich said Wednesday afternoon, "the results would have been the same."

The Republican leaders in the three counties in which Mr. Nojay's district is located thus had the power to replace him on the general-election ballot.

"It's unusual and it's unfortunate that we have the opportunity, but that's what the election law is, and that's what we plan to do," said Lowell Conrad, chairman of the Livingston County Republican Party.

Messrs. Conrad and Reilich and the third county chairman, Rusty Smith of Steuben County, considered eight individuals.

Mr. Milne wasn't one of them. He withdrew his name from consideration on Wednesday. He said in an interview that since Mr. Nojay's suicide, political operatives in Livingston County had encouraged voters to back the deceased lawmaker so that they could install their own choice.

"They wanted their own candidate, and that's what they did," he said.

Mr. Nojay's district is largely Republican, and he was known as an outspoken advocate for conservative causes, particularly Second Amendment rights. Mr. Conrad had said the chairmen would seek to name someone with similar views.

"We're looking for someone representative of the county philosophically," he said. "I don't think we've had any assemblyman that you would call liberal."

Credit: By Erica Orden

DETAILS

Subject:	Political campaigns; Suicides & suicide attempts; Nominations; Primaries & caucuses; Political parties; Local elections; Election results; Political leadership; Elections
Business indexing term:	Industry: 81394 : Political Organizations
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Smith, Rusty
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.18
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.

Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285455
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-gop-leaders-pick-nominee-after-race-is/docview/1819285455/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 230 of 500

World News: Duterte Confounds American Allies --- Philippine president's blunt remarks toward U.S. leave many in region pondering implications

Moss, Trefor . Moss, Trefor.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In recent days, the 71-year-old Mr. Duterte has said the Philippines would stop patrolling the South China Sea alongside the U.S. Navy to avoid being part of any "hostile act" toward Beijing; called for the departure of some U.S. troops; and said he would pursue a more independent foreign policy and shop for weapons in China and Russia.

FULL TEXT

MANILA -- A rash of anti-American outbursts from Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte has jolted U.S. allies in Asia, raising doubts about his commitment to a U.S.-led military alliance seeking to counter an increasingly assertive China -- while leaving Beijing wary as well.

Allied governments from Washington to Tokyo to Canberra are struggling to understand whether Mr. Duterte's tough talk is merely hot air or if he really intends to cut loose from their decades-old partnership.

In China, the picture appears equally murky.

His apparent antipathy to the U.S. is seen as a windfall for Beijing's long-term effort to establish itself as the apex power in the region and weaken the defense partnerships through which Washington has dominated Asia militarily since 1945.

Even so, Chinese authorities calculate that Mr. Duterte could change direction at any point and would lose popular support if he was seen to concede too much to Beijing on the South China Sea dispute.

"With Duterte's temper, no matter who he's blasting, it won't be easy for him to be used by any third party," Global Times, a jingoistic tabloid affiliated with the Chinese Communist Party's main newspaper, the People's Daily, wrote. "In the long run, it may not be easy for China to deal with him either."

Discerning his long-term strategy -- if there is one -- is made more difficult by confused communications from the 2-month-old administration. His spokesmen routinely tell the media the president, who has a penchant for coarse language, didn't really mean what he had just said.

Sen. Panfilo Lacson, an independent lawmaker, lashed out at the president's press officers Wednesday, saying whatever the president says should be considered official policy, no matter how controversial.

Mr. Duterte's spokesmen didn't respond to questions sent Wednesday.

In recent days, the 71-year-old Mr. Duterte has said the Philippines would stop patrolling the South China Sea alongside the U.S. Navy to avoid being part of any "hostile act" toward Beijing; called for the departure of some U.S. troops; and said he would pursue a more independent foreign policy and shop for weapons in China and Russia.

The official response in Beijing was vague. "We are willing to work with the Philippines to promote and resume bilateral cooperation across the board," a Foreign Ministry spokeswoman said.

Any withdrawal from the traditional alliance would be a blow for President Barack Obama's efforts to cement closer ties with Asian countries as a balance to Beijing.

It also would be costly for Manila: The U.S. alliance provides the Philippine military -- one of the least-effective fighting forces in the region -- with a more-credible deterrent against any aggression.

"This is a risky and dangerous strategy" that would alienate allies, prove unpopular with the American-friendly public and appall the Philippine military, said Ian Storey, a senior fellow at the ISEAS Yusof Ishak Institute in Singapore.

In Mr. Duterte's eyes the Philippines has been poorly served by the alliance. American meddling has stoked long-running insurgencies, he has said. He also has faulted Washington for failing to check China's island-building in the South China Sea.

U.S. military and security assistance to the Philippines this year is budgeted at $120 million, equivalent to about 3% of Manila's defense budget.

With a majority in Congress, Mr. Duterte faces little political opposition. But comments on social media about his turn away from the U.S. seemed to be overwhelmingly negative.

Japan also risks a setback in its efforts, under Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, to build alliances with Southeast Asian nations and Australia as a counterweight to China.

Australian Foreign Minister Julie Bishop sounded perplexed by Mr. Duterte's decision to pull out of joint patrols. "I'm surprised that the Philippines is now not going to traverse the territory that the arbitration has just found is in the Philippines' exclusive economic zone," she said.

While Mr. Duterte's anti-American views aren't new, his decision to air them now may have been sparked by criticism of his "war on drugs," in which police say nearly 3,000 people have died since June 30, when he took office.

Jeremy Page, Chieko Tsuneoka and Rob Taylor contributed to this article.

Credit: By Trefor Moss

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Presidents; Armed forces; Anti-Americanism
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 92811 : National Security
Location:	Philippines; China
People:	Duterte, Rodrigo R
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 92811: National Security
Publicationtitle:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285407
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-duterte-confounds-american-allies/docview/1819285407/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 231 of 500

World News: U.S. to End Sanctions Against Myanmar --- Move comes despite prior demand to curb military influence and change constitution

Tau, Byron; Lee, Carol E . Tau, Byron; Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Sen. Bob Corker (R., Tenn.), the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, also raised concerns at a Capitol Hill meeting with Ms. Suu Kyi about the country's record on human trafficking. ---

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- President Barack Obama said the U.S. will lift its sanctions program against Myanmar after nearly 20 years, a decision that clears one of the last remaining obstacles to fully normalized relations.

Mr. Obama made the announcement Wednesday after meeting in the Oval Office with the country's state counselor and de facto leader, Aung San Suu Kyi, a 71-year-old Nobel laureate.

The decision by the White House ends nearly three decades of strained diplomatic relations with Myanmar, which was known as Burma until 1989.

"The United States is now prepared to lift sanctions that we've imposed on Burma for quite some time," Mr. Obama said. "It is the right thing to do in order to ensure that the people of Burma see rewards from a new way of doing business and a new government."

The U.S. pulled its ambassador from Myanmar in 1990 after the military refused to cede power to a civilian government.

U.S. sanctions were imposed in 1997 and have been in place in some form ever since.

Washington started easing sanctions in 2011 after the military junta began ceding power to civilian rule. Since then, Myanmar has taken steady steps toward political liberalization that eventually led to elections in November last year, which Ms. Suu Kyi's party won.

U.S. officials had said lifting the remaining sanctions would require Myanmar to demonstrate more progress in reducing the military's influence on the government. Secretary of State John Kerry said earlier this year that Myanmar would need to change its constitution to guarantee civilian power if it wanted remaining sanctions removed.

Administration officials said Wednesday, however, that the U.S. wasn't sacrificing leverage against Myanmar by moving to lift the sanctions program first, pointing to Ms. Suu Kyi's pledge in her meeting with Mr. Obama to continue working to amend the constitution.

"We have a constitution which is not entirely democratic, because it gives the military a special place in politics," she said at the White House. "But we do not think that politics is the place for the military. So we will continue with our efforts to amend our constitution to make our country the purely democratic union that our founding fathers dreamed of."

Myanmar's military still controls the country's defense and interior ministries, is guaranteed a quarter of seats in the country's parliament, and effectively shares power with Ms. Suu Kyi's administration.

An administration official said that some U.S. sanctions will remain in place, an apparent reference to specific restrictions pertaining to trade with North Korea, drug trafficking and other matters.

But the lifting of the emergency order releases more than 100 individuals from a U.S. blacklist and eases trade across many industries.

Ms. Suu Kyi said her priorities in office included "national reconciliation and peace," noting that the country has long been divided and racked by conflict. She called for renewed international investment in Myanmar now that U.S. sanctions were ending.

"I expect businessmen to come to our country to make profits," she said.

Mr. Obama didn't specify a timeline for the lifting of remaining sanctions other than to say it would be done "soon."

Human-rights concerns remain about the country. Former United Nations Secretary-General Kofi Annan is leading an advisory commission investigating violence in Rakhine state.

Sen. Bob Corker (R., Tenn.), the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, also raised concerns at a Capitol Hill meeting with Ms. Suu Kyi about the country's record on human trafficking.

James Hookway and William Mauldin contributed to this article.

(See related article: "Obama Looks To Cement Key Policy Objective" -- WSJ September 15, 2016)

Credit: By Byron Tau and Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	Diplomatic & consular services; International relations-US; International relations; Sanctions; House arrest; Politics
Business indexing term:	Subject: International relations Sanctions; Industry: 92812 : International Affairs
Location:	United States--US; Myanmar (Burma)
People:	Obama, Barack
Classification:	92812: International Affairs
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285354
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-end-sanctions-against-myanmar-move/docview/1819285354/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 232 of 500

City News: Jury Is Selected For Bridge Trial

Ramey, Corinne . Ramey, Corinne.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

For either side, the gender or race of jurors matters far less than characteristics like technical expertise or strong opinions, said Jeffrey Frederick, director of the Jury Research Services Division at National Legal Research Group Inc., a legal and trial consulting business.

FULL TEXT

An unemployed chef, a retired camcorder repairman and a retired high-school counselor are among the jurors slated to decide the George Washington Bridge lane-closure trial.

The jury, comprised of five men and seven women from northern New Jersey, was finalized Wednesday after two days of questioning potential jurors about their backgrounds and biases.

On trial are Bill Baroni, a former top executive at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, and Bridget Kelly, former deputy chief of staff to New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie.

Federal prosecutors allege that in 2013 the defendants orchestrated a scheme to close access lanes to the George Washington Bridge, creating traffic jams to punish the Democratic mayor of Fort Lee, N.J., for not endorsing Mr. Christie, a Republican.

Both defendants have pleaded not guilty. Mr. Christie hasn't been charged with wrongdoing and has denied knowledge of the matter.

Of the 12 jurors chosen Wednesday, most appear to be white and several are retired or not working.

While all said they could be fair and unbiased, several had strong opinions. A woman who said she writes a food blog said she disagrees with "Republican views" and her grandmother "loathes" Mr. Christie.

Also selected were three men and one woman who will serve as alternates.

For either side, the gender or race of jurors matters far less than characteristics like technical expertise or strong opinions, said Jeffrey Frederick, director of the Jury Research Services Division at National Legal Research Group Inc., a legal and trial consulting business.

He said jurors are aware that after such a highly publicized trial they will be asked about the verdict by friends, neighbors and even strangers, adding to a desire to reach a verdict they can defend.

Opening statements are scheduled for Monday in federal court in Newark.

Credit: By Corinne Ramey

DETAILS

Subject:	Juries; Trials; Legal research; Legal arguments
Location:	New Jersey; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Port Authority of New York & New Jersey; NAICS: 926120
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016

Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285350
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-jury-is-selected-bridge-trial/docview/1819285350/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 233 of 500

World News: Russian Patriotism, by the Glass --- Tensions with West spur domestic wine revival; annexing imperial vineyards

Grove, Thomas . Grove, Thomas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Mr. Putin's own love of the grape has helped the industry. Since late 2014, after Russia annexed Crimea, the leader has changed laws to stimulate investment in the wine sector.

FULL TEXT

MOSCOW -- Not long ago, wine was mostly seen as a luxury import in Russia. The oligarchs bought European vineyards, and Moscow's newly wealthy learned to savor French Cabernets and Tuscan reds at elite restaurants.

But as tensions between Russia and the West persist, drinking wine has been transformed into a patriotic act.

Russian wine production -- on the wane before the Ukrainian conflict -- jumped nearly 25% in 2015 from the year before, according to Russian market research group Cifra, and vintners say it is on the rise again this year. Leading Russian business figures are investing in vineyards at home. And Russian oenophiles boast that their wines, once deemed inferior to their European counterparts, are winning over new drinkers.

Russian President Vladimir Putin imposed a ban on the import of Western delicacies in 2014, after Washington and Brussels imposed economic sanctions over Moscow's annexation of Crimea. Though the counter-sanctions never applied to wine, they unexpectedly boosted the country's vintners as they spurred interest in locally and nationally produced goods.

"Russians are starting to realize the wealth of wines their own country has," Russian wine critic Vladimir Tsapelik said while recently hosting a wine tasting at a park along the Moscow River. Russian red, white and rose wines flowed, their tastes rounded out by accompanying dishes of pickled herring, carp and dill-seasoned crayfish.

"We have grapes here that exist nowhere else on earth, he said, as he sipped a rose from the southern Don region. For years, Mr. Tsapelik has been an advocate of wines unique to Russia -- Krasnostop Zolotovskiy or Tsimlyansky Chyorny, to name a couple. "We're starting to come around -- the rest of the world will as well."

Moscow's incursion in Crimea provided another boon to domestic wine production: In annexing the peninsula and its sandy soils, it also reclaimed the once-pearl of the Russian Empire's wine industry.

Under Ukrainian rule, Crimea's vineyards fell largely into disrepair because of lack of investment. But since the annexation, which remains largely unrecognized internationally, Russia has started selling off plots in the once-Ukrainian state-owned Massandra vineyards to investors in a bid to revive the region's wine industry.

One of the more recent big investors in Crimea's vineyards is a company linked to Vagit Alekperov, the head of Russian oil company Lukoil, which this year bought land in Massandra, once one of the Russian Empire's largest vineyards, according to several industry officials. Mr. Alekperov couldn't be reached to comment. "The elite love the idea of producing wine in Russia," said Dmitry Kovalyov, one of Russia's most respected sommeliers. "It makes them look patriotic."

Russia's wine renaissance doesn't mean it has been easy for the nation to replace imported burgundies and Riojas. Konstantin Pilberg, the chief sommelier at Lavka-Lavka, a farm-to-table restaurant that boasts locally sourced cuisine, said he tried 550 Russian wines before finding 33 that made the cut to be on the restaurant's rotating wine list.

"After sanctions, people started to worry that they could be cut off from foreign wines," he said. "People have simply gone from European wines to Russian wines."

Mr. Putin's own love of the grape has helped the industry. Since late 2014, after Russia annexed Crimea, the leader has changed laws to stimulate investment in the wine sector. The resurrection of Russian wines, though, hasn't come easy. In the 1980s, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev launched a sobriety campaign, in which most of the country's grape vines were cut down.

"We've had a long and hard road to get where we are," said winemaker Pavel Shvedov. "But soon, Europe will be buying wine from us, while their own bottles sit on the shelves."

Credit: By Thomas Grove

DETAILS

Subject:	Patriotism; Wines; Sanctions; Wineries & vineyards
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sanctions Wineries & vineyards; Industry: 31213 : Wineries
Location:	Crimea; Russia
Classification:	31213: Wineries
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.12
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285309
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-russian-patriotism-glass-tensions-with/docview/1819285309/se-2?accountid=14681

Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 234 of 500

World News: Obama Looks To Cement Key Policy Objective

Tau, Byron; Lee, Carol E . Tau, Byron; Lee, Carol E.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

(See related article: "World News: U.S. to End Sanctions Against Myanmar --- Move comes despite prior demand to curb military influence and change constitution" --

FULL TEXT

President Barack Obama's move to end sanctions against Myanmar comes as he looks to cement his administration's "rebalance" to Asia during the final few months of his presidency.

It also comes as Myanmar's state counselor and de facto leader, Aung San Suu Kyi, has taken steps to address ethnic violence in the country and to improve relations with China, its neighbor and most important trade partner.

Both sides have been preparing the ground for the visit.

Ms. Suu Kyi in August visited China, where she worked to help restore ties after a fraught few years during which Myanmar tilted more toward the West after its military began a series of political overhauls.

This month she met with former United Nations Secretary-General Kofi Annan, whom she invited to lead an advisory commission investigating violence in Rakhine state.

More than 100 ethnic Rohingya Muslims were killed there during sectarian rioting in 2012; thousands more tried to escape by boat to Malaysia or Thailand.

Washington has been seeking closer relations with a number of Asian countries, including Myanmar, India and Vietnam, in an effort to counter Beijing's growing economic and military influence.

The Obama administration in May said it would lift some additional sanctions against state-owned enterprises and state-owned banks.

The U.S. has also taken steps to make it easier for American companies to conduct business in Myanmar as Washington tries to reward efforts at democratic overhauls.

(See related article: "World News: U.S. to End Sanctions Against Myanmar --- Move comes despite prior demand to curb military influence and change constitution" -- WSJ September 15, 2016)

Credit: By Byron Tau and Carol E. Lee

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Sanctions; Minority & ethnic violence; Riots; House arrest
Business indexing term:	Subject: Sanctions
Location:	Thailand
People:	Obama, Barack; Aung San Suu Kyi
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.9
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID:	1819285304
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-obama-looks-cement-key-policy/docview/1819285304/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 235 of 500

U.S. News: Early Prostate Cancer Threat Seen as Low

Beck, Melinda . Beck, Melinda.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]Otis Brawley, chief medical officer of the American Cancer Society, said the new studies add to mounting evidence that men with localized prostate cancer can safely opt to postpone treatment.

FULL TEXT

A new study could reassure men with early prostate cancer: Whether they opt for radiation, surgery or no treatment at all, their risk of dying of the disease in 10 years is very low -- less than 1%.

Undergoing surgery or radiation lowered the risk the cancer would spread, by more than 50% compared with simply monitoring it, the study found, but that didn't result in a significantly higher risk of death over 10 years because prostate cancers grow slowly.

"It may be that at 15 or 20 years there is a difference in survival. We need more time to get to the final chapter," said Freddie Hamdy, a professor of urology at the University of Oxford and chief investigator of the study, published Wednesday in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Prostate cancer is the second-most-common cancer among men, after skin cancer; an estimated 180,890 U.S. men will be diagnosed with it this year, and 26,120 are expected to die from it.

Yet many patients are confused about how and whether to treat it. There is growing support for simply monitoring early-stage prostate cancers because they tend to be very slow-growing and treatment can bring unpleasant side effects.

The new study, funded by the U.K.'s National Institute for Health Research, is unusual because patients -- 1,643 British men aged 50 to 69 diagnosed with localized prostate cancer between 1999 and 2009 -- agreed to be randomly assigned to a treatment option. About half of those assigned to active monitoring switched to surgery or radiation by 10 years -- mostly because they were anxious about leaving their cancer untreated, not because it had spread, according to Dr. Hamdy.

Overall, the rate of cancer progression remained low -- at roughly 1 in 5 men in the monitoring group, compared with 1 in 10 who had either surgery or radiation.

A second study compared side effects for all three options and found significant differences. Six months after treatment, about half of the men who had surgery said they wore pads due to urinary incontinence. While many regained function, 17% still wore pads after six years, compared with 4% in the radiology group.

At six months, 88% of men who had surgery and 78% who had radiation reported sexual problems. By six years, more men in the radiation group recovered sexual function, but the radiation group also reported more bowel problems.

In an accompanying editorial, Anthony D'Amico, a radiologist with Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, said that men who opt to monitor their cancer could end up with more side effects if the cancer spreads and require more aggressive treatment later.

But Otis Brawley, chief medical officer of the American Cancer Society, said the new studies add to mounting evidence that men with localized prostate cancer can safely opt to postpone treatment.

Credit: By Melinda Beck

DETAILS

Subject:	Surgery; Health risk assessment; Prostate cancer; Radiation
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States

Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285299
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-early-prostate-cancer-threat-seen-as-low/docview/1819285299/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-08-26
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 236 of 500

World News: U.S. Seeks Strategy To Sustain Relations

Solomon, Jay; Cullison, Alan . Solomon, Jay; Cullison, Alan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

According to U.S. defense officials, the American military won't cease operations in the Philippines or pull out of the country unless it receives a formal request from the government, which hasn't arrived.

FULL TEXT

WASHINGTON -- U.S. officials said that the Obama administration has been stunned by the actions of Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte and that it was working out how to respond.

Washington doesn't want to jeopardize its military ties to one of its allies in Asia, they said, and is waiting to see if Mr. Duterte's words translate into substantive actions.

However, a senior U.S. official involved in Asia policy said the administration doesn't believe Mr. Duterte's policies would be supported in Manila in the longer term. "He's isolating himself from the country's powerful institutions and families," the official said.

Mr. Duterte's foreign secretary, Perfecto Yasay, has tried to mitigate some of his comments and is expected to do so again in meetings this week in Washington on a diplomatic visit planned months ago.

"I think that Yasay will try to reassure everyone that the alliance is solid," said Amy Searight, senior adviser and director of the Southeast Asia Program at CSIS in Washington. The State Department, she said, "will express the same sentiment."

The removal of troops from the southern island of Mindanao -- as suggested by Mr. Duterte on Monday -- would likely have little impact on U.S. planning in Asia if it happened, said Scott Harold, associate director for the Center for Asia Pacific Policy at Rand Corporation. But any move to curtail the U.S. presence in the Philippines could do some "serious, permanent damage" to the alliance.

Mr. Duterte's behavior will be closely watched by Asian allies, who may try to pressure him to mitigate his actions.

"I think it's possible that some of them will be giving a message to the Philippines, telling them that they are putting the whole alliance at risk," Mr. Harold said. "And they'll be asking Duterte -- if you ask the Americans to leave do you really want to face China alone?"

Military-to-military relations have so far remained unchanged. According to U.S. defense officials, the American military won't cease operations in the Philippines or pull out of the country unless it receives a formal request from the government, which hasn't arrived.

If Mr. Duterte continues to insist on a reduced U.S. presence in the Philippines, Washington is likely to try to avoid a public blowup. Since a military junta rose to power in Thailand, another U.S. ally in the region, the U.S. has pulled back on some of its cooperation but hasn't publicly broken with the country.

"We continue to focus on our broad relationship with the Philippines, and will work together in the many areas of mutual interest to improve the livelihoods of the Philippine people," Cmdr. Gary Ross, a Pentagon spokesman, said.

Across Washington, officials have largely been puzzled by Mr. Duterte's rhetoric. They also note the U.S. has had to deal with other similarly bombastic world leaders in the past.

Paul Sonne and Carol E. Lee contributed to this article.

Credit: By Jay Solomon and Alan Cullison

DETAILS

Subject:	International relations-US; Armed forces
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92811 : National Security
Location:	Philippines
Classification:	92811: National Security
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.10
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285260
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-u-s-seeks-strategy-sustain-relations/docview/1819285260/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 237 of 500

City News: Special Primary Is Canceled

MacMillan, Thomas . MacMillan, Thomas.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A three-judge panel of the Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York overturned a lower-court decision calling for an Oct. 6 Republican primary in the state's Third Congressional District, comprising portions of Nassau, Suffolk and Queens counties.

FULL TEXT

A would-be contender for retiring U.S. Rep. Steve Israel's seat won't get his name on a primary ballot after a monthslong legal battle, a federal appeals court ruled Wednesday.

A three-judge panel of the Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York overturned a lower-court decision calling for an Oct. 6 Republican primary in the state's Third Congressional District, comprising portions of Nassau, Suffolk and Queens counties.

Philip Pidot, a former fraud investigator, was kicked off the primary ballot in June after a legal challenge from state Sen. Jack Martins, a fellow Republican seeking the House seat. Mr. Martins accused Mr. Pidot of not gathering enough valid signatures.

In June, a state appellate judge ruled Mr. Pidot had collected the required number of signatures, but the timing of his appeal made it impossible to include him in the primary.

In August, after Mr. Pidot took the case to federal court, a judge ordered a special primary be held on Oct. 6. Wednesday's decision blocked that ruling. Mr. Pidot said he doesn't plan another appeal.

Mr. Martins will face former Democrat Tom Suozzi in the Nov. 8 general election.

Credit: By Thomas MacMillan

DETAILS

Subject:	Federal court decisions; State court decisions
----------	--

Location:	United States--US; New York
-----------	-----------------------------

People:	Israel, Steve
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285259
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-special-primary-is-canceled/docview/1819285259/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 238 of 500

Stocks Inch Lower With Trading Calm --- Bonds rebound as investors wait for direction at meetings of

central bankers

Gold, Riva; Huang, Daniel . Gold, Riva; Huang, Daniel.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A broad selloff in government bonds kicked off last Thursday when the European Central Bank surprised some investors by not announcing fresh stimulus measures or committing to an extension of its bond-buying program beyond next March.

FULL TEXT

Stocks and bonds steadied after three sessions of swings.

Major U.S. indexes pulled back in afternoon trading, but the moves were small compared with the past few days.

Markets turned choppy late last week, with both stocks and long-dated government debt dropping on uncertainty over global central-bank policy. The S&P 500 fell 2.5% Friday, rose 1.5% Monday and fell 1.5% Tuesday.

The Federal Reserve and the Bank of Japan are set to hold meetings next week, and investors are looking for clarity on how long ultraeasy monetary policy will continue and what it will mean for a rally that sent the S&P 500 to highs and global government debt to record-low yields earlier this summer.

"We are doing nothing until we get through the Fed," said Tom Carter, managing director at brokerage JonesTrading. "There's a lot of cash sitting on the sidelines until they make a decision."

On Wednesday, the Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 31.98 points, or 0.2%, to 18034.77, after rising as much as 97 points earlier in the session. The S&P 500 declined 1.25 points, or less than 0.1%, to 2125.77. The Nasdaq Composite rose 18.52 points, or 0.4%, to 5173.77.

Energy led declines for a second consecutive day as oil prices fell. Energy shares in the S&P 500 fell 1.1% and U.S. crude oil declined 2.9% to $43.58 a barrel after weekly data showed rising U.S. stockpiles of refined products.

Technology shares rose. Apple, which unveiled its latest iPhones last week, gained $3.82, or 3.5%, to $111.77, a day after it was the only gainer in the Dow industrials during a broad selloff. On Tuesday, T-Mobile US and Sprint issued news releases suggesting strong consumer interest in the new phones.

Terry Sandven, chief equity strategist at U.S. Bank Wealth Management, said stocks were likely to move sideways into October, when the next set of earnings begin.

"Complacency was way too high leading up to the last couple of months, so I think the volume we've seen is somewhat justified, but I also think it's premature to suggest this bull market run is over," Mr. Sandven said.

The yield on the 10-year U.S. Treasury note pulled back to 1.689% from 1.732% late Tuesday, when it touched its highest level since the June 23 U.K. referendum on leaving the European Union. Yields move inversely to prices.

A broad selloff in government bonds kicked off last Thursday when the European Central Bank surprised some investors by not announcing fresh stimulus measures or committing to an extension of its bond-buying program beyond next March.

The Stoxx Europe 600 fell 0.1%, its fifth decline in a row. Early Thursday, Japan's Nikkei was down 1.1%, but Hong Kong's Hang Seng Index was up 0.5%. Mainland China markets were closed for a holiday.

Credit: By Riva Gold and Daniel Huang

DETAILS

Subject:	Daily markets (wsj); Dow Jones averages; Stock exchanges; Stock prices; Government bonds
Business indexing term:	Subject: Stock exchanges Stock prices Government bonds; Industry: 52321 : Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Location:	United States--US
Classification:	52321: Securities and Commodity Exchanges
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
column:	Wednesday's Markets
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News

ProQuest document ID: 1819285248

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/stocks-inch-lower-with-trading-calm-bonds-rebound/docview/1819285248/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2025-01-29

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 239 of 500

WSJ.D Technology: Twitter Adds TV App to Draw Users --- Social-media service is making live streaming focus of its strategy to revive growth

Koh, Yoree . Koh, Yoree.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The app -- which will contain only video, photos and tweets curated by the company -- arrives on time for Twitter's pivotal live-streaming debut of Thursday night football in the U.S. By making live broadcasts available on a bigger screen, Twitter's TV apps could help address whether people would want to tune into hourslong games from the National Football League or Major League Baseball on a 5-inch smartphone screen.

FULL TEXT

Twitter Inc. is coming to the TV screen.

The social-media service said that starting Wednesday a new video-centric app will be available for Apple Inc.'s Apple TV box, as well as Amazon.com Inc's Fire TV and Microsoft Corp.'s Xbox One.

The app -- which will contain only video, photos and tweets curated by the company -- arrives on time for Twitter's pivotal live-streaming debut of Thursday night football in the U.S.

By making live broadcasts available on a bigger screen, Twitter's TV apps could help address whether people would want to tune into hourslong games from the National Football League or Major League Baseball on a 5-inch smartphone screen.

It can also encourage people who have yet to find a reason to use Twitter as the company is trying to revive user growth. Among the oft-cited reasons why people say they don't use Twitter is because they find it confusing and difficult. Twitter has made live-streaming the linchpin of a business strategy to turn itself into a prime place to watch video. It has signed a raft of deals to stream broadcasts from partners that include the NFL, MLB, the National Basketball Association, National Hockey League and Pac-12 Networks for sports, and Bloomberg News and Cheddar for financial news.

Its $10 million deal with the NFL to broadcast 10 Thursday games is the highest-profile score of the bunch, with sponsorship packages commanding as much as $8 million.

The first game kicks off Thursday between the New York Jets and Buffalo Bills.

Anyone with Apple TV, Amazon Fire TV or Xbox One will be able to watch these live broadcasts. A Twitter account or pay-TV subscription won't be necessary. The TV apps are different from Twitter's mobile and desktop services, which present a mostly unfiltered stream of tweets from people users follow. The apps look the same across users and are built around video, highlighting the latest professional live streams, Vine clips and Periscope live broadcasts.

The streams will appear on one side of the screen with a curated feed of tweets next to them. Viewers will be able to hide the running Twitter feed by blowing up the broadcast to full-screen view, as is the case with the live-stream experience in Twitter's iOS app by turning the screen horizontally.

In the case of Apple TV, viewers will be able to watch two videos at the same time, side-by-side. For instance, if spectators at a baseball game tweet videos taken from their seats, viewers at home can pull up one of those videos from their Twitter feeds to watch at the same time as the official live broadcast.

The apps will also be available in some markets overseas. The Apple TV app will be available world-wide, while Twitter for Xbox One will be available in Australia, Brazil, Canada, Mexico and the U.K. Twitter for Amazon Fire TV and Fire TV Stick can be accessed in the U.K.

Credit: By Yoree Koh

DETAILS

Subject:	Professional baseball; Social networks; Streaming media
Business indexing term:	Subject: Social networks; Corporation: Apple Inc X Corp (twitter); Industry: 71121 : Spectator Sports 51621 : Media Streaming Distribution Services, Social Networks, and Other Media Networks and Content Providers
Location:	United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: X Corp (twitter); NAICS: 516210

Classification:	71121: Spectator Sports; 51621: Media Streaming Distribution Services, Social Networks, and Other Media Networks and Content Providers
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.4
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285207
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/wsj-d-technology-twitter-adds-tv-app-draw-users/docview/1819285207/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2024-10-01
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 240 of 500

Pimco, Gross Lock Horns in Filings

Baer, Justin . Baer, Justin.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Pacific Investment Management Co. stepped up its defense against a breach-of-contract lawsuit by Bill Gross, alleging that its former star manager leaked details on Pimco executives' pay and withheld emails.

FULL TEXT

Pacific Investment Management Co. stepped up its defense against a breach-of-contract lawsuit by Bill Gross, alleging that its former star manager leaked details on Pimco executives' pay and withheld emails.

The Allianz SE unit asked a California court to force Mr. Gross to turn over emails sent from a private account Pimco says he had used to discuss his 2014 Pimco departure with his new employer, Janus Capital Group.

In Pimco's filing, the firm's lawyers also accused the bond investor of harboring a "sad obsession with attacking his former employer and colleagues."

"Pimco's latest motion is an effort to deflect blame from its litigation misconduct by making off-topic insults and baseless accusations against our client," Patricia Glaser, Mr. Gross's lawyer, said in a statement Wednesday. "The only party trying to play 'hide the ball' is Pimco."

Last week, Mr. Gross accused Pimco of gamesmanship over the scheduling of depositions with key executives at the California money manager.

The dueling filings escalated the pretrial rhetoric over a legal tangle between one of the asset-management industry's best-known people and the firm he once personified. Mr. Gross abruptly left Pimco in September 2014 amid simmering tensions with his colleagues and last year sued the manager for at least $200 million in damages, alleging he was forced out.

Mr. Gross's lawyers wrote last week in court documents that Pimco had victimized their client twice -- first during his ouster and now "within the lawsuit itself." On Tuesday, Pimco said Mr. Gross's "misconduct during the discovery phase suggests he did not know what he was getting himself into."

Pimco's lawyers in their Tuesday filing accused Mr. Gross of withholding initially the existence of an AOL email account they had discovered through document requests to Janus. They also accused him of anonymously mailing to a Bloomberg News reporter confidential information on the 2013 compensation of key Pimco executives, including Chief Investment Officer Dan Ivascyn, former Chief Executive Mohamed El-Erian and CEO Doug Hodge.

A Bloomberg LP spokesman declined to comment.

Mr. Gross's lawyers responded to Pimco's lawyers earlier this month by acknowledging he had sent a redacted version of the pay document to a reporter and shared it with "8-9 Pimco managing directors" in August or September of 2014, Pimco said in its filing.

Pimco had confronted Mr. Gross's lawyers earlier this year with details on the leaks, accusing their client of being the anonymous source.

The court is slated to hear from both sides of the suit this Friday, and the trial is scheduled to begin in August 2017.

Mr. Gross's lawyers argued in a court filing that Pimco had no right to take action against Mr. Gross for sharing the pay information, noting his actions were protected by the First Amendment and the National Labor Relations Act.

Credit: By Justin Baer

DETAILS

Subject:	Mutual funds; Investment advisors; Breach of contract; Executives; Attorneys; Litigation; Wagner Act 1935-US
Business indexing term:	Subject: Mutual funds Investment advisors Breach of contract Executives Wagner Act 1935-US; Industry: 52591 : Open-End Investment Funds 52599 : Other Financial Vehicles 54111 : Offices of Lawyers 52394 : Portfolio Management and Investment Advice
People:	Gross, Bill
Company / organization:	Name: Pacific Investment Management Co; NAICS: 523920
Classification:	52591: Open-End Investment Funds; 52599: Other Financial Vehicles; 54111: Offices of Lawyers; 52394: Portfolio Management and Investment Advice
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	C.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English

Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285200
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/pimco-gross-lock-horns-filings/docview/1819285200/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 241 of 500

U.S. News: Missouri Levee Raises Questions

Maher, Kris . Maher, Kris.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

A survey commissioned recently by the Great Rivers Habitat Alliance, a nonprofit that supports floodplain conservation over building levees, found the levee along the Meramec River in Valley Park is as high as 443 feet above sea level.

FULL TEXT

Bob Criss was biking on the grass-covered levee in Valley Park, Mo., this spring when he began to suspect a major problem with it: The levee was built too high.

Mr. Criss said he was studying sites affected by record floods along the Meramec River outside St. Louis in December and early January for a course he teaches on hydrology at Washington University in St. Louis.

Now, Mr. Criss and others believe a survey by an engineering firm has proved him right, buttressing a theory that the levee kept the city of about 7,000 dry while exacerbating flooding in neighboring areas.

"Floodplains are sculpted by rivers over thousands of years," said Mr. Criss, a professor of earth and planetary science. "You squeeze the river, and it goes up. It's really quite a no-brainer."

A survey commissioned recently by the Great Rivers Habitat Alliance, a nonprofit that supports floodplain conservation over building levees, found the levee along the Meramec River in Valley Park is as high as 443 feet above sea level.

Critics say the levee should have been built to a maximum height of about 435 feet, which is the height of a 100-year flood as calculated by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, plus a 3-foot safety factor known as freeboard.

They argue that Valley Park's 3.1-mile-long levee, which was completed in 2005 at a cost of $50 million, intensified flooding in surrounding areas in part by funneling more water downstream. The levee was first approved in 1982 for the flood-prone Valley Park.

"I think the people who suffered damage because of this improperly high levee deserve answers," said David Stokes, executive director of the alliance. "This isn't just a few inches too high."

Amanda Kruse, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which authorized the Valley Park levee, said it was built in compliance with federal and state laws. The agency said in a statement that it used its own 100-year flood analysis, which required a higher level than FEMA's. Some height was also added to compensate for future settling.

The agency said it couldn't speculate on what effect the levee might have had on the December flood without extensive hydraulic modeling.

Levee disputes crop up from time to time in Mississippi River Basin, with charges that a district on one side of a river or the other has built a levee too high, threatening farmland and homes downriver.

Mr. Stokes and some other critics of the Valley Park levee want it lowered, which they say will make flooding less severe in other areas. A lower levee could mean increased flooding for Valley Park, depending on how high the river rises.

The Meramec rose to a record 44.11 feet at Valley Park last December, and the levee protected the city. Flooding in nearby communities damaged thousands of homes and 14 people died across the state.

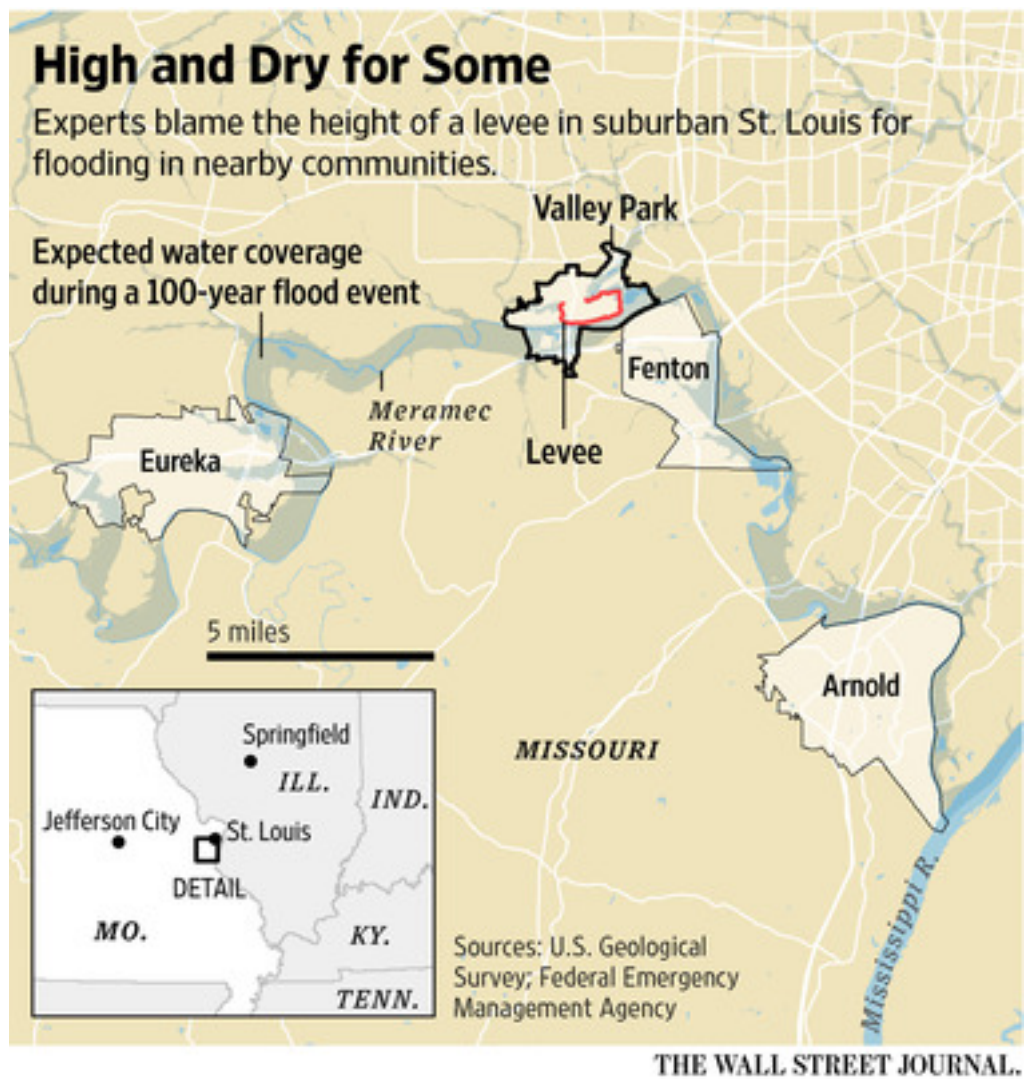

"Whether there was a levee there or not, there was going to be mass destruction in these communities," said Tim Engelmeyer, city attorney for Valley Park. "To sit there and point at a 3-mile levee in the face of a Biblical flood is, I think, very shortsighted."

The allegations have perplexed mayors along the Meramec who said they weren't sure what, if anything, should be done now, and angered residents.

"If this is indeed the fact and they caused this to be worse than it would have been, someone needs to be compensating people," said Bob Kilbreath, a 54-year-old retired fire captain who lives outside Eureka, Mo., and faces $30,000 in damage from the flood. Mr. Kilbreath said he built his house 3 feet above FEMA's 100-year-flood level. He didn't have flood insurance last year and said the Federal Emergency Management Agency reimbursed him $1,100 for his losses.

"There's a lot of finger-pointing right now," said Mike Polizzi, the mayor of Fenton, about 4 miles from Valley Park, where rushing floodwaters poured into the town. "I hate to put those people back underwater that finally get to live in almost a flood-free area now." But that might not be fair to others, he added. "What right do you have to push water onto someone else?"

Enlarge this image.

Credit: By Kris Maher

DETAILS

Subject:	Floods; Rivers; Levees & battures; Flood control; Engineering firms
Business indexing term:	Subject: Engineering firms; Industry: 54133 : Engineering Services
Location:	Meramec River
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Emergency Management Agency; NAICS: 922190
Classification:	54133: Engineering Services

Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285199
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-missouri-levee-raises-questions/docview/1819285199/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 242 of 500

U.S. News: Prison Protests Hit States --- Inmates at facilities in several states hold strikes over pay, health care, living conditions

ABSTRACT

The complaints include inadequate health care, solitary confinement, the level of pay for work done by prisoners and physical mistreatment of inmates by staff.

FULL TEXT

Prison inmates in states around the country have in recent days engaged in protests, with many refusing to work, in hopes of drawing attention to a range of grievances, from compensation to prison conditions.

Prisoner advocacy groups said they have received reports of work and hunger strikes in prisons in states such as Alabama, Florida and Michigan.

The complaints include inadequate health care, solitary confinement, the level of pay for work done by prisoners and physical mistreatment of inmates by staff.

The protests were largely organized around the 45th anniversary last Friday of the uprising at Attica Correctional Facility in New York state, they said.

However, not all of these reports could be confirmed with prison officials and the accuracy of some was challenged by those authorities.

The Kinross Correctional Facility in Kincheloe, Mich., remains under lockdown following a weekend of protests and vandalism involving several hundred prisoners, said Chris Gautz, a spokesman for the Michigan Department of Corrections.

He said the facility is currently quiet but the lockdown remains in place while an investigation of the matter continues and repairs are made.

The protest began Friday when prisoners assigned to the kitchen didn't show up for work. On Saturday, about 400 of the prison's 1,300 inmates staged a more-than-three-hour peaceful protest march in a commons area in front of the facility's housing units.

Eventually, the protesters were persuaded to get back inside and a group of prisoners met with the warden to present grievances. Those grievances included pay levels for prisoner workers, which range from 74 cents a day to $3.34 a day.

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. Gautz said, authorities began going through the housing units and removing individuals who had been identified as ringleaders of the protest. During this removal effort, prisoners in some of the housing units "started breaking up things, making a big mess," he said.

So far 150 prisoners have been removed and sent to other prison facilities, said Mr. Gautz.

Early on Friday, prisoners at 1,002-bed Holman Correctional Facility in Atmore, Ala., skipped their shifts in the kitchen and other jobs, said Melvin Ray, a strike organizer serving a life sentence for murder.

A spokesman said a protest on Friday at Holman involved about 75 inmates and ended after about 24 hours.

Either directly or with the help of prisoner advocacy organizations, Mr. Ray and other organizers in Alabama said they connected with prisoners in at least nine other states to plan protests.

So far, no reports of corrections departments making concessions have surfaced. Given that inmates have far fewer legal rights regarding wages and other matters than the general public, gaining concessions could prove a difficult task.

Ron McAndrew, a former warden of three Florida prisons and now an industry consultant, said most inmates in states like Alabama and Florida receive no compensation for their work.

The anger is feeding the recent demands, he said, but wardens have little room in their budgets, and corrections officers in Florida have gone nearly a decade without a raise, he added.

The strikes come amid increased scrutiny of the police by activists, as well as pushes by states to reduce the nation's incarcerated population, the largest in the world.

The Florida Department of Corrections reported "disturbances" last week at four of its 49 prisons involving hundreds of inmates. Officials placed three of the facilities on lockdown through the weekend, the agency said in a news release, adding that two inmates, but no staff, were injured.

Credit: By Joe Palazzolo and John R. Emshwiller

DETAILS

Subject:	Correctional personnel; Prisoners; Demonstrations & protests; Criminal sentences; Prisons; Correctional institutions
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92214 : Correctional Institutions
Classification:	92214: Correctional Institutions
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.

Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819285147
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-prison-protests-hit-states-inmates-at/docview/1819285147/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full t ext.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 243 of 500

Business News: Vineyards Struggle With Climate --- Rising temperatures are making grapes ripen faster, altering flavor, Australian vintners say Cherney, Mike . Cherney, Mike.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Taylors Wines, the biggest wine company in the Clare Valley and the 11th largest in Australia by volume, also is running its first trial of the delayed-pruning method, and may one day apply the technique to 20% of its vineyard.

FULL TEXT

CLARE VALLEY, Australia -- Neil Paulett, a winemaker in South Australia's Clare Valley, stopped his vehicle in front of a row of vines on a recent rainy afternoon. The grapes growing here, he said, are ripening a month earlier than when he started the wine label that carries his name in the early 1980s.

More grapes are ripening at the same time, too, shortening the traditional harvest season by two weeks as it moves "insidiously forward," Mr. Paulett said.

Some scientists attribute these changes to warming temperatures, which they say could pose a threat to winemakers globally. Grapes that ripen too early may not develop ideal flavors, and harvesting them later could lead to higher, unpalatable alcohol levels, scientists and winemakers say.

Some of Australia's largest wine companies, along with academics and researchers, are investigating ways to mitigate the impact. At stake are about 24,000 jobs in Australia's winemaking and grape-growing industries, as well as wine exports valued at $2.1 billion Australian dollars (US$1.6 billion) annually.

Treasury Wine Estates Ltd., which Euromonitor International says was Australia's second-largest wine company by volume in 2015, is looking to prune more of its vines later in the year, a technique that can delay ripening.

Taylor's Wines, the biggest wine company in the Clare Valley and the 11th largest in Australia by volume, also is running its first trial of the delayed-pruning method, and may one day apply the technique to 20% of its vineyard.

Taylor's also expanded the size of its winery in recent years, in part so it can process more grapes at the same time and better handle the shorter harvests.

If harvest times continue to move forward it would pressure winemakers further, said Andrew Pike, who runs Pikes Wines in the Clare Valley with his brother. "We're just not going to get the flavor profiles that we're looking for."

Data from Treasury Wine show cabernet sauvignon grapes at vineyards in the McLaren Vale, south of Adelaide, ripened on Feb. 4 in 2015, compared with March 25 in 1993.

Earlier ripening times have been reported across the globe, affecting some of the leading wine regions and presenting a continuing challenge to winemakers. In Washington state, warmer temperatures in 2015 prompted the harvest season to begin "historically early," according to the state wine commission.

Other data from Treasury Wine show the ripening period in South Australia's Barossa and Eden valleys was 24 days for some Shiraz grapes in 2013, compared with 47 days in 1998.

"Very few wineries actually have the capacity to ferment all of their grapes simultaneously," said Vladimir Jiranek, director of the ARC Training Centre for Innovative Wine Production, based at the University of Adelaide.

Grapes left too long on the vine continue ripening and accumulate more sugar, which yeast turns to alcohol during fermentation -- so more sugar means more alcohol. That is a problem not only for flavor, but also because some jurisdictions tax wine at a higher rate if it has more alcohol.

Researchers with Mr. Jiranek's group have found combining certain types of yeast that are less efficient at turning sugar into alcohol with the standard wine yeast can lead to lower alcohol. The researchers are looking to develop new strains of less-efficient yeast to lower alcohol even further, Mr. Jiranek said.

Northeast of Adelaide, in the Barossa Valley, Treasury Wine likely will expand its delayed-pruning practices after conducting trials in recent years. For the 2016 harvest, some vine stems, where the grape bunches grow, were trimmed when they had two to three leaves, about the second week of October, compared with the traditional time of late May or early June.

The method pushed back the harvest by 10 to 14 days, compared with the earlier pruned vines, staggering the picking so not all grapes ripened at once, without compromising the quality of the fruit, the company said.

Technology exists to filter out alcohol from wine, but some say the methods can be costly and are at odds with wineries' marketing pitches as being naturally made.

Adam Eggins, chief winemaker at Taylors Wines, has another piece of advice: invest in bigger storage tanks, presses and other winemaking equipment.

Credit: By Mike Cherney

DETAILS

Subject:	Weather; Wineries & vineyards; Wines; Alcohol; Yeast
Business indexing term:	Subject: Wineries & vineyards; Industry: 31213 : Wineries
Location:	Australia
Company / organization:	Name: Treasury Wine Estates Ltd; NAICS: 312130
Classification:	31213: Wineries
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	B.7
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance

ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819278192
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/business-news-vineyards-struggle-with-climate/docview/1819278192/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 244 of 500

Style & Travel -- On Style: Get Ready for Fashion's New Personality --- Designers take risks at New York fashion week; hello to crushed velvet, powder pink and sequins

Binkley, Christina . Binkley, Christina.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

There's also the pinstripe jacket-as-skirt (Monse), the optical-illusion dress (Thom Browne), a cornucopia of Cubist approaches to the white blouse, and a garden of weird colors that are sure to send the folks at color authority Pantone into a tizzy. At Opening Ceremony stores, unknown designers and the brand's own quirky house brand are leading sales, said co-founder Humberto Leon.

FULL TEXT

New York -- The fashion industry is always looking for a tectonic shift on the runways -- a look so different that it shocks consumers and leaves them realizing they don't yet own, say, an electric-lemon-colored crushed-velvet sheath.

The aftershocks from recent shifts at influential labels Gucci and Vetements are shaking up New York fashions. The off-kilter and nerd-chic looks that those labels launched last year seem to have jump-started a wave of fresh thinking and spirited risk-taking.

Out of nowhere, crushed velvet is a fabric of consequence in the spring 2017 collections. It gave Victoria Beckham a whole new look and helped newcomer Sies Marjan establish itself as a label to watch. There's also the pinstripe jacket-as-skirt (Monse), the optical-illusion dress (Thom Browne), a cornucopia of Cubist approaches to the white blouse, and a garden of weird colors that are sure to send the folks at color authority Pantone into a tizzy.

Keeping up will require not only verve but shopping, which is good news for fashion retailers. Key items to signal you're up with the latest include: a white man-shirt with the collar intentionally misplaced at the back of the shoulders; the colors mint green, electric orange, or powder pink -- better yet, in a single look; and athletic clothing in evening materials. Extra credit for total-coverage sequins.

Will people really wear this stuff? Some already are. It is an easy bet that fast fashion is already hard at work copying them.

Kelly Golden, owner of Neapolitan Collection store in Winnetka, Ill., says she has already seen an uptick of sales in recent months from the new look out of Europe. For her it started with furry Gucci loafers last year -- which resulted in multiple reorders.

"After digesting the drastic changes, people decided they actually loved the new quirky-chic look," says Ms. Golden. "I think Gucci has allowed designers the freedom again to take risks and break rules."

Department-store fashion sales have been in the doldrums this year, but bright spots indicate that consumers are responding to items that appeal to their curiosity or need for comfort. Barneys New York's new Chelsea location is a bright spot among the company's locations, says chief executive Mark Lee, with its carefully edited selection of fashions tailored to the local neighborhood.

At Opening Ceremony stores, unknown designers and the brand's own quirky house brand are leading sales, said co-founder Humberto Leon. Assembly New York, which also focuses on undiscovered labels, has also seen an uptick, particularly online, says founder Greg Armas.

New York's fashion week has produced some of its strongest collections in years from risk-takers such as Thom Browne, whose trompe-l'oeil zippered sheaths mimicked suit-and-tie combinations and neck scarves. It was a comical wink at fashion, but the best part was the total ease with which the dresses can be worn.

Monse displayed expert upended tailoring -- pinstripes for investment bankers on acid. The duo behind it, Laura Kim and Fernando Garcia, were recently named to design Oscar de la Renta.

Lacoste is in an ideal position to take advantage of shoppers' interest in comfort. Designer Felipe Oliveira Baptista recalled his father's favorite sun-washed polo and turned out a cozy collection from bathrobes to hoodies in the famous crocodile style. "I had this idea of friendly garments, washed by the sun," he said backstage.

The line between athletic wear, casual, and evening clothing is shrinking, if not gone. Dion Lee produced a sparkling evening anorak. Carolina Herrera opened with a denim ball gown. Zero + Maria Cornejo showed loose silk gowns -- with the label's inherently simple lines -- on barefoot models.

Another prominent theme of the week is called both see-now-buy-now and buy-now-wear-now. The confusion over naming reflects the lack of agreement on how and when collections should be shown. Tom Ford and Thakoon showed current fall collections and put them in stores immediately. Sophie Theallet showed spring designs by taking editors by appointment for private viewings, of dresses designed to transition from day into night with adroitly installed zippers.

Nanette Lepore threw a party, walking guests through her collection while drinking wine and eating oysters on the half shell.

Among the toasts of the city was Brandon Maxwell, a Hollywood stylist whose swank gowns and cocktail looks have lately made the Lady Gaga-endorsed label a red-carpet mainstay. His show at the Russian Tea Room was one of the week's highlights.

Designer Jonathan Saunders made his debut as creative director of Diane von Furstenberg. He started with the spirit of the iconic wrap dress. "I asked myself, 'What made it work?'" he said at the presentation in the Meatpacking District. The result is colorful, easy-to-wear styles that happen to look eminently packable.

Clothes were beside the point at Opening Ceremony. A brand-building pageant featured comedians including Whoopi Goldberg, Rashida Jones, Natasha Lyonne and Jessica Williams, who modeled alongside professional models while bantering with MCs Fred Armisen and Carrie Brownstein.

The brand took the opportunity for a side promotion. "Please vote," said co-designer Humberto Leon, pointing guests to a voter-registration table.

Credit: By Christina Binkley

DETAILS

Subject:	Clothing; Fashion; Collections; Design; Designers
Business indexing term:	Industry: 31525 : Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
Location:	New York; United States--US
People:	Leon, Humberto; Beckham, Victoria
Classification:	31525: Cut and Sew Apparel Manufacturing (except Contractors)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	D.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 15, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819277933
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/style-amp-travel-on-get-ready-fashions-new/docview/1819277933/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 245 of 500

City News: Verizon, City Spar Over Cable Rollout

Knutson, Ryan . Knutson, Ryan.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

In places where Fios isn't available, people usually only have access to one cable provider: either Cablevision Systems Corp., which was acquired in June by Altice NV, or Time Warner Cable, now owned by Charter Communications Inc. Those companies, which began wiring the city more than three decades ago, divided their buildouts and don't compete directly against each other in most parts of New York.

FULL TEXT

New York City notified Verizon Communications Inc. Tuesday the company was in default of an agreement to build Fios cable connections across the city, escalating a fight that began last year.

The city alleged last summer that Verizon has failed to make its Fios network available to every home as required under the 2008 agreement. After more than a year of talks, city officials say Verizon still hasn't made meaningful progress.

The agreement technically only covers cable TV, but Verizon also offers high-speed internet over the same fiber-optic cables.

In places where Fios isn't available, people usually only have access to one cable provider: either Cablevision Systems Corp., which was acquired in June by Altice NV, or Time Warner Cable, now owned by Charter Communications Inc.

Those companies, which began wiring the city more than three decades ago, divided their buildouts and don't compete directly against each other in most parts of New York. When Verizon launched Fios in 2008, city officials were hopeful it would provide more competition.

Officials say they could sue Verizon unless the carrier shows clear plans for stepping up installations. The notice is the first step in that process. New York-based Verizon has 30 days to respond.

Verizon spokesman Ray McConville said the company has lived up to its agreement, and that the city hasn't helped the carrier resolve the "impractical processes for getting access to more buildings."

Last year, the city's Department of Information Technology & Telecommunications released an audit of the company's Fios buildout. At the time, the city said there were more than 40,000 outstanding service requests, about three-quarters of which had been pending a year or more. City officials said Tuesday about 25% of households in New York are unable to get Fios.

The city recently sampled 52,000 addresses for Fios availability, and found that outer boroughs were more likely to have access than Manhattan. For instance, 90% of Staten Island residents could likely get Fios within seven days, while the same is true for just 19% of people in central Brooklyn and 11% in upper Manhattan.

About two-thirds of the more than 300 public-housing developments, which are home to more than 400,000 people, have no access to Fios, the city says.

Mr. McConville said Verizon has invested billions of dollars in high-speed networks in New York.

"It is unfortunate and disappointing that the City is taking an adversarial approach to the only company that has challenged New York City's cable monopolies," Mr. McConville said. "The City should be working with Verizon to make choice available to more residents, not discouraging competition."

Verizon began rolling out Fios about a decade ago, and has spent more than $23 billion on construction. In 2010, the company said it was finished building Fios in new areas.

Citywide "franchise" agreements like the one Verizon has with New York City have since become less popular.

Instead, telecom firms have tried to convince cities to let them build first in areas where there is predetermined demand, rather than build out an entire city. In April, Verizon said it had reached such an agreement with the city of Boston, which was one of the handful of places in the Northeast where Verizon hadn't built at all.

Credit: By Ryan Knutson

DETAILS

Subject:	Agreements; Internet access; Cable television industry; Telecommunications industry; Service introduction
Business indexing term:	Subject: Cable television industry Telecommunications industry; Corporation: Verizon Communications Inc; Industry: 51711 : Wired and Wireless Telecommunications Carriers (except Satellite)
Location:	New York City New York; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: Verizon Communications Inc; NAICS: 513210, 517111, 517112
Classification:	51711: Wired and Wireless Telecommunications Carriers (except Satellite)
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper

Language of publication: English

Document type: News

ProQuest document ID: 1819082740

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-verizon-spar-over-cable-rollout/docview/1819082740/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2024-10-01

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 246 of 500

U.S. News: President of Atlanta Fed to Step Down

Derby, Michael S . Derby, Michael S.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta President Dennis Lockhart, whose comments on the economy and monetary policy are seen by many as a reflection of the central bank's consensus view, will step down in February.

FULL TEXT

Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta President Dennis Lockhart, whose comments on the economy and monetary policy are seen by many as a reflection of the central bank's consensus view, will step down in February.

The Atlanta Fed on Tuesday said Mr. Lockhart, who has led the bank since 2007, is leaving to "pursue interests in public policy, civic work and private business." Mr. Lockhart, 69 years old, was facing mandatory retirement under central bank rules, according to information provided by the Atlanta Fed.

In a central bank dominated by academic economists, Mr. Lockhart came to the job with real-world experience in banking. Over the course of his tenure, the Bakersfield, Calif., native became a key voice on monetary policy issues.

Mr. Lockhart "didn't have an ax to grind as he looked at the data" to decide where to go with interest-rate policy, said Ray Stone of research firm Stone & McCarthy Research Associates.

The official's final months on the job will see him involved in the debate over whether to raise rates. But due to the rotation of officials on the rate-setting Federal Open Market Committee, Mr. Lockhart won't get a chance to vote on official central bank action again.

Mr. Lockhart's legacy is likely to be his pragmatism, a characteristic that some economists say has helped make his regional bank a valuable resource for the public.

There isn't yet a timetable for selecting a new president ahead of Mr. Lockhart's Feb. 28 exit, the bank said.

The search to succeed Mr. Lockhart will face scrutiny, as activists and congressional Democrats have called to make the process of selecting regional Fed bank presidents more open.

Critics have raised concerns about the fact that the three newest regional bank presidents all worked in some capacity for investment bank Goldman Sachs. The Fed also has been criticized for lacking diversity, as only two of the 12 regional Fed banks are headed by women, and all are led by whites, except for Minneapolis.

The left-leaning Center for Popular Democracy's Fed Up campaign wants the next leader of the Atlanta Fed to be black or Hispanic, which would be a first for a regional Fed bank. "Here's an opportunity for change in Atlanta, one of America's biggest cities and one of the largest cities for people of color," said Shawn Sebastian, an activist with the Fed Up campaign.

Mr. Lockhart spent most of his career as a banker, working at Citigroup and other financial firms, although not at Goldman Sachs. He joined the Atlanta Fed just ahead of the financial crisis. That led him to note humorously in a number of public appearances that he often has found himself taking jobs just as events turned rather sour.

Credit: By Michael S. Derby

DETAILS

Subject:	Resignations; Monetary policy; Banking industry; International finance; Central banks; Regional banks
Business indexing term:	Subject: Resignations Monetary policy Banking industry International finance Central banks Regional banks; Corporation: Goldman Sachs Group Inc; Industry: 52111 : Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
People:	Lockhart, Dennis P
Company / organization:	Name: Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta; NAICS: 521110
Classification:	52111: Monetary Authorities-Central Bank
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.

Pages:	A.2
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819082737
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-president-atlanta-fed-step-down/docview/1819082737/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2025-01-29
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 247 of 500

City News: Woman Killed in Front of Her Baby

Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Shallwani, Pervaiz . Kanno-Youngs, Zolan; Shallwani, Pervaiz.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

On Tuesday night, police charged Shenia Williams, 20, with murder and criminal possession of a weapon.

FULL TEXT

A 22-year-old woman was stabbed to death in front of her 9-month-old son early Tuesday in Brooklyn, authorities said.

Joanna Beauzier was pushing her son in a stroller alongside her boyfriend in the Brownsville neighborhood on her way to his house after midnight, a law-enforcement official said. When they got close to the boyfriend's home, Ms. Beauzier began to argue with a woman walking in the middle of the street, and the argument escalated into a fight, two officials said.

"The boyfriend attempted to separate the two, but the girls [kept] getting at each other," one of the officials said.

After a few minutes, the victim fell to the ground and the boyfriend noticed she was bleeding, the official said. He tried to stop the bleeding and didn't see which direction the attacker fled, the official said.

Witnesses told police they saw two women fleeing the scene, an official said.

On Tuesday night, police charged Shenia Williams, 20, with murder and criminal possession of a weapon. She was awaiting arraignment and couldn't be reached for comment. It wasn't clear if an attorney has been assigned to her case.

Ms. Beauzier was stabbed in the chest, right forearm, left forearm and right shoulder, an official said. She was also slashed in the back of the left shoulder. The baby wasn't injured in the attack.

Police arrived at 531 Bristol St. receiving a call reporting "a dispute with a knife," officials said. When officers arrived, they heard commotion around the corner on Lott Avenue.

Officers turned the corner and found Ms. Beauzier lying on her back on the sidewalk with her boyfriend standing over her applying pressure to her chest, an official said.

Ms. Beauzier was taken to Brookdale University Hospital and Medical Center and pronounced dead shortly after 1 a.m., officials said.

Her boyfriend said he didn't know the suspect, but did say she was from the neighborhood, an official said. No weapon was recovered.

Naqwan Cooper, a 25-year-old friend of Ms. Beauzier, said "she was a loving single mother."

Ms. Beauzier grew up in the foster-care system, he said. "Her life was far from easy," he said. "She was a free spirit, that lived for her son . . . still trying to figure life out."

Ms. Beauzier had her own apartment in Brownsville with plans of moving out of the neighborhood, Mr. Cooper said.

"Didn't deserve such a cruel fate," he said.

DETAILS

Subject:	Stabbings; Murders & murder attempts; Neighborhoods
Location:	Brooklyn New York; United States--US
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.19
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819082735
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/city-news-woman-killed-front-her-baby/docview/1819082735/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

U.S. News: North Carolina Boycott May Grow

Bauerlein, Valerie; Beaton, Andrew . Bauerlein, Valerie; Beaton, Andrew.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

More than any league in college sports, the ACC is tied to North Carolina, home of Duke University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Wake Forest University and North Carolina State University.

FULL TEXT

RALEIGH, N.C. -- North Carolina sports fans fretted Tuesday that the Atlantic Coast Conference could decide as soon as this week to join the National Collegiate Athletic Association in removing tournament games from the state because of its controversial bathroom law.

The ACC presidents are scheduled to meet Tuesday and Wednesday for a twice-yearly meeting, with the top agenda item being a state law known as House Bill 2. The law, passed in an emergency session last spring, requires individuals to use the public restroom corresponding to the sex on their birth certificate, which lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender advocates have protested.

ACC Commissioner John Swofford said the league is committed to "equality, diversity and inclusion." He said it would be premature to announce any decision, but he thought HB2 runs "counter to basic human rights."

Some entertainers and businesses, including Maroon 5 and Deutsche Bank AG, have boycotted the state or called off expansion plans there because of HB2, but any sanction from the ACC would be a particular blow.

More than any league in college sports, the ACC is tied to North Carolina, home of Duke University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Wake Forest University and North Carolina State University. The league routinely played its men's basketball tournament in North Carolina before expanding to include teams stretching from Syracuse University in New York to the University of Miami in Florida.

The ACC's East Coast expansion may have spared the league a thorny decision in the short term. The tournament was in Washington, D.C., last March, and will be in Brooklyn in 2017 and 2018. It isn't scheduled to return to North Carolina until 2019, in Charlotte. But there are many other ACC tournaments scheduled for North Carolina. The most urgent decision may come over the ACC's Dec. 3 football championship, which since 2010 has been played at Bank of America Stadium in Charlotte.

As for the prospects of repealing HB2, North Carolina legislators aren't scheduled to convene until mid-January, and Republican Gov. Pat McCrory has made defending the law a centerpiece of his Nov. 8 re-election campaign.

"The issue of redefining gender and basic norms of privacy will be resolved in the near future in the U.S. court system for not only North Carolina, but the entire nation," Mr. McCrory said Tuesday. "I strongly encourage all public and private institutions to both respect and allow our nation's judicial system to proceed without economic threats or political retaliation toward the 22 states that are currently challenging government overreach," he said, adding the NCAA failed to show such respect.

Credit: By Valerie Bauerlein and Andrew Beaton

DETAILS

Subject:	Tournaments & championships; State laws; College basketball; Boycotts; Toilet facilities; College sports
Business indexing term:	Industry: 56299 : All Other Waste Management Services
Location:	North Carolina; United States--US
Company / organization:	Name: National Collegiate Athletic Association--NCAA; NAICS: 813990; Name: Atlantic Coast Conference; NAICS: 813990
Classification:	56299: All Other Waste Management Services
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.3
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819082719

Document URL: <https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/u-s-news-north-carolina-boycott-may-grow/docview/1819082719/se-2?accountid=14681>

Copyright: (c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.

Full text availability: This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.

Last updated: 2022-11-19

Database: ProQuest Central

LINKS

Document 249 of 500

Trump, Team Recast His Image --- Nominee shifts from raucous rallies to 'presidential' appearances but still sometimes ad libs

Langley, Monica . Langley, Monica.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

[...]I'm freer now, relying on my instincts and working with a team I trust," Mr. Trump said in an interview. The Republican nominee said he was more comfortable with his new team, which, ironically, has succeeded in some of the same changes sought by former campaign chairman Paul Manafort: Mr. Trump is sticking closer to a teleprompter, giving more policy details in speeches -- and making fewer off-the-cuff remarks, which hurt his campaign after the GOP convention this summer.

FULL TEXT

Donald Trump installed his third leadership team at a campaign low point on Aug. 16. The next day, his new managers at a meeting in his Trump Tower office in New York suggested the Republican Party nominee visit residents suffering in the Louisiana floods.

Mr. Trump didn't like the idea. Wouldn't he look like he was pandering? he asked, according to advisers. And besides, he added, Louisiana wasn't a swing state.

Newly installed campaign chief executive Stephen Bannon and campaign manager Kellyanne Conway told their new boss, basically, trust us. Mr. Trump needed to move away from a preoccupation with rallies and wall-to-wall TV interviews toward "moments," in the new managers' parlance, that showed him in TV newscasts as presidential, with a caring side.

The approach would give Mr. Trump a break from the media replaying unattractive off-script comments and off-putting tweets -- including a few viewed as racist -- that were helping widen the polling lead of Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, they said. Besides, President Barack Obama was away playing golf on an island vacation.

Mr. Trump went to Louisiana the next day, Aug. 18, accompanied by running mate Mike Pence. The trip turned out successfully in Mr. Trump's view, and cinched his ties with Mr. Bannon and Ms. Conway, shifting his campaign's focus toward such events as a trip to a Detroit inner-city church, the meeting with Mexico's president and a planned visit Wednesday to Flint, Mich., to speak with families hurt by tainted drinking water, campaign advisers said.

The new team, said supporters, has fostered a more disciplined candidacy.

"Actually I'm freer now, relying on my instincts and working with a team I trust," Mr. Trump said in an interview.

His political opponents question how much has changed. Hours after his visit last month with Mexico's President Enrique Pena Nieto, they said, Mr. Trump delivered an immigration speech in Arizona that made even some Trump supporters cringe over its harsh tone and off-the-cuff flourishes.

"Fifty days of script can't change 15 months of actual positions and beliefs," said Hilary Rosen, a Democratic strategist and Clinton supporter. "Trump isn't going to be able to run away from his divisive rhetoric."

After Mrs. Clinton's campaign announced late Sunday that she had been diagnosed with pneumonia, many expected Mr. Trump to pounce on the news, arguing that it proved his claim she lacks the stamina to be president.

Instead, Mr. Trump told campaign advisers deluged with media calls to stand down. The response struck opponents as uncharacteristic, and some supporters attributed Mr. Trump's restraint to his new campaign organization.

Mr. Trump said efforts by previous campaign leaders to remake him into a politician were "dishonest." And, Mr. Trump said, he sometimes resisted at times by going off script.

The Republican nominee said he was more comfortable with his new team, which, ironically, has succeeded in some of the same changes sought by former campaign chairman Paul Manafort: Mr. Trump is sticking closer to a teleprompter, giving more policy details in speeches -- and making fewer off-the-cuff remarks, which hurt his campaign after the GOP convention this summer.

The shift began around the second week of August, as Mr. Trump saw a sharp decline in the polls. After Mr. Manafort's team told Mr. Trump in several campaign meetings that he was losing and needed to stick to the message, Mr. Trump looked to Ms. Conway, then working as a campaign adviser.

Mr. Trump said he told Ms. Conway that he needed advisers he trusted and who "wouldn't say I'm going to pivot at the slightest inkling of a problem." Ms. Conway told Mr. Trump that he was behind, but there were ways of getting back on track, according to a person familiar with the conversation.

A few days later, Mr. Bannon told Mr. Trump that campaign messaging, which was emphasized by Mr. Manafort, was "for politicians," while "communicating is for leaders," according to people familiar with the conversation.

Shortly afterward, Mr. Manafort was sidelined in favor of Mr. Bannon and Ms. Conway.

The new campaign team, now in its fourth week, consists of three interconnected circles of advisers.

One circle consists of newly-installed political pros led by Ms. Conway, now the campaign's main pollster. Another circle, headed by Mr. Bannon, the former head of Breitbart, the pro-Trump online news site, helps produce policy and TV campaign "moments" and provides camaraderie. That group includes press secretary Hope Hicks and former New York City Mayor Rudy Giuliani.

A third circle includes Mr. Trump's older children in a less prominent day-to-day role. Eric Trump has negotiated leases for field offices in Virginia and Pennsylvania, and is a frequent surrogate on cable TV news. Donald Trump Jr. travels to campaign fundraising events. Their sister Ivanka Trump helped with the rollout of Mr. Trump's child-care policy Tuesday. Her husband, real-estate developer Jared Kushner, is probably the most involved family member in strategy.

"With these circles working together, Donald is more effective every day," said Republican Sen. Jeff Sessions of Alabama, a Trump adviser and member of the circle of political pros.

The Trump campaign circles don't always agree. Regarding immigration, Mr. Trump at first appeared to soften his stance on whether illegal immigrants must be deported. The political pros, led by Ms. Conway and Republican National Committee Chairman Reince Priebus, wanted Mr. Trump to relax his hard-line stance. Mr. Bannon urged immediate deportation.

After days of wavering, Mr. Trump's speech in Arizona largely reverted to the tougher policy he staked out originally.

Another policy debate played out during a recent night at Trump Tower headquarters. Ms. Conway and Mr. Bannon reviewed a giant U.S. map in Ms. Conway's office punctured with colored pins in battleground states.

The question looming that night -- as well as over the coming weeks of the race -- is how much Mr. Trump should participate in the sort of "retail-style" campaigning he largely shunned during the Republican primaries.

Mr. Bannon argued in favor of staging large rallies, which Mr. Trump enjoys. "He feeds off their energy," Mr. Bannon said, standing to make his point.

Ms. Conway argued the GOP candidate was a "natural in a diner or at a round table."

The decision: Most of Mr. Trump's campaign swings will include a prepared speech, maybe a rally and, always, an appearance at a small local venue.

One constant remains for Mr. Trump, a preoccupation with poll results. "Did you see the polls showing I'm beating Hillary?" he asked during a recent flight aboard his private plane.

Credit: By Monica Langley

DETAILS

Subject:	Image; Political leadership; Presidential elections; Nominations; Noncitizens; Speeches; Political campaigns; Election results; Candidates; Immigration; Primaries & caucuses
Business indexing term:	Industry: 92111 : Executive Offices 81394 : Political Organizations
People:	Trump, Donald J; Bannon, Stephen K; Manafort, Paul
Company / organization:	Name: Republican Party; NAICS: 813940
Classification:	92111: Executive Offices; 81394: Political Organizations
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.1
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819082706
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/trump-team-recast-his-image-nominee-shifts/docview/1819082706/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19

LINKS

Document 250 of 500

World News: Syria Sieges Drive Out Sunni Population --- U.N., opposition accuse Assad regime of forced evacuations to divide country

Abdulrahim, Raja; Raydan, Noam . Abdulrahim, Raja; Raydan, Noam.

ProQuest document link

ABSTRACT

The Syrian government is pressing a systematic effort to alter the country's demographics and tighten President Bashar al-Assad's grip on power, United Nations officials and opposition figures said.

FULL TEXT

The Syrian government is pressing a systematic effort to alter the country's demographics and tighten President Bashar al-Assad's grip on power, United Nations officials and opposition figures said.

The government is pushing to seal deals for the surrender or evacuation of rebel strongholds despite the U.S.- and Russia-sponsored cease-fire, which began Monday and appeared to take firmer hold on its first full day Tuesday, residents and activists said.

The Assad government has long used sieges -- sometimes to the point of starvation -- to force local populations to agree to cease-fires, surrender and evacuations, leading to the displacement of thousands of people. Now thousands more are at risk of being forced from their homes in deals the government seeks to push through in an opposition-held neighborhood of the city of Homs and at least one Damascus suburb.

The resulting transfers of population threaten to further partition the country between the opposition -- dominated by Syria's Sunni majority -- and the government led by Alawites, adherents of an offshoot of Shiite Islam. Syria's ethnic Kurdish minority has already carved out a sizable autonomous region in the north along the Turkish border.

"The Syrian regime, along with its Russian and Iranian allies, is relentlessly pursuing a malicious plan to orchestrate extensive demographic shifts across Syria," said Riyadh Hijab, a leader of the opposition's main political body, the High Negotiations Committee.

"These changes will undermine the unity and integrity of Syrian territories and Syria's demographic structure," he added, saying they are "paving the way for ethnic and political cleansing on an unprecedented scale."

Syrian government officials reject accusations that it is seeking demographic change by force of arms, sieges or truce deals. "There is no meaning to these false claims," said Gov. Talal al-Barazi of Homs province.

U.N. Emergency Relief Coordinator Stephen O'Brien said recently that mass evacuations and prolonged sieges are violations of international humanitarian law. "All sieges, a medieval tactic, must be lifted," he said. "This should not [occur] through any type of agreement which results in the forced displacement of the civilian population."

Hours before Monday's truce took effect, Mr. Assad vowed to take back all rebel-controlled territory as he walked through the Damascus suburb of Daraya, which surrendered to the government late last month after a nearly four-year siege. Under the deal ending the siege, nearly 10,000 residents were forced to move immediately to other parts of the country -- the largest-scale evacuation of the entire war.

Images of a confident Mr. Assad strolling through the ghost town ahead of the cease-fire left Syrian opposition groups fuming, saying the deal lacked enforcement measures to guarantee the government drops its "starve or submit" tactics.

Many of those displaced, from the war's first expulsion in early 2012 and in evacuations since then, have relocated or been forced to resettle in the north of the country, where rebels have their main strongholds largely outside the government's control.

Three days after the last resident left Daraya in late August, Syrian military commanders summoned opposition leaders in the neighboring Damascus suburb of Moadhamiya to a meeting, residents and local leaders said, adding they had expected the call.

"They said if we reject their conditions, they are going to burn Moadhamiya over the heads of the residents," one member of opposition-controlled town council said.

Rebels and local leaders in Waer, the last neighborhood under opposition control in the central city of Homs, said they faced similar demands from the regime recently.

"There is clearly a strategy at the moment to move from Daraya to al-Waer to Moadhamiya in a similar pattern," U.N. envoy Staffan de Mistura said recently.

Asked to comment on the accusations of deliberate partitioning, Syrian presidential adviser Bouthaina Shaaban referred to an interview with state media in which she called the deals reached in Daraya and Moadhamiya "local reconciliations."

Ms. Shaaban rejected claims that the deals were part of a broader demographic or geographic division of Syria.

Olga Razumovskaya contributed to this article.

Credit: By Raja Abdulrahim and Noam Raydan

DETAILS

Subject:	Demographics; Evacuations & rescues; Truces & cease fires; Sieges; International law
Location:	Russia; United States--US; Syria
People:	Assad, Bashar Al
Publication title:	Wall Street Journal, Eastern edition; New York, N.Y.
Pages:	A.8
Publication year:	2016
Publication date:	Sep 14, 2016
Publisher:	Dow Jones & Company Inc.
Place of publication:	New York, N.Y.
Country of publication:	United States
Publication subject:	Business And Economics--Banking And Finance
ISSN:	00999660
Source type:	Newspaper
Language of publication:	English
Document type:	News
ProQuest document ID:	1819082697
Document URL:	https://www.proquest.com/newspapers/world-news-syria-sieges-drive-out-sunni/docview/1819082697/se-2?accountid=14681
Copyright:	(c) 2016 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. Reproduced with permission of copyright owner. Further reproduction or distribution is prohibited without permission.
Full text availability:	This publication may be subject to restrictions within certain markets, including corporations, non-profits, government institutions, and public libraries. In those cases records will be visible to users, but not full text.
Last updated:	2022-11-19
Database:	ProQuest Central

LINKS